It is little over 50 years since the first rails were laid of the railway which is to-day the East African Railways and Harbours Administration, operating 1,930 route miles of metre gauge rail, 1,000 miles of lake and river steamer services, 1,716 miles of road motor services, and the four ocean ports of Mombasa, Dar es Salaam, Tanga and Lindi.

Another port is at present under construction at Miwara in Southern Tanganyika for the groundnut scheme, in connexion with which many miles of new railway have been built.

In these 50 odd years the Railway has been a chief agent in the amazingly rapid progress of the territories it serves, and this progress continues. In 1949 the freight tonnage was 127 per cent. heavier than it was 10 years previously, and passenger journeys had increased in the same time by 300 per cent.

The Railway, proud of its past record, and alive to its present responsibilities, is sparing no effort to maintain and speed the development of East Africa.

Moderator? Criticisms of Groundnut Scheme

Comments on Incompetence, Stupidity, and Irresponsibility

THE GROUNUTS PROJECT after all the false imagination and many people came to Tanganyika with high motives to put their brains, their expert knowledge, their heart and soul into it, believing that the scheme was worth serving.

These men have been betrayed by others; many of them in high places, who have been guilty of stupidity or corruption or both; and who were apparently more concerned with reaping political or financial benefits for themselves and their friends from the scheme than with reaping groundnuts to meet the world's needs. The extraordinary thing is that so many of them succeeded in doing the first while failing lamentably to do the second. Over £4 million pounds have been spent. Some £15 millions remain. The scheme, as planned, was a very big enterprise. At Kongwa there is room for 15 units of 49 square miles each—a total area rather larger than the London metropolitan area. Three of these units have been cleared—a fifth of the area. At present there is land scheduled for eight similar sized units but none has been cleared. As far back as 1924 Tanganyika produced 18,684 tons of groundnuts at a cost of £5 per ton. Produced by Africans with no modern methods and implements, I should be surprised to learn that the units with their planters, combining harvesters, and millions of capital, have harvested and exported anything approaching that amount.

Blundering of Public Men

When all allowances are made for difficulties of terrain and climate, for the blunders of ignorance, the cost of finding out what would and what would not work, the problems which had to be tackled by means of trial and error, there remains much loss that must be put down to a disastrous combination of incompetence, stupidity, reckless over-confidence, and sheer irresponsibility squandering of public money.

The first one area caused much trouble and sore throats. Mechanically driven water sprinklers were sent out to lay the dust—in ignorance apparently of the fact that the area was desperately short of water even for cooking and washing. The sprinklers were never used.

The sunflower crop, tried as an alternative to groundnuts, has been a failure. In one unit it could have been successful. Although their own research people warned them that flowers were not self-fertilizing, and must have bees, bees were not introduced. Yet there are millions of bees in Africa, and trees scattered about the fields which could have accommodated the African type of hive.

The extent of the blundering and squandering can partly be estimated by the fact that £8 millions of surplus stores from the scheme are now for sale—from which it is hoped to get a return of £250,000.

Much more serious is the waste of man-power. Good men have been frustrated. The high motives and idealism which prompted many to give themselves to this endeavour have been wasted and disregarded. Many have returned, bitterly disappointed. The turnover in man-power must be colossal.

The Church has the duty to expose and the right to condemn lack of stewardship of God's material gifts, especially when these gifts are State moneys entrusted to a State company as public trustees. The corporation is responsible to the Government and answerable to the public. They have behaved irresponsibly, and when apparently this irresponsibility is covered over by the Government, it is the Church's plain duty to protest, and when, as in this case, the irresponsibility has most serious effects on human lives, African and European, the Church must remain silent.

Disregard of Spiritual Disruption

Bishop Stephen Neill has been taken to task for his adverse comments on the conduct of the scheme, and particularly of its disregard of the spiritual disruption which it has effected and the lack of provision to try to offset that disruption. I gather that his impression was much the same as my own—that if this scheme has blundered materially, it has blundered much more spiritually, and if those in charge have lacked a sense of responsibility in their stewardship of material resources, they have scarcely begun to have any comprehension of spiritual responsibility.

No one can be unaware of the spiritual effects upon the African of a gigantic scheme like this, which attracts Africans from as far away as Uganda and Nyasaland. Remarkably little has been done by the Overseas Food

Owing to disputes in the London printing industry, the size of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA must again be drastically reduced. No type has been set for nearly a fortnight, and late reports and editorial comments can, therefore, not be included. We apologize for these deficiencies to our readers and advertisers, on whose behalf we shall do whatever circumstances permit in the immediate future.

Corporation to help the Church to offset the destruction of spiritual values and replace with another more excellent way the old ethics which rapidly lose their sanctions in the new conditions.

My particular concern was with the spiritual provision for Europeans engaged in the scheme. Here the scheme has certainly been parsimonious: the O.F.C. has provided half the stipend of one chaplain! For a similar number of people in His Majesty's Forces the State would provide about 10 chaplains. In this scheme, for those who may be physically well but exposed to all kinds of spiritual disease, the State has neglected its duties.

Tribute to Private Enterprise

A most unfavourable comparison may be drawn with the sense of responsibility shown by private bodies in their Colonial enterprises. The great East India Company made provision for a chaplaincy service more than 100 years ago, and to this day the tea companies in India do the same. The Imperial British East Africa Company at the beginning of this century had its own mission here in Africa. These private companies thought it worth while to spend money on the spiritual care of their people and to enlist the help of the Church.

But not so the O.F.C., a corporation of a Christian State, with its larger resources, and larger expenditure. At Urambo and Kongwa the keen Christians have had to see to the building of a small place of worship for themselves, without the help of the O.F.C. They have had to buy the materials from the O.F.C. and have even had to pay for the lorries bringing the stones. They built the little church literally with their own hands. The cost was about £600. When I was at Kongwa they were wondering if they could instal electric light at a cost of about £20, which they would have to find themselves.

I could not help contrasting the attitude of the O.F.C. in this matter with the attitude of the East African Power and Lighting Co., Ltd., a private concern, who are installing the electric light in our new St. Andrew's Church in Nairobi free of cost, to a value of about £500. The E.A.P.L. is possibly one-hundredth part of our constituency. The church in Kongwa serves only O.F.C. personnel. Yet the good will and helpfulness of the one are in sharp contrast to the indifference of the other.

Churches Not Exempt from Criticism

Nor can the Churches be exempt from the charge of neglect. The two great national Churches have both been failing in recognizing that here was a clear call to go with their people into these areas and place their long experience at the service of thousands of Africans who have poured into these areas from all parts. The Churches have done this with success, satisfaction, and as a combined operation in other parts of Africa, notably in the Copperbelt of Northern Rhodesia, where they were working with the co-operation and support, not of the State, but of private enterprise.

In the grandiose scheme the Church of Scotland is not fulfilling its mission to its own people or to Africans. The Church of England has received little financial support and less encouragement from the O.F.C., and has been timidly grateful for the little it has received—and has not accepted responsibility for disclosing the waste of men and of money so recklessly squandered; a responsibility all the greater as they are almost the only independent observers on the spot.

The British Cabinet are implicated in the failures of the Minister responsible, and must take their share of the blame for the conduct or misconduct of this scheme. There have been times that mismanagement of public funds on this scale would have meant the resignation of a Minister, and even the fall of a Government. These are not times when Governments—and this is true of any party—have such a high sense of public responsibility as to discharge Ministers who have failed in their trust. There has been culpable failure. Yet many still maintain that the scheme need not fail even yet if only it were not so deplorably mismanaged.

Here on a large scale you have had brought to bear on one of the problems of our lives—that of the world's food supply—the best brains, the latest machinery, the scientific knowledge of men's searching minds, the marvels of modern engineering, the wealth of a nation; for it is much too facile to say that they didn't have enough brains, enough machines, or enough money. They have changed the brains and the machines and thrown good money after bad, and the results have been inconsiderable compared with the efforts expended.

The lesson is that, if the spiritual factors are neglected, the operation will fail. They have been neglected. Personal relationships have been bad, and have, if anything, got worse as the scheme proceeded. In a scheme which above all demanded co-operation between board and management and men, co-operation is in notably short supply. A sense of fellowship together in a great matter, if it ever existed, has certainly not been fostered, but has been dissipated.

Houses, clubs, and drinks (cheaper, I was told, than anywhere else in the world) have been provided. An excellent medical service, on which half a million pounds has been spent, has been organized. But you can care for men's material needs, and if you neglect the things of the spirit, the qualities that make for fellowship, it will achieve nothing. You may make something out of the wilderness, but you will not add to the happiness of men or to the sum of the world's good. The note of caring for men has been absent; hence the notable lack of harmony that exists in the groundnut areas.

Failure to Co-operate with Nature

Here men are working with nature. That means working with God, but those responsible for the scheme have regarded God as irrelevant to the problem—in which they have merely reflected the attitude of their time. Having failed to co-operate with nature, they are puzzled and surprised when nature does not co-operate with them.

The lesson that we have to learn in humility is that all our human enterprises fail to satisfy our hopes and dreams and frustrate our best plans, even when we achieve our plans, unless we work with God. This scheme is an object lesson for modern man. This is God's world. It is not our oyster, to be opened up to yield its riches by the force of man's power alone. Here the blessing of God has not been sought and it has not been found.

United Party Majority Down

AS REPORTED BRIEFLY in our last issue, the United Party in Southern Rhodesia retained the Bulawayo North-seat in the by-election necessitated by the appointment to the Bench of Mr. T. H. W. Beadle, formerly Minister for Native Affairs, whereas the total poll was up by nearly 200, the United Party's majority shrank from 666 to 36, the figures being as follows: C. J. Hatty (United Party), 507; J. S. McNeillie (Rhodesia Labour Party), 471; E. A. Smart (Liberal), 354. The figures in the 1948 general election were: T. H. W. Beadle (U.P.), 905; Mrs. E. J. Davies (Labour), 239. There was then no Liberal candidate.

Twenty houses of Southern Rhodesia's first housing scheme for Coloureds have been built in Salisbury by the National Housing Board. Bulawayo and Umtali are undertaking similar schemes for Coloured people.

Race Relations in Colonial Africa

Mr. Creech Jones Summarizes His Views

COLONIAL GOVERNMENTS have no less a task than re-ordering the whole of the natural environment in order to create the conditions of reasonable living.

The existence of an emotional nationalism will make their work (however broadly based) very difficult. In constitutional arrangements the big stages in our own long political development have to be telescoped into short periods. Many people think genuine responsibility cannot be realized at so great a pace and that experience alone can create the kind of tradition on which democracy for its proper functioning depends.

We have been told that policy in Africa is ambiguous, that race relations are being bedevilled through fear and lack of confidence, and that a more forthright lead should come from the Government because the old sense of direction seems to be lost and everywhere corrosive suspicion is at work.

The Colonial problem for Socialists is the building up of the life of the people of a Colony so that they may be free, self-reliant, independent, and able to take their place among the free nations of the world. Disintegration of the Commonwealth is not a means to that end.

In many respects political and economic tutelage is disagreeable, particularly to the educated minorities emerging in all Colonies. Nevertheless, Britain has a moral responsibility which the Colonial peoples require and expect her to discharge. This, at bottom, is the justification of our Colonial policy.

Inducing Colonial Co-operation

Dependencies cannot remain museum-pieces in the modern world; their people now want the blessings associated with Western civilization. Their progress fundamentally depends on respect for their dignity, their confidence in our disinterested service, and the full co-operation of the people with Britain in the tasks which have to be done.

The past can shape a sense achievement in orderly life, amenities, works, and services, but what has been done is slight compared with the need. The Labour Government naturally built on some of the foundations laid by our predecessors, but our initiative was demonstrated over a very wide field in which there was little to build on:

The response of the Colonial Services and the enterprise inspired in so many directions have made these years memorable; and the evidence of this period is seen in the better relations with the Colonial people, the central services built up in London to assist development, the economic services provided, the expansion of research, the provision of universities, the increase in production, the extension of trade unionism and co-operation, the provision of preventive medicine, the increase of political responsibility, the steps in local government, and a thousand and one things of a political, social, and economic character.

Yet great intractable problems have to be handled and answered before any of us can feel any complacency about the future. Brooding over Africa is the heavy scepticism that the problem of race relations can ever be solved.

*The Rt. Hon. Arthur Creech Jones, Socialist Secretary of State for the Colonies from 1946 until he lost his seat at the recent general election, has written for "Tribune" a most interesting series of articles on Colonial policy from the Labour Party standpoint. By the courtesy of the editor of that weekly review EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA is able to publish these extensive extracts.

The struggle for European supremacy and domination is before our eyes in Central Africa.

There is no amelioration of the colour bar in industry. Multi-coloured and multi-racial territories have not found the political and economic adjustments necessary for stability and progress. There is latent conflict between race groups of equal size in a number of territories. The answer in political arrangements to meet communal life has to be found.

Challenge to Statesmanship

Millions of Colonial people are illiterate and still tribal, but there is a broadening stream of educated youth who clamour to learn the work of government from their own experience. It will tax all our statesmanship to adjust the methods and machinery of government to the growing demand to balance political responsibility with social and economic growth, to win co-operation in government as development proceeds, to train technicians and administrators fast enough, and to tolerate mistakes and inefficiency in the process of creating effective local, central, and sometimes regional government.

Some difficulties we have made for ourselves by past policies. The encouragement of European settlement, the introduction of indentured labour, and the intrusion of some big plan of economic development are among the factors which break homogeneity and confuse political organization and sometimes charge public life with racial feeling to the disadvantage of a territory as a whole.

In Kenya a political formula has to be found that is adequate for Arab, Indian, European, and African. In Central Africa the issue of European domination and the rights of protected Africans have to be squarely settled almost at once.

In areas of multi-racial character, in countries where distinct races live either side by side or in close proximity, in Colonies where the indigenous people have been displaced, or where there are wide cultural gaps and experience, short-term or long-term political machinery is not easy to shape.

Finding a Formula for Democracy

Is there a point within sight where communal representation can be abandoned or the idea of common citizenship universally accepted or a formula for democracy found which recognizes both community and numbers and yet does not rest entirely on exact mathematical calculations.

