"They haven't been able to get it for the asking for several long years, but still they ask for "Viyella". The name is just as alive today as it was before the war. We have succeeded this deep-rooted good-will by keeping the name always before the public, but we could never have achieved it by advertising alone. "Viyella" is its own best advertisement. The years of rationing, shortage, making-do-as-you-can, have served the name better than any advertisement could."

CO-OPERATION IN AFRICA

With characteristic realism General Smuts declared in his address to the House of Representatives that the United Kingdom and the British Empire are in a position to bring about the union of all British possessions in Africa into a single self-governing unit. The view of the British Government is that Africa is the time for a political union (if ever it comes) to be left to the Africans. In the meantime however, he believes that a great deal more can be done to achieve greater co-operation and it is well-known that the British Government has been working for the greater of all to discuss and bring about the exchange of views on problems of various kinds between all British territories in Africa.

For us in East Africa a general preliminary to any such greater union was established in the formation of the East African Community, which is the unification of the East African territories into one economic entity. That is an objective which should be kept in mind as we have no opportunity of pressing for it without the aid of the British Government.

Without question the trade in East Africa is increasing in the future. We have learned during the war the difficulties that are involved in the carrying of goods far inland and outside our own ports for supplies. It is clear that the development of the East African territories requires the development of clear trade relations with an industrialized South Africa. It is these essential goods. The aim of the East African Community is to develop trade relations in both directions. We must find our own markets in South Africa. We must find our own supplies. We must find our own markets in South Africa. We must find our own supplies.

G.E.C. in war — as in peace
at the service of the Empire

Before the war, G.E.C. electrical equipment was standard on ships for every class of service. Many important vessels, including turbo-electric liners, electrical oil-discharging cargo vessels and diesel-electric liners, were completely equipped by the G.E.C., the largest British electrical manufacturing organization in the Empire. During the war there has probably not been a single ship which has not been equipped with G.E.C. electrical equipment.

The G.E.C. serves every coastal industry in a similar way and the magnitude of such a task has necessitated a complete reversal from peacetime production to war production. Changes in design and technique have been necessary, and these will have the most far-reaching effects in the future.

When power returns, the Company's experience, embracing every application of electricity including the important one of desalination, will be at the disposal of all concerned with reconstruction in every part of the world in carrying out complete electrification schemes of any magnitude.

Agreeing that voters in the constituency should themselves at least be made aware of the main points of the candidates' policies, Mr. Wright would not agree entirely with the view, voiced by a few friends of the constituency, who could not cater for the fact that many of the voters might ignore some voters.

Mr. Wright further gave evidence that he had been invited by the British League of Women Voters to attend the meeting of the Executive Committee of the League which had been held at the Club on Saturday, December 1st, 1944. The meeting was held at the Club on Saturday, December 1st, 1944. The meeting was held at the Club on Saturday, December 1st, 1944.
