MATTERS OF MOMENT

THE APPROPRIATE and the recklessness with which the African misleaders of their people in Northern Rhodesia have sought to embarrass the Imperial Government were worked up to a Working to climax at the beginning of this week, with the manifest intention of influencing Tuesday's debate in the House of Commons, that having been demanded by the extreme wing of the Opposition with the similar aim of adversely affecting the referendum in Southern Rhodesia a fortnight hence. The Commons debate has not begun as these words are written. It may be assumed, however, that some who will seek to catch the Speaker's eye will do so in order to say unreasonable things, repeat arguments which have no validity and reiterate proposals which have no prospect of adoption or of practical success if tried. The Opposition to federation in this country and Northern Rhodesia has been organized by a little clique of men who are bitterly antagonistic to that devolution of power from Whitehall to Africa which is the declared policy of both the Conservative and Socialist Parties. Yet, because it suits their temporary convenience, leading men in the Labour movement disregard that attack on their own policy. It is to stiffen their resistance to the Government's plan—which does not differ in essence from the scheme blessed by the Socialists when they formed the Government—that the manœuvres of recent weeks have been designed, for those responsible for such activities know that the Cabinet would not be induced by flattery or threat to abandon its duty as trustee for the territories concerned.

If Ministers have stood firm on what they believe to be sound ground, sensitive then followers. No credence need be given to the statement in some newspapers that ten or more Conservative backbenchers are so

Issue Should be Above Party Politics. much out of sympathy with the federal scheme that they would abstain from voting if the debate were pressed to a division, as it may well be, for Mr. Griffiths, who has dictated the course of his party in this matter (clearly to the regret of several of the leading members of the Shadow Cabinet), is so willing to subscribe the damage which may be done. If he insists on a division, as we expect, not one Conservative member is likely to abstain from supporting his leaders. But about a score of Socialists are known to have decided to invoke the conscience clause, and many more may be persuaded to follow their example if the speeches destroy the airy sentimentalities of the opponents of the plan and emphasize that this really is the last chance of building in Central Africa on the basis of interracial partnership a liberal-minded union of States which represent a natural economic and political unit. Because British policy in Africa should not be, or seem to be, a party political matter, this issue should not be made a question of voting strength. The weal of the territories concerned, not some momentary advantage, in the jockeying for political position at home, should be the only consideration of leaders worthy of the name.

Instigation from this country was certainly behind the demonstration at Lusaka on Monday. The gesture of the president of the African National Congress in publicly burn-

Demand for Black Domination. ing a copy of the White Paper was characteristic of a certain school of Euro-pean politics, and not in any sense African. Above the Congress leaders floated a banner bearing the words "Self-Government, the Ultimate Object." For about two years that has been the manifest aim, the few politically ambitious Africans who have manufactured opposition to federation being in the main obstacle to that African domination which would give them personal power. But the organizers of the Lusaka display were not very astute to raise their battle-cry again, a few hours before the debate in Parliament, especially as their friends here have concentrated during the past couple of months on discounting the impression that there was any thought of black domination.

What Congress Threatens. — Again copying bad examples from this country, — examples which have been condemned by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Moderator of the Church of Scotland, the Moderator of the Free Church Federal Council, and the Bishop of Mashonaland — Congress leaders in Northern Rhodesia have called for two days of national prayer against federation, implying that the Christian view must be against implementation of the White Paper. That is a scandalous presumption, for many devoted Christians favour federation, not least because they believe that it would bring advantages to Africans which they could gain in no other way. Will the knowledge that the days of prayer are to coincide with a general strike if Congress has its way cause the political parsons of Christian Action and the Africa Bureau to think again? The president of the African National Congress spoke of "action and unrest, perhaps of the worst kind." That presumably means widespread civil disobedience, with consequential risk of violent outbreaks. Cannot Mr. Griffiths, but lately Secretary of State for the Colonies, see in this situation proof of the folly of the course which he has followed since the general election? Even he should recognize the hopelessness of expecting satisfactory results from talks with such people. They want power, not parleys, domination, not discussion.

Notes By The Way

Attempt on Editor's Life

THE ATTEMPT ON THE LIFE of Mr. Mervyn Hill provides another indication that terrorist activity in Kenya is organized, not haphazard. For some time Mr. Hill has been writing with welcome vigour in the paper which he edits, the Kenya Weekly News, of the anti-social activities and bestialities of the Mau Mau, and with almost equal frequency of the strikingly unsatisfactory record of the African political leaders in the Colony. His exposures have been factual, not smooth generalizations, and the more effective on that account. An African, who was doubtless detailed for the task, has now attempted to kill him while he was motoring from his Nakuru office to his farm.

Fair and Frank Comment

THOUGH THE KIND OF COMPLIMENT that any man would wish to be spared, the attempt was a compliment to Mr. Hill's influence. It should not be thought, however, that he has campaigned merely against Africans in responsible positions who have revealed their incompetence, cowardice, or both. He has dealt quite as severely with the shortcomings of the Government of Kenya, and has not spared non-official European leaders when their action or inaction appeared to call for criticism. I should judge his policy as entirely in line with that of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA, which is to endeavour to form a fair judgment on the facts, and then comment with entire objectivity. That, surely, is the only kind of journalism which truly serves the public interest.

Centenary Park

PHOTOGRAPHS which I have just seen of the transformation which is taking place in Centenary Park, Bulawayo, provide evidence that visitors to the Central African Rhodes Centenary Exhibition in that city in July, and August will be surprised at the size and attraction of the buildings, and no doubt, of their contents also. The standard set by the organizers is evidently the best attainable in the most advanced countries. The quarter of a million people who are expected to visit the exhibition will find no trace of amateurishness about this great undertaking, no concession to the difficulties inherent in such a project in the middle of Africa. The Tanganyika Pavilion, for instance, of which a particularly good picture has now reached London, would cause favourable comment if erected in London. Incidentally, at the time of the last East African Exhibition in Wembley, a suburb of the capital, almost 30 years ago, all the East African territories shared one modest building, probably smaller than that which Tanganyika alone requires in Bulawayo.

Changes at Magadi

MR. E. J. PURSELL, who became general manager in Kenya of the Magadi Soda Co., Ltd., when Mr. W. H. Billington retired to this country in 1948, will, I learn, retire in a few days, handing over to Mr. Charles Shotton, who has been at Magadi since 1930. Mr. Pursell, his senior in that respect by two years, went out originally as assistant engineer. He was too young to serve in the 1914-18 war, but as soon as he was able he joined the Inns of Court O.T.C. In Kenya he has been a member of the Industrial Research Board since its inception, and a member of the council of the East African Association of Engineers, and he is well known in commercial, engineering, and golfing circles. He has been a justice of the Peace in Masailand. Mr. Shotton, by profession a chemist, and the son of a Doncaster doctor, first joined the company as a research worker in the Cheshire headquarters. He has been production manager at Lake Magadi for some years, and, like his friend Mr. Pursell, is a keen golfer. Mr. Pursell will remain a director of the Magadi Company, of which Mr. A. E. J. Gawler is chairman.

Mr. Michael Blundell More Confident of Kenya Measures

He Tells London Press Conference of Talks with Mr. Lyttelton

MR. MICHAEL BLUNDELL, Minister of the European elected members of the Legislative Council of Kenya, held a Press conference in London last Friday. He said, inter alia:

"Mau Mau, a savage reversion to barbarism on the part of a secret society within the Kikuyu tribe, has diverted attention from the long-term development plans to secure Kenya's future prosperity and happiness. As the measures which the Government of Kenya is now taking against these terrorists get into their stride, action against Mau Mau gangs is becoming increasingly effective.

"Recently we have had greater successes in dealing with these gangs because of improved techniques in the anti-terrorist campaign, more experienced tracking through the difficult terrain in which they operate, and much larger forces engaged against the Mau Mau. But the intensity of the war—for it is little less—waged by the Mau Mau leaders, particularly against the loyal Kikuyu, is still very severe, and we must expect still more serious and barbarous incidents against both Europeans and Africans.

Indeterminate Kikuyu Mass

"There is still no sign that the great indeterminate mass of the Kikuyu people has yet made up its mind fully to support the Government. There is, indeed, some evidence to the contrary, and the terror propaganda of Mau Mau has hitherto been increasingly successful among this large mass of the Kikuyu. Many of them are bewildered by to-day's events. They do not know which way to turn because the threat of the barbarism of Mau Mau lies heavily upon them. They present a grave problem in reconstruction and rehabilitation.

"No responsible European thought in Kenya imagines that the reconstruction and rehabilitation can be carried out by police and military measures alone. We believe that the process of eliminating the effects of Mau Mau and the Mau Mau oath and of reinstating the Kikuyu people to the position of disciplined and self-respecting members of society will take perhaps many years.

"Meantime the situation is complicated by a considerable movement of Kikuyu from outside the Kikuyu land unit back into the tribal lands. The problems of reabsorption and resettlement are stretching the resources of the Government of Kenya to the full. The utmost efforts are being made to face this situation fairly and squarely, and to deal with it humanely as well as efficiently. This requires not only the provision of reception centres and food supplies, but also doing everything possible to ensure that these people do not in turn fall victims to the Mau Mau.

Preparing for Reconstruction

"As this grave period of emergency unfolds, we all project thought to the reconstruction period. Bearing in mind the needs of the other tribes who are loyally cooperating with Government, all the resources we can spare—administrative, economic and social—must be brought to bear in order to prove to the Kikuyu that when they support the Government there is response and benefit."

"In some locations of the Kikuyu country the situation has improved in another sense. Information is flowing more easily to the authorities. Another sign of this turning away from Mau Mau is that the loyalist home guards are increasingly in a position to afford greater resistance to the Mau Mau. The greater energy of the anti-Mau Mau campaign has definitely increased morale in this respect."

"The great support which we have had from Her Majesty's Government and the extra troops now being sent are factors which cannot be over-estimated in the building up of morale in the troubled areas. I have no doubt whatsoever that Mau Mau will be defeated, even though it would be unwise to predict that this will be a short and quick conflict."

Over the greater part of Kenya life is still normal. For this we must be grateful, because it means that the development of Kenya is proceeding on a broad scale just as it did before. In these other areas good relations exist between the various races, and opportunities for the successful employment of capital in the development of Kenya continue to be taken.

"The resolute action which the Government has shown in dealing with such subversive elements trying to operate in these peaceful parts of Kenya, and thus spread the area of disaffection, is heartening. This will, in my view, undoubtedly strengthen and hearten loyal and cooperative people.

"My discussions with the Secretary of State have covered a wide field, including the many forms in which our organization can be improved to deal with the present situation in Kenya. We have also reviewed the progress which has already been made and discussed a number of possible practical measures which can be taken to defeat Mau Mau.

Emergency's Heavy Cost

"I have also discussed with the Secretary of State the implication of the heavy cost of this emergency, which will create a difficult situation for the Kenya Treasury. This is especially to be remembered in view of our desire to continue unabated the large social and economic development which has been planned for some time past and is in process of being carried out. This development programme is essential to Kenya if we are to raise the standard of life of the African people.

"It is not only in the financial sense that the Mau Mau trouble is causing disruption of these essential development plans; for at present half the available European man-power between the ages of 18 and 45 has been mobilized in support of the Government in the forces of law and order. It is a tribute to the European community that this mobilization has been carried out almost entirely on a voluntary basis. This remarkable effort is almost the maximum that any community can produce even in times of war without causing the most serious disruption to the normal life of the Colony.

"As an example of what the present effort means to the European community of Kenya, it is greater than the contribution made during the 1935-45 war in terms of man-power, when 44% of the European man-power was engaged in the armed forces.

"In my talks with the Secretary of State we considered this position, the long-term prospects of the Colony, and the necessity for social and political reorganization after the emergency period is over.

"During this short visit I want to make a preliminary examination of proposals for a 'Voice of Kenya' organization. From the whole we have had the greatest support and understanding from the Press of Great Britain.

"A 'Voice of Kenya' organization is designed to show the people of Kenya how we are attempting to solve our difficult racial problems and create a happy and prosperous multiracial society. This great task has been attempted before and is being attempted now in many places, but in Kenya we are confident that we shall find a solution which may well create a pattern for the world. That is our ambition and our hope."

Tribal Structure Facilitated Mau Mau Growth

In reply to questions Mr. Blundell said:

"The Kikuyu are by nature deeply suspicious, quickly intelligent, and very politically inclined. The cellular system of their tribal structure has facilitated the spread of the Mau Mau oath.

"A month ago I was worried about the risk of the movement spreading to other areas, and our political effort has been designed to avoid that. Now I feel much more confident. One reason is that our other tribes are more extroverted by nature, more like the traditional happy-go-lucky African."

"The exodus of Kikuyu from the European farming areas must reduce production, but I hope not seriously. The White Highlands feed the three territories, and all would suffer if the movement were to disrupt Kenya's farming economy."

"Murders and terrible mutilations are no suitable background for moderate and impartial discussions of constitutional problems, but we know that they cannot be solved without some means of meeting, and through these troubles we have kept in being a non-official interracial organization for the consideration of mutual problems."

"There are always some people who talk about the partition of Kenya, but the considered opinion of the political leaders of the Colony is that such a policy would be defeatist and a negation of our moral responsibilities.

The great body of moderate European opinion in Kenya is anxious for the emergence of African political leaders. One of the worst things about the present situation is that we have not the leadership which is necessary and which we should welcome. All races need leadership which the others can respect.

"One of our disappointments is that young Africans in whom at first there seemed grounds for hope often grow frustrated and soured, and either do not become leaders at all or embittered leaders. We need contact with young Africans, as they need contact with us."

The decent African, with his hopes and fears, must be made to feel that he is part of the system and shares it with us. We must have the imagination to make the evolving African feel that he should march forward with us, not against us.

Ever since I have been in politics I have been a protagonist of the policy of departure from Kenya's very low wage economy. That is vitally necessary but the productivity of the African must be simultaneously raised.

"We must have a Government in which all shades are represented, a Government which grows out of us in the Colony, not one which is set on top of us. I firmly believe that we can find the solution to our constitutional problems."

This Week's Debate on Federation

Lord Hailey Advocates No Division in the House

ON THE EVE OF THE DEBATE in the House of Commons on Central African federation the feature on the middle page of The Times was devoted to that subject, and the first letter in the correspondence column was one in which Lord Hailey candidly confessed his change of mind and pleaded that there should be no division in either House.

LORD HAILEY wrote:

"There are many who will join in depicating the prospect that the scheme for a Central African federation may during the coming fortnight be the subject of an actual division of votes in both Houses of Parliament. That criticisms and objections should be fully voiced is proper, but little is to be gained and something may be lost by proceeding to a vote. There appears to be a very general feeling in favour of a federation in principle, and the purpose of a division of votes is likely to be misunderstood by Africans."

"Like many others, I felt at the outset some misgivings about the scheme, but on the whole it seems to hold out to the Africans of all three territories a future the value of which they have not been able to appreciate. Their view has been obscured by failure to realize that the matters of immediate concern to them (as for example the reservation of Native lands or the operation of the system of Native administration) will remain under local control and will in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland continue to be under the direction of the Colonial Office."

The special correspondent of the newspaper, who returned to London last week after spending several months in East and Central Africa dealt in particular with the nature and extent of African opposition to the federal plan.

"Whatever individual chiefs may think, they would scarcely dare express anti-federationist views, even if they wanted to," was his summary after thorough examination on the spot. He also declared that in many villages in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland the inhabitants "patently do not know what it is all about," and that his conclusion was that of the survey of African opinion made by the Government of Southern Rhodesia in 1951, namely that "Africans in the bush are on the whole apathetic and waiting for a lead."

Meeting at Victoria Falls

He was critical of the settlers in Central Africa for having held their "federation" conference at the Victoria Falls in 1949 without the direct participation of Africans (though their European representatives in the Legislative Councils were present), and still more critical of the decision of the Socialist Government in the United Kingdom that district commissioners in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland might explain the federation scheme to Africans but not recommend it. Quoting Sir Andrew Cohen's words in another connexion, he wrote that that was like asking a dumb man to win an election.

The opposition of politically minded Africans to federation was, the correspondent said, due to their hope of forming an African government on the Gold Coast pattern and their realization that any such plan would be permanently dashed by federation. The chiefs were predisposed against federation by conservatism, and when they needed advice it was withheld on the orders of the then Secretary of State, but they received advice from the African National Congress.

The most favourable leading article on federation which The Times has published appeared on Tuesday. It said:

"Critics of the scheme have the obligation of proposing a better one that is workable. Those who favour some looser association, on the lines of the East Africa High Commission, ignore the fact that this organization is kept going only because there exists an overriding authority answerable ultimately to Whitehall. Lack of such an authority caused the collapse of its counterpart, the Central African Council."

Need for Positive Approach

"If there is cause for hesitation, it lies less in the terms of the scheme than the doubts in English minds as to whether the Rhodesian Europeans really have the will to carry it out in the spirit of partnership which is intended. There are signs of divided will. Plainer evidence of a positive approach would smooth away the anxiety of many. The establishment in the Bulawayo exhibition of an international club which will know no colour bar is proof that such idealisms exist in Central Africa and can take practical shape. At the same time, the knowledge that a dispute is raging in Northern Rhodesia where the miners are actually trying to spread the industrial colour bar is disquieting. The Southern Rhodesian plebiscite will help to answer these questions."

"If federation should fail, the danger is that Central Africa may experience all the disadvantages foreshadowed by its opponents without reaping the corresponding advantages of the scheme. Power is steadily passing from the centre to the outposts of the Colonial Empire. It is no longer possible to clutch at the strings, whether in Rhodesia or the Gold Coast. The consistent failure of successive British Governments to implement the Dagleish Report is sufficient evidence of that."

"It has often been noted that Africans in Southern Rhodesia seem to reach greater maturity than they do in the two northern territories and the fact that they have had to find their own way more may be partly responsible. As for the settlers, they cannot be forced along paths of rectitude. It is ultimately their own future which is at stake. Unless they can evolve a way of living in the mixed community, it is they who will suffer. They have made bad mistakes in other parts of Africa, but people learn from mistakes, and hitherto the true Rhodesians have preserved an exceptionally sane approach in their dealings with Africans."

"The bones of these problems will remain the same whether or not federation is brought about. The question is whether federation now, with all its risks and drawbacks, will not give the people of Central Africa a better chance of solving them."

A leading article in the spring number of the British Colonies Review published by The Times states:

"The economic arguments for federation are not to be dismissed as purely materialistic. They spell also social, educational, and health advances. They are spiritual as well as material in effect."

"That African opposition is real and widespread is true. That it is justified is more than open to doubt." Both the intelligentsia and the chiefs in the two northern Protectorates have some grounds for opposing federation. The former, if they are aiming at the goal of an all-African self-governing State, quite rightly see that federation makes it virtually unattainable. But was such an objective ever desirable or intended? Not according to the declared policy of Her Majesty's Government of laying down partnership between the races.

"The chiefs, who are exceptionally powerful in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, are afraid that their powers will be curtailed and brought into line with those of the more closely controlled chiefs of Southern Rhodesia. That fear seems justified since African tribal chieftainship is one of the subjects specifically reserved for the two governments. What seems more likely is that, federation or no federation, chieftainship in Central Africa will have to be drastically democratized."

"The fact that African opinion has been consulted and proved unfavourable does not mean that the British Government are ipso facto obliged to follow it. They would be abrogating their duties of trusteeship if they did. It does, however, mean that Parliament have very carefully to consider whether the grounds of opposition are valid. In this they have to weigh carefully some advantages against the political disadvantages, if any."

"They have also to weigh the imperfections of the scheme—and no scheme is ever perfect—against possibly even less perfect alternatives, such as the permanent retarding of Nyasaland's development, the union of Southern Rhodesia, and possibly of Northern Rhodesia also, with Nationalist South Africa. There are grave problems, political as well as economic, that would follow the collapse of copper prices in Northern Rhodesia."

Misconceptions

"The Africans' fear is based principally on the misconception that the policy of the Southern Rhodesian Government is identical with that of the Nationalists in South Africa. That this nothing could be farther from the truth."

"Striking a balance, it seems that the Africans are likely to gain by federation much-needed social and economic advancement at the cost of some slowing down of political advancement at higher levels so far as the Africans from the north are concerned. But that will be to a certain extent compensated for by the accelerated advancement of the Africans of Southern Rhodesia."

"Some of the illiberal nations that delight in abusing Great Britain in the Trusteeship Committee of the United Nations might profit by studying the display of liberal concern in this country over the federation proposals," Truth suggested, adding:

"The alternative to federation is to leave things as they are, if that were done, things would not stay as they are for long. The African Congress leaders are awaiting just such a sign of British weakness to further their own plans for the formation of a unit of black self-government in Africa. This, in turn, would lead to the flight of Western capital, leaving a great part of the continent to certain destitution and chaos."

"Only federation can offer the prospect of political stability which must exist to attract capital to the northern territories; and without that capital investment, the political, economic, and social advancement of those backward lands will never be possible."

"It is to be hoped that the British Parliament, misled by its proper desire to see no harm done to its African charges, does not so alienate Southern Rhodesian opinion that the federation proposals are finally rejected there in a wave of insulted reaction. The outcome, then, would be a situation giving every cause for liberal concern."

The BISHOP OF LIVERPOOL, chairman of the Overseas Council of the Church Assembly, and SIR JOHN WADDINGTON, chairman of the Tropical Africa Territorial Council of that body, and a former Governor of Northern Rhodesia, wrote:

Removing Inter-Racial Friction

"Would you allow us to draw attention to a resolution passed by the Tropical Africa Territorial Council of the Church Assembly Overseas Council and endorsed by its executive, reading: 'This council warmly welcomes the views expressed in their letter to The Times by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and the Moderator of the Free Church Federal Council on the subject of Central African federation. Without attempting to advise for or against federation (an issue upon which individual Christians may have a variety of views), the council attaches first importance to the spirit in which the Governments concerned act, and urges Christians of every race to co-operate in removing occasions of inter-racial friction in industrial and social life.' To this end it considers it most important that Africans should be offered increasing opportunities and responsibilities."

MR. E. H. LANE POOLE, writing for the London Committee of the United Central Africa Association to the Observer, said:

"The dilemma that confronts us is this: is it wise and statesmanlike to yield to an opinion which denies the principle of partnership to which both Her Majesty's Government and Opposition are pledged? Or is it the proper exercise of trusteeship to rescue the inarticulate and numerically largest section of the community—the villagers—which is said in Northern Rhodesia, to be mainly uninformed about federation and in Nyasaland to be too frightened to express its views, from a faction which, in the words of a former Governor of Nyasaland, has set out 'to kill federation by every sort of threat and falsehood and fantastic rumour'?

"You observe that the trend is towards racial strife and the use of force. If that really be so, it is the most cogent reason why a decision should be made at once. Postponement must lead to an exacerbation of interracial feeling and to an irrevocable departure from partnership by resolving the issue to one of white or black domination."

Fallacy of Comparison

MR. HERBERT PEGG wrote to the Times Weekly Review:

"It appears to be largely taken for granted that the position of the Africans is analogous to that of the wage-earning classes in Britain. No British Government would force through a measure, say of industrial reorganization, against the solid opposition of the working classes. It is equally inconceivable that any British Government would concede to a demand that no measure for educational reform should be passed without the acquiescence of the infant schools."

"The Africans, with a few exceptions (say one in 10,000), are in a state of political infancy. The territorial Governments are making it possible for them to proceed from the infant class to the university, and with education will come political growth and understanding. But it is unthinkable that federation should be held up until African political opinion has become equal to formulating a considered view of the project."

MR. TED LEATHER, M.P., said a few days ago: "A stable Central African Government will be Western democracy's greatest safeguard and weapon against Communist ideas and influences in that theatre. The Communists are among the most vocal opponents of the scheme, and will do their utmost to obstruct its implementation if given the chance."

SIR GILES SQUIRES is reported to have said: "The prosperity of Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia, and Nyasaland depends on federation. We must do what is right without paying attention to the opposition, some ignorant and some provoked by people who do not wish the Government well."

Sudan Statute Signed

THE SUDAN SELF-GOVERNMENT STATUTE was signed on Saturday by Sir Robert Howe, Governor-General of the territory, in the presence of Mr. Selwyn Lloyd, Minister of State; Mr. Tareb Hussein, of Pakistan, chairman of the Governor-General's commission; Sir Laurence Graffey-Smith, the British member, and Major Saleh Salem, representative of General Neguib. Previously Egypt had objected to references in the preamble to the Executive Council and the Legislative Assembly. A compromise was effected by agreement to omit the preamble which, in any case, was not considered essential. Mr. Selwyn Lloyd is continuing meetings with Sudanese party and independent leaders concerning the appointment of the Sudanese members of the Governor-General's commission.

Railway Rates Too High

IN HIS PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS to the Tobacco Trade Association of Rhodesia, MR. K. G. A. Browne, general manager of the African organization of the Imperial Tobacco Co. Ltd., said that the railway rate on tobacco of 3.048d. per ton-mile in Rhodesia was 5% higher than the charge in Canada, nearly 20% higher than that of the United States, and almost 70% above the charge in India. India was, he emphasized, becoming a real competitor, the U.S. having taken more than 20m. lb. of Indian tobacco in the first six months of last year, or 63% of the total shipped. He suggested reversion to the policy of Rhodesia Railways when run by a private enterprise of lower rates on exports, balanced by higher charges on imports.

Further Press Comment on Causes of Mau Mau

African Domination Impossible, Says Conservative Survey

THE SURVEY OF COMMONWEALTH AND COLONIAL AFFAIRS, issued by the research department of the Conservative Party deals at some length in the current issue with the position in Kenya, writing (in part):

"The East African tribes have adapted themselves with varying degrees of success to the disappearance of tribal life as a normal state, but in none has the difficulty with the younger age-groups been quite so acute as among the Kikuyu. This is partly due to the fact that that tribe has been particularly affected by the urban influence of Nairobi where Kikuyu young men have drifted in considerable numbers.

"The problem of young and able-bodied men with insufficient socially sanctioned employment, subject to the disturbing influence of an urban civilization and the various attractions of urban life, is one to which an answer is still being sought in many parts of the world. Among other things, it means that there is a large number of able-bodied men living in circumstances which make them ripe for crime.

Aim of Kikuyu Dominance

"These factors have been recognized and skilfully exploited by ambitious men, and for that reason the Kenya Government is bound to root out the ringleaders who have sought to turn the situation to their own personal advantage. Similar conditions do not obtain among other tribes, many of whom are in fact hostile to the Kikuyu, believing that the Mau Mau and its leaders aim not at African but at Kikuyu dominance in Kenya.

"There is, in fact, in Mau Mau a strong element of racial nationalism, based not on racial and national pride but on envy and hate. This basis is demonstrated, as in other cases (cf. Hitler's nationalism), in extreme ruthlessness toward the Kikuyu themselves, who have been by far the most numerous victims of the Mau Mau.

"Mau Mau is in one of its aspects violently anti-European, and much play is made in its propaganda with the existence of the so-called White Highlands. The main facts are briefly these. The White Highlands do not constitute the best, or the only good, land in Kenya. Much of the land in the Kikuyu Reserve is as good as any held by European settlers; and much of this latter is poor land. Much of the European land is fit only for rough grazing, often carrying only one beast to several acres.

"The Kikuyu Reserve is overcrowded, but no more so than others, and less so than some. It is inherently more fertile than the Machakos Reserve, inhabited by the Kamba tribe, who, despite proximity to the White Highlands and to Nairobi, have made no move corresponding to Mau Mau.

"The main problem confronting Africans is not so much an absolute shortage of land—much of the land in the reserves is not in fact being cultivated to full productivity—but to effect the difficult transfer from primitive shifting subsistence agriculture to a much more productive system of fixed agriculture, which is essential if higher standards of living are to be achieved. To this end, £3m. have been allocated in the 10-year plan for African settlement and the reconditioning of African lands.

Reaction Against Industrialism

"Advances have taken place in the Kikuyu Reserves as elsewhere; but the Mau Mau leaders have among other things stirred up opposition to better agriculture, going so far as to incite people to destroy contour terraces and other improvement works. In this respect Mau Mau resembles some historic reactions against the industrial revolution, such as loom-breaking. Mau Mau stands in the way of the economic advance of the Kikuyu people—and of all Africans in Kenya.

"As to social services, nearly £41m., or 26% of the total expenditure of Kenya, is devoted to these. Expenditure on African education has risen from £400,000 in 1951 to £700,000 in 1952, and will exceed £1m. in 1953. In Nairobi alone about 5,500 dwellings were built for Africans in 1949-51, and upwards of a further £1m. is to be spent on African housing over the next two to three years.

"The problem of reconciling the political aspirations of a multi-racial community and of ensuring that the races work and live together in harmony is not easy. There are some people in this country and some Africans who, ignorant or forgetful of the great difference between East and West Africa, hope to see reproduced on the East Coast the political pattern which is now emerging in Colonies like the Gold Coast and Nigeria. They gloss over the fact that these are Native countries where the European is a bird of passage. In parts of Eastern Africa, on the other hand, the white man has made a home for himself and his children after him. He is there to stay.

"On the West Coast, which has had long contact with Europeans, many Africans have reached a high stage of culture and education and are within measurable distance of managing their own affairs. The African of Kenya is, educationally, not in the same street. Indeed, the bestial acts committed by the Mau Mau show how little removed are their perpetrators from the savagery and superstition which darkened their country until 50 years ago.

"Any idea of African domination as a solution of the plural community problems of Kenya is out of the question. Only through co-operation and partnership between the races can true prosperity and happiness be achieved. To this end all those who are concerned with the future of Kenya should apply their minds.

Comments on Odede Detention

Under the heading "The Roots of Mau Mau," the current issue of the Economist states:—

"The detention of Mr. Odede, who has hitherto enjoyed the Government's trust, is an unpleasant shock. He is accused, though no evidence has yet been produced, of conspiring to spread Mau Mau conspiracy to Nyanza Province, where his own people, the Luo, dwell. If the charge is substantiated, the hopes of developing a moderate African leadership will be thin, and the comfortable assumption that Mau Mau is exclusively a Kikuyu aberration goes by the board.

"Meanwhile an all-out effort is being made to clear the Abardares of terrorists and to bring in military reinforcements. But even if this is successful it will be only a beginning. Kikuyu are trekking from the White Highlands, denuding the most productive farming area of labour, and burdening the already overcrowded Kikuyu Reserve. The danger to food supplies for the whole Colony from this migration has caused many settlers to reconsider their attitude to security; to retain loyal servants and labourers becomes a calculated risk."

"The wide-swing area of disturbance, which is already costing £250,000 a day, can only be regarded as a substantial success for Mau Mau. The terrorists in arms will be beaten; but that will not necessarily end Mau Mau—especially if poverty and famine increase African discontent and frustration. Mau Mau may live on; perhaps it plans to go underground. It could be wrong to draw parallels between the campaign in earlier Colonial pacification operations in East and West Africa. In those days the white man's military and technological victory was overwhelming; thereafter the tribes return, under the sympathetic guidance of the district commissioners, to their time-honoured pursuits and customs, little modified and with all moral sanctions intact. But in Kenya to-day no such possibility exists.