It is no easy thing to work out and apply a policy which concedes political and social equality to all civilized men. The issues are intensified in the conditions where millions of men are still ignorant or tribal, alongside men of higher social development.

While adhering to the principles well established in British Colonial policy relating to basic political rights, we have tended to deal with these matters hitherto in piecemeal fashion. We have respected the rights of the majority and restrained highly socially developed minorities from exercising unlimited authority over the less developed.

But it makes for a great deal of stress and strain in the territories concerned and it is no easy matter to initiate the kind of political device which will give confidence to all races and be made to work.

A difficult experiment is going on in Northern Rhodesia now, while in Kenya, where there are big minorities of Asians and Europeans, the problem is being tackled in a different way. Britain must not let go her trust in either system.

Concepts of Justice in Native Administration

Conflict of Legal and Sociological Approaches

THE ANTIPODOSIS between institutionalized and social justice is examined in an interesting article by Mr. Roger Howman in the current issue of the Rhodes-Livingstone Journal.

Institutionalism, he points out, "is built around a concept which is nothing more than an abstraction," if that concept "sheds its vital roots in concrete human life and needs, then institutionalism continues to live in an imaginary world of its own." Even in the medical profession lack of success may come from seeing diseases described in treatises on medicine rather than patients.

"Within the sphere of the law a parallel development has been growing, and from the formal approach which defined law and deemed all phenomena falling outside the definition as irrelevant or incidental, there is increasing contact with the sociological approach, which studies law in its social context."

"This stress shifts from considering law as such to individual needs. Just as the stress is being shifted from disease to individuals. Recently the Lord Chief Justice of England said: 'It is not enough that you should do justice; you must, if you can, be manifestly observed to be doing justice.' Here is a most subtle allusion to the distinction between institutionalized justice and social justice, between the abstraction and the concrete reality."

"In an analysis of bureaucratic thought Dr. Mannheim has pointed out that:

"The sphere of activity of the official exists only within the limited laws already formulated. He takes it for granted that the specific order prescribed by the concrete law is equivalent to order in general. He does not understand that every rationalized order is only one of many forms in which socially conflicting irrational forces are reconciled. When faced with the play of hitherto unharvested forces, as, for example, the eruption of collective energies in a revolution, it can conceive of them only as momentary disturbances. It tries to find a remedy by means of arbitrary decrees rather than meet the political situation on its own grounds. It regards revolution as an unwanted event within an otherwise ordered system and not as the living expression of fundamental social forces on which the existence, preservation, and development of society depend."

Tendency to Generalize

"In this extract we find set out a clear enunciation of the tendency to generalize for the whole society from the partial perspective of thought developed by some specific situation within the social process. The same phenomenon operates in the legalistic style of thought which identifies institutionalized justice with social justice."

"However, in a world whose very contradictions are impelling more and more people to reflect on the social and to pass judgment on what was formerly taken for granted, there is ample evidence of the emergence of new trends of thought and action that may soon achieve a measure of the stability, perfection of technique, and social valuation or prestige that is at present associated with established institutions. Such a development in the sphere of justice is our theme."

"A most clarifying statement of this new judicial perspective is to be found in a lecture given by Mr. R. Hopkin Morris, former metropolitan magistrate of North London on 'The Social Services and the Court' in 1935. He strikes directly at the very designation 'administration of justice,' which in itself is responsible for much of the confusion of thought about justice, and is a laconic example of institutionalism. He said: inter alia:

"Sometimes, our courts are referred to as courts of justice. That is precisely what they are not. They are courts of law. What justice is one does not know. It is one of those indomitable ends the human mind is always questing, but a man can, with reasonable diligence, know what the law is. Therefore they are courts of law."

Courts of law are not in any sense ethical, nor are they concerned in any way with maintaining the good of society—putting that proposition in an extreme form. A court of law can only perform a lawful or unlawful act. The distinction is fundamental, and if you blur the boundary line . . . you have destroyed the function of the court. It cannot perform its properly.

"This does not mean that the law has no regard for moral issues. Moral issues come in when the law is framed, framed in accordance with what is viewed as morally sound and good, but once it has received the Royal assent it ceases to be ethical, and magistrates in applying it fall outside the pale of the good."

Such a forceful assertion of the implication of institutionalized justice that makes of it nothing more or less than the law must have shocked institutionalized attitudes that conceived of their functions on the level of being the custodians of public welfare and justice, but that it goes to the heart of the antithesis between law and individual, between institutionalized justice and social justice, is strikingly apparent.

"To meet this antithesis the demands of the law are to be confined to its exponents, and the claims of the community in the United Kingdom are vested in the probation service.

Adjusting Irreconcilable Elements

"The Lord Chief Justice's dictum about 'doing justice' and the manifest observation of justice-being done is seen to involve irreconcilable elements that can be adjusted only by a highly superficial view of the social context of the law—we discern the fundamental force that lies behind the emergence of the probation movement and the social services of the courts.

"The implications for Native administration in Africa of the underlying social forces or tendencies we have sought to unravel are immense. If in the homogeneous social process that is England, with its organically founded institutions, the extent of this cultural lag is such as to prevent development and perspective we have outlined in this paper, how are we to comprehend the nature, let alone the extent, of the lag between institutionalized and social justice in African communities if and where the legal perspective dominates Native administration?

"One feature of this lag is the conflict and sequence of change that determined the adoption of the assessor system in Southern Rhodesia.

Powers of Magistrates

So far back as 1899 a select committee appointed to consider the system of Native Administration recommended that: 'the powers exercised by Native commissioners should be vested in the magistrates; that the magistrates should be assisted in Native administration by officers who would act as interpreters and collectors.'

"In 1910 a board of inquiry into the Civil Service called forth the following comment from the Chief Native Commissioner. The board made some drastic suggestions as to the reorganization of the work of this department. I will content myself with reiterating the opinion that the day has not yet come when it would be wise to put the chief power of the district in the hands of a man chosen for his legal attainments rather than for his proficiency in Native work."

"In the Legislative Assembly of 1925 the Minister for Native Affairs felt urged to say that: 'If you turn Native commissioners into magistrates, to a large extent they may lose that intimate and close and personal touch which they have with the Natives to-day and which is a matter of very great importance in the immediate future when dealing with the Native question'."

"These are simply the more articulate arguments against a cumulative trend towards more and more emphasis on legal attainments, outlook, and principles in Southern Rhodesia. The same trend, operating in the sphere of Colonial Civil Administration in Africa, was responsible for the Bushe Report of 1934 on the Administration of Justice in East Africa; but it aroused such a weight of powerful opposition that the British Government shelved its proposals.

"A survey of the Bushe Report and the controversy it stimulated reveals the same fundamental antithesis between the institutional and the social perspective. If the concept of the law as announced by Hopkins Morris is retained in mind this controversy is made explicable; further, the influence of the mores penetrates and influences the controversy, in much the same manner as it did in the social career of the jury system of Southern Rhodesia.

Bushe Report

"The main thesis of the Bushe Report was directed towards restricting and circumscribing the functions of the administrative officials while enlarging the scope of the trained legal mind in the interests of a more perfect administration of justice (institutionalized). The report stated that:

"It is argued that an administrative officer's unfamiliarity with the 'technicalities of law and legal procedure' is more than compensated for by his knowledge of the Native law and custom of the tribe among whom he is working, of their language, outlook on life, and environment. Such arguments are, in our opinion fundamentally unsound. A district officer is an administrative officer first and foremost. Law and order in his district must be maintained. It is of equal importance that judicial work should be performed by persons with adequate experience, who are trained in the weighing of evidence and the requirements of legal proof."

Such arguments are, of course, unsound within the framework of thought that identifies institutionalized justice with justice. Much of the controversy and its arguments would disappear if the word justice could be banished from it. Comments must also be made on the bureaucratic and legalistic styles of thought that would restrict administration to law and order; if there is law and order, then all the rest of life is in order too. This mentality is reminiscent of the joke about the specialist in the medical world, who is reputed to have said: "The operation was a splendid success. Unfortunately the patient died."

African Trade Unions

THAT AFRICAN TRADE UNIONS in Southern Rhodesia should be recognized by the Government was urged in a recent address to the Bulawayo National Affairs Association by Mr. W. L. Makhalolo, of the African Welfare Society.

A large audience heard him affirm that "if we are to increase our industrial activity we should open the doors for the entry of Africans into semi-skilled and skilled trades. If we do not, the African will not be able to contribute much to the national income. Some apprenticeship for trades should be introduced."

Aiding Economic Expansion

Recognition of the African trade unions would, he said, not undermine the living standards of Europeans, for if Africans could contribute more, the resultant expansion would create more jobs and more money.

A sincere effort was being made by municipalities and other bodies to improve the position of urbanized Africans, but the time had come when those in authority should provide areas in the towns where Africans who were completely urbanized could settle down with their families.

The speaker advocated some form of unemployment insurance for Africans in industry, greater recreation, and better cultural facilities for after-work hours.

Marshal Graziani's Release War Crimes in Ethiopia

MARSHAL GRAZIANI'S RELEASE from prison under the Italian amnesty will arouse great anger in Ethiopia, for his administration as Viceroy during the Fascist occupation was so harsh that his name was put at the head of the Ethiopian list of war criminals. At his trial in Italy the sole charge against him was of continued participation in the war on the side of Germany after the Italian Government had surrendered and agreed to facilitate the operations of the Allies; but Ethiopia has on several occasions protested to the United Nations at the failure to bring Graziani to trial.

Bombing of Undefended Villages

Two of the gravest accusations are that he ordered (1) the systematic extermination of Ethiopian notables and (2) the bombing and gassing of undefended villages after Mussolini had officially declared his war of aggression to be at an end, and the Ethiopian authorities are said to hold damning documents bearing his signature in regard to both actions. After an attempt had been made on his life, in February, 1937, Italian troops were turned loose in Addis Ababa to wreak whatever measure of vengeance they could exact; and some accounts alleged that about 30,000 men, women, and children were killed within three days.

S. Rhodesian Trade

SOUTHERN RHODESIA'S EXPORTS in the first half of this year reached the record value of £19,581,000, compared with £13,928,316 in the corresponding period last year. Exports to the Union increased from £1,048,000 to £2,053,000, mainly in clothing, enamelware, timber and cotton piece goods. Imports valued at £27,111,553 were up only 9%.

Colonial Students in Great Britain

No Likelihood of Increase

THE DIRECTOR OF COLONIAL STUDENTS has informed Colonial Governments that there is no likelihood that the number of overseas students admitted to universities in the United Kingdom will be increased in 1951-52, and in medicine and science the difficulties of finding places may become more acute.

There may be vacancies for a few well-qualified candidates up to the end of March next, and applications must reach the Director of Colonial Students in London not later than January 31. Candidates for training courses under the Colonial Development and Welfare scheme should apply before November 30.

The statement emphasizes that "it is most undesirable that would-be candidates for admission should go to the U.K. unannounced, and disappointed in the hope of obtaining admission to universities and colleges." Tutorial institutions as well as universities are overburdened with long waiting lists of non-priority candidates, and it is almost impossible to gain admission without notice. Students should therefore be dissuaded by every means from going to Britain for higher education until they are assured that a place is available for them."

New Garden Township

THE FIRST HOMES in the proposed garden township of Mabelteign, near Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, should be ready for occupation this month. Some 1,500 council houses are planned and Brigadier E. G. Cope, Controller of the National Housing Board, has described the scheme as "the biggest housing development plan in Rhodesia, possibly in Africa." Shops, schools, recreational facilities, and other social services will be part of the township, and most of the houses will consist of three bedrooms, lounge, veranda, dining room, kitchen, bathroom, with Native quarters and half an acre of garden. The houses take only six weeks to complete, and the building target, to be achieved later in the year, is 16 a week.

N. Rhodesia's Trade Records

Fourfold Increase in Five Years

NEW TRADE RECORDS have been established by Northern Rhodesia this year, imports and exports both showing marked increases.

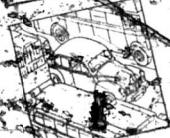

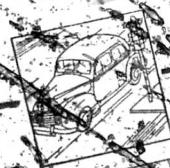

Exports for the first half of 1950 totalled £21,750,000, compared with £17,500,000 and £14,300,000 in the comparable periods of 1949 and 1948 respectively. Imports at nearly £12,500,000 were over £2,500,000 greater than in the first six months of 1949, and £5,250,000 above the 1948 figure. In five years the territory's volume of trade has been multiplied by four.

Figures for mineral production also reveal new records. Between January and June 1950 451 tons of blister copper, valued at £14,392,301, were produced, the corresponding figures for 1949 being 100,097 tons £12,914,235. Output of electrolytic copper was 32,659 tons (£4,733,467), compared with 21,686 tons (£4,229,724) in the first half of last year.

Imports from Commonwealth

Northern Rhodesia's trade with Britain is growing both relatively and absolutely, and 84.9% of all the territory's imports came during the first half of this year from Commonwealth countries, compared with 79.3% in the corresponding period of 1949. Supplies from foreign sources declined in value from 20.7% to 15.1%.

More than a quarter of the imports were from South Africa, the principal items being mining machinery, foodstuffs, blasting compounds, slaughter cattle, and motor vehicles. One-eighth of the imports were from Southern Rhodesia, the principal commodities being cigarettes (£210,000) and coal (£160,000), followed by sugar, clothing, beer and spirits, asbestos cement sheets, machinery, groundnut oil, and boots and shoes.

Mr. Alfred Jones on Race Relations

the world draws together in physical unity, assumptions of racial equality or superiority only create friction. This is not to deny the values of tradition and maturity in a people. The best that Britain has much to offer in the way of leadership, and technical and material assistance to people without our knowledge and experience, or that in many respects our values and ways of civilized living are superior.

Maybe the notion of equality cannot be worked out to its completion for some time ahead, but our steps to it must be unfaltering. Labour must base its policy on this bedrock—the right of all men to civilization and citizenship. Security and peace are dictated in this world unless we co-operate irrespective of creed, race, or colour.

We cannot afford to talk of partnership and practise race superiority. Indeed, at this phase of world development the distinctions based on race are irrelevant; science and economics have changed the world; and the cultural legacy to which all people have contributed is the common heritage of all men.

