MATTERS OF MOMENT

THE NEED FOR DRAS TIC OVERHAUL of the machinery of Colonial government has frequently been stressed in these columns. It has been emphasized for years by such bodies as the Joint East African Board and the Association of Chambers of Commerce and Industry of Eastern Africa, and frequently in the Legislatures by non-official members of the various Councils. But, as Captain Peter Macdonald, M.P., writes in a letter quoted on another page, what has so far been done is "mere tinkering with a machine now creaking with age." With that opinion few, if any, of our readers will be at variance. Though they will find nothing in the letter which is not well known to East Africans, it provides a useful and timely summary of criticisms which have been made on many occasions. But its importance lies in the fact that the writer is Chairman of the Imperial Affairs Committee of the Conservative Party. He would not be likely to give prominence to these views unless he knew that they are in accord with the feelings of the members of that Committee, which has, of course, the readiest access to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, himself a Conservative. It is encouraging to think that this Committee may press for modernization of the machine when the tempo of Colonial development is to be greatly accelerated.

In such a matter the impetus must clearly come from the Colonial Office, partly because, as Captain Macdonald says, "local Governments will not acknowledge their inability to act with the speed and efficiency required" and partly because proposals for reform will be rejected by the Colonial Office until it can be persuaded that the need is general. Until that time arrives it will decline to sanction wise initiative on the part of one or more modern-minded territories, well knowing that other Colonies might thereby be encouraged to propose similar action. No one can deny that every able and devoted Chief Secretary is overworked and overburdened with routine. Again and again we have known Chief Secretaries say on their arrival in this country on leave in pre-war days: "Now I shall have the opportunity of thinking quietly about problems which I have wanted to tackle for years." It is unquestionably necessary, especially in the larger territories with more complex problems, to relieve these senior officers of purely routine functions which could quite easily be entrusted to others; and, in order to defeat that departmentalism and narrow-mindedness which are a constant war with efficiency, it is important to group departments dealing with cognate problems. This has been urged for many years upon the

Colonial Office Must Provide the Impetus

Governments, including in particular those of Kenya and Northern Rhodesia, but these and other Dependencies still produce frequent proofs of lack of co-ordination and overlapping, simply because they tolerate the half-cold system. The Secretary of State for the Colonies told Parliament some months ago that he hoped the new proposals for reform of the Colonial Services will be based that they will not be much longer delayed, for it began to take shape under Lord Howe nearly three years ago—and that it will provide the Colonial Empire with a much more efficient means of conducting its business. That word might, indeed, be the test. What is needed is a thorough businesslike organization for the great business of Colonial development and welfare.

Uganda's Ideas of Public Relations

Post-War Development Committee's Proposal by W. B. Birch

Advertising can be used wisely and well or miserably. In its best forms it is a direct, educational, inspired, or, in a straightforward commercial sense, well. It has been frequently abused, chiefly because in its economic technique it is a new and intricate science. In economics, particularly during this war, it has often been used wisely and to the general good of the community.

The word "advertising" makes all civil servants shudder. Yet, whether we like it or not, all the more respectable terms by which it is now the mode to denominate advertising—for example, publicity, public relations, and even propaganda—are in essence advertising, and founded upon the now established principles of advertising.

One of the easiest tests of the truth of this statement is to analyze the reactions of a Government official who, in general terms, condemns advertising. If he is a music lover, you will find that he has no objection to advertisements of concerts or new issues of classical records. If he is a book lover, he has no objection to advertisements of books, particularly when he happens to be the author. You will also find that in his private mind he is pretty certain that he can write a better advertisement than anybody else. All he objects to—and often quite rightly—are the same that childish appeals to credulity and fear upon which too much commercial advertising has in the past been based: There is tradition in this—because at heart the average official still thinks that commerce is something "not done," in the best circles, unless it is connected with the Stock Exchange or the heavy industries. And this despite the fact that if it were not for commerce the masses would have no income, and consequently there would be no taxes, and finally no "kitty" from which to pay official salaries.