"Unaccustomed Thought Demanded"

"Overpopulation, detribalization, and town life, the loss of prestige by the Europeans—all these will prevent Kenya's society from picking up the lost threads. It looks as if Mau Mau is almost as much a European thing as an African thing: a revolutionary conspiracy taking some of its ideas from Western prototypes, criminal and political. To outwit it will demand, from conventionally minded officials and settlers, some unaccustomed thought, of which there is at little sign."

"The statement that the cost of the emergency to Kenya is £250,000 a day is entirely unwarranted. The direct charge upon public revenues is rather less than £250,000 a month at present.—Ed. EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

A Kenya African, signing himself "Kikuyu Christian," has written to the Manchester Guardian:

"The solution of the Mau Mau mystery will be found only when both European and African are able to see the sins of suspicion, hatred, mistrust, and jealousy which have kept them apart."

"Those of us Kikuyu who have denounced the Mau Mau because we believe in Jesus have been nicknamed Athungu—that is, Europeans. We are definitely sure that Mau Mau will be defeated. But we look forward to the full brotherhood of all who have accepted the Lord Jesus as their personal Saviour.

"The world will perhaps be encouraged to hear from a Kikuyu that, amidst the fears and horrors in the Kikuyu country at the present time, there still remains a handful of cheerful and loving men and women. These people first to our Heavenly King, and secondly to Queen Elizabeth II and her Government established in this Colony."

I suggest that if the tragedy facing us is to be overcome the following points should be noted: (1) African and European Christians must show the way by their oneness; (2) real understanding and friendship between the races must be sought and fostered; (3) from this a working partnership may be built up; (4) round-table conferences between Government and people should be held, with full opportunity of free expression on any issue affecting relationships."

Protests Against Kikuyu Removals

"The Kikuyu need to undergo a change of heart and of mind," wrote the Nairobi correspondent of the paper, adding: "equally the Kenya Government and those who advise them will have to think hard and clearly, and act firmly and quickly, if the Kikuyu question is not to be devil Kenya's future."

"During the past three weeks the opinion of the settlers on the frontier areas from the White Highlands has markedly changed. A group of settlers in Subukia, where there have been several incidents, recently addressed an emphatic protest to the Provincial Commissioner of the Rift Valley against proposals for the wholesale removal of Kikuyu from their farms. A similar line of thought has prevailed among the settlers of the Kinangop, where the Mau Mau terrorists have been very active."

"Yet the exodus of Kikuyu from the White Highlands continues. Various factors contribute to this movement, which is both crowding the hastily-built transit camps and gravely exacerbating the state of affairs within Kikuyuland."

"First, the Government has failed to give adequate leadership or clear direction on the subject. On the one hand, the Commissioner of Police and senior military officers have persistently stressed the risk of treacherous attacks on European settlers by Kikuyu, even in the unaffected areas, the grave danger of trusting any Kikuyu, and urged constant vigilance and even kind of precaution."

"The reaction of many settlers has been that the risk to their wives and families is entirely due to the presence of Kikuyu on their farms and in their households. Rather than live such a suspicion-ridden life, these settlers have decided to discharge all their Kikuyu. On the other hand, that is precisely what the Governor has asked them not to do—the grounds that the wholesale removal of Kikuyu from the Highlands would swamp the reserve and that hordes of hungry and desperate men, women, and children would soon be wandering about the country."

Civil Disobedience

"Second, the Kikuyu Registration Ordinance and the decision to move Kikuyu squatters into villages have provoked civil disobedience in some districts. The ordinance, enacted in January, required every adult male Kikuyu employed outside Kikuyuland to possess an identity card showing his name, registration number, and thumb-print, a photograph, and a record of employment since January 1, 1952. The objects are to enable employers engaging Kikuyu to know their record and to aid and protect Kikuyu with good records."

"The decision to move squatters into villages is to provide greater security for the good Kikuyu and to enable a closer control of the rest. From a long-term point of view there are also real advantages. Until villages and hamlets are established for African labourers in the White Highlands—in place of small groups of huts scattered like mushrooms about the countryside—it will never be possible to provide the amenities and social services which the labourers and their families need."

"Some settlers have argued that the Registration Ordinance was ill-considered and ill-timed because it cannot be enforced, because the Government cannot protect Kikuyu menaced by Mau Mau, and because it has not made any effective counter to the mischievous propaganda."

To that argument it is reported that in some districts 80% of the Kikuyu have agreed to be photographed, that even in a bad district nearly 50% have agreed, and that the first lesson which the Kikuyu must learn is to respect the law. Last week the Government announced that it intended to proceed with the application of the ordinance as fast as facilities allowed."

"A third factor is that many Kikuyu have left the White Highlands on their own account, some for fear of being required by Mau Mau to commit awful crimes. Others have done so at the behest of Mau Mau leaders who apparently believe that European agriculture will thereby be crippled, and that the worse conditions become in Kikuyuland the more will their stayngic cause be aided."

The correspondent stated that there had been "deplorable instances of excessive roughness" during raids on huts by military and police.

The Economist has published an article from a correspondent who was recently in Nairobi. He wrote, inter alia:

"Whether or not the Mau Mau terrorism is rooted in genuine Kikuyu grievances, what has shaken the settlers is the wide and deep gulf that has been revealed between European and some African minds. One farmer said: 'Before Roger Rucks, his wife, and their child were murdered, the Mau Mau executioners debated for three days whether the victims should be the Rucks or a neighbouring family. This discussion was held in Kikuyu huts on the Rucks' land. Every Kikuyu employed by the Rucks knew what was being discussed. Some of them had been in the Rucks' employment for years. Not one gave the slightest hint of what was afoot.'

"When Mau Mau oath administrators arrived on Mr. Michael Blundell's farm several of his Kikuyu workers were tortured into taking the oath. They were held down on the ground and their hands wrung. These sinister ceremonies were held with the full knowledge of all or most of the Kikuyu on the farm. Only one dared warn the Blundells of what was going on. The chief torturer was a well-mannered and educated young Kikuyu who had enjoyed the Blundells' full confidence."

Mr. Blundell's Visit

An editorial note in the New Statesman and Nation expresses the hope that Mr. Blundell will tell the settlers of Kenya on his return from London that "criticism of settler policy is based mainly on the contention—surely irrefutable to-day—that a policy of making the Kikuyu more frightened of Europeans than of Mau Mau is not rewarding." The paragraph continues:

"More troops go out; the fear grows, and what began with apparently sporadic outbreak of terrorism has turned into a racial war. Mau Mau appears to us partly as reaction to a very primitive barbarism and partly a revolt against a servile economic, political, and racial status. How can troops deal with such a situation? And how do those who rely on present troops hope to pay for it and to stop it spreading to other areas, or attract capital for the proposed industrial development of the Colony?"

The Congress of Peoples Against Imperialism has issued through its London office a statement in the following terms:

"The Congress of Peoples Against Imperialism is shocked to learn of the arrest of Mr. F. W. Odede, acting president of the Kenya African Union, on the vaguest of allegations. He is well known for his moderate views and for his advocacy of non-violence as the means whereby Africans should gain their legitimate rights."

"The statement that for 'security reasons' it is not possible to give the sources of information upon which the allegations are based against Mr. Odede establishes a dangerous precedent, leaving Kenya safe against molestation. The congress urges that Mr. Odede should be given a full opportunity forthwith of defending himself against these charges."

"The congress reaffirms its confidence in the Kenya African Union, and pledges its full support to the new acting president, Mr. W. Awori."

Desert Locust Situation

THE ANTI-LOCUST RESEARCH CENTRE in London reported last week, inter alia:

"French Somaliland was reported clear in the second half of January and February. The Somaliland Protectorate was clear after February 12. Control operations against hoppers in the coastal areas in the north-west were successfully completed by the end of February. No reports have been received from Somalia."

"There were few reports of swarms in British East Africa in addition to those reported in the preceding summary. During the second half of the month scattered swarms were reported at Rumuruti, Thomson's Falls, Subukia, and Nakuru in Kenya; in Tanganyika there were small swarms between Mwanza and Shinyanga at Mbuhumbulu, and near Kondoa and Singida, and unconfirmed reports of breeding at Engaruka. There were no further reports from Uganda."

"Erithrea was clear of swarms and hoppers throughout February and early March. The Sudan was clear of swarms during February. The swarms present in eastern Ethiopia are maturing, and breeding may begin in March in Danakil. Some of those swarms may spread east and breed in the Somaliland Protectorate and Ogaden."

Government Win Federation Vote

African Trials in N. Rhodesia

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS APPROVED by 304 votes to 260 on Tuesday the amendment motion for Central African federation. A number of Labour members abstained from voting after a forthright speech by Mr. Stanley Evans in support of the measure. A full report will appear next week.

Under instigation from the African National Congress, Africans have burnt the White Paper publicly in Northern Rhodesia and threatened a general strike and action "perhaps of the worst kind."

The Ndola correspondent of The Times said in the course of a report telegraphed on Monday:

"Mr. Harry Nkumbula, president of the Northern Rhodesian African National Congress which has been prominent in opposition to Central African federation in Lusaka yesterday solemnly burned a copy of the White Paper setting out the federation plans as 'a symbol of the bitter African opposition to it.' He did this in the presence of about 800 Africans, including six chiefs among them Paramount Chief Mpezeni of the Mbunda tribe.

"Leaders of the congress sat under a red banner bearing words 'self-government the only ultimate object' and heard Mr. Nkumbula say that 'the talking stage' in African opposition to federation was being brought to an end by the burning of the White Paper. 'We are now entering upon the stage for action,' he said.

Chanting Crowd

"He then struck a match and set fire to the White Paper, which had been soaked in petrol. As it blazed the crowd surged forward, shouting, chanting, and dancing. The scene was in marked contrast to the quiet atmosphere in which the meeting started, with a prayer and a hymn sung to the tune of O God, our Help in Ages Past.

"Mr. Nkumbula announced that two days of national prayer against federation would be held in the territory on April 1 and 2. He said: 'It has been decided that during these two days no work shall be performed. Christian leaders are asked to conduct prayers for their Christian followers. Non-Christian elements are also asked to pray to God in their traditional way. It has also been provided that no drinking shall take place during the days of prayer.'

"Mr. Nkumbula criticized the Government for 'imprisoning and arresting chiefs in the Northern Province during the recent trouble.' He said that 'the facts of the case are that the chiefs were not consulted, nor did they agree to the passing of the ordinance in regard to fishing rights. Whatever the opinion of the Central Government, no Native authority ordinance can be passed without the consent of the Native authority. In this case the Native authority was not even consulted. The chiefs therefore violated no ordinance.' He went on to say: 'They were told that plans were on foot to dispossess them of their land. In fact, some of the people have been removed.'

"Mr. Nkumbula did not say who had told local Africans that they were to be dispossessed, though it has frequently been alleged in Government circles that spokesmen of the African Congress have alleged in their various anti-federation moves that federation means dispossessing Africans of their land. Mr. Nkumbula did not develop his reference, and his precise meaning is not clear.

Chiefs Have Lost Confidence

"He also accused the Government of interfering with 'deliberation' in the territorial conference of Native chiefs in Lusaka last August. He said: 'During that conference the Secretary for Native Affairs summoned the chiefs to his office and spoke to them as if he was speaking to babies. He accused the congress of the most unwarrantable things, which were sheer invention. The result was that the chiefs got angry, and those who still had a little confidence in the Government of the Protectorate lost that confidence completely.'

"Whatever criticism may be launched against the African Congress, the protec-torate Government and the present British Government are alone responsible for the creation of the prevalent bitter violence and mistrust between black and white in Central Africa. The Government's attempt to split African opinion on the federation issue has made things go from bad to worse. Their propaganda to incite chiefs and other peoples against the African Congress has beyond doubt revealed the ill intent of the Federal Government.

"Mr. Nkumbula then said that there would be unrest in Central Africa, 'perhaps of the worst kind,' if federation were imposed against African opposition. He said it had been decided that, if federation were imposed, measures would be taken to paralyse the industries of the country."

The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, meeting in Brussels on Saturday, decided to protest to Mr. Churchill and Opposition leaders against the proposed federation of the Central-African territories because the plan had been adopted without the consent of the African population.

The Women's Foreign Mission General Committee of the Church of Scotland has passed a resolution reading: "Being convinced that the present proposals for Central African federation are having a disastrous effect on race relationships, not only in Central Africa but also in other parts of the Commonwealth, we earnestly beg H.M. Government not to impose the proposed scheme in face of African opposition."

The Midland Federation of Trades Councils has condemned the Government's policy in Africa, and has asked that "Africans' views on federation be taken into account."

Slavery in the Present Day

"SLAVERY IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY" is the title of a pamphlet by Mr. C. W. W. Greenidge which has been published by the Anti-Slavery Society, of which he is secretary. Admitting that there is no reason for disquietude concerning any of the Colonies of the European Powers, the author writes:

"Ethiopia abolished the legal status of slavery by law in 1942, but little or nothing is known of how this law is enforced, because all but a few travellers are excluded from Ethiopia, and it has been impossible to observe how the law is enforced. It is one thing to make anti-slavery laws. It is another to enforce them."

"Experience in other countries shows that slavery dies slowly. In British territories the Government takes the strongest possible line against slavery, but it has been no easy task to eradicate a system which does not offend the principles of the people and in the continuance of which certain groups have the deepest interest."

"In the Sudan under British administration since 1895 in the 1930's it was discovered that slavery was still practised. In Nigeria to-day cases of pawning of persons and kidnapping occur from time to time."

"Margery Perham in her book 'The Government of Ethiopia' writes: 'It should therefore not be expected that slavery has completely disappeared from Ethiopia, and statements to that effect should be discounted.'

"In tropical Africa south of the Sahara the custom of a man giving money or goods to the parents of a girl to secure her in marriage without her consent is prevalent. A woman acquired under these conditions usually becomes property, and may be resold by her husband in his life-time and on his death passes to his heir at law. The latter may either take her to wife or sell her to another man. The custom of purchasing wives exists in Asia also, both in India and China."

"The Governments of the French and Belgian African Colonies and those of the Somaliland Protectorate, Southern Rhodesia, and the Union of South Africa have passed laws prohibiting the marriage of a woman without her consent."

East African Officers for Coronation

MAJOR W. E. B. ATKINSON, 5th K.A.R., Major R. B. Gofion Salmond, 6th K.A.R., Major W. P. McCloud, 156th H.A.A. Battery, and Captain T. I. Mackie Campbell, 2nd K.A.R., will represent East Africa Command in The Queen's Colonial Escort at the Coronation. The other officers of the East African contingent will be Major D. S. B. Skeen, 2/6th K.A.R., Major A. W. Hardwick, 7th K.A.R., Captain F. D. Slater, N.R.R., Captain J. A. Powell, E.A.A.S.C., and Lieuts. G. R. and M. T. Wheatley, 2nd K.A.R. The last mentioned are twins.

Scandinavian Airlines are to extend their service beyond Nairobi to Johannesburg, but will not carry local passengers between Kenya and territories to the south.

State Subsidies for Irrigation

S. Rhodesian Committee's Proposal.

In SOUTHERN RHODESIA, the S. Rhodesian Committee has said it would subsidize irrigation development, suggests a report of the standing committee on large-scale irrigation projects. If necessary, unused land should be taxed, loans made, and land expropriated and reassigned.

These suggestions are based on the warning that unless the pattern of production and consumption shows a marked change, the Colony's supplies of maize and small grains will fall short of requirements by 2m. bags or more by 1970. Even with extensive irrigation, the maize shortfall might be 1m. bags, and wheat might be 760,000 bags short.

The committee suggests that on the high veld in the over-30-inch rainfall belt there are 1m. acres of undeveloped good and medium soils, of which 200,000 acres would in any case be developed within 20 years. If half of the balance could be used for maize, the extra output would more than meet the expected shortfall. "Much of this land is in European ownership, and should be brought under cultivation within a reasonable period; action by the State will be necessary." The committee urges immediate inquiry into methods of expanding dry land food production on developed and undeveloped high veld.

The Colony's sugar requirements for 1970 are put at 70,000 tons. Triangle Estate could provide 40,000 tons at most, and the balance must come from other low veld areas such as the Sabi Valley. An annual Sabi sugar output of 30,000 tons would, however, reduce the water available for lucerne and wheat crops. It was therefore essential to develop both the Sabi Valley and Triangle schemes to the maximum.

Detailed planning is recommended immediately for irrigation development on the Hunyani, Ngesi, and Umfuli schemes, and a fully equipped research station is urged for the high veld.

On tenure, the committee believes that land put under large-scale irrigation should be State-owned initially, or, if already privately owned, taken over by the State for subdivision into irrigation farms of suitable size. These could then be leased to approved settlers. On proving himself an efficient farmer, the tenant could be offered the freehold.

Students from the Colonies

STUDENTS from East and Central Africa at present in the United Kingdom number 733, of whom 183 are holders of scholarships and 550 private students. Of these two classes respectively five and four came from the Somaliland Protectorate, 100 and 293 from Kenya, 15 and 33 from Northern Rhodesia, seven and 10 from Nyasaland, 20 and 95 from Tanganyika, 25 and 100 from Uganda, and 11 and 15 from Zanzibar. Thus more students in each group come from Kenya than from all the other territories put together.

Of the total, with the addition of 18 from Aden, 77 are university students in London, 22 at Oxford, 20 at Cambridge, 82 at other provincial universities, 44 in Ireland, 56 in Scotland, and 21 in Wales. Of those attending non-university colleges, etc., 125 are at the Inns of Court, 148 in London, 118 in the provinces, 30 in Scotland, and eight in Wales.

There are in all 6,338 students in the United Kingdom from the dependent territories, of whom 1,235 are student nurses, 1,121 studying law, 781 medicine, 656 engineering, 422 education, and 393 arts. Only 78 are taking courses in agriculture, 37 in veterinary science, 11 in forestry, and 10 in theology.

The return of Seretse Khama as chief of the Bamangwato tribe in Bechuanaland is again to be demanded by the Council for the Defence of Seretse Khama and the Protectorates, of which Mr. Fenner Brockway, M.P., is chairman. He said last week that the recent birth of a son to the ex-chief's wife raised new problems, and claimed that the view of his council had support from members in all political parties and from religious organizations.

Queen Mother's Visit to S. Rhodesia

Engagements in Colony

QUEEN ELIZABETH THE QUEEN MOTHER has approved the following programme for Her Majesty's visit to Southern Rhodesia during July. The Queen Mother and the Princess Margaret will arrive at Salisbury Airport by B.O.A.C. Comet at midday on July 1. Her Majesty and Her Royal Highness will drive through Salisbury to Government House.

On the evening of July 2 Her Majesty and Her Royal Highness will leave Salisbury by train for Bulawayo. After the official reception at Bulawayo railway station next morning, they will drive to Government House, and in the afternoon Her Majesty will officially open the Central African Rhodes Centenary Exhibition. In the evening there will be a reception at Government House.

During the morning of Saturday, July 4, the royal visitors will see the exhibition for a second time and in the afternoon attend a garden party to be given by the mayor. On July 6, they will visit Luveve African village in the morning, attend the Rhodesian pageant in the Theatre Royal in the afternoon, and in the late afternoon leave by train for Gwelo. They will drive round Gwelo and attend a tea party given by the mayor next morning.

Unveiling Kingsley Fairbridge Memorial

The royal train will reach Umtali on the morning of Wednesday, July 8. After The Queen Mother and Princess Margaret will drive through Umtali to Christmas Pass, where Her Majesty will unveil the Kingsley Fairbridge Memorial. In the afternoon the party will visit the Sakubva African township and later attend a garden party given by the mayor. Then The Queen Mother and Princess Margaret will drive to the Simba Mountains, stay at the Simba Rock Hotel until the morning of July 10, and then leave by road for Fort Victoria, visiting Nyanyadzi irrigation farms for Africans on the way.

On July 11 the Zimbabwe Ruins and Morgenster Mission will be visited in the morning, and in the afternoon Her Majesty and Princess Margaret will attend a garden party to be given by the Town Management Board, afterwards returning to the royal train, which will depart for Salisbury, arriving on the morning of Sunday, July 12.

Next day The Queen Mother will lay the foundation-stone of the Rhodesian University. In the evening there will be a ball for young people at Government House. On July 14 there will be an evening reception at Government House. Next day, Her Majesty and Her Royal Highness will visit the Victoria Falls in the morning and attend a garden party given by the mayor in the afternoon.

On July 16 the royal visitors will drive through Salisbury to the airport to embark in a B.O.A.C. Comet for the return journey to the United Kingdom.

Further engagements may be undertaken.

African Women in Domestic Service

ALTHOUGH THE NUMBER of African women employed as domestic servants in Southern Rhodesia has trebled since 1946, 90% of Native servants are still men. The chief obstacle to employment of women in urban areas, reports the Commissioner of Native Labour, is lack of suitable living accommodation nearby. "Unfortunately, local authorities appear unable to resist public objections to erecting centrally situated hostels for African women." Shortage of building materials and high costs inhibit private employers from providing quarters. "African women still show rooted objections to performing the heavier tasks, such as scrubbing floors; they consider such duties the work of males, although they commonly hoe lands at home." The report adds that an increasing number of European householders, unable to employ both a man and a woman for the respective tasks, now have only one Native servant.

The official cost-of-living index figure in Northern Rhodesia has risen by nearly 6% in the past year.

ParliamentDeputation on Federation
Mr. Churchill Denies Discourtesy

MR. CRADDOCK (Lab.) asked the Prime Minister his reasons for refusing to meet a delegation from the Central African Committee, and if he was aware that his refusal had caused dismay amongst all sections of the community.

THE PRIME MINISTER: "I see no reason for any dismay in any quarter that the delegation should be received by the two principal Secretaries of State who are most closely and earnestly considering the problem of Central African federation."

MR. CRADDOCK: "Does not the Prime Minister think that it would have been a gesture on his part and would have helped to cement the ties between the people of Central Africa and this country if he had met the delegation?"

THE PRIME MINISTER: "I think I must in reason follow the principle of devolution in some of these very serious and complicated questions."

MR. DUGDALE: "Is the Prime Minister aware that it is not in keeping with his usual courtesy to refuse to receive a deputation presenting a memorial signed by members of both Houses of Parliament, together with leading members of the churches, including the president of the Methodist Conference and leading members of the Church of Scotland and of the Church of England, including the Bishops of Bristol and Worcester and the Dean of St. Paul's?"

No Lack of Consideration

THE PRIME MINISTER: "I cannot think that these dignitaries have in any way been treated with lack of consideration and respect by the fact that they were referred to the two principal Secretaries of State who are masters of the whole of this [Hon. Members: 'Not masters']—masters of all the details of this intricate problem."

MR. DUGDALE asked the Under-Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations whether, since the constitution of Southern Rhodesia contained no provision for the taking of a poll to decide upon the alteration of the constitution, he would seek Parliamentary approval for the poll now projected.

MR. JOHN FOSTER: "No. The proposed referendum does not of course operate to amend the Southern Rhodesian constitution. Its purpose is to ascertain the views of the Southern Rhodesian electorate on the federation proposals. The machinery by which this is done is for the Parliament of Southern Rhodesia to decide."

MR. DUGDALE asked whether the Minister would propose that in any new federal public service that might be set up for Central Africa all grades should be open to applicants of all races.

MR. FOSTER: "I refer the hon. gentleman to paragraph 112 of the Federal Scheme (Cmd. 8754), which states: 'No person domiciled within the Federation who is a subject of Her Majesty or a person under Her Majesty's protection will on grounds of race only be ineligible for employment in the service of the Federal Government. In appointing or recommending persons for such employment, regard will be had only to their competence, experience, and suitability, and in determining suitability regard may be had to the circumstances of the locality in which a person would be employed.'

Tribal Representatives at Coronation

MR. EMRYS HUGHES asked who was to be invited to represent the Bamangwato tribe of Bechuanaland at the Coronation.

MR. FOSTER: "In view of the unavoidable limitations on numbers, it is impracticable for all the tribes in the territories to be represented at the Coronation. The Bechuanaland Protectorate will be represented by Chief Kgari Sekele of the Bakwena tribe; the senior chief of the Protectorate, Basutoland, and Swaziland will likewise each have one representative."

MR. BESWICK asked the composition and the functions of the Tanganyika Coffee Curing Company, and what representation on the company was allocated to co-operative organisations.

MR. LYTTELTON replied: "The present directors are Mr. W. H. Baldwin, chairman, representing the Tanganyika Coffee Growers' Association; Mr. A. L. B. Bennett, representing the Moshi Native Coffee Board; Mr. R. S. W. Malcolm, Commissioner for Co-operative Development, representing the Moshi Native Coffee Board; Mr. Casimir Kiwia, an African representative from the board; Mr. H. Marsland and Mr.

F. A. F. Schmid, representing the Tanganyika Coffee Growers' Association.

The alternate directors are Mr. C. J. McGregor, representing the Moshi Native Coffee Board, and Mr. G. Pappas and Mr. M. Tsoukas, representing the Tanganyika Coffee Growers' Association. The chairman is elected in alternate years from the Coffee Growers' Association and the Native Coffee Board. The manager of the curing company is a European, Mr. H. I. Munk."

MRS. WHITE asked by what method Africans were chosen to serve on the standing advisory boards dealing with labour conditions in Nyasaland, and how far those boards had power to fix minimum or other wages.

MR. LYTTELTON: "African members of these boards are nominated by the provincial commissioners. The boards are only advisory; after considering their recommendations, the Governor-in-Council has power to fix wage rates either generally or for specified areas."

MRS. E. WHITE asked what provision was made for workmen's compensation or industrial injuries benefit in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

MR. LYTTELTON: "Both territories have Workmen's Compensation Ordinances under which employers are liable to pay compensation to workmen for injuries received in accidents arising out of and in the course of employment. The amount of compensation is related to earnings at the time of the accident and the degree of disability. In Northern Rhodesia certain occupational diseases are also covered by the ordinance, while there is a special scheme for silicosis."

Inter-Racial Whitley Councils

MRS. WHITE asked what had been done in Northern Rhodesia and in Nyasaland to establish interracial Whitley Councils in the Civil Service, as recommended by the commission which reported in 1947.

MR. LYTTELTON: "No interracial Whitley Councils have been established in either territory. Northern Rhodesia has separate Whitley Councils for Europeans and Africans. Nyasaland has no Whitley Councils as such, but various forms of consultative machinery are in operation in different branches of the Civil Service."

MR. D. RENTON (Nat. Lib.) asked the Colonial Secretary what steps he took in 1952, and what steps he proposed to take in 1953, to reduce the cost of carrying out the duties of his department.

MR. LYTTELTON: "On the original estimate for 1952 £31 economies exceeding £50,000 p.a. were effected by cutting down staff and curtailing some services. The possibility of making further economies is continuously studied, but another similar reduction would seriously impair the work of the department, which must be expected to increase with the progress of Colonial development in all fields."

MR. J. JOHNSON asked how many African members of the Kenya Legislative Council had applied to hold meetings with their people.

MR. LYTTELTON: "African non-official members of the Legislative Council have been informed several times, most recently in the Kenya Council on February 20, that application to hold public meetings made by them will be considered, so far no application has been received."

Cement Works for Kenya

AGREEMENT has been reached in principle with the East African Portland Cement Co., Ltd., for the construction of a modern cement factory at Sultan Hamud, in Kenya, at a total cost of £1.5m. Output is expected to be 100,000 tons a year, and the price about £5 per ton less than those that will be ruling in two or two-and-a-half years' time when the factory is completed. The decision, which is warmly welcomed by Government as showing confidence in the future of the Colony despite the present disturbances, was made during the visit of Mr. N. M. Jensoen, chairman and managing director of the holding company, the Tunsel Portland Cement Co., Ltd. There will be no public issue, but local shareholders will have an opportunity to subscribe to the capital, most of which, however, will be provided from Great Britain.

In his opening speech in the South African general election campaign the Prime Minister, Dr. Malan, claimed that "money spent on the Natives' education, health, and social services is seven times as much per head as even the mighty and liberal England spends on its Natives in its African territories, including its Protectorates and the Rhodesias."

Large-Scale Drive in Nairobi Chief's Bodyguard Murdered.

NEARLY 2,500 AFRICANS were arrested in a large-scale operation by military forces in Nairobi in Tunawani, the Native location of Nairobi last week-end. More than 1,600 persons wanted by the police, mainly from the Fort Hall and Nyeri districts, were among those arrested.

Six terrorists were killed, six wounded, and 14 captured by security forces in the Fort Hall area during the same period.

Attack on Mr. Mervyn Hill

Last week, Mr. Mervyn Hill, editor of the Kenya Weekly News, who had previously received letters threatening his life, was fired at when driving home from Nakuru in his motor car by an African. The shot passed through the windscreen, causing injuries on his face by broken glass. Mr. Hill, who had been slowing down in order to give the African a lift when the first shot was fired, stopped and returned the fire. The African returned a second shot, which missed Mr. Hill, then disappeared into the bush.

A gang of eight Africans attacked in daylight Mr. D. Walter Ringrose, a member of the Nairobi Staff of Barclays Bank (D.C. & O.) and an Asian clerk, who were transferring money from one branch to another. Mr. Ringrose, who received panga wounds on the head, shot one African dead and wounded another, but the rest of the gang escaped with £650 in cheques and cash. Later three Africans were arrested.

A chief's bodyguard between Meru and Embu has been murdered by Mau Mau terrorists, who had escaped from Nairobi through military and police patrols. Six in number, the gang was composed of men of the Meru tribe, one of whom was captured and confessed to participating in the attack.

Two terrorists were killed and three wounded when a police detachment came upon a Mau Mau meeting in the Molo district on Monday. Several witch doctors and oath administrators have been arrested in possession of ceremonial garments and vessels.

Two Africans have been sentenced to 14 years' imprisonment for an attack on Mrs. Hamilton near Nairobi last month.

Sir Evelyn Baring, the Governor, accompanied by Major-General Hinde and the Member for Agriculture, carried out an all-day reconnaissance of the Aberdare and Mount Kenya districts in connexion with the concentration of labourers.

The Kenya Government is reported to have requested air support for operations against Mau Mau. It is thought more likely that the necessary aircraft will come from the R.A.F. training base in Southern Rhodesia, rather than from Mid East.

Central Province Situation

Mr. D. O'HAGAN, Provincial Commissioner of the Central Province of Kenya, made a statement in Nairobi last Thursday on the progress made in that area by the forces of law and order. This province, with its administrative centre in Nyeri, is the eastern half of the area affected by Mau Mau activities.

During the past three weeks there had, he said, been considerable success against Mau Mau gangs operating on the bamboo forests of Mount Kenya and in the Aberdares, but large gangs of terrorists were still operating and much remained to be done.

The anti-Mau Mau drive had a twofold objective—to hunt down, capture, or destroy the armed gangs of thugs, and, secondly, to restore confidence and remove fear among loyal Africans.