Discrimination

Of course, a degree of discrimination is sometimes necessary to safeguard the weak against the knowledge and strength of races of superior social and cultural advantages, but in practice has not been limited in this way. Some of our difficulties to-day are due to such failure. Colour-bars, land alienation in some Colonies, and political supremacy are problems which embitter relations and give Colonial Governments great uneasiness.

If Africa the ingredient of race as tending to encourage a fire which may have disastrous consequences, Colonial Governments have given a good deal of thought to their legislation and administration to eliminate the laws and practices which offend the dignity and self-respect of the African. This is less in these fields and much more in social conventions that other trouble lies. Legislation will not prevent the colour-bar in the Copperbelt.

But Governments can help, as they have been doing, in controlling land alienation, improving labour arrangements and welfare (e.g., contracts of labour, abolishing forced labour and penal sanctions, modifying colour-bars, helping migratory labour, etc.), conserving civil liberties and Native rights, basing registrations and identity on non-racial lines, and taking significant steps in regard to the political status of non-Europeans.

Of course there are differences between the various peoples we class collectively as Africans. But they will not consent to remain mere hewers of wood in West Africa under European guidance in mining industries, they are training for technical supervision, reasonable work, technical and trade schools have been established, skills are being taught, and European enterprise has prospered from African labour.

Industrial Colour-Bar

But in Northern Rhodesia there is a colour-bar. Its existence is due more to the European workers than to the mining management. Discrimination in the use of skill in reward in status is enforced by the white trade unionists. It is an intractable problem which the efforts of commissioners, British trade unions, Government officials and Ministers have failed to solve. Any solution must carry the good will of the European technicians and others, but the refusal to offer that good will will inevitably stimulate the African workers to hostility and trouble.

There is also the danger of European claims in respect of both industrial and agricultural enterprise being driven forward to the prejudice of African development and African rights.

Striking the right balance between European settlement and enterprise on the one hand and a slower and less spectacular advance of Africans on the other is no easy matter when development is of primary importance to meet the needs of the increasing population and to provide the health, education and welfare services which are essential for the African population. These difficulties are increasing in urgency and importance in Northern Rhodesia and Tanganyika to-day and occur throughout East and Central Africa.

Kenya's Experience Cannot Be Repeated

In Kenya, where we are more familiar with the problem, the long-term answer still eludes us. But in no other territory can our experience in Kenya be repeated. The days of land alienation and segregation have gone, and the problems of improved farming of agricultural and industrial enterprise must be thought out anew.

Nor is there any hope of African acquiescence in segregation in Southern Rhodesia. It will be hard enough to maintain in Kenya—but I believe—that Colony the position of amicably the right use of the lands already held by Africans, and any great extension of African lands. But already the Government recognizes the importance of extension.

I do not think we can avoid in Africa to-day the expectancy of representation on the basis of race. We would hamper political progress if we abolished communal representation. Nor need we think that democracy is merely the counting of heads or that Western political machinery is the most suitable for African territories. What we have to be certain about is that the African moves to a better and more civilized living, and that he is able to advance to full citizenship with no more difficulties than are imposed on other men.

NEWS ITEMS IN BRIEF

Land is said to have been bought in Southern Rhodesia for the purpose of attracting Afrikaner emigration from South Africa to the Colony under the auspices of a company the directors of which will be prominent members of the Nationalist Party in South Africa.

Arriving New Settlers

The funds of the Kenya European Agricultural Settlement Board, which are now fully committed, have assisted 181 tenant farmers and 29 persons under the assisted ownership scheme. It is hoped that limited assistance will be available to fifteen settlers by the end of 1952.

Seven boys were admitted to hospital recently after being injured by an explosion in the hostel at Imeson School, Gatoroma. C.I.D. officers believe that the explosion was caused by stones being thrown at an old Indian anti-personnel bomb found by one of the boys and taken to school to show his friends. Two of the boys had serious eye injuries.

Building works authorized but not yet begun in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia's capital, will cost over £500,000, said Councillor R. M. SUDAN

COTTON:

The association between Egypt and cotton dates from the earliest days of that ancient country and woven cotton has clothed its inhabitants ever since the time of the Pharaohs. Later, in the first century A.D., Pliny the Elder wrote that "the upper part of Egypt produces a shrub which bears a fruit like that of the bearded nut; from the interior of this is taken a wool for weaving and none is comparable to it in softness and whiteness."

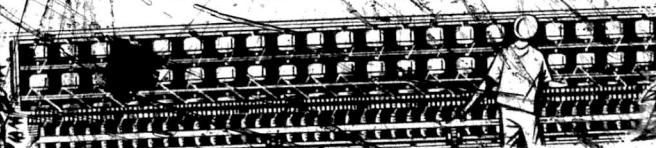

Despite this long association, it was not until 1820 that Egypt set out to produce cotton in the quantities required by European manufacturers, whose potential output had been enormously increased by the inventions of the spinning mule, the power loom and the cotton gin. The year 1821 saw the first shipment of Egyptian cotton to England. The shipment was only 100 bales—but from this small beginning the export of cotton has become the mainstay of the Egyptian economy.

Welfare Work in Kenya

Vital Need for Leaders

WELFARE WORK IN KENYA, in which persons of all races, officials and non-officials participate, are reviewed in the annual report for 1949 of the Colony's Welfare Organization.

"The majority of the work," says the report, "still falls upon the willing horse, and he is almost always a European." This work must be shared. Never have we stood in greater need of leaders of youth—African leaders. Many Africans do appreciate the need for directing the interest of the African youth into healthy channels, and give enthusiastic support to the first suggestions as to how they could help; but enthusiasm tends to wane when it is found that this type of work so often means the giving of regular unpaid service and advice, which very often at first appears to be unappreciated, at hours which are somewhat inconvenient, and performing work which is itself humble and slow to show results.

The scout and guide movements provide opportunities of improving racial relations. Scouting has been resumed at the Prince of Wales School and St. Mary's School, while new packs and troops have been formed at the Duke of York's Parklands, Nakuru schools and at Kenton College. This is important, as the scouts look to Europeans for many of their leaders and scoutmasters.

European scouts of all ranks number 561, Asian 981, and African 3,164. One European scout qualified for the King's Badge, the highest honour attainable in the movement. Five Africans qualified for the King's Scout Badge and Royal certificate, the first Kenya African scouts to be so honoured, and they were only 15 years of age, against the normal age of 18 in Great Britain. Four new cub packs were formed during the year at the Indian Government school in Nairobi.

Guides increased by two European and six African companies and two Asian packs.

Farmers' Clubs in African Schools

"Several African schools," the report continues, "are attempting to establish young farmers' clubs, and two such clubs for European youths are very active. The Y.M.C.A. recently started a boys' club with a membership of 40, but its existence is entirely dependent on the great enthusiasm of the European officer. Despite numerous approaches little effective help has come from the African community."

A conference of 200 Africans elected at their occasional barazas, including 40 women, was held in Mombasa, where during a day and a half addresses were given by European and African speakers and a roll of "true men and women of good will" was started.

In Nairobi encouragement has been given to numerous societies and clubs for Africans, the most popular being dancing clubs. Africans still prefer to keep membership on a tribal basis, which accounts for the maintenance of 10 African social clubs in the town. An African debating society supported by the municipality holds regular meetings.

Described as an experiment in youth welfare is the appointment of a district officer to be in charge of the mofar in the Massai reserve. His object is to win the confidence of the tribe and seek to interest the young men in activities which are of value to their community.

At the end of the year there were 69 community centres, of which 63 were supported by local Native councils and two by missions. Nine others were being built. There are also four established in European areas by members of the district council or by groups of farmers making a joint effort. Land was given and a hall, canteen, shop, and a market were built. The shop and stalls are rented to Africans and an African supervisor is in charge.

As to charitable associations, the British Legion assists ex-Servicemen and women of all races and their dependants financially and with accommodation. Its other activities include an employment agency and the publication of a bulletin.

The East African Women's League, a non-political body with a membership of 1,000 European women, has 41 branches in the Colony and three in the United Kingdom. Helans of the

The League of Mercy assist European women and children and disposes of considerable funds every year in the relief of distress.

The Salvation Army cares for destitute persons of all races and for the blind.

Teacher-training centres in the Mwanza and Central Provinces are designed to instruct good village women who will make good teachers. During a two-year course the girls do their own housework, laundry, and gardening, and are taught domestic subjects. There is also a health centre where the girls act as assistants to the nursing sister in charge.

The spinning and weaving centre in Kericho trains African girls to be teachers in the many similar centres throughout the Nyanza Province. This venture has attracted many pupils from the European farms in the neighbourhood, and is encouraged by the farm owners' wives, who give both financial support and personal services in supervision. There are other such centres in Kisumu and Nairobi, the latter run by the municipality.

Case against a Commission

DR. RITA HINDEN has written in The Times:

"Surely the time is past when impartial commissions or Select Committees of the Houses of Parliament (as your correspondents suggest) can settle the very delicate problems of race tension in East Africa. The only way the separatacholic communities in these countries can live together is through compromise and the removal of mutual fears and suspicions—the fear of Africans that they will be dominated by the Europeans and their land taken from them; the fear of the Europeans that by sheer force of numbers the Africans will swamp their white civilization; the suspicion of the Indians that they will be forced out of existence."

No committee or commission, however brilliant and wise, can unravel a situation like this. Whatever it proposes will suit some and not suit others; it will have no power to bend men's minds into a readiness to compromise; its chief effect will undoubtedly be to exacerbate the already sharp differences as the whole sorry history of commissions of inquiry into the race tensions in Rhodesia has reminded us.

Proposed Conference

"The only hope of success, to my mind, is to bring the representatives of the different communities together face to face and under conditions of equality round a conference table. Let them bargain with each other, and find their own compromise—as is now being done successfully in Nigeria."

"It will be a ticklish job to get effective representation for the Africans, but because things are difficult that does not mean that they are impossible; it was difficult in Nigeria too."

"East Africans—whether black, brown, or white—have in the end to inhabit one country; the sooner they confront each other, and learn to tolerate and respect each other, the better. No outside commission can be a substitute for the political conclusion of direct negotiations across a conference table."

New Settlement Scheme

ALLOCATION TO EUROPEANS of 60,000 acres of land near Songea for Virginia tobacco growing is being considered by the Tanganyika Government. There would probably be 10 farms of 500 acres each, with further possible extensions of 500 acres to each, while larger concerns would be given the opportunity of examining the remaining 40,000 acres from the point of view of creating plantations. The area is now being surveyed with a view to demarcating the small plots by the end of this year.

A deadlock over the payment of claims under the Southern Rhodesian matrilineal scheme has been ended following a meeting between the Minister of Health, Mr. W. A. G. Winterton, and the federal council of the Colony's Medical Association. As an alternative to declarations by doctors, copies of birth certificates must be presented in support of benefit claims.

Coffee's Place in Africa's Economy

Prices Rise 30% in Three Months

THE CURRENT MARKET LETTER of Messrs. Edmund Schluter and Co. states:

"Weather reports from most coffee-producing countries except Brazil, where there is disturbing news of drought, continue encouraging. Crop prospects in Africa are still generally very good indeed."

"From a trading point of view the inter-crop season has been normal. Belgian Congo have been actively bought at prices which have increased in value by some 30% inside three months. Uganda robustas which sold at 250s. per cwt. f.o.b. at the beginning of June are now 360s., and other African robustas have advanced similarly. In 1949 coffee constituted 30% by value of Angola's exports. The relative figure in Uganda during 1948, when exports were about 30,000 tons, was 22%. Prices were then round about one-quarter of those ruling now, and this year they hope for 40,000 tons from Uganda. Before the war coffee accounted for 7% of Uganda's exports. The increasing value of coffee to the African Colonial economy is not yet fully appreciated."

Sales in Kenya

"Weather reports from most of the fine arabica districts in British East Africa continue favourable, particularly from Kenya, where sales start early in October. We do not expect that the market will open at prices in line for America and Canada, though the situation may change as arrivals increase. We hope for a minimum of 80,000 bags of Kenyas and 25,000 bags of Uganda Bugishus to be available to the trade during this crop year. There is a possibility that an additional quantity from the Ministry's long-term contract purchases may be made available for export to North America, as last year, but so far no announcement has been made in this regard."

The United Kingdom is in the fortunate position of having long-term contracts with African producers at prices which are now only about three-fifths of current world values. Regular supplies here are therefore assured. Even with the most recent price increase to the consumer to 4s. per lb., it is believed that consumption will decline, thus reducing the need of purchases outside the long-term contracts. Everyone here is more impressed with the rising cost of living, of which coffee is a very small and unimportant illustration, than with the fact that elsewhere it is a great deal worse. In the U.S.A., where distribution costs are the lowest in the world, vacuum-packed coffee costs 85 cents per lb. (5s. 7d.), which is below replacement cost."

According to figures published by the East African Statistical Department, between August, 1939, and August, 1948, the Nairobi COST-OF-LIVING index rose by 83%.

During the same period there was no permanent increase in ELECTRICITY TARIFFS throughout Kenya, and only in November, 1948, was The East African Power and Lighting Company Limited compelled by soaring costs to amend certain tariffs by what were, even then, most modest percentages.

By any standard, the part played by the Electrical Supply industry in the development of East Africa entitles The East African Power and Lighting Company in Kenya, and its Associated Companies in Tanganyika, to a worthy place among the pioneers of progress in these Territories.

It is little over 50 years since the first rails were laid of the railway which is to-day the East African Railways and Harbours Administration, operating 2,930 route miles of main line railway, some 6,000 miles of light railway, river steamer services, 1,710 miles of road motor services, and the four ocean ports of Mombasa, Dar es Salaam, Tanga and Lindi.

Another port at present under construction at Mtwarra in Southern Tanganyika for the grandiose scheme in connexion with which many miles of new railway have been built.

In these 50 odd years the Railways has been a chief agent in the amazing progress of the territories it serves, and this progress continues. In 1949 the freight tonnage was 127 per cent heavier than it was 10 years previously, passenger journeys had increased in the same time by 300 per cent.