Continuation of Objective

As an advertising practitioner, as a one-time resident in East Africa, it was therefore with interest that I read of Uganda's grandiose plans for a Public Relations Department, and your wise and trenchant comments thereon. To quote your own words, the Government of Uganda proposes to spend the best part of £1,000 a week for the next 10 years for the "projection and dissemination to the masses of the policy, plans, ideas and ideals of the social services departments of the Protectorate. The first task of the new Public Relations Department would, we are told, be to provide information

Mr. Birch, a former editor of the Uganda Herald, was afterwards editor of Advertiser's Weekly for some years, and is now managing director of Messrs. Colman, Prentiss and Vaux, Ltd., one of the leading advertising agencies in Great Britain. He therefore writes from an exceptionally wide experience. Our criticisms of the Uganda proposals appeared in our issue of 11th November.

tion to the people about world development and opinion.

In the same leading article you express surprise that such a plan should come from a committee which has a majority of non-officials. But why? Admittedly it is now 16 years since I was last in Uganda, but as a regular reader of ADP I can remember nothing which would lead me to think that the non-officials concerned know any more about the technique of modern advertising than the Colonial servants of the Crown with whom they were.

The aims set out in the Post-War Development Report of the Development and Welfare Committee of Uganda need no more than a slight modification to turn them unbiased, informative public relations work into what we now know to be that insidious evil—propaganda as practised by Fascist countries. What is the weakness here? Briefly, it is a confusion of objectives. It is common enough in commercial life. Far too much advertising is still concerned with advertising instead of with the best advertising practitioners nowadays consider first the product, then the policy, and lastly the advertising media and tricks of the trade by which the policy and the product shall be drawn to the attention of the public.

Directorship, Not Public Relations

Let us examine this confusion of issues in the Uganda report. The first object of the new department is "to continue to provide, but on an increased scale, information to the people about world development and opinion, especially with regard to that in the United Kingdom and the British Empire. This information must cover social development movements, scientific, educational, propagandist, political, economic, civic duties and general moral uplift." The second is "to provide to the world and the United Kingdom in particular, wide information about development and activities in Uganda."

The first objective, as you rightly point out, can never be the duty of an official department working through its own advertising body. Every piece of information that it issues will be as suspect as an article by Eschbells.

The basic error lies in imagining that one department can successfully handle both advertising of home goods to the home market (which is the objective of point one) and advertising to the export market (which is the objective of point two).

Next the report says that the department will act as a liaison between Government and people. It will be the medium whereby all Government departments, organizations and agencies should be expected to give the people ideas of causing their smooth working, after the reasons for them have been explained and understood. It is, of course, too late. The genius of Field Marshal Montgomery's handling of his armies was, as any soldier who has served under him will tell you, in the fact that he has laid down the principle that every fighting man shall know, for his own good, exactly what he has to do, and how he has to do it.

The approach of the Uganda committee to its public relations work shows too strict an adherence to the old Government policy of regulating first and pacifying afterwards. This is not public relations. It is dictatorship.

Other essential points are well brought out in the searchlight of your leading article. It is a criminal waste of public money for Uganda to act alone in this matter. Unless East Africa is, on the export side of the case, publicized as a whole, no tangible results can possibly be achieved.

A recent market research which I conducted showed that less than 10% of a mixed collection of the Allied Forces in this country knew where Uganda was. Incidentally, the sample had more than 60% of British subjects. The same sample showed that 90% of these questioned knew something about East Africa as a whole.

None of the Uganda Committee's objections to the work being done from an East African point of view against an Uganda point of view, convince me that it would not be possible to publicize East Africa and by departmentalization make such immediate service, as it is suggested would be urgently required from time to time, available to any particular territory or district. Indeed, the whole report favours of the parish pump.

It would be an impertinence to attempt to add to your valid criticisms of the proposed staffing. I am, out of touch now with the cost of living in East Africa, but even were I to suppose that I had an idea since I knew the territory after the last war, I can safely say that no men of the character, ability and sense of vocation required to carry out this great work, and which is likely to be obtained at the salaries scheduled for the respective posts.