Most Europeans in the most dangerous localities had now taken precautions for their protection, and the Government was helping by establishing new police posts and recruiting farm guards. In the Nanyuki district alone 250 men were already guarding farms. He appealed to farmers to concentrate their African employees into farm villages, so that they could be better protected from Mau Mau gangs.

Three teams of loyal Kikuyu leaders were, he said, now touring the Nanyuki district to assure their fellow tribesmen that, with protection, they had a chance for a change of heart, and to appeal to them to come out openly against Mau Mau, and district officers, troops, police, and local resistance groups were doing everything possible to restore confidence.

The formation of resistance groups had progressed well in the Nyeri district and the southern part of Fort Hall and Kiambu.

In his statement, Mr. O'Hagan paid special tribute to the work of the military in the province, stating that effective results had been attained by close co-operation between troops, police, police reservists, and the resistance.

As soon as confidence was restored the plans for economic and social development among the Kikuyu could be pursued and even during the present troubles much impressive soil conservation work had been done in the three Kikuyu districts.

The Director of Man-Power, MR. MERVYN COOKE, said a few days ago that of the 9,000 European men in Kenya between the ages of 18 and 45, 4,000 are in the Police Reserve, 300 of them on full-time duties. In Nairobi a meeting is shortly to be held to decide whether the home guard force of Europeans shall be put on a compulsory basis or some other system applied.

Mr. Awori's Plea

MR. AWOXI, acting president of the Kenya African Union, issued in Nairobi last Friday a memorandum which said:

"We appeal to all Africans and all peace-loving people in this country to stamp out violence. Our policy in the Kenya African Union is to demand our rights through legitimate means . . . Whoever does the contrary is a traitor to our cause . . . Our union will lose face before the world if we do not co-operate in advising the rest of the people to remain peaceful."

"We appeal to the Government to co-operate with the African leaders in planning the future progress of this country. The present policy is that the Government looks at all African leaders with suspicion. They would rather make laudable remarks on the ignorant, fast-dying loyalty of the old African leaders than take the awakened Africans into their confidence. This policy is wrong."

An interracial Kenya League, claiming a membership of 100, has been refused registration because it might be used for unlawful purposes.

A terrorist gang has been broken up by police in the Nanyuki Falls area and arms found. Four of the gang were sentenced to four years' imprisonment and others to lesser terms.

Arrest of Kenya African M.L.C. Colonial Secretary's Statement

MR. OLIVER LYTTELTON, Secretary of State for the Colonies, made the following statement in the House of Commons last week in reply to a question by Mr. Fenner Brockway:

"Mr. Odede, an African representative member of the Kenya Legislative Council, was arrested on March 9 and placed in detention. This was done with my approval."

"There had been reports for some time that Mr. Odede had attempted to create unrest in the Nyanza Province. More recently information was received from most reliable sources that he had been in touch with the Mau Mau movement, and had threatened a number of loyal Africans with the fate suffered by some law-abiding Kikuyu. This threat to use violence made it necessary for the Governor to detain him."

Advocacy of Violence

"Mr. Odede was not arrested for his political views or on account of any of his activities as a member of the Legislative Council, but because of his advocacy of violence. It would not be in the public interest to disclose the identity of the people who have supplied information against Mr. Odede. Both the Governor and I are satisfied that the evidence against Mr. Odede comes from most reliable persons, and that his detention in the present situation in Kenya is essential to the security of the Colony."

"Those who have come forward must also be protected as far as lies in our power. Mr. Odede has been informed that he has a right to submit his objections to the advisory committee which has been set up under the Executive Regulation 2, sub-regulation (3), made on February 24, 1954. This committee will follow a similar procedure to that used under Regulation 18B in this country. A distinguished former Chief Justice has been invited to be its chairman, and his reply is awaited. If he accepts, the advisory committee will begin work before the end of next week, and in any case before the end of the month."

"The Governor has made an extensive tour of Central and South Nyanza, and reports that there is wide support amongst Africans for the action taken against Mr. Odede. He proposed to appoint a temporary member in Mr. Odede's place, so that the people of his constituency shall not be left unrepresented, and will consult me later about making a definite appointment to fill the vacancy."

MR. BROCKWAY: "Does the Minister recognize the very serious implications of the statement which he has made? Would he not agree that four months ago this kind of charge against Mr. Odede would have been quite incredible? Does not this imply that even moderate African opinion, if these charges are true, is now being led to more extreme courses? Finally, will he at least see that Mr. Odede has a public trial where he can publicly answer the charges which are now being made against him?"

Witnesses in Fear of Their Lives

MR. LYTTELTON: "The supplementary question shows a complete lack of knowledge of what the situation in Kenya is at the moment. What our opinions might have been of Mr. Odede four or five months ago is quite beside the point. The point is that now we have definite information that he is trying to stir up trouble in Nyanza. Of course the use of 18B procedure is serious as it was in this country in time of acute emergency. It will not be possible to bring Mr. Odede to public trial at this moment because witnesses are in fear of their lives and cannot be persuaded to come forward."

MR. DODDS-PARKER: "Will the Minister agree, in view of the state of public security and of the terrible atrocities being committed by Africans against Africans, that such preventive detention is not only inevitable but is in the best interests of all races in Kenya?"

MR. HALE: "Is the Minister aware that Mr. Odede offered to broadcast an appeal for non-violence as far back as last October, has constantly asked H.M. Government for leave to address public meetings to appeal for non-violence and non-association with Mau Mau, and that he has constantly tried to help in this matter but has been denied the right to speak to his people?"

"Does the Minister realize that the recent statement that African opinion in Nyanza is against Mr. Odede is in entire conflict with the subsequent sentence that witnesses are going in fear of their lives? Is opinion in favour of a trial, let him have a chance of being tried early. Is not this arrest without trial of a public representative almost unprecedented?"

MR. LYTTELTON: "Let me correct the hon. member on a matter of fact. It has been made known to all the African members of the Legislative Council that any application by them to address public meetings would be sympathetically received, and no application of any kind has been received. That goes for Mr. Odede as well. I have nothing to add to what I have previously said."

MR. ALPORT: "Is the Minister aware that resolute action taken by the Government in Kenya will prevent the extension of murder and terrorism outside its present confines, and will be supported not only by the people of this country but by law-abiding people of all races in East Africa as well?"

MRS. WHITE: "Will the Minister inform the House whether it is open to Mr. Odede to apply for writ of habeas corpus, as was possible under 18B?"

MR. LYTTELTON: "He can, of course, apply, but whether it would be granted or not is a matter for the Kenya Supreme Court."

MR. SILVERMAN: "Is the Minister aware that his attempted parallel with procedure under 18B breaks down completely, in that in this country no attempt at arbitrary arrest by the Executive has ever been made except in time of war? Will he bear in mind further that it is impossible for Parliamentary institutions to grow up if individual members of the Assembly are subject to arbitrary arrest by the Executive, and that he will gain nothing by attempting to create a police State in a British Colony?"

MR. LYTTELTON: "The supplementary question merely shows how certain hon. members below the gangway are completely out of touch with the situation in Kenya, which is analogous to a state of war or acute emergency. It is for this reason that the putting into force of such a regulation becomes necessary."

MR. BROCKWAY: "In view of the unsatisfactory nature of the Minister's reply, I give notice that I shall raise this matter on the adjournment at the first opportunity."

N. Rhodesian Juvenile Offenders

THE JUVENILES BILL, given a second reading in the Northern Rhodesian Legislative Council, was described by the Acting Attorney-General as of transcendent importance, a measure not of pity but compassion, based upon consultation of juveniles' rights and obligations coupled with consultation of society's rights. Juveniles in need of care who were the victims of others would be dealt with by special courts; those who were the victims of themselves by juvenile courts, as now. Offenders would be imprisoned or sent to a detention camp if he could be suitably dealt with in any other manner. Treatment would include caning, the flogging of the juvenile or his parent or guardian, the provision of security by the latter, or detention in an approved school or reformatory. The Administrative Secretary, Mr. S. R. Denny, said the main principle was training of the offender under a probation officer or in an approved school; the courts would be able to specify a maximum of three years for training and discipline, but the principal of the approved school would fix the actual period. Three years' supervision would follow.

Never Greater Anxiety

THE MOUNTING TENSION and distrust between the races, the reversion to barbarism in Kenya, the threat of violence elsewhere, the increase of materialism and self-seeking, the resurgence of Islam, the disappointment of many hopes—it is a sombre picture. True, there is another side to it. One knows of the gallant faithfulness in service and in Christian witness of many, both Africans and Europeans, some of them missionaries, some in Government, and some among the settlers. Vaillant efforts are being made to bring enlightenment and a better life to Africa. But nobody knows what the outcome will be, and there never was a time of greater anxiety. The Rev. Dr. G. W. Broomfield, secretary to the Universities' Mission to Central Africa,

Continuity in Administration

Sir Ralph Furse's Plea

FOR A QUARTER OF A CENTURY or more this newspaper has from time to time called for a continuity in Colonial administration which results from the frequent reposting of officials.

Sir Ralph Furse, for many years director of recruitment and adviser on training in the Colonial Service, wrote on this subject to The Times a few days ago:

"In Tropical Africa to-day one master problem dwarfs the welter of materialist considerations which often attract disproportionate attention—how to eliminate fear, foster trust, and develop mutual respect between individuals of differing race and colour. Success here and the rest will follow, fail and expect chaos."

"This human problem must be attacked with human weapons. The most powerful is our magnificent but unobtrusive Colonial Service. Its cutting edge is the administrative staff in the field. The district officer's prime duty is to understand his people, win their trust, interpret Government policy, and secure its willing acceptance. He is also our main source of intelligence."

"No specialist service could cover the vast, sparsely-peopled spaces of the tropics. To succeed, he should know the local language—as distinct from a lingua franca like Swahili, in which most East Africans do not think even if they can speak it. (It is said that only two officers in Kenya are fluent in Kikuyu.)

District Administration Handicapped

"District administration is grievously handicapped by lack of continuity. Paradoxically, this is largely because tours of duty are long. Long tours mean long leaves. The longer an officer is on leave the less possible it is to run his district in his absence without a relief."

"X finishes a tour in the Masai district of Tanganyika, which earns him five months' leave—too long for his district to run without a relief. So Y, just back from leave after a tour in the Lake Province, is sent there. When X returns it is too soon to move, Y from his new district. X therefore goes to Lindi to relieve Z who is due for leave. So it goes on. It is like the maralling yards at Crewe."

"African conditions are so diverse that such moves are more like transferring a local government official from England to the Ardennes than even from Sutherland to Cornwall. By contrast, in the Sudan an officer's leave is annual and short enough for his district to manage without a relief. Accordingly, if he ought to return to it, he usually can. Continuity is preserved."

"Can't it be preserved in any other way except by leaving officers in Africa and surrounded by Africans so long at a stretch as to risk blunting their edge, endangering their nervous stability—the strain is heavy now, blurring their sense of proportion, and losing the advantage of frequent contact between their practical experience and opinion at home? Should we afford the reserve staffs carried to cover leave reliefs? They have been estimated at 25% of total staff. The Sudan carries no such reserve."

"A recent move towards adopting annual leave for Tropical Africa has run into difficulties. Perhaps there were mistakes of presentation."

"To have a fair chance in his vital rôle, the district officer should stay in the same district—and, while there, be out of his office and among his people—long enough to know and be known. To get him out of his office one must cure the virulent disease of tourism. This can best be done by getting rid of him of routine by devolving it on substitutes. The test depends on continuity. Why should a system which has worked successfully in the Sudan for 50 years long before air travel—not work in tropical Africa to-day?"

Fallacious Arguments Against Short Tours

Sir Harold MacMichael wrote fully endorsing the letter, adding, "by virtue of 26 years spent in the Sudan, where the principle of the short tour and short leave was practised, and four in East Africa, where, in spite of all advocacy, it was not":

"The three arguments advanced against short tours and short leaves used to be: (a) that they would destroy continuity; (b) the expense of air travel (or alternatively, the long time taken by sea travel); (c) that the commercial community and the non-official white element in general, whose members frequently remained for several years at a stretch in the country, would not agree."

"The first is nonsensical, for continuity suffers more from the long term than from the short. The second, so far as relates to expense, is fallacious for two reasons—the cost of flying a large reserve staff and the fact that a tired man loses his sense of proportion. The third is equally fallacious, for a man who suffers from neither disability, The third can be defended only on the ground that two blacks make one white."

The New BIG BEDFORD

- Larger Loads
- Longer Life
- Lower Costs

Developed on the Rough Track

Proved over 500,000 miles on the road.

Tested in the tropics

Big in body space, and big-hearted too, the Big Bedford will take a 16 ft. body and has 110 brake horse-power geared away to deal most efficiently with gross loadings up to 23,100 lb.; or 31,600 lb. with semi-trailer combinations. Yet with truck body, it weighs less than 7,000 lb. unladen. The Big Bedford has a first-class specification and behind it lies a unique four-year test and development programme.

FOUR YEARS OF THIS! Hundreds of concrete blocks stand proud of the Vauxhall Rough Track. Each circuit of the track produces a hammering effect of such severity that one thousand Rough Track miles are equivalent to one hundred thousand miles on normal roads. Tough testing breeds tough trucks.

There is a Bedford for every load from ½ ton up to 10 tons

ObituarySir Bertrand Glancy

SIR BERTRAND GLANCY, C.B.E., M.A., former Governor of the Punjab, who died suddenly a few days ago at his home in Nairobi at the age of 70, retired in Kenya soon after the end of the war, and had recently headed the commission appointed by the Government to inquire into the murder in hospital of a Kikuyu chief who had denounced the Mau Mau movement.

Glancy, the son of an Army officer, was educated at Clifton and Exeter Colleges, Oxford, and entered the Indian Civil Service in 1905. In 1933 he became political secretary to the Government in Delhi, and five years later was appointed political adviser to the Viceroy. As a particularly troubled period he was made Governor of the Punjab in 1941, when the Japanese threatened to invade India.

In the next five years he was at the peak of his powers and influence, called in all emergencies and courageous under all threats. More than once he restored order during riots by walking unarmed into a mob, securing a hearing, and then by good humour evoking obedience. To this force of character were added wit, gaiety, and habitual light-heartedness. In the I.C.S. he was regarded as one of the ablest administrators of his generation.

THE REV. CANON MALCOLM MACKAY, who has died in Lingfield at the age of 80, was ordained in 1906 and joined the Universities Mission to Central Africa four years later, arriving in Zanzibar in the same year. For 17 years he worked in Zanzibar and Pemba, where he was archdeacon from 1913 to 1927; he was then transferred to Magila, Tanganyika, becoming archdeacon in 1921. He remained in that appointment until 1944. He was domestic chaplain to the Bishop of Zanzibar from 1908 to 1924.

MR. ROBERT LLOYD POLLETT, M.B.E., town-clerk of Salisbury from 1919 to 1936, has died in Southern Rhodesia aged 75. He went to Rhodesia at 22 to join his brother, a stockbroker. For fourteen years of his town clerkship Mr. Pollett was also treasurer. During the last war he acted for a year as town clerk in Gwelo.

Southern Rhodesia's Lands

SO LITTLE IS KNOWN about large tracts of Southern Rhodesia, that, until adequate maps were recently made of over 3m. acres, a select committee was unable to allocate the land. Recommendations were made for 1,135,930 acres to go to the European area from the unassigned area, and 2,205,617 acres to the Native purchase area. Some tsetse-infested areas were discovered. If the final recommendations are accepted, Southern Rhodesia's 9m. acres will be divided thus: European, 49,712,561 acres; Native purchase, 8,042,135; Native reserves, 20,942,831; special Native area, 10,486,427; forest area, 3,203,745; undetermined, 59,753; Wankie game reserve, 2,208,000; unassigned area, 2,562,000 acres.

Oldest Anglican Church

CANON A. G. ROGERS, rector of St. Paul's, Fort Jameson, has issued an appeal for funds for the restoration of that church, the oldest Anglican Church in Northern Rhodesia. Built in 1905, it is the central feature in the town. Now, owing to the ravages of termites, the whole building is in danger, and the clock tower has been so undermined that it is no longer safe. About £4,000 will be required for the work of restoration. Gifts should be sent to Canon Rogers at Box 154, Fort Jameson.

E.A.W.L. Fortnightly Newsletters"Kikuyu Children Steeped in Bitterness"

THE LAST AFRICA WOMEN'S LEAGUE has begun to issue newsletters at fortnightly intervals. The first three naturally deal with the situation in Kenya as a result of Mau Mau activities.

One asks how Kikuyu children are to be rehabilitated after being steeped in anti-Christian and anti-European bitterness" in the independent schools; and pays warm tribute to the "steadfastness, courage, and loyalty among the genuine Kikuyu Christians, the best of the tribe's old men, and a proportion of the Asian community, who, with the Europeans, have joined in the common front against the evil threatening us. This united force for good must surely form the rock on which to build our common future."

The latest newsletter to reach London states:

"The Europeans who work in Nairobi by day are doubling up on the work of their colleagues who have left to do duty in the danger areas, and they also belong to the Kenya Police Reserve or the home guard and spend many tiring hours patrolling the streets at night; others, if they can get away, go to the danger areas for long week-ends and guard the farms while the owners get a good night's sleep."

The Indian shop-owner, too, has his own home guard at night, and by day has to be constantly on the alert lest the next African 'customer' may suddenly grab his till. The housewife does not know whether a member of her staff has not sworn to knife her, should the opportunity arise; and the loyal African workers are deeply worried by what may be happening to their homes, wives and families in the reserves.

Financially, of course, Mau Mau has dealt Nairobi and the whole country a terrible blow, for not only will the Government's development plans be delayed for years, because much of the country's revenue will have to be spent in paying for the emergency, but if the situation is not brought quickly under control there is a danger of scaring away overseas visitors who have contributed so greatly to the progress of the war.

In Nairobi about a third of the European men engaged in commerce are to be called up under the new direction of man-power regulations."

Better African Farming in Kenya

A REPORT ON AFRICAN DEVELOPMENT IN KENYA 1946-55 by Major F. W. Cavendish-Bentley, Member for Agriculture and Natural Resources, while stressing the extreme conservatism of the African, reveals slow but steady progress and limited optimism for the future. The writer concludes:

"Agricultural development is advisedly not based on a policy of grandiose and spectacular schemes, but rather on an accumulation of many small schemes adapted to the varying conditions of different parts of Kenya, aimed at the African peasant over the widest possible field. There is no short cut to full productivity of the land, especially in Africa, where patience, persuasion, and perseverance are the keys to progress."

"Nevertheless, during the development period certain major achievements can be recorded: first an ever-widening cover of effective conservation works, and much improved water supplies; then greater technical knowledge of how best to farm the varying zones of the Colony; and lastly, more individual Africans adopting improved farming methods, including the production of valuable cash crops, and the training of more Africans in agriculture at the increased number of training centres."

General Outlook Greatly Improved

"The basis of better farming is now spreading very widely among Kenya Africans, and ever-increasing numbers, including women, are accepting and responding with good will to advice about their crops and live stock."

"So, despite serious difficulties, such as traditional systems of land tenure in certain areas, the general outlook for the future has greatly changed during the development period and is now far brighter than it was six years ago."

Details are given of how an African might raise his annual income from £10 to £100 by consolidating his land, growing fodder for his cattle, using manure, and raising high-priced cash crops on a portion of his land.

The sale of surplus African crops was valued at £3,268,548 in 1951, against £1,376,382 in 1946.

In the Central Province during 1951 new terraces were made over 69,000 acres, terraces renovated over 88,896 acres, grass planted on 42,491 acres, and 1,312,902 trees planted.

Some 5,000 tons of fish were landed at the coast in 1952, against 2,300 tons in 1946; and a further 5,000 tons from Lake Victoria, compared with 4,000 tons in 1950.

The report has been republished in London by the Central Office of Information.

Mitchell Cotts and Company Report

Profit Maintained

MITCHELL COPTS AND CO. LTD., after providing £900,000 for taxation, earned a consolidated profit of £719,065 in the year ended June 30 last, compared with £713,939 in the previous year. General reserve receives £250,000, contingencies reserve £100,000, and pension fund £50,000. Interest on the preference shares requires £53,250, and dividends totalling 25% (on increased capital) £271,120, leaving a balance of £802,949 to be carried forward, against £654,178 brought in.

The issued capital of the parent company consists of £150,000 in 6½% cumulative preference shares, £1m. in 4½% cumulative redeemable second preference shares, both of £1 denomination and £1,215,000 in ordinary shares of 50 pence. Capital Reserve stands at £948,710, revenue reserves at £2,902,949, reserve for future taxation at £68,000 and current liabilities at £1,128,597. Conditions in E. Africa since early 1952 are reported to have been increasingly difficult, and there was some deterioration in trading results. Although confidence is expressed in the future, the territories improvement is not expected to be immediate.

The directors are Messrs. H. C. Drayton (chairman), A. A. Rough (deputy chairman), H. J. Burnie, D. C. Holmes, and F. Knight, joint managing directors; L. G. Dann, R. E. Van Der Veen, J. M. Donald, and E. H. Weston. The secretary is Mr. C. W. Coote.

The 33rd ordinary general meeting will be held in London on April 15, and the text of the chairman's statement appears on another page.

Of Commercial Concern

Sena Sugar Estates, Ltd., will hold an extraordinary general meeting in London on April 10 to consider a resolution to increase the banked-up powers of the directors from the nominal amount of capital, to twice the amount of the issued and paid-up capital for the time being.

Dr. E. P. Saggerson, Kenya Government geologist, has recommended the harnessing of waterfalls running into Lake Victoria for electric power, and suggests the investigation of the area near Kisumu as a site for a hydro-electric scheme, and possibly for irrigation schemes.

At last week's auctions in London 2,884 packages of African teas were sold for an average price of 3s. 3.97d. per lb., compared with 1,336 packages averaging 3s. 2.99d. per lb. in the previous week. The highest price obtained was 10s. 7d. for 90 packages from Kenya.

Excessive rain, inadequate labour, and late application of fertilizer are the reasons for the expected low yield of Rhodesian tobacco this year. Nevertheless, according to the assistant tobacco adviser, some leaf will be of the very highest quality.

N. Rhodesian Tobacco

Exports of unmanufactured tobacco from Northern Rhodesia last year totalled 9m. lb., valued at £1,119,000, compared with 104m. lb. and £1,639,000 in 1951.

Last year 122 local companies were registered in Northern Rhodesia, with nominal capital of £1,712,253.

Crocodile skins may be exported from Uganda to Kenya and Tanganyika only under licence.

Sudan cottons were generally lower in price last week by about 25 points per lb. for all deliveries.

Exports from Uganda in the first 11 months of last year were valued at £43,588,139.

Cash crops sold in organized markets last year by Uganda African farmers were valued at £9m., or £800,000 more than in 1951. The increase was mainly due to the rise in coffee prices. Castor seed realized £620,000. Agricultural marketing societies increased from 144 to 200.

Five Japanese business men and trade officials have recently visited Kenya to study the market for cotton goods in the Colony. They report that Japanese goods cannot compete in price with those from India.

National Bank of India Report

Dividend of 16% Maintained

THE NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA LTD., earned a consolidated profit of £41,437 in the calendar year 1952, compared with £341,437 in the previous year. Contingencies reserve receives £140,000, and premises account £75,000. Dividends totalling 16% require £191,625, leaving a balance of £323,703 to be carried forward, against £318,652 brought in.

The issued capital of the parent company is £4,562,500 in shares of £25 each, on which £12 10s. has been paid. Reserves stand at £3,675,000; profit and loss account at £274,980, and current liabilities at £117,227,185. Fixed assets are valued at £4,261,996; subsidiary companies at £1,450,000 and current assets at £120,746,419; including £20,345,056 in cash.

During the year branches were opened in Hargeisa in the Somaliland Protectorate, Eldoret in Kenya, and Moshi in Tanganyika, while the office in Soroti, Uganda, became a full-time independent branch during the year, as did the office at Tororo last February.

The directors are Messrs. J. K. Michie (chairman), A. N. Stuart (deputy chairman), T. T. K. Allen (who is also general manager), E. J. Mackenzie Hay, R. L. Hird, W. G. Lely, A. M. McGiggan, W. H. Miles, J. R. H. Pinckney, Sir George B. Morton, and Sir Robert N. Reid. Mr. N. W. Chisholm is deputy general manager, and Mr. W. Kerr-London manager.

The annual general meeting will be held in London on April 17, and the text of the chairman's statement appears on another page.

Sincere Servants of the Sudan

Farewell Broadcast of Three Secretaries

AN UNUSUAL BROADCAST was given recently from Radio Omdurman by Sir James Robertson, Sir Charles Cummings, and Sir Louis Chick, the retiring Civil, Legal, and Financial secretaries to the Sudan Government, who have served in that country for 30, 25, and 12 years respectively.

As their posts will shortly cease to exist in their present form, they are the last of the distinguished line of four upon whom fell much of the responsibility for administration, and these three placed the main duty of preparing the way for the self-governing constitution which will shortly come into force.

Sir Louis Chick, recalling that the Government's revenue had increased from a mere £200,000 in 1900 to £7m. in 1929, but that it fell to half that figure during the world depression of the early thirties. When the last war started it had recovered to £5m., and when it ended the Sudan Government had spent more on the Gezira cotton growing scheme than it had received from its share of the sales of the product. In recent years gave his Sudanese friends the warning that capital could continue to be attracted only if non-Sudanese were given a fair deal.

Sudanese Value Justice Highly

Sir Charles Cummings described the Sudanese as litigious people, who value justice most highly. He added that speed in litigation was not very highly prized, and that even the winner of a lawsuit would prefer his triumph to be long drawn out.

Sir James Robertson, recalling how much simpler life was when he arrived in 1922, said that whereas his wife and he had no decent furniture for years, new arrivals now expect wireless sets and refrigerators.

One thing which had not changed was the wonderful loyalty of the Civil Service within itself and to the Sudanese, upon whom he was sure the memory and influence of a firm but kindly administration would last long after the departure of British officials. "The work done in this country is a work of good intent is like bread cast upon the waters," he said, urging the Sudanese to be careful not to throw away the substance for the shadow. "Guard your freedom, my friends." Sir James concluded: "It is a precious jewel, and can easily be lost. We have tried to give you a chance to gain it; it will be your responsibility to guard it when we are gone."

As the announcer said at the end of the programme, these three men have left the country fine examples of earnest, sincere, and unselfish work.

Civil-Service Commission

Sir DAVID SLIBBY will be chairman of the commission appointed to consider salaries and conditions of service of the Civil Service in East Africa, the other members being Mr. W. D. Godsall and Mr. L. H. Gorsuch. Sir David, who was chairman of the commission on the Gold Coast Civil Service in 1950-51, retired in 1947 from the British Postal Service after nearly 40 years in the department.

Mr. Godsall joined the Ceylon Civil Service in 1923, became Controller of Finance and Supply, and was appointed Financial Secretary of the Malayan Union in 1946.

Mr. Gorsuch, recently head of the West African Department of the Colonial Office, joined the Malayan Civil Service in 1920. He is due to arrive in Kenya by air on April 2 the day on which the other two members will reach the Colony in the DURBAN CASTLE.

The secretary will be Mr. J. B. Gould, formerly establishment officer in Kenya, and the assistant secretary will be Mrs. M. Riley, of the staff of the East Africa High Commission.

European women in Southern Rhodesia are marrying earlier than they did 15 years ago. The Economic Bulletin points out that nearly half the women between 15 and 24 years are married now, compared with little more than a quarter in 1936. The article adds that few countries in the world have a natural rate of population increase higher than Southern Rhodesia. The average net reproduction rate in the Colony in 1951 was 1.52, indicating that the next generation will be half as large again.

Important Reforms in Buganda

Agreement with Kabaka

IMPORTANT REFORMS which are to take place in the Buganda Province of Uganda are designed to increase the responsibilities of the Buganda (Native) Government and give the people a greater say in the choice of their representatives and the conduct of their affairs. These reforms have been agreed in discussions between the Governor of Uganda, Sir Andrew Cohen, and his senior advisers on the one hand and the Kabaka of Buganda and his ministers on the other. They have been welcomed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

It has been agreed that the Protectorate Government shall transfer to the Buganda Government responsibility at provincial and lower levels for the maintenance and extension of certain educational, health, agricultural, and animal industry services, and detailed plans are now to be worked out by the two Governments.

To ensure that suitably qualified staff shall be available to administer the services, the Protectorate Government will second some officials, with their agreement, to the Buganda Government. Those seconded will continue to enjoy Protectorate Government terms of service, and their prospects of promotion will not be affected.

Kabaka's Three New Ministers

The Kabaka has decided to appoint three new ministers to deal with the additional work resulting from this transfer of responsibility. These ministers who will deal with health, education, and natural resources, will not rank as officers of State under the Uganda Agreement of 1900, which specifies that there shall be three such officers, namely, the Prime Minister, the Chief Justice, and the Treasurer. To emphasize the distinction the existing ministers will be known as Ministers of State or Senior Ministers.

Before making ministerial appointments the Kabaka will consult a delegation of the Great Lukiko (the Buganda Parliament), and will give the Lukiko the opportunity of ratifying the appointment of the ministers.

In order to broaden the representative character of the Lukiko, the Kabaka has decided that the number of elected members, now 40 out of 89, should be increased to 60 (three for each county); 20 of these will, as at present, be elected by the saza (county) councils; the remainder will be chosen from the muluka (parish) level through a single electoral college.

The Kabaka has also decided to develop a system of local government which will entail the devolution of financial and administrative responsibility to the saza councils.

These developments will involve a review of the financial relationship between the Protectorate and Buganda Governments. The Protectorate Government will ensure that the Buganda Government is left in no worse a position financially than at present as a result of the assumption of these new responsibilities.

The Buganda Government recognizes that it must provide a substantial part of the cost of the services transferred to it, and to facilitate this, proposes in due course to introduce into the Great Lukiko proposals for the establishment of a system of graduated taxation.

The arrangements now agreed will in no way supersede or vary the 1900 Agreement. The Governor of Uganda and his advisers will continue to advise the Kabaka and his ministers, and the Kabaka, his Government, and his people will continue to co-operate closely with the Protectorate Government in the organization and administration of Buganda in accordance with the terms of the Agreement, conforming to the laws and regulations of the Uganda Protectorate so long as these do not conflict with the Agreement.

Sacrificed to Tsetse

THE NUMBER OF ANIMALS DESTROYED in anti-tsetse fly operations in Southern Rhodesia during last year was 25,900, according to a statement made in the Parliament of the Colony by the Minister of Agriculture and Lands, Mr. J. M. Cadicott, who said that the total was made up as follows: elephant, 25; rhinoceros, seven; buffalo, 356; zebra, 258; eland, 268; kudu, 3,497; roan antelope, 237; sable, 1,063; waterbuck, 251; hartebeest, 21; tsessebe, 8; impala, 2,293; reedbuck, 764; buckbuck, 1,002; duiker, 8,160; Steepe's steinbuck, 75; klipspringer, 43; Livingstone's, 3; three warthogs, 3,760; bushpig, 786; baboon, 109; lions, one; leopard, 13; cheetah, three; hyena, 14; wild dog, 26; jackal, two; steinbok, 38; oribi, one.