The Railway, proud of its past record, and alive to its present responsibilities, has no time to lose in speeding the development of East Africa.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

WE CANNOT AFFORD to talk of partnership and practise race superiority, said Mr. Creech Jones, lately Secretary of State for the Colonies, in a most interesting survey which, by the courtesy of

for the Socialist Party has anything like Mr. Creech Jones's knowledge and experience of Colonial affairs, and consequently there is a marked difference between his assessment of the facts and the theorizings of the uninitiated, unpractical, uninhibited extremists. The man who was in control of the Colonial Office for four years knows that there are serious obstacles in the path of progress, and that it is folly to assume, as too many of the armchair diagnosticians do, that modern machinery is all that is needed to remove them. Bulldozing politicians have already done serious harm to the colonies (in some cases, perhaps because the trouble-maker in politics nowadays often gets quick preferment, and, because of his irresponsibility, was retained in office even when his administrative incompetence has been revealed). But Mr. Creech Jones, who was conscientious in all things, will not dilute the truth even for the Labour Left Wing—which, when an electoral mischance removed him from the House of Commons, rejoiced at his departure from the Colonial Office precisely because he made his decisions in the light of the facts, not of assumptions enunciated by the party over its years in opposition.

He now reminds the Socialist extremists that it is no easy thing to evolve and apply a policy of political and social equality for all civilized men, that the reality of equality cannot be worked out to its bedrock of policy must be the right of all men to civilization and citizenship, and that the laws and practices which offend the dignity and self-respect of Africans need to be eliminated. No wise European leader, official or non-official, in Eastern Africa will quarrel with those statements. Diehards will dislike them, no doubt; but it is the diehards who, bankrupt of practical proposals themselves, revolt against the policies formulated in their own territories by settlers, business men, officials, and others who are ready to face the facts of to-day and to-morrow. The diehards are alike in at least one particular—that they insist on sailing by charts which are anything from two to three years out of date. The realists recognize that the days of sail are over; that the set of the tides has changed; that rocks which were once submerged are now a real danger to the ship of State, and that its steering requires the concentrated attention of experienced pilots.

Diehards completion for some time, and that it is expedient to

The great mass of Africans are still at a stage at which it would be meaningless to talk to them of political and social equality—or of civilization and citizenship. Indeed—

Character And Capacity and this truth is persistently disregarded by the facile theorists—the ideals behind those words have been enunciated by Europeans, not Africans; in the great majority of cases by Europeans domiciled in Africa, not at a distance but by Euro-

The London printing dispute continues, and EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA must consequently be drastically reduced in size again this week. Indeed, this issue and that of last week have appeared only because, foreseeing the probability of a suspension of the stoppage of work, we had as much text as possible set in type in advance. We again apologize to our readers and apologize for the deficiencies of this issue, and thank the many whom sympathetic messages have been peans who from their own intimate experience knew the dangers of unduly rapid change being recognized as all sensible men must do; that character and capacity are the only foundation upon which responsibility can be safely placed. That not colour is the crucial matter. When enough Africans of proven character gain the knowledge and experience which would enable them to share the public duties which tax the ability of even the best Europeans, they will not lack their opportunities. The position to-day in all the territories with in the sphere of this newspaper is not that manifestly capable Africans are denied fair scope for the exercise of their talents, but that because of the inadequate supply of suitable Africans as yet, men of unmistakably unlimited capacity are entrusted with tasks beyond their powers.

The assumption made by almost all emergent Africans, that possession of a diploma or a degree proves fitness for responsibility, and in particular equality of capacity with Europeans holding the same professional qualification, is, of course, untenable, and it is

Unreliable Assumptions. urgently necessary to get that fact really understood by Africans. Because A and B, of whatever race, take a university course together and pass the same final examination on the same day, they cannot be regarded as equal in qualities and potentialities. A may be sound, solid, hard-working, and reliable in all things, while B may be sharp, shallow, amiable shirker. While the one would be likely to bear responsibility with credit, the other would soon reveal his weaknesses. The argument applies whether A and B are Europeans or Africans. Whereas Europeans generally recognize this fact, Africans seldom do, with the consequence that they attribute to unfair racial discrimination what is no more than a prudent estimate of the deficiencies of an individual. They forget that thousands of European graduates fail to obtain highly paid posts, and that a rapidly increasing number of them want nothing better than to devote the rest of their lives to farming.

Allowing for all these difficulties, it is nevertheless true that the worst risk to the Colonial Empire would be the growth of a conviction among millions of African (and then loyal) subjects of The King that we talk of partnership, and practise race superiority. Incapable Africans go to the way of Asia—which God forbid!—the practice of partnership must expand with in West Africa, in which some of the best friends of the Africans hold that too much is being done too quickly, and we know men of very liberal outlook who after many years of service in the Sudan feel similarly about developments in that country. In other regions, however, too little is being done, with unhappy consequences not only in the territory itself, but in those on its borders, in which African agitators exploit and exaggerate this procrastination for their own self-seeking purposes. Internally, partnership being inevitable, it should be given every prospect of success, and that implies an absolute determination on the part of those responsible that so far as can be humanly arranged, the most active partners in the enterprises whether political, social, or commercial, and of whatever race, shall be trustworthy in the widest sense of the word.

Europeans and Africans are active partners in Church work in many parts of Africa, and there is abundant testimony to the valuable contributions which are often made by the Africans (the success of Sincerity Tested In Politics. this partnership being primarily due to the character of the men concerned). Many traders have had experience of happy partnerships with Africans in war. Many are working in harmony with Africans (and sometimes with Asians also) in educational, cultural, or other social movements. Finally, some of the most experienced European political leaders in Eastern Africa already speak in terms of admiration of some of the African members of the Legislative Councils (though honesty demands the admission that the number of African misfits is high enough to cause anxiety in many friendly quarters). Man being a political animal, the sincerity of the policy of partnership will be tested by Africans largely in the political field, whether the rest of the community likes it or not, and that is the strongest argument which can be advanced by those who advocate political progress in Africa at a speed which the great majority of local residents consider to be so high as to be dangerous.

Europeans in Africa have, quite rightly, insisted on being taken into partnership by the Governments, and in recent years they have increasingly demanded that that partnership should

Changes Inevitable in the Executive. be recognized by a transfer from the hands of the control of groups of Government departments. Thus former elected European non-official members of the Legislature hold portfolios and sit on the Government side of the House. In both territories a further step in that direction is expected at an early date, and similar action in Tanganyika Territory would not be surprising. In short, executive responsibility has become the test of genuine political partnership. That having been recognised in practice by Kenya (the racial problems of which are as difficult as those of any Dependency anywhere), it is clear that the time must come, and probably fairly soon, at which the Executive will cease to remain wholly European. The ideal might well be to postpone such action for some years, but the pressure of political development throughout the world is so swift that what is barely justifiable on severely practical grounds may be very wise from the standpoint of wider considerations on which the destiny of Africa may rest.

Africa has ceased to be a series of separate compartments, each of which could live very much as it wished. What happens in Nigeria, the Sudan, or Somalia is now eagerly studied by African leaders in East Africa's chief need.

The British way of life, whose influence appears to be growing rapidly. Similarly, the very different policies of the Rhodesias affect Kenya and Tanganyika. In particular, a major decision in Kenya could therefore not be taken without due regard to its repercussions elsewhere. Indeed, it could not be justified in Kenya itself unless it could be upheld in the whole East African setting, for East Africa's overriding need is a greater measure of interterritorial harmony, co-operation, and cohesion. The High Commission and Central Legislative Assembly have made no more than a fair beginning with that work, but the inter-racial contacts in that Assembly are acknowledged on all sides to have been friendly, helpful, and hopeful.

Some Africans and some Asians will at some time participate in the public affairs of East Africa on the executive level. The population structure makes that inevitable, and the problem will be to dom. The timing will be important, and one thing only can be usefully said about it now—that so great a change, but ultimately inevitable, will be who are of such a calibre that their appointment to office would command the confidence of their European and other colleagues. That condition will be fulfilled more quickly than many people think. There are African bishops, judges, doctors and others (including some chiefs and some educated young men in public life), of whom everyone thinks highly, and the number of such men of good will and ability will increase rapidly. For the experiment to be made with the wrong man or men would be tragic, for that would inflame racial feelings without the prospect of early proof that the action had been justified.

Non-Europeans of High Calibre. Select the right time for such an act of political generosity, and it was

EAST & RHODESIAN WHO'S WHO

ENTRIES FOR THE EAST AFRICAN AND RHODESIAN WHO'S WHO which is being prepared under the auspices of this newspaper are being returned in large numbers, duly completed, but many people do not seem to know how to do this.

If this badly needed reference volume is to reach its maximum usefulness, it can be only as a result of the co-operation of all whose names ought to appear. Their prompt help is therefore invoked. Will any reader who has received an entry form and not dealt with it be good enough to complete and return it immediately?

While great care has been taken in assembling the lists which form the basis of this work, the compilers recognize that many names must be missing at present, particularly as a result of human error, and more especially as people in question have been residing in East or Central Africa for only a short period as yet (though in many cases off their career elsewhere which demands the inclusion of their record). The names and addresses of people to whom, in the opinion of any reader, an entry form ought to be sent, will be welcomed.

The aim is to make this "Who's Who" as valuable as possible to the territories and all connected with them. The idea would be to include everyone who has done or is doing work of real value to the territories between the Sudan and Southern Rhodesia inclusive, whether in the official services, in public life, in one of the professions, in agriculture, commerce, industry, mining, or in culture, or other movements, and some people who may not be prominent from any of the above standpoints have a real record which ought to be chronicled or should be included on account of their prominence in sport.

The co-operation of East African and Rhodesians earnestly requested.

TANGANYIKA FISHERIES

FISHERY CONCESSIONS on Lake Rukwa, Tanganyika, have been reduced from three to one, the sole remaining concessionaire being under an obligation to provide adequate facilities for the processing of all fish produced by him and to buy all fish off his net. The maximum size of fish to be taken is 150 lbs., and the general rule is that no fishing is to be done in any lake, river, stream, or watercourse, or in any part of Lake Tanganyika, except for the development of fisheries, culture, and

Notes By The Way

Worse Than Drink

A FRIEND reminds me of some statements made by General Smuts, and suggests that they should be added to those quoted in this paper recently. The first refers this: "Ignorant men in a hurry" in Whitehall have almost brought the African to believe that politics are the white man's magic; in fact, politics are worse than drink to the primitive African". The second epitomized his faith in the Colonial mission of Great Britain, for he said: "British Colonialism was one of the most glorious and beneficent developments in the history of mankind. Nothing can take its place. Its disappearance would leave a large vacuum in the world to be filled by the pitiless men of the Kremlin."

Episcopal Prescription

AFRICANS should beware of pan-Africanism and Europeans of intolerance, said the Bishop of Southern Rhodesia when he recently addressed the synod of his diocese (about one-third of those present being Africans). Has Bishop Fugger not offered to both races in those few words prescriptions which would assure their continuing welfare? If Africans eschew pan-Africanism, they must unite common cause with the Europeans in their fight for the good of the country as a whole, and if Europeans set themselves to be tolerant, they will encourage that trust and co-operation of Africans which are essential to the present and future health of any African territory. The Bishop drove home his point in one sentence: "The doors of our churches are open to all, regardless of race, colour, and I command the growing recognition of this principle by the people generally."

Is The Price Too High?

THE MAXIMUM RETAIL PRICES of all coffee and coffee mixtures have just been increased in Great Britain by from od to 8d a pound, in consequence of the exceptionally high level of world coffee quotations. Higher charges for the beverage are certain to be made in restaurants and cafés, and I for one shall be surprised if consumption does not fall. Already the public has to pay in many establishments twice as much for a cup of coffee as it did before the war, and many cases the present price is 50% above that charged in the same establishment for a pot of tea.

Coffee or Tea?

FOR THE MOMENT, of course, coffee growers in East Africa and elsewhere are in a remarkably favourable position, but they would assuredly be well advised to do everything in their power to work towards lower, not higher, prices for the commodity. At this rate, years of hard work and the adventitious arrival of large numbers of American and Canadian coffee drinkers to raise substantially the sales of coffee in the United Kingdom, and if high prices are continued for long, they will almost inevitably lead to a sharp contraction in demand, and if large numbers of people turn back from coffee to tea, it is doubtful whether they will resume the habit of drinking coffee—at least until the beverage can again be sold at about the same price as tea.

Bearing the Palm Alone

THE REPRESENTATIVE in Kenya of the British Council writes in the annual report: "A leading African farmer... has adopted the method of regrowing crops in the wet weather after which to feed his livestock in the dry weather", and he now keeps his animals in pens to prevent their eroding the parched soil. This is doing us as a direct result of a film lecture which I gave in Machakos two years ago, and many Africans are being taken to see his garden and learn from his example. Would it be indecent to suggest that the local agricultural officers (who have been advocating such methods since well before the last war) may have done something to prepare the way for this spectacular achievement?

Kippers

A MOST ATTRACTIVE BROCHURE about Uganda for visitors and tourists has been produced by the Public Relations and Social Welfare Department. Well illustrated with a varied selection of photographs, it provides as much useful information as could well be concentrated into fewer than 100 pages, and might serve as a model to other territories. Only one statement in its pages has raised a query in my mind. Page 60 affirms that "the mormys or elephant fish is so oily from their comical long tubular snouts as extremely ill-flavoured. But is not this the fish from which the long heralded 'Uganda kipper' is to be had?"

Golden Groundnuts

AN UNEXPECTED HARVEST has surprised us to a great extent in Africa in a Northern Rhodesia. Gathering groundnut crop on a huge plot near Bulawayo, they unearthed a number of "Queen Victoria" sovereigns, dated from 1885 to 1895. Payment at a rate of 2s. 9d. per each coin was made, when the

Uganda Game Warden's Report

Mr. C. R. C. Pitman's Swan Song

A MONG ANNUAL REPORTS of Colonial Government those of Game Departments make a wider appeal to the general public than any others. It is not merely that everyone is interested in wild animals, but that game wardens may and do enrich their records with anecdotes and amusing incidents without fear of charges of irrelevance.

