STRAINS ON THE STERLING AREA REFLECTED IN THE WORLD'S MARKETS

Special note to the East African Standard

THE strains imposed on the sterling area by the recent decline in the value of gold and dollars...

The fall in the value of sterling has now reached the point where the margin between the dollar and the sterling price is also becoming a matter of concern...

Considerable activity in the diamond market is being reported by London, where the price of diamonds has advanced 10 per cent since the beginning of the year.

Any rise would be generally, call it what you will, a result of the fact that the diamond market is being flooded with diamonds from the mines of South Africa, which are producing more diamonds than ever before.

Together with new capital such as that in the National plant in South Wales, opened recently, Avenue Forest works of the N.C.B.'s extensive programme of modernization.

A noteworthy feature of the project will be the fact that the scheme is for the plant has been designed to convert to the stream, it will not require any special power requirements of any large scale.

Rising costs defeat cheap beef plan

THE plan to produce a cheap beef supply for the home market has been abandoned because of the rising cost of feedstuffs and other essential ingredients.

The Ministry of Agriculture has announced that the cost of producing beef has risen to such an extent that it is no longer possible to produce it at a price which would allow it to be sold at a price which would be acceptable to the public.

The cost of feedstuffs has risen by 50 per cent since the beginning of the year, and the cost of other essential ingredients has risen by 30 per cent.

The Ministry of Agriculture has therefore decided to abandon the plan to produce a cheap beef supply for the home market.

A GREAT EXPERIMENT IS FAILING

Communal living in Israel

By FLORA LEWIS

ISRAELI kibbutz movement, the world's largest and most successful experiment in social voluntary communal living, is disintegrating. A number of outside factors have influenced the downward trend, but essentially the inherent flaws in the social experiment of territorial Zionism are proving themselves again.

The kibbutzim started off with strange adventures over 20 years ago. They consisted of tiny groups of young people who had been expelled from their homes in Europe and were seeking a new life in the East. They were attracted to the idea of communal living, and the kibbutzim were established as a result of their desire to live together in a new society.

The very origin of the work was a result of the desperate, heroic and selfless efforts of young men and women who had been expelled from their homes in Europe and were seeking a new life in the East. They were attracted to the idea of communal living, and the kibbutzim were established as a result of their desire to live together in a new society.

Hard life

The kibbutzim were established in the most desolate and barren parts of the country. The land was unproductive and the climate was harsh. The members of the kibbutzim had to work hard to make the land produce and to build their communities.

At first, the kibbutzim were successful. They were able to produce enough food to feed themselves and to build up their communities. They were able to live together in a new society and to find a sense of purpose and meaning in their lives.

But over time, the kibbutzim began to disintegrate. The members of the kibbutzim were no longer able to work together in a new society. They were no longer able to find a sense of purpose and meaning in their lives. They were no longer able to live together in a new society.

Divisions

In some of the kibbutzim, there were divisions between the members. Some of the members were more successful than others, and this led to jealousy and competition. The members of the kibbutzim were no longer able to work together in a new society.