Soldiers' Complaints from Kenya

Commons Denial of Charges

COMPLAINTS made in the House of Commons last week by Mrs. Braddock against the treatment of some British troops in Kenya have been officially denied.

During a debate on the Army estimates Mrs. Braddock read a letter which she had received from 12 soldiers in the 1st Battalion, the Lancashire Fusiliers, who wrote from Kenya on March 8:

"As serving soldiers of H.M. Army, and believing ourselves to be innocent men, we would like to bring to your notice the following statement that is meted out to personnel in this battalion which in no way compares with the regulations as laid down by the Army Council:

"Before starting to disclose the true facts of the battalion we would like to point out that we have in some small way infringed Army law and have been duly tried and punished for our offences. But in this battalion our punishment does not cease on release from the unit guardroom; all personnel being set free from detention have to complete three months' intensive training which is supposed to reform us, but after the aforementioned training agenda, as re-published below for your information, we are sure that you will agree with us that it is three months' penal servitude, not training."

"Up to date of this letter being compiled, four men released from the guardroom have been sentenced to this special platoon, total service between these four men is 32 years, two of them having served during the war. The following daily agenda is re-published below and is repeated the same, day after day for three months.

Alleged Daily Routine

"06.30 hours, reveille; 07.00 hours, breakfast; 07.10 hours, parade with starched K.D. and full marching order for inspection by the R.S.M. This is followed by 1-hour's drill in full marching order under the R.S.M.

"08.30 hours, parade in same dress as 07.30 parade for inspection by the adjutant. Dress to be immaculate even after having just done half-an-hour's drill in a temperature of average of 98°. 08.45 to 10 hour's drill under the adjutant. Dress, Angola shirts, denim slacks, full marching order, rifle, bayonet, etc.; 10 to 10.15 hours, weapon cleaning and returning arms to stores; 10.15 to 10.45 hours, break (kit to be cleaned during this period); 10.45 to 12 hours, specialist weapon training; 12 to 13 hours, break for dinner.

"13 to 14.45 hours, route march at 140 paces to the minute. Dress full marching orders. At end of the march a slit trench has to be dug by every individual and then filled up again. 15 to 16.30 hours advanced P.I. in full marching order; 16.30 to 17 hours, clean arms and return to stores; 17 to 17.45 hours, tea break; 17.45 to 19.30 hours, cleaning kit, and regimental history; 19.30 to 21.30 hours N.A.A.F.I. break; 21.30 hours, roll call, every man stood by his bed; 22 hours, bed and lights out.

"To make things rather more awkward every other night this special platoon is to be sent out on raids and patrols in the Kenya jungle, and still to appear on parade the following morning in a smart and soldierly-like appearance.

"The following amenities are granted to us: (1) all men sentenced to the platoon are to sleep in small tents which hold a party of six, up to date 18 men have been sentenced to join this platoon, only one tent has been erected, and to top it we are at present having the African long rain period; (2) there are no beds, bedding is just laid on the ground; (3) no lights are available; (4) no man is allowed to leave camp any time.

during the three months' training period, this alone is a punishment in its own right.

"Do you not consider that after doing a maximum period of 28 days' detention (the average period per person) and losing the 28 days' pay for this period, to be sentenced to this three months of hell under maniacs who are undermining British prestige and appearance by making us appear in front of Colonials in a manner worse than any slave period known?"

"This idiotic and fantastic notion was stated without warning and came after the great disappointment of the battalion Python being extended until August, that being the C.O.'s fault entirely, this being admitted by the C.I.G.S. on his recent visit to Kenya. If this platoon is allowed to continue it will antagonise men to do things wrong and will only lead to drastic finale."

"The battalion is well below fighting strength and yet the men who are at present undergoing detention and nominees for the special platoons are experienced men who were flown from M.E.L.F. to combat Mau Mau, not to start primary training all over again.

"Human beings can do this three months of bestial training and remain a sane man. We even doubt if the instructors can do it. In fact, on the route march the instructor follows in a jeep.

"Therefore, as human beings and furthermore true British citizens who have been brought up to fight for the rights of man and upholders of the truth, we appeal to you to state our case for fair play and justice. We thank you for your kind attention in perusing this letter and hope that it meets with your kindest consideration and attention.

"We remain, injured by others who fail to treat us as humans but unbiased against those who are willing to fight for us and of whom little or no notice is taken."

Mrs. Braddock said that she had sent a copy of the letter to the War Office, and asked for a full inquiry.

Mr. George Wigg asserted that the letter showed that a penal platoon had been created in the battalion, contrary to Queen's Regulations, and demanded action against the officer responsible, however senior in rank.

East Africa Command Statement

On behalf of East Africa Command, Colonel G. A. Rimbaud, Chief of Staff, issued a complete refutation of the charges. The statement said:

"The allegations are completely untrue. A small number of men of incorrigibly bad behaviour who cannot be trusted when out on small patrols have been damaging the good name of the regiment.

"Colonel W. W. Agar decided, as a means of preserving the regiment's good name, to ask company commanders to post such men to battalion headquarters, where they could be kept under the eye of the R.S.M. and the senior N.C.O.s. of battalion headquarters. But only four men arrived at battalion headquarters and the idea was abandoned, on the first day, as N.C.O.s. could not be spared to look after only four men.

"The commanding officer's intention was to give these men special training and there was never any intention to make them a permanent defaulter's programme. The allegation that they slept 18 to one tent is patently untrue, as only four men were posted to the platoon, and the normal allotment throughout the battalion is four men to one tent. Lights are never provided in tented camp on operations, but only in permanent camps. That they were forced out on night route marches is equally nonsensical, as the idea was not proceeded with even on the first day."

When she had read the statement Mrs. Braddock said that she was "unconvinced".

Education in Somaliland Protectorate Scholarship Holders Eschew Teaching

FOUR MORE ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS were opened in the Somaliland Protectorate in 1952, according to the report of the Education Department just published.

The staff now consists of 70 teachers of whom 10 are Europeans. The first secondary school will open in Sustak later this year, starting with 15 boys on a four-year course.

Of his departmental difficulties the Director writes:—

"In the Department not one Somali teacher who has completed his secondary education, it is to the greatest credit of the teaching staff that it has, in spite of this, been able to carry on and produce such good results. Nevertheless, it does mean that of the many boys who have received secondary education under Government scholarships in the Sudan, not one has chosen to take up the teaching profession. Four scholarships are to be granted at the new secondary school on the condition that the recipients agree to become teachers."

New Trade School

100 schoolboys who sat for the elementary school-leaving examination during the year, 85 were selected for vacancies in intermediate schools, 35 were admitted to the new trade school in Hargeisa; and 10 obtained apprenticeships in the Public Works Department.

At the end of the year 942 boys were attending the 12 elementary schools and 292 boys were undergoing four-year courses in the two Government intermediate schools. Fifty-two boys sat for the intermediate school-leaving examination, seven were awarded scholarships to Aden College, and six were sent on scholarships to Hawitub secondary school in the Sudan, while others were placed in the vocational training centre in Borama or Government employment.

Forty-two Koranic and private schools, of which six are for girls only, are receiving grants from Government. About 1,300 boys and 158 girls attend these schools, which provide religious teaching; in some cases arithmetic is included.

Of the 24 candidates who sat for the senior Cambridge examination at the Aden College last December five were successful.

Mr. Welensky on Leadership

MR. ROY WELENSKY, leader of the non-officials in the Legislative Council of Northern Rhodesia, said in that Chamber recently:

"Someone has to provide leadership in this country. Those on this side of the House have neither the power nor the responsibility. Those who sit opposite have responsibility to some extent. We on this side have power in the sense that we can almost make the government of this country impossible, but that seems to be the limit of our power."

I want an objective power. I want to be able to make policy. It will be argued that we have a non-official majority, but there is no party discipline on this side of the House. The only party in this House is led by the Chief Secretary. He can apply the power of his whip. I have not the power of the whip on this side. That is where party politics exist, and where leadership must come from in this country."

Capital totalling over £28m. has been brought by immigrants into Southern Rhodesia during the past seven years. The yearly average of £4m. compares with the pre-war figure of £400,000.

Mining

Leonora Corporation

LEONORA CORPORATION LTD., a mining finance company with East and Central African interests, has arranged to acquire Messrs. John Blackwood Hodge & Co. Ltd., a company engaged in manufacturing, distributing, servicing and hiring earth-moving equipment. The purchase price is £300,000 in 6% preference shares of £1. and £515,000 in ordinary shares of 6d. each. Leonora's authorized capital is to be increased from £200,000, of which £85,000 has been issued to £1m., and the name is to be changed to Blackwood Hodge (Holdings) Ltd.

N. Rhodesian Strike Settled

AFTER DISCUSSIONS between representatives of the Rhokana Corporation, Ltd., and those of the Nkana branch of the European Mine Workers' Union in Northern Rhodesia, the strike, which started on March 18 ended at the week-end. The dispute arose owing to the employment by contractors of men who were not members of the union. The basis of the settlement is temporary, pending the discussion of labour employed by contractors in the Copperbelt as a whole.

Tribal Representatives

WHETHER THE SYSTEM of tribal representatives on the Copperbelt should or should not continue was a matter for the mining companies and their employees to decide, said Mr. R. P. Bush, Northern Rhodesian Secretary for Native Affairs, recently. Private property was concerned, and it was not a matter in which the Government should interfere. He understood the question was being discussed on the Copperbelt.

Mashaba Asbestos

AN AGREEMENT has been signed granting to Rhodesian Asbestos, Ltd., of Toronto, an option to buy the Rosey Cross claims at Mashaba for £35,714 at any time up to February 1, 1955. Monthly payments are due to Mashaba Rhodesian Asbestos Co., Ltd., during the period of the option. If the option is exercised these will be regarded as part of the purchase price.

Bullion in Bulawayo

BULLION BARS of gold each worth over £10,000 will be manufactured every half-hour at the Transvaal Chamber of Mines pavilion during the Rhodes Centenary Exhibition. The largest collection of manufactured South African gold ever assembled north of the Limpopo River will be on display, worth more than £250,000.

Sherwood Starr

THE SHERWOOD STARR GOLD MINING CO., LTD., will hold an extraordinary general meeting in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, on April 15, to discuss resolutions in connexion with the voluntary liquidation of the company and the appointment of Ronald Stuart Walker as liquidator.

Tanganyika Mineral Exports

MINERAL EXPORTS from Tanganyika in January were valued at £132,836, compared with £88,655 in January, 1952. The main items were diamonds, £10,648 (£11,153); gold, £80,905 (£58,453); lead concentrates, £17,325 (nil); and mica sheet, £15,453/£11,524.

Consolidated Gold Fields

CONSOLIDATED GOLD FIELDS OF SOUTH AFRICA, LTD., announced that underwriting has been completed for an issue of 300,000 new £1 ordinary shares at 48s. per share. Holders of ordinary shares may apply for as many as they require.

De Beers Dividend

DE BEERS CONSOLIDATED MINES, LTD.—Final 120% on the deferred shares making 200% for 1952 (the same). Net profit, after providing £1,825,000 for taxation, was £10,092,399 (£10,338,555).

Kilembe Staff Reduction

A REDUCTION in European staff has followed reorganization of the Kilembe copper mine, Uganda. Important changes in the mine's layout are under consideration.

Rhodesian Mineral Output

SOUTHERN RHODESIA'S MINERAL OUTPUT in January was valued at £1,644,056, an increase of £351,629 over last year's comparable figure.

Presentations to Africans

ENGRAVED WRIST WATCHES have been presented to 101 African employees of the Roan Antelope Copper Mine, Luanshya.

HE CONDUCTS his business from a well-built store, a market stall or, simply, from a tray on the sun-baked earth. He sells expensive refrigerators... he sells matches (in bundles of ten plus a proportionate part of the box; to strike them on!). In British West and East Africa, in the Belgian Congo and parts of the Middle East, The United Africa Company acts as his importing wholesaler, in keen competition with others. Now almost entirely withdrawn from retail trading in these territories, the Company imports, stores and distributes wholesale, a rich assortment of manufactured goods from all over the world.

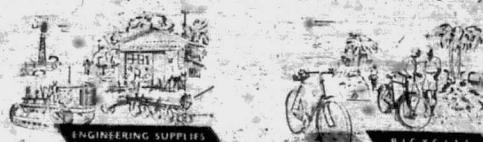

Drawing upon its unique experience it forecasts changes in the purse of the territories it supplies, and, by regulating the flow of imports, does much in territories where purchasing power fluctuates with the sale of harvests, to maintain the standard of living both of the Colonial shopkeeper and his customers.

Satisfactory Progress in A Year of Adjustment

Mr. J. K. Michie Reviews His Encouraging Tour of the East

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED, will be held on April 14 at 24 Bishopsgate, London, E.C.

The following is the statement by the chairman, MR. J. K. MICHIE, which has been circulated to shareholders with the report and accounts for the year ended December 31, 1952:

"Before dealing with the accounts I wish to refer to changes in our board of directors and our general

Board Changes

"Recently Mr. J. R. H. Pinckney has been reducing his business responsibilities and expressed a wish to retire from our board. He will cease to be a member after this meeting and we part with him with great regret. Mr. Pinckney is the doyen of the board; having joined it in June, 1934, and we shall greatly miss his wise counsel emanating from long experience and a well-stored mind, and in particular his wide knowledge of the tea industry. We shall also miss him as a friend.

"To fill this vacancy we have appointed to the board Mr. T. T. K. Allan, who retires from the position of general manager on March 31. It is our wish that the accumulated experience which Mr. Allan has gained in 50 years of service should not be lost to us, and you will be asked to confirm this appointment. But Mr. Allan's qualifications do not rest on service alone. As your general manager since February 1, 1946, he has shown a breadth of vision in his approach to the problems of the bank and a calm appreciation of all aspects of a situation which has been of immense value to myself, to the board, to his colleagues, and therefore to the bank.

"We could not have wished for a better chief executive and the staff could not have a head more sympathetic to their difficulties and their legitimate aspirations.

"Mr. Chisholm, who takes his place, needs no introduction to the shareholders or to our constituents, and he carries our full confidence as does Mr. Kerr, who has become deputy general manager.

Consolidated Balance-Sheet

"Turning to the accounts for 1952, the total of the consolidated balance-sheet shows a reduction of £3,816,532 to £143,467,142, which in the conditions met during the year is a relatively small decline. The figure relating to the National Bank of India, Limited, alone has fallen by £1,839,229, although the total of deposits has in fact risen slightly—loans payable on the other hand have fallen from £4,000,000 to £740,663.

"On the other side of the book advances have fallen by over £12,000,000 and, in consequence, cash and investments, including bills of exchange, etc. show an over-all increase of £10,962,165. As I explained last year there were special reasons for advances being temporarily high at December 31, 1951.

"After making full provision for taxation and other necessary reservations, net profits are £381,444, a reduction of £39,229 as compared with 1951 results, which were exceptional. We are therefore satisfied with the results and with the progress the bank is making.

"We continue to have to spend money on premises and housing, but because of the long-term nature of these assets we have decided it is more logical to spread writings-down over a more extended period, and this year we are allotting £75,000 for this purpose. As you can appreciate, your properties are worth very much more than the figure at which they stand in the books. We have allocated £115,000 to contingencies reserve account thereby strengthening our inner reserves, leaving the carry forward practically unaltered.

"Grindlays Bank, Limited, again had a satisfactory year and we continue to be satisfied with their progress. There is no special feature requiring comment in regard to the operations of our Finance and Development Corporation.

New Branches

"Branches of the bank have been opened at the following places since my last report:

"Hargeisa, Somaliland Protectorate; Eldoret, Kenya; Moshi, Tanganyika Territory.

"The offices at Soroti and Tororo, opened originally as sub-branches to Mbale, Uganda, have now become full time independent branches. Other developments are in train.

"Through no fault of our own we have again been disappointed in our hopes of opening a West End branch in St. James's Square, but since the beginning of the year progress made by contractors—who are not under our control—has been much better, and we can safely promise to be functioning in the autumn. It is regrettable that we shall not be open for the Coronation.

"The expectation I expressed last year that 1952 would be 'a year of adjustment' was certainly proved correct and in some countries and in certain sections of commerce and industry it involved considerable pain and tribulation.

"Hardly a commodity in the finance of which we are concerned escaped a severe fall in value—jute, cotton, and tea in India and Pakistan, rubber, copra, and coconut oil in Ceylon (her tea industry suffered but in a minor degree), cotton in Uganda, and sisal in Tanganyika. Prices of coffee in East Africa and rice in Burma were exceptions, but the rise in the price of Burma rice embarrassed still further her neighbouring consumers, India and Ceylon.

"Consumer buying power inevitably fell and this was aggravated in some countries by the previous excessive imports resulting in a very poor year for the importer. This position, both through Governmental restrictions made necessary by lack of foreign exchange and by the common sense of importers, is now being rectified and if smaller in volume trade should now be sounder in character than it was.

India

"India is our largest and oldest field. Since the General Election which returned Congress to power last spring Government has shown a firmer purpose in economic and labour matters than was obvious in pre-election days, and this must be welcomed.

"The financial policy being followed by the Finance

Minister, Sir Chintaman Deshmukh, while recognizing the need for lightening the tax burden of individuals is anti-inflationary, and interest rates are now being allowed to play their part in a country in whose money-markets that commodity is in short supply.

The Government has imposed a ban on the export duty on certain jute products and so helped the Calcutta mills to compete with an industry in Europe and elsewhere which had never have been developed to its present extent.

"The tea industry was in 1952 a headache to itself, to its bankers, and to the Government and at the end of the year prospects for quite a large section of the industry were not very bright. Fortunately due to a combination of causes and circumstances the picture has since improved radically and there is now reasonable grounds for optimism though not for complacency."

Decontrol of Tea

"A year ago there was no cloud in the sky, merely the prospect and hope that in the United Kingdom tea would be decontrolled and decontrolled. Unfortunately, a long series of bulk contracts in which quality was not sufficiently discriminated for or against in price, encouraged human frailty to assert itself and in all too many cases coarse plucking was indulged in. When decontrol and free auctions arrived, simultaneously came the inevitable consequences, good teas went up in price, poor teas fell catastrophically."

"I am glad to say that the industry took immediate steps to rectify its policy while the Government of India has given valuable assistance in lightening the burden previously imposed on the industry in the form of subsidies on food, although they have as yet done nothing by way of reducing the imposts of excise and import duties.

"Fortunately also the stock position in this country is not so heavy as was feared, and the cumulative result has been a steady recovery in prices which we hope will be maintained. My excuse for writing at length on the subject of tea is that because the lesson has been short and sharp I hope it will not be easily forgotten. We cannot dissociate ourselves from the problems and policy of one of our largest interests."

"Food production in India remains its biggest and most intransigent economic difficulty, and although by better agricultural methods, by irrigation schemes, and by encouraging the use of artificial fertilizers real if unspectacular progress is being made, a continually growing inflation largely if not entirely negatives the gains. Government's five-year plan aims particularly at meeting this crying need."

Pakistan

"The year 1952 was almost as disastrous for Pakistan's economy as the previous year was favourable."

"Her food grain crops were poor, while prices of cotton in west Pakistan and jute in east Pakistan fell steadily and steeply. She had also in the flush of previous prosperity allowed imports on far too generous a scale."

"To help the situation the Government—I think mistakenly—indulged in price support schemes which in the event left it with stocks on which it has lost considerably. Earlier realization would have saved their Budget from losses and would have benefited the country's external trade balance."

"The Government of Pakistan is now taking energetic steps to rectify the situation which fundamentally is quite sound, by limiting non-essential imports and by stimulating exports, though I regret to see a modern State reverting to barter as a method of trading. This I fear is another consequence of non-convertibility of currencies."

"Trade between India and Pakistan is not dead but it is far from being alive as it should be and even though a mere and obvious truism one must point to the enormous mutual advantages that would derive from a free flow of commerce within the sub-continent."

Ceylon

"Ceylon is another country that has had to adjust its ideals of importing and Governmental spending to a reduced income. Her major problem is the cost of the necessary imports of foodstuffs, mainly rice, and as her yearly needs are not less than 450,000 tons this, if imported entirely as rice at present world prices, would cost over £30,000,000."

"Further, Ceylon was subsidizing rice to such an extent that it was heavier to the consumer than wheat products which in current cost less than half. Obviously, the Government cannot afford such a policy, and I am confident it will amend it in its coming budget."

"The feature of Ceylon's economic year has been the barter deal with China of 50,000 tons sheet rubber for 270,000 tons of rice, both at prices which seem favourable to Ceylon. Each side will try to assure that shipments balance as nearly as possible, and this may well interfere with the smooth working of the agreement. Already the rubber market in Colombo is suffering from the lack of Chinese tonnage."

"Another and possibly serious obstacle is the decision of the United States of America and of Great Britain not to allow the use of its tonnage and to forbid the bunkering at its stations of any tonnage used for the transport to China of strategic materials—under which rubber falls."

"If a little slowly, the reconstruction of Colombo is proceeding steadily."

Burma

"During 1952 the control of the Burma currency previously vested in a Currency Board sitting in London was removed to Rangoon under the Union Bank of Burma, and the name of the rupee changed to the kyat, a name by which it was always known in the Burmese language, and now it is a decimal currency. Under the Union Bank of Burma Act the value of the international reserve maintained by the bank shall not be less than 25% of the bank's liability on account of debts in currency in circulation. The present ratio is 90.26."

"While there are definite and sore irritations, such as the activities of Chinese Nationalist troops in the Shan States and of Red and White Communist guerrillas whose sporadic raids are most unsettling, not to forget the continued lack of a firm settlement of the Karen question, the past year has on the whole been one of progress politically and economically."

"The very high prices obtained for her rice surplus have assured Burma of an extremely favourable trade balance which shows every sign of being increased in 1953 and as Government insists that 300s. post-war kyats less expenses is at least as good a price to the cultivator as was 125s. to 150s. pre-war rupees, this means that the Government's policy is anti-inflationary—that it is piling up balances which so far it has hardly begun to spend while the purchasing power of the cultivator remains low. True progress through the increase of law and order will only be reflected in a higher production, and it is confidently expected that 1953 will see a larger surplus of rice for export."

"Now that the constitutional position has been cleared by a reference to the Supreme Court it is expected that negotiations for the projected joint venture in the oil industry will be resumed, and others may follow."

"ADEN has inevitably suffered in trade from the suffer, and merchants have had to face considerable losses on their stocks of imports, but on the whole trade is remarkably active, and is undoubtedly being aided by the erection of the A.L.O. limited refinery in Little Aden.

"SOMALILAND PROTECTORATE. Our branch at Hargeisa only functioned for nine months in '52, but the volume of business done is encouraging.

East Africa

"KENYA. The economy of the Colony has been gravely disturbed by the tragic emergence of the Mau Mau organization created by a small but fanatical section of the Kikuyu tribe.

"There are in fact two tragedies: one that the crisis was not forestalled, the other the aftermath of fear and bitterness it will leave behind however soon the present emergency may be resolved. This will want all the statesmanship and good will at the command of the Governor and his advisers, to whom our sympathy goes.

Effect of Mau Mau

"So far the effects of the Mau Mau activities on agriculture and industry have been less than was to be expected, but they may well increase and last for a long time, for Government are being forced to postpone certain schemes of development they had in train.

"UGANDA. Although cotton prices fell, production was good and coffee did well.

"The Owen Falls electricity scheme can already sell its potential production, and the formation of the Uganda Development Corporation to take over such-like projects as the Tororo Cement Works is a sound move. Considerable mineral development in the Karamoja district is in prospect, and a rail link with that area is under construction.

"TANGANYIKA. Although sisal and cotton prices have fallen they are still adequate, and on the whole the territory had a satisfactory year. As with Uganda, the lack of adequate road and rail communication remains the main obstacle to development, particularly of mineral potentialities.

"ZANZIBAR. Cloves, the principal source of income, made satisfactory prices.

"I have just returned from a tour of the east, during which I visited all except four of our branches east of Suez.

"What I saw of our business and our staff was encouraging. Our relations with the various Governments and with the central banks, which in our sphere of activities represent them, are excellent, and the spirit of service which is a well-kept tradition throughout the staff is appreciated by our customers.

Adjustments in the East

"The changes caused by the achievement of political independence in India, Pakistan, Burma, and Ceylon have demanded a reorientation by British businesses operating in these countries, but I think the necessary adjustments, mental and otherwise, have been made very successfully.

"One cannot but be struck by the initiative being displayed by the new governments, made up in some cases by names previously quite unknown to the political scene.

"That their dynamic urges, spurred in varying degree by nationalism, have led to actions and policies which have not been particularly successful they themselves would probably admit, but the past two years have at least brought first-hand experience which I hope will be heeded in future.

"Extreme nationalism, I fear, often regards its aims as justifying themselves irrespective of their economic results; on the other hand, all these countries require and want foreign aid in the form of capital, and I hope that a mutually happy modus vivendi for British capital and its necessary British personnel will be found. Good will and tolerance will be necessary on both sides.

"I was struck by the calibre, esprit de corps and enthusiasm of our staff of all ranks wherever I went, and once again we owe them genuine praise and sincere thanks for their work during the past year.

"I will end by reference to an issue about which I am often asked and with which all countries in the sterling area and we as an Exchange Bank are deeply concerned—free convertibility of sterling. It has been my view that this most desirable consummation can only come by being worked for, and that to experiment with such a measure before ensuring adequate safeguards in the form of gold and dollar balances would be catastrophic.

Washington Talks

"At the time of writing the means to a solution of this question are under discussion in Washington, and it is to be hoped that the result will be a positive contribution. Until then barter arrangements with their restrictive effects are likely to continue.

"The bane of our economic existence to-day is 'autarchy,' a policy bred by fear out of nationalism. When, for instance, rice can be grown at less than half the cost of buying it in world markets, it is surely plain common sense to put capital into agriculture rather than into industries the products of which have to be subsidized. That may be an over-simplification, but it is nevertheless basically true.

"In spite of the difficulties of the times through which we are passing I have complete faith that your business will grow and expand, and I believe our prospects for 1953 are quite favourable.

Group's Record Results

Mr. H. C. Drayton's Review of Widespread Interests

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF MITCHELL COTTS AND COMPANY, LIMITED, will be held on April 15 at Winchester House, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.2.

The following is the statement by the chairman, Mr. H. C. DRAYTON, which has been circulated with the financial statements for the year ended June 30, 1952:

"In June last we had to record the death of Mr. Leonard Aldridge, the late chairman. Mr. Aldridge had joined the board of this company in 1946, became managing director in January, 1942, and chairman in October, 1946. It is not too much to say, and I am certain all my colleagues will agree with me, that the expansion and progress shown by this company over the years were largely due to his inspiration, initiative, and foresight.

"He was a man who never once, to my knowledge, spared himself where the interests of the company were involved, and I think it probably as near the truth as may be that his death at such an early age was due to the hard work he put in for the shareholders of this company, who owe him a debt of gratitude which they have no means of paying.

"My colleagues, some of whom had been associated with him even before they were connected with this company, have suffered the loss of a great friend.

"For myself, as for them, this has not only been a business loss but the loss of an intimate and personal friend which every one of us knows cannot be replaced.

The Accounts

"The accounts before you, and in particular the consolidated profit and loss and balance-sheet, show a satisfactory position. In the few comments I have to make on these I shall refer to the consolidated accounts.

"When the issue of 1,305,200 Ordinary 5s. shares at 13s. each was made in May, 1952, your directors expressed the opinion that the results for the year to June 30 would not be less than those for the previous year.

"The accounts show that this forecast was justified, the trading profit having increased by £240,528 to a new record of £1,767,208 and, after providing £900,000 for taxation and making the necessary adjustments for minority interests, capital profits, etc., the net profit of £719,063 is the highest yet achieved by the group.

"It is a fitting tribute to the work of our late chairman that the company made a record profit during the last year in which he held office.

"After providing for the preference dividends and the ordinary dividend of 25%, of which the second interim of 15% was paid on the increased capital, the sum of £548,771 was available for appropriation. You will have noted that your directors decided to transfer £250,000 to general reserve and £100,000 to contingencies and investment reserve, and to recommend the payment of £50,000 to the trustees of the staff auxiliary pension fund. The balance of £148,771 increases the carry-forward to £802,949.

"You will appreciate that in making the above appropriations we had in mind the substantial increase of over £2,000,000 in our stocks and work in progress, nearly all of which are situated in countries overseas.

"The proposed allocation to the staff auxiliary pension fund, to which no contribution has been made since 1945, and which now stands at approximately £45,000, is considered necessary in order to provide retirement benefits for some who would not be adequately covered by the group pension schemes.

This fund, as you may recall, is administered by trustees who have the power to grant pensions, supplementary pensions or allowances, on or after retirement, to directors, officers or employees of the company and its subsidiaries. Further allocations to this fund may be recommended from time to time.

"No provision has been made for excess profits levy. The companies of our group to which the tax applies have favourable profit standards and should not be affected.

Value of Stocks

"The increase in the value of stocks and work in progress deserves special comment because a number of factors have affected this item in the balanced sheet in different ways. During the year under review there was a fall in the value of a number of commodities but with the exception of textiles, manufactured goods of the type currently dealt in by our trading subsidiaries were not greatly affected.

"The actual volume of stocks increased to some extent owing to a recession in sales which made itself felt in some areas in the first half of 1952. At the same time shipping delays, particularly for the Sudan and for British East Africa, continued to get worse, increasing the total of goods in transit which are included under the heading of stocks. Furthermore, the turnover of the group as a whole increased, the chief item accounting for this increase being the contracting work engaged in by our South African subsidiaries.

"I consider that the reserves and provisions for taxation made by the various companies of the group are sufficient to cover the current and future liabilities on all profits earned up to June 30, 1952, and I would also mention that subsequent to that date we reached a final settlement of our British excess profits tax liability, which will result in a further small amount being released from tax provisions during the current year.

Review of Activities

"In respect of the different branches of our group's activities and to more recent developments, those companies operating in the United Kingdom, including the parent company, have all shown good results.

"Our exports from the United Kingdom totalled about £8,650,000. Efforts are being made with the help of our overseas companies to develop new trade which we hope will more than offset any reduction in exports to those territories which are adversely affected by economic conditions and by currency restrictions.

"Our London shipping companies' profits were satisfactory and, while the group's accounts for the current year will also include good shipping figures, present rates of freight leave little margin for depreciation and profit.

"The decline in turnover in our coal business, to which reference was made last year, was partially offset by diversion to other sources of supply, as a result of which the profits in this section did not suffer to the extent which might have been expected.

"Our South African group has continued to progress and again made the largest contribution to the year's results. Reference was made last year to contracts undertaken by one of our South African companies for uranium plants for several of the gold-mining companies.