The Uganda report for the past year, an excellent example, is the last to be written by Mr. C. R. C. Pitman, who writes his impending retirement after 27 years' big-wrench to leave all that one has striven to build. Although a lot of game has gone for ever, there is still a lot left. It behoves us to ensure that what is left is safeguarded for posterity, for who likes once gone, is irreplaceable.

We live in a protein period, and the original Game Department of 1925, which was to a great extent an elephant control organization, has expanded into a Game and Estates Department which is destined to play an important part in the welfare of the Protectorate. This will come when the small holding farmer comes into supreme importance as a source of valuable protein.

In the second dealing with reserves and sanctuaries, we read that baboons in the Murchison Falls region of the Lake have shown an astonishing increase owing to the decrease of leopards, now largely hunted for their valuable skins, and that elephants in that area are apt to be a nuisance by refusing to give way to the traveller by car.

At Lake George it is quite ridiculous to see groups of impalas those villains of ill-reputed ferocity, peace fully grazing at the very roadside or lying down contentedly chewing the cud, not deigning to pay the slightest attention to passing vehicles.

Elephant tusks produced by licence-holders totalled 758, seven of which weighed more than 100 lb. The wastage of elephants during the year was estimated at 1,400 (1,700 to 1,948), these figures allowing for deaths from natural causes and poaching. In the course of organized hunt activities 77 were killed.

The total of 134 leopard skins exported during the year is not considered excessive, but the price is still high, the last skins realizing £15.

Popular Vocation

The post of game guard is also popular with Africans that more than 100 applicants were received for four vacancies, several of the Native staff are sons of former game guards.

Most hunger leads the Natives to send for a game guard if an elephant is reported in the vicinity, after walking for many miles to an allegedly threatened garden, he frequently finds that an elephant had been heard of five miles away the week before.

Some herds appear to be well behaved and willing to take a hint.

There was the customary movement of small herds out of the uninhabited regions of north-west Bulawayo and north-west Singo into various areas of settlement. One guard without undue exertion was able to deal with the situation as soon as the raiders heard a shot they quickly knew whence they came.

There is the other side of the picture. The game guard is called in the Budongo Forest, famous for its elephants, to prevent serious damage occurring to some replanted areas. The elephants do not seem to eat the young mahogany trees, but just nip off the buds, although in most cases this does not kill the foliage, it produces a stunted tree.

During July large numbers of elephants from the neighbouring Park Nation Albert raided Kaygora. They were dealt with effectively by one of the game guards who shot six of them thereby driving the rest back across the border. A number of elephants entered Uganda from the Sudan. A solitary bull carrying tusks of 116 lb and 115 lb crossed the Nile near Pakwach and then walked into the township. The local county chief was able to bag the big animal on his doorstep.

Young Elephant

The game ranger in Hidma caught a juvenile elephant about six months old, which after it had been in captivity a short while started browsing on its own, so it had possibly been partially weaned prior to capture. It was a young bull, which almost immediately became remarkably tame and was very friendly to everyone. Within four hours of capture he climbed up and out of the truck by himself.

He became greatly attached to his African keeper, and it was interesting to see how the young animal was prevented from straying as by day he was let loosely free in a small enclosed garden to wander as he chose. His keeper used to hang his coat on a sturdy tree and then introduce the elephant to the coat. The young animal smelt it, and agreed that it was his keeper, and stayed contentedly there until the African returned to take over his charge. No doubt the African's return to take over his charge. No doubt the African's return to take over his charge. No doubt the African's return to take over his charge. That's a keeper; and don't you dare to move from there!

He fed on double-strength dried milk and a certain amount of goats' milk when available. He drank water most frequently consuming 10 bottles a day. He also had a blue-and-white-coloured concoction, coloured from of elephant, a particularly deadly malady among all very young wild animals when in captivity, and due principally to incorrect feeding in some deficiency.

Interesting facts on the reproductive cycle of the African elephant are given:

The main points about the reproductive cycle are that breeding begins at a very early age, probably 10 to 12 years, and goes on until extreme old age. Not only is the elephant's total reproductive life of great length, but sufficient there is little evidence of the reproductive organs getting any larger. Nursing periods probably do intervene in some cases, but none showed in our material, and in general it may be said that a female elephant from the age of about 12 years, 7 feet 6 inches at the withers, is very likely to be pregnant by lactation.

The general rule is for gestation and lactation to overlap—a pregnancy of about 12 months followed by parturition, lactation, and, after something just over a year, another conception. The sucking calf will not be weaned, but perhaps another year. It would appear that the same cow may produce as many as 20 calves in a lifetime."

Mr. Perry, who has been engaged on these investigations, has presented to the British Museum 25 elephant skulls and 100 lower jaws, a collection constituting the finest series of its kind in any museum in the world.

Four-Tusked

The game warden received a photograph of a remarkable four-tusked elephant shot in the Belgian Congo. Each tusk weighed 52 lb. The peculiarity is thought to be due to a split germ.

The consecutive paragraphs describe how (a) an African landowner, who had the courage to tackle a garden-raiding elephant with a spear and killed it, was "suitably rewarded," and (b) an application by an African in Ankole to be permitted to take out special licence for elephants to be hunted with bow and arrow was refused.

No fatalities among the staff occurred during the year, though a recruit guard had a close shave when a cow elephant, which he had wounded, charged and pinned him under a tree, but the guard managed to fire again and kill the beast.

Satisfaction is expressed at a 30% increase in gorillas during the past 30 years. On the other hand, much attention is given to the destruction of baboons, which Africans are being taught to poison with considerable success.

Threats By Leopards

A party including two ladies which climbed the Ruwenzori Range had a number of articles stolen by leopards, which apparently paid at least five visits to the tents while the party were living there.

The reputedly cowardly hyena seems to be gaining courage, and has attacked persons in poorly built huts. In some areas hyenas are responsible for most of the domestic animals killed.

Buffalo are on the increase, in spite of 2000 having been killed in control measures. The Luba tribesmen usually hunt them in parties of three, each man carrying two spears. If the first hunter fails to make a clean kill, he throws his second spear, and if this is unsuccessful, throws himself on the ground to make way for the second hunter, and so on. Moyo hospital was at one time full of the human casualties caused by this method. A buffalo head with a span of 45 inches was obtained in south Mavala.

Bush pig are listed as public enemy No. 1. White rhinos are thriving under strict protection.

The report, which contains a wealth of information about the bird life and fisheries in the Protectorate, must be one of the best pieces of propaganda for the tourist trade, which has long appealed to the country. It is printed by the Government Printer, Entebbe, and published at 5s.

NEWS ITEMS IN BRIEF

There were five escapes from prisons in Zanzibar last year.

The Rhodesian ridgeback dog, having emigrated to North America, is now being trained to hunt the cougar, or Canadian mountain lion.

The Northern Rhodesian depot in Livingstone of the Central African Archives has been closed. All records of the two Rhodesias and Nyasaland are to be centralized in Salisbury.

The Kenya Game Department points out that it is illegal to buy or sell game trophies, including the skins of leopards and blue and colobus monkeys, without the written permission of the department. Several cases have occurred recently in which export permits have been requested for trophies bought from Africans leading to the confiscation of the trophies.

Municipal traffic police are needed in Southern Rhodesia in order to raise the standard of driving, said the president of the Colony's Automobile Association, Lieut.-Colonel V. H. Buxton, at the recent annual general meeting. The membership of 15,445 represents 53% of the estimated total of 26,527 motor vehicles registered in the Colony. The association has asked the Government to establish a Road Safety Council because the percentage of accidents is abnormally high.

Correspondence Courses

More than 725 European children in the six-to-14-years age group are receiving tuition through the Southern Rhodesian Government's correspondence school. Children from as far away as Nigeria, Ethiopia, Eritrea, Tanganyika, Kenya, and Angola are making use of it. Tuition is free to all children living in Southern Rhodesia, Nyasaland, and the Tati Concession; £3 is charged to pupils living outside those territories. There is a special department for backward children.

An area of 3,840 acres of Crown land at Mtwaqa, about 10 miles south of Mombasa, has been reserved for a scheme to be established by the Indian and Arab Settlement Board. In the northern section 2,100 acres suitable for annual crops, vegetables, pawpaws, bananas, etc., will be divided into approximately 1/2-acre holdings at £2 per acre payable in 10 equal annual payments. The average plot in the southern section, which is suitable only for tree crops, is 300 acres, and the price will be 10s. per acre. Government has undertaken some basic development in the area at a cost of £6,000. There will be a machinery pool, with a tractor and heavy implements, and loans for development will be arranged.

Attracting Overseas Investors Southern Rhodesia's New Booklet

"SOUTHERN RHODESIA: A FIELD FOR INVESTMENT" is the title of a new booklet issued by the Colony's Public Relations Department.

One edition has been specially designed to interest private investors in the United States and Canada, and its publication coincides with the visits which Sir Gordon Munro, Financial Advisor to the Southern Rhodesian Government, is paying to London, New York and Washington.

Oversize pocket size, the 64-page booklet is not only enhanced in layout and presentation of past official publications produced in the Colony, but is also concisely and attractively the statistics and data which prospective investors will naturally seek.

The growth of population and the rapid rise in exports, imports, and the national income are shown in simple diagram form; a few fullpage photographs are included, and a useful folded map has been added.

Preliminary chapters deal with the Colony's history and initial development; emphasizing that the 1939-45 war taught Rhodesians and the world at large that Southern Rhodesia could develop a much more diversified economy.

In metal manufacturing and engineering, the spinning or spin from home-grown cotton, the manufacture of boots and shoes and clothing, food processing, many kinds of making of building materials, from asbestos cement to all these industries noteworthy local work was made.

By the end of the war the scene was changing. New industries, many of types which would not have been thought feasible in 1939, began to spring up all over the country, particularly in Salisbury and Harare.

New Industries

Among those which have been opened in the last four to five years are confectionery factories, a small industry, flour mills, tannin works, insecticide products, clothing manufacture, textile mills, food processing, engineering works, furniture factories, manufacture of building materials, and plastics manufacturing.

The shift from the Colonial economic pattern, though by no means complete, is well under way. Southern Rhodesia is busy expanding where possible production of raw materials for export. But it attaches the greatest importance to building up those industries which can economically meet the demand of the home market and of neighbouring territories. This is particularly appreciated in the case of industries based on locally produced raw materials.

A diagram showing the composition of imports reveals striking increases, e.g., total value of imports: 1939, £9,000,000; 1946, £20,300,000; 1949, £54,500,000; proportion of consumer goods: 1939, 45%; 1946, 44%; 1949, 35%; proportion of non-durable producers' goods: 1939, 21%; 1946, 28%; 1949, 24%; proportion of durable producers' goods: 1939, 34%; 1946, 28%; 1949, 41%.

Exports have risen from £10,000,000 in 1939 (plus re-exports, £1,600,000) to £18,600,000 in 1947 (plus re-exports £2,700,000), and £29,600,000 in 1949 (plus re-exports £4,900,000).

The Colony's national income, which in 1946 was $49,000,000, had reached £74,000,000 this year.

This chapter which will doubtless receive much attention, is headed "Investment Opportunities." It deals with prospects in the following industries: coal, chemical industries, processing of minerals, iron and steel, engineering, mica, vermiculite, asbestos, copper, textiles, food production, wafer engineering, wood processing, tea, sugar, fibres, furniture-making, cigarette-making, confectionery, leather, printing and publishing trades.

We believe that Southern Rhodesia is one of the countries most likely to capture American capital in between Southern Rhodesia and some parts of the United States. Many of the development problems are similar to those which have already been faced in North America; problems inherent in a situation of great distances, of difficult communications, and of vast resources to which all the achievements of modern applied science should be brought to bear in their economic exploitation.

Southern Rhodesia can be very aptly compared at its present stage of development with the mid and south-western United States or Western Canada 50 or 60 years ago in many ways it is now. So were they then, at a comparable stage. They were necessarily importers of foreign capital for their full development. In the same way Southern Rhodesia must rely on the overseas investor to-day.

Glance into the Future

The position of the Colony in 10 or 15 years is thus envisaged:

It is far from fanciful to forecast a white population of 250,000 and an African population of 2,000,000, manufacturing a considerable proportion of their own requirements of consumer goods, growing most of the food they need, and supplying the northern neighbour with a great deal of their imports of textiles, processed foodstuffs, building materials, and engineering equipment.

A community of this size, though small by world standards, would have a most significant part to play in Africa. It would be in the van of African progress and would be a key point in any scheme of African defence.

Reproduced in another chapter is the Southern Rhodesian Government's reply to a questionnaire drafted recently by the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The state of comparative under-development which exists in Southern Rhodesia, the author claims, makes a fruitful field for capital investment, and a reasonable amount of private United States dollar investment would be welcomed provided this was devoted to long-term productive ventures.

The development of local production and of secondary industry based on the natural resources of the country would be particularly encouraged.

It will be realized that investment which aims at maximum short-term security must regard to the long-range plan for economic development of the country, world markets, and regard to your labour. Subject to this qualification, the Government is actively interested in attracting inward investment. This, of course, does not imply any commitment or guarantee of profits or of the roundness of the proposed venture, nor would it involve any obligation by the Government to grant priorities in shipping space or monopoly pricing.

5. Investment

"United States capital invested in approved investments in Southern Rhodesia is regarded as being remittable to the United States at any time subsequent to the initial investment of the dollar capital." Approved investment is a term implying Government recognition that the investment will add to the economic development of the colony. Investment made for property for speculative purposes would not be regarded as an approved investment, and would be subject to a 10-year restriction before repatriation.

Profits, dividends, and interest derived from all types of dollar investment are automatically remittable, and are not subject to any limit provided they are bona fide earnings.

Basic facts concerning temperature, altitudes; rainfall, birth and mortality rates; population, immigration, taxation, death duties, etc., are given in handy tabular form, and there are sections dealing with the facilities and industrial potential of the main towns of the Colony.

OBITUARY

On October 10th, 1950, at 69, Eaton Terrace, London, S.W.1, Stephen Salisbury Bagge, C.M.G., son of the late Reverend Philip Salisbury Bagge, Rector of Walpole St. Peter's, Norfolk, aged 91, the last of Captain Hugard's expedition to Uganda in 1890.

