THE GAME SCANDAL IN TANGANYIKA.

WHEN, at a recent meeting of the Permanent Mandates Commission in Geneva, Mr. Rappard, the Swiss delegate, drew attention to reports that indiscriminate shooting of lions had taken place in the country south of the Kenya-Tanganyika border, the Chief Secretary of Tanganyika Territory was constrained to admit that the allegation was true, but that the Game Department had not passed on the information either to the Governor or to himself. Wide publicity has been given in the last year or so to breaches of the game laws, and it is difficult to expatiate the Tanganyika Government from blame in a matter on which public opinion is, we are glad to say, becoming increasingly sensitive. That the Game Department of the Territory is abnormally reticent as to its activities is undeniable. East Africa has never received any official report of that Department, and inquiries at the Colonial Office Library and elsewhere have failed to unearth any trace of such reports. Yet the Game Department is a considerable spender of public money and as such is under an obligation to give an account of its stewardship. It may, of course, be that the Government has received such reports, but has not issued them to the public. Perhaps an unofficial member of the Legislative Council will press for publication. Meanwhile a truly Cimmerian darkness covers the policy of the Government and the activities of its officers.

In these circumstances the letter from Mr. Arthur Loveridge which we publish in this issue of East Africa is most timely. Our correspondent is a naturalist of established reputation, a sportsman of the best type, and a writer of responsibility. He details cases which have come under his personal observation of the selling of young animals, of roasting, there is no other word for it, of routine slaughter of game from motor cars, of game drives sale of wholesale destruction of game by Natives using fences and pits, of prodigal dealing in horns and—most amazing of all—an American expedition invading Tanganyika equipped with no fewer than five thousand rounds of ammunition. Justly, he blames white men and Natives alike for wanton slaughter, though when Americans evidently with the mentality of Chicago gangsters are allowed to satiate so repulsive a lust for blood, it seems difficult to blame the Natives if they follow suit.

We fear that the explanation must be sought in the attitude of David Salaam, as summed up by the officer who told our correspondent that "it was the policy of the Administration to take no action in such matters." Under Sir Donald Cameron the Tanganyika Government has shown an exaggerated, and almost exclusive, sympathy with Native customs and traditions, and has demonstrated no anxiety to interfere with such customs and actions even when they involve systematic flouting of the game laws. The result from the humanitarian point of view is deplorable. I saw miles and miles of apparently ideal game country," writes Mr. Loveridge, "almost unhabited, but encountered less than a dozen heads of game." In other words, extermination is rapidly resulting.

Game preservation, to use the official phrase, appears to have been a badly bungled business in Tanganyika. Beginning under Mr. C. F. M. Symonstone, it has trended chiefly towards (a) research, for which its Director is eminently fitted by inclination and training. It is high time for the game section to devote all its attention and energies to the preservation of game and for its officers to be properly supported by the Administration. The excellent reports of the Game Wardens of Kenya and Uganda point the way. The individual officers in Tanganyika are, we believe, equally zealous and

MATTERS OF MOMENT

We publish in this issue important extracts from the speeches of Mr. Roderick Buxton to the Committee of the League of Nations.

JOB-THUMPING—Our readers will, we imagine, not be surprised with some surprise, not unmixed with indignation, at the sentiments therein expressed, the model of their expression, and the technique which apparently governs the reports of that Committee. Mr. Buxton was in Geneva as the official representative of the British Empire—a diplomatically weighty and most responsible post—but we had him not only harping on the views of the present Socialist Government of Great Britain, but emphasising the policy of the Labour Party; the full minutes make that even clearer than our extracts. He forgot, in short, his position as an Empire representative, and acted much more like a party politician. What impression such a partisan made on the Committee in general we can gather only by reading between the lines of the report; for the representatives of other nations, however surprised they may have been, had evidently far greater control of their feelings than Mr. Buxton; nevertheless, they must have been mildly amazed at a job-thumping British Labour politician in full blast.

Stripped of unnecessary verbiage for the Committee was perfectly familiar with Article 22 of the Covenant and its implications—the “hub” of Mr. Buxton’s speech.

EXTENSION OF THE MANDATE SYSTEM.—His reference to Article 23 and his insistence on its general application. In other words, he wants to secure the extension of the application of the Mandates system to all areas in which Natives are under the administrative control of a higher race. “They have thereby undertaken,” he said, “an obligation of a general character which is incumbent not only upon the Mandatory Powers but upon every State that is a member of the League.” Now the newspaper reports from Geneva at the time gave the clear impression that Mr. Buxton had advocated the extension of the Mandates system to the Colonies of Powers possessing them, and although it is difficult to find in the actual words printed in the published minutes the policy quoted in the Press reports, it is evident from the official record that Count de Panha Costa, the Portuguese representative, did understand Mr. Buxton’s argument to have that importation, for, as we show, he protested vigorously against the suggestion.

Some comment seems necessary on the remarkable method by which the proceedings of such Committees are apparently recorded.

STRANGE IDEAS—When taken to task Mr. Buxton protested that he had not said what he was said to have said, and that even if he had said it, it did not matter all that mattered; he argued, what the Rapporteur—the official who submits the report of the Committee to the League—reported him to have said. “It is a matter of no importance what I said. The important thing is what the rapporteur says,” to quote the actual words of Mr. Buxton. Such an attitude to the report of the proceedings of a Committee attrogating to itself international importance, we venture to say, is unique. If it were allowed to prevail, the speeches of members of the Committee might be judiciously cooked by the rapporteur and then submitted to the League itself, a procedure as destructive of confidence as it would be revolutionary in character. Mr. Buxton, it will be seen, had no sober talker with story.

Recently we recorded that Sir William Gowers, the Governor of Uganda and General G. D. Rhodes, General Manager of the Kenya, Uganda and Uganda Railways and Harbours, had visited Brussels to discuss with the Belgian authorities the possibility of the extension of the railway systems on either side of the border, and the most suitable points for effecting connections between the two systems, if and when such railways are built. We learn that the conversations in Brussels were of the most friendly character, and that the Belgian Government gave all the information at their disposal with regard to their own plans for surveys and extensions, in addition for similar information from the British side. General Rhodes and Sir William Gowers have more than once made public profession of their conviction that the next work of extension of the Kenya and Uganda Railways must be westwards from Kampala with Stanleyville as the ultimate objective, since that town is destined a few decades hence to be a most important railway junction in Central Africa. According to our information, the discussions in Brussels have determined the following:—While the object of facilitating through connections it is likely that any extensions beyond Kampala would be so built that at any future date the gauge can without undue difficulty be increased from one metre to 2 feet 6 inches, the standard gauge throughout South Africa, the Belgian Congo and the Sudan, and the gauge to which the East African lines will at some future date, and it necessary to conform. The new bridge across the Nile at Juba has been designed to permit such modification, and fixed structure, tunnels, and other works on any further westerly extension. All the works are designed to facilitate conversion to a 3 feet 6 inches gauge when the need arises.

So far as the immediate requirements in the Belgian Congo are concerned, it appears likely that a line from Stanleyville towards the Nile at Juba will receive priority over other proposals in a more westerly direction to the southern extremity of the Ruwenzori range, in view of the already considerable development that has taken place in the Ituri, Kapepe, Ituri, and Kio-meto Districts. But such an alignment if built will also permit of an extension to the south of Ruwenzori when circumstances require it.

It is understood that arrangements have been made to continue the policy of consultation and co-operation between the Administrations of the Belgian and British railways, and it is confidently expected that the cordial relations existing between the two railway systems will lead to results beneficial to both parties.

GAME SLAUGHTER IN TANGANYIKA

SYSTEMATIC BREACHES OF THE GAME LAWS

Mr. Arthur Loveridge's Challenge to the Government

MR. ARTHUR LOVERIDGE has been known to East Africans for some sixteen years as a lover of game and as a careful observer of wild life, whose records have always been characterised by objectivity and sincerity. The following letter is a serious but well documented indictment of the Government of Tanganyika Territory in the Game Department of which Mr. Loveridge once served. The facts combined with his extensive personal knowledge of the Territory, enhances the importance of the statement, to which some official reply should certainly be made.

Written to haste before departure

To the Editor of "East Africa"

Sir: Having returned from an eight and a half months' safari in East Africa, over seven months of which were spent in systematic collecting in the bush away from towns and centres of civilisation, some of my observations on aspects of game preservation in Tanganyika may be of interest.

While fully conceding the necessity of controlling game in certain areas where the state in the habit of raising cultivated crops, I gained a very strong impression that the Government attitude was clearly expressed by the fact that I am not interested in the prosecution of any of the offences against the game laws. I consider the game the property of the natives. Carried to its logical conclusion, this argument should lead over to them other natural resources, such as mines, and they should be permitted to destroy the forests for fuel.

Killing of Young Animals. On detouring at Dodoma on November 2 last, I saw an Mgogo sending at the exit offering a young dikdik for sale to those leaving the station. It was purchased by a German lorry driver, who told me afterwards that it died within a few days. To my certain knowledge this taking of young antelopes—chiefly dikdik, quiker, reabuck and impala by Wagogo herdsmen has been going on without restriction since the British occupation in 1916. The ultimate result to the game is obvious. As for the young animals themselves, very few are being carelessly carried about in hot sunshine for a day or two before a purchaser is found, dikdik in particular are exceptionally hard to rear. The administrative offices of the Central Province are situated at Dodoma, and it is impossible that the authorities there are unaware of the importance of young game which is so common throughout the Province.

Game being shot at by Drivers of Transport on the Dodoma-Iringa Road.—At a Dodoma hotel I observed the frequency with which game meat is served to guests. This venison is supplied probably sold to the proprietor by one or other of the many transport drivers who make the hotel their rendezvous and headquarters. I engaged one of these men to drive me the 60 miles to Iringa. En route we saw no game until we crossed the Kinyasi River. Later we came on a group of half a dozen impala which were grazing on the freshly sprouted green grass beside the road. The driver immediately applied the brakes. I asked him why he was stopping. His reply was "Shoot quick." By this time the animals had raised their heads and were earnestly surveying us from a distance of less than hundred yards. I told the men that I preferred to have the animal alive. He replied that had he known this before he would have brought his own rifle with him, adding that he rarely travelled without it. I thought that I understood that shooting game from cars was illegal. He laughed, shrugged his shoulders, and replied that he did not know. Only twice again we saw antelope at close quarters, whereupon he mechanically put off the petrol, or exclaimed: "Don't you wait that one." To number of infringements of this type would not be difficult.

Illegalities tolerated by the Administration.

Game Driven by Natives accompanied by Dogs.—As a bus was being driven from Iringa to Dabaga in the Iringa-Kilimanjaro mountains I passed a party of armed natives who, accompanied by a dozen turks, were waiting in line through the open bush, obviously engaged in hunting. As I well know, this type of hunting is extremely destructive to game, especially to females in young, or accompanied by young, and their devotion to the latter renders the mothers a more easy prey.

That night an Assistant District Officer dined with me and I related the incident to him. He replied that it was a common sight in these parts. They asked if it was not illegal? He said that he supposed that it was, but that it was the policy of the Administration to take no action in such matters. Marching through the Uzungwe Mountains for a week, I saw miles and miles of apparently ideal game country almost unharmed but encountered less than a dozen head of game.

A few days after the previous incident I was enjoying the hospitality of a Government official in this area and observed that we were eating game meat. Knowing that my host did no shooting, I commented on this. He told me that it was bushbuck meat which he had bought from a Native who had supplied him on previous occasions. I am also in the condemnation for the next day a Native brought a very young bushbuck to my camp, saying that it had been killed by his dog. I bought it, entered it on my licence, and preserved the skin and skull. Legally this was in order, but to protect the game it is very necessary to prohibit all sales of game, whether by Europeans or Natives.

Slaughter of Colobus Monkeys.

Colobus Skins freely hawked for Sale by Natives.—It is no uncommon sight to see rugs or karosses of colobus skins in the houses of Europeans, such rugs being composed of more skins than could be obtained on a licence in several years. I noticed one exceptionally fine rug of colobus skins which were not of the local species. On my comment on this, I was told that the owner had suggested that he had advanced a certain sum to a very willing hunter, and he would take the journey to Lukhya (about 200 miles distant) and bring them back some skins. The owners were thus proceeding on leave and asked me frankly if I thought that there would be any difficulty in getting them out of the country. I was asked the same question by another official in regard to a coat of blue monkey skins, in both cases I had to answer in the negative.

In the somewhat remote Kinyasi District colobus are still abundant in various patches of forest, I was very near one where I camped in the first night of my game. My tent was very close to the side. I invariably refused to purchase and asked the would-be vendor if they were aware that it was illegal to sell skins. In every case the answer was in the negative. In the same way skins of one monkey was hawked about, one man brought to my camp a pair of skins, one of a baboon, besides those of a monkey. A fair price was paid, and added that the hunters in the area eat the meat of both colobus and the monkey.

Nearby Information

Prohibition of Game to Natives of Kenya and Uganda.—An Assistant District Officer, possibly a temporary appointment, superintending 5,000 Natives clearing bush for reclamation of land from tsetse, told me that when clearing bush about twenty miles west of Shimoni, in 1910 or 1930, I think he came upon a game licence twenty miles long. Following this up he destroyed 140 traps and pits during the first day and some spots of camp of hunters, together with four tons of meat and 110 freshly skinned hides, including giraffe, eland, wildebeest and zebra. At the camp he arrested three two Wasukuma who were running a regular business exchanging the meat for cash, grain, groundnuts and other marketable commodities. His own boy came to him and said: "Master, we hear that this is not the main camp; there is a larger one further along the fence." He cautioned them to say nothing to the local people; they would start for it at dawn. This he did, destroying 250 more snares or pits on the way. The other camp proved to be several hours' march away and when he reached it he found that the Natives had evidently been warned of his proximity the night before, for there were signs in plenty that they had spent the night in carrying off quantities of meat and removing their belongings, for the camp was abandoned.

The arrested Natives were charged at Shimyanga and fined from five to fifteen shillings each, a ridiculous amount in view of the fact that the current price for a buffalo in Shimyanga is 200 shillings. The sale of meat from a few of the 110 animals would be sufficient to pay all the fines. It is obvious that the present Government policy of imposing inadequate fines is useless as a deterrent, for the Natives stand to gain while he is deterred; and, moreover, the Natives gain the impression that the Government is not seriously in earnest or greatly concerned about game protection.

Rhino Horn Smuggling

Rhinoceros Horn Smuggling Doubts the Value of Quarry in Kenya Protection.—Mr. Wigglesworth of Zanzibar, told me that an Indian recently came over from Dar es Salaam to Zanzibar with two trunks full of rhino horn. Some were in barrels, disembarked at Zanzibar on a Monday but left his trunks on board, presumably having tipped one of the crew to look after them, so that they went on with the boat to Pemba Island. When the boat returned from Pemba on the following Thursday, he boarded her, examined and removed his trunks, Pemba being under the Zanzibar Administration. There is no Customs inspection of the cargo of passengers landing from Pemba as is the case with those coming from Dar es Salaam, Tanganyika Territory.

At Bukoba was told that a white man had been summoned about 1924 for employing a gang of Natives to shoot rhinoceros for him in the Saragwe district. He was charged with the possession of 10 horns and fined 2,000 shillings.

A Veterinary Officer stationed in the Central Province told me that in that Province it is customary for the officials of the Administration to pay rewards to Natives bringing in a found rhino horn. He said that the horn may be found in fresh. This he considered was a direct Government encouragement of rhinoceros poaching. He related the following as typical of the attitude of some District Officers. Either he, or a friend, came on a Native out in the bush miles from any known plots; the man, armed with a gun, was eating up rhino which he had shot. He took the name, chief, name, etc., and reported the matter to the then Assistant District Officer at Mpwapa. The young gentleman replied with words to this effect: "You don't mean to say he tackled a rhino with that old muzzle loader?" Stout fellow, congratulate him; I shouldn't like to have tried it." And that was the end of the matter.

Killing of Game and Sale of the Meat by Game Scouts.—One gentleman told me that the Natives of Bukoba, in fact for the protection of game and the practice of hunting game, even land, and selling the meat to the Natives, and that scarcely a week goes by without the local Natives killing a situation in the vicinity of Bukoba. He said that an amendment to the Game Laws, which legal for a Native to kill game for his own immediate needs, on the other hand, the killing is considered such an interesting and unique trophy that a sportsman's license only allows the killing of one or two.

Ammunition for Kenya

Purchase of Ammunition for Kenya for use in Tanganyika.—East Mwanza Province on board the "S. G. G. G." on board met Herr Jungblut, probably the leading German in Mwanza Province. He discussed with me and deplored the present game situation and said that a hundred rounds of rifle ammunition cost him for a year or more. Quite recently he had applied to Messrs. Charles A. Heyer and Company of Nairobi for the particular size of millimetre gauge cartridges which he required, and was told that they were extremely sorry but that their entire stock of five thousand rounds of this size had just been taken by an American party proceeding to Tanganyika. If this story is correct in detail, and I got him to repeat it to me—it is quite true that some check should be devised. If the Natives were good shots, they could contemplate killing a complete thousand head of game if they were poor shots, can we contemplate the possible annihilation of a thousand animals, supposing that five thousand were fired at during the course of the safari?

Effect of Protrusion Buffalo and other Animals

The following extract is from a letter written to me by a friend who is a Government official. It is dated May 23, 1930: "I have not even been able to afford a year licence yet." (Another fellow and I spent last week and shooting buffalo in the bush, but they were not counted. We shot and wounded two more.)

In the correspondence which appeared in The Times and in East Africa last year some respondents blamed the Europeans and others the Natives for the destruction of game. Personally, I think the blame should be shared by both classes. The Natives, by reason of their greater numbers and opportunities, probably accomplish more damage to the game than one needs with Europeans. However, with the sports and leopard's hunt for slaughter, the possibilities of such when armed with modern guns is immense.

THE DUKE OF GLOUCESTER LEAVES

To attend Ethiopian Coronation.

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUKE OF GLOUCESTER leaves England to-day to attend the coronation of Emperor of Ethiopia of the prince, well known for the world as Ras Tafari. The mission will certainly be one of the most interesting experiences which has yet fallen to the lot of the King's son, who is reported to have been studying authoritative works on Abyssinia, so that he can acquire knowledge useful to him on his coming tour. If those volumes have included the records of such writers as Mr. G. S. Rex and Mr. A. W. Hodson, and Mr. John Boyes's "Company of Adventure," the Royal envoy will have been well prepared for a lot of what he is bound to see during the next few weeks.

Medievalism.

Abyssinia is unique. It is the last survival of true medievalism in the world, and its crude magnificence, upon which the British Press has been glowing, is, in practice, considerably discounted in modern eyes, and noses, by the inevitable concomitants of medievalism. There is no need to be more specific.

Addis Ababa, the capital in which the coronation ceremonies are to take place, is the first permanent capital Abyssinia has had. Previously the Emperor was continually on the move, for, with no proper sanitary arrangements, it can easily be imagined that the heads of the Abyssinian State found it desirable not to prolong unduly their stay in any one locality. The journey thither from the coast port of Djibouti, in French Somaliland, will be performed in comfort, and more expeditiously than usual, for even in this year of grace that railway does not normally work at night; passengers sleep at a stopping place, as until a few years ago, they used to feed at given stations on the Uganda Railway. But whereas the peasant little Native habit of stealing fish plates, bolts, and even rails to make into spear heads and other ornaments has long been effectively discouraged in Kenya, a like degree of security has apparently not been achieved in Ethiopia.