"Additional orders have been secured, and it is hoped that the leading position attained by our subsidiary will provide them with substantial work in this field alone for several years to come. They also have under construction a large extraction plant for diamond mines in Tanganyika.

Conditions in East Africa since July 1952 have been increasingly difficult, and the trading results in that year showed some deterioration from those of the previous year. Although we have confidence in the future of this territory, no immediate improvement is looked for, particularly in view of the fall in the prices of sisal and other commodities produced in the territory. Our staff in Kenya deserve particular mention in recognition of the difficulties they continue to face in addition to those of the general situation.

Sudan Trading

Our Sudan East company has suffered from continued political and economic conditions. In the Sudan trading was adversely affected by the fall in value of the produce and also to a considerable extent by congestion in Port Sudan and on the railways, which I am pleased to say has been somewhat relieved in recent months.

Our business in the Far East, through our London subsidiary trading in that area, and through our company now in Malaya, constituted a record both in turnover and in profits, but these have not been maintained during the current year.

Our Canadian companies continued to operate satisfactorily, as American and Italian subsidiaries, although facing very difficult exchange conditions, continued to fulfil their primary function of service to the other members of the group. Our company in Saudi Arabia is now showing satisfactory results.

The Current Year

From the foregoing remarks you will understand that some of our overseas companies are having to adapt themselves to changing trading conditions and that results may be unfavourably affected for a time, but as in previous years, temporary setbacks in some territories may be compensated by improvements elsewhere.

As regards the current financial year, you appreciate that we have figures for only six months and it would be rash to make any forecast of the results to June. I would only wish you to count on another record, but from the estimates so far received I have no reason to expect unsatisfactory results.

"Our strong position enabled us during the past year to meet without difficulty the big change which took place in world trading conditions, and should give us confidence in our ability to face whatever new developments the future may hold."

"In conclusion, I wish to record our appreciation of the work done by the officials and employees of all our companies at home and overseas, and our thanks for their efforts which have been an important factor in achieving the results now before you."

Zambesia Exploring Company, Limited

Captain Charles Waterhouse's Review

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE ZAMBESIA EXPLORING COMPANY LIMITED was held in the Chartered Insurance Institute, 20 Aldermanbury, London, E.C.2, on Wednesday, March 19.

CAPTAIN CHARLES WATERHOUSE, M.C., Director of the company, had submitted his annual report with the report and accounts for the following year.

"My first duty is to thank my fellow directors for their support and encouragement. As Alexander von Humboldt said, 'The world is not yet ripe for the development of our resources,' and the same applies to our limited and position strengths."

"The company's main asset is its concession in the Tanganjika Concession, which covers an area of 10,225 square miles, who are entitled to 100% of the mineral production. This is the only concession in the Tanganjika Concession which is not held by a foreign company.

"The company has obtained an additional concession in 1952, which has been an occasional permit for your company and has a large profit there made on the sale of stocks and materials which are produced and sold every year. He also observed that the carry-over of past losses which had rendered the company immune to profits tax in the past, was now over, and that the full effects of the tax would be felt. The results indicated by this warning have been partly offset by the increased earnings of the Zambesia Investment Company Limited.

"After making provision for current taxation after the finalization of previous years under provided for, the company's balance brought forward from 1952, a figure of £12,747 remained available for distribution in the parent company. An interim dividend of 1/- per share has been paid and the sum made for payment of proposed final dividends and a half of the amount set aside for distribution.

The profits of the Zambesia Exploring Company Limited, after provision for taxation, were £38,668, making a total net profit of £67,769, compared with £60,000 for the profit of that company last year. The net undistributed profit carried forward from the previous year, thereby increased from £24,043 to £61,711.

Profits Tax

"The charge for profits tax on the accounts of the Zambesia Investment Company Limited, is at the rate of 21%. While the basis of calculation of profits tax remains unaltered, this will be the maximum rate payable so long as profits are not distributed by the company. Such net undistributed profit is to be regarded as equivalent to a profit received by the parent company. On January 1, 1953, the parent company has advanced a further sum of £10,000 to the Zambesia Investment Company Limited to enable it to increase its holding of Tanganjika Concessions ordinary stock."

"During the year the range of securities held in which companies has been further extended, and at December 31, 1952, the market value of the quoted securities held £60,292, was considerably in excess of the book figure of £455,965."

"The increase in income from investments, both in the parent company's accounts and those of its sub-

It can largely be attributed to increased dividends from Tanganyika Concessions, Limited. Stockholders are now reaping the benefit of more than 50 years close association with the company, and of the support given to it in the very early stages in Central Africa and reached in Tahganvika Co., Inc.

The principal assets of Tanganyika Concessions Limited, consist of shares and debentures in the Union Miniere du Haut Katanga and the Benguela Railway Company Limited. The consolidated results of the company for the year ended July 31, 1951, showed a profit before taxation of £11,821,390, compared with £11,131,761 for the previous year. Provision was made for the payment of dividends of 10% on the preference shares and 10% on ordinary stock both grossed up leaving a dividend appropriated of £109,790.¹ In addition a dividend of 10% was paid on the ordinary stock which had been reserved, making a total dividend for the year of £11,931,180, or 25% for the year.

The company holds 50% of the share capital and has received 50% of the issued capital of The Holdings Limited. The rights include 50% of the shares of The Holdings Limited, as well as 50% of the shares of The Kenyan Gold and Estates Limited.

Southern church congregations where the B. M. R. is prominent, I am surprised that there is no return to religion." Mr. H. Wilcox, of the Roman Catholic and in the Conference, said: "I am sorry which is the best way to be saved."

S. Rhodesia Financially Sound

Sir Godfrey Haggis's Assurances

SOUTHERN RHODESIA'S FINANCIAL POSITION IS ABSOLUTELY SOUND, declared Sir Godfrey Puggins, the Prime Minister, in reply to allegations made in a letter to the Press by Mr. Cech Dominik, a Businessman in Ndola. Mr. Burney had written:

We in "Southern Rhodesia" are fully aware of the financial sacrifices which we shall make in joining the Federation as proposed in the White Paper. We are, however, prepared to make these sacrifices in order to obtain the benefits of a more stable political system and to participate fully in the Regional Office. The extent of our sacrifice and the consequent financial gain for "Southern Rhodesia" should be fully appreciated by the electorate who will cast their votes.

Sir Godfrey replied that it was a mystery of the facts that the country's finances were not sound. "We must either sound at the expense of considerable uncertainty. The country wants billions of dollars. Any scheme of rapid development would be very much better for our federation than by ourselves."

World Bank Team

He also noted that the World Bank had refused to lend Southern Rhodesia £10 million, and agreed to lend the money to Northern Rhodesia. He said that the money was received by the British Government. The amount of money available was limited, and Southern Rhodesia would receive more than its share, having received more grants.

Mr. B. C. Ladd, of Boston, suggested to Southern life's credit department that they have a loan of money. Mr. Ladd said that they have a just over $10,000 balance at the London offices, lent most of it by the underwriters, and the best judges of our credit; and that the reason for the loan was that the insurance houses in New York were so anxious to do business with us that English agents had been sent here.

THE SPLENDID ARAB DHOH, a craft which has remained unchanged in design for centuries, was strongly chosen for the port of Zanzibar. The Arabs who sail these picturesquie craft are a sturdy and virile race, true seamen in every sense of the word.

Zanzibar, with its long and stormy history, was the place where Smith, Mackenzie & Co. first set up in business twenty-five years ago. Since then their services have spread all over East Africa, and the accumulated experience of these years of trading is at your disposal today.

MARINE AND ROAD SERVICES OF EAST AFRICA

SOME of the largest of the great lakes of Africa, which form such a prominent feature of the continent, are situated in East African territories. On Lakes Victoria, Tanganyika, Albert and Kivu, and on the River Nile above the Sudan border, the East African Railways and Harbours Administration operates a large fleet of steamers, tugs and lighters, over routes totalling 6,000 miles. These craft carry more than 300,000 tons of cargo each year and play an important part in the development of areas which would otherwise be cut off from communication with the outside world.

In other parts of the territories, particularly in Tanganyika, where there is no railway and no possibility of inland navigation, the East African Railways and Harbours Administration operates road motor services, carrying passengers and goods over many hundreds of miles of roads, sometimes so rough that only specially constructed vehicles can stand up to working over them. The Administration's road fleet covers 3 million miles a year carrying nearly 300,000 passengers and 80,000 tons of goods.

These road and marine services are vital to the development of the East African territories and provide an indispensable transport service in a vast area stretching from the River Nile in Northern Uganda to Lake Nyasa in Southern Tanganyika, 1,000 miles away.

MAATTERS OF MOMENT

THIS GOVERNMENT can count on a majority in the House of Commons of no more than sixteen, but it had a margin of forty-four votes in last week's debate on federation—and that three-line whip, despite the most strenuous efforts of the Labour and Liberal leaders to compel their followers to vote for an amendment which objected to the White Paper proposals on the grounds that the safeguards for Africans were inadequate, and that it would not be right to "impose the scheme against the will of the African people." Both Opposition parties issued a three-line whip, the strongest formal injunction to any Member of Parliament who, whatever his party, knows that to disregard it is a breach of discipline, and that the displeasure of his superiors may even take the extreme form of withdrawal of support from him at the next election. Now that so many Parliamentarians are whole-time professional politicians, that would mean the loss of the main or often the sole source of income. A three-line whip therefore constitutes a most powerful sanction.

Last week it was reinforced by personal persuasion. Those Socialists who were known to feel that the federal plan should be implemented were summoned to meet privately Mr. Griffiths, Sir Frank Soskice, and Mr. Whiteley, the Chief Whip, who did his best to discourage these independent-minded men from following the dictates of their conscience. That any of them would vote with the Government was most unlikely; they were disposed to enter neither lobby. Yet everything possible was done to deny them even this measure of freedom on a matter on which they felt most deeply. Thereafter, which should in any event have been kept on a non-party basis. That responsible Socialists—sixty, for half a dozen members of the last Cabinet declined to vote with their party. Others who did go into the lobby with Mr. Griffiths are known to have disliked the whole business, and no better spokesman could be found for the concluding speech than Sir Frank Soskice, who repeatedly revealed his inadequate acquaintance with the subject under discussion. He may have been very hurriedly briefed for his part, for otherwise so able an advocate would have given a better account of himself. That Mr. Attlee and some of his chief lieutenants have been unhappy is evident from their conspicuous silence throughout the exchanges of recent months.

Not knowing what voting arrangements had been made for other reasons, it is not possible to say exactly how many Socialists abstained in order to register their disagreement with the majority. The Courageous number was between sixteen and twenty; they did not remain in the Chamber during the division. Among the Socialists who abstained were Mr. Gordon-Walker, R. R. Stokes, Mr. Maurice Webb, Mr. A. Barnes, Mr. George Brown, and Mr. Bellenger, all members of the last Labour Cabinet; Messrs. Stanley Evans and C. R. Hobson, who were for a while junior

QUEEN MARY

The British and Central African Dependencies of the Crown will have learned with sorrow of the death of Queen Mary who throughout a long life set and insisted upon the highest standards of personal and public behaviour. The Empire mourns her great and good Queen.

Minister of State for Colonial Affairs, who with Mr. Evans, visited Central Africa with a Parliamentary delegation. Mr. Thomas Reid, a former member of the Royal Service, Mr. Noel Coward, Mr. V. T. Lorimer, Mr. G. H. Oliver, Mr. H. C. Usborne, Mr. J. Thistle and Mr. Philip Price. Sir Harry Shawcross was asked, and stated it to be known that he sympathized with the Abstainers. These were the Socialists who have far that the Federation in Central Africa intend to build a federation on a genuine interracial partnership.

Not one good speech was made against proceeding with the proposals for federation, but two Conservative and two Socialist opponents of the White Paper were particularly successful in revealing

Poor Speeches. The shallowness of the opposition.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies opened with a statement which was modest and fair, but moderately phrased even when it dealt most searchingly with the weakness of the anti-federalist case. Mr. Lyttelton destroyed in advance most of the contentions which Mr. James Griffiths was to voice with mingled emotion and exaggeration, and Stanley Evans, Mr. C. R. Hobson, Colonel Walter Elliott, and Mr. Hopkinson dealt faithfully with the rest. The intervention of Mr. John Dugdale, a former Socialist Minister of State for Colonial Affairs, was wholly unhelpful and largely irrelevant. A similar speech came from Mr. Leslie Hale, who, claiming a desire to serve the cause of conciliation, proceeded to express his unflattering view of Southern Rhodesia's history and his distrust of Sir Godfrey Huggins. Mr. R. Williams, a Socialist barrister who recently spent a few days in Northern Rhodesia, admitted meeting many Africans who did not know the first thing about federation, and then argued that the federation de jure of the Government was set on introducing amalgamation de facto which was unjustifiable. It was not the only federation speech which was largely legalistic.

Perhaps the greatest surprise was the speech of Mr. C. R. Hobson, Labour member for Keighley, who described federation as advantageous from the African standpoint, regretting his party's insistence on such a debate before the referendum in

Mr. C.R. Hobson On "Imposition" Northern Rhodesia and dismissed the plea that federation ought to be imposed against African wishes with the reply that all Colonial government was an imposition. To accept the accusations of "imposition," he said, would be equivalent to renouncing our trusteeship in every Colonial possession—remarking in a lighter vein that His Majesty's present Government was a very unsomesome imposition! He reminded the House that millions of Africans were still less advanced than the ancient Britons, and that to do what the few Africans with European education wanted would let the nine millions of their fellows to the mercy of a small and self-appointed caucus which would be far, far less trustworthy than the Colonial Office. Mr. Hobson also denounced as incredible the assumption of Mr. Griffiths and Mr. Dugdale that the Europeans in Central Africa were solidly against African interests, and prophesied that to postpone federation would be to give "the worst type of propagandists the opportunity to do their very devilish worst." Sir Robert Grimston affirmed that many of "our white blood brothers" in Central Africa had ideas as liberal and statesmanlike as those of members of the House of Commons.

Those who had expected Mr. Griffiths to make one of the most notable speeches in his Parliament career must have been sorely disappointed. He was rhetorically effective, but that is the least that any Emotion and Exaggeration. objective assessment could allow, for during the thirty-five minutes he was on his feet there was little but distortion and exaggeration. Having charged Southern Rhodesia with a breach of faith, he made unfounded or distorted statements on such matters as the extent of African opposition, African representation in executive councils, the political advancement of Africans, and the difference between "detrimental" or "differing" measures. On all points he was unable to answer. His most reckless action was to quote at length from a speech made in the Northern Rhodesian Legislature nearly a year ago by Mr. John Moffat, a representative of African opinion, whom he claimed to be opposed to federation, when he could easily have discovered that several subsequent speakers indicated Mr. Moffat imports the present amended plan. Mr. Griffiths's oration was no happier than the body of the speech. He declared that he expected a full federation which, based on existing tribal units, could be built on stone volcanoes which caused Mr. Walter Elliott to inquire if it would be less foolish to do that in a few hours than in a few months. Puffing up like a puffed-up fish, he asserted that the African state had not produced one sound argument for the claim which he demanded.

Mr. Lyttelton presented the plan as a great political concession for progress built on interracial partnership, warning the House that recalcitrance or delay would bring about dangerous results by leaving the African National Congress, its black and white supporters, black and white, the clannish progressives and the anti-federalist reactionaries. He described how the safeguards for African interests had been improved, and how the earlier criticism had been met in the new scheme, emphasizing that the African Affairs Board had been made a much better instrument, he effectively quoted Mr. Gordon Walker against Mr. Griffiths in that connexion. He was at pains to describe the artificiality of the opposition organized by the African National Congress in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, and referred to the prefabrication of views in this country for export to Africa and return to the United Kingdom as indigenous objections. He quoted a recent telegram from the Governor that whereas half the chiefs in Nyasaland were dominated by the Congress, the other half were wavering "with a good proportion believing in federation but fearful of coming into the open." The Government could not evade its duty because a minority had raised clamours at the Secretary of State, adding that acceptance of that attitude would render his office an "ignoble sinecure." Having disposed of a number of wildly inaccurate accusations, he roundly accused a recent Labour Party publication of lying when it declared that "the intended safeguards for African interests are almost all removed." The concluding speech concluded on the note that to reject or defer federation would be to resign our responsibilities as a Colonial Power.

Sincerity of Mr. S. N. Evans. Mr. Stanley Evans, the Labour Member for Wednesbury, can seldom have spoken to better purpose. He declared yet again his acceptance of the principle of federation, his pride in British achievements in Central Africa.

His faith in the good intentions of the great body of local Europeans, and his conviction that the opposition organized by a small minority of Africans must not be allowed to deflect Her Majesty's Government from what he honestly believed to be the right course, not once did Mr. Evans exaggerate. There were risks either way, he conceded, but those of withdrawal were far greater than those among Africans. It was largely due to the failure of his own party when in office to give inspiring Africans that guidance about the plan which they had the right to ask. With the consequence that the Congress Government thought that they could defeat the scheme by misrepresentation and intimidation. Not black domination, but partnership was the only way forward, one of the partners being our own people who do not suddenly become sadistic monsters when they go out to Africa. Those who had quoted statements by Sir Godfrey Heslop, a very vigorous creature living in a vigorous part of the world, were reminded that equally exuberant sentences could be cited from speeches by front-bench Socialists. Evans declared that in Central Africa we have been given another chance to carve out a new civilization based on the best in both races and dedicated to the principle of equal rights for all civilized men. He could scarcely have performed more ably a duty which greatly annoyed many of his party colleagues who must, however, have appreciated his manifest sincerity.

Statements Worth Noting

"Federation means progress. Postponement means stagnation." Mr. E. H. Lane, Kenya.

"The goat is still the greatest menace to the rapidly diminishing forests of Africa." Mr. R. St. Barbe Baker.

"Interracial secondary schools are the official policy of the Belgian Congo." Mr. A. N. Mami, M.L.C., Uganda.

"Acres of paper, miles of red tape, and oceans of ink seem nowadays to be regarded as the criteria of a well-run Government department." Mr. C. L. Holcom, M.L.C., Uganda.

"Education will not be a success if children are not taught from the very beginning to respect other people's property." Mr. J. B. M. Basasa, an African member of the Uganda Council.

"The Kafue hydro-electric scheme is the biggest thing in Northern Rhodesia since the discovery of copper." Mr. Rex L'Ange, chairman of Northern Rhodesia's Electrical Development Commission.

The development of Kenya must be regarded as a joint effort of all those who live here. Any party in the joint enterprise which does not pull his weight towards healthy development should have a smack on the back." Mr. E. Mathew, an African member of the Kenya Legislative Council.

"We have not had a little of support from the African members of this Council on the measures necessary to deal with terrorists. By accepting these in this Council they may attribute to the benefits of civilization. They must also accept the responsibilities of civilization." Mr. Michael Blundell, M.L.C., Kenya.

"Wealth in itself is of no avail, and it is essential to keep political, economic, and social progress in step. We must be careful not to create a vacuum in people's minds. The importance I attach to the development of literature, broadcasting, and the cinema. The friendliness, tolerance, and understanding which mark human relationships in our territory are priceless assets." Sir Edward Twining, Governor of Tanganyika, addressing the Legislative Council.

The Case for Federation of the Rhodesias and Nyasaland

Turning Point in African History

BY A MAJORITY OF 14 VOTES the House of Commons has approved the proposal for Central African federation made in Command Papers 8,753 and 8,754.

Mr. Oliver Lyttelton, Secretary of State for the Colonies, moved, then introducing the motion of approval:

"The Government present this scheme to the House as a great political conception. By it we, the British, are seeking to build a society founded upon partnership between the races that inhabit Central Africa. Most of us are aware that the future lies in a Central Africa entirely and always dominated by one race or another. We have in this scheme a wider vision, and we believe that it will provide the framework within which the idea of partnership, and the British views about the relations of the races, can take root and grow."

Dangers of Rejection or Delay

"There is a tendency to think that if we did nothing, and rejected or delayed federation, everything would remain as it is, and that all the opportunities would present themselves. In fact, rejection or delay would lead to dangerous forces being unleashed. The handful they are no more of European extremists would be encouraged to advocate the policy of European domination, and African extremists would imagine that rejection or deferral paved the way for African nationalism and a wholly African Government within the next year or so."

Both these groups aim at keeping the races apart. That is why I believe that to be against federation to-day is to be reactionary.

Our aim in this scheme is to found a partnership of the races upon which a just and prosperous State will grow. The political and economic advancement of all its inhabitants can be secured only by the races working together, and to federate is to try to bring them together. That is why I claim that to be a federation is to be a progressive."

"When I first had the opportunity of reading the papers about Central African federation I said that we should run into political trouble in this House because both parties appeared overwhelmingly in favour of federation, in principle. That shows how difficult it is to be fair in the mind of a prophet with honour. But the prophecy was not made without some difficulty."

Socialists Set to Kill Their Own Scheme

The principle of federation had been endorsed in the most categorical terms by two Secretaries of State in the Labour Government who were concerned, namely, the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations and the Secretary of State for the Colonies. They were apparently supported by the overwhelming majority of their party, but the Labour Party were committed to the principle of federation; they were at that time commanding a sufficient strength at which the Labour defectors to day, nevertheless, thought that if their scheme were not materially altered, particularly with regard to the safeguards for Africans, including the same proportion of African representation in the Federal Assembly, we could count upon their support."

Now, the Socialists have come into office. Mr. Greenwood and some of his friends have been busily trying to find reasons for opposing or killing the scheme of which they were themselves so largely the authors.

They claim several improvements upon their scheme, but safeguards are much greater. They have been driven back to the emotional appeal, to the sole remaining objective that the scheme is to be "imposed." That word shows a profound misunderstanding of the issues involved—misunderstanding of the meaning of a binding law. Power is not to be exercised save by the sovereign or sovereignty of the three constituent territories, not by the Federal Government.

The powers of the Federal Government is strictly limited. The Protectorate status of Nyasaland and Northern Rhodesia is specifically preserved. All matters which touch the early life of territories remain within the jurisdiction of the territorial Government, not of the federal Government.

Federal and Territorial Responsibilities

The first main category which falls within the federal sphere of responsibilities is foreign affairs and defence. The second, fiscal, gives the Federal Government power to raise taxes centrally and redistribute the money in accordance with the needs of the three constituent territories in proportions which have to be agreed by the territorial Governments. Customs and excise duties are a federal subject, and a customs research, and so forth, which become federal.

Unusually wide powers of legislation are left to the territorial Governments. Land, land tenure, and all those subjects which concern the daily life of the African are left precisely where they are now, with the territorial Governments.

Phrases like handing over the northern territories to the domination of the white settlers in Southern Rhodesia are wildly inaccurate, almost in reality to any dispassionate student of the situation.

When federation has been established, I doubt whether the African will be aware that any change has taken place for some time. He will see the same district commissioner, the same agricultural officer; he will remain in undisputed possession of the same land, go to the same courts for the redress of his claims or the redress of his wrongs. After some time has elapsed he will begin to feel the economic benefits which come from federations and the more backward the territory in which he lives, perhaps the more rapid will be the benefits to his standard of living.

"Nothing in federation can impair his prospects of political advancement, which remain in the first instance the responsibility of the territorial Government; but he will find his Federal Government to have a wider field for political advancement than he could ever have looked forward to when these territories were separated. He can look forward to the central authority improving the general health and standards of education throughout the territories.

With federation we cannot expect development of communications upon the most efficient economic lines. The pattern of development over the three territories must be looked at as a whole; and now,

Economic Inter-Dependence

"Secondly, we must expect to see a vast power of the Zambezi channelised and distributed to the best advantage. This is done with by all three territories on a common plan. In this country we have the example of the best system of irrigation system. In these vast developing countries it is most desirable to start the supply of one of the vital sources of energy and motive power to industry in the most economical way.

"We must recognise the economic interdependence and the individual lack of balance of the three territories as they now are. The Northern Rhodesian cannot easily rely for their coal on the Wankie Colliery in Southern Rhodesia. Nyasaland is overpopulated and the poorest of the three territories, and it has for long been accustomed to send its surplus labour to earn its living in the two other territories. I think I challenged the economic argument."

"Mr. Langdale has asked why political federation is necessary for the successful co-ordination of the three economies. Economic federation or integration without political federation is bound to be at best half-hearted, and is possible only in the East African territories. We have attained success, but in Central Africa we have three territories at very widely differing stages of development."

"We have the area dominated by a modern industrial copper mining, heavily superimposed upon an agricultural economy in Southern Rhodesia. We have an economy in Southern Rhodesia in a more advanced stage, with more diversity, but still largely based on agriculture, but with certain industries as well. We have in Nyasaland a much more primitive economy, depending entirely upon agriculture and the export of labour."

"To bring these divergent elements together and make the best of the common assets to fill the deficiencies of one territory without depriving the other, requires something stronger than a simple commission of enquiry. It would be the best advantage if, if possible, no such argument were required. It could form the comparative basis of the Central African Council, nor is any fault or lack of emanation, but from the very nature of the condition, with which it has been dealing."

"In a federal federation, economic developments are bound to be mutual. We have witnessed in Europe more than once since the war the difficulties which attend even partial economic integration without political federation."

The original composition and functions of the African Affairs Board were not unimpeachable, an unprecedented constitutional device of experiment was provided for a Minister of African Affairs supported by an African Affairs Board. The Minister was to be a member of Cabinet, and subject to many of the rules affecting his colleagues. He was not to be chosen by any democratic process or election and represented no constituency but was to be nominated by the Governor-General with the approval of the Secretary of State. He was insulated from the changes and changes of a general government, was subject to none of the rules and was immune to any influence in the influences which affected them. He was entirely removed from the theory and practice of collective responsibility upon which alone, within this House at least, Cabinet Government can be carried on. He alone would not have to seek re-election if the Government were defeated.

The "Cuckoo" Minister

For these reasons he became rather disrespectfully known as the cuckoo minister. The Majority's present Government rejected this exotic device. They thought it would have made executive government in the Federation impossible, and consequently would have provided no safeguard for Africans, but rather a continual source of friction.

In the next scheme propounded after the first ministerial conference in London, the board was diverted from its life in the legislature, it was designed as an extramural body, and its members were to be drawn from outside the legislature. The extra-mural body was also open to objections. It was claimed by opposition speakers that the functions of the board would become almost entirely negative, that owing to the rejections on other grounds of the cuckoo Minister, the board could take no part in the daily life of the House, and could only censor and arrest legislation already framed. There was some force in those arguments.

It was also felt that the board would have something to do only on comparatively rare occasions, when they were able to show or claim that particular discriminatory legislation was before the legislature. In consequence, the extramural body would have remained in a flat or honourable vegetation for a large part of its life, and such bodies are very vulnerable to public criticism.

The last result is that in these colonial countries, which are almost in the infancy of their political institutions, it is difficult to find enough suitable men to fill all the positions.

A Workable and Womanlike Scheme

I cannot understand why we did not think of the system which we now propose at the first ministerial meeting, because there is no doubt that this present scheme is by far the most workable and workmanlike plan. It brings the board within the life of the legislature, and the members of the board are drawn from those who have directly or indirectly been elected to represent African interests.

Above all, the board now lies closer to the floor of the House. Its objections to legislation either framing or formed a public, and will be able to speak with influence upon public opinion as the force of the arguments would warrant. It saves finding more and more circumstances in which it is very difficult to find, and it also ceases that, if the members are not engaged upon their statutory duties, they can take no share in the life and discussions of the legislature.

If the board, certified by B.N.S., discriminates against Africans, it has to be referred to the Secretary of State in London for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure. Against such a background phrases like "binding over the natives of the northern territories to white domination" appear to me wildly inaccurate. Nor can I describe the author of the Labour Bill as talking points of such a nature as anything but utterly irresponsible. I confess that I carefully thought out and elaborate scheme of safeguards in these words: "The intended safeguards for African interests are to be removed. A greater measure of security will be difficult to find. No power rests in the board under the first scheme commended by the Labour Government has been altered in any respect whatsoever."

The present scheme differs in three principal matters from the original scheme presented by the Labour Party. First, the constitution cannot be changed unless by a two-thirds majority in the Federal legislature. Even then changes in the constitution have to come home, and if there are objections by the Native Affairs and the Orders in Council having a vote upon the table in the Houses of Parliament, so far as they are subject to the legislative resolution procedure. This was a new safeguard against constitutional changes, and from the African point of view it is an added safeguard.

The argument is often advanced that, by making constitutional changes difficult, we tend to perpetuate the exact proportion between those elected to represent African interests and those elected to represent non-sectional interests; in other words, to frustrate in a sense African members against others in the federal assembly.

Such a conception of the working of the Federal Parliament and Government is completely uninstructed. There is absolutely no reason to suppose that the Federal Parliament will resolve itself into two blocks, black and white. That is something which we should all agree to try to avoid, and I think that the Federal Parliament would take the same view of its responsibility. In all these matters we must look, and I think we can look with complete confidence, to the legislature voting in the federal interest, not in the sectional interest.

It is an insult to the new Legislature to imagine that every matter of policy every member will vote on a constituency ticket. Nothing in the record of these territories or in any recent colonial history in other parts of the world would enable such an assumption to be made. Our fellow countrymen will not vote on matters as they solely upon their own information, or more than any member of this House votes on a matter of policy solely upon a constituency ticket, or if he does, he is a very rare bird indeed.

"There is another important point. It has been put, particularly by some Europeans representing African interests, that the early stages of federation will be accompanied by African interests, the prime mover in the scheme, discussed in the House and afterwards stopped, or at worst, by the workings of the African Affairs Board, and ultimately psychological effects would be produced upon the majority of Africans, who are, and are likely to remain for a long time, ignorant of the balance of constitution as, indeed, are the public in almost any

Power of Review for Ten Years

"The Europeans said that, if such a bill was introduced, the Africans might feel that they had been treated hitherto as mere spectators. We have introduced a provision which freezes the federal test of responsibility for ten years. In other words, the Federal Government is not given further powers than those it had down to the year 1929. To that can even be pointed which seeks to vary the responsibilities of the four territorial Governments during these preliminary 10 years, unless the legislatures of all three territories, in the first place, agree to it.

We are humble enough to believe that no constitutional instrument framed by colonial hands can prove perfect against a strong and dynamic force of developing countries, especially as they are from primitive societies into new and modern states.

At the last Conference the view was widespread that there should be another conference of all five governments to review the working of the constitution not earlier than the seventh or eighth year, and to incorporate these ideas in the scheme. The South Africa is not so clear whether federation has succeeded or failed, or whether it should be abolished or continued. If a conference to make such alterations in the intended working of the constitution as experience of its working has shown to be necessary during this first decade in its life.

MICHAEL DUGDALE: "Supposing an African government or African representation were a change by which they should get further African representation, would that go along with unanimous agreement of the white populations of both our colonies?"

SIR RALPH DELTON: "All changes in the constitution would have to go through the constitutional machinery which I have outlined. There is no machinery which to protect people from changes in the constitution without introducing some rigidity into the scheme. We hope that this opportunity for review of the working of the constitution will import that degree of flexibility which we think desirable. I hope that these arguments of review will do a great deal to relieve the anxiety of those who are doubtful about the scheme. I commend the proposal to the House as an improvement."