Essentially, of course, if these affairs are in the main to be directed by Government officials transferred from other departments, then it will—lacking further action by the Governor of Uganda and his advisers in the matter of this report—be necessary to have questions asked in the House before half a million pounds of the taxes paid by citizens of the British Empire are poured down the drain.

An East African Looks Back Over 1944

Year-End Broadcast to East Africa by F. S. Joelson

IN THE SHORT TIME ALLOTTED FOR THIS TALK I cannot attempt a detailed review from the East African standpoint of the year which ends today. Since I must therefore select a few main topics, I have chosen those which appear of particular importance for the future.

It was as recently as the time of Dunkirk that the Imperial Government first provided five and a half million pounds a year for Colonial development, welfare, and research. Four years later, on D-Day, another enthusiastic Minister told the House of Commons that he had instructed all Colonial Governments to prepare long-range development programmes, for which he would ask Parliament to vote greatly increased funds. The King's Speech of this month foreshadows the generous fulfilment of that promise.

Since poverty has been a main cause of backwardness and lost opportunities in the Colonial Empire, the prospect of such larger grants will transform the outlook for most Colonies and enable many to plan comprehensively for the first time. East African Dependencies, for instance, have often spent unwisely because they could not afford the extra cost of better services, though they would have yielded more lasting results. Now all Colonies are to be relieved of that hand-to-mouth existence, on condition that they make much greater efforts themselves.

A New Colonial Outlook

Not less important than this new financial attitude is the greater measure of agreement between the political parties as to the true bases of Colonial progress. Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika will not readily forget that the closer union which is their destiny today would almost certainly have been a reality years ago but for an untimely general election in this country. That mischance is a standing reminder to East Africans of the way in which political differences in the metropolis may gravely prejudice the Colonies, and a warning to narrow those differences in the interests of development. We have shown the national conscience in activity.

The editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA was invited by the B.B.C. to give a year-end talk in last Sunday's "Calling East Africa" programme. The time allotted was 18 minutes. The text of the talk is given above.

aggravating conditions which were previously tolerated. While it demands social security at Home, it has brought such remarkable adjustments on Colonial matters, particularly during this year, that it is fair to speak of a new Colonial outlook.

For example, the Liberal Party's new statement on Colonial policy could be endorsed by any reasonable Tory or Labour M.P. or voter. No East African, whatever his politics, would have found fault with that admirable document, which represents a great advance.

Former Political Differences Dimmed

A still more remarkable case is that of the Fabian Colonial Bureau, which largely moulds the Labour view in Colonial affairs. The Bureau has not been friendly to white settlement and white leadership in East and Central Africa, but it said the other day through Mr. Creech Jones, its Chairman, and Dr. Hinden, its secretary, that Labour could no longer content itself with opposing closer union in East Africa and amalgamation of the Rhodesias, but must find a constructive reply to these proposals. Dr. Hinden even advocated the machinery of a common council and common services for adjacent Dependencies. That definition is near enough to the design for union which East Africans and Rhodesians have favoured for years—and which the Fabians have so consistently opposed. Here, then, is another important gain.

As to the Conservative Party, which has lately appointed a former East African, Mr. Gerald Savers, as its Colonial adviser, it has in recent months done what Socialists would have thought bold only a few years ago. For instance, it stands committed to the principle of the mass education of Africans, to the rapid expansion of Native provincial councils, and to the general introduction of trade unionism and minimum wages. A Conservative Minister, Colonel Oliver Stanley, has caused the first African to be nominated to the Legislature in Kenya and foreshadowed similar appointments in other territories. Uganda and Northern Rhodesia have seen the first posts of social welfare secretary and social welfare organizer, and Africans have now been made district officers in West Africa for the first time.

