Convict Khairulla Khor

Explains circumstances in which he was employed in the gardens at his house.

W. F. Hades

This is merely a sympathetic restatement of what we already knew. Sir J. Hayes Sadler called yesterday to explain verbally that the primitive nature of the prison arrangements in Uganda must be his excuse for what he knows to be an irregularity from the legal point of view.

The man appears to have lived a decent & useful life in the station to which the irregularity called him, and I gather that he is now a salaried Govt. employee. Sir J. Sadler is off to the West Indies. His irregularly is not likely to be imitated, and he is likely to repeat it in his new surroundings.

Everything seems to point to silence

With reference to your letter of the 23rd I find I have the honour to report that the circumstances with regard to the circumstances which were as follows: - He was one of the last batch of Spanish Maritimers captured & he got below Redcliffe but it is questionable whether he himself took any ^{very} active part in the mutiny - About 1893 he and others who were convicted at the same time were confined at the same place living in one of the four islands, practically at large, the recommendation in the Enbelle Jail at that time being that some insufficient - the men in the early days of the Protection before the Enbelle Jail was built - Taken on account of these men were allowed on the mainland & the canoe in question was employed in the government service functions at Enbelle for all matters & purposes on behalf of them -

He became much attached to myself and my establishment & was always ready to go with me to East Africa where I employed him on a monthly wage payable in the garden of the temporary Jama House at Nairobi. - Later on he was made head gardener in the new permanent House gardens and on my leaving East Africa being given the instruction that the other committee men who had had less knowledge, I wrote to the person of Nyamathi and asked he might be granted his pension -