Unjustified fears were entertained that if the Federal Government were given power to acquire land for public purposes, for instance the laying of a railway or creating a line of telegraph posts or pylons, they might seize the powers in advance of safety and written all through the constitution concerning the availability of the land.

We therefore introduced into the Bill a clause which gives the Federal Government the authority to make compulsory purchases of land for settlement, and this must be done so that the land is required for public purposes. When there is a war as Native Trust or Native reserve lands are concerned, they are subject to the provisions of the relevant Orders in Council.

The Federal Government had such powers we might reach in the anomalous position that Africa would be deprived of such services as electric light or telephones by the action of the scheme.

Existing Lands Vastly Improved

"I claim the Constitution movement to be in every respect an improvement on the first ten years, and a further improvement on the failed scheme which was put forward at the first conference. I think it is a thorough, comprehensive and liberal document, and as far as human foresight can see, it provides a means on which a partnership between the races can be established and sustained."

There is little measure of opposition among the vocal opponents. This opposition has largely been worked up by the Congress party in the territories, and the Congress is a handful of men. They have used all the powers of misrepresentation which are so much more powerful in a primitive and largely illiterate society, to damn the federal scheme. It has been widespread intimidation, and those who stand behind and head the forces in favour of the scheme have been compelled to do so in secret. Moreover, some of the prefabricated anti-federal laws have been exported to Africa and returned to this country as though they were of African origin.

I have received telegrams from the Governors of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. The Governor of Northern Rhodesia describes the opposition as still uninformed segregation, and federation does not contain any sincere effort of officers to explain details of the scheme. The other governors employ the same language.

Mr. WILFRED PALING: Propaganda, our dear Mr. Lyttelton, is the only way in which the scheme can be explained in detail to Africans except by using Government officers. They have been accustomed all their life in these territories to help the Africans in making such as agriculture, health, and so forth, and that was the natural instruments for which to make no secret whatever.

The Governor emphasized that the intrinsic difficulties of the subject are very great, and that they are far beyond the mental grasp of the vast majority of Africans. He certainly emphasizes how wild have been the misrepresentations of the scheme put about by the Congress party.

Wild Misrepresentations by African Congressmen

"Leave one or two of them aside," Mr. Churchill says, "at the bottom of the federation is the wish to get our lands." Sir Chinga, on August 5, said: "Federation means domination and slavery." The Native Affairs Authority says: "The Federal Government will grasp land from the territorial Governments to the account of the immigrants. The African will surely lose his land."

Mr. JULIAN SNOW: In this matter of extremist African opinion, which is of course in step with extremist European opinion, would the rt. hon. gentleman say whether he considers the opinion of Sir Godfrey Huggins to be extreme or not? I ask because there is evidence at the disposal against the extreme嫌疑 felt.

Mr. LYTTLETON: It is not my duty to defend the Government of Southern Rhodesia, but if any defence is wanted it can be found in the records of the Government. Sir Godfrey Huggins, whom I know very well, is a man of very liberal tendencies.

"The Governor of Nyasaland repeats the same general sense. In the territory he avowed a belief of Congress in bringing about self-government, and that the Africans always within five years. This would mean wiping back most of the economic hopes which we entertain in that territory."

The Government summary is that Congress elements which include a high proportion of the educated classes, are unshakably opposed to federation. There are three divided roughly half are dominated by the Congress party, and the other half are wavering with a strong proportion believing in federation but fearful of coming into the open.

I am conscious that I want to do is to raise controversial questions about the methods by which this subject of federation has been handled by our predecessors. I must however point out the dangers which attend the kind of methods which we pursued. The Africans, on a complicated question like federation, have been accustomed for the British Government to make up their mind where African interests lay, and where the interest of the party lay, and to act accordingly.

There are times in proceeding to canvass without leadership, and without a clear statement, these large numbers of Africans, especially when some of the charges there are no really awkward for federation, but in such circumstances would deny the good intentions which underlie the canvassing of this matter. But if such canvassing is coupled with implication of other expressed or unexpressed, that there is an opposition to the scheme, will be dropped, the canvassing becomes a hindrance, not an advantage.

These methods allowed the Congress to wrest the initiative from the Government, and as I have said, the Congress consists of only a very few people. It left them to do what they did, and the Africans, if they shouted enough against federation, Her Majesty's Government would accept the scheme. I say however that the words "imposition" is misplaced, it misunderstands the nature of a protecting Power and of a protectorate status.

Duties of a Protecting Power

"Both sides of the House have pledged themselves to preserve the Protectorate status of the territories for the territories under the protection of our Country. That pledge will have to be honoured to the full in this case. How far possible means can protect a Power be said to be a protecting Power if it is to be turned aside from what he considers to be the best interests of the population of the Protectorate by a majority, and a minority. So certainly as however it is calculated?

"protecting Power's duties and responsibilities cannot be dismissed or laid aside just because there is some opposition. Once it was known that a few voices raised against the scheme were sufficient to stop it, the office of Secretary of State would become an ignoble one. Few things happen in any government without some opposition. If all opposition is to be laid aside, the state of place.

"Last, I must condemn out of hand the kind of spirit which appears to pervade the ranks of some of our countrymen who are opposed to federation. They seem to regard the word "British" as synonymous with racism. This is to insult our great Colonial records of which we have every reason to be proud. That point of view, ignoring the facts of the present, and with increased African representation and safeguards for African interests, has been created and promoted not by the Africans but by the British themselves.

"There is nothing party about it. There are African Bishops, they are not the creatures of African pressure. They have been informed by an enlightened visitor of how the races should work together, and in view of the tendency to notice in this controversy to suppose that whatever is best for us is best for them, our fellow British subjects of the Crown will be left in hands which will arrest and throw back the course of progress. Nothing could be more deserving this humiliating argument.

Racial Partnership or Imperial Domination

"I ask the House to approve the scheme and to consider that it is a turning point in the history of Africa. If we follow this scheme, I believe that it will give the prospect of partnership between the races."

"To reject or defer it now is to resign our responsibilities as a Colonial Power; it is to sink into inglorious inaction, and to prove that the day to come is a dark history in the annals. Inaction will lead to peace. If we do not, it will lead to discord."

"In the Smith Committee now, history and pronouncements are in judgment as those who turned aside from the principles accepted by the two great political parties in this House by the clamour of a small minority."

"It is essential to accept the scheme, and to back it with humanity and appearance, and above all with those unique experience with which centuries of the practice of Parliamentarian government, and a long history of Parliamentary institutions and reforms have endowed the English nation."

Africans Must Learn to Accept Fair Criticism

Professor M. Macmillan on Fundamental Problems of Africa Today

IS SUEING FERNSHAW right as a way of avoiding whether the trouble is growing pains or lethal disease. Much wild talk, "apologies even" for "Mafeking," nothing to prove. No systematic African home operation can be too hard to ballyhooing so that there may be poison at work threatening all to all our hopes.

When we refuse to do our duty take stock of what "we" includes get expressly those responsible Africans who seem impatient of the need to think things out. Salvation must depend above all on the wisdom and effectiveness of African leadership.

If good leadership is to have its chance there must be a wider recognition in British thought that the onus now squarely on these Africans. The question is no longer clearing the path for them, but of their taking up the responsibility.

Better Standards Essential

The essential problem is to get better standards social, economic and cultural among the African people generally. Progressing on the general level has undoubtedly proceeded further in South Africa than anywhere else. In West Africa, we remain behind the ranks of ardent intellectuals, a sense of poverty, ignorance, and ill-health. Mr. James Griffiths, in his last broadcast, showed himself more impressed by the need than by the achievement, and were it not a moving appeal to the people of this country to shoulder their full share of this responsibility? Africans ready and willing to accept our help, if anything the new self-confidence and the suspicions of West Africans are against our efforts to bring them such help. There is need for the R.A.C. to think together. African leaders consistently underestimate the complexities and dimension of the task of bringing their countries to stand alone in the modern world.

The ferment in Africa comes basically from the effort of so many of its people to escape from the old life; they think they have seen the light. The conditions of Africa present a staggering opportunity - a world of absorbing interest, requiring the concentrated effort of men and women of all calling and of any and every race. Much is work of great social complexity and it makes bad work to approach the task. What must come into spirit of cautious and finding. Nothing is more important than a thing that calls for fixing blame.

Blameless Neutrality

By a perversion of our great heritage, there are those so sure of their own election that the world is not right nor even if anyone shouts loudly enough about wrong. They must turn to denounce someone else's sins. In Europe two wars have left such a strong guilt-haressis that many are ready to have it imputed to them, or even impute it to themselves.

But Africa's problems must not be seen in the light of European self-righteousness or self-condemnation. This is absurd and silly regarding European conscience allows unworthy suspicions to bewilder good purpose, i.e., that encourages complacency to see a deliberately intended racial discrimination as the root of all that needs remedy, or that bows to the "colonial" of "Colonialism" preferred by American Africans and echoed round the rest of the world.

Being a much abbreviated part of my address to a Conference in London of the Royal African and Royal Empire Societies.

Abstract categories like "the contact" or the "transition from a subsistence to a money economy" are out of fashion. The fine phrases already say that meeting of the races was a clash of the new with the old. They assumed that the clash would be clear cut, while in fact old and new continue to eat into each other side by side.

An artist friend, H. Meyerowitz, gave his life in an attempt to link West African art with modern economics, and he used to say even in the advanced West that still the general level of culture was that of the baenze. His plea was for one fully-trained instructor for every 10 of his pupils - practical evidence that it is too widely and haphazardly taken for granted that "West Africa" is in any way similar. Yet its progress likely to be faster, chiefly because it has no white settler civilization to drag it down. It is true that West Africa suffers a lack of incentives and failing examples to measure by.

The strains and stresses of the times are fundamentally due to the same causes, most conspicuously to the urbanization of the countryside, even the earliest beginning of industrialization. It is no light thing for country folk to have to learn the new ways in the conditions of towns where the males are no women to six, seven to one; where lax rural standards must be adapted to the imperatives of semi-urban, where distances reach illiterates speaking six or seven different languages in a strange tongue like English; where expenses are high; and new hopes apt to be disappointed.

It would at least ease the strain and stop the darkening counsel by the appearance of blameworthy heads kept in mind that the best features of Johannesburg, Salisbury, and Nairobi are very better, and their worst, shanty towns no worse, than those in Africa's Lagos, or Freetown, or even Kampala. It is for African leaders to play a fuller part in thinking out the practical ways and means of meeting a situation which has arisen so largely by the choice of their own people.

Land and Production

The African land question has been even more productive of confused anxiety, arising from such a guilt-complex on the European side as has got all the attention and effectively prevented Africans from appreciating the truth that the days of the old simple farming are everywhere numbered. What chiefly matters to-day is not to add more land allocated for African use but to get better use of the land that exists.

This is not to say that while Southern Rhodesia, for example, can stick to their Land Apportionment Act, a final and definitive settlement there and elsewhere, there may have to be adjustment. None the less, much of the most attractive land in the whole of Africa is in serious state, because it is so attractive, not because of European ownership, but because it naturally cling to the western slopes of the mountains, the riverine lake basins, and are unwilling and ill-equipped to tackle the arid rigours of the plains.

Witness the Lushai and the Pies near Tanga or the tribes at the head of Lake Nyasa. The Chagga of Kilimanjaro and the people of Gombara have certainly suffered from European alienation, but without that they would still have been faced, as world the Kikuyu, with the problem of overcultivation. None of these tribesmen look to European lands as a solution. There are links even to Kilimanjaro as a cultivable home.

In the long run there must be much redistribution of the African population, and this can only be if tribes learn to sink their own rivalries, tolerate considerable transplants and give all the best and better usage. It will also involve very fully programmes of land reclamation and water development, the practice of hunting with snares, as merely distasteful, and the necessary reconstruction. And I have said not one word about the work and status of the women.

The complexities of town life and the facts of rural congestion have become tangled, and the question now is how to get Africans playing an increasingly full part in unravelling such tangles and in the functioning of government. Certain traditions of British policy make us greatly afraid to embark upon the method and manner of change. The most creditable part of our record is of work done for weak, backward peoples, of whom the strongly political among them speak too little. There are solid results to show for our less than 50 years, and unduly concern now for the future. The new Africans may exact serious cost to the interests of the older order if it hinders or upsets work of real progress, as it well may. The foundations already laid by the British, and must not be everlastingly dug up.

Our pioneers concentrated on establishing the blocks of new and old, which in these days are often insufficiently appreciated. With an assured self-confidence, uninfluenced by the neuroses of those times, missionaries laid the foundations of education and medical services and private enterprise brought up, in a short time, skilled white traders. Central and East Africa thus became the Asian and European element in the populations, and the exclusively native African-inspired political sentiment could be achieved only at the cost of an economic collapse which would bring the future of Africa's themselves.

In groping for a policy where laissez faire went far, some were seriously off the mark and an unusually difficult road. There was some early recognition that Africans must make their own contribution to their development. To this end the workmen had to lay foundations, nurturing native African political institutions. "Do you remember the slogan 'Find the chief' who was not always functioning?"

No Imitation Europeans

Since we must make genuine African citizens, not "little Europeans," we must foster vernacular training in elementary schools and follow up with an African lingua franca like Swahili, which no account yielding to their own demand for English. Education must not westernize too much of it and, above all, it must have that strange quality an animal magnetism. Over the whole of the field the motto was "Go Slow," the operative word being always the tinging verb, never the active verb—contrast indeed to the whirl of going and driving and being driven, we find ourselves in a lull. The fashion looked very wise on paper, but the mistakes become clear enough.

We were going to do it all, largely ignored the fact that Africans had wishes and aims of their own. There was study (and disastrous) by-passing of the so-called intelligentsia. We were for working through local institutions. The intelligentsia, either do not fit into these institutions or deliberately shun them, just because the chiefs might be a dead weight hindrance when "we" modernization above all things that this class wanted.

Wherever the defects of this intelligentsia, the disturbing effects of education were to be remedied only by making them, as the exception, that is, by more education. To do the machinery of education in every Ovovia is being done to break a point to produce of talents the men needed to fill responsible posts. The position is catastrophic. Algeria's 20 odd millions with 1,000 senior Civil Service vacancies to fill and many secondary schools students have made more than 10,000 holders of the Senior Certificate and the Central African territory between them hardly as many as 1,000.

Chiefs Dominated by the Semi-Educated

The political consequence is that the perilously isolated educated class is now being shouldered out of the way by the rash of the sophisticated semi-educated, but politically conscious, who are easily led by adventurers. For instance, it was manifest that the worthy old chiefs lately protesting in his country against Federation were, as clear in the hands of the Congress, poster.

About 1941 I remember speaking up in an important committee for a more general use of English and giving not one single voice in support. Only now the Cambridge Summer School quietly backs the recommendation of the critics, report that Swahili should give place to English and take its chance with the rest as a vernacular.

Educated Africans, once for a time, practise a new way of life. They told their foolish parents and, being soured by neglect, in those they had once admired, they eagerly took the flattery which fed them that they really had no further to go. Jomo Kenyatta drank up this teaching at a London University seminar, not only in Kenya, but from the Gold Coast to Basutoland there has been a recent evidence that modernist Africans have learnt to like the anti-supernatural superstitions of their own conservatives for their own political ends.

The by-passed intellectuals, beginning with those of Accra and Lagos, to whose ears the fashionable's facile talk was admittedly unsuited and never applied, have evolved a new breed of their own. Adapting our teaching that conservatism was not good for them, they are in a new western culture alienating, purifying and separating the past and all things African, which is the order and the attitude of Muhammed Ali.

The dynamics of total war demanded realization of the peoples was to be as a dangerous Government of 1940 that of 1945. The necessity of Centralized, politically organized and centralized, but the new plans for reconstruction to be thought of as our own. After 1945 the Gold-Coast took the lead in this field, and it is still the Coast which is on the larger of their making.

Nevertheless that growing body of research work which over so much to Dr. Hailey, we now know far better than anyone could know in the first the shape and dimensions of the work needed and some of the lines on which it may be best to proceed. Our financial resources are gravely imperilled, though we have the power to inflate, we are short of physical might, and while we would perhaps wish to enforce a policy, we need at least to define it. The most important neglected element in free education. Worst of all, we have nearly all, if not all, moral conviction, even a certain degree of self-confidence, so that in discussion of policy we bow to a string of clichés, afraid even to question them.

So much false sentiment is having the most deplorable effect on the modern and adult African whose responsibility it is to help think things out and shape the future. The changes that pass for (or cloud) reason are some 20 years out of date. Being enshrined in print, the old slogans no longer cause the kind of enthusiasm of some who have long ceased to read seriously or the lively first impression of others who have only just begun.

Meantime in America the campaign against the survival of the white American Negroes has been responsible for a literature of orange and colour, this being widely read by black and white intellectuals in Africa and made the basis of the ideology which makes "racial discrimination" the root of all evil, underlying their conditions, white settlement, land questions, and all the rest.

It is the more difficult for Africans to break free of this contagious example because history has provided a gigantic sound-board at the United Nations for the clichés and this racial doctrine. We in Britain can claim success in weaning Colonial legislatures from the fatal habit of irresponsible talk by giving them responsibility.

Irresponsibility in the United Nations

Many in the United Nations make African affairs a plaything of talk, without responsibility for action, by a host of critics who have not the knowledge, whose interests are unaffected, and who cannot claim to understand. In the name of self-government they intrude their own ideology into the fields of intimate local affairs, to the detriment of all good administration. They and others have forgotten the local minority interests, which they distrust cannot and will not be pushed aside, but, left to themselves, in Kenya and elsewhere, have the strongest possible motives for seeking peaceful and harmonious local co-operation.

At Uganda the speech of the maintained attack on so-called Colonialism is directed at new-founded Asian States, and the doctrine clearly derives from the teaching of Mahatma Gandhi, backed, with a shrewd eye for British susceptibilities, to help the campaign for Indian independence, adapting our traditional respect for self-government, its basic claim is that the people have a right to freedom even with chicanery.

The answer is that freedom and chaos are contradictory terms. You must take notice of the influence of this false doctrine, an outstanding African leader like Mr. Nkrumah is to be seen in the world today, assuring the sacred right of Africans, if they take no damage, then to mismanage their affairs in their own way.

The time is fully ripe for us to summon up the moral courage to denounce this teaching as misguided, and to challenge African leadership to a more collaborative approach to the immensely difficult work of African reconstruction. Freedom with Chaos is dangerous to be avoided.

The unthinking self-assurance of the great powers has brought the inappropriate reaction expressed by Madam Gandhi. Yet this was fine blamax; the reverse swing of a pendulum could only lead us from rejecting and losing what was gained by the way of our predecessors. The paternalism of the old imperialists was a step forward, on the whole, but the early days of our independence were undoubtedly absorbed in our own education of three Africans, even potential partners, but they had not yet strong enough the national feelings because even the social order and constituted government disinterested Civil Service, which had founded the country to freedom might be a step forward. But this is out of date, the anti-imperialism of the critics, who in these of us young people, being now more and more so.

The issues which must be proportion essential are at wide angle, touching economic education, morals, politics. Education is derived and developed from outside Africa as economic development certainly is. Some would say that healthy political growth is supplied by a sound economic foundation. Many will feel that Britain should likewise pre-occupy of which is leading in so far as a political author of whole people has a habit of falling into the hands of their own politically conservative minority, i.e. which controls the

StatementSoldiers' Grievances in Kenya
Allegations Refuted

IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS last week MRS. BRADDOCK asked the Secretary of State for War if he had investigated the grievances made by men of the 1st Battalion, The Lancashire Fusiliers, now serving in Kenya, as set out in a letter sent to him by her son, MR. HENRY HEM.

MR. ANTHONY HEM replied: "I have now had a full report from Kenya which shows that the allegations made in the letter were inaccurate, misleading, and unjustified by the facts."

The Lancashire Fusiliers have been carrying out duties which have called for dispersion into very small detachments. This type of work demands the highest level of discipline to ensure that exemplary standards are shown by all men in dealing with the African population.

The commanding officer found that a few men, mostly with bad records, had not maintained the high standards demanded. He therefore decided to bring them to battalion headquarters where they would be under closer supervision. They would not go on patrol but would carry out military training. In the event, the names of only four men were put forward as being unsatisfactory. In view of such a small number, it was decided, before the hon. lady raised this matter, to abandon the project.

I am writing to the hon. lady fully about this so as to take this opportunity of expressing my regret that, in carrying out the Army in carrying out so many difficult duties with restraint and good sense, the hon. lady should have given such wide publicity to an very misleading account without allowing myself or my department time for investigation."

MRS. BRADDOCK: "In view of the very great similarity between the statements made in the letter from the hon. lady and the information which the Minister has now given, does not he think that it is time for a court of inquiry to be set up to inquire into the whole of the circumstances?"

Project Abandoned

MR. HEM: "The hon. lady initiated this matter by writing to the War Office and the signal sent to Kenya was based on that letter. My answer disproves entirely the allegations of these 12 men, because at least eight of them never had anything to do with the matter. Only four men were nominated and the project was then abandoned. The particular events, such as the route march and the overcrowding in the tents, never occurred."

"I agree that it is absolutely right to insist that matters such as these are taken up immediately by my department. But I suggest that, when so many wild allegations are voiced in the House without anybody verifying them, it is impossible for anybody to catch up with the story once it has been published, however false it may be."

MRS. BRADDOCK: "I do ask the Minister whether, in view of the very discreditable comments that have been made, there should be a public inquiry. It shall not let us matter drift unless we administer justice or take some steps in that direction."

MR. HEM: "The allegations made are not correct. Furthermore, if a Military Officer found a number of men behaving in an unsatisfactory way to the Native population, he would be perfectly entitled and militarily correct to withdraw them to battalion Headquarters to await a determination of such an incident."

MR. COOPER (Roxas, Lancashire) asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the International Bank was to be used as an outlet for the expenditure of the £60m. which the Government intended to provide for Commonwealth development.

MR. MAUDLING: "We use in this way we can, through our subscription to the International Bank, help the Commonwealth and at the same time reinforce the usefulness of the bank, which has proved a valuable source of dollar capital for investment in the sterling area. As the Chancellor has made clear, however, these arrangements will not usurp the normal functions of the London market."

MR. RUSSELL: "Can the Minister say whether his £60m. was part of or in addition to our normal capital subscription to the bank?"

MR. MAUDLING: "This is a reserve part of our capital subscription to the bank to be used for the development of the Commonwealth."

Egyptian Misstatements about the Sudan Government Gives the Facts

Sudan News and Features, issued by the Public Relations Branch of the Sudan Government, gives the true version of several incidents of which exaggerated or inaccurate accounts have been spread in Egyptian propaganda broadcasts.

At the Aweil meeting the official statement says:

Dr. Ahmed El Sayed and three other northern politicians held a political meeting in Aweil marketplace which attracted a large crowd. In the absence of State district commissioners on tour, the senior State N.C.O. knowing that a public meeting of private persons only had been permitted in Aweil, provincial capital, and observing that the crowd was becoming excited, concluded a speech of the police was imminent.

When he was unable to stop the politicians speaking, he detained all the police in the town until the night. The district commissioner, when informed, ordered their release on bail pending an inquiry, from which no prosecution resulted. The party remained in Aweil and arranged a political meeting in private premises for the next night.

Rumour Exposed

Referring to the rumour that Chief Jambo had been arrested for favouring Egypt when Major Salah Selim visited the district, the statement gives the following facts:

The chief was not arrested. The honour probably refers to Samson Jabbour, a foreman, a son of chief Jambo, who was arrested for driving a Government vehicle without driving licence last December. He was convicted and fined £2.

On information received, he was at a later date arrested for forging a paysheet, but was released on bail the same day. Cairo—from General Neguib onwards—seems to have turned blind eyes to political persecution of southerners.

Flight 101, a Boeing aircraft of Imperial African Airways on a flight from Nairobi to Blantyre, was said to have crashed with a crew of 11 and 11 passengers. It is reported missing.

"Read each issue cover to cover"

OF THE THOUSANDS of letters received each year, surprisingly large proportions contain the statement: "I read each issue of East Africa and Rhodesia from cover to cover."

In this category of eager readers are many thoughtful professional men, industrialists and traders, missionaries and miners, civil servants and farmers. Because they regard the paper as both frank and friendliness, many go out of their way to tell of plans and happenings of which their publicistic neighbours do not inform. Thus East Africa and Rhodesia supplies excellent news supplied to its own readers in token of their interest in the cause it seeks to achieve.

If that spirit animates people of such diverse interests, many others would surely derive similar pleasure and profit from the paper. Why not, then, and used it as thoroughly as possible? Appalling Mau Mau Outrages in Kenya

Large Numbers of Dead and Missing

A MID SCENES of almost unbelievable barbarity and bestiality a massacre of loyal Kikuyu in the Uplands area near Nairobi was carried out by Mau Mau terrorists. On Thursday evening, latest reports of casualties state that 71 persons are known to have been killed, 250 are missing and 50 wounded.

The news of the outrages that three gangs of terrorists struck simultaneously at the royal Kikuyu, most of whom were Government servants, in the location of Chief Makinet which has taken a prominent part in the Mau Mau activities. The chief, undoubtedly one of the objects of the attack, escaped with the help of his bodyguards, but the elderly Chief Luka, who had been attacked several times previously, was cut to pieces, and his whole family destroyed, in the raid.

Outside Direction

The raids, each believed to have been about 20 or 40 strong, consisted of the most part of local Africans assisted by some of those recently repatriated from European farms. They are believed to have been directed from outside.

In Nairobi, the members of the home guard were away on patrol, one group barred the doors of the royal Africans' huts while a second, with torches, set fire to the thatched roofs. The third gang hacked to pieces those who sought to escape from the burning huts.

Terrifying stories have been told of babies being beheaded before their mothers' eyes and pregnant women being disembowelled.

Of 150 Africans arrested in connexion with the outrage, 120 have been identified by survivors.

Seven courts are to be established in the areas for the trial of suspected terrorists.

On the same evening a police station at Nairobi was raided, and 34 rifles and a Lancashire machine carbine were stolen from the reserve armoury, together with a large quantity of ammunition, some of which was recovered. Two lorries containing about 50 terrorists arrived at the station and opened fire, a constable and a prisoner in charge round being killed.

After the door of the reserve armoury had been forced, firearms and ammunition were loaded on one of the lorries, but it was abandoned by the terrorists as the engine would not start. The other lorry was found some distance away. The terrorists, who wore overcoats and slouch hats like those of the police, broke into a detention camp and released about 150 prisoners, one of whom was killed by a special constable. Five police on duty and six in reserve fired at the raiders, and broke the alarm.

Pursuit by Motorized Patrol

Major J. Shaw with a detachment of Lancashire Fusiliers was quickly on the scene and engaged the raiders, who fled 2 minutes after they arrived. He organized a motorized patrol to follow up the gangsters throughout the night and the following day. A force of police and two companies of Lancashire Fusiliers searched the environs of Nairobi.

On Saturday morning a party of Nairobi containing some 6000 Kikuyu was snuffed out.

Mr. J. T. Murray, Assistant Commissioner of Police, who described it as "the most dangerous threat of the emergency, added: "If the mob had got up, filter back to the reserves and made their haul of arms and ammunition, we shudder to think what may happen to the future."

Mr. Evelyn Baring, Governor of Kenya, said in Nairobi: "I am horrified at the atrocities committed by loyal Kikuyu. The Uplanders have reached the lengths to which Mau Mau terrorism has gone in terrorizing and killing innocent Africans. I am appalled by the whole story of the Mau Mau movement, having been the main sufferers. I wish to express my deep sympathy with the relatives of those killed and injured. Every possible step will be taken both to follow up the criminals and prevent a recurrence." He visited the scene of the outrage near Uplands and Lady Mary Baring visited the wounded in Nairobi hospitals.

Mr. Vernon Bartlett, writer in the News Chronicle:

"Lack of co-operation and preparation revealed by the massacre in Kenya has destroyed complacency in London. In the opinion of people with an intimate knowledge of Kenya, one or two more successes of this kind would encourage the Mau Mau to launch a mass attack on whites."

There is decreasing confidence among the settlers that the officials are trained to deal with such emergencies. The appointment of an equivalent of Malaya's General Sir Gerald Templer would almost certainly lead to the resignation of Sir Evelyn Baring, a highly respected Governor; but the immediate need would seem to be the appointment of an emergency Government headed in all levels officials and private citizens most likely to take vigorous action in their own districts. Without measures of this kind the situation may quickly get out of hand."

Sir Eric Dorman-Smith, special correspondent, writes now from Kenya, telegraphed:

"The double disaster, the blackest in Kenya in five months of emergency, seems to have caught the Colony's Government largely unprepared. There has been considerable criticism of the alleged slowness of the part of the Nairobi authorities to institute prompt measures on the scale called for by the gravity of these audacious Mau Mau attacks."

In Nairobi, the Information Department appears to be attempting to minimize the outrages. For nearly 20 hours after the Uplanders massacre began the information service refused to issue any figures of the numbers killed. The first estimate issued is at least 150 dead, including a large proportion of children.

"The Mau Mau have executed these outrages in a way which may cause some difficulty to the official attitude that it is incapable of well-organized terrorist action. They chose areas where because the local situation was easier, a minimum of military forces and police were to be handled matters. The police and the army, striking forces at present deployed on the other (eastern) side of the Aberdare Mountains, in the Nyeri and Fort Hall areas and north of Nairobi.

"The timing of the outrages was also well chosen, coming just before the arrival of the 39th Infantry Brigade."

On Friday 13 African home guards were killed by a gang of about 100 terrorists from the Aberdare forest. Another three African home guards were shot and mutilated on Sunday by a party of terrorists who drove from Nairobi to Kiambu in a taxi for the purpose.

Weapons Discovered

Police have thwarted a plan for wholesale escapes from detention camps in the rift valley, and a search of camps near Nairobi has resulted in the discovery of half a ton of hand knives and other weapons. Two Africans who while under sentence volunteered to show the police where the weapons were hidden, tried to escape and were shot.

Two Africans were killed, one dead and another wounded by accident on Saturday when the police fired by mistake on lorries containing prisoners.

On Sunday morning some 15,000 persons were questioned by the police in the Bahati area of Nairobi, of whom 1,200 were detained.

Sir Claud Seton, a former colonial administrator in East Africa, chairman of an advisory committee established under the Kenya emergency regulations to hear appeals by detainees, and Sir Vincent Glendy, a senior British officer in Zanzibar, and at one time an administrative officer in the Northern Frontier district of Kenya, is the chairman of the committee. Mr. S. H. Fazan, a former provincial commissioner, is the executive officer. The committee will assemble this week.

Mr. H. Q. Davies, a Welshman advocate, and one of the council for the defence of sons Kenya, said on his return to Lagos that racial antagonisms would persist in East Africa for many years unless checked by wise statesmanship. It was therefore all the more necessary that the experiment in self-government in West Africa should prove the African's capacity to manage his own affairs and live in peace with other races.