Thus are the former Colonial differences between the parties being dimmed. The main reason of this 1944 must have been, frequently since the marked changes that have occurred... Five years ago, even two or three years ago, only a small number of Colonials... by almost any M.P. would have been enough to indicate his party... Today it is quite common for Conservative, Liberal, and Labour members to present identical arguments, and to use the same phraseology... Why, Mr. Speaker, of the extreme left wing of the Labour Party, has there not become a more stout champion of the Colonies in Parliament and the Press?

Development in Progressive Parties

I do not want to exaggerate these encouraging trends, or suggest that there are not still serious shortcomings of opinion. Of course there are. But it is now possible to realize that our policy of home rule will stand comparison with the Colonial rule of any other Power... The fault was not that of neglecting to plant Colonies, but of developing them too little.

So people of all parties and of no party want Colonial development in progressive membership. Many are influenced by the splendid knowledge of the Colonies throughout the way and especially what we stood alone... a larger section of the public is moved by the conviction that slums are no more justifiable in the Colonies than in the cities of the United Kingdom. All are determined to attack ignorance and their ill-effects... that is why the present Secretary of State knows that he will carry Parliament with him however far he may go to devote more money for Colonial development and welfare.

Here, then, is a better foundation on which to build. While there is still misunderstanding, and almost an infinity of ignorance about the Colonies, there is a wider interest and a keener sympathy than ever before. The Rhodesians have been much quicker than East Africa to seize the chances offered by this change in opinion at Home, and their Information Offices have been much more efficient in capitalizing their opportunities... in East Africa that news is spread in the country... as is proved by the Colonial Office... which continues to knock into the hands of the poor material sent by the Colonial Office... Daily newspapers... will make room for Colonial news and good background stories—but not for profane and puff.

British Press No League against Kenya

Why do I state this point? Because no Colony has been more misrepresented than Kenya; because thousands of men in the Forces are planning to settle overseas on demobilization because continued failure to present Kenya's case properly and promptly may deprive the Colony of many ideal settlers; and because there is so much recent evidence from Kenya of misconceptions on this subject.

The British Press is not leagued together against Kenya. Thousands of journals are published in the country, and those which deliberately and consistently misrepresent this attractive country could almost be numbered on the fingers of one hand. The right man would have no particularly difficulty in making East Africa's case before the British public—but he must be the right man.

Practical action in regard to post-war settlement is also urgently needed. To my knowledge there is a steady flow of inquiries from Servicemen about making a livelihood in East Africa—the costs of living, medical and school facilities, and so on. The London office of the East African Governments can give these inquirers only partial, and therefore unsatisfactory, information. On some subjects it has no pamphlets, others are years out of date, and a number of men have told me that they have found the official statement about settlement in Kenya so unsatisfactory that they have gone straight across the street to the House of Commons to ask about settlement in Southern Rhodesia, which is presumably not what Kenya wants. Sir James he in East Africa, not with the London office, and decision and action are urgently required in Kenya in Africa, and Tanganyika, in order that they may not be lost.

The main obstacle to British settlement in Tanganyika has been the Mandate. It has not been a bogey after this war. A valuable symposium, the one published by the Royal African Society, on the question of the Mandates, has been published. The authorities consulted include former British members of the Mandates Commission, the first secretary-general of the League of Nations, and ex-Secretary of State for the Colonies. It is agreed that the Mandate Council should be abolished, and the Regional Colonial Councils should be set up to create means of inter-territorial collaboration.

Why not an East African Consultative Council? The Decision of the South African Council for the two Rhodesias and Nyasaland, with strong official representation, seems to me to give a better basis for the choice of a body in which non-official participation is equally necessary in the body which is supposed to fulfil similar functions in their territories. It has been the aim of the Government to set up such a Council, the East African Council has been described as an "obsolete system of the old-fashioned effort and overlapping." Why should it not be broadened to a fully representative East African Consultative Council preparing the way for a joint legislature?

I need do no more than mention other hopeful events. The appointment of new Governors to Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika, involving the return to East Africa of Sir Philip Mitchell, one of the ablest advocates of union of the territories.

