Maintaining the Health of The Union's Stock

By Dr. P. J. du Toit, Director of Veterinary Services

It is possible to afford a fairly large number of animals to be kept in the various branches of the industry. This is possible because of the very well and proved satisfactory training of veterinary officers and the whole structure of the veterinary profession in this country. During the first world war it was found impossible to replace the veterinary officers who joined the armed forces and the veterinary administration became short-handed. Now that we train our own veterinary surgeons in sufficient numbers the situation cannot be repeated.

Britain's Agriculture A "Reawakened Giant"

By L. F. EASTERBROOK

(Agricultural Correspondent of the London "Times Chronicle") DURING the war Britain changed completely from a country of predominantly pastoral farming to a country of arable farmers. The output from the soil during the war has been more than double the normal level. Not less than 100 million bushels of wheat were produced in the summer of 1944. Out of a total crop of 1,000,000,000 bushels, 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat were produced in the summer of 1944. Out of a total crop of 1,000,000,000 bushels, 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat were produced in the summer of 1944.

A centre for the examination of applicants has been set up in the north-east of the Halifax Group, of Canada, from which the "Giant" is the only enterprise of its kind in Africa.

Their cheerfulness and the way in which they have refused to be driven out of their homes, have won the admiration of the world. It is often said that the war has been a great test for the British people. The women already on the land, and the men who have been called to arms, have shown a courage and determination which has won the admiration of the world.

Before the war, Britain was importing an average of 2,000,000 tons of food and animal feeding stuffs. By 1943, this total had been reduced to 1,000,000 tons. An equivalent amount of shipping was required for the raw materials for making the war materials that were being produced. It is in these terms that the war has regarded the British agricultural war effort.

The most outstanding feature of Britain never dreamed in the war that it would be able to produce so much of its own food. It is in these terms that the war has regarded the British agricultural war effort.

They had to be taught, the available implements had to be made available, accommodation had to be built, the buildings, the farms roads and the tools had to be repaired, and the land had to be brought back into shape again. All this, done in a matter of a few months, should be viewed as a real feat of organization and planning.

skilled men. It is common to find a dairy farm where two men and a boy and a Land Girl are doing the practical work of five skilled men.

But one of the most surprising things of all is the fact that the change in food production has been brought about with the least loss of the arable land. More grain has been grown in Britain this summer than in any year since 1914. The total area of arable land in 1944 was 1,000,000 acres, compared with 1,000,000 acres in 1914. The only way to a large increase in British food production was by better soil and more intensive farming.

Dairy Farmers It has not been long since a farmer who was a dairy farmer before the war, had to take over a farm which was a dairy farm before the war.