Aladdin's Palace.

The Duke is to travel to Aden by the P. and O. "Ranpura" as an ordinary first-class passenger, and is to cross to Djibouti in H.M.S. "Emfingham," though, not content with permitting him so precise a means of sea-faring, some enterprising, widely circulated, and not very sound London journals have announced that the Royal party will have an adventurous journey across the sea (to the African mainland) in a native vessel.

Accompanied by the Earl of Argyll, Major Ronald Stanforth, Major A. T. Miles, Mr. E. W. Brook, and Mr. A. N. Noble (of the Foreign Office), the Duke is due at Addis Ababa on Wednesday, October 20, in good time for the coronation, which is fixed for Sunday, November 2. A magnificent suite of apartments, with marble floors, gilded fittings and stained glass, and ebony walls hung with rich pictures hangs round the side of the Duke and his suite at the Mareik Palace, and a pair of gilded coaches provided to convey them to the cathedral for the coronation ceremony. After the usual simplicity of Buckingham Palace, such splendour will be quite impressive. The Duke's suit is described as the example of the work of British goldsmiths, as well it may be for an Emperor whose crown is reputed to be worth £100,000.

DANAKIL HERDSMEN WITH CAMELS, ABYSSINIA.

As to the "gilded coaches," it is known that emissaries from Ethiopia have been searching Europe for suitable conveyances for the occasion, and that, with really unbelievable irony, they have procured the Imperial chariot of the ex-Kaiser; it has been redecorated to the Abyssinian taste. Addis Ababa will be a good station for King Tafari on the morning of November 2.

A Raw Meat Banquet.

The coronation over the whole week will be devoted to feasting. By rigid custom Abyssinians eat their meat raw, the habit being said to date from the Muhammedan invasions of Ethiopia, when the Natives were so harried that they dared not light a fire to cook their victuals. However that may be, the Duke and his suite will be regaled by the sight of some thousands of the Emperor's loyal forces feasting on raw meat, and, moreover, golloping it with zest, teste those authoritative works on Abyssinia already mentioned. After that, the cutting and devouring of the giant, three-tier cake which is to grace the British Minister's banquet will indeed be a nursery tea-party business!

His official duties and visit completed, the Duke will come home hunting, but, as East Africa exclusively announced, time will not permit him to revisit Kenya, and the Duke will therefore be accompanied in British Somaliland by the Duke's own camera. The royal envoy will be in London on Boxing Day.

EAST AFRICA AND EMPIRE FREE TRADE

Killed by Dominion Premiers.

How many of our readers realized that Kenya quite settles, in their growing anxiety over the restrictions placed on the Colony's trade by the Congo Basin treaties, have turned to Empire Free Trade as the only solution of their difficulties. Those who were aware of so momentous a change in public opinion have been strangely silent about it. But one man stands valiantly forth to proclaim his discovery: he is the Nairobi correspondent of The Daily Express.

From the standpoint of his chief, Lord Beaverbrook, the message could scarcely have been more timely, for it arrived a few hours after the Prime Minister of Canada had proudly declared what was evident for everyone who would face facts that "Empire Free Trade is neither desirable nor possible, for it would defeat the very purpose we are striving to achieve. All that is helpfully secured by Empire Preferences, all that is hitherto enjoyed in this way be avoided." Thus clearly did our great American Dominion expose the hollowness of a newspaper stunt policy which East Africa examined in detail some months ago, and found to be totally inapplicable to East African conditions and aspirations. The British Ministers of the other Dominions made it clear that they too were not prepared to waste time, or even words, on an obviously unworkable proposal.

Explained Away.

But Empire Free Trade is now being energetically explained away by its sponsors. For "Empire Free Trade," please read "Imperial Preference." Since the Nairobi message is of such great consequence to the Empire Crusaders that it is given double-decker headlines on the centre news page of the Express, let us quote it in full. The words cited in this first paragraph of this note are followed by:

"The existence of the Congo Basin treaties, which must continue in force for at least another six months, makes the adoption of a policy of Empire Free Trade impossible at the moment, and until such time as the British Government can ride the East African Colonies of the shackles imposed by these obsolete agreements."

"The fact that there is a definite movement in Kenya itself towards Empire Free Trade is now being made clear in a resolution passed at the annual session of the Dominion Association, representing the interests in all parts of the colony. This demands that steps be taken to try to devise some method by which Kenya may be given a free hand in making Customs preferences."

Following the message, and presumably written in London, we find:

"Kenya has been long an Uganda Premier energetically campaigning for the revision of the Congo Basin treaties under the terms of which our East African Colonies are tied out of agreement with any of the Powers associated in the treaties with the matter of trade."

"Meanwhile, letters and telegrams have been received at the Empire Crusade Offices in London from many public bodies in both Colonies, including the Plasterers Association of Uganda, pleading, who begged support for the policy of Empire Free Trade the moment that the opportunity comes for its adoption."

Kenya and the Mandate.

The very last thing Kenya, Uganda, or any other East African Dependency could possibly contemplate would be Empire Free Trade. Extension of Imperial Preference is an entirely different affair, with the principles of which we believe East Africans do not in thorough agreement. One of the reasons which make Kenyans, for instance, so strongly opposed to the idea of extension to that Colony of the terms of the Tanganyika Mandate is their refusal to be bound by terms of which they cannot later justify themselves in preference to the Mother Country on her exports to East Africa.

Why has the Uganda Plasterers Association pledged itself to support Empire Free Trade? It is that its members failed to understand the term, probably the reason is to be found in a circular letter received by a number of Settler Associations in the territories from Sir James Park, Lord Beaverbrook's right-hand man in his "crusade."

A copy of that communication has reached us from Africa. It reads:—

"I am directed by Lord Beaverbrook to communicate with your Association on the subject of Empire Free Trade. He would be greatly obliged if, after considering the matter, your Association could see its way to give the new policy their support. As the subject is growing in importance every day in Great Britain, may we hope that you will consider Lord Beaverbrook's policy and express your opinion thereon. A resolution from your Association would greatly assist the campaign in this country."

In the short space of some six months a remarkable public interest has been created in Great Britain, and it is no exaggeration to say that everywhere the policy is gaining ground. Recent elections have been fought largely upon this issue. At Fulham and Nottingham victories were recorded, at Glasgow the Socialist majority was reduced from 7,000 to 370, and at Norfolk the Socialist majority was reduced from 2,000 to 170. In each case Lord Beaverbrook entered the field personally, and the fight was almost entirely upon the issue of Empire Free Trade, and specially upon the question of England imposing a tax on foreign foods and goods.

"The question is, indeed, becoming the dominating issue of English politics, and it is well therefore that the Colonies should begin to understand its implications properly."

Lord Beaverbrook's view is that the Colonies should come into a fiscal Union with the Home Land on the basis of free trade on both sides. This course, I should explain, does not imply the removal or abrogation of the duties imposed in the Colonies for revenue purposes.

"Under Lord Beaverbrook's scheme you would still retain unaffected, all duties imposed for revenue purposes to direct from protective purposes. Nor would your right to levy purely revenue duties in future be in any way impaired. Lord Beaverbrook recognises that in many of the Colonies the only practicable method for raising the bulk of their revenues must be by a tax on imports, and that taxation as a rule, we know, under present conditions, is unpractical in Burmah cases. Under the circumstances, should raise their tariffs from the present level to that of the foreigner, so as to give such a real and effective advantage to British goods as to permit of their successful entry into the Colonies against foreign competition."

Lord Beaverbrook believes that the Colonies would reap from his scheme a benefit as thus outlined would be very substantial. Great Britain would still continue to let her own Colonial products quite free of duty, but would impose a tariff against and upon all foreign goods. A most valuable sheltered market would be created. The Colonies would have the advantage of entering into the fiscal terms of the needs of Great Britain, and to have no tariff barrier. On the other hand, the Colonies would enjoy the advantages of a most effective protection of their goods against foreign competition. One can safely visualize a mutually profitable and ever-growing trade."

The Scheme is Dead.

Could anything be more unconsciously disastrous than the suggestion that the East African territories "should come into a fiscal Union on a basis of Free Trade," which does not imply the removal of duties imposed for revenue purposes. Since these duties rest upon most articles, and incidentally provide the chief source of revenue, the term "Free Trade" is farcical.

The scheme, however, is dead, killed by the Dominion Premiers, and we need not examine the above letter more closely. It has seemed desirable to put the above claims of the "Crusaders" on record solely that East Africans may be made aware of the strange constructions placed in interested quarters upon their own words and intentions.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WORK OF THE PROPAGANDA COMMITTEE

TRIBUTE TO SIR SEFTON BRANCKER

His Interest in the African Air Service.

To the Editor of "East Africa"

Sir, I should like with your permission through the medium of East Africa to pay tribute to the memory of one in particular who laid down his life in the R.T.O. and who, as a man, I claim to know, his air communications of East Africa thoroughly at heart. I refer to Air Vice-Marshal Sir Sefton Brancker, A.F.C., Director of Civil Aviation.

East Africans will remember his steady countenance, his infallible good humour, and the enormous enthusiasm he evoked in the proposals for the early establishment of an air line to Central Africa and the Cape.

I find it difficult to do justice to his memory in my association with him in connexion with that project, gave me many opportunities of proving his amazing keenness and his determination to overcome all difficulties, no matter how insurmountable they appeared to be. No trouble was too great, as his flight to Kenya showed some three years ago, if he saw that he could help matters by a visit in person.

He possessed the great gift of inspiring others with his own spirit, and his name will deservedly go down through the ages as one of the pioneers of Empire air communications. He devoted his life to the furthest of that object. I feel it is the end he would have preferred the death of Honour helping the cause he had so keenly at heart.

Yours faithfully,
T. A. GLADSTONE

SUNSET ON THE MOUNTAINS OF THE MOON

in the Valley of Fort Portal

To the Editor of "East Africa"

Sir, in a footnote to a recent letter you suggested that your readers should describe the attractions of towns lying in East Africa.

From the geographical and scenic points of view would it not be difficult to beat Fort Portal? The massive Mountains of the Moon, the quietude surrounding the famous crater lakes, and the unspoiled who often find the market are just instances of its attractions from a tourist point of view. Another great attraction to the lover of Nature is the fact that very reliable sundials are often seen there: after the sun has slipped behind the high mountains the light becomes dim; inside a house artificial light is necessary and it seems that night has fallen, when suddenly the whole countryside is lit up with the flaming red reflection of the sun setting behind the mountains. Light can be extinguished and so the flaming red changes to purple, the outlines of the tops of the mountains become clearer, and eight or ten minutes after the first glow of red in the sky it is pitch dark. Never have I seen such a sight anywhere else.

To the farmer the rich soil of Togo is to be compared only with that in the coffee growing districts near Nairobi. He could wish for more.

I am not fortunate enough to own an estate near Fort Portal. I write only because so many East Africans to whom I have spoken have no knowledge of that part of Uganda.

Yours faithfully,

Newcastle

Reader's Tribute to Efficient Service

To the Editor of "East Africa"

Sir, Rather a serious omission is noticeable in your issue of October 2. To those who read beyond the lines, the account of the East African Delegation's first week in London, even a piece of quite exceptionally efficient staff work by the Propaganda Committee responsible for the arrangements. No doubt the fact that you, Sir, are a member of that Committee is responsible for the editorial reticence on the subject, but it certainly should not pass without an expression of appreciation. To have a conference with General Henzog and the Delangre fixed within twenty hours of Lord Delangre's arrival was a notable achievement and hardly less so was the arrangement for the interviews given by Lord Delangre to six of our most influential newspapers.

East African interests have not always been handled with such refreshing efficiency, and respectful congratulations are due from all East Africans to the Committee, a full list of whose names I hope you will publish in your next issue.

J. A. WATSON

Many of the appreciations expressed of the work of East African bodies in London, and the letter of Mr. Watson to the new Clerk of Nairobi, is so that account likely to be particularly pleasing to the members of the Propaganda Committee. For obvious reasons we have been recent as to its activities, but some of us, in law and East Africa in general has reason to be grateful to its members for a good deal of unobtrusive work. The good press obtained by Lord Delangre on his arrival can certainly be placed chiefly to the credit of the Propaganda Committee, which, however, must share the glory of the achievement of so many of the members of the Propaganda Committee have already been published in East Africa, but we accede to our correspondent's request to repeat them because so well that readers intimately acquainted with one or more of the members might make some suggestions for the common cause which they would be glad to offer, or assisting, financial or personal, may be made. Many of the following members of the Committee are: Major W. M. Crowdy, Major G. G. Cran, Mr. C. B. Murray, Mr. S. Jackson, Mr. G. W. Williams, Mr. G. W. Williams, Mr. Geoffrey Eaton.

Colonel W. H. Franklin, H.M. Trade Commissioner in Eastern Africa and Commissioner to H.M. Eastern African Dependencies. Trade and Information Office in London will, we learn, arrive back in this country from the present East Africa tour on or about December 1.

No. 32. MY VILLAGE.

In East Africa you have walked and been over the camp life of the little village at England to which you will retire in the evening of your life. Of the tankards of good English ale you will consume a pound of bread and a pint of beer, then to my mind you will find the one spot in all the world where petrol pumps do not despoil the landscape, where the whistling and rattling of trains is heard not except when the evening breeze blows over from the west, and where the grocer's van which visits us twice weekly is still surrounded by admiring villagers as the acme of modern scientific progress.

Yes, we appreciate things here, not being palled with over-civilisation. We live close to Nature and Nature has given us a better understanding and respect for herself and her laws than it does in towns. There is so much to be seen in my village. These total earnings exceed thirty shillings a week, and I can tell you that they are happy on it. There is enough to eat, there is a good wife and mother at home, and the grass is green, and the trees of the hills give in profusion of their branches and boughs for the winter's use. What more do I want? There is no picture peace within four miles, no bush of hussies with under-developed, over-exposed limbs, and if the day is too short for the accomplishment of a task, well, there is no violent hurry anyway. To-morrow is also today.

The Simple Life

Our population consists of seventy-three souls, old, young and indifferent. But most of them are very old or very young, the more adventuresome having gone out into the world to work to provide a few more shillings per week to supplement the Old Age Pensions on which their parents live. The rent of a cottage in my village is six shillings and sixpence per week, and a good landlord, no doubt inspired by tales of fabulous sums to be made out of house property, recently put up the price of my local cottage to half a guinea; there was a hearty protest, and it was possible to get a really pleasant one.

You will have noticed that the economical community. Our oldest inhabitant boasts ninety-five summers, and is treated by his frivolous young daughter to a seventy-four. A day or so of a girl's life, and according to the old man, constantly to be kept under supervision, and her independence of the world should be to her interdiction. The old man has had over children too, and of one who died recently he gave me the details. A frail girl this, apparently, and after regarding the intimate details of her last fatal illness, the old man signed. "I know I should never fear that child," he said in conclusion.

How old was she? I asked sympathetically. Only sixty-eight, he replied.

I have also a village pump, and around this on the evenings I find many a woman to start with, and there discuss the latest scandal, the latest news, and that the abominable like the fumes.

But of all the blessings that are here the chief is the absence of any rich people. There are no big landowners no retired profiteers with their expensive motor-cars, their chickens in a cross the road and their dirt-clothes worms in the centre of the grass, and their complete lack of any having a material attraction, but their own to play.

Two Desirable Houses to let.

It seems a pity, though, that more retired folk do not settle here where Nature is unspoiled. There are two houses, to my knowledge, in the vicinity of sufficient, and surrounded by little streams, streams—houses of which tired East African officials and sometimes settlers dream, and any day like the sound of them, and promise actually to preserve the quiet and solitude of my village, and not to use a motor-car of more than normal horsepower, and colored in sombre hue, and to keep your fingers clean. I will give you its name, but not its address.

Trappers pass us by—for there is no sin against me to expose our nakedness to the touring camera—and those who have once penetrated our fastnesses have gone away with a roaring of engines and a billow of blue smoke, vowing never to return, for approach which way they will there is a grueling hill to climb. If you follow the road, however, and can take a delight in these things, there is a secret way—a way tortuous and difficult, but in reality a far easier way. But this we do not tell to visitors, for they will rob the bluebells from the hedgerows in the spring, and the blackberries in the summer. Also they will frighten the little white-tailed rabbits that play and scurry in the adjoining fields.

Another secret we keep is the brewing of home-made wine. Religion plays a strong part in village messages pronounced by the leaders of the church and the Nonconformist chapel, being about only conflicting topics of conversation, but in one thing they are united—abstinence. Our home-made wine, therefore, is official, non-alcoholic. Even if there is no alcohol in it, then there is some new form of spirit, for a flunkier first, once an inspiring, yet comforting, effect. It is made from—no, first, you must come here and taste it, and if we approve of you, maybe we shall give you the recipe.

The night comes in the wood fires from the village emit their thin pillars of smoke and the sun has set over the ridge behind the valley beyond which lies the Atlantic. It is time to put on the slippers that have been warmed for me in front of the fire to sit in an arm chair until dinner time. And after dinner? There is the cot-bed in the world.

A memorial has been erected at Macequece to the early settlers of the Mozambique Territory. The first name is that of Francisco Barreto, who reached the country in 1572; the most recent name is that of Pedro Andrade, whose service in East Africa began in 1900.

"I suppose that it was this look of fear of motor-cars that led to the sportsmen to indulge in the disgusting and cowardly practice of hunting lions and other animals from the security of their luxury cars. I fully realize the value of polite language, but I can only say that the man who is afraid to stand up to his game in the open is a poor creature and that the wild animals of Africa are far too fine a character to be shot down like vermin by people infinitely less noble than themselves. I thank God that such people have now illegals, the despicable and vulgar slaughter." Major Court, President in 'Out of the Beaten Track'.

"One fact which stands out more distinctly than any other is the amazing achievement that has been accomplished by our fellow countrymen on behalf of the Native race for whose uplift and advancement we have become responsible. Any man who doubts this—and I am well aware that such doubts are fashionable—should read this book. The date of Jackson's landing at Lamu is but forty-five years ago, and yet to read of this righteous indignation at the sight of the gangs of child-slaves yoked in chains in the streets. Later, we learn of the cruelty of Masai raids on peaceful villages and of the pillage and slaughter that ensued, while throughout the pages famine, disease and epidemic stalk rampant. Contrast conditions to-day with those of that time and not ashamed that Britain be proud of them, in which the transformation is so clearly seen in his Foreword to 'Six Months in the Days of East Africa'.

EAST AFRICA'S

WHO'S WHO

13. Major Arthur Trevelyan Miles, D.S.O. O.B.E., M.C.

Major Arthur Trevelyan Miles affords an example of excellence of the virtues of an official who endures the complex and just deserves confidence and sympathy and of his colleagues in the East African military services. Going to Kenya in 1900, he took up a private post as a staff officer at Kericho, and continued until the outbreak of the War to raise, equip and grow the 1st Battalion, East African Mounted Troop, in the East African Mounted Troop. He was soon transferred to the East African Scouts and then to the 1st K.A.R. serving with all these units on the northern frontier of what was then German East Africa. In 1915 he was given command of the King's African Rifles, a unit of 10,000 men, and after serving throughout the Campaign, joined the 5th K.A.R. He acts with them on the Northern Frontier of Kenya from 1919 to 1921, when he was appointed British Consul in Southern Abyssinia, and after he held this post he was invited to come to Kenya. He was then Governor of Kenya from 1921 to 1923, when he was appointed Major-General. He was awarded the D.S.O., M.C., and the East African Cross of Merit during the East African Campaign, and was awarded the O.B.E. in 1924. He was also awarded the O.B.E. in 1925 for his services as Governor of Ethiopia, and was also awarded the O.B.E. in 1926 for his services as Governor of Ethiopia.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Field, who have arrived in Nairobi by air, left the United States a few days ago for the serene Florida, where they hope to secure specimens for the Chicago Museum. Captain Hugh Blatford is in charge of the party.