- The election of Mr. Vincent to lead the European-elected members in Kenya.
- The experience which scores of thousands of the best Africans are acquiring in the Army, the Home Guard, the Air Force, and elsewhere.
- The United Nations Conference at St. Louis, which will undoubtedly benefit Colonial peoples.
- The adoption of a conference in Philadelphia, April, of minimum social standards for dependent territories.
- The long-range planning of development in the individual Dependencies in East Africa.
- The decision to extend Makerere College, Uganda.
- The formation of an Electors' Union in Kenya.
- And, not least, the recent establishment of such East African bodies as Christian Councils, a Youth Council, and a Race Relations Committee.

If it has often—too often—been my lot to criticize, I have still no doubt that 1944 has brought many solid reasons for encouragement. Believing that 1945 should be marked by even greater progress in many directions, I wish all East Africans a happy New Year.

Twenty Years Ago

From our issue of January 1924

The Duke of York [our present King] has been charged by a rhinoceros on his first big game hunt in Africa.

A sub-committee of the Chamber of Commerce has reported that the adoption of the mainland shilling currency would be advantageous to Zanzibar.

The proposal of Mr. Ormsby Clegg, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, that funds should be used to build a railway from the north of Lake Nyasa to the Central Railway of Tanganyika says plainly that Tanganyika is the central link of the chain, an essential and enduring part of our Eastern African Empire. Though not concerned with that object, it smashes the German hope of gaining possession of East African territory.

The War

East Africans Advancing in Burma

EAST AFRICAN TROOPS IN BURMA have passed through Pwintgaing and are now about nine miles to the south-east of it on the Shwegyi-Yeu road. This represents a gain of 42 miles since leaving Kalewa. The advance continues in the face of Japanese opposition.

Dry country is now being entered, with a rainfall only one-third of that in the Irrawaddy Delta. Hitherto some of the greatest difficulties have arisen from too much water. Now lack of water may be a problem at times.

The war correspondent of The Times on the Chinwin front telegraphed a few days ago:—

When Japanese forces defending the bunkers along a telegraph line track on the Indaingyi front were mortaring Uganda troops who were attacking it, a gibbon ape came out of the enemy position through the firing and joined the 11th East African Division. The troops took him, and he joined the mess.

He displayed an inordinate fondness for tea, which he drank with skill and relish from a tin. Tea is usually kept ready in special vacuum flasks holding a gallon, and the ape formed the habit of sitting down close to a flask and pumping up and down with his tin as soon as his tea was finished and he wanted more. He had another habit that was not so popular. An inveterate smoker, he began by sucking the ash of a cigarette to pieces to chew the tobacco, but he was at his best when somebody lit cigarettes for him. He sat up perkily and blew smoke rings through his nose with great expertness.

The gibbon was thoroughly battle-inoculated. He did not mind small steel, but whenever a mortar bomb or a shell burst, he dived under the nearest cover. He was rather sensitive and temperamental and hated to be injured; he looked reproachful at his tormentor and then went off by himself and sulked. He had been wounded in battle when he deserted from the Japanese army. He had a nasty gash under the neck, so he was evacuated with the rest of the battle casualties and became a patient at the Uganda field ambulance.

Colonel George Steer, who is reported to have been killed on Christmas Day in a motor accident in Burma at the age of 35, served as a war correspondent in Ethiopia at the time of the Italian aggression, wrote "Crusade in Abyssinia," and later "Judgment on German Africa," and other books. Joining the Army early in this war, he was attached for special duties with the Emperor of Ethiopia, whom he accompanied to the Sudan and then back to his own country. Steer was in charge of the propaganda work which helped to arouse the patriot forces against the Italians, and his book "Scaled and Delivered," gives a racy, first-hand account of the restoration of the Emperor. As his second wife he married the younger daughter of Sir Sidney Barton, former British Ambassador in Ethiopia, and Lord Chamberlain.

Lieut. Commander the Hon. John Michael Southwell, R.N., who has been killed in a flying accident, had served in the cruiser EMERALD in East African waters. He was the youngest of the three sons of the fifth Viscount Southwell, who died almost three months ago, and a brother of the present peer. He was 33 years of age.

