As the nature of his post-prandial audience requires he will revel in the glories of South African warfare, the joys of an East African safari, the things we almost did at Antwerp or Gallipoli or, in the latter regions of Imperialism, how we are to create new Dominions in the dark places of the earth.

THE LAST AFRICAN STANDARD. FRIDAY, AUGUST 25, 1922.

Mr. Churchill is an interesting after dinner speaker. As the nature of his post-prandial audience requires he will revel in the glories of South African warfare, the joys of an East African safari, the things we almost did at Antwerp or Gallipoli or, in the latter regions of Imperialism, how we are to create new Dominions in the dark places of the earth.

Edward Hastings... the infant... these we published... the new constitution... the British party system... the charms of almondo and the leisure culture of Staffordshire porteries... They only know the African as a servant, a neighbour and an immediate charge; they have not the advantage of the idealising enchanting perspective and distance of his pains and possibilities that is gained from the vicinity of Katozi... Mr. Churchill is an interesting after dinner speaker. As the nature of his post-prandial audience requires he will revel in the glories of South African warfare, the joys of an East African safari, the things we almost did at Antwerp or Gallipoli or, in the latter regions of Imperialism, how we are to create new Dominions in the dark places of the earth. But for Mr. Churchill, as for humbler and more prosaic individuals, there is always a morning after. And morning for Mr. Churchill nowadays usually lifts Mr. Harris and Colonel Wedgwood, and all the cloud-capped towers and gorgeous palaces of the night before dissolve like the insubstantial pagoda faded and leave flat a rack behind, and Mr. Churchill bows to his masters. The Secretary of State, for instance, on an occasion of inspiring conviviality for British East Africa as a path to the goal of full self-government. It is his dazzling object; he is of the company of Raleigh and Drake and Rhodes; Africa is his new Dominion - and then Messrs. Wedgwood and Harris call. The Government of Kenya have been invited by His Majesty the King under which they can call upon notices to carry out urgent public works such as roads, railways, etc. for pay. Those who have the power to authorize this employment are, certainly, responsible servants of the Crown, men who have known Africa well for many years, but they are Britons abroad, away from all the refinements and freedoms of Belgium and the moral astoristry