Scrimshaw Schooling in Africa Compulsory scheme in Rhodesia

AN EXPERIMENT in compulsory rural education in Northern Rhodesia is the subject of an interesting article in the Robert Livingstone Journal by Mr. J. Winterbottom, Acting Deputy Director of African Education in the territory.

The Ha tribe of the Zamwala district, described as the only truly pastoral community in Northern Rhodesia, were chosen for the experiment. Referred to in "King Solomon's Mines" as "Musungubwe"—a nickname given them by the Barotse—now inhabit the country surrounding the Kafue Flats, west of the railway line.

Independent Ha

They may be briefly characterized as cattle owners with agriculture and fishing as subsidiary pursuits," writes Mr. Winterbottom. "They bear the reputation of being courageous, quarrelsome, jealous, conservative and able. They make perhaps the best soldiers of any African tribe in the territory, and are also well known as comedians in the police force. One further character of the Ha must be mentioned—their independence of mind; they are quite capable of telling a senior officer to his face that he is talking nonsense, if that is their opinion of what he says."

Like most pastoral tribes, the Ha were not enthusiastic about education. Educational work in their area was until 1945 mostly in the hands of the Methodist Mission, with the Universities' Mission to Central Africa running a number of schools in the eastern part of the area, and the Brethren of Christ in the south. The enrolments in those schools were small and the average attendances appalling.

Government officials and missionaries pleaded and threatened in vain. At one local education committee after another the chiefs were exhorted to use their influence to persuade the people to send their children to school. They flatly refused. They agreed that education was a good thing, but they declined to take any positive steps in its encouragement and attendance without legal backing. "But," they said, "pass a law that all children must go and we will enforce it."

Obstinate Won

However, the Government officials concerned were extremely doubtful about the enforcement part, and perhaps a little frightened by so drastic a proposal as full compulsory education in a backward African tribe. Attempts were made to get the chiefs to agree to a law of the type already in operation in neighbouring tribes, "which voluntarily enrolled pupils would be compelled to attend but, rightly, I think, the chiefs would have none of it, insisting that the only result could be that none would allow their children to enrol at all."

This impasse continued for four or five years, the European officials demanding some evidence that the Ha were interested in education before they would agree to a law to compel the parents to send their children to school, and the chiefs refusing to budge until they got their law.

I have said the Ha are obstinate, and they won their contest. With considerable nagging, the district commissioner and the education officer recommended Government approval of a law that all children within reach of a school be compelled to attend for four years. School-attendance officers were appointed, and in January 1945, the law came into operation.

Almost simultaneously with the new law there was an important addition to the agencies controlling the school in the district, owing partly to war-time difficulties. European staff were partly to be hired at rates which were to fall into the toils of the tax collector.

METHODIST MISSION would suffice to show that African staff that it was competitive to contract its educational work.

Accordingly, the Native authority assumed direct responsibility for all schools north of the Zambezi River. At the time of writing there are eight such schools, three of which were taken over from the mission as going concerns.

The effects of the law may be made clear by a few figures. In 1942 the total number of children enrolled in aided schools in the Nyanzaalwa district was 5,000; in 1944 this had risen to 9,827; in 1945 the total was up to 11,309, and in 1946 to 14,415. Enrollment, significantly, was the average attendance, which in 1944 had been 8,716 (69%), but had jumped to 11,144 (82%) in 1946.

In individual schools, where the situation has been especially bad, the average attendance had jumped by from five to seven times its 1944 figure in 1945 (absolute figures, not percentages). Furthermore, the imposition of compulsion stimulated an interest in education among the people as a whole.

Incentive to Enthusiasm

In a number of cases, especially at the Native authority schools, children from villages many miles from the nearest school have come as weekly boarders, bringing their own food from home week by week.

At the Nansanga Native Authority school this sudden enthusiasm for boarding school created something of a problem since the plans, estimates, and laying of a new school building had already been made and work had actually started before the district commissioner and the education officer discovered that over 20 of the 120 pupils proposed to become boarders, and hurried arrangements had to be made to increase the number of boarding bunks.

This is, as far as I know, the first attempt to apply full compulsory education to a rural area in Africa, and its success suggests several quite important lines of thought. Perhaps the most important of these is that we Europeans have been at times over-fond to what we have imagined to be African feelings, and that Africans in reality appreciate being told firmly that a certain thing must be done.

When compulsory education was introduced in Livingstone township in 1944, I was somewhat surprised at the smoothness with which it worked, but I attributed this to the fact that the majority of the inhabitants were Bantu, who have a high appreciation of the value of education and were used to a modified form of compulsory education in their home country.

Policing a Strong Lead

The 1946 result suggests, however, that this was not the chief reason, and that the African will appreciate the folly of a strong lead even under less favourable circumstances than prevailed in Livingstone, and that interest in education can be stimulated by acts of local authorities even when such interest was invisible before.

"One is reminded of the story of the little girl who was moved to one of the modern 'free' schools and on the third morning asked her teacher, 'Must I just do what I like again to-day?'"

Mining Personalities

MR. P. GLOVER has been appointed general manager of the Broken Hill mine, Northern Rhodesia.

MR. H. T. BARKER, M.I.M.M., is manager of the tin fields in the Birkim district of Southern Rhodesia.

MR. F. H. BAKER, STUD.IINST.M.M., has arrived in Tanganyika, Northern Rhodesia, to join the staff of Roan Antelope Copper Mines, Ltd.

MR. P. M. McTHIEWS, C.IGEC.M.IST.M.M., has left England to join the exploration department of Selection Trust, Ltd., in Tanganyika.

MR. A. J. STRATFORD, ASSOC.IINST.M.M., is on leave in this country from Southern Rhodesia. He expects to return to the Colony in mid-December.

MR. L. A. E. ALLUM, STUD.IINST.M.M., has left this country for Kenya, where he has been appointed a geologist with the Colonial Development Corporation.

According to figures published by the East African Statistical Department, between August, 1939, and August, 1948, the Nairobi COST-OF-LIVING index rose by 83%.

During the same period there was no permanent increase in ELECTRICITY TARIFFS throughout Kenya, and only in November, 1948, did the East African Power and Lighting Company Limited compelled to soaring costs to amend certain tariffs by what were, nevertheless, most modest percentages.

By any standard the part played by the Electrical Supply industry in the development of East Africa's territories, The East African Power and Lighting Company in Kenya and its Associated Companies in Tanganyika, is a worthy place among the pioneers of progress in those territories.

Training African Social Welfare Workers

Post-War Activities of the Jeanes School

WHEN THE FIRST SOCIAL WELFARE WORKERS went into training at the Jeanes School in Kabete, Kenya, in 1946, the main ideas of post-war planners could be found—the ways and means of repeating in civilian contexts what had been done in the Army in the way of adult education, the spreading of information, and the stimulation of morale. In war-time, hand-picked bands of about 4,000 Africans recruited mainly from the secondary schools of the East African territories and Northern Rhodesia were trained at these schools as African education instructors.

Their task was to run information courses, teach reading, writing and English, and give talks on the war disciplines, the merits of V.D., etc. At the end of the war thousands of African soldiers before their demobilization were exposed to quick-fire talks on such subjects as what to do with their savings, how to build a better house, what happens to money collected in taxes, etc., illustrated by specially prepared film-strips and followed up by specially written pamphlets. Captain Dickson's mobile propaganda unit, touring the African reserves, had attracted over 2,000,000 civilians to their shows and stimulated the imaginations of their audiences about the world to which their sons and brothers had gone.

From Military to Civilian Posts

It should now be surprising, even in these days of community development, that in 1945 and 1946 plans for social welfare in East Africa followed similar lines. Replace the unit information rooms by community centres, that is to say every hamlet; staff them with specially trained, hand-picked men; supply them with wireless sets, strip-film projectors, posters, photographic cameras, regular newspapers, an official band-route; maintain the morale of welfare workers by regular visits of a mobile information unit equipped with a cinema van; preserve at the same time some of the vigour of war-time—and there you have a civilian mass education set-up.

Broadly this was Kenya's plan, with one difference—the cost of this extra social service was to be borne by the military authorities. There was to be a local government responsibility.

Where would the African staff be obtained? From the now of returning soldiers. Over 200 Kenya Africans had enlisted in the Army Education Corps and out of the best of them it would easily be possible to find suitable social welfare workers. Where could these men be trained? At the Jeanes School, a former ex-Servicemen's training centre, where the cost of training would be borne by the ex-Servicemen, and the votes

Being extracts from an article in the Mass Education Bulletin, Nairobi. By Jason, principal of the Jeanes School at Kenya.

Educationists Become Welfare Workers

The only remaining problem was that of the supervision of the welfare worker in the field. Some districts had ex-Army officers posted as team leaders to assist in the resettlement of the returning soldiers, and these officers who attended short courses at the Jeanes School in 1946 and 1947, undertook the planning of social halls and the supervision of the welfare workers. In 1948 some of these officers took up permanent appointments as district welfare officers.

All the social welfare workers trained in the first four years, with one interesting exception, have been ex-Servicemen. Most of them were education instructors during the war. The minimum standard of education before entry to the courses was eight years schooling. We looked for—and in most cases got—men of character and personality, who could be expected to count for something in their community. Before they were admitted to the course they all had to be assessed by their district commissioner, and usually by their chief.

In the average age was 25 years, and most of the men had held N.C.O. rank, and had seen service outside Kenya. Married men were preferred, and were encouraged to bring their wives and families with them to the Jeanes schools. Every post could have been filled several times over, with keep-out not necessarily guaranteed. Pioneer work among their own people made great appeal to ex-Servicemen, many of whom had spent four or five years away from their homes.

On printing this is committed article to AFRICA AND RHODESIA and consequently statistically reduced size again in this issue. Indeed the issues of the last three weeks have appeared only because of increasing the probability of reparation of the purpose of work, we had a much better opportunity as possible set in typical advance. Once again apologise to our readers and correspondents for the deficiencies of this issue, especially the majority whom sympathetic measures have been Indeed, from 1947-49, about one in every three experienced in entering the Jeunes School asked first for basic work training as a social welfare worker, and the whole course was always regarded, good humouredly by the other students as the "mob" course, in spite of the fact that other courses, running concurrently, often led to higher pay. All instruction was conducted in English but Swahili remained the "social language"; but we often found that six years of Army contacts, while producing a fairly fluent flow of conversing spoken English, had not equipped our men with the ability to understand Colonial Office White Papers without a guide.

Training for Team Work

The courses lasted nine months, with a three-week break in the middle. We worked a five-day week, six hours a day, and had two-hour evening work for three nights during the week. A six-day week of private work was set, and it had to be done over weekend.

The courses had to satisfy the needs of men who were going into urban as well as rural areas, and although in most districts the chief role of the social welfare workers is to organize activities based on a community basis, the district welfare officers, after keeping the men busy at least some of their social welfare workers, so that they can form a team with other colonial personnel for project work.

Each district welfare officer is a member of the district team, and he is, or should be, the mouthpiece and instrument of that team. The result is that the work carried out by welfare personnel differs from district to district, and it may well be that in time the training of welfare workers will have to be done on a district basis, perhaps even in the districts.

It would be impossible in the space available to do more than describe the bones of the training syllabus, and what follows is a summary outline syllabus with a few comments on the more important sections. The syllabus can be divided into four parts:

- (1) General background: civics and citizenship; the Commonwealth; Colonial government; the Government departments of the East Africa High Commission, and the work of voluntary bodies, e.g., Boy Scouts, British Legion, East Africa Women's League, and missions.
- (2) Social welfare and community development in local Colonial Office Units; Papers, development schemes in other areas, Kenya; Social welfare organization; municipal welfare work.
- (3) Subjects of which special knowledge is required: agriculture, health, hygiene, nutrition and first aid; probation; co-operative societies.
- (4) Techniques: sports, games and entertainment; literacy, basic English, how to run a community centre, information work, organization of clubs, etc.

Building Up a Profile

Two things on the course contributed most to building up the morale of the workers. The first was inspiring leadership, and the two officers who were successfully responsible for the course, Mr. S. V. Rossiter and Mr. A. F. Nager, communicated their own enthusiasm to the students. The second was the large amount of time given up to the explanation of Government plans.

It was essential that these men who spend a good deal of their time both explaining Government policy and in taking the interest of their own people in plans for their future, should find fit of all in their own interests. So, for the Jeunes School it only a 20 minutes' drive to Nairobi. It was not difficult to get Government departments to come along and explain the organization of their various departments. Indeed, it may be said that the two ways learnt from such talks—the lecturers often just run the students.

The workers reacted strongly to being told all were equal, on the inside of Government departments, and on the outside.

It is a sad fact that educated Africans, who often start by being frankly critical of Government decisions, when they have had the problems frankly explained to them, enthusiastically support them. It may be that we have under-estimated the reasonableness of Africans and their desire to have things explained to them.

Provided that one is prepared to listen with infinite patience to their often distorted point of view, it is usually possible, given time, to persuade them, if not of the rightness of Government plans, at least of their efficacy in the immediate situation.

Importance of Frank Discussion

At the Jeunes School we have discovered that this frank discussion of problems, although often difficult to handle, was a most important part of our work. The background of the essentials of Citizenship and the setup of Government, and the explanation of departmental aims and the means by which those aims are being carried out, are essential to any course African Government officers.

Industrial Revolution in East Africa Developments by Private Enterprise

A MINOR INDUSTRIAL REVOLUTION is taking place in East Africa," said Mr. L. D. Rankine, Chief Secretary of Kenya, and at that time Acting Governor, at the annual session in Nairobi of the Kenya Council of Chamber of Commerce and Industry on October 10.

Private enterprise, he continued, "has been extremely active and there is ample evidence that capital is still readily available for well conceived projects." Last year 233 new companies were registered in Kenya with a nominal capital of approximately £14m., as against 126 companies in 1948 with a nominal capital of £12m.