Captain G. G. Locking, The Queen's Howards, is reported by the East Africa Command to have died from other causes.

Lieut. Alan John Scott, 4/4th King's African Rifles, of Southern Rhodesia, has been killed for action in Burma.

Lieut. Frank Dennis Allen, The King's African Rifles, of Southern Rhodesia, has died on active service in Burma at the age of 25, and served all through the campaign in Ethiopia, and was the youngest son of a member of the South African Parliament.

Flight-Lieut. Albert Edward Chappell was recently killed by lightning while cycling to Gwelo from Moffat as a courier.

Sergeant Major John Widdows, K.A.R., of Southern Rhodesia, has been killed in action in Burma.

Flight-Lieut. Donald MacGibbon, R.A.F.V.E., No. 15 Squadron, at Bulawayo, who was recently awarded the D.F.C., is reported missing and believed to be a prisoner of war. He commanded a flight of rocket-bombing Typhoons of the 2nd Tactical Air Force which was giving close support to the Canadians in Holland.

Company Sergeant-Major J. S. Brown, formerly of the Nyasaland staff of the African Staff Corporation, is reported missing while serving in Burma with The King's African Rifles.

Lieutenant Robert Stacey Wilsher, British South Africa Police, is reported missing as a result of operations in the Aegean at the end of October.

Awards

Brigadier Maurice Stanley Lush, C.B.E., formerly of the Sudan Political Service, has been awarded the C.B. in recognition of gallant and distinguished services in Italy.

Major Tom B. Hendrie, The Royal Tank Regiment, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Hendrie, of Bulawayo, was recently granted the immediate award of the D.S.O. He has served for four and a half years in the Middle East and latterly in Italy. He was wounded twice in 1942 and later mentioned in dispatches.

The D.F.C. has been awarded to Flying Officer Dudley Thomas Johnston, R.A.A.F., of No. 44 (Rhodesia) Squadron. The citation states that:

"In air operations this officer has displayed outstanding bravery, fortitude and devotion to duty, setting an example of the highest order."

Lieut. C. F. H. Cooper, of Southern Rhodesia, who has received the immediate award of the M.C., was formerly employed in Salisbury by the Rhodesian Printing and Publishing Company.

Flying Officer D. A. Beaton, who was born in Nyasaland, has been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for "fortitude, courage and devotion to duty on numerous operations against the enemy."

Rhodesian pilots are reported to be serving in an R.A.F. Spitfire wing operating from south-eastern England under the command of Wing-Commander Harold Brod Wilson, D.F.C. and Bar, whose 24 is one of the young pilots serving in R.A.F. squadrons such as operational flying.

Wing-Commander Ralph Newmarch, of Salisbury, now commands No. 14 (Rhodesia) Squadron of Bomber Command, which has recently been under the command of Wing-Commander F. W. Thompson, of Gwelo. Flight-Lieut. E. D. Colclough, a Northern Rhodesian, is the new adjutant of the squadron.

Brigadier G. I. Fisher, Military Governor of British Somaliland, was in this country in connection with the African Demobilization Committee in Nairobi, whose objects is to secure uniformity of procedure and arrangements for the demobilization of Army personnel (European, African and Indian). Brigadier Knott served in the Sudan for some years before his transfer to Nairobi (two years ago).

Brigadier R. D. S. Arandell, who is reported to have been revisiting Gwelo, became Chief, Civil Affairs, District in this area last some months. He is now in the Administrative Service of Tanganyika Territory at the outbreak of war, and after the occupation of Africa last year, he held the post of Deputy in that territory.

Colonel S. S. Durrant, who has been Chief Secretary of the British Military Administration in Eritrea, has left to take up a new appointment.