The "Queen and the Commonwealth" Exhibitions at Imperial Institute

COMMONWEALTH CITIZENS in London for the Coronation will have the opportunity of seeing at the Imperial Institute something of the extent and the essential unity of the Commonwealth, the values for which it stands. Seven special exhibitions will be staged simultaneously from May 27 under the general title "Queen and Commonwealth."

They are: (1) "Focus of Colonial Progress," arranged by the Central Office of Information on behalf of the Colonial Office; (2) "Parliament Past and Present," sponsored by the Hansard Society; (3) "The World Encompassed," sponsored by the National Maritime Museum; (4) "Go Ye and Teach All Nations," sponsored by the Conference of British Missionary Societies and the Practical Mission Aid Societies; (5) "Britain and the Colombo Plan," arranged on behalf of H.M. Treasury; (6) "Young Artists from the Commonwealth," sponsored by The Artist; and (7) "Diamond Jubilee of the Imperial Institute, 1892-1952."

Corona Dinner

THE ANNUAL DINNER of the Corona Club will be held on Thursday, June 18, at the Corinthia Hotel, London. W.C. Applications for tickets should be made to Mr. A. R. Thomas, of the Colonial Office.

Mr. Awori Said to have been Warned of "Accumulating Accusations"

NAIROBI.—RESPONSENT OF THE New Statesman and Nation reports as follows in its current issue of that journal:

"Mr. Odede had been under arrest in Mombasa, when Mr. Evelyn, treasurer and now Minister of the Kenya African Union, was summoned to Government House. At the interview which followed His Excellency emphasized to Mr. Awori that Mr. Odede's arrest and detention had nothing whatever to do with his legitimate activities as a member of the K.A.U. or as member of the Legislative Council. He went on, however, to warn Mr. Awori himself that serious accusations against him were circulating, saying that if the Government found those accusations substantiated by evidence it would not hesitate to take action against him."

"Later Mr. Odede was summoned to Mr. Awori's room to see Mr. Odede, and placed at his disposal to fly north to Mombasa, where the African leader was being kept in detention at Kwale, about 20 miles away. As a result of his visit Mr. Awori was satisfied that Mr. Odede was being given physically good treatment; he has a small library, a servant is provided and newspapers and books are made available to him."

"I gather that Mr. Odede will take advantage of a recent Government regulation to appeal against his detention to an advisory committee that has been set up for such purposes. The appeal will be presented by Mr. Dudley Thomson, the West Indian lawyer in Tanzania who recently acted in the case against Mr. Kamala."

"So far as Mr. Awori is concerned, there have been no developments following the Government warning. He is anxious to get Mr. Evelyn to permit him to hold at least one experimental meeting with his people, so that he can impress upon them the utter futility of the path of violence. He has I understand already made such a request to the Colonial Secretary, who has promised to think over the matter."

Horrified at Uplands Massacre

Mr. Awori said in Nairobi last Friday evening that the K.A.U. and all law-loving Africans would deplore the Uplands massacre with deep horror.

This is definitely the work of Mau Mau gangsters, he said, showing the necessity of even stronger resistance against Mau Mau. He said, adding that peace-loving Africans are not going to co-operate with murderers who are killing innocent women and children. Agents had, he claimed, said more than ever the necessity of the Government's calling on African leaders to speak to the people personally and he was still prepared to go into the reserves and try to do so.

Progress in Tanganyika

FIGURES showing the enormous progress made in the United Kingdom Trusteeship territories were recently given by Sir Alan Burns to the Trusteeship Council of the United Nations.

In 1919-20 Tanganyika's revenue and expenditure were respectively £6,59,000 and £790,000, compared with £9,48,000 and £19,384,000 estimated for 1950.

Railways increased 1,528 miles in 1950, compared with 1,000 miles in 1920, during which period there was an extension of roads from 2,900 miles of main weather roads to 3,113 miles of main and secondary roads and 1,200 miles of township roads.

There were no manufacturing concern on a commercial scale except oil-salt; but in 1950 there were 2,275 industrial establishments employing 15,000 persons.

Only 51 Government district schools, providing for 3,800 pupils, and one subsidized European school were established in 1920; but by 1951 there were 227,055 pupils attending Native authority and voluntary agency schools and 100,000 at bus-hooch. Girls' African and African received higher education.

The Government annual expenditure on the development of Tanganyika has risen to more than £200,000.

During the same period, in hospitals and out-patients, admissions rose respectively from 12,000 and 125,500 to 356,000 and 4,300,000.

I like to think that Dr. Williamson sees in the diamonds noted on the screen the vanity of mankind but a small trace of the glory of God," Mr. F. L. Gee, vice-principal of Makerere College, Uganda.

Obituary

MR. GEORGE BERTRAM SHIELDS, father of Mr. Bertram Shields, of Kiambu, Kenya, has died in Nairobi at the age of 81.

MR. REGINALD CHARLES TUCKER, British crane engineer, employed on the construction of the Victoria Falls, Uganda, was killed when a crane he was operating

MR. J. A. PARK, who has died in Harrogate a few months after his retirement from Tanazivika, went to the Lupa gold fields in the early thirties, and some time engaged in early planting, and was later in partnership in a gold mine.

MONSIGNOR LUCA SERWANGA, believed to be the first African to become a diocesan prelate in the Roman Catholic Church, has died in Uganda. He had been a priest for 25 years, and at the time of his death was superior of the mission at Mukono.

MR. WILLIAM FISHER HOGG, who had died in London at the age of 86, had had business interests in Southern Rhodesia for many years. A former member of the old Sports Club, he was a member of the committee for more than 30 years, and was well known to many Englishmen.

FATHER BEN KELLY, who has died in Uganda, went to the Protectorate in 1931, after having served with the first party of Mill Hill priests to go to the British Cameroons. After appointments in Nyanga, Budama, and Taforo, he became chaplain to the Franciscan missionary sisters at Nkokonjeru in 1940.

MRS. JOHN KIRK SMITH, who has died suddenly in Scotland at the age of 52, was manager in Lilongwe, Nyasaland, for the Shire Trading Co., Ltd., which she joined in 1936 after 10 years in the service of the Union Lakes Corporation, Ltd. She leaves a widow, daughter, and a son at school at Southern Rhodesia. One of her two sisters is Mrs. M. M. Withers, of Blantyre.

Mr. Ben Potter

CANON W. J. WRIGHT has sent the following note: "After an illness of two years, in which there were frequent rallies, there passed away on February 17 in Whetstone, Surrey, quietly in his sleep, a well-known Kenya character, Mr. Ben Potter. The late sergeant major travelled a hard road, but always marched with cheerful courage, and won the respect and affection of all ranks and races. His was the faith that removes mountains. On that faith this gallant old soldier will stand at the last rally."

New Programmes for African Listeners

"MUSIC WHILE YOU WORK" programmes have been started by the Central African Broadcasting Station at Lusaka "to meet the large numbers of requests received from employers of African labour who have asked for something of the sort." Another programme initiated this month is a weekly discussion between Africans and Europeans in the "African Forum" series, among the topics for discussion are: "Isabolas a hindrance to progress?" "Should African women take on paid jobs in European households?" "Is European liquor bad for Africans?" "Should politics or economic development come first for Africa?" "What should be the function of Native trade unions in Rhodesia?" Those taking part include Dr. J. Deacon Clarke, curate of the Rhodes Livingston Mission; Mr. C. G. Cousins, Commissioner for Labour and Social Affairs; Mr. G. Ballington Seaman, for Native Interests in the South African Senate; Mr. Vernon Brelsford, Director of Information, Northern Rhodesia; and several African teachers, trade unionists, co-operative workers, students, and welfare workers.

Mr. Troup Optimistic about Kenya

Tour Makes Survey of White Highlands

THAT THE PRODUCTION of the Kenya Highlands could be increased within 10 years by 100% by intensive agricultural methods that the cultivated acreage in the areas with heavier rainfall could be doubled in the same period, and that the production from the existing areas could be trebled in 20 years, were among the encouraging views expressed by Mr. E. G. Troup when he addressed journalists recently at the East African Office in London.

Mr. Troup, who was appointed last year by the Kenya Government a special commissioner to inquire into (a) the uses and structure of cereal crops and (b) the general farming economy of the Colony, a bursar of Lord Ardwick College, Hampshire, and a member of several Government committees dealing with agriculture in this country, besides having long experience of farming.

Recommendations in the first report of reference have already been adopted by the Kenya Government. Mr. Troup left his report with the Governor before returning to this country on January 25 after spending four months in the Colony.

In the course of his comprehensive inquiry, which even included consideration of income tax structures, Mr. Troup travelled some thousands of miles by car and low-flying aircraft, which he found a particularly useful means of survey, and visited nearly 90 farms, including African farms.

He pointed out that European farming in the Colony had been carried on for only 50 years, and during that period there had been two world wars and a long period of slump. Indeed, only during the past 10 years had conditions made real progress possible. The first chapter of pioneering was over, and the chapter of stabilisation and intensive development had begun. There was no reason to believe that sufficient labour would not be available for expansion.

Independence on Agriculture

Kenya had no resources of consequence, apart from agriculture, except the possibility of oil in the Northern Frontier District. He believed Kenya would become the food granary of East Africa, as South Africa, or possibly in the world, had more favourable conditions for food production than the districts of the Kenya Highlands, which enjoyed the heavier rainfall. There was every reason to be confident that Kenya could compete in the world's markets.

He saw little chance for any considerable export of beef; indeed, production would need to be increased to meet the local demand. Native female stock, particularly Boran cattle, crossed with imported bulls, would form the basis of Kenya herds. There was room for improvement in the cattle on many farms.

Pig production could largely and rapidly expand. The pig factory was increasing its capacity from 1,000 to 4,000 pigs a week. There was already a contract with the Ministry of Food. The London meat trade was very satisfied with the quality of Kenyan bacon, which ranked only slightly below Danish. A market for Kenyan eggs had been established in Aden. Philippine production was another promising line.

As farming became more intensive, farms would inevitably decrease in size, probably to not more than 1,000 acres. Labour, however highly trained technically, would require European supervision for a long time.

Questioned about Macmillan activities, Mr. Troup said he had travelled through the hinterland areas without escort, and was in the Nanyuki district when the number one cattle was carried out. Farming was, however, going on normally, and crops had been harvested. Some precautions were taken at night. Native labour which had been recruited had mostly been replaced, and the chief change was in European supervision, as so many of the younger men were on civil duties.

He had encountered no hostility from Africans. All he met had been friendly, although those in the Port Harcourt area had looked worried.

There was no sign of any European preparing to leave their farms, and there was still difficult to buy. If she were 20 years younger, Mr. Troup admitted, he would seriously consider going to Kenya to engage in general farming. All the younger generation in Kenya, mainly men, were determined to remain at home in the colony.

His tour had included visits to the areas where the progress of which had been sufficiently studied. African police officers had had a difficult task, one that required infinite patience, but their efforts were beginning to bear fruit, as there would be a snowball effect. All the reserves in the Native Reserves had been due to European influence.

More Support for Federation Round-table Conference Proposed.

THE QUAKERS in the capital city of Southern Rhodesia have publicly declared their support for the plan for a federation of the Rhodesias and Nyasaland.

Asking that the names of the signatories should not be published, representatives of the Religious Society of Friends wrote recently to the Rhodesian Herald:

"The members of the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers) resident in Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia, are deeply conscious of their special responsibilities in a multiracial society, mindful of the backward state of the African people, greatly concerned at the attitudes of some political groups and religious bodies in the United Kingdom, and fearful of the consequences of a wrong decision in this great issue of federation, state:

"(1) We accept that any effort to maintain the status of one ethnic group over another by any means is wrong and is bound to fail."

"(2) We consider that the great advantages to be expected from federation offer the liveliest hope for the future development and progress of black and white alike in this part of Africa."

"(3) We understand the great issues behind the federation question. We are convinced that to defer further the decision on federation would gain nothing and would probably add serious complication."

Future of Africans Safeguarded

"(4) After the fullest examination, we hold that the proposals at present before the electorate of this Colony entrench all the present privileges and safeguard the future position of the African peoples of these territories, in many cases to the great disadvantage of the multiracial society as a whole. The economic advantages as well as these political safeguards are such that we believe its adoption to be justified in spite of opposition."

"(5) We fear the rejection of federation, either by this Colony or by the United Kingdom, will result in a situation which will inevitably be followed by a racial holocaust."

"(6) We, as a body deeply interested in the building up of a Christian social order in this part of the world, place on record that we are in favour of federation and pray that God may guide all who are concerned in determining the future of Central Africa."

The interesting point was made by the Bulawayo Chronicle that those Africans who discuss federation are nearly always Nyasalanders and Northern Rhodesians. "The indigenous Southern Rhodesian Native loves on smiles and carries on with his game of nimba. Although Eurocanized and of a better education he is less politically anxious than his northern brethren."

White Paper Insufficiently Known

Mr. Welensky said last week: "If only the Southern Rhodesian electorate know the facts they will vote the right way in the referendum. The contents of the White Paper are still not sufficiently known, and there is a great deal of ignorance about Northern Rhodesia."

Lord Faringdon, a leading Fabian, said in a recent speech in Slough:

"Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland are to have 17, 11, and seven seats respectively in the Federal Parliament. Their tax revenues are £97m., £11m., and £7m. When we suggested to the Colonial Office that this was a possible reason for these representation figures, they hotly denied it."

The national executive committee of the United Nations Association has proposed that "before federation is established a round-table conference representative of all political parties, Africans, and white settlers should be called by the Government to secure much wider agreement."

The Free Church Federal Council has asked the Government "to make a further attempt to create that interfacial trust which the council seems to be unable to absent."

Five ministers in Carnoustie, the Revs. J. W. Cumming, R. I. C. Davison, W. H. Deyell, G. A. Hardy, and D. Lister, have telegraphed to Captain Duncan, M.P. for South Angus, that they will campaign for the Africans and against the Government.

Six hundred African civil servants decided at a meeting in Lusaka last Friday to absent themselves from their duties on April 1 and 2 and to devote the two days to prayer. The Northern Rhodesian African National Congress recently called a prayer against federation on those days and urged all Africans to stay away from work. The Lusaka meeting is understood to have decided that African civil servants should volunteer to work on Good Friday and April 4, both of which are public holidays.

Duty of Civil Servants

With the acting provincial commissioner, Mr. J. C. S. G. Smith, at the first duty of civil servants is to be the Government which employed them, and gave the warning that any African civil servant who neglects his duty will be dealt with according to the ordinary regulations," he was shouted down.

Baron Schlesinger, non-official member of the Legislative Council of Nyasaland, said when speaking in Salisbury that those Rhodesians who thought that they were accepting a liability in bringing Nyasaland into the proposed federation overlooked the fact that the Protectorate had never been properly developed owing to lack of funds and that there had never been even so primary survey of its economic potentialities. While in the early years Nyasaland might receive rather meagre dividends, these would eventually accrue to the Federal State.

Lord Swinton, Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations, and Mr. Oliver Lyttelton, Secretary of State for the Colonies, received a deputation last week from the Central Africa Committee of London, who presented a memorandum on federation.

Mr. Henry Hopkinson, Minister of State for Colonial Affairs, received a delegation from the Central Peace Council, which was led by Mr. De Gama Sorenson, M.P. The Minister emphasized that the federal scheme would improve conditions in Central Africa both economically and racially.

African wearing badges depicting Gandhi were among those from both Rhodesias and Nyasaland who met last weekend at Fort Jameson. They included African Congress leaders, chiefs from the northern territories, and members from native organizations in Southern Rhodesia. Their aim, according to spokesmen, was to co-ordinate plans for "peaceful non-co-operation" with the Governments should Central African Federation be established. Mr. Joshua Nkomo, leading the Southern Rhodesian members, alleged that federation would "perpetuate the domination of the small white community over Africans in all Central Africa." The badges worn by some of the Northern Rhodesian Africans were inscribed "Gandhi, Lover of Peace," and were apparently supplied by Indian traders.

Chartered Company

Sir Douglas Malcolm's address at the annual meeting of the British South Africa Company appears in full on other pages. His speech shows the immense burden of taxation borne by the company, which was then left with a net profit of £2,674,776. Investments of almost £11m. were up by 5% for the year, and the market value is nearly £34m. above the book value. Sir Douglas expressed himself as strongly in favour of Central African federation.

A full-grown lioness was seen at night by two Salisbury motorists recently about 11 miles outside the town on the latter road to Lake McIlwaine.

NEWS ITEMS IN BRIEF

Members of the East African Royal Commission are due in Uganda on April 9. They will remain in the Protectorate until May 9, when they will fly to Mwanza. The first full-length feature film to appear in stereo vision is now being made in London. Entitled "Bwana Devil," it is based on "The Man-Eaters of Tsavo."

The board of Rhodesian Railways will visit Lusaka on April 15-16 to discuss matters of railway policy and administration with the Northern Rhodesian Government.

The commission of inquiry into the murder of hospital orderly, Mr. J. Hinga, a local Kikuyu, has reported that better protection should have been provided by the district commissioner.

Air Service

"Viking Gambazi," a new air service between London and Rhodesia will begin from Salisbury on April 4. The return fare from London is £207. Vikings (27-seaters) will be used. Flights in the three-day journey will be made via Nairobi and Mombasa.

A letter dated April 16 by General Olcott to his sister on a leaf torn from an Army order book was sold in London last week for £85. Saying that he had proposed a treaty recognizing the independence of Uganda, the note was dispatched from Mbrolli, now in the Uganda Protectorate.

A Viking airliner of Central African Airways which left Nairobi on Sunday for Blantyre, Nyasaland, crashed in a swamp about 100 miles from Dar es Salaam, killing the crew of five and eight passengers, including Dr. Guthrie Wilson, a civil engineer associated with the building of the Festival Hall in London. Mrs. Wilson and Mr. Louis Yudkin, stage director of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden who was on his way to Bulawayo to advise upon the new theatre.

Owing to Easter, this issue of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA went to press one day earlier than usual. Flying eight miles high over Uganda on February 8, BOAC Comet completed the corporation's first 10,000 hours of Comet flying.

By reducing most transit stops, BOAC will accelerate the longer jet airliner service between London and Johannesburg. On the outward journey the flight will be scheduled to take 21 hours 20 minutes, a return journey 21 hours 35 minutes.

Award to African Constable Courageous Devotion to Duty

CONSTABLE (now probationary corporal) MAGIE S. WAMBURA, of the Kenya Police, has been awarded the Colonial Police Medal for Gallantry. The citation reads:

"On January 12, 1953, Constable Magie, a member of the Tendekwa tribe, was on duty in the Masai district when he saw cattle being illegally grazed there by two members of the Tendekwa tribe. He tried to seize the cattle but the herdsmen started driving them back. When they reached the border Constable Magie insisted they go to the police station at Kabaneta. The herdsmen refused, and one of them drew a knife (sword) while constable Magie was trying to arrest his companion. The other herdsmen then shot an arrow at the constable which penetrated the brain of his hat. Seeing that his assailant had further arrows, he shot and killed him. He recovered the dead man's bow and 11 arrows, and started to drive the cattle towards Kabaneta, but was overtaken by a hostile crowd of about 100 people. One of the crowd made ready to shoot an arrow at the constable, and as he turned to face his rifle, wounding the man in the left hand. Another member of the crowd shot an arrow at the constable from behind, but he turned around, fired, and wounded him in the leg. The cattle were then removed to Kabaneta."

"At the inquest proceeding the resident magistrate found that the deceased died as a result of being shot by a rifle bullet fired by Constable Magie, while the latter was defending himself."

This item concludes with a tribute to Constable Magie's courage and devotion to duty.

Courage of Kikuyu Christians

Mr. Blundell on the Situation in Kenya

THE ENCHOKING VALUE of the Christian Church has been shown in its true value in recent months in the Mau Mau crisis, said MR. MICHAEL BLUNDELL when he addressed the executive council of the Joint East and Central African Board last week. General recognition of that fact was indeed the best thing that had emerged from the Mau Mau troubles.

Where much was obscure, one manifest fact was that it was the Kikuyu who were real Christians who had the courage to stand up to intense pressures which were directed against all those in tribe who did not conform with the wishes of the wicked men who organized and directed the revolt against law and order. It was a exaggeration, indeed, to say that the Kikuyu, and in almost all cases primitive savages, Christian Kikuyu, who had shown great courage in standing by their faith and the values which they knew that British Colonial administration was determined to uphold.

Eliminate the Thugs

These brave men represented perhaps 5% of the tribe. The evil men who organized the movement had administered the death probably represented 15%, and the remaining 80% were bewildered and submissive to the orders they were given by the thugs. The best way of reducing that compliance was to eliminate as quickly as possible the thugs who were beyond redemption.

The process of breaking their power had improved considerably with the recent adoption of new techniques, and recently the casualties among the terrorists had numbered 40 or 50 per week; but they, unhappily were still wandering about one Kikuyu a day.

The first effective means of dealing with the terrorists in their fast lairs was by small patrols, consisting mainly of two young European Kenyans and 10 or 12 Africans who travelled light, were surprised from the air, and kept up the pressure on the bands, giving them little respite. Encouraging results had already been obtained from this new policy, which was expected to be still more successful when heavy rains drove the terrorists lower down the mountains.

Actual Civil War in Kikuyuland

Moreover, there were plans for new chains of police posts manned by police reserves and askaris in the settled areas and the African land units for the purpose of encouraging the people to back the law rather than the gangster. In some parts of Kikuyuland there was virtually civil war between resistance groups and Mau Mau, but no doubt as the some people on both sides used the opportunity to pay off old personal scores.

About one-fifth of Kenya's revenue, or £3m., was likely to be anticipated this year by measures against the terrorists, so that hundreds of thousands of pounds would therefore be needed by way of recurrent expenditure to meet the extra police requirements of the state.

An extremely heavy strain was being placed on the young Europeans between 18 and 45 years of age who were being called up for military or police or other duties, and Mr. Blundell very much hoped that it would be possible to recruit the country for engagement for six months or a year young men who had served in the Commandos or Parachute battalions so that these young Kenyans whose absence from business life was affecting the economy of the country could be released.

The present situation was interesting in the way it capital in some directions, while there was no reason to think that was other than a temporary measure. Indeed, there were good grounds for the belief that the Shell group still intended to proceed with their great scheme for an oil refinery near Mombasa, one of the leading content groups in the United Kingdom had just decided to build again in Kenya, the demand for gold in the Native areas was as active as ever, and outside the railways mining the Kikuyu reserves there was no sign of any check in development of many kinds.

The long-term difficulty of dealing with the Kikuyu was aggravated by the paucity of Africans with political capacity. There could be no doubt that it had been a mistake to appoint to the Legislative Council Africans who were lacking in the requisite experience, said that it was highly necessary to take young Africans of promise and bring them into district and provincial affairs so that they might learn by handling practical measures how to play a major part later in dealing with wider issues.

Kenya clearly recognized that mere repression of Mau Mau, though a matter of supreme urgency, would solve nothing, unless the大陸的 which must be established throughout the Kikuyu country must be accompanied by the right kind of tangible benefits for those who respected public order and contributed to the general progress.

Separate Civil Services for E. and C. Africa

There was a strong case for a separate branch of the Colonial Service, devoted to East and central Africa. For the main requirements were very much the same from Uganda in the north to Southern Rhodesia in the south.

It was important, once the present emergency was over, to begin to work closer collaboration with Uganda and Tanganyika, for it was clear now that the future for each of the three territories lay in close contacts on policy and thought.

In some quarters what was happening in Kenya was depicted as a black v. white struggle. Nothing could be more untrue, as was proved by the fact that the black thugs had intruded far, far more Africans than Europeans and Asians combined. The conflict was between a relatively small number of wicked Africans seeking personal power and the normal forces of law and order, which Europeans, Asians, and good Africans alike were determined to uphold. Race feelings between those elements were excellent, and upon them must be built something enduring and most valuable.

The European community did not fail even now to discriminate between good and bad Kikuyu, and would not succumb to the temptation to lump them all together. That would inevitably create a misery complex in the Kikuyu mind, a risk which had to be avoided. That did not mean, of course, that there should be appeasement of evil-doers. On the contrary, the great mass of the people must be brought back to decent standards only by discipline and wise policies imposed upon them for their good.

It would not be easy, but Mr. Blundell was confident that it could succeed, especially if a Member of Reconstruction and Rehabilitation were appointed with special responsibility for Kikuyuland. He ought to be a non-official of great moral courage, good judgment, and wide knowledge of Africans.

Letter to the Editor

Mr. Pritt's Monkey Skin

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

SIR.—On his return to Kenya would Mr. Michael Blundell use his influence to secure for posterity the historic monkey skin with which Mr. Gedde is said to have adorned Mr. Pritt recently? The skin, appropriately stuffed and suitably inscribed, might be presented to the Coryndon Museum.

Dr. Leakey should be requested to subscribe to an oak binding frame to ensure that it is treated with the respect it merits. The terms of the sale might be devised by Mr. George Mathew and Mr. Legg, of the Daily Worker, and administered by a member of Kenya Legislative Council nominated for the purpose by Mr. Jomo Kenyatta.

Yours truly,

LONDON, S.W.1.

H. W. WEN TONES

"Most of the Africans who have gone to Britain and returned to Kenya are not doing anything constructive," Mr. W. W. Awori, an African member of the Legislative Council of Kenya.

Egypt Approves Sudan Commission Minister of State's Visit

A DECREE setting up the Governor-General's Commission in the Sudan has been approved by the Egyptian Government. This represents the first step towards holding a general election in the Sudan.

The text of the official Egyptian decree is as follows:

"In the name of the people and temporary Council in accordance with article 4 of the agreement signed on February 12, 1953, between the Government of Egypt and the Government of the United Kingdom for the self-government and self-determination of the Sudanese and with clauses 3 and 6 of the first annex to the said agreement, it is decreed:

—(4) Pending approval of the Sudanese Parliament when elected, Ibrahim Ahmed and Dabirri Mohamed Osman are appointed members of the Sudan Governor-General's Commission.

(2) Wing Commander Husseini Zulficar Sabry and Sir Lawrence Graffey-Smith are appointed members of the Governor-General's commission. Tawfiq Hassan is appointed permanent member.

(3) Until the Pakistan member has been appointed the chairman of the commission will be Tawfiq Hassan.

(4) The Prime Minister shall execute this decree which shall come into force from the date of its publication."

British Discourse

This decree was approved following a meeting of the Egyptian civilian Cabinet and the officers of the "Council of the Revolution." They had earlier met Mr. Selwyn Lloyd, with whom there had been "a full and frank discussion upon all the difficulties of carrying out the agreement in the Sudan. It is strongly hoped that the way has now been cleared for an improvement in the situation." The British Ambassador was ill and unable to accompany the Secretary of State to the presidency in Cairo. Mr. Lloyd has now returned to London.

The Egyptian decision to approve the commission followed the ending of a deadlock over its Sudanese members. British Ambassador formally notified the Egyptian Foreign Minister that Great Britain was prepared to nominate Ibrahim Ahmed and Dardiri Osman as the two Sudanese members. Earlier Mr. Lloyd had said that Dardiri was not supported by the Sudanese.

That the Cairo Press had distorted the facts of M.I.A.'s talk was alleged by the Daily Telegraph correspondent. He had, he said, preserved the local fiction that Osman was the parties' choice from the outset.

The question of Commonwealth membership again prompted the Egyptian Press to attack Mr. Lloyd. At a Press conference in Khartoum the Minister of State had said that membership of the British Commonwealth was not inconsistent with independence; and that the original difficulty had arisen from a genuine misunderstanding: the question of Commonwealth membership had not been discussed with Sudan party leaders; but he had told them that an independent Sudan could suggest any relationship it wished.

Commonwealth Membership

An Egyptian spokesman therupon alleged that raising the question of Commonwealth membership during the transitional period was also a violation of the Sudan agreement.

In the Sudan government, the minister had agreed that the question of joining the Commonwealth should be ruled out.

In a statement to the people of the Sudan issued last week Mr. Lloyd said: "I have abstained from propaganda speeches and attacks on other governments. I advise the people of the Sudan to disregard the wild accusations now being bandied about, and to concentrate on the holding of free and fair elections. In spite of all difficulties, Great Britain intends to honour the agreement of February 12, 1953, and to see that the Sudanese retain self-government and self-determination."

"The British Government," he added, "has maintained throughout that the wishes of the Sudanese should prevail in the selection of the two Sudanese members of the Governor-General's Commission. They were therefore prepared to accept Mohammed Hassan Diab and Ibrahim Ahmed, the two candidates named first on the list of five received from the secretary of the joint committee of political parties on February 25. The Egyptian Government agreed to the nomination of Ahmed, but did not agree to Mohammed Hassan Diab, meanwhile the name of Dardiri Mohamed Osman as substitute for one of the other three names put forward, and the Egyptian Government indicated that he was acceptable.

It could not agree until the Sudanese had found Dardiri acceptable. It gave its instructions to those who supported Diab that to avoid deadlock and to facilitate the holding of early elections, they were prepared to accept Diab. They have made it clear that they regard this nomination as provisional only, and will have to be reviewed by the new Sudanese Parliament.

The decision follows discussions between Mr. Lloyd and the four Sudanese parties—the Union Socialist Republican, National, and National Unionists.

The Cairo correspondent of The Times commented: "Reports here say that Mr. Lloyd and Major Salem have reached full accord on the execution of the agreement, and Major Salem is still not to have disguised his position in emphasising that he will now conform to the new arrangements."

Sudan Coalition Committee

The recently formed Coalition Committee for the Sudan, in which the four Sudanese political parties are represented, is composed as follows:

Quinton Party—es-Sayed Sadiq el-Mahdi, Abdalla Kamal, Abdel Karim Mohammed, Yacoub Osman, and Abdel Rahman el-Tahir. National Unionists—Dr. Ahmad Azhari, Mohammed Naeed Din, Dardiri Mohamed Osman, Hamoud Tawfiq, and Mirghani Hamza. Socialist Republicans—Ibrahim Bedri, Dardiri Mohamed Ahmed Zein el-Abdin Saleh, Ahmed El-Sayyid, and others. Muslims—Abdul Saleh Abu Sinan, Serur Kufli, National Party—Yahia Mohammed Abdel Gadir, Dr. Abdel Nader Mostafa, and Salih el-Sayyid al-Tabani (who was replaced by Sayyid Ibrahim Yousif al-Hindi).

The inner committee of this coalition consists of one member from each party, namely Abdalla Kamal, Mohamed Naeed Din, Ahmed Zein el-Abdin, and Dr. Mostafa. Abd al-Rahman el-Tahir, Yacoub Osman, Mohammed el-Sayyid, and Mirghani Hamza, Dr. Ahmad Mohamed Ahmed, Gumer, and Yahia Abdel Fadil have been chosen as the permanent committee to deal with the problems of the Western Province.