Mr. J. F. McIntyre, who is now on leave from his regiment, has served in Kenya and Uganda for the past thirty-one years. Recently as Postmaster of Kampala, before coming to East Africa in 1909 Mr. McIntyre had served in South Africa for over six years.

Miss Julia Chapman, the composer, who has set to music the task of collecting folk songs of the world, and who has collected more than one thousand specimens in half-a-dozen countries in the last few years, hopes to visit East Africa in the near future.

Dr. J. H. Siffert, who is returning from the medical department of Long Beach towards the end of this year, served in Sierra Leone, Nigeria and the Cameroons from 1909 to 1915, being attached to the Cameroons Expeditionary Force. He was appointed to Tanganyika ten years ago.

In the competition by members of the U.S.A. Rifle Club for the Pohnsby Cup, Mr. J. Minnery was the winner with a score of 18 points, the second and third being Mr. C. Redfern and Captain B. C. Dowling with scores of 84 and 85 respectively. Mr. Minnery has shot at Bisley on several occasions.

The marriage will take place on November 20 between Sybil Barbara Farquhar, second daughter of the late Lieutenant Colonel Francis Farquhar and Lady Evelyn Malcolm, and Lieutenant-Commander Anthony Blay Combe, eldest son of Major Mrs. Boyce Combe of Great Horse Dock, Farnham.

Major G. I. Kirkham, M.C., Commissioner of Police, Tanganyika, who is on his way back to Dar es Salaam, at one time served in the South African Constabulary and the Transvaal Police Force. During the War he was with the South African Forces in France.

The engagement is announced between Miss E. Tully, of Tanganyika, and Miss W. A. Richardson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Richardson, of Annandale, New Bridge Hill, Bath. Mr. Tully is now on his way out to Tanganyika, where he has been a Stock Inspector for the past two years.

The South African Consulate lately announces that the following missionaries are shortly leaving for East Africa on their first tour: Rev. D. and Mrs. J. N. Greene and Mr. H. Lodge; Uganda, Rev. W. J. Church; the Rev. A. H. Butler; and the Rev. G. C. L. Orpwood. South Africa, the Rev. G. L. Arnold.

Mr. A. W. Haxter, who is motoring from the Cape to Cairo, recently arrived in Hararoum on the last stages of his journey. He discovered many road difficulties, and also the Bahora Plains in Southern Tanganyika, took a new road running from Mbera to Iringa, which, although a longer route, was in excellent condition.

The Rev. M. George Robert Hodge, O.B.E., who served as a missionary in Germany for some thirty-five years, has been appointed Hon. Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, Kampala. Canon Edward Seabrooke, who has been appointed Archdeacon of Uganda in succession to the Ven. G. B. Blackledge, and Chancellor of St. Paul's Cathedral.

Not a few East Africans served in Salonika during the War. Do they all know that the Salonika Reunion Association issues an interesting quarterly journal, named the Movimento? Specimen copies are, we believe, obtainable on application to the Secretary, Mr. G. B. Bunning, 63, Third Avenue, Paddington, London, W. In the current issue appears a letter from Captain E. R. Mulphy, of Mikindani, Tanganyika.

Messrs. W. H. and R. G. Lewis, the sons of Mr. H. Lewis, the well-known Eastern African building contractor, are on their way back to South Africa after a holiday in this country, New Zealand, Canada, and the United States. They intend to manage the Dar es Salaam and Morogoro branches of the family business, but the elder brother shortly expects to go to Nairobi to take charge of the business, so that his father can come on leave next spring.

Mr. R. Harding Webster, who has just been appointed to the District Commissioners in Kenya, is shortly to be married to Miss M. V. Sater, youngest daughter of the late Mr. Kyrle Sater and of Mrs. Sater, of Rosemead, Shropshire. Mr. Webster was at Cambridge University from 1925 to 1928, in which year he was appointed house tutor at Kell College, Tavistock. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts and of the Royal Anthropological Institute.

Lord Ingham, who in address has with a reputation held at the Wellcome Historical Medical Museum to meet the Presidents' Council and Fellows of the Royal Anthropological Institute, the International Institute of African Languages and Culture and the African Society. Among those with East African interests present were Sir John and Lady Sandeman Allen, Mr. Henry and Lady Galway, Major and Mrs. P. O. Cotton, Lieutenant Colonel G. de Saige and Sir Alfred Sharpe.

Mr. T. Campbell Black, who is now flying a new flight survey machine back to Kenya, had an unpleasant experience when he landed at Kisumu to pick up his two passengers, Major Jack Conn and Captain Babe Swinte. Unaware that he intended landing at that aerodrome, which is reserved for the use of the French Naval Air Service, the authorities were decidedly perturbed at taking of detaching the plane. After long explanations, however, Mr. Black was able to proceed.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. M. B. Sanders criticised Nyasa land tobacco planters at the annual meeting of the Nyasaland Tobacco Association held recently in Blantyre. He characterised as "ludicrous" their membership of 125 out of a total number of 200 air-cure tobacco planters, pointed out that only fifty even had paid their wholly inadequate annual subscription of 10s. 6d., and said that the poor performances at their lectures demonstrated the apathy of the members. He urged that each planter should undertake an intensive campaign for new members.

Mr. M. A. Pinto, who has just retired after thirty-three years' service on the Kenya and Uganda Railway, had the honour of driving many distinguished visitors up-country from Mombasa, among them being the Prince of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of York, the Duke of Connaught, Prince Arthur of Connaught, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, and Mr. Winston Churchill. During the East African Campaign he was mentioned in dispatches, and was recommended to the Colonial Office for his courage and pluck when his train was bombed five times by the Germans. He is to settle on a coffee plantation in Moshi.

Among those with East African interests present at last Thursday's banquet given at the Savoy Hotel by the Federation of Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire in honour of the members of the Imperial Conference were Mr. F. F. Abbott, Mr. A. E. Adams, Sir John Sandeman Ailes, Sir Ab. Bailey, Mr. Basil Blackett, Mr. R. R. Buckfield, Sir Henry Dalglish, Sir Edward Dawson, Colonel H. V. B. de Sa, Sir Gilbert Grindle, Lord Lindsay, Colonel Weston Jarvis, Mr. P. S. Johnson, Sir Daniel T. Keimigh, and Mr. H. P. de V. Lobb, Sir Halford Mackintosh, Mr. F. A. Miles, Mr. G. M. Morgan Smith, Mr. A. T. Peckham, and Mr. C. W. P. Young.

EAST AFRICAN POLICY

Uganda Planters' Views

The Uganda Planters' Association has passed unanimously the following resolutions in reference to the recent White Papers on East African policy:

- (1) This meeting emphatically protests against the principle enunciated in the Memorandum on East African policy in East Africa in that the Government stated that the interests of the African Native shall be paramount. It is of the opinion that the interests of the African Native should be considered paramount, and that the language in which the Memorandum is couched is unnecessary and untrue.
- (2) The association reiterates its opinion expressed at the time of the meeting of the Council of the Union in Nairobi, namely that while it is conceded that the time has not yet arrived for federation, yet it believes that a policy of co-ordination of the interests of the various territories might be effected which would be to all and at a cost which is not prohibitive.

EAST AFRICAN SERVICE APPOINTMENTS

The following appointments to the East African Public Service were made by the Secretary for State for the Colonies during the month of September:

KENYA COLONY.—Assistant Magistrate, Mr. G. C. Robinson, Assistant Magistrate, Mr. C. A. Thorold, Principal Education Department, Mr. G. R. H. Webster.

MAURITIUS.—Master of Classics, Royal College, Mr. J. S. R. Cole.

A VOICE OF NO CONFIDENCE

UNDER the title "Colony Opposites" our London contemporary South Africa says in a leading article in its current issue:

"In their attitude towards the white community that stands for British enterprise beyond the Zambezi, Lord Passfield and the authors of the White Paper and subsequent Memorandum on East African Affairs adopt that very superior air to which we have become too much accustomed whenever the interests of the Empire engage the Socialist mind. Nothing that the settlers in Rhodesia do in the Native relation satisfies them; and without knowing the nature of their duties they are ordered to stand down."

"It is tantamount to a vote of no confidence in the white man's title; it challenges his soundness of heart and places upon him the stigma of exploitator, and it proposes to sacrifice his anxious achievement of years on the altar of extreme emotionalism and exaggeration in economics. There is in it even a suggestion of spite against those of our own race who have gone bravely forth to the spacious lands in the great spirit, proved themselves true sons of Empire, developed vast resources for the common good, and in the process bestowed many blessings on the black man—not least among them the blessing of peace. In Kenya and in Rhodesia proud records have been established in the Native relation: policy has been marked by humanity at every stage. In the Rhodesias especially, the Native enjoys a status in every way superior to that of the Native in the Union; and we do not hear of the Imperial Government applying its lofty and brand-new principles there."

"On what does the theory of the Native's right to come first rest? Has he demonstrated to the world at large his fitness to be a civilizer? Has he beneficially occupied land anywhere north of the Zambezi and developed it for the common good? Has he fine fellow that he is—initiated anybody anywhere? Has he advanced his own people, improved their health, contributed to their prosperity, advanced their education? The course of the first and last is the white man, who, with a great gesture to the Labour gallery and the world of sentimentalists, is to be deposed in the Dark Continent."

"Once again we are back among the Little Englanders who appear more anxious to impress Geneva than to do justice to their own countrymen; to the men who have justice to their own people. The white man, they say, is to be snubbed. In future the white man's supreme is to be selected hand, and the white man, save in a proper attitude of approach, shall take any good thing to him. Development, which is "exploitation" in the vocabulary of the Little Englanders, shall stand still. The contacts of the white man shall cease; enterprise and emigration come to an end. The rule of kral and tribe shall return. The sun shall shine down on sloth and disease and dark ness—all in the sacred cause of Native Supremacy. Bridges shall not be built, or roads made, or railways constructed, or schools set up, or hospitals established. There shall be no great example for the black man in their works and wisdom. Black men shall rule through black men for black men; and the European will look on from the lowlier place assigned him by an emotional Government and the sorry company of stay-at-homes. Does it sound exaggerated? Yet this is what the White Paper must mean if its principles are applied in lands where for generations the white man, his industry, his initiative, his institutions and his example have spell salvation for the unuttered and wretched. He is to be deprived of status and authority, and denied even the barest justice. The party politics of Westminster cast a blight upon even the farthest places of the Empire and the rare spirit of adventure and enterprise is recklessly destroyed."

ANOTHER COMMISSION AS THE REMEDY!

WHILE it is true enough that home-keeping Englishmen cannot properly appreciate the problems by which East African settlers are faced every day, it is not beyond possibility that the settlers are insufficiently considerate of the Native point of view. The Christian in an editorial note, which ends with the statement that "What is needed to meet a difficult situation is not for delegations in this country, but for an exhaustive commission of inquiry to be sent from Britain to East Africa to examine the problems on the ground."

Last week we were obliged to accuse another influential Church newspaper of ignorance of an East African subject on which it had not hesitated to pontificate. Now The Christian, another Church newspaper, shows itself ignorant of the elementary facts of the case; for surely no one who was aware that in the last half-dozen years East Africa has been visited by the Ormsby-Gore Commission, the Phelps-Stokes Commission, the Hilton Young Commission, and Sir Samuel Wilson, Permanent Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, could ask for an exhaustive commission of inquiry to be sent from Britain to examine the problems on the ground. That was exactly what the Hilton Young Commission was appointed to do. The trouble does not spring from inadequate knowledge; indecision in high places, not unmixcd with preconceptions and prejudices, is the stumbling-block.

LIFE IN ENGLAND ON A PENSION.

Interpreting Experiences of a Retired Official

Are you a settler or business man in East Africa thinking of retiring? Are you an official hoping one day to draw a pension? Have you retired on pension? In either case: "How to Live in England on a Pension" (Thacker, ss. 6d) is the very book for your needs. Written by a retired Indian official, who adopts the nom de guerre of "Mauser," it embodies the results of his own experience. He writes:—

"The author makes a plea for confidence, by his readers, in what he outlines. He left India three years ago, thinking all would be easy. He has arrived at his solution by hard personal experience, and by a succession of bumps and jolts. He is still healing his bruises. The solution has, furthermore, been arrived at with the help of the most rigid system of accounts, in which the smallest daily items were noted down. The assurance for argument's sake that he is addressing a civil or military officer within a reasonable time of his retirement. Should the reader be a Government servant in a portion of the Empire which is not India, it is anticipated that he will, by adjusting the wording to his own local circumstances, arrive at conclusions as reliable as those now offered to his Indian brother."

"Mauser," then, postulates a retired officer, with wife and two children of opposite sexes and of school age. The gross pension is £800 a year. Quite a comfortable income, you may say, which should suffice with a good bit over. But you'd be surprised. Post-War England is full of snags.

Take income tax, for example. It may be news to colonists that not only is income taxed, but income plus property. The retired official buys a house, because he cannot rent one. —

"The money with which you bought your house was a portion of the money saved out of your past income—an income which was taxed as you earned it. Now you buy a house. The same money is taxed once more as house value. Inevitably the same stuff has been taxed twice over. There is no remedy. The lawgivers of the land have the people with the maximum number of votes, to be the profane. They neither save nor buy houses, so all the money they do not value after them. Once more, be it noted, there is no remedy for you."

So the £800 a pension, after allowing for all "abatements," is whittled down to £709 13s. 6d. "Essential services" as outgoing rates, light, coal, insurances, etc., come to £ 38 5s. 5d. and "optional services" such as laundry, clothing, etc., to £233 16s. 2d., so that the balance left over for school bills comes to £97 12s. 8d.!

The details given throughout these sections are, we may remember, the lowest and rock figures. They provide a margin whatever. Furthermore, they cut out amusements, presents at Christmas time to ones who are chicks, little jams which make such memorable landmarks in a year's doings, travelling, having an occasional friend to stay, all alcohol, all renewals of the man's wardrobe, and any possibility of putting by a little against a rainy day, an illness, or an operation. They, further, involve resignation from any club to which the reader may belong. Here—be it finally and definitely emphasised—we are not trying to pile on the misery. Frankly, you cannot afford to live in England, unless you're rather brutal, but there is no doubt about that!

"Not a very cheerful picture, you will say, but read 'Mausers's' book. The author offers through his publishers (A. Greed, Ltd., Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.4) to answer queries, give free and unbiased advice, and/or to clear up any obscure points.

But why retire to England? There are other countries—including British East African territories—in which income tax is reasonable or unknown, where servants are to be had, where life is free, and where a man can call his soul his own." "Mausers's

FOR EAST AFRICAN STOCK FARMERS.

Diseases of Animals in Tropical Countries.

A book which will appeal to all stock farmers in East Africa is "Diseases of Animals in Tropical Countries," now issued in a second edition by Messrs. Baillière, Tindall and Cox, at the price of 25s. Written by Mr. C. R. Edmonds, M.R.C.V.S., late Assistant Chief Veterinary Officer, Southern Rhodesia, in collaboration with Mr. G. K. Walker, C.I.E., F.R.C.V.S., late Principal and Professor of Veterinary Medicine at the Punjab Veterinary College, India, it carries a full weight of authority and experience, and it is written in plain and lucid language entirely understandable by the layman. The history of each disease is set out, its nature, symptoms and treatment are explained, and the methods of treatment are propounded. The illustrations are clear and well reproduced, the heavy art paper used in the book lending itself to this desirable result. As a reference work for those handling livestock in any capacity throughout East Africa this work can be strongly recommended.

RECOMMENDED TO COFFEE PLANTERS:

"This is an excellent book from every point of view," says The Africanist "of our recently published volume, 'Coffee Growing,' with Special Reference to East Africa. Our contemporary continues: 'It is thoroughly up to date, deals fully with every aspect of the coffee-growing industry, has a sound scientific basis combined with practical experience, and is exceptionally well written, especially for a technical book. The results of the latest scientific research are given very fully and the chapter on insect pests is a masterpiece.'"

JOINT EAST AFRICAN BOARD

October Meeting of Executive Council.

The October meeting of the Executive Council of the Joint East African Board was attended by Sir John Sandeman Allen, M.P. (in the chair), Mr. D. H. Basken, Mr. H. H. Benjamin, Lord Cranworth, Major W. M. Crowdy, Major A. H. Dale, Lord Delamere, Mr. C. W. Hattersley, Mr. C. Hauburg, Sir Humphrey Leggett, Mr. D. O. Malcolm, Mr. A. A. Menain, Mr. J. de la Motte, Mr. W. Nowell, Mr. T. J. O'Shea, Sir Philip Richardson, Major H. Blake Taylor, Major C. Walsh, Captain Vivian Wood, Mr. A. Wigglesworth, Mr. W. MacLellan Wilson, and Miss James (Secretary).

The Chairman offered a hearty welcome to Lord Delamere and the other delegates from Kenya and Tanganyika Territory, also to Mr. Nowell, Director of the Amam Institute. The sympathies of the Board, he stated, were undeniably with those who are standing for the maintenance and progress of white civilisation, but the Board had maintained, and must maintain, a judicial position; its Closer Union Committee would be very glad to hear all that their visitors from Kenya and Tanganyika had to say and discuss matters with them.

Lord Delamere on the White Papers.

In the course of a résumé of the case, Lord Delamere said that the two recent White Papers had frightened people. It had been their hope that by Closer Union, which entailed obvious risks, the Mandated Territory would be brought more definitely within the framework of the British Empire, but now it seemed that the intention of the present Imperial Government was to extend all sorts of rules and regulations from the Mandated Territory to the neighbouring British States. That very real danger had to be faced, and it could not be too definitely emphasised that those States could not afford to tie their hands for the future in the matter of Customs duties, and other matters which would permit of Imperial preference.

The one rock from the political point of view was the fact that Kenya was a Crown Colony, with a comparatively strong White element on the Legislative Council, which had definite privileges and rights, and it would be the height of folly to surrender such powers to a federal council constituted on anything like the lines proposed by the present Government. Closer Union now offered empowered the Secretary of State to do practically whatever he liked with the federal council, and no one thought that a Secretary of State always did the right thing.

The Meaning of "Paramountcy."

In the 1928 White Paper, the word "paramountcy" was a general term meaning that first thoughts must be given to those people who could not stand alone. Just as in family life, everyone had to recognise the necessity for the protection of children. But when it came to dotting the "i's" and crossing the "t's" of rules and regulations, as the Prime Minister of Australia had said of another matter, it would inevitably mean trouble, and it was for that reason that the present attempted definition of "paramountcy" which took no account of the real facts of life in East Africa, was so bitterly resented. The political difficulties had slowed up settlement, interfered with business, and the investment of capital, and detracted attention to politics which would otherwise be devoted to economic ends. It was essential that East Africa should know where the stood.