Demobilization

An announcement has been issued in Southern Rhodesia in regard to the demobilization of Rhodesians leaving in the R.A.F. It states that leave of absence outside the country will be the principal consideration, that every effort will be made to secure preferential passages for men and their families, that Southern Rhodesians will be demobilized in their own country, but that the Rhodesian authorities do not intend to raise any present objection to the posting of Rhodesians from R.A.F. stations in the United Kingdom for service in the Far East, since Rhodesians in the R.A.F. are attested as that force, and are liable to use any part of the world, irrespective of the period prescribed, four of them.

Non-official members of the Legislature of Tanganyika were outspokenly opposed in last week's debate to the appointment of a retired administrative officer as welfare officer whose duties would be mainly in connexion with demobilized war. There was emphatic insistence that the appointment should go to a young and vigorous man who has served in the firing line with these African troops.

Chapels as Camp Centres

"I believe that one of the main causes of our victory will be shown to have been the faith in God of our King and Queen and so many of our war leaders," said the Bishop of Uganda in a recent broadcast talk to East Africa. Bishop Stuart added:

"I have now had two visits to East African troops in the Middle East. I spent nearly two months with them while we were being driven back to El Maktah in the summer of 1942. During that time I became most plain to me that for the African Christians God is real. On my way to England recently I spent another short visit with them, and was thrilled to see how they had developed and how well they are doing."

"These years in the Army have done much to raise their whole conception of life, as well as their standard of living. They have good and well-kept chapels, which are quite literally the centres of spiritual life of the padres, European and African, and the parish catechists and leaders, usually chosen by themselves, are their natural leaders."

"The African in the Army is developing. He is developing mentally under the care of the excellent Education Corps, physically under the best circumstances of army life, and spiritually as he finds God to be with him at all times and in all places."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The "Nandi Bear" Described

A Reply to Major Howard Williams

In the issue of November 30 appeared an extract from the B.B.C. programme ("Traveller's Tales" series) of Sunday, November 11. I listened to this particular broadcast with a sense of mounting irritation because of the lack of the intelligence of the knowledgeable (a) the carelessness of the B.B.C. in not verifying easily verifiable statements, and (b) the error of Major Howard Williams. The letter broadcast from Major Howard Williams, in the Kenya Colony, was correctly described as "a villain's tale". Not the knowledge of the truth may seem of so much value in a situation of this real world.

In the letter it appears that Major Howard Williams claims to be "the man who first started the story of the Nandi bear" in Kenya 30 years ago, i.e., 1914. The truth is that the fable was current in British East Africa (now Kenya) at least 24 or even more years prior to 1914, and evidence to that effect is recorded.

It will never be known who first heard from the Nandi of the existence of a strange creature which became known as the "Nandi" and mythical "Nandi bear". Not is that really relevant. What is relevant is that no such creature has been proved to exist in reality.

The late Walter Hayes, then D.C. at Kapso City, told me the story of the alleged "Nandi bear" when I visited his home at the end of 1904; he said he had heard from the Nandi of this fabulous creature at intervals during 1900-02. He told me that it was known to the Nandi as a chimuel, chemoset, kateit or gereit (with their somewhat hazy description of the beast suggested a bear-like animal). He referred to the "Nandi bear" when speaking of this alleged new species of fauna. Like many other old-timers I heard somewhat similar stories from the Natives between 1904 and 1909. The late A. Blayney Percival also told me in 1907 what he had heard of this strange beast; he recorded the data long afterwards in "A Game Ranger's Note Book" (1924).

From 1910 onwards the legend of the "Nandi bear" constantly received enhanced notoriety, and the range of the curious beast became more widely extended (Uganda, Ruanda, and the southern part of the Belgian Congo). It also received diverse Native labels, as well as being endowed with contrary habits and characteristics.

In 1914 (or perhaps 1915), Miss Clara Buxton, a settler at Kedowa, in Kenya, trapped and killed a persistent sheep-raider which the local Natives insisted was a "Nandi bear"; and the culprit proved to be no other than a common spotted hyena. Every skin and spoor-sketch of the alleged "Nandi bear" submitted for expert examination was that of a common spotted hyena.