A gratifying number of new factories have been opened including a new cannery, a glass-works, a bottle factory, a nail factory, and a large new brick and tile works. New factories have begun to produce building blocks, building boards, fertilizers, oil-cake, sunflower cream. Uanga, Ltd., have nearly completed a fine new mill in Nairobi, as have Unica, Ltd. There are a number of new engineering and wood-working plants of various types. Many fine new commercial industrial buildings have been completed, and many more are under construction.

Other projects, including the manufacture of cigarettes, cement, cotton, textiles, knitwear, glazed earthenware pipes, and dry ice are now being planned and developed, which, when they come into being, will have an important effect on the economic life of Colony.

In 1949 the number of employed Africans increased by 10 per cent., to 100,000, while deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank rose by nearly £1m.

Hotel Control

Control of standards of accommodation and food is embodied in a new Hotels Bill in Northern Rhodesia. If it is passed, hotels will be graded and become liable to "legislation" if they fail to maintain prescribed standards. A hotel board of five members will grant licences only if satisfied that the applicant is capable of managing a hotel and that the premises are structurally suitable and have adequate sanitation and storage. Hoteliers will have the right of appeal to the Governor in Council. It will become a criminal offence for visitors to leave hotels without paying their accounts.

Growth of Hates and Fears in Africa

Hope for the Future Depends on Faith and Charity

WORLD HENRY FORD, who became lion, P.G. R., Herbert Read, headmaster of King's College, Uganda, for some years ago, is now rector of the teacher-training college at Accra, the capital of the Gold Coast, which he recently returned to West Africa after leave in England.

The phrase "hates and fears fast overtaking Africa" is terrible, but I am afraid that it is true.

That it should be so in South-West Africa and of the Union of South Africa can hardly cause surprise, for the indications remain that there are oppressed by grievous wrongs. What is even more disturbing is the thought that Mr. Michael Scott-Sutherland may also be true of advanced and populous colonies where there are policies not of upward but of development towards self-government.

"Having spent the last 25 years in Africa, some of them in Uganda and some in the Gold Coast, I know something of the recent growth of hates and fears in those lands."

Hopes Against Aggression

On the one hand, British administrators, missionaries, and merchants—those who believe in the educational of Africans—have been disappointed by those educated Africans who took up agitation or refrain from resisting. On the other hand, Africans who grew up with the notion that the white men possessed all knowledge and almost all virtue are equally disappointed at finding that this is far from the truth.

Hope for Africa depends in large measure on faith and charity. If these attitudes could be strengthened and spread in our rapidly developing Colonies—as they can be and are—some places are less British would be less apt to confuse the African of to-day with his uneducated grandfather, and Africa would not confuse the present-day Englishman with his slave-owning great-grandfather. Above all, these men must realize that the members of the other race do not treat us as men.

Here in Britain where Africans are coming in increasing numbers—the landed or Battledore would rise to her high calling as a hostess of the Empire; and more of our best men and women would rather go out to work in Africa, not as having dominion over the peoples, but as helpers of their joy in their crowns of full nationhood.

Co-operation Impeded by Fear

MR. VERNON BARTLETT has received to rare relations in several of his articles from East Africa to the News Chronicle. He wrote from:

"Co-operation between the races is impeded by fear. Day after day the Nairobi paper prints letters from London that Kenya will remain for all time under the white man's rule. This by its implications of racial superiority is so obviously false into the hands of Asian and African youth that their understandable fear could alone explain the lack of much wise leadership."

One has the impression then there will be west and discontent in Kenya unless European, Asian and African can discuss affairs on the terrace of one's sisal Head Office in Nairobi, the capital of the White Highlands with no sense of estrangement caused by the different races living

From Tanganyika Mr. Bartlett wrote a little later:

"There are British settlers in this territory whose demands for a larger share in running the colony are put forward in ways that provoke angry reactions among the Asians and Africans. But these are the few of them that in Kenya and Tanganyika are in competition with me. Most of us are not

"the Asians—though the Europeans buy six or one, but the most influential of them are the followers of the late Khan, whose friendly feelings towards them are an exceedingly valuable asset in white man's relations in this part of the world."

The African community is as politically alive than in Kenya and there is time for me to take methods more likely to lead to their development in harmony with the Europeans."

Tanganyika's Example

In Tanganyika more than in any other African country, we waited, the Government is determined that African development shall be naturalized and spontaneous. But Tanganyika's greatest contribution to Africa is its attempt to avoid the racial rivalry that poisons the atmosphere of most of the continent. African, Indian and European, each is making an essential contribution to the development of this country. Tanganyika, and in the Government's way, does well with pre-ordinate.

"It would be something so uncommon in Africa to find people who were more interested in their country's welfare than in their colour. We believe that the influence of this Cinderella Territory of Tanganyika might impress other countries where there is normal tolerance and good will, driving for that of affection towards fear and hatred."

National Income of £270,000,000

OF EAST AFRICA'S NATIONAL INCOME of roughly £270,000,000 a year half is attributable to agricultural production. Whereas the exports from East Africa in 1936 totalled about £115,000,000, last year they fetched £54,000,000. Total imports into East Africa in 1936 exceeded £80,000,000 and the Customs and Excise Department collected more than £17,500,000 in duties. Mr. J. C. Munday, Finance Member in the East Africa High Commission.

Memorial to Bishop Wynn Jones

SUGGESTIONS FOR A MEMORIAL to the late Rt. Rev. Wynn Jones, Bishop of Central Tanganyika, include the building of a graveyard hosted in Dodoma, a scholarship on the lines of a Rhodes scholarship for a boy or girl of any race from a secondary school in East Africa, a clock tower in Dodoma, a centre for training Negroes and women as domestic servants, and a fund for the education of the children of the late Bishop. Mr. G. M. Stockley, Director of Geological Survey, is chairman of the memorial fund committee which includes other members are Azikiwe, Col. Lord and Lady B. H. M. Bwambo, D. R. Dye, W. A. Forbes, Sir John Haseltine, Dr. F. Keckla, Mr. N. H. Hart, Mr. R. Ruggins, Brigadier

Peak Prices for Sisal

SISSAL has lately sold at more than £160 a ton, the highest ever, while the fibre had not been marketed by anyone anywhere, said Mr. E. E. Hitchcock, chairman of the Tanganyika Sisal Marketing Association at a meeting in Dar es Salaam, which approved proposals for monthly payments to producers on the basis of a standard percentage of the value of the previous month's output. Sales by the association (known as Tasma) have not reached an aggregate value of £12,000,000.

Notes by the Way

Secretary of State

MR. JAMES GRIFFITHS, Secretary of State for the Colonies, emerged from the Labour Party Conference at Margate with added power, for in the voting for the constituency seats of the national executive he polled the second largest total of votes at 781,650 (compared with 845,000 for Mrs. Aneurin Bevan, 674,000 for Mr. Herbert Morrison, 624,000 for Mr. Dalton, and 604,000 for Mr. Shinwell), and not one of the others increased his vote over that of the previous year by anything like Mr. Griffiths' gain of 176,000. Of his popularity within his party there can be no doubt. How rumours at the conference were more persistent than that which holds that he will be the next Foreign Secretary. Labour is still in office when Mr. Bevan decides to retire. Some well-known Socialists regard him as a likely Prime Minister of the future.

Captain R. G. Arnot

CAPTAIN R. G. ARNOT (R.N. Retd.), who has been appointed general manager of Red Funnel Lines, Ltd., will leave Liverpool this month for a visit of about four or six weeks to Southern Rhodesia. He will then return to London and expects to take up permanent residence in Gwern in the late summer or autumn of next year. Captain Arnot, who was born in Cheshire in 1898, was educated at the Conway and at Cambus College, Cambridge, entered the Royal Navy Service at the outbreak of war in 1914, and was mentioned in despatches for his service at the Battle of Jutland.

Released after the war and entering business life introduced Calor gas to Scotland as managing director of Calor Gas (Scotland), Ltd. When Hitler plunged the world into war in 1939 he returned to the Royal Navy as a lieutenant-commander, and was aboard H.M.S. Formidabel when she was sunk at the end of 1940. As King's Harbour Master of Crete at the time of the German attack, he was one of the last to escape from the island. He served in the Syrian and Lebanon campaigns and was naval officer in charge of Beirut from 1941 to 1945.

As Others See Us

THE INSTITUTE OF EXPORT has arranged a series of lunch-time lectures covering the months of October to January inclusive. Under the general title "The World To-day," members and their guests will hear well-known commercial authorities speak on British export possibilities in the countries with which they represent. Altogether there are 13 of them, four covering the Dominions, one dealing with Colony (Malaya), and India, Pakistan, and eight foreign States. No part of British Africa except the Union will be considered. Is the Rhodesian market not at least as important to Great Britain as that of Israel, to which the third meeting is to be devoted? Should not rapidly developing East African territories not have been given precedence over Denmark or Turkey? The Institute, which exercises considerable influence among industrialists, should try to do better for them.

Recruiting in Kenya

THE OFFICIAL REPORT published annually by the Government of Kenya that of the Bank of Nairobi includes contributions by non-officials, and so far as I recollect, was the only official report which follows this interesting and significant practice. The notes by the non-official representatives of the bank in the various farming localities make an interesting reading for the writers are evidently well informed and provide between them a valuable summary of the state of agriculture in the Colony. Incidentally, they show how greatly conditions vary within so comparatively small an area as the Colony lands. For example, two districts as widely separated as Fruits and Nyeri report that in their time had the lowest rainfall on record while in Lavington and Eldoret it was their average; and in the Trans-Nzoia it was late but "quite good." In the Maragua area labour was "more plentiful than in the past." In Chuka "the number of citizens seeking work remained constant for the last days before the rains, but most districts complained of shortages, and nearly all of short tasks and inefficient

African Labour Developments

ON THE RUIRU coffee estates "female labour employed on monthly tickets has become a permanent institution," and many Sotik farmers now place contracts with Kisii headmen, who find their own gangs of labourers and are stated to carry out "very good work." This is surely a promising development, the continuation of which elsewhere might make a notable contribution to the solution of farm labour problems, while giving some hope for Africa to supply their surplus. Interest in soil conservation has grown so much in the Trans-Nzoia that it will take four years to complete the present orders for terracing; the amount of land tilled is being increased. The Nairobi representative suggests smaller and less expensive plant to reduce the cost of the work. East year this Land Bank received more applications than ever before both in number and total amount, and as its capital proved inadequate, an urgent guarantee by Government was provided by the National Bank of India. Losses were only 1% of the loans issued.

Whisky a Gogo

IN THE GOGO COUNTRY of Tanganyika much more whisky has been drunk in the past three years than in the previous half-century of German and British rule combined. It is not that the Gogo tribe has taken to such potent spirit, but that after the mid-1930s Kongwa the Overseas Food Service had funds been available to assist groundnut schemes, the European staff for which were recruited solely of men mainly from territorial areas, as indicated when tens of thousands of pounds worth of liquor were offered for sale to the public at a plus stock when the staff was artificially reduced. But the weeding out of groundnuts did not mean whisky for the Gogo, of course, since for their own good, they are forbidden the white man's hard drinks. "Whisky a Gogo" is just the title given to the French version of the film "Whisky Galore."

Origin of Poisoned Baits

WHAT WAS THE ORIGIN of those poisoned baits against invading locusts? A well-known Rhodesian Farmer, who, still hale and hearty, though far younger than this, told me recently that when he was in Natal some 20 years ago he witnessed what he believes to have been the first experiments there. Local farmers had noticed that locusts, presumably attracted by the sweetness in the fibre, promptly alighted on pieces of chewed sugar cane which Africans spit out; and so, in a primitive attempt to delouse the quarrelling insects, they tried creating such matches with poison. Can any one quote an earlier case in which?

Law and Order in the Colony*Ahering to British Practice

To the Editors of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA.

SIR.—There will I am sure be much sympathy with Mr. C. Sandley Bird's attacks on the administration of law (which, except in the case of lawyers, is no synonymous with justice) in Uganda, not least by the many Africans in that territory who for some time have been complaining in the vernacular Press and elsewhere of the failure of the Government to afford security to persons and property.

In countries which are thinly populated and only lightly policed Natives will have been beaten up and robbed inevitably (as do many other people of all races) that, in the comparatively rare events of the criminals being brought to book, a short sentence to which no social stigma is attached is scarcely adequate especially as the term of imprisonment will be spent in uncomfortable surroundings on the highest "Rotten" scale band with no harder labour than most ordinary labourers are doing in their daily work.

The principle that it does not matter how many guilty persons escape so long as no innocent person is convicted has, I submit, nothing to do with justice which is concerned with the punishment of wickedness and vice and the maintenance of virtue.

The principle which lawyers are so fond of quoting may be the foundation of British law, indeed it is, but that is another question altogether. Justice, an abstract conception, does not take orders from the lawyers of a country. It would be as sensible to make witness swear to tell the "British" truth as it is to talk about "British" justice.

Normandy's handbook

SMATINEE in the flat box, made to slip snuffily into a handbag or pocket. Twenty-five Cigarettes filter tipped to give you the fragrance of fine Virginia in its purest form.

It would hardly be better—and it would be less satisfying to the Africans—if in the Colonies at least the law of fraternity could be persuaded to drop their claims to be conformed with "justice."

It might also be argued, even at some cost to their dignity, to dispense with the "law and order" motto in which such garments have no historical significance or are decidedly unromantic and can only denote either despotism or vulgarity. Will the authorators? What must one think of the men who think of a man who wears a sword and a plumed hat as growing head of hair?

One gleam of optimism is that the end of the Law Department in Kenya is not near, however, as far as the Member for Law and Order (Mr. H. H. T.) is a step in the right direction.

When an assari who came to the country for the Victoria Parade was shown the statue of Justice on the Old Bailey he asked very naturally how a blindfolded woman could possibly see if her scales were weighing fairly, and how she could have any idea of whether she was hitting the right person with her sword. Justice did not complain that the figure was an inaccurate symbol of British law!

With the possibility that African fanatics may embark upon political persecutions among those of their own people who disagree with them—and this appears to have started already—in such districts the matter should be reviewed. If a peaceable African is accosted by the member of some sect and told that his act will be "burnt down" and that she and his family may be seriously assaulted if they do not toe the line, what is he to say? He knows that, except in a case of murder, no violence will be done to his assailants (if indeed they are ever caught), and men only in their case can be proved beyond all doubt (and the European would add: "not necessarily even then") to a person manifestly and self-consciously guilty may escape on a pure and absurd technicality. But the African in such circumstances has every right to demand nothing less than by complying with the orders of the fanatics, so long as he does not take an active part in any riot.

