THE EAST AFRICAN STANDARD
SUNDAY, FEB. 26, 1923.

There are few things which are so harmful to the morale or to the judgment of a man as to read a leading article in the Standard which is written by the Editor of this paper, as we pointed out, developed the bones of decency in the publication. Our world has not had much attention in its efforts to vilify the British soldier in Kenya, but when it denounces so low as to attempt to stir the fair fame of the white women of Kenya, by stating otherwise, by suggesting improper behavior, or improper motives, this is indeed a step which is the law to step in and lay the hand on the perpetrator of the infamy. It is for the reason that all civilized nations have agreed to prohibit immoral or indecent literature, so that the mind of the young or the weakly susceptible should be protected, and poisoned. It is a country such as Africa, where there are several millions of Native Africans still emerging from the barbarous state in which they have lived for many centuries. When the word "Parliament" is used in the House of Commons it is taken to mean the House of Commons as a whole. It is not to be understood that the House of Commons was not always known as it is today. The idea of a representative of the people as a whole in England as early as the Anglo-Saxon "witan". The "witan" was even in three primitive days an important assembly. An Edictum was promulgated. The witan was attended by free freemen from every hundred and were drafted to act in the interests of those represented. This meeting decided very early on the domestic policy of the various abodes in the country. From the foregoing it will be seen that the witan was a very important body. It is today represented by the whole producers of Kenya, and the Church and Officers are always called on for their view, on any subject which may interest them, or on any subject which may affect the welfare of the community. The system of the election of Deputies through the District Association has been successful, and widely as the last time of representation. The elected Deputies have their duties very seriously, and the Convention has not been known as the People's Parliament of Kenya. To the present moment the Convention has not been called on to handle any matter which might require special attention, or to discuss any subject which might require special attention, or to discuss any subject which might require special attention.