It still remained true that the ultimate goal was Closer Union some day, but it must be a right kind of Closer Union. Though there might be some slight difference of opinion between Kenya and Tanganyika as to the value of Closer Union, Tanganyika refuses even to consider it under the present proposals. His (Lord Delamere's) own view was that a more satisfactory scheme at present would be a non-statutory board, composed of two or three unofficial members of the Legislative Councils of each territory, with perhaps representatives from Chambers of Commerce, to deal with matters which affect their inter-colonially. This Board should meet at regular intervals, at the same time and in the same town (though separately, of course), as the Governors' Conference; and that the meeting place should be in each territory alternately, and should be advisory to the Governor's Conference. With such a Board, working pari passu with the Governors' Conference, much of co-ordinated importance for the three territories could be effected. It has been found in practice in East Africa that inter-colonial differences are easily settled round a table, and that once an inter-colonial matter is settled by reason and agreement, it is almost sure to be passed by the respective legislatures.

Lord Cranworth reiterated his opinion that a more unsuitable body than a Joint Parliamentary Committee could hardly be found to consider the points at issue, for those appointed must either have formed definite opinions, or be entirely uninterested in East Africa. But as certain invitations had already been issued inviting people to serve on that Committee, it appeared that the issue was to be left largely to such a body. It seemed to him extraordinary, indeed, unconstitutional, that certain invitations should have been issued, for Lord Bessell had withdrawn his motion from before the House of Lords in the summer, and no committee should be set up until it has been reintroduced and adopted.

Mr. Menkin failed to understand how the Joint Parliamentary Committee could possibly discuss intelligently the Statement of Conclusions of His Majesty's Government without considering also the implications of the Memorandum on Native Policy, which Paper the Secretary of State was so anxious to withhold from the Committee. To intelligent study of the issue it was essential that both Papers should be considered. The White Papers were a definite threat to white colonisation. Tanganyika had been keen on federation as a step to the further development of the Territory, but all public bodies in the country had declared themselves against the present proposals. He thought that for the meantime a non-statutory body for the discussion of inter-colonial problems might, as Lord Delamere had suggested, meet the pressing need for a forum for the discussion and arrangement of urgent common difficulties.

KILOSA-IFAKARA RAILWAY RECOMMENDED

Sir Sydney Hemin's Minority Report.

Mr. Hemin's "African" correspondence of "The Times" published last week, contains the report of Sir Sydney Hemin, the Chairman of the Tanganyika Railway Commission, who recommends the immediate construction of a line from Kilosa to Ifakara, that the Government of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland be consulted at an early date regarding the projects of railway development interesting all three territories, that a junction between the Central Railway and the Tanga Railway be effected at Kilosa or Kimamba and go to Korogwe or Mombo, and that pending the completion of this work, branch lines be built northwards from Kilosa or Kimamba and southwards from Korogwe or Mombo when the state of development justifies this expenditure.

The Chairman and another member, dissenting from the Commission's report, recommend the construction of a Dodoma-Iringa-Ubena line should negotiations with Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland fail. As for the extension of the Kilosa-Ifakara railway to Manda, it is stated that this recommendation is based on the assumption that the British Government will provide the necessary capital free of interest for at least twenty years, as it is not expected that this railway will pay its running expenses before that time, nor can Tanganyika undertake this burden without serious detriment to her other interests. The Chairman and the member dissenting base their dissent on the infertility of the country between Dodoma and Iringa and the unpromising character of the country between Iringa and Ubena. They think that more fertile areas south and north-east of Ubena could be effectively served by the alternative Kilosa-Ifakara-Manda line. No construction westward of Ubena should now be undertaken but it might be further considered should there be general developments in that area or as a result of negotiations with Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Opportunities for Private Enterprise.

The Commission considers that better railway feeder roads are urgently required and this matter should receive special consideration at the earliest possible moment. The Commission is opposed to the principle of uneconomic railway rates as a means of subsidizing particular industries. It recommends an early investigation of problems of transport and irrigation in the Kilombero Valley.

From another source we learn that emphasis is laid on the desirability of affording an opportunity to private enterprise in railway and road-building schemes.

The report, furnished with maps and plans, is now on its way to England.

[As the above telegraphic message does not make the exact position very clear, we withhold comment pending receipt of the actual report. — E.A.]

A NEW MAP OF AFRICA.

A NEW map of Africa has just been published by Messrs. Edward Stanford, Ltd., of Long Acre, W.C. It has been compiled from the latest Government and other official surveys and engraved on a scale of 64 miles to one inch. The map is 65 by 58" is printed in colours showing territorial and political boundaries, and should be of great use in Government and business offices. The price is £2 15s. for copies mounted on rollers, while for copies mounted to fold in case the cost is £3 3s. Copies can also be had mounted on spring rollers at the price of £6.

"GAME" SLAUGHTER TO CHECK TSETSE.

Mitigation of the Fauna Society.

At the Society's meeting of the Executive Council of the Society for the Preservation of the Fauna of the Empire a resolution was passed in the following terms:

"The excessive slaughter of wildebeest, nyala, and zebra in Zululand, which has been in progress during the last year or so, has been the cause of great concern to many of our members, and we have frequently been urged to make representations. The slaughter is, however, part of a campaign designed to check the invasion of farm lands by tsetse flies, and has been approved by the Union Government and the cost of the operations defrayed by that Government. As March as we may deplore, therefore, the lamentable slaughter, the Society does not feel justified in taking any action, as the measures have been undertaken under scientific advice. We are, however, in full support of the proposal that the neighbouring Umvoti Reserve, which contains the few surviving rhinos, should be placed under the control of the National Parks Board of South Africa, when a greater measure of security would be attained. We again communicate with the Wild Life Protection Society of South Africa on this matter.

There is little doubt that the loss of an Africa is indirectly the cause of much antagonism to the conservation of wild life in a great portion of that Continent. We appreciate this fact, and will continue to watch the question of research into fly control with the deepest interest. The whole situation, year by year, becomes more complex and difficult, new factors arise continually, and if our campaign is to meet with success more public support must be forthcoming. If the position is allowed to drift it will become irreparable."

MWANGA AND A MISSIONARY'S DOG.

ARCHDEACON A. B. LLOYD, who first went to Uganda in 1894, in addressing a Richmond missionary meeting, said:—

"On my first visit to Uganda I had with me a little black poodle dog, which was quite new to the Natives. Soon after I received a letter from the King of Uganda, who addressed it to 'The white man with the little black devil.' The king was the most notorious wretch in Africa. A beautiful polo pony was sent to take me to the king, whom I found in a thatched building, clad in fantastic garb. King Mwanga was more interested in Sally, my dog, than in me, and he was very pleased when the dog, dressed in his little coat and glistening bonnet, gave him a royal salute.

"As we were leaving the king foolishly took hold of the dog's hind legs with a view to keeping her, but Sally turned round and bit his finger. Next morning he came to me, sending two calves and two cows in exchange for the little black devil. I called on him again and told him he could not keep the calves and after some argument he said, 'Oh! keep your dog.' And what about the cows and calves?' I asked. 'Keep them too,' answered the king.

NORTH CHARTERLAND EXPLORATION

QUESTION OF LAND EXPLORATION

By H. J. Spiller on the Position.

The ordinary annual general meeting of the North Charterland Exploration Co. (1909) Ltd. was held last week at Westminster House, 120 Strand, E.C.4. Mr. Harvey J. Spiller (the Chairman) presided.

The Chairman, after dealing with the accounts, proceeded to refer to the question of the Native Reserve, in regard to which he said: "A report dealing with this matter has been in your hands for more than a week. At the outset I desire to make it plain that your directors have no complaint against the judgment of the Court of Chancery in the matter of the Petition of Right. The case on the demurrer had a thorough hearing and was exhaustively argued on those strictly legal grounds which alone apply in such a matter. Your directors were indeed impressed by the fairness of the manner in which the Attorney-General opposed our own able counsel."

"If you will place our present memorandum alongside all the information that you have received on this subject since you appointed a joint committee of directors and shareholders to investigate it at the end of 1927, I do not suppose there is a person in this hall who has ever before read such a formidable indictment of a British Minister of the Crown and a Department of State."

A Bargain for Good Faith

Your grievance may be summed up as follows: You paid for your concession in the good faith of the British Government's recognition of your grant and on the fact that under Clause 3 thereof you would be paid for any land which might be expropriated for public purposes. In 1926 after you have spent large sums of money and laboured thirty-one years in developing your concession it is discovered that three years previous—that is to say, in 1923—your secretaries of the British South Africa Co. had negotiated an agreement with the then Secretary of State for the Colonies purporting to surrender to the Crown so much of your land as the Crown deemed fit (same).

"Immediately your directors became aware of the terms of the 1923 agreement they approached the Secretary of State, who instead of dealing with them as they ought to have done, threw their doubts on the authority of the British South Africa Co. to make the grant to your company. The Secretary of State further asserted that unless the agreement had been made with the British South Africa Co. it was possible the Crown might have refused to recognise your grant."

"We referred in our report to the Buxton Committee, which was appointed to advise the Colonial Office as to whether the British South Africa Company in regard to Northern Rhodesia should be settled by reference to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council or by an agreement. You will recollect that the Committee recommended that the question should be decided by reference to the Privy Council and not by agreement. It is obvious that had the Committee's advice been followed, there would have been no agreement affecting your company and the present position would never have arisen. The rejection of the recommendations contained in the majority report of the Native Reserve Commission again imposed an injustice upon your company."

The 1923 Agreement

"I will now deal with the circumstances surrounding the 1923 agreement. There have been so many contradictory statements made to your company in regard to them that it is almost impossible fully to explain them all. I will therefore deal with two—one emanating from the Colonial Office and the other from the British South Africa Co. As I believe these are the only statements coming from those parties in the matter which can be looked upon as bona fide—"

The first is contained in Clause 7 of the Crown's Answer and Plea to your Company's Petition of Right, namely:—

"The North Charterland Exploration Co. (1909) Ltd. stood by and allowed His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies to negotiate and enter into the said agreement on the footing that the British South Africa Co. were the managers and secretaries of the North Charterland Co. and the said Secretary of State entered into the said agreement on the footing that the British South Africa Co. had authority to agree to terms which would be binding upon the North Charterland Co."

"Plainly stated, that is an assertion that the directors of this company had been made acquainted with and had acquiesced in the negotiations which were proceeding, or that, your directors having given their blessing to the negotiations, the Secretary of State for the Colonies entered into the agreement upon the understanding that your secretaries had been entrusted with the negotiations and were authorised to agree to terms which were to be considered as binding on your company."

Right Against Might

"I will now deal with the circumstances surrounding the Order in Council which gave effect to the agreement, depriving you of your property. I would remind you that Orders in Council should be looked upon as very solemn Acts, as they are not subject to debate in the Houses of Parliament. I wonder whether there is on record any instance, but one, of a reasoned protest having been lodged against a proposed Order in Council on the grounds that it was being made to give effect to a document which in itself carried the stamp of deception and forgery. Your company's protest was exceptional, and I assert that it was a national scandal to put the Order before members who sat in Council to advise the making of the Order without first informing them that a protest had been lodged."

"The Order as you know, deprived your company of its land without compensation. However, just before the Order was made Mr. Amery was good enough to inform your company that if any more of your land was taken for Native Reserve you would be paid."

"The report and accounts were unanimously adopted, the Mr. Amery question, Mr. Foster was elected and the Hon. Mr. Cooper Cooper B.A. and Co. were reappointed."

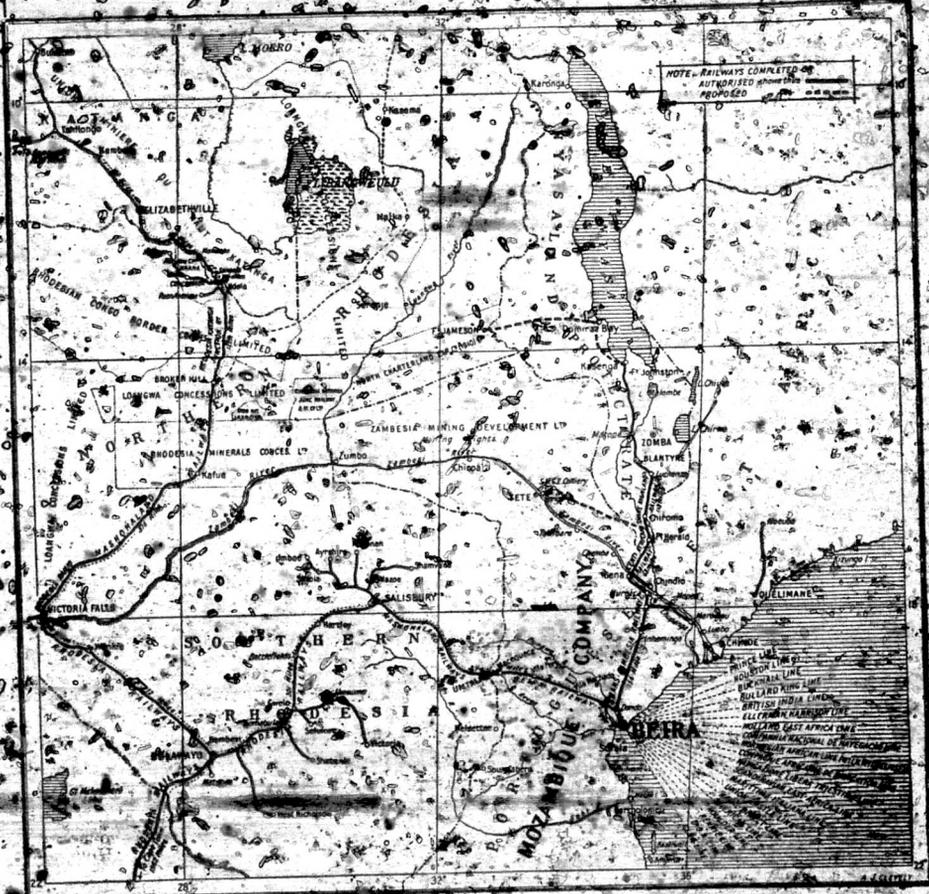

The Snows of War

"On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. J. Clifford Rowe, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "That, in view of the disclosures made at this meeting, the Prime Minister be respectfully urged to order a public inquiry into the circumstances under which Clause 3 (b) of the Agreement of 1903, September 1923, between the Crown and the British South Africa Co. purported to dispose of property of the company, without its knowledge or authority, and to which the Order in Council of 22nd March, 1928, was made to give effect."

EAST AFRICA'S INFORMATION BUREAU.

East Africa's Information Bureau exists for the free service of subscribers and advertisers desiring the Editor's aid on any matter. One of its principal objects is to contribute to the development of British trade throughout East and Central Africa and any information which readers are willing to give for that purpose will be cordially welcomed. Manufacturers wishing to appoint agents and agents seeking further representations, are invited to communicate with the Editor. No charge is made for the service rendered by this Journal in such matters.

The Executive Council of the International Institute of African Languages and Cultures met last week in Rome.

The new trunk telephone between Nairobi and Nakuru constitutes the longest telephone connexion in Kenya, being some 125 miles in length.

Customs receipts for the port of Beira during August amounted to £36,706, compared with £27,500 for the corresponding period of 1929.

For the convenience of passengers on the Cape to Cairo air route, the Sudan Government Railways are erecting hotels at Wadi Halfa and Assuan.

At the annual meeting of the Amateur Boxing Association in London it was announced that a new affiliated association had been formed in Kenya.

The 300-foot arch span on the new rail and road bridge over the Nile at Jinja has just been completed. The bridge is expected to be finished early next year.

Speaking recently in Brighton the Bishop of Massey said that two hundred lepers lived near his headquarters. These had been definitely cured but further help was needed.

Wool produced in East Africa during 1930 totalled 925,019 lb., an increase of 310,019 lb. over the previous year. The number of fleecing sheep increased from 176,300 to 211,000.

Uganda Plantations Ltd. report a loss of £102 on last year's working. The report states that although drastic reductions have been made, the bank has refused to allow any further overdraft and the outlook is not encouraging.

A searchlight tattoo, originally suggested by the 5th Battalion of the King's African Rifles, was held in Nairobi during the latter part of September. A feature of the display was the co-operation of aeroplanes in an attack on a Nany village.

On the occasion of twenty cadets arriving in Uganda recently on first appointment it was arranged that they should spend a week in Kampala and Entebbe in order to inspect various public offices and undergo short courses on police and court routine, agricultural matters, and other subjects which would later fall within their sphere. This arrangement appears to present worth emulation and development.

Northern Rhodesia's mineral output for the first seven months of this year is returned at a value of £58,011, compared with £620,296 in the corresponding period of last year, when, of course, world market prices for metals were much higher.

The Nyasaland Government is constructing a road leading to the north end of Lake Nyasa, from which it will join up with the Great North Road through Tanganyika and Kenya. After completion of this new link it will be possible to motor from Salisbury to Naifon via Nyasaland.

Major Cochran-Patrick, the director of the Aircraft Operating Company in charge of the aerial survey of Northern Rhodesia, is shortly expected back in this country, the company having completed its survey of some 63,000 square miles of unmapped territory. The work, begun in May, took only four months; by ordinary ground survey means it would have taken over eight years.

Tobacco growers in Nyasaland and the Rhodesias who have done business with Messrs. J. M. Macmillan, Ltd. of 31 Minorities, will be interested to learn that their board has been joined by Mr. A. H. Maxwell, formerly a director of Messrs. W. A. & C. Maxwell & Co., now in voluntary liquidation. The company will henceforth be known as Macmillan, Maxwell & Co., Ltd.; the address will be 48/51 Minorities, London, E.C.3, but the telegraphic address remains "Makkanbac."

EAST AFRICAN PRODUCE REPORTS

Amani Research Institute

Mr. Nowell, Director of the Amani Agricultural Research Institute, presented a report by a sub-committee of the Colonial Advisory Council which had been considering the programme of the Institute together with the comments and suggestions of some contributors. The Government had decided to accept the territorial ideas, it had been allowed to hold a conference of Directors of Agriculture at Amani at the end of January next, and Mr. Stoddale, Agricultural Adviser to the Secretary of State, and Dr. Hill, of Kev, would be present. It had been definitely decided that Amani's main function was long-term research, and every possible effort was being made to prevent overlapping with the work of the local Departments of Agriculture. It was hoped shortly to be able to announce that an entomologist of established reputation and previous East African experience had agreed to join the staff.

Uganda Department of Agriculture

With reference to the definite decision of the Secretary of State that the headquarters of the Department of Agriculture should be removed from Kampala to Entebbe, Sir Humphrey Leggett pointed out that precisely opposite arguments had been used by the Colonial Office in the cases of Uganda and Tanganyika. In Uganda it was argued that the Director must leave Kampala, the most accessible town in the Protectorate, and move to Entebbe, the headquarters of Government, at exactly the same time the Director of Agriculture of Tanganyika had been banished from Dar es Salaam to Morogoro. There was strong feeling that in the present time of depression Government expenditure of a non-remunerative character ought to be deferred, and if that policy were adopted in Uganda with reference to the removal of the headquarters of the Agricultural Department, the actual move might not be made for some time. It would therefore be wise to endeavour to keep the matter alive.