Press Comments on Federation

Mr. Griffiths's Speech Criticized

THAT VOTERS in the Southern Rhodesian referendum will be "strongly influenced" by Parliamentary approval of the federal plan is the view of the Spectator, which has emphasized that most people who had initial misgivings "have undergone the process of assimilation under the eminent authority of Mr. J. G. Hailley, who has now concluded that federation will offer to the Africans of all three territories 'a future the value of which they have never been able to appreciate.' The leading article argued that it was the duty of every good citizen to try to make federation a success now that the decision to proceed has been taken.

The Review of Books said "the compromise argument favored by Mr. Griffiths showed either too little principle or a disturbing lack of political confidence," and that at least 16 of the 22 Labour members abstained from the division sustained in parliament.

It blamed Mr. Griffiths for failure to reconcile Africans to the original scheme by his refusal to allow the local Governments to persuade them of its advantages and concluded:

"...to bring about a grave risk of a war between the extremists on both sides. Africans would not be sitting in Northern Rhodesia's Legislative Council if they were not for the willingness of moderate European leaders to accept them. Through federation moderate opinion in all three territories will be given a chance to assert itself and prove itself worthy of leadership. If thwarted by outside dictation it will be discredited and forgotten."

Those opposed to the federal scheme, going through should remember the history of Palestine under the mandate. Scheme after scheme was talked out of existence until the two sides settled the matter for themselves, and the weaker went to the wall.

Verdict of Parliament Should Be Accepted

The opponents of federation, said Time and Tide, had "false, exclusive and obstinate masters of our kindred and descendants in the Rhodesias, and believe that the African Negro nationalism is, in fact, to be found there. To appease it is the right of a just and progressive statesmanship."

It added: "The hope of the opponents of the scheme would now accept the verdict of Parliament and put their ability and good will behind the effort to make it a success. Reconciliation is not merely a one-way gesture; it can be a two-way and steady impulse in statescraft."

Mr. Griffiths was said by the New Statesman and Nation to have expressed the view of all but a small cantankerous minority in the Labour Party.

In The Times M. A. P. Mallalieu, M.P., wrote that his instincts were with against Mr. Griffiths:

"That play with his spectators, too studious pause, the earnest use of the handkerchief, that premeditated recklessness of phrase! It left me with doubts."

Dick Stoker and Stanley Evans are good men, fruity, courageous characters. If they disagree with their party they do not shrink in doing so. Stanley waits all day on the back bench to make a speech about it. Mr. Dick, though no quite so zealous as that, is yet sufficiently definite to sit on the front bench and hear the official spokesman of his party.

Fred Hampshire's Guardian considered that "the Government are so steep in the streams of the administration of Rhodesia in Malanitis, a foolish misconception, while it frustrates the ideal of partnership between the races, but the alternative is apartheid."

The London Evening Standard reported Mr. Griffiths that the talk at Victoria Falls in which he participated were a step either towards federation or the ultimate separation of Rhodesia. Malanitis, a foolish misconception, while it frustrates the ideal of partnership between the races, but the alternative is apartheid."

The early edition of the Daily Chronicle on Wednesday of last week contained a long leading article headed "Federation or Chaos." In later editions it was dropped to make room for tribute to Queen Mary. The leading article in the early edition:

"Unless it were designed to unite quarreling factions among the Socialists in a single over-riding hostility, it is difficult to see what purpose yesterday's debate on Central African Federation was supposed to serve. Even so, the ground was conveniently ill-chosen. Many prominent Socialists, including Messrs. Gove, Walker, Stoke, Philips, Price and Stanley Evans, have indicated in no uncertain terms that they favor the scheme. In his able advocacy for federation, Mr. Griffiths was able to make telling use of ammunition supplied by the other fractions to the cause."

Opposition, Too, Disaffected Intellectuals

The scheme was conceived under a socialist Government and approved by nearly all those who now sit in the House. The present scheme differs at all from former drafts in that the safeguards of African interests have been notably strengthened. If Socialists condone the present safeguards as inadequate, what must they think of their own? The power of the Federal Government to promote the African's welfare will be wide; its power to restrict his rights of life away from land non-existent."

But the Socialists' trump card is their conviction that the scheme will not succeed in the face of African opposition. Hence the practical universal and unanimous nature of the opposition is well known. Equally well known is the equality of that opposition, how it springs from a tiny nucleus of disaffected intellectuals, how it is scattered and near and falsehood, and how it spreads like wild fire through people mistakenly call leaderless and without guidance. What do we retreat in the face of such a body? To we do, let there be no mistake about the consequences. The ambitions of the African agitators are no more to be satisfied by continuance of the status quo than by federation itself. Thus, if we retreat we shall have forfeited the advantages of federation—not to speak of its own prestige—without gaining stability. It would far wiser to go straight ahead. The truth about federation in practice is the only thing which can possibly split the African extremists from those they have so grossly misled."

THE HOUSE OF LORDS is expected to debate Central African federation on Wednesday and Thursday this week.

Britain's Pavilion in Bulawayo

DETAILED DETAILS of the £1,000,000 pavilion for the forthcoming Rhodes Centenary Exhibition in Bulawayo have been given by Mr. Alexander Gibson, one of the architects, and Mr. G. Reid, His Majesty's Assistant Trade Commissioner.

Fronting the main avenue, the building will cover 12,000 sq. feet, the remainder of a one-acre site being terraced gardens, with a 90-ft. pool. Exhibits of heavy machinery in open will illustrate parts of Britain's contribution to Central African Development. Models of the latest locomotives, equipment for road-building and dredging, and bridges will be displayed, and there will be a special section for water transport. The airways section will feature models of the Comet, Canberra jet bomber, the Bristol 175 helicopter, and other aircraft.

The pavilion will also include the development of natural resources, showing agricultural machinery, a model resevoir plant, and one on the development atomic piles. The work of the London and Liverpool schools of Tropical Medicine will be illustrated.

Threats to Zanzibar Cloves

DR. G. A. E. HERKLOTS, secretary of the agricultural research division of the Colonial Office, said in a recent overseas broadcast of the B.C.L.

"The wealth of the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba lies based on the successful cultivation of the clove tree. During the past two decades mysterious diseases called sudden death and blight have played havoc with the plantations, and mortality of 90 per cent on Zanzibar Island are now due to these diseases. They are not so rampant on Pemba Island, from where most of the cloves now come. A team was sent in 1948 and has tackled the problem energetically."

Experts who were sent out to give an opinion on the problem suggested that both the diseases might be caused by viruses spread by insect borers that lay eggs in the wood of the plant. It was shown quite clearly that they are caused by virus, but two hitherto undescribed species of virus. A successful line of resistance has been that simple practical control measures for dike have been evolved, and a good system of sudden death disease to obviate the necessity of the existence of this research unit."

Of Commercial Concern

About 60 representatives of commercial interests met at Tanga last week under the auspices of the Tanga Chamber of Commerce, the Tanga Indian Chamber of Commerce and the Tanganyika Sisal Growers' Association to discuss railway and port problems. Mr. E. P. Tunhook presided and the president of the East African Railways and Harbours, Mr. G. J. H. Scott, was one of those who spoke. It was then unanimously decided to inform the Governor of Tanganyika of the profound dissatisfaction with the services of the Tanga railway and port. The resolution expressed the view that "control of the railways and ports in Tanganyika should revert to the Territory whilst making provision for a co-ordinating body between the two former territories on matters of common concern."

B.C.A.C., before payment of interest, made a profit £1,147,000 for the 16 months ended January 31 last compared with £1,154,000 in the corresponding period of the previous year. Revenue from mail fell below expectations by an annual rate of 12%. Reduction of imports into Australia and South Africa, deterioration in the expansion of international trade, the American oil strike, and the withdrawal of the Slave-cruisers contributed to the disappointing results.

N. Rhodesian Capital Works

Capital works completed by the Northern Rhodesian Government between 1948 and the end of last year have been distributed as follows by the Development Secretary: buildings, £8m.; roads, £1,175,000; aerodromes, £970,000; plant and vehicles, £1,225,000; Lusaka water supply, £492,000.

Bank Missions, the S.A. Bank and Credit Lyonnais have been informed that the S.A. Government objects in principle to their establishing branches in the Sudan. Barclays Bank, I.C.C., the National Bank of Egypt, and the Oriental Bank already operate in the Sudan.

At last week's auctions in London 1740 packages of African tea were sold for an average of 3s. 5d. per lb., against 2,384 packages averaging 3s. 7d. per lb. in the previous week. The highest price realized was £1.21 per lb. against 9s. 6d. per lb. in Tanganyika.

One of the worst tobacco diseases, Alternaria or brown spot, which in the past attacked only second-year tobacco lands, is now also common to first-year plots, according to Mr. F. G. Collins, Northern Rhodesia chief tobacco adviser.

A half of 9,500 square miles is occupied at the Rhodes Centenary Exhibition this summer by the Federation of Rhodesia Industries, whose secretariat will transfer temporarily to Bulawayo.

East African Veneers Ltd. is in voluntary liquidation.

Dividends

Colonial Securities Trusts Ltd.'s gross revenue for the year ended January 31 last £16,007 (£12,731). Balance available after deduction of tax and management expenses £2,211 (£19,140). Preference dividend £6,232 (£5,000) ordinary dividend £7,289.

Kenya Plantations Ltd.—22% for 1952 (compared with 25% plus bonus of 5%). Profit amounted to £53,427. (£2,273.77 before tax of £36,019 (£56,542).

Kakamega, Eldoret, Kisumu and coffee growers—Kenya. First interim dividend of 10% less tax for year ended January 28.

East African Vital Plantations Ltd.—22% for the year ending January 31, 1953, payable to shareholders registered March 9.

Egyptian Bank of Egypt Ltd.—22% for 1952 less tax (the same).

Uganda Iron and Steel Project

Doubtful if Industry Would Be Profitable

The ironworks mentioned in official circles in Uganda of the establishment of a substantial iron and steel industry in the Protectorate have been discontinued by the exploratory investigations of the Uganda Development Corporation, which issued the following statement a few days ago:

"During recent months the corporation has been investigating the possibility of setting up an iron and steel industry based on the magnetite deposits at Sukulu, near Fort Portal. These investigations have shown that the scheme originally envisaged may not be practicable."

To establish an iron and steel industry would necessitate very heavy capital costs, and hence heavy recurrent capital charges. Moreover, it seems doubtful whether the industry could be run at a profit. It is believed in industrial circles that during the next two or three years steel will be much more abundant than at present, and the price charged to overseas consumers is likely to be reduced. The corporation considers that it would be unwise to build an industry on present figures or to commit itself.

British experienced partners are obviously necessary in a project of this kind, but most of the British companies likely to participate are at present fully engaged in de-colonialisation and are unable to undertake new commitments.

For these reasons the corporation considers that it must refer the whole matter back to the Governor-in-Council.

The chairman of the corporation, Mr. J. T. Simpson, said that a commercially satisfactory industry might well be established by deferring steel rolling and concentrating on pig iron, which could be used in East Africa for malleable castings and forgings, and that investigations into that possibility were proceeding.

In the last five years Rhodesia Railways have built for their European staff 1,349 houses at 64 single dwellers and rest-rooms, costing £4,669,000. In such places as Bulawayo, Salisbury, Butembo, and Ndola new townships have been designed and built.

Professor Macmillan's Address

encourage us to stand up to the Kyu Christians against us. This is something new and inspiring!

Can we guides control these things? If we rest with the colonial authority alone, events may run away with us. European leaders are where they are because they are aware of their responsibilities and of the duties of the African majority, and now are willing to play a full and unselfish share in political development. All depends on Africa's own coming quickly to maturity and shouldering responsibility.

Can Africans trust their suspicion of European intentions and believe our interests can be the same? Will they give their minds to the question at hand, whatever it be, and talk in their tents, as so lately the Central African federation? Can Africanization of the service in East Africa come?

Will the established standards of civility and integrity of West African education be pushed regardless of any lowering of standards there are none too high now.

Whether the issue is to see a backlash on all that holds Africa back or a struggle to reach the death—now the balance. African nationalism, the danger of revenging itself for slight, real and imagined, returning to European and instituting a colour bar in Africa. That is why the campaign against federation in Central Africa has made clear that there is a technique of non-cooperation. This may be inspired from outside Africa, though perhaps from its students clubs in Europe.

No Machines for Educating Public Opinion

African public opinion is still at a stage where, with honourable exceptions, it is unlikely that an unpopular minority view will gain champions—whether the approach is success, as perhaps on the Gold Coast counts for everything. It would greatly simplify things if we could find an African opinion which understood that we were engaged, not on problems with exact solution, but in finding a working policy, that there is room for much difference of opinion and that the only way forward is by the dialectic of debate. Unfortunately we have missed improving the machinery for educating public opinion, and now it gets late.

Our own share in setting up the necessary operation is far from easy. Our strongest belief has been in simple and flattening business of acting the big brother simple and bluntly. But it is another thing altogether to revise our attitude and seat wisely with the intellectuals. The handling of this class has been the very Achilles heel of our Colonial administration, and now, in spite of us, they are turning to man's estate, when journalism will not do. They have fine Africans special friends at home—for whom this situation is over-simplified by distance—learned to see things in a new light. Africans demand full equality, but have yet learnt the meaning of it. They will expect a sort of special solutions, so that even the best students get over-much sympathy and not enough understanding. Discipline, having in the past been rather from without, can now only be self-discipline. Yet one day I found it quite impossible to explain to one champion of African Rights what I meant when I charged his sort with treating Africans as protégés rather than equals.

Giving them the benefit of frank and equal criticism is perhaps the root of the matter. We own men in Britain which refuses to depart from our own high standards, trusting that their capacity to take it will grow; that they will cease to suspect anyone who disagrees with them of being an enemy.

Remembering hopefully the very sharp but always friendly exchanges I had in Nyasaland last year, even if federation is won, I would conclude that if and when a larger number of Africans begin to take criticisms, as in the whole we have learnt to take it, the battle will be as good as won.

New Development Finance Company

THE COMMONWEALTH DEVELOPMENT FINANCE CO., LTD., a concern for financing the development and resources of the Commonwealth which was envisaged by the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference last December, has been incorporated with an authorized capital of £15m., divided into 8,250,000 A ordinary shares and 5,750,000 B ordinary shares, both of £1, denominated in the former to be subscribed by leading Commonwealth countries, shipping, mining and financial interests, and the latter by the Bank of England. In the first place the board intends to call up only 10% of the capital.

The company has power to borrow up to an amount equal to twice its issued capital and at present it is intended that operations should be financed mainly through such borrowing powers. The intention is to sponsor projects which will increase the resources of the Commonwealth and strengthen its balance of payments and that will be the primary test of applications for assistance.

Directors

The first directors of the company are to be:

- Sir Frederick Gossner (chairman), chairman of Shell Petroleum Co., Ltd., "Shell" Transport and Trading Co., Ltd., Anglo-Saxon Petroleum Co., Ltd., and United-British Oilfields of Trinidad, Ltd.

- Mr. R. E. Fleming, managing director of Robert Fleming and Co., Ltd., deputy governor of London Assurance, and a director of Barclays's Bank, Ltd., & Co., and other companies;
- Sir Guyney F. Worth, chairman of Unilever, Ltd., and a director of Unilever, Ltd., and a director of United Africa, Ltd.

- Mr. H. G. Myers, an executive of the Bank of England;
- Sir Ernest Oppenheimer, chairman of Anglo-American Corporation of South Africa, Ltd., and a director of mining and other companies;

- Sir Edward Peacock, managing director of Badde Brothers and Co., Ltd., and a director of Canadian Pacific Railways Co., Ltd.

- Sir Robert Sinclair, chairman of Imperial Tobacco Co., Ltd., and a director of British American Tobacco Co., Ltd., and the Finance Corporation of Industries, Ltd.

- Mr. J. R. Sanderson, chairman of Tube Investments, Ltd., and South Wales Aircraft, Ltd., and a director of National Provincial Bank, Ltd., Atlas Assurance Co., Ltd., and Lloyd's, Ltd.

New cars registered in northern Rhodesia last year totalled 2,631, in addition to 1,000 commercial vehicles and 500 motor-cycles. Over 60% were British-made.

its value and use

VIROL is a concentrated food prepared from Malt Extract, specially refined Animal Fats, Eggs, Sugars (including Glucose) and Orange juice with added Mineral Salts, Vitamins, etc.

VIROL is designed to provide, in carefully balanced proportions, those essential food factors (not Vitamins alone, but also many others just as important), which are most likely to be deficient in the rest of the diet.

VIROL is very palatable, easily and completely assimilated, and throws no strain upon the digestive system. In infancy and childhood, in illness and convalescence—in fact, in all conditions where a supplementary food is required—its growth-promoting and restorative properties are of proved value.

Company Reports

The British South Africa CompanyMaintenance of Strong Position*Long-Term Investment Policy of the Company

Sir Dougal O. Malcolm on U.K. Taxation Burden

THE FIFTY-FIFTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE BRITISH SOUTH AFRICA COMPANY was held on March 26 at the Chartered Insurance Institute, 20 Aldermanbury, London, E.C.2. Sir DOUGAL O. MALCOLM, K.C.M.G. (the chairman) presiding.

The secretary (Mr. E. D. Hawley) having read the notice convening the meeting and the report of the auditors.

The chairman in the course of his speech said:

"You will notice that our meeting to-day is being held some two months earlier than last year."

"As you are well aware, the United Kingdom's fiscal year ends on April 1st each year and, unless a company can afford to wait and apprrove by the shareholders and actually paid before that date, it is necessary to wait to calculate the tax on the dividend in accordance with the provisions of the new Budget, which are of course not known until later in April."

"In fact, after allowing for the printing of the accounts and the statutory 21 days' notice, it would not be possible to hold our annual meeting and pay our final dividend until the end of May if we followed this course."

"We appreciate that the production of our accounts for the earlier date means that this year we shall pay two and one-half interim dividend in the same fiscal year, which might possibly have the effect of putting a few surtax pence in a higher bracket. If this does in fact happen, we extend our apologies to any shareholder who is so hit."

The Year's Results

But we feel sure that the great majority of our shareholders will prefer to have their dividend as early as possible, and so we have decided to do our very best to produce our accounts and hold our annual meeting in time for the final dividend to be paid in the current fiscal year, and we very much hope that we shall in future be able to adhere to this policy.

Our net profit at £2,674,776 is less by nearly £50,000 than last year, but this is much more than wholly due to the grievous burden of United Kingdom taxation. Our profit before taxation was indeed no less than £1,850,000 greater than that of last year, the great bulk of that increase being due to the growth of more than one and a half millions in our revenue from our Northern Rhodesian mineral rights.

From that profit before taxation of £8,309,930 there falls to be deducted £2,632,336 for Dominion income tax, nearly £600,000 more than last year. No complaint can fairly be made about that, since it is now over 20 years that our great revenues are so very substantially drawn.

But the burden of United Kingdom taxation grew by nearly £1,200,000 after allowing for Dominion relief, from £1,788,000 odd to £2,978,000 odd, and there is little indeed in the way of services rendered by our Government at home to our overseas undertaking to justify such a tribute as that.

The Government of the United Kingdom itself indeed seems to some small extent to have realized that there is something not quite right with a system which produces such results as that; and the Financial Times in its issue of February 9 has performed a public service in calling attention to the matter.

Commenting on a Treasury announcement that it will place £110 million a year on deposit with the International Bank until 1959 in order that it may be loaned for Colonial development, the Financial Times suggests that seeing that the Treasury's receipts from businesses operating in the overseas Empire must amount to far more than £110 million a year, there would be more sense in allowing those businesses to provide out of their own profits what they need for development than in allowing them, as a small palliative for the Treasury exactions, to queue up outside the doors of the International Bank.

A Paradoxical Arrangement

"Nor under a Government non-socialistic and supposed to favour private enterprise is there lacking any element of paradox in an arrangement under which the time and energies of public servants are used to deal with the Treasury's deposit in the International Bank while Somerset House are using other public servants to extract far larger sums from the savings of ourselves and other companies in this country engaged in Colonial undertakings."

"As it is, our net profit for the year under review amounts as I have said to £2,674,776."

"From our mining operations, which I shall return to in a moment, the other figures in our accounts need not detain us long."

"Our estates made a satisfactory profit of just under £80,000 as against a trifle over £24,000 last year."

"Our income from investments, interest and underwriting commission and interest on tax reserve certificates, at £1,268,411 exceeded by more than 50% last year's figure of £818,825. Our income from subsidiary companies shows a small increase, but our profits and losses on realization of investments at £19,932 show a substantial reduction from last year's figure of £2,200."

Mineral Rights and Related Costs

"On the other side, after again providing for the writing off of £100 in the figure of £1,000,000 at which our mineral rights were written down last year, our balance sheet is a figure which of course includes our valuation at all times the real value of our mineral rights. Assisted by the revenue drawn from them, our expenses of £297,797 show an increase of rather over £50,000 on last year's figure. This is due mainly to a general increase in costs of management, including such items as salaries, maintenance of offices and properties in Africa, and the like."

Balance Sheet Features

"Let us turn now to the balance sheet. I shall deal with the unappropriated profits in a few moments."

"As regards the reserve for United Kingdom income tax 1953-54, which has increased by nearly £1,000,000 compared with last year's figure, I think that I have said enough already. The increase in the figure of current liabilities at £63,227 from £4,733,941 last year is attributable only as to about £240,000 to creditors. The remainder of the increase, amounting to about £1,400,000, is due to taxation.

"On the other side the figure for fixed assets shows no very material change. The unclaimed dividend fund stands at £158,615, as compared with £14,204 last year, and there is only a small decrease in the figure for subsidiary companies.

Investments

"Our investments at £11,241,000 show the large increase of over £2,000,000 as compared with last year's figure. Quoted investments account for very nearly £1,600,000 of this increase. The market value of the quoted investments, just under £13,000,000 at the date of the balance sheet, reflects an appreciation of over £4,000,000 at that date. The latest figure which I have indicates that our quoted investments now show an appreciation over book value of about £3,400,000.

"When I last addressed you on May 29 last year our comparable figure showed an appreciation on quoted investments of just under £3,000,000, this having been a heavy fall in security prices between September, 1951, and May 1952, when I was speaking. This year's figure, then, is better than that by about £400,000, but it does reflect a fall of about £600,000 since the date of the last report for the year under review.

Wide Range of Mining Securities

"Our investments during that year have been partly in Rhodesian mining, but mainly in a wide range of South African mining investment companies. Here there has been a widespread all-round fall in market values, but the outlook for the Western Transvaal and Orange Free State properties is, we consider, such as to warrant good hopes of recovery and satisfactory future profits.

"Our unquoted investments at directors' valuation at or under cost at £2,359,516 exceed last year's figure by rather over £500,000, due mainly to loans to associated companies.

"Current assets at £7,707,857 exceed last year's figure by nearly £1,800,000 and cover an increase of nearly £1,000,000 in tax reserve certificates and nearly £600,000 in the balance at bankers and cash in hand.

Dividend Maintained

"You may remember when I last spoke to you, at the time last year I expressed the hope that dividends should remain what they were in, particularly in regard to the output and price of minerals from Northern Rhodesia, especially copper, we should be able for the year now under review to maintain our dividend of 6s notwithstanding that the excess profits levy on the average of the year now under review and of the present year will cost us something in the neighbourhood of £1,000,000 a year.

That anticipation has been approximately borne out, excess profits levy for nine months of the year under review having cost us £950,000. The output of Northern Rhodesian copper for the year amounting to 233,284 tons at an average price as calculated for our royalty purposes of £216 12s. per ton compares with an output for the year ended September 30, 1951, of 297,380 tons at a price for royalty purposes of £186 7s. per ton.

Zinc and Lead

"There has been a substantial fall in the value of zinc, and of output and value in the case of lead; but the importance of the figures for these minerals, though they are not negligible in themselves, is, for us, a minor matter as compared with the copper figures. And we are enabled, as I hoped, to propose a renewal of last year's dividend, while maintaining our policy of such modest distribution as will still enable us to build up a great body of long-term investments in Rhodesian and other South African enterprises, especially mining enterprises, such as may to some extent replace those in the 30 years which we still have left our Northern Rhodesian mineral rights, which must come to an end in 1980.

Copper Values

"For the year now current the average value of the Northern Rhodesian copper output has been £253 a ton. Output was diminished by strikes on the copper belt for the months of October and November last year, but is now proceeding at the rate of 25,000 tons a month, so that once more I feel able to express the hope that we shall be able to maintain our dividend in spite of the great burden of British taxation on which I have perhaps said enough already.

"But we must never forget that we can no longer rely on the permanent continuance of the present very high price of copper than experience has shown that we can rely on the permanence of peak prices for zinc and lead.

"For the year under review the maintenance of our 6s. dividend equal to 40s. per unit of stock or shares in 15s. will absorb, as last year, £1,379,779 leaving us with £1,204,997, as compared with £1,343,430 last year to add to our figure of unappropriated profits which will then stand at £4,614,537, as compared with £3,319,560 last year.

"I can again claim that we are maintaining our very strong position but this is a period of quite unprecedented high copper prices. And such are the burdens laid upon us that, as with ease of Alice in one of her adventures through the looking-glass, it is trying all the running we can do to get in much the same place.

The Federal Scheme

"During the year under review and so far during the year now current we have been living through a critically important period in Rhodesia from the political point of view. I refer, of course, to the scheme for federation of Southern and Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland which has been, and still is, the subject of so much anxious public discussion. For the moment it seems as though the issue for or against the federal scheme will turn mainly on the result of the referendum to be held in Southern Rhodesia on April 24, very soon now.

"This is not the time and place for political argument, and I will content myself with expressing the earnest hope that in the general economic interests of the great territories with which we have been so long and so intimately connected, and, not least, for the best interests of the native African peoples, the federal scheme may be safely brought to pass.

Mineral Rights Agreement

"To-day there is only one point in connection with the federal scheme to which I wish to draw your attention, and that is its effect on the provision in the formal agreement of September 14, 1950, between His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, the Northern Rhodesian Government and ourselves.

"The federal scheme, published as a White Paper (Cmnd. 8754) contains the following clause:

"Where immediately before the establishment of the Federation, Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom is bound by any written agreement affecting any territory or any rights exercisable therein, being an agreement under which that Government declares that it regards itself as responsible for securing the carrying out of the agreement by the Government for the time being of that territory, then the Government of the Federation will, so far as the matters dealt with in the agreement are within the executive or legislative competence of the Federation, be bound to observe the provisions of that agreement."

APRIL 2, 1953.

Our legal advisers assure us that the Mineral Rights Agreement, September 14, 1950, falls within the category of agreement described by [redacted] paragraph. The effect of this clause, therefore, when it is inserted in the [redacted] Constitution, will be to make our agreement binding upon the Federal Government in the same way and to the same extent as it is now binding upon the governments of the United Kingdom and of Rhodesia.

This I am sure you will agree, is very satisfactory and in accordance with the obligations of all parties concerned.

The report and accounts were unanimously adopted and the dividend of 40% was approved.

The retiring directors, the Duke of Abercorn, K.G., K.P., P.C., and Mr. A. Comar Wilson, were re-elected, and the other formal business having been duly transacted, the proceedings terminated.

Blantyre and East Africa Limited

Mr. J. W. E. Steedman's Review

THE FIFTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF BLANTYRE AND EAST AFRICA LIMITED was held at the company's offices, 2 Charlotte Square, Edinburgh, on Friday, March 27, 1953.

Mr. J. W. E. STEEDMAN, chairman of the company, had circulated to shareholders with the report and accounts ended September 30, 1952, a statement from which the following are extracts:

"During the early part of the season climatic conditions were favourable on all the tea estates with the exception of Limbuli, which experienced a continuation of a prolonged dry period with a severe effect on the output. As the season advanced, very wet and dull conditions were recorded on the estates, which adversely affected returns."

Tea Crop

"The company's total tea crop for the year amounted to 1,193 lb., compared with 2,063,372 lb. last year, a decrease of 144,136 lb."

"The tea gardens on all the estates were kept in good state of cultivation despite seasonal labour shortages."

"Abnormally heavy rains affected the tobacco crop during the growing season, and the amount of fired and cure-cured leaf delivered to the factory and purchased on the auction floor was 417,073 lb., a reduction of 85,039 lb. compared with the previous year. This is averaged out on a lower basis."

"The tung trees yielded an excellent crop of nuts, and the plantations were maintained in a satisfactory condition."

Marketing Difficulties

"The main factor operating against the company during the year, in common with the majority of tea companies was the severe and sudden recession in tea prices on the London auction market. The withdrawal of the subsidy, accumulation of low-grade stocks, and the maintenance of the tea ration all contributed to a situation which from March onwards completely altered the company's prospects in the year under review. To add to our difficulties, a shipping hold-up at Beira delayed the arrival of early tea consignments until after the market had slumped."

"The situation became progressively worse, and offerings on the London market were untenable or had to be withdrawn owing to unacceptable prices. Broken Ropes Hill prior to the set-back was averaging 2s. 6d. per lb. to 1s. 6d. per lb., and other grades were similarly affected. There was a slight recovery when the ration was increased in July, but thereafter prices again deteriorated."

"It had previously been arranged that the secretary, Mr. Alan Stark, visited the company's resources in Nyasaland shortly after the last annual general meeting. In consultation with the managing director he immediately informed, wherever possible a reduction in capital and estate expenditure, and a policy of finer plucking to improving the quality of the tea."

A Year of Anxiety

"The year has been one of great anxiety for the board, and the strain on the financial resources of the company has been reflected in the accounts now before you. There was a loss on the year's working, which, after taking into consideration the fall in Government securities amounted to £14,157. The accounts follow the usual plan, but no doubt you will notice that our cash resources are fully employed. Sundry debtors in Africa and Great Britain at £21,202, as against £5,374, are appreciably higher, but this amount includes proceeds of tea sales made prior to the end of the financial year and due for settlement at a later date."

"In view of the results, it is with much regret that the directors cannot recommend a dividend on the preference or ordinary shares of the company, for, although the balance sheet figures, considering the unfortunate year through which we have just passed, are not unfavourable, our available cash resources have been greatly depleted. Since the end of the company's financial year we have had to finance the present tea, tobacco, and tung crops, and there is a long interval before sale proceeds become available to the company."

"You will recall that the directors had formulated plans to make an issue of bonus shares to the ordinary shareholders of the company and will no doubt appreciate that in view of the situation which developed they had no option but to defer further consideration of the proposal."

Selective Plucking Policy

"It is very difficult to make any prophecy as to the future trend in the tea market, upon which much of our prosperity depends, except to say that by sacrificing quantity for quality we are now placing on the London market greatly improved teas, which are meeting a favourable reception from the buyers. Expenditure, both capital and revenue, is being kept at a minimum, and every endeavour is being made to run the estates as economically as possible commensurate with their well-being. It should be remembered, however, that selective plucking policy will have a suppression on the output and will raise the cost of production."

"The year has been one of stress and strain for our general manager, Mr. Rasmor, and the staff in Africa, and the directors are much indebted to them for their services in the interests of the company."

The report and accounts were adopted, and the retiring director, Mr. J. W. E. Steedman was re-elected.