Surely it is a fundamental principle of justice that a man should have security in his person and property and before punishment. Would it not be better if the legal fraternity in Eastern Africa devoted a little more time to this important consideration and less to searching for "precedents" of "country" courts in this country?

It is only fair to admit that a great deal of harm is done by purely untempered criticism in Parliament and elsewhere in this country and the fact that Colonial Legal Departments are almost too sensitive to such criticisms.

Yours faithfully,

FEE AT JUSTICE

THE ASSOCIATION OF ARCHITECTS

Smith, Mayor, an African architect, Sir Geoffrey Huggins's statement could be no official recognition of the position in the Colony's schools as a "privilege."

"If it is the intention to press this point of bilinguality," continues the newspaper, "the time has already been given." As in this matter the Government speaks for the vast majority of people of Rhodesia cannot that be accepted and the question be considered as answered and closed?

Editorial Statement Alleged Revolt in Gojam

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA.

SIR.—With reference to the news in the Press of Sunday, August 27, of an alleged revolt in the Province of Gojam, this allegation represents nothing but malicious and distorted news of an incident arising from a dispute between two managers four months ago, limiting to two days only, to which an end was put as a result of measures taken by the Administration. No other disturbance has taken place.

In view of the gross distortions as to time, place, degree, and unfounded nature of censorship, my Government consider these reports and their constant repetition to be calculated foreign propaganda.

The Use of Fertilizers Imports into the Sudan

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

SIR.—Mr. A. W. McQuire has criticized a statement of mine which you had quoted that "the consumption of artificial fertilizers in tropical Africa is almost negligible." He stated that the import of fertilizers into the Sudan last year was nearly 13,000 tons, a tonnage which he regards as by no means negligible.

In the address to which he refers I was discussing the development of tropical Africa, comparing it with that of other large agricultural areas. Whether 13,000 tons is negligible or not is a matter of comparison, and compared with the 19 m. tons or so which the U.S.A. uses in a year the Sudan's consumption is surely almost negligible.

Several European countries use over 1 m. tons a year each. Sudan's neighbour, Egypt, is using, if I remember rightly, about 700,000 tons; and quite small countries, which would be lost in a corner of the Sudan, use fertilizers by the hundred thousand tons. Mr. McQuire had good grounds for stating that tropical Africa uses only a negligible amount of artificial fertilizers.

Yours faithfully,

Lomax M. B.

Minister of Agriculture.

The Manica-Trading Company Limited

Standard Bank Commercial Report

THE STANDARD BANK OF SOUTH AFRICA LTD. has issued a few days ago, write—

Kenya.—Throughout most of the Highland growing areas unexpected but nonetheless welcome rains were reported throughout August. So far the season has been satisfactory for coffee, tea, sugar, and cereal crops in most areas.

The trading atmosphere continued cautious, with importers gauging the effects of the Far Eastern situation upon prices in the piece-goods market; the overstocked position has been cleared, and prices have risen, in some instances rather sharply, at first the strong speculative element of this large market but gears its somewhat erratic course.

The building trade is slack, and prices are easier, but costs are still high. Some increased activity is expected during the next few months. The new Nairobi-Kisumu contract has been awarded to a French engineering firm.

At the Mombasa coffee auctions 4,728 bags of Kiboko Robusta f.a.q. were sold for £14 8s. to £15 8s. per bag, and 1,500 bags of Bukoba Native plantation for £10 to £20 per cwt.

Uganda.—Business continues quiet, but native preparations have been made for the coffee season which opens during the first week in September. The higher prices for an estimated crop of over 30,000 tons will circulate; more than £1 m. amongst producers. Maize and groundnut crops in most areas have been heavy.

A grain storage and conditioning plant under construction in Jinja will fulfil a very useful purpose, as the atmospheric conditions of east and central Uganda do not favour storage of cereals. Maize and maize products are now very important factors in Uganda Native industry.

Tananyika.—Business conditions have been good in most bazaars, and general trade continues satisfactory. Building activity in most of the towns is high, with the demand for business and residential accommodation still insistent.

Large deliveries of Bukoba coffee have been made throughout the month. Supplies of groundnuts and soya beans have also been coming forward. Good final figure for the Mwanza cotton crop is expected to reach 35,000 hales.

Zanzibar.—The first instalments of the clove crop are coming forward and there is evidence of a considerable tonnage. The local price ranges around 150s. per 100 lb., while the Clove Growers' Association buying price is 120s. Clove shipments during the month have been made almost entirely to India and Pakistan.

Book Reviews in Brief

"Birds of Tropical West Africa," by D. A. Branner (Vol. IV, 35s).—Though this splendid volume, published by the Crown Agents for the Colonies, refers as the title denotes, particularly to the birds of West Africa, many of them are, of course, also to be found in East and Central Africa, and the book will therefore appeal to bird-lovers in the territories covered by this newspaper. The 14 coloured plates are a real tribute to both artists and printers, and there are scores of fine drawings in the text. Five volumes in this series were published before the war and there are still two more to come to complete this magnus opus. The author pays generous tribute to the help received from other people. By strictly rationing the use of scientific abilities, Dr. Branner has provided a book which no German can understand and appreciate. The volume has not been published at anything like the price unless it had been financed from Government sources.

"The Times' Broadsheet." (Hodder & Stoughton, 21s).—Many of our readers found pleasure in the broadsheets compiled by The Times during the war for distribution through the Army Education Service, and they, and others, will welcome their republication in volume form. Hundreds of passages from English literature, grave and gay, instructive and entertaining in prose and verse, and from ancient and modern sources, have been assembled to make an admirable anthology.

"Premier Atlas of the World," W. & A. K. Johnston, Ltd., (10s. 6d.). Post-war atlases have been few and far between, and all pre-war atlases are, of course, obsolete. This volume has 48 pages of coloured and up-to-date maps and a 48-page index. Ten pages in the map section are given to Africa, one double-page spread showing Egypt and the Sudan and another the territories between Uganda and Bechuanaland.

NEWS ITEMS IN BRIEF

Out of a total of 1,000 boys at Plumtree School, in Southern Rhodesia, 112 were ill during a recent influenza outbreak.

The Belgian Congo is now the sixth most important coffee exporter in the world. Production amounts to about 350,000 tons.

Mr. R. C. S. Stanley, Acting Governor of Northern Rhodesia, recently told the Legislature that, taking the long view, the need for supplementary port outlets for Central Africa was becoming increasingly apparent.

"About 3,000 men are liable for part-time training, but only 727 have registered," said Sir Godfrey Higgins, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, in a recent address. "This is the result of a certain irresponsibility and slackness. I hope that those who have not registered will do so at once as a matter of pride, and not enter their country's service under the sign of the police court."

A local authorities' loan fund and a board to administer it have been established in Northern Rhodesia. Any money set aside by the Legislative Council in future for use by local authorities will be funded, and application for loans will be considered by the new board, which is composed of the Member for Health and Local Government (chairman), the Director of Development, the Deputy Financial Secretary, Mr. E. W. Sergeant, M.L.C., Mr. H. J. Millar, M.L.C., a representative of the Municipal Association, the Commissioner for Local Government, and Mr. J. R. *Company MeetingBooker Brothers, McConnell and Company, Limited*Points from Mr. A. F. V. McConnell's Statement

THE FIFTIETH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF BOOKER BROTHERS, MCCONNELL AND COMPANY, LIMITED, was held on September 30 at the registered office, 37-41 Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Mr. A. F. V. MCCONNELL, chairman of the company, presided.

The secretary (Mr. C. C. Batch, F.C.I.S.) read the notice convening the meeting and the report of the auditors.

The following are extracts from the chairman's statement which had been circulated with the report and accounts for the year ended December 31, 1949, and was taken as read:

"This year we have dealt in the directors' report with the main features of the accounts, but you will be interested by a general review of the company's finances.

Problems of Inflation

Our liquid position has been much improved by the recent issue of new capital, and unless the economic environment in which we operate is completely upset, as it well may be—we do not expect to be short of funds for our needs. A new bout of inflation is the form which an economic upheaval seems most likely to take; and inflation is full of financial problems for us.

For instance, the price of sugar, which in practice virtually means the cost of producing sugar, is some four times what it was before 1939; therefore four times as much money must now be laid out to produce the same tonnage of sugar. We do not receive payment for our sugar until it arrives in this country or in Canada, and it is by no means unusual for the group to have more than 20,000 tons manufactured but not paid for. At the present price this means the use of over £600,000 merely to finance a normal quantity of unsold produce which before 1939 would only have needed about £150,000.

Heavy Cost of Financing Stocks

"We must finance not only produce but also the general stocks and stores for our sugar interests and the stocks of merchandise in our shops in Barbados, British Guiana, Northern Rhodesia, Nyasaland, and Trinidad. The consolidated balance sheet shows that in all £4,000,000 are required to finance these. Moreover, we are sure that in the light of the very large turnover achieved by our operating units we are not overstocked."

"Fifteen years ago it was possible to find money from within the business to finance our ordinary needs—supplemented at peak times by our bankers—but high taxation now makes that impossible. True, bankers are always most sympathetic to requests for additional short-term assistance, but even they cannot be expected to grant us four times the facilities they were prepared to grant 15 years ago."

"Like many other companies, we have turned to our shareholders to provide the additional finance required and we shall do everything we can to ensure that they receive an adequate return on their money, never forgetting that the need for adaptability in these uncertain times dictates the husbanding of resources and a conservative financial policy."

"Last year I told you that your directors were considering the possibility of simplifying the internal structure of the group to make the handling of financial and administrative matters easier. A great deal of further thought has been given to this subject since then, and we have now reached the final stages of preparing a comprehensive scheme for the internal reorganization of the business.

Evolution of the Business

"This scheme has been formulated not only with the most helpful advice of our auditors, but also in consultation with Sir Harold Hewitt (of Peacock Marwick Mitchell and Company), who has granted the benefit of his wide knowledge. Our objective is to put the scheme into operation—with Sir Harold's blessing—on January 1, 1951."

"I wonder whether our shareholders realize the extent to which Bookers have evolved since 1939. Before the amalgamation in that year with the Curtis-Campbell interests, Bookers were essentially West Indian interests such as store-keeping and ship-owning. To-day the widespread undertakings of Bookers fall distinctly into four main operational divisions—sugar-producing, shop-keeping, shipping, and rum distribution.

"It has now become urgently necessary to reorganize the administration and financing of the group to suit this change in the functional character of the business. Responsibility for the actual operation of each of these four main divisions of the group must be in the hands of men trained and experienced in their particular trade. Finance must likewise be allocated in a way which will facilitate control and make it possible accurately to assess the earning power of any part of the group.

Operational Efficiency

"In your directors' view, only by the proper concentration of administrative ability and with the proper allocation of finance can maximum operational efficiency be achieved. For the parent board this implies a change of emphasis in their responsibilities, which will in future be concerned not directly with operating, but with guiding the operations of others."

"Accordingly, this year and in future years I propose in my statement to deal with the operations of the group on a functional rather than a geographical basis."

The chairman, in his review of the group's Central African subsidiaries, said:

Central African Subsidiaries

"Our Central African subsidiaries had another satisfactory trading year. During April and May, 1950, our vice-chairman—who is chairman of the Carter group—visited Central Africa to study the undertakings there in which Bookers have invested money, the environments in which those undertakings operate, and to meet on the spot the men responsible for their operation."

"Mr. Campbell covered very extensive ground during his trip, visiting all the main centres of operation of the company, and many trading posts off the beaten track. He had full discussions not only with all levels of employees of the company, but also with Government officials, industrialists, and agriculturists—in fact, representatives of the whole community which the company serves in Central Africa. Generally speaking, he found our undertakings well established, held in high esteem by all sections of the community, and very efficient."

"The economic, social, and political environment in which they trade, justify, in your board's view, reasonable optimism. It is true that the days of the selects' market and lack of competition are added. It is true, too, that Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland are bound as they develop to run into phases of political and social unrest and difficulty copper in Northern Rhodesia and tea and tobacco in Nyasaland, the mainstays of the territories' economy, cannot always expect the favourable conditions which they now enjoy, and indeed the predominance of copper in the economy of Northern Rhodesia may lead to fundamental unbalance in that economy.

Warm Tribute to Staff

As for the men—the directors and staff—responsible for the management and the operating of the company's undertakings in Central Africa, it is difficult to speak too highly of their competence, loyalty and energy. They are men properly trained for the work they have to do.

To sum up, Mr. Campbell reported that he personally had no hesitation whatever in recommending that the board of Bookers, as stewards of the money invested by their shareholders in Campbell Bros., Carter and Co. (Central Africa) Limited, and its associated companies should continue to support these enterprises as far as it was practicable to do so with the resources at their disposal.

Before leaving this trading section of the group's activities, I should tell you that, as part of the general reorganization scheme, it is intended that Campbell Bros., Carter and Company Limited, London, shall become responsible for all our West Indian shop-keeping businesses—as they are already the parent of those in Africa. With this in view we have already amalgamated our West Indian buying departments in London and Liverpool with Campbell Bros., Carter and Company Limited, whose great knowledge and experience in the buy-sell should materially benefit our West Indian shops.

The report and accounts were unanimously adopted and a final ordinary dividend of 6½%, tax free (making a total of 9½%, tax-free for the year), was approved.

According to figures published by the East African Statistical Department, between August, 1939, and August, 1948, the Nairobi COST-OF-LIVING index rose by 83%.

During the same period there was no permanent increase in ELECTRICITY TARIFFS throughout Kenya, and only in November, 1948, was The East African Power and Lighting Company Limited compelled by soaring costs to amend certain tariffs by what were, even then, most modest percentages.

By all standards, the part played by the Electrical Supply industry in the development of East Africa entitles The East African Power and Lighting Company in Kenya, and its Associated Companies in Tanganyika, to a worthy place among the pioneers of progress in these Territories.