It was decided to maintain objection to the proposed change.

Representation of the Executive Council

A letter was read from Mr. T. Aratong requesting representation on the Council of the Eastern Province Chamber of Commerce, Uganda. It was decided to give the matter further consideration at the next meeting.

An application from the Luddi Province Planters' Association for election of members of the Board was unanimously adopted, but the request that Mr. A. Wigglesworth should represent them upon the Council could not be accepted, all seats already being allocated. Mr. Wigglesworth being, however, a member representing other bodies, it was pointed out that he could unofficially represent the Planters' Association.

Visit of the "Kariuku" to Tang.

Sir John Sedgwick, who had been in correspondence with the Board, had passed between himself, as Chairman of the Board, and Government Departments. He had urged that serious notice should be taken of the incident in view of persistent German propaganda against the Mandate and of the disturbing effects of the improper action of the Germans on the minds of the Natives.

PROTECT THE 30 MENACED POINTS BETWEEN YOUR TEETH

A Storming Army of Foam

Breaks out and kills the myriad of tooth-enemies you can't brush out. That's how Kolyynos Dental Cream protects your teeth. Kolyynos does MORE - it stimulates the gums, helping to prevent pyorrhoea. It washes away that cloudy grey coating that dims the teeth - leaving them lustreously white. There's one more important fact that Kolyynos does twice as well as any other dentifrice. Only half an inch is required on the brush for a thorough cleansing.

"THE TIMES" SUPPORTS THE SETTLERS.

In this issue of East Africa we are permitted to reproduce in full a leading article, entitled "Colonists and Natives," which recently appeared in The Times. It is with undisguised satisfaction that we note that the world's leading newspaper has convinced itself that East and Central Africa are right in protesting so vigorously against the Government's Memorandum on Native Policy, which, as our august contemporary justly declares, "suggests that the non-African communities are to be sacrificed to satisfy ill-informed humanitarianism in Great Britain." The fact that this comment has been withheld for so many weeks since the opening of the controversy emphasises its considered nature, and the welcome such influential support denotes. It is to be hoped that there may be a restatement by the Government of its policy and in such terms as will remove all suspicion that the British colonists in East Africa are regarded as intruders and not as welcome pioneers.

The real task that faces the Joint Parliamentary Committee is that of re-establishing confidence in British Africa. Evidence accumulates daily that the present state of uncertainty is injuring business, accentuating depression, and inhibiting the investment of much needed capital in the African Dependencies. Confidence is the great need, but it will certainly not be encouraged if the Government is allowed, as it intends, to withhold the White Paper on Native Policy from consideration by the Joint Committee. Pressure must be brought to bear so that the Committee shall have both White Papers before it. Both have destroyed themselves by their own obvious amateurishness, and the Government, belatedly aware of this, is endeavouring to save its face by withholding the one which it has hastily ordered the Government in Africa to implement. Confidence cannot be restored until so objectionable a document—so objectionable that it has been called the "Native Policy White Paper"—is also considered. The present Government claims to be democratic; in many of its actions, and in none more conspicuously than in its withholding of this Memorandum, it has proved itself autocratic, even obstinately so. Why, we may legitimately ask, should the Government fear the examination of its Memorandum by the Joint Committee?

There is, too, as The Times points out, something almost malicious in the phraseology used. To class Europeans and Indians together as "immigrant communities" is indeed to suggest to sensitive European minorities that their own Imperial Government holds them of little account. The repercussions of this attitude, which has been emphasised and elaborated by the more loosely tongued and more irresponsible members of the Socialist Party, are having serious and long-lasting results not merely in East and Central Africa, but also in the self-governing Colony of Southern Rhodesia, and the Dominion of South Africa. As to the common electoral roll, with which, apparently, the Government designs to sacrifice British Africa in the hope of peace in Asia, it can be stated emphatically that it is attempting the impossible—of creating a common roll whatever will the British colonists in East Africa consent to such a scheme, with their local knowledge and experience recognising as fatal to native interests as well as to those of the European community.

On one point the article we reprint is open to criticism. Its objection to an elected majority in the Kenya Legislature is apparently based on the power of veto. This is inaccurate. Kenya has always said that the final veto must lie with the Secretary of State. But it is surprising that almost all settlers, even those until recently opposed to an elected majority, are now in favour of greater power for the settlers, so that their status may be stronger against any further folly by an even more doctrinaire Imperial Government, which the future may produce.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

Some months ago East Africa felt it a duty to express entire disagreement with the East African Section of the London Chamber of Commerce on the subject of East African participation at a Continental exhibition. Remarkable confirmation of our views is now provided by the decisions of the Colonial Office Conference, whose Committee appointed to consider the matter declared emphatically that only in very exceptional circumstances is such participation desirable.

COLONIAL PARTICIPATION AT FOREIGN EXHIBITIONS.

Holding our own conviction that exhibitions within the Empire should be given preference, the Committee warmly recommended that Colonial Governments should take part in Dominion exhibitions where the Dominion in question offers an actual or potential market for the products of such Colony. Of the qualifications essential in any agent employed for such work the Committee reported: "An agent with energy, initiative and tact can perform most valuable work in furthering the sale of the products of his Colony, but without these qualities an agent is of but little service to his Government, and there is a real risk that the expenditure on the agency will be infructuous." The ideal set out is an active and thoroughly efficient agent working in an office in the City rather than a costly display in a West End showroom. As to the products to be exhibited, the Committee is also in entire agreement with our opinion, that the commodities which pay are those which can be exhibited in the form in which they are sold over the counter—such as tobacco, wines, fruit, etc.—and are therefore capable of making an immediate appeal to the public visiting the exhibition. Little advantage is, they say, to be gained by exhibiting raw materials, such as cacao, sugar, sisal and oils, which are normally handled in bulk by established firms, except possibly at exhibitions of a special character. As the recommendations of the Committee were adopted en bloc by the Conference in plenary session, they form a definite contribution to the subject which will be read with the public in the Colonies concerned.

That "Transport is Civilisation" is, we believe, an aphorism which we owe to the genius of Mr. Rudyard Kipling; but if we admit that the more rapid the transport the quicker the spread of civilisation, we must realise that there are, inevitably, some inherent dangers, probably the greater of these dangers is the spread of disease.

MAKING THE EARTH SMALLER.

Morbid critics of the impact of British culture on Native African races are fond of harping on the diseases which they allege, quite wrongly, in most cases—we have brought to the Native, quite ignorant the many and exceedingly unpleasant troubles which the Native suffered from before we arrived, and which British medical men have done so much to relieve and cure; but those very medical men are the first to admit that with the increase of travel there is a risk of epidemic. Every report issued by the African Medical Services proves that the doctors are fully aware of the fact. We may cite the spread of sleeping sickness east from the Congo; the voyage of the tigger flea from its home in South America across Africa from west to east; the infection of Central and South America with yellow fever by the African slave trade. More and more is medical work concentrating on prevention. Take as an outstanding example the rigorous inspection by which malaria is kept under in Khartoum; the Nile steamers are so closely investigated that the water which drips from the boilers is examined, for even there mosquito larvae have been found. Now The Lancet has drawn attention to the risks of disease being carried from one country to another by aeroplane. We understand that already Australia is becoming anxious about the possible introduction of plague and cholera by "plane" from their epidemic centres in the Far East. The East African authorities are doubtless also aware of the danger, and prospective passengers by air may in the near future expect a very close inspection and possible quarantine, but if they realise the very cogent reasons for such restrictions they will not complain. If we will make the earth smaller, we must accept the implications.

To everyone interested in the economic future of European children in East Africa the Report of the Kenya and Uganda Railways and THE YOUNGER GENERATION encourages all the highlands of East Africa are to become the home of a new and viable branch of the British stock, the rising generation must find there full scope for its energy and adequate remuneration to maintain its standard of life. It is, therefore good to read that European apprentices are finding their proper place on the staff of the K.U.R. and are giving satisfactory service. At the close of 1929 there were thirty-eight of these lads in the employ of the Administration, of whom twenty-five were engaged in the mechanical workshops, the heart of their accommodation was itself, and even the expenditure upon (1929) was almost covered by the small fees levied for the housing and feeding of each youth, which amounted to a total of £740. Lectures on locomotive theory and practice are given to apprentices, and a model railway—an excellent idea—has proved of great value for demonstration purposes. The present generation is undoubtedly mechanical minded, it is really amazing to be able to observe the very quiet young children and able to identify every make of motor car at sight, to name aeroplanes in flight, distinguishing between bombers and fighters, combat aircraft and special machines, while many of these boys to beg his son, who is perhaps in the lower fourth at school, to attend to defective wheels, and find a gear in a motor car, which the lad does with a skill and aplomb very surprising to parental authorities. We can imagine no finer opening for such youths in East Africa than those afforded by the Kenya and Uganda Railways, and with the example of the late Christian Felling in mind it is safe to say that such apprentices will be the possibility of a better management in the kit bag.

Reading between the lines of the Kenya Police Report for 1929, we are reminded that the Commissioner and his staff have a difficult POLICE WORK IN KENYA. The majority of semi-educated Africans decline to face the discipline and training in order to acquire the essential for the making of a policeman of any value and the tribesmen are often disappointing; the Kavirondo, it is said, are in the main reliable, but do not possess adequate aptitude for the force of to-day. It is not cheering, either, to think that four European N.C.O.'s resigned during the year and that eight were discharged as unlikely to prove efficient. We can understand with what pleasure the Commissioner is able to record instances of especial bravery, intelligence or tact on the part of his men. For instance, we are told of a Muganda sub-inspector arresting single-handed a murderer armed with a knife; of a Kavirondo sergeant dealing bravely and tactfully with a riotous crowd along a Kavirondo corporal rescuing a child near a flooded river, and though exhausted himself, applying Schaefer's method of resuscitation as taught in the Force, and so reviving the little victim who, when brought to land, showed no signs of life or respiration. This last is the first definite result of the teaching of that method to date, and, writes the Commissioner, "this one life alone has more than made all the effort worth while." We agree, for the case quoted gives a complete transformation in the African's traditional attitude towards the value of human life.

A striking contrast in the character of official documents is afforded by the latest reports from the TWO POLICE DEPARTMENTS IN GREAT CONTRAST. The Police Departments of Kenya and Tanganyika, respectively. Comparisons, we know, are proverbially odious, but nothing derogatory is implied in the present comment. Commissioner R. G. B. Spicer of Kenya illuminates his record with anecdotes and personal references which make delightful reading. The humorous incident of the Lumwa man, existing in a body after an incident riot, the sympathetic excuse of famine as explaining many stolen thefts and the wise acknowledgment that the Africans regard crime being not as a crime but rather as a profane pastime sanctioned and participated in by many generations of his ancestors, the little den picture of a "robber" and a "victim" Asiatic of a "robber" Asiatic who was captured and held for two months before he was caught re-handed the district reports which give an opportunity of bringing in good work of local superintendents and the thoughtful state of successful first-aid to Natives, police, such incidents as the detection of a thief by a smart boy of the Police Boys' Brigade, and references to police prowess in sport, all give a human touch to the report and make it interesting to the general reader without detracting from its official value. Grains, too, lighten the feet of Commissioner H. K. Cham of Tanganyika, on the other hand, is filled with a bare recital of the work of his Department, which is somewhat enlivened, but apart from one or two incidents, such as the apprehension of a family inspector by an ancient rascal of a Native, is ordinary reading. Above all, the lack of personal references to district superintendents strikes us as unfortunate. A judicious and timely reference back, public and unostentatious, to the merits of ranks and does not detract from the superior of the Deputy Chairman of the East African Section of the London Chamber of Commerce must be a merchant, as the proposition put forward by Sir Humphrey Leggett, the Chairman, at his week's meeting. We venture to inquire on what basis such a condition is. It appears to us entirely inopportune, as well as undesirable, that the Section should admit anybody to membership without first influencing discussion and decision by his voice and by his vote, ask him to serve on committees, and then say: "Thus far only may you participate in the well-governing and governing of this body. Remember, you are not a merchant, and must therefore not be entrusted with the duties of Chairman or Deputy Chairman, even though your fellows think so well of you that they would wish to entrust the honour and the responsibility to you." If such distinctions are to be drawn, surely they should be exercised when application for membership is made, not years later.

The Farmer's Weekly announces that a new early maturing variety of maize, to be named "Anveld," has been obtained by the Brechtelstroom A NEW MAIZE School of Agriculture by crossing a fairly early maturing selection of Hickory King and a selected strain of Wisconsin White Dent. In a variety trial conducted at the School during the last four years Anveld matured approximately three weeks earlier than Hickory King or Pearlstroom Dent, and the yields were 12 bags per acre compared with 10 for Hickory King and 12 for Pearlstroom. It sets out with greatest frequency, but eight-row and five-row are fairly frequent. The size of the tassel will generally permit of its being graded as a No. 2—the most popular grade in South Africa. Anveld is not a final product, for "synthetic method" experiments are being continued with a prospect of turning out an even more valuable plant, but Anveld is an excellent "stop-gap," until the current experiment, which will take at least two years, are concluded. Owing to severe frosts during the trials, only two hundred bags of Anveld are available for sale, and already one farmer has asked for a hundred and eighty bags. The School is charging £2 a bag for the sample cash with order.

The British Ministry of Agriculture is anxious that full use should be made by mycologists and plant pathologists, not only in Great BRITAIN but in the whole Empire. CO-OPERATION OFFERED TO THE COLONIES. The facilities offered by the Bureau of Mycology, which is under the direction of Mr. J. Butler, a new and far more commodious building has been erected for the Bureau in Terry Gardens, quite near the Herbarium of Kew Gardens, and arrangements are being made for substantial financial aid to be given in the future to enable the Bureau to extend the scope of its activities. The British Government has hitherto not made any financial contribution, the help having been in the form of the provision of buildings for use rent-free by the Bureau. The financial contributions have come from the Dominions, India, the Sudan, Iraq, and most of the "Crown" Dependencies. The Bureau publishes a monthly journal, The Review of Applied Mycology. Important biological conferences are held under its auspices every five years, and these take under its aegis the identification and study of fungus and bacterial plant pathogens, the maintenance of a museum of typical plant diseases, and a herbarium library for mycologists.

THE IMPACT OF CIVILISATION

STAGES 4 AND 5 IN EAST AFRICA.

By the Rt. Rev. Bishop Kitofing.

In the opening up of East Africa we might record five stages:

(1) The stage of individual penetration. The heroic explorers of the earlier days—Stanley, Baker, and living stone—entered a land which until then had been blank upon the map, and their names given to rivers, mountains and other natural features of the country stand to claim Africa for the use of the world at large.

(2) Then comes the second stage—the pioneers of what might have seemed at the time a forlorn hope—men like Kratt, Mackay and others. The Cross stands over their resting-places claims the continent of Africa for Christ.

(3) The third stage. The gradual winning of confidence amid suspicion and superstition of a savage people. Men like Hannington and others of the early missionaries gradually won their way into the confidence of the people and by their devoted lives, many of them by their deaths, won access to Africa for all mankind.

(4) The fourth stage. The prestige of the white man has brought a large number of the tribes of Africa to the stage of imitation, wanting to copy the white man in everything that he does. His superior knowledge, his inventions, his character, attracted black man to try and follow him. This is not true of all tribes, but it is entirely true of the Bantu tribes and some of the Nilotic tribes, but some of the more northerly Nilotic tribes have an independence of their own, and in many cases show a contempt of all that the white man can bring to them.

(5) The fifth stage. The African is just beginning to stand walk alone. He begins to show impatience of control, tries to throw off the leading strings, and in many cases to run before he has even learned to walk.

The Five Stages.

Stages 1 and 2 are long past in East Africa. Stage 3—the winning of confidence amid suspicion—is rapidly passing, except in the more outlying regions of the Southern Sudan and around Lake Rudolf. The greater part of East Africa is in the fourth stage, although Stage 5 is just beginning to appear here and there among the tribes of Kenya and Uganda.

The passing from Stage 3 and 4 in the opening up of East Africa has been enormously hastened by the whole-hearted co-operation in evangelism which has been exhibited between white and black, in accordance with Dr. Aggrey's immortal symbol of the keys of the piano. For instance, at the 6000 Adults baptised in the Elgon Mission in 1920, probably 90% heard the Gospel for the first time through the lips of their own countrymen. Probably the same proportion received their instruction in the Christian faith from men, not of their own tribe, perhaps but at any rate men of their own colour.

I wish I could transport you to Nairobi to see the enormous Swahili congregations on a Sunday morning. They may be greeted by a Europeanised, but they are extraordinary, keen in their religion, in spite of very adverse European example. I wish all of you could have been present at the Uganda Jubilee and seen the tremendous crowds gathering together, full of enthusiasm for the Gospel of Christ.

These interesting passages are taken from an address given in the Royal Albert Hall by the Right Rev. A. J. Kitofing, Bishop of The Uganda Diocese, when he was in England to return to his diocese.

or that momentous occasion. A Church young indeed, in years, but with a tremendous tradition behind it, the tradition of martyrs, the tradition of Mackay and those early missionaries. The people of Uganda are in a stage of imitation, but they show an extraordinary capacity to make an original contribution to the Church of Christ, just as they did in the old days, before the advent of the British Government, in organising the political status of their country.

From Cannibals to Christians.

To illustrate the mass movement which is going on, I would like to take you to some of the 2000 village churches scattered about in the Elgon Mission, where 60,000 people gather day by day for instruction in the Gospel of Christ. Three hundred miles to the west of the southernmost portion of the Nile at Yambio, you will see there that wonderful church built by Mr. Gore with its tower and its carefully moulded arches which has just been completed, erected entirely by the Zandi people, who but a few short years ago were notorious as cannibals.

Mass movements have been in progress in East Africa for many years, and the miracle is now beginning in the Southern Sudan. The most recent figures that have just reached me state that there are 3,000 pupils in the schools of the Gordon Memorial Mission, 1,000 reading as well as writing, perhaps most striking of all is that while the total number in that mission baptised up to now is just 327, the total number of Christian workers is 67, out of a total number of baptised of 127, 67 of them are engaged in instructing their fellows, about one in five. Look at the proportion in England.

The Impact of Civilisation.

The impact of civilisation wipes out the old sanctions of religion. You cannot have the two things co-existing. Take for instance, the scientific view of disease. The Native during an epidemic of plague sees a "drive" to exterminate the rats, and very soon comes to the conclusion that it is the rats and not the hosts of spirits in the world around to which is due the epidemic of plague.

Or from another point of view. I hold here in my hand the second number of a typewritten magazine which is sent out from the Nugent School at Bahr, in the Southern Sudan to our old boys in order to keep them in touch with what is going on in the most advanced school in the Southern Sudan, and the work there is entirely done in English, so this magazine is produced in English. One of this magazine, I will read you just one sentence: "Khirda is working as a mechanic with the aerial survey, that is the Englishmen who are taking photographs of the Sudan with the help of aeroplanes at Rairi." Think of that! at the back of beyond in the centre of Africa! A boy leaves school and goes to help in an aerial survey.

The impact of civilisation has brought to the African a freedom from his old fears, his old super-natural fears. It has brought also a freedom from the old social restrictions. It has brought him also a freedom from the tyranny of his old irresponsible rulers.

