THE COMMONS COAL DEBATE.
 Owners Were Accused by Premier of Stipulation.
 MR. CURCHILL TELLS HIS STORY.

Labour & Liberal Leaders' Criticisms and the Chancellor's Answer.
 (By WILKINSON.)
 On Friday night, Sept. 27, the Premier in the House opened the debate on the coal industry. The Premier's speech was a masterpiece of logic and pathos. He pointed out the fact that the coal industry was the backbone of the nation and that the Government was bound to see that it was not starved. He said that the coal industry was the backbone of the nation and that the Government was bound to see that it was not starved. He said that the coal industry was the backbone of the nation and that the Government was bound to see that it was not starved.

A MEMORIE DEFIED.
 Mr. Churchill opened a leaflet of his colleagues associated with him that they had never been any portion to the House. He said that the Government was bound to see that it was not starved. He said that the coal industry was the backbone of the nation and that the Government was bound to see that it was not starved.

THE CHANCELLOR'S VIEW.
 I am told, said Mr. Churchill, that I have been abandoned by the Liberal Party. I am not in the slightest bit concerned. I am not in the slightest bit concerned. I am not in the slightest bit concerned. I am not in the slightest bit concerned.

It should be shown that in order to produce the necessary revenue the rate value rate would require to be excessive. A provision limit might be fixed beyond which the rate value rate should not go; any further revenue to be secured by a rate on capital value of improvements after allowing for the usual rebate.

Government is the largest landholder in the Municipal area and as such should make a large contribution to the rates. It may be argued that Government land should contribute proportionately on the same basis as any other holder of undeveloped land. Government land is held in the name of the Municipality by a ratee but the value of the land is not assessed. There is no difference, however, that in the case of the landowner for private profit, whereas in the case of the landowner for the public good. Further, much of the land is withdrawn from the land market by the fact that the values in general will increase if the property market were opened. This being the case it is

The evening gown pictured here is the latest, and is especially elegant. It is a style equally suited to those who wish to be in the fashion of the moment, and to those who prefer a more conservative style. It is made of a material which is both soft and pliable, and is decorated with a delicate pattern. The dress is long and flowing, and is fastened with a row of buttons down the front. The sleeves are long and fitted, and the collar is high and ruffled. The overall effect is one of grace and elegance.
