4. The majority of the resolutions enclosed in the President's letter of January 18th deal with matters which have already been the subject of correspondence with Your Lordship. Others have been considered and dealt with locally. Others again do not concern this Protectorate. In one or two cases only do fresh subjects appear to be raised, and no reasoned arguments in support of the petitioners' views have been furnished. In these circumstances I would submit that no useful purpose would be served by commenting in detail on the separate resolutions until the larger questions of general policy have been decided.

4. The majority of the resolutions enclosed in the president's letter of 7th January 1914 deal with matters which have already been dealt with in a list of correspondences with Your Lordship. Others have been considered and dealt with locally. Others again do not concern this Protectorate. In one or two cases only do fresh subjects appear to be raised, and no reasoned arguments in support of the petitioners' views have been furnished. In these circumstances I would submit that no useful purpose would be served by commenting in detail on the separate resolutions until the larger questions of general policy have been decided.

everything depends on three things - low freight rates; stable money; and rapid transit.

The rates must be low, or products cannot be marketed at a profit. They must be stable, or planters will not have from year to year a steady stand, and they will not become dependent on Uganda's market. This is the main reason why the planters are so anxious to secure a steady market for their products. It is for this reason that they are so anxious to secure a steady market for their products. It is

It will be interesting to see how long it will take the present season's Uganda cotton crop, probably 1,000,000 bales, exclusive of cotton seed, to be placed stayed on board the ocean boats.