His old sanctions are "scraps of paper," but why should he adopt the new sanctions of Christianity? What use are they to him? I quote from the Jerusalem Report: "We are assured that Christ comes with an offer of life to men and to societies and to nations. We believe that in Him the shackles of moral evil and guilt are broken from human personality, and that men are made free, and that such personal freedom lies at the basis of the freeing of Society from cramping, rusted and machine social practices and political bondages, so that the African men and societies and nations may stand up free and complete. Our task is to convince the African of the truth of that.

The Influence of Wealth

The second feature of the situation to-day is the increase of wealth. It is part of the inflow of civilisation, communications and trade reaching one upon the other. A tremendous flood of wealth pours into the hands of people who the other day had hardly even seen the first sign of civilisation. Millions of pounds come in for cotton, and in other parts of East Africa, coffee. In Central Uganda you see large numbers of motor buses running, and in a large number of cases they are owned by Natives who have bought the buses on the hire-purchase system and are all eager to get them full in order to pay their instalments.

As the standard of wealth rises, the standard of life and luxury rises more rapidly. The African sees the European driving his motor car, and says, "Why should not I?" The Native imitation complex is, however, most evident in the copying of European wedding ceremonies, which are not considered complete without white veils, white shoes, orange blossom, and so on.

Again, the demand for education is, to some extent, I think, due to the desire for imitation, and to get more on a level with the white man. They do not want an education worked out as a punishment for the country, but they want to send their sons home to England. They do not want to be fobbed off with what they regard as second best. One feature of this desire to equal the white man is the keenness to learn English. It is the road to advancement. In many cases there is money in it, but there are great dangers. The Government has tremendously nervous of the production of a large class, those known as the "failed B. A.'s" in India—a another danger is owing to the importation of a certain amount of literature from the East, and educated boys in Uganda read Bolshevism and other stuff which gives them an entirely secular view of life.

English Inevitable

But the use of English is inevitable. In my diocese, where we have to deal with eight or nine different languages, the only hope of welding the people into a homogeneous Church, and having a fund to which they can all make part, is to have English as our lingua franca, and for that reason the work in the Nugent School is all done in English.

The Rev. Edwin W. Smith, literary secretary of the British and Foreign Bible Society, told a Norwich audience last week that contact with Western civilisation was cutting at the root of the indigenous morality of the Native, because all those old sanctions which had been built up by untold generations, and which really did control the conduct of Africans, were being swept away. Unless something was brought in to buttress the life of the African he was going to become a danger and a nuisance.

ANOTHER TANGANYIKA LIBEL REFUTED.

How Great Britain has extended Medical Services

East Africa S. 1. Ref. 16 Excess of Claims

This absurd statement was recently made in our hearing that the British medical service in Tanganyika is far inferior to that under the German regime, and when the utterer of so mischievous a libel was challenged his only answer was that the opinion is generally held in the Territory. We cannot credit it, but because we believe that all allegations that Tanganyika has deteriorated under British administration need to be refuted, we take up the question. It is not often that such anti-British sentiments can be brought to the test of cold fact, for they are usually vague and general, of the "Look on this picture—and on that!" type, but this reckless assertion is one that can be dealt with in detail.

In German Days.

The Germans owned and administered their Protectorate of German East Africa from 1885 to, let us say, 1914—a period of fully twenty-eight years. The British have ruled Tanganyika Territory for barely fourteen. If 1916 be taken as the date of the establishment of a British Administration—which is surely early enough. It is argued that the Germans had to make a colony "from the raw," the sufficient reply is that the British had practically to rebuild the country anew, so great had been the ravages of the War. As for the inhabitants who came under the respective Administrations, the population of German East in 1913 was officially given as 5,336 whites, 656 Goans, 14,900 coloured non-Natives, and 7,645,000 Natives. (German East, of course, included Ruanda and Urundi, which are now under Belgian Mandate.) In 1923 the population of Tanganyika Territory was returned as 5,274 whites, 14,091 other non-Natives, and 4,740,700 Natives. It will be seen that the Germans had nearly 3,000,000 more Natives to protect and care for than the British.

What provision, then, was made by the Germans for the medical service of their possession, and how does that provision compare with the British medical service in Tanganyika to-day?

When the British took over the country there were hospitals for Europeans in Dar es Salaam (50 beds), Tanga (smaller than Dar es Salaam, but no number of beds given), Tabora (22 beds), Lindi (4-5 beds), Arusha (6 beds), and a small one at Mwanza. For Indians and Natives there were hospitals at Dar es Salaam—the Sewa Hadji hospital (50 beds), Tanga (60 beds), Tabora (75 beds), Arusha (12 beds), Kilwa, Iringa, and Morogoro. There were no hospitals for Europeans at New Moshi, Iringa, Morogoro or Dodoma. There was a fine Kurhaus for Europeans at Vugiri, in the West Usambara Mountains, and one lunatic asylum for Natives at Lutindi.

British Improvements

All these were taken over by the British, and they have since been extended, in many cases, and many more added. Thus there are now European hospitals at Arusha, Bakyuli, Dar es Salaam, Dodoma, Iringa, Kilgoma, Kiwaa, Moshi, Musoma, Mwanza, Tabora, and Tanga, while, in addition, European medical officers are stationed at Kahama, Kibungoto, Kondo, Lindi, Liwale, Mtsusho, Morogoro, Singida, Songea, Tazuvu, and Campa wellere, as yet there are no special hospitals for Europeans. There are Indian and Native hospitals, mostly in charge of Indian sub-assistant surgeons, but in some cases of a European medical officer, at Bagarayo, Bihara-ano, Bukoba, Dar es Salaam, Dodoma, Iringa, Kahama, four, with two maternity and child welfare clinics, Kasulu, Kigoma, Koudo, Lindi, Manyoni, Mbezi, Mbulu, Mkwinda, Morogoro, Kisaki, Mesi, Misoma, Nya-Nya, Pangani, Shinyanga, Tabora (also maternity and child welfare clinic), and Tanga.

Thus in the matter of hospitals, at any rate, the people who declare that the position is worse than in German days are hopelessly inaccurate. In fact, there are more than twice as many hospitals as there were under the German regime.

How the Medical Service has Grown

It is not easy to get full and detailed information about the German medical service, for there is nothing in their records to compare with the handsome volumes of over 200 pages which are issued by the Medical Department of Tanganyika Territory, and which set out in detail every phase of the activity of the Department. Nevertheless, official figures are available in sufficient numbers to allow of fair comparison. Thus in 1913 there were in German East only 19 doctors for civilian work, of whom five were stationed in Dar es Salaam, one in Iringa, one in Kilwa, one in Moshi, three in Mwanza, one in Tabora, one in Wilhelmstal (now Lushoto), and no fewer than six were stationed in Ujiji, apparently for sleeping sickness work. There were no private practitioners in German East,⁴ but some missions included medical men in their own staff; thus the Berliner Mission had one at Kidugala, the Leipziger Mission one at Mashame, the Church Missionary Society two, at Mamboia and Kikuyu, and the Universities Mission to Central Africa one at Magila. The C.M.S. and the U.M.C.A. were, and are, British. Certain missions, such as the Evang. Afrikaverien, supervised the lunatic asylum and/or did leper work, but they had no qualified medical staff.

For the Protectorate troops, which were stationed at the bomas and forts scattered over the country, there were 42 medical officers (Sanitätsassessoren) and 66 Unteroffiziere, the latter corresponding roughly to what we should call "hospital orderlies." The number of the Protectorate troops varied within small limits, but 200 white and 2,472 Native rank and file may be taken as the standard. Thus far better provision was made for the handful of troops than for the whole of the rest of the country. There is no mention of nursing sisters, of maternity and child welfare work, of training for Native dressers, or of the employment of Asiatic sub-assistant surgeons.

In 1928 there were 59 British medical officers, 56 Asiatic sub-assistant surgeons—most of whom were licentiates of one or other of the medical schools in India—42 nursing sisters, and an African staff which included 20 sanitary inspectors and 719 hospital orderlies, nurses and dressers. These figures do not include laboratory staff, entomologist, and dental chemist. The dental surgeons, four do comprise the skilled staff now devoted to maternity and child welfare work for Natives.

Eloquent Figures

Turning to actual work done, the following figures are strictly comparable.

	German, 1913	British, 1928
Total patients	29,377	405,558
Malaria	5,631	133,731
Measles	26	47
Blackwater Fever	77	60
Deaths	15	14
Askylostomiasis	10,477	26,804
Tuberculosis	140	1,372
Deaths	33	110
Syphilis	no record	23,423
Yaws	no record	187,701

These figures speak for themselves, and in the light of the fully documented facts detailed in this article, he would indeed be a bold, not to say reckless, asseverationist who maintained that the British medical service in Tanganyika Territory today is one whit behind that of the German in German East Africa. Moreover, any fair-minded man must admit that, though there is unquestionably room for great improvement in the medical service of the Territory, much has been done of which Great Britain can be proud. To underrate that work, and particularly to compare it so unfairly and untruthfully with that of the Germans, is a curious way of seeking its extension and improvement. If, as is stated, the general public of Tanganyika is unaware of the true facts, we are glad to be able to supply them.

A PLEA FOR NATIONAL PARKS.

East Africa has repeatedly urged the establishment of National Parks in each of the British East and Central African Dependencies. To those of our readers who are interested in the subject—and from our correspondence we know that the number is considerable—we commend a little pamphlet by Mr. Alfred H. T. Perry, entitled "National and Other Parks" of The Kruger National Park in the Transvaal it is stated.

This Park, established in 1902, includes the old Sabi Game Reserve set aside many years ago. The Park of which South Africans can justly be proud, is a magnificent area of 7,800 square miles, its length from north to south being 211 miles, and the average width 37 miles. It is certainly the finest game preserve in the world. The Park is estimated to contain over 100,000 head of game, including about 100 elephants, 100 buffalo, 250 giraffes, 600 lions, 200 hippopotami, 10 black rhinoceros, and there are also zebras, impalas, kudus, sable antelopes, waterbuck, wildebeest, and a number of smaller varieties of antelope. The Park, which is under the control of a Board of Trustees, being made easily accessible to visitors by good motor roads, about 100 miles having been constructed up to the present. Doubtless in course of time, hotels and accommodation camps will be provided for visitors, and to make their own camping arrangements. The Park will prove a great attraction to overseas visitors, and it is no wonder, since it has recently received the benefit of considerable publicity in the United States, owing to the enterprise of an American syndicate, whose ornate camper, Mr. J. Lieb, spent about four weeks filming and photographing many varieties of game in the Park, and he obtained many fine pictures of the animals in their natural haunts. These pictures and others taken of South African scenery and interesting features, will probably be shown all over the States, as well as in other countries, which will prove a valuable free advertisement for South Africa.

SETTLER DELEGATES ON THE PLATFORM

*Appeal to moderate opinion.
Warnings against hasty decisions.
Exclusives referred for East Africa.*

On Wednesday of last week three of the settler delegates, now in England, addressed the British Colonial and Dependencies Committee of the National Council of Women at Murray House, Buckingham Gate, and created a most favourable impression on a large and representative audience. The delegates were Lady Eleanor Cole, the Hon. T. J. O'Shea, M.L.C., and Mr. W. MacLellan Wilson.

There was no "rib-thumping" in pleasant contrast to a feature not common on similar platforms one could mention—no mere appeal to sentiment, no wild allegations, no sign of polemic bias. The delegates presented their case calmly, reasonably, and convincingly. Mrs. Patrick Ness made a very efficient Chairman.

Only once was a little heat shown, and that was when Mr. O'Shea rebuked the accusation that the Natives were intentionally taxed to such a degree that they were compelled to come out of their Reserves to work for the settlers. "That," declared Mr. O'Shea indignantly, "is the meanest and most despicable libel which has been told about our country; and I hope to meet during our stay two speakers who have been at pains to spread that libel."

Lady Eleanor Cole's Speech.

Lady Eleanor Cole, who has had thirteen years' experience in East Africa, explains why there were no African or Indian women in the League. African women, she said, were still in a very primitive state; they had no knowledge of the English language, and the chief object of the League was to look after their interests. Indian women did not look on East Africa as their native country, nor were there any colonists; they sent their money away to India, they had their own political organisations, and they had to a certain extent alienated European sympathy by the political attitude they had taken up. For instance, at the Empire Day the Indian children were ordered to take no part, and not to salute the flag. They were definitely hostile.

The Native women had obtained the following advantages from British settlement: (1) Intercourse with the white man had been stopped and home life made safe; (2) the colonists were giving a practical demonstration of what civilised life was and should be, and they was far better than preaching. Especially valuable were the care, affection and respect which they showed towards his wife—a great contrast to their native view of women; (3) for Native culture was very much lower than anything British people at home could conceive; and (4) the voluntary doctoring by white women of the Native emigrants—a service given freely and often at great expense—made a deep impression. Goodwill between Europeans and Natives in Kenya was very real.

Mr. T. J. O'Shea.

Mr. O'Shea touched first on the Indians as being the least likely to prove a permanent factor of importance. They had not permanently associated themselves with the Colony, and there was little doubt that they would eventually be squeezed out and their places taken by Natives.

The question of the permanence of European settlement in Kenya raised the query whether there was space for a large European population. It was certain that there was. Some Kenyans, both in the country for many years without ever leaving it, and already there was growing up a second generation of Kenya-born children. The death rate was low and the birth-rate fairly high, and there was enough land available for European settlement, without there being any of the Native Reserves.

As to the presence of white colonists was harmful to the welfare of the Natives, Mr. O'Shea referred to the advantages mentioned by Lady Eleanor Cole, and added that the only possible way of leading the Natives to a higher civilisation was by example and not by precept.

His opinion on Kenya realised that Native interests were protected. There was no colour question. The factors in Native life were land, water and cattle. He would possess them in the same degree as was the white man. The Natives had no rights in the land, and how efficient land had been secured to him, Uganda was practically all Native-owned land, and in Kenya the Natives had some and some stretch of land in Kenya, owing to mismanagement and a failure of the law it was originally enacted that the Natives were only tenants at law of the Crown, but by an Ordinance this year that position has been reversed. Thirty million acres had been set aside for two and a half million people.

Cattle constituted the most important point practically. The Native view of cattle was primitive, they had no idea of breeding for quality, quantity or size, their ideal had already the number of head was increasing, so that some Reserves were overstocked, not for women, their attitude was very unsatisfactory, and they were really the cause of progress being stopped especially in stopping some of the more objectionable tribal customs.

Mr. O'Shea emphasised that no solution of East African problems could be found by accepting the ideas of the Government on either side, there were two schools of thought, the one based on experience, the other the ethical. The former represented the less progressive elements, as was seen in South Africa, the latter composed of very vital people who were working for fulfilment of their ethical ideas, regardless of practical difficulties. His view was that they should be united, the people of mixed opinions. Co-operation between Native and European was essential for progress.

Mr. MacLellan Wilson Took the Desk.

Mr. MacLellan Wilson, who went to Kenya thirty-five years ago, recalled that Kenya then was very different from what it is now. The Native chiefs and people were by no means eager to accept our civilisation, their idea was protection against enemies, and they had no idea of having anything to do with our civilisation at all. The missionaries had to bribe children to come to them to be taught and write their object being to enable the Natives to receive the Gospel. Then there was the difficulty of getting the Natives to work, for the men had never worked in their lives, except on the coast.

The great difficulty came from the Great War, so that out of that evil good had come. Kenya was the first British possession to call for conscription of the white man, and there followed the conscription of the Natives for portage. Thus tens of thousands of Natives came for the first time into contact with the white man, and as a result of the war there was a stimulus to the country, and the people began to have a better view of the Natives, when they realised that they were not so different. They began to have their opinions advanced. The Government was compelled to the Natives. After the War was over and the Natives returned to their own districts, they had had some experience of white men, they had seen and been in our hospitals, they had seen our power, and they wanted to know how to place the present demand for education.

The education supplied at first was on lines not too favourable to the Native, there was too much A.B.C. and too little of the things that would result in making the Native a real European. Now the process of training the brain through the hand was being adopted, but education was proceeding to such a degree that it would have to be watched to see that it was going on right lines, and that it was not being used for mischief.

The scheme must be built up on a basis of the old days was looked upon by the Natives as a big joke, and the mission had very little success. Here again the War made the difference. For the first time the Native realised the benefits of European medical work. Now a great deal of money was being spent by Government on medical attendance for Natives. All Natives can now Government hospitals, and the hospitals free, but settlers have to pay one shilling a day for any of their labourers who go to hospital. Further, Government was training Natives as orderlies, dispensers, and so on. But they were still many Natives, and would not touch our medicines. Here again it would not do to force the pace. As for education, and agricultural work, the benefits the Natives were getting from Government under these heads would not have been possible had it not been for the white settlers' (Applause).

Questions and Answers.

At the close of the speeches, questions were invited. Asked his opinion on the Government's Memorandum on Kenya Policy, Mr. O'Shea said that one of the Memoranda was already in operation, and that the question was which should be put into operation, the representing 2½ contained a definition of 'Native' to which they have given no exception. When the Government of Tanganyika either settles or negotiates with the 'Native' on the subject of land, which they would never submit to. The London or Government of O'Shea said that the matter was complicated by Tanganyika Territory being under a Mandate and not being an integral part of the British Empire. At first the settlers understood the matter as a part of the Empire, but that appeared impossible. Then parts of the proposals were considered and the settlers would not consent to that. Thirdly, under the existing constitution the colonies have certain powers of control over the land and the settlers under Closser's proposals would be deprived of those powers. They would be the responsibility of the Government of the country and they should share the responsibility. They had already put forward their demand either for compensation or for the ultimate control of the land. They recognized that the numbers were too small and their position was not strong enough. Still, they would be associated with the Government of their country and that the Government should not neglect entirely the people having only a thousand left away.

THE NATIVE ON ABRAHAM LINCOLN

Bar as Chairman, New Native Association

Tanganyika

As a result of the meeting of Tanganyika and the Native Association, the settlers asked that their demands should be treated as well as those of the Native, but the British Government would have them subservient. Does the British Government lose all its characteristics—his love of justice, of fair play, of honesty and of self-reliance—when he goes to Africa? There was he continued to find the difference between Natives and Europeans. The Native was too stupid and was bound European civilization and it was impossible to trust our civilisation to be produced by an evolution on the Native. Consideration must be given to the settlers' experience of the use of the Native and were able to train them, which is not possible. Mr. Lloyd was asked the official view of the meaning of 'Native' in the Native Bill. He said that the word was to include any native, but he said that the money was to be used in two parts in the colony, one on a coffee estate in Malawi and one in Nyasa and though he wished to extend the holding in Kenya he had not spent more money there. He said that the settlers were not to be considered and that the settlers were to be given every consideration. The settlers were to be given a full battle and feeling in Kenya was particularly strong against the efforts of the present British Government.

Mr. O'Shea replied that they had come to England to find out what the Government really did mean by 'Native'. If the word stood for itself, it would be easy, but it was so wrapped in mystery that no one seemed to know what it did mean.

Common Roll and Native Taxation

The Chairman having asked Mr. O'Shea whether the settlers were ultimately opposed to the suggestion. They argued that the Native could not be included in the common roll, that of the East and that of the West. The Indian was the person to carry on the Government of the country. The absence of the Native was a serious matter. The determination of the Native at the present day.

Replying to a question on Native taxation, Mr. O'Shea stated that the average taxation, direct and indirect on the Native was about 2s. 6d. per head per annum. Wages on farms were from 2s. to 4s. a month, with food, housing, fuel and water. House boys earned from 1s. to 2s. a month. A Native and his family in the Reserve could, from half an acre of ground, earn 100s. in the amount needed to pay the taxes. Then it would be the Native had 700,000 head of cattle, sheep and 700,000 goats. There was no contribution made on the Native to have his Reserve. He had money to pay taxes by working the settler.

An aeroplane is being prepared at Juba, Southern Sudan. It is to replace the field aeroplane at Juba. It is some twenty miles distant.

The African Native Association has been formed. The Daily Mail has been informed that the suggestion of all Natives in Africa, according to a telegram published in the Times, was decided to send a petition to Sir Donald Cameron, who was known to as the 'Abraham Lincoln of Africa'. The petition was presented before the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament in London and requesting that the Tanganyika Government make arrangements for such a reputation immediately. The meeting expressed its gratitude to the British Government for its sympathetic attitude towards the Native in Africa as shown in the recent White Paper, and prayed for the long life of the King and Queen.

The meeting of Tanganyika referring to the 'Abraham Lincoln of Africa' The impression clearly discloses that the Association springs from other than purely Native aims. Not only many Negro tribes in this country will picture millions of sophisticated Tanganyika Natives with their great knowledge of British and American history, that the qualities of the Governor of the territory can be spontaneously compared by them with those of well-known statesmen of the past. The notion as held by a few many Natives of Tanganyika, one would be entrants for a prize competition in a story word description of the life of Abraham Lincoln. To pose the question is to expose the absurdity of the idea. If Native associations are to be formed to bolster up the farcical conception of 'Native paramountcy' as the present Government would have the propagators of such bodies should at least be careful to avoid phrases which so patently betray their native influence.

ZAMBESIA BRIDGE CONTRACTS SIGNED

£250,000 to improve Nyasaland Communications. The Colonial Office announced that contracts were signed on 17th inst. with the Central Africa Railway Company, Limited, of the Trans-Zambesia Railway Company, Limited, of the same name, and the Cleveland Bridge and Engineering Company, Limited, on 17th inst. for the construction of a railway from Mbezi and some 250 miles of railway on the south bank of the river to connect the existing lines of the Trans-Zambesia Railway and the Central Africa Railway. The total contract price is £1,250,000.

The construction of the proposed connecting railway which is expected to take at least three years to complete, will secure direct communication between Nyasaland and the Port of Beira. At the same time an extension of the railway to Kap Lake Nyasa, which has hitherto been without railway communication to the coast is being planned. A new company, Nyasaland Railways, Limited, has been formed to carry out these schemes.

£250,000 of interest up to £500,000

In addition, the Government of Nyasaland is undertaking the improvement of the roads of the Protectorate, and of the steamship services on Lake Nyasa. The total cost of all these enterprises including the construction of the bridge and approach railway is expected to amount to about £2,500,000.

Bill's Leave Ends

No. 33 - Envoy

The time has come, and I must wave back to Africa - for hours I have been in London doing nothing and spending money, and it simply can't go on any longer. If only I had discovered my Cornish village earlier I might have stayed another month or two, but after all, a holiday is a holiday. I have had a good time, these things must come to an end some time, and I am beginning to get restless.

There is also a bank manager in East Africa, who, under protest, has been repaying me various amounts of money in reply to urgent cables from who says quite politely but very definitely that it is time for me to come back. Bank managers are like the curlew's egg: excellent in pairs, but the eggs that are not so good are very, very bad, and they spoil what would otherwise be perfectly charming people. When you have money in the bank they are so decent. You can go in and sit down in their office, and smoke, and talk at random, but when you are doing them the favour of paying them under an overdraft, an overdraft which you may have taken with the desire to help them along - they treat you so differently. I don't like it. It is so mercenary.

Of Bank Managers.

Why can't they look at it in the spirit in which such things are done? I overdraw my account and place myself in debt to them, or their own good far more than for my own, for no one really likes to be in debt. And then, after having done all that, they paid them enormous sums on interest, they surround and write me the usual nasty little note. You know the thing. In case the matter has escaped your notice, we would draw your attention to the fact that your account appears to be overdrawn in our books to the extent of seven and fourpence, or something equally silly.

A bank manager is a very decent fellow in all other respects; otherwise he and his bank could go to the wall themselves before I could give them my account. And I would find a nice new bank, with an excellent reputation, and that has many ideas about money and money business, should be conducted. It would be like dealing with a large store instead of with a dukka. In the dukka you may not get the selection of goods that you had elsewhere, but you do get well treated, and the proprietor himself usually sees to it that you are given what you want and are well pleased with it.

The old idea has a noble side too. It does not mean that there is nothing that is so good as a class like a professional than the obvious discrimination between those who have money and those who have not. Why should the many with a bank account be treated any better than the poor man who has never had a chance. The banks would be well advised to take my warning before it is too late, and in the future, if it has been allowed to be the case, it is time now. Now I must get back to my own place. I want to get back to my own place. I have spent a few days in East Town and Johannesburg, on my way through South Africa, and I may be able to find a few nice things from East Africa by getting something scandalous about the in the bank. But what's the good? The bank will get it.

Friend on board Ship.

Derwent is coming on the same day, which is a bit depressing, for although he is a good chap, and I like him, he becomes a bit of a nuisance once aboard any sort of ship. Immediately his work is done, he goes into his cabin, and comes into the deck looking for people who have the pluck to say "No" and who he goes into a Sports Committee. Invariably he is elected secretary, so that he can curse throughout the rest of the voyage because he has no right to give if a miss.

Does he listen when I tell him to give if a miss? He does not. So he will rush about at various tournaments, organising games nobody wants to play, and making himself a perfect nuisance all round the ship. I settle down in a chair for a nap and will come to see with a sheet of papers in his hand to tell me I am wanted to play off by him in a checkers game, or some such futile game. And then there always seems to be the only three bridge players on the whole ship when Derwent has anything to do with it, and I get drawn into making a fourth. It's all very annoying, especially at the end of the voyage he will sigh heavily and say "Never again," knowing that he lies. His death. Since nothing delights him more than to disorganise every moment of the voyage, making us do things when normal, he should sleep or read or do something equally comfortable.

Back to Africa.

As we creep slowly out of Southampton, and as the shores of southern England fade away, I shall gaze regretfully at the finest land in the world, thinking of the wonderful time she has given me during the six months. But the devil drives me to what? To earn some more money for that unfounded bank. To come back in a couple of days, but you know what Africa is, it is the only place in the world in which I can't make plans. I don't want to go back, but - and you I don't know.

We can judge from the comments of our readers that Bill has made many friends during his leave, as a result of his irregularities in these parts. They did not expect him to look forward to the African affairs as he sees them. In that Africa, it is not to be expected that most East African correspondents will sorrow we can see that dozens of correspondents have promised before he left to send regular dispatches of copy from Africa, and that not one of them has fulfilled his promise. The proportion of the besting sin of most correspondents is not to be expected that most East African correspondents will sorrow we can see that dozens of correspondents have promised before he left to send regular dispatches of copy from Africa, and that not one of them has fulfilled his promise.

PRONUNCIATION OF PLACE NAMES

To the Editor of "East Africa"

SIR—Your note on the pronunciation of place names by the British Broadcasting Corporation leads me to inquire how the names of its staff are instructed to pronounce the names of African names. Do they call Uganda "U-gan-da" or "oo-gan-da"; do they say Ny-asa-land or "Nee-asa-land"; and what is their rendering of the port of Kenya and "Kenya"? Does it sound as though it were spelt with two s's? Of more obscure place names I make no mention, I have heard even Baso Africans struggle over Mpwapwa!

Incidentally, I wonder if the announcers of the British East Africa Broadcasting Co. have obtained a copy of the useful English booklet, "Ords and how to pronounce the above-mentioned words."

Yours faithfully,

BRITISH TRADE WITH TANGANYIKA

To the Editor of "East Africa"

SIR—The Comparative Table of the Import Trade of Tanganyika Territory, which you have published under the heading of "Trade Opportunities in Tanganyika," is most instructive and valuable.

I was glad to note that you suggest that in future annual reports of the Comptroller of Customs such a Comparative Table ought to be included.

From the point of view of British Empire trade with that important Territory the record is not a particularly glorious one. In my judgment one of the logical deductions from the Table is the urgent need for market research directed to the root causes of the apparent growth of consumer preference for foreign merchandise. Obviously there must be too much guesswork on the part of our exporters in addition to other market defects.

Yours faithfully,
I. C. FLEWELLSETT.

THE GAME SCANDAL IN TANGANYIKA

Some of Mr. Lowridge's statements challenged.

To the Editor of "East Africa"

SIR—Your issue of October 16 gives prominence to a letter by Mr. Lowridge on the question of the game laws in Tanganyika and to this his points he quotes certain facts which came under his notice or were told him. I have all heard very evidence of this nature and reliable, and he has in consequence formed wrong conclusions.

For instance, his little anxiety about the matter on the Iringa Babaga road was not along with a game hunt recently out on a game hunt sounds dreadfully open. Actually, there is no game at all on that road and never has been (save a few duiker) as it is not the country being 6,000 feet up, very cold and devoid of cover. Those natives were probably after a hare or two, and why not? I must have been invited to join in a run tomorrow in Iringa and the local beagles after a hare or two, just as the Babaga Natives do. Where is the difference, may I ask?

Mr. Lowridge, as a lover of game, might have reported the incident of the lorry driver to the police on his arrival at Iringa. His report and assistance would have been welcomed.

I cannot agree with his opinion of Iringa, being an ideal game country. It is far too bleak and without cover. Game much prefer the warmer thorn bush country such as the Babora Bay.

Another inaccuracy of Mr. Lowridge, caused by that long jade rumour, refers to the Bukoba incident where he complains that a white man was fined only 2,000 shillings for the destruction of clover or a herd of rhinoceros. I think I am right in stating that the shooting of rhinoceros was proved against this man. Rumour apparently failed to add that, in addition, all this man's fines were commuted and his licence permanently cancelled. Such and such are the inaccuracies of statements regarding Tanganyika and its game questions.

Pay heed to this story, if you could be so good. The late Sultan Kasasuru of Bilharimulo (rest his soul) once applied to the District Officer for permission to shoot a few head of game for a festive occasion. The officer demurred slightly and Kasasuru mildly enquired why he should have to obtain permission to shoot a few head of game in his own country. The officer explained that it was necessary to control the shooting of game by Natives for the game would soon be washed. Kasasuru reported, "Bye-bye, my people have been hunting game for countless years but the white man's game is the game finished. I refer to the point, don't you think and difficult to reply to."

The destruction of game by Natives is easily regulated in most districts as the Government is the sole supplier of powder and caps for Native guns. So lovers of game, as we all are, need have no fear on that score.

Yours faithfully,

Bedford.

SAA SITA ON THE "EARLSRUHE"

His Ideas of the German Parade

...himself and ... last ...

Well, Saa Sita, what are you going to do? ... Saa Sita looked at the car ... twenty men to get it out ... Perhaps the men will come down ... to finish the work, and then the white men in charge will see what he has caught.

There was nothing else to be done, and as I always travel with food, it was only the morning ... of the being the worried one, Saa Sita is quite a good bush cook.

You went to Tanga last month, I said to the old man. Who paid your fare? For that, the Saa Sita did not believe in ... his own money for a train journey.

Bwana, a German, sent round to all the plantations, saying that all the old German, as he used to go to, Tanga as the manoxari was there.

But you were not a German, asked Bwana. I answered Saa Sita very shortly, I was in the K.A.R.

I'm sorry, Saa Sita, Carry on! I went with my friend to one of the plantations, Bwana, and he got an advocate to pay the fare on the train for us both.

But you will have to pay that back. Yes, I'll pay it back sometime, but I am an old man and perhaps I shall not live long enough.

You rascal! Well, what happened in Tanga? I went on the manoxari and one of the Germans told us that they were very big people, and if we did not think so, we went to look at their manoxari, how very clean it was, and how all the tunnels could be lowered, so when there is another war they could not be seen. I asked if they had an aeroplane, but they said it was only in pieces, not put together yet, but could be done quite quickly. I wondered if that was true.

... a picture of the manoxari. And then, Bwana, in the evening there was a big dinner, I could not understand, but a friend told me that Bwana said that the Germans had spent much money and blood in this country. I know that it was their money, but whose blood was spent? Was it not the blood of our brothers? The Germans from the manoxari marched up and down the streets in their country, Bwana.

No, Saa Sita, it was only a friendly visit.

It cannot be, Bwana, they were marching up and down, and some to war and some to sing. Do you know the Germans were talking about our slaves all night? Two Germans asked me to take them to a certain house, but I said I wanted five shillings first, and after a lot of trouble they gave me it. I took them a long way and they got very tired, so I showed them a house of a German who had many doors. I then went away and hid behind a tree. Now the German who lives at this house is very fierce and has a potho and his dog is very fierce also. The men from the manoxari knocked at the house, but the owner opened the door and made a big noise, and then the dogs ran out and chased the men.

Yes, Bwana, and look at me, and then Saa Sita ... his head, looked up into the sky, and began to laugh. It was the Ghost Spirit ... Saa Sita ... laughing at his absurd ... If you did that in Germany, you would go to prison. I asked the padre in Tabora, Bwana, there is nothing the old man can do, I know.

"THE TIMES" ON EAST AFRICA.

Under the heading "Colonists and Natives" The Times has published the following leading article:

No one can have read without the gravest anxiety the consequences steadily accumulating during the last few weeks of the latest Government statement of policy towards Natives and Europeans in British Africa. The dispatch of a delegation from Kenya, the truculent attitude of Mr. Goble, the South African Minister of Lands, the temperate but emphatic declaration of General Heriott that it is a matter of expediency to the Union, and the letter from the High Commissioner of the Union bringing the South African policy into sharp focus, have all the while been curiously assisting in the building up of the African Nationalist movement in Southern Rhodesia, and the officials and favourable response of the Southern Rhodesian Government—all these events following directly upon the issue of the White Papers. There is no room for doubting that blameless as may be the intentions of the Government, unobjectionable and far from novel as may be the substance of their Native policy, their presentation of it is having the most deplorable results. It is never to be forgotten, we think, that the worst of the objections to the Kenya Council would welcome the adoption of any views but their own, but the evidence is so plentiful that throughout British Tropical Africa, in Northern Rhodesia no less than in Kenya, the ordinary European, whether or not particularly interested in African political matters, has been profoundly and very generally disquieted by declarations which suggest that the non-African communities in countries controlled from the Colonial Office are to be sacrificed to satisfy the unformed humanitarianism in Great Britain.

As a matter of fact, so far as substance goes, there is really nothing in either of the two papers embodying Government policy to justify the uneasiness which is now being felt and pressed. The Native policy laid down in them is not new. The main points to secure to the Natives sufficient land to guarantee their liberty of action, and to build up in the Reserves economic and political institutions, have often been enumerated before. The proposals on Closer Union are so widely and so generally forward for Parliament to consider, that it is not for the Government to speak its mind, and it did so. But unfortunately it allowed to creep into the philosophy of its declaration some terms, which may seem innocuous in homely terms, like "immigrant communities" classing together Europeans and Indians as groups of inferior standing in Tropical Africa, and these phrases were bound to suggest to sensitive European minorities that their own Imperial Government holds them of little account.

The British Government has, we think, must keep in mind solemn declarations of its policy towards the indigenous races, but in the past it has also been wise enough to encourage white immigration, and the only true and fair thing to say to-day is that three different races have now their different rights. The Natives are entitled to protection, to land, to restriction in economic activities, and to political education. The Europeans are entitled to security of tenure, to guarantee that they are not victimised in East Africa, and to the knowledge that they will not be discriminated against by Indians or Africans. The Indians, whose claims to political representation are hardly well grounded, have those of the Africans or Europeans, are nevertheless entitled to the protection of the Imperial Government, and to the provision for expressing their special point of view.

An immense amount of unnecessary harm has been done in Africa by attempting to use the African situation to ease political difficulties in India. Declarations in favour of a common electoral roll for Europeans and Indians are of obvious and real value to Europeans in Africa, and are perfectly valueless, as an Indian Nationalist. For that particular faith, which would actually sacrifice British Africa to the hope of space in Asia, the Colonial Office can hardly be held responsible. But it is misleading to place the blame for most of the consequences of its declaration on the heads of the most difficult and delicate problems in the world.

The truth is that the situation in East Africa is no simple question of the difference of racial elements in the midst of which the presence of white settlement, with its attendant agricultural and business enterprises, is an enormous asset. The territories are not temper so quickly engendered in these discussions is itself a confirmation of the palpable fact that the two sides there can be in conflict of interests. The question of how to supply the question of a common budget and of the location of taxation, are two conspicuous instances of angles in which the economic advantage of white landowners is immediately concerned. For this reason the Hilton Young Commission led down at the groundwork of its African policy that the Imperial Government has an arbitrary sanction to perform. What machinery it uses is open to doubt, but from the point of view of the native as well as nominal power of executive decision must rest with the Imperial Government there is no solid ground to dissent. There is as yet neither the population nor the resources of the settler population of Kenya to take over the administration of the country, even if it were admitted that the settlers are entitled to some power. Nor are they really entitled to claim a veto on what is done, such as an elected majority of the Council would confer. The immediate responsibility for Kenya, and for the other territories, is not in the hands of the white men, it is to be borne by an administration which the Imperial Government ought to seek and to exercise. It is a very real problem, and it constitutes the chief task facing the Joint Committee of both Houses, which is to be set up when Parliament meets.

The actual terms of reference of this Committee are to consider the proposed appointment of a High Commissioner for Uganda, Kenya, and Tanganyika, what his powers should be, and what sort of Council should assist him. But in fact the Committee will be charged with a far more momentous task, which is the re-establishment of confidence in British Africa. It is really a most fortunate circumstance that the intricacies of Closer Union in East Africa call for such a body just when feelings in Africa have been so badly stung by an ill-judged declaration of Native policy, with its suggestion that the unofficial European is simply to be watched with vigilant suspicion. No doubt the attitude of suspicion has its history and its justifications, but it is grotesque as the main basis of British policy, and the champions of the Native are doing him a poor service if they create the very real good will he enjoys from the European whom he has actually to meet. Unofficial opinion in British Tropical Africa has little sympathy to-day with the "colour bar" policy of repression, and it is of enormous importance that it should never become the typical white point of view. Disasters may be the effect of further slighted repression south of the Limpopo; they would be far more disastrous in Tropical Africa, where the whites must be supported by thousands, even if the mines of Northern Rhodesia surmount their tens of thousands, and the blacks by millions. The one thing that might produce the old, poor attitude is the belief that opinion in England will consider that the African races cannot be protected or developed unless Europeans in Africa are thrust ostentatiously into the lower seats at the table.

The premises of British policy are so unanswerable, its merits on grounds of expediency no less than morality so demonstrable, that it is astonishing to find from its opponents so long as its friends will temper their easy idealism with a scrupulous regard for other claims. The Joint Committee should be able at once to reaffirm British policy and to restate it in such terms as to remove all suspicion that the British Colonists in East Africa are regarded as intruders and not as bona fide owners.

What Major Court Treatt Does not Know.

In his new book on his "impressive" trip in Africa, Major Court Treatt sentimentally remarks in his preface on "with the exception of such authors as Selous, Bell and Lyell, the majority of books on African hunting have not been written by the real African hunters, but merely by men who have visited Africa for a short hunting trip." The Major's knowledge of books on African hunting is sadly inadequate: one can recall, off-hand, such famous sportsmen-authors as A. B. Percival, Major A. R. Dugmore, Marston, Ell Macswell, A. Chapman, S. Jackson, J. L. Puxley, Lieutenant Colonel G. G. G. Jackson-Hanson, and last, but not by any means least, John Hume, who will be immensely pleased at the notion of his being classed as an author who has only "visited Africa for a short hunting trip." Does Major Court Treatt represent a modern generation which needs reminding very forcibly that there were brave men before Agamemnon? A whole crowd of them.

The Abyssinian "Chief of Aviation."

Abyssinia is, in the news just now, and the American Negro, a thugster by instinct and training, is the one to seize the occasion. The New York Herald announces that a coloured gentleman who left America eighteen months ago as plain Hubert Jahar has returned to New York as Colonel Hubert Baunterler Jahar, Chief of Aviation of the Abyssinian Army. He landed resplendent in uniform—a pith helmet, a monocle, a pink polo shirt, white breeches with green stripes, and spurred riding boots, size 12, of deep blue. Julian had done some flying in America. He started on July 4, 1927, from 125th Street, New York, on a flight—so he said—to Liberia, but landed a few minutes later on the mud flats of Flushing Bay. Colonel Julian explained that he had been in Abyssinia about three and a half months, so his promotion was rapid. According to his account, Ras Tafari had heard of his exploit in aviation. "Brother," said Jahar, "once I got there it was just will-power and persistence—that's the Alpha and the Axis."

The Hotel on the Equator.

A correspondent writes: "Your Comment on the house in Kenya which is situated right on the equator no doubt refers to the hotel at Nanyuki now lost by Commander Hook, R.N. (retired). Down the bar runs a red line marking the exact position of the equator, and it is really true that your refreshment, liquid or otherwise, is handed to you by a man in the southern hemisphere, while you, marvelling, absorb it in the northern. The hotel is a queer enough, a cluster of buildings, primitive perhaps but comfortable, surrounding a beautiful lawn; over all lies during the day a heavy shadow, and a few miles away gleam the snows of Mount Kenya—a wonderful and gracious sight. Fishing is one attraction, and many a casual caller is waster on the fat trout caught by keen anglers in the narrow river. Rights on the edge of the hotel, beyond the hotel's place, in which for a while travellers from Kenya's Northern Frontier, and a jolly crowd they are. Unique in position, the caravanserai has for its defences which are so few, unique."

Incorrection.

Our dear contemporary has put upon a happy expression which deserves to take its place in the ever-increasing vocabulary of the English language. An incorporation, it says, has been made in the Annual Trade Report of the Zanzibar Government for the year 1929. Note that the crude mistake, the possible error, the blundering, or the vulgar "howls" are rejected in favour of "incorrection," which, if original, is Shave's courtier. We welcome the word.

The Mystery of Lake Naivasha.

Out of the jumble of good stories and weird fancies contained in Sir Frederick Jackson's poem, "The Book of Early Days in East Africa," a gem of the first water may be extracted. In 1802, while encamped on the shore of Lake Naivasha opposite Great Island, one of the officers shot a hippo. While it was being cut up several of the porters seen round in about three and a half feet of water looking on. Suddenly one of them disappeared under water without a struggle or cry, just sank out of sight. There were no crocodiles nor have there ever been crocodiles in Lake Naivasha, and though the water was thoroughly explored, no deep mud, hole or steep ledge was discovered at or near the spot where the man disappeared. His body was never found. Four years later, almost exactly similar disappearance occurred at the north-east shore. While cutting a channel through the reeds, a man holding a bucket suddenly sank and vanished. The bucket was recovered, but not the man, though the water for a long way out was only a few feet deep. For real mystery those two incidents will take some beating. Rumour ascribed them to a fabulous sea serpent which only adds to the mystery.

EDUCATION IN KENYA

Policy Definite and Progress Marked

Kenya will certainly become the centre for the education of European children in East Africa, and Makerere in Uganda the institution for the advanced training of Natives, seem to be the outstanding points in the Report of the Kenya Department of Education for 1929 (Government Printer, Nairobi, shs. 2). The policy of the Kenya Government is to provide for European children schools, of which any country might be proud, in the larger centres of population and to enable children living at a distance from those centres to make use of the facilities by means of admirably equipped boarding houses.

The programme in 1929 was already in part complete. The new school buildings at Nakuru were already in use. The buildings at Eldoret were opened at the year. The foundation stone of the secondary school for boys at Kabete was laid in August. The boarding house at Kitale was opened before the end of the year. The school buildings at Kitale were well advanced by the end of the year. In Nairobi there existed already an excellent school building, and additional provision was made available during the year by the opening of junior schools at Parklands and Westlands in new buildings. The third junior school, at Kiliriani, was completed by the end of the year. At Mombasa the junior school was available, and was added to during the year. The enumeration of these buildings indicates that a definite plan has been formulated as regard to the provision of educational facilities, and that Government had given effect to the policy underlying that plan.

The increase in the number of European pupils in Government schools was 181, from 806 to 987, or 23.5%.

There is no reason from an educational point of view, writes Mr. H. S. Scott, the Director, in this able, thoughtful and most informative report, "why boys and girls should not remain in Kenya and receive an efficient education at least up to the stage of a first public examination and beyond that stage for the two years which are necessary to provide a full secondary course."

Indian and Native Services.

The general policy adopted is that the different communities should receive the education which they can finance through direct educational taxation and a special indirect tax, and through fees. Though the Indian community demands a type of education exactly similar to that provided for the Europeans, the educational revenue for Indian education falls short of the amount required to fulfil Indian aspirations. There is the difficulty of the two vernacular languages, Swahili and Kikuyu. The Government has acted generously in making additional provision for Indian education from its own resources, and the number of Indian pupils in Government schools for Indians was, in 1929, 2,051, as compared with 1,671 in 1928, an increase of 22.7%.

The number of Native pupils in Government African schools increased only from 2,230 to 2,564, due largely to the severe conditions which prevailed in the Native Reserves during a portion of the year. The definiteness which characterised the general policy in regard to European and Indian education was lacking in the African. That was bound to be the case. The circumstances in which the education of the Africans has been undertaken and in which it has developed have made it impossible to secure definiteness of policy. Nevertheless, the bulk of the report is given up to the consideration of Native education and to the activities of the Jeanes School.

Costs.

The very pronounced desire of the Natives to have their own schools, backed in the most practical way by their subscribing thousands of pounds in cash for such schools, and the complications introduced by the insistence that part of such subscriptions should be those shocking to the European school authorities, recognized by the Government, are fully discussed in the report, and must form the subject of a special article in East Africa.

The total cost of the European education was £40,993, and the net tuition cost per pupil in a school was shs. 170.60; the cost of Indian education was £23,780, net cost per pupil shs. 186; and Arab and African education, £74,043, net cost per pupil shs. 338. The average cost of each Native pupil at the Jeanes School was shs. 1,051.

THE NORTH CHARTERLAND CASE.

Directors obtain Further Amazing Evidence.

THE NORTH CHARTERLAND EXPLORATION CO. (INCORPORATED IN U.K.) at the recent annual meeting of which Mr. H. B. Spiller strongly criticised the action of the Government in dispossessing the company of large areas of its concessions in Northern Rhodesia without any compensation has sent to its shareholders a circular which states, inter alia:

"In forwarding a record of our annual meeting I am instructed to express the regret of your directors that it has been found impossible to send you a full report of the Chairman's speech dealing with the question of Native Reserves. Although every statement has been fully substantiated and justified, it is of such a nature that we cannot get it printed.

"I am instructed to inform you that since the state of the meeting evidence of a truly amazing character has come into the possession of your directors. It is now being dealt with, and shareholders will be kept informed of further developments.

"I am instructed to inform you that in accordance with the resolution unanimously passed at our annual meeting a letter has been addressed to the Prime Minister requesting an investigation into your company's grievance."

B.E.A. FIBRE COMPANY'S REPORT.

THE B.E.A. FIBRE AND INDUSTRIAL CO., LTD., reports a net profit for the year 1920 of £1,253, which, together with £1,764 brought forward, the directors recommend to be carried forward. Owing chiefly to the drought of 1920, the output of sisal and sisal tow dropped to 1,087 tons. At the end of 1920 the company had 7,613 acres under sisal, an increase of 770 acres in the twelve months. The average price obtained for sisal and tow was slightly higher than in 1918, but this advantage was completely balanced by the Conference Lines raising the ocean freight rates during the last six months of the year.

Further cash was required at the end of the year to finance the company's operations, and Redeemable Debentures to the value of £2,700 were offered and subscribed in January last. The issued share capital is £135,470. The report refers to the death of Mr. J. M. C. Sturgart and states that Mr. H. Fortlock has ceased to be a director of the company. The annual meeting is to be held at the company's offices on October 30 at noon.

LEWA RUBBER ESTATES REPORT.

A PROFIT of £2,128 was returned by the Lewa Rubber Estates, Ltd. for the year to June 30, 1920, which, with the balance brought forward, gives a total of £26,474. From this the directors recommend payment of a dividend of 10% on the issued shares and further dividends of 2% on the deferred and deferred shares. These distributions will absorb £68,450.

The issued capital is now £205,122. The Lewa property stands in the books at £183,000 and investments included in £37,125 shares of £1 in Amoyah Estates, Ltd. at £20,463. The annual meeting is to be held at 4, Elford Avenue, E.C.2, on Oct. 29 at 12 o'clock noon.

COMPANHIA DE MOCAMBIQUE.

FOR the year 1920 the Companhia de Mocambique reports a profit of 465,508 escudos (gold) against 665,005 escudos (gold) for the previous year, the lower figure being due chiefly to reduced Customs revenue. Nevertheless, the profit for 1920 represents a rate more than 8% on the issued capital.

"Strange as it may seem to us as Socialists whose great desire is to escape from capitalism into socialism, what these people ardently want is to escape from Socialism into capitalism." Dr. Norman Leys in "The Reds."

COMPANY WITH 11,000 ACRES UNDER COFFEE

Chairman's View of Export Restrictions

EAST AFRICAN coffee planters will be interested in some of the statements made at the annual general meeting of the Sao Paulo Coffee Estates Company, which has over 11,000 acres, comprising nearly 3,000,000 coffee trees, under coffee in Brazil.

Mr. F. C. Banks, the chairman, said that the recent Sao Paulo loan issue had definitely benefited Brazil, but these facts reflect had better to change Brazilian coffee policy from restriction of sales with a view to maintenance of price and consequent large accumulation of stocks to orderly and regular marketing of each crop spread over the whole crop period.

The old-fashioned theory that when price falls below cost of production, production by the least efficient producers will cease, has been shown by experience to be incorrect, or to be so slow in its working that restriction schemes are considered by some to be a more effective method. The difference between coffee plantations and other plantations producing other commodities is that in the case of coffee the trees which grow with great vigour smother and kill the coffee trees, rendering the whole estate derelict. In the case of rubber, however, the trees do not smother through being tapped, but on the contrary smother in condition.

Brazil's position is not only the largest but the cheapest and most successful producer puts her at a disadvantage under any scheme of restriction of her exports which is artificial, maintaining prices. Such schemes can only result in making a better market for the products of Brazil's competitors and stimulating their production at the expense of Brazil. How prices brought about by temporary over-production are better for the industry as a whole than any measures of restriction of output.

EAST AFRICA'S INFORMATION BUREAU

East Africa's Information Bureau exists for the free service of subscribers and advertisers desiring the Editor's aid on any matter. One of its principal objects is to contribute to the development of British trade throughout East and Central Africa, and any information which readers are willing to give for that purpose will be cordially welcomed. Manufacturers wishing to appoint agents and agents seeking further representations, are invited to communicate with the Editor. No charge is made for the service rendered by this Journal in such matters.

The Nairobi aerodrome is being enlarged. Sisal exported from Kenya during July amounted to 6,600 tons.

A new six-hole golf course has been opened at Victoria Falls.

A house to house delivery of letters and newspapers has been started in Zanzibar.

Over £26 was recently raised for the Eldoret Hospital at a ball held at the Eldoret Hotel.

The new Standard Bank building in Sixth Avenue, Nairobi, which cost some £80,000, is now open.

The railway extension to Nanyuki from Narro Moru, which cost £55,000, is now open for traffic.

A Bill to establish an Institute of Architects and Quantity Surveyors is being introduced into the Legislative Council of Kenya.

The rateable value of the Nairobi Municipality, which covers approximately 32 square miles, amounts to over £3,500,000. The 1930 rate is expected to be fixed at 1%.

Two hundred aeroplanes have landed in the Halfa Province of the Sudan during the first eight months of this year. Last year only sixty machines landed during the same period.

The total revenue of the Tanganyika Railways from January 1 to September 6 last amounted to £367,003, compared with £338,343 during the corresponding period of last year.

The Centenary of the Royal Geographical Society is to be celebrated on October 21 and the two succeeding days. At the Centenary Dinner on October 23 the Prince of Wales will preside.

The Union-Castle Steamship Co. have issued an illustrated souvenir brochure in connection with the visit to South Africa of the M.C.A. cricket team, which sailed for Cape Town last week.

The partnership between Mr. George Frederick Illman and Harold Walter Clarke, trading as Kahawa as the Kenya Coffee Curing Works, has been dissolved. Mr. Illman is continuing the business.

A new hotel has been started in Tanga under the proprietorship of Mrs. N. S. Davis, formerly of Cairo.

The Nyasaland Chamber of Commerce has drawn the attention of the Government to the deplorable state of the manure beds in the Protectorate and has suggested an Advisory Committee to investigate present conditions and propose remedies.

The Ryland Manufacturing Paper Mills Co., Ltd. has just placed an order in this country for eleven 400-h.p. synchronous induction motors for use in Northern Rhodesia. The machines are required to drive the ball mills in which the paper ore is ground in preparation for the chemical extraction processes.

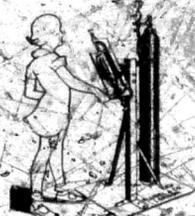

The area planted up with cotton in the Eastern Province of Uganda amounted to 405,605 acres at the end of August last, compared with 419,922 in 1929, according to a statement issued by the Department of Agriculture. The planted cotton area in the Buganda Province totalled 223,010 acres, against 199,835 acres in 1929.

I.M. Eastern African Dependencies Trade and Information Office states that approximately 66,000 tons of sisal had been sold for export and shipped from Kenya at the end of July last. This figure included six full charter shipments of about 5,000 tons each, of which four were sent to America, one to South Africa and one to London with options.

Imports into Tanganyika Territory during July included: Cigarettes, 35,040 lbs.; cement, 1,121 tons; galvanised iron sheets, £3,700; and cotton piece goods, £80,000. Exports from the Territory during the same period included coffee, 1,720 tons; sisal, 5,237 tons; groundnuts, 2,905 tons; hides, 4,273 cuts; gold, 1,058 ozs.; ivory, valued at £3,967; and diamonds, 24 carats, valued at £1,411.

At a recent session of the Convention of Associations of Nyasaland a resolution was passed expressing alarm at the rapid increase in the production of fire-cured tobacco; and the opinion that any increase over the present production figures would result in a slump which would react on the Native Grower and have a serious effect on the future development of the industry. The Convention urged that the Native grower should be watched by Government that increased production might mean low prices, with the possibility of having unsold tobacco left on his hands.

NEW WINCHESTER MOTOR YANER

Some particulars of the Winchester motor vessel

RENDERED the Winchester motor vessel's new luxury motor vessel "Winchester" Castle leaves Southampton on her maiden voyage to the Cape... Many of our readers, particularly those living in the Rhodesias or Nyasaland, are likely to travel in the future by this latest addition to the fleet of a company which has recently given concrete proof of enterprise and stamina...

Spacious Public Rooms

The embarkation deck contains a spacious railed half and was adapted from an eighteenth century model in Bath Pump Room... The dining saloon is a really magnificent apartment, eleven feet high, ornamented by damask and velvet... The main staircase at the forward end of the saloon is in the square plan, so typical of old Dutch works... Beyond the staircase is the library, a bright room, with three windows, view on to the Port and starboard lines and forward end... The old opera house at the forward end of the promenade deck is a veritable gem, so derived from the whims of the sea and raised a couple of feet above the general level... Forward of the main staircase to the promenade deck is a quiet, painted, seventeenth century Dutch saloon and writing room, decorated in soft tones of rose and blue.

Grand Hall is a magnificent room, many believe to be the finest apartment in the world... The Platin, Mahogany and Rubens are the largest by the designer, while the generous size and height of the room would seem to give our guests a view of the most magnificent and sumptuous interior... The many objects of art are arranged casually, but give the impression of a hall inherited from a family, well-mellowed by the occupation of many generations of a cultured family, all of whom have had something of interest to their home... Passing through the combined arcade, one crosses two halls, a typical Dutch rich oak, walling with mouldings of ebony and tortoiseshell, and surmounted by Spanish leather. The starboard hall leads to a smoking room and the comfortable furniture associated with a gentlemen's club. Again the Winchester connection is suggested by a reproduction of King Arthur's Round-Table.

Cabin Accommodation

The first class suite rooms are situated on the upper deck... The second class accommodation is of a very high class character... The dining saloon is of modern design with long tables, in artistic light tones, and with mahogany furniture... There is a special children's play room, decorated similarly to the main saloon... The smoking room, lounge, entrance, veranda, etc., are also decorated and furnished in a very superior manner... For the third class passengers, a public room, including dining saloon, lounge, smoking room, shop, etc.

The two first class cabins... Each cabin has a wash basin... The treatment of colour and furniture is varied; one cabin has grey velvet furniture, blue walls, with red curtains and upholstery, another has oak furniture, warm pastel walls relieved with oak paneling and beams, and a very cozy one having oak paneling and beams... The second class accommodation is of a very high class character... The dining saloon is of modern design with long tables, in artistic light tones, and with mahogany furniture... There is a special children's play room, decorated similarly to the main saloon... The smoking room, lounge, entrance, veranda, etc., are also decorated and furnished in a very superior manner... For the third class passengers, a public room, including dining saloon, lounge, smoking room, shop, etc.

TANGANYIKA'S NEW GAME WARDEN.

Last week East Africa commented categorically on the absence of official reports from the Game Department of Tanganyika. We now learn that Brigadier General I. L. Batja, D.S.O., is shortly to assume the post of Game Warden in that Territory, and that after his appointment annual reports of the Game Department will be published, as is the rule in similar Departments in all the other East African Dependencies. General Batja has been in command of the Bevozevo Brigade, India, since 1927; he was educated at Christ Down School, Bath, and Sandhurst, and entered the Indian Army in 1895. He has seen much service on the North-West Frontier of India, and during the War he was engaged in Mesopotamia, Palestine, and Syria. He is a noted big game hunter.

Kolynos out and kills the myriads of tooth-enemies you can't brush out. That is how Kolynos Dental Cream preserves teeth.

Kolynos does MORE. It stimulates the gums, to help to prevent pyorrhoea. It washes away that cloudy grey coating that dims the teeth, leaving them lustrously white. Then there is still the important fact that Kolynos does twice as far as any other dentifrice.

Only half an inch is required for thorough brushing.