Captain J. E. Tracy Phillips and Captain (now Lieut.-Colonel) C. R. S. Pitman were successful in 1930, after patient and prolonged investigations, in satisfying the zoologists at the British Museum (Natural History) that the alleged "Nandi bear" was no other than a common spotted hyena or, possibly an outsize of that species. One would have thought that this exposure might have sufficed to put paid to the account of this alleged beast, but, like the myth of the "elephant country", the fable will apparently continue to be resurrected at intervals.

All the sources of information have been from African Natives; a most unreliable fountain of knowledge concerning zoological subjects. I believe there is no record in East African literature of any European ever having seen the alleged "Nandi bear" dead or alive.

If Major Howard Williams had that unique experience, has he admitted it publicly during these 30 years? (If so, can any of your readers give me the reference?). Incidentally, in his letter he referred to the Masai G. hu (Kalenjin as an animal which he had seen 20 years ago (1924) but many old-timers had named the fable before that date. I did so with the Roosevelt expedition in 1900, and the South Africa in 1901, and in the district during 1903. The township of Eldoret was established in 1902 or possibly somewhat earlier.

Yours faithfully

W. ROBERT FORAN

Famine Should be Abolished

TO THE EDITOR OF EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

It is a fact that famine, when the total famine should be banished once and for all from the East African continent.

Surely it is not beyond the scope and power of the Colonial Research Committee to delve into the scientific side of food storage, review what has been or is being done in other countries, including tropical and sub-tropical Colonies, which on occasions suffer from food shortages, and suggest remedies of a practical or experimental kind for immediate application by local Governments.

Perhaps it is not out of place to remind your readers that a sum of no less than £500,000 a year is granted by the British Parliament for Colonial famine research. Matters affecting health and food should surely have first priority on the list of endeavours of the Research Committee.

Yours faithfully

Machinery of Government

The Need for Drastic Overhaul

CAPTAIN PETER MACDONALD, M.P. wrote to The Times a few days ago:

The question arises of the form of machinery which should be made possible by a change in the present system. This will mean a large-scale re-organisation by Colonial Administrations, and if the same is voted by Parliament it will be necessary to re-organise the machinery of Colonial Administration, and to require drastic overhaul, especially in larger Colonies.

The present system dates from a time when Administration was rough and ready and problems were less complex. Under the Colonial Secretary, the Governor and a panel of lieutenants, is the main, often the sole, channel of approach to the Colonies. In addition to advising on major policy and giving decisions on important matters, he has to deal with a mass of routine papers, and is necessarily overworked. He has little time to study important issues or to take decisions and to refer to other departmental heads. The Government, however, has to be kept in touch with the distribution of work between the Governor and his Colonial Secretary, and is merely ordering new machinery now creaking with age. New times demand new machinery, and what is wanted is a reorganisation of the departmental system, redistribution of functions, and delegation of powers.

A survey of the main departmental activities of government shows that, generally speaking, they can be grouped under the headings of finance and economic, social services, communications, defence, and development. The first step, therefore, seems to be to group the departments under these five main headings, and to give each a clear-cut function. For example, the agricultural, veterinary, land, forest and mines departments are all concerned with development, and the urban and rural planning departments, of course, consultation of the various administrative departments, but they still function too much in an overlapping and overlapping manner, so that departmental jealousies and overlapping activities are apparent. There is, in fact, a confusion where there ought to be holy matrimony.

Grouping of Departments

Under a grouping system each department would remain an entity under its own technical head, but at the head of the group would be a secretary responsible for general policy and for exercising some powers now reserved to higher authority. He would act as spokesman for the group in the legislature and have direct access to the Governor. He would, in short, function much as a Minister does at home, like him, he need not necessarily have technical knowledge, but should be a first-rate administrator. Such an arrangement, moreover, has the advantage that, when the times come for a Colony to be granted a measure of self-government, the official secretaries could be replaced by Ministers with a minimum of disturbance to the machinery.

This change would doubtless meet with opposition from technical officers, though with no good reason if comparisons are made with the Home Civil Service, where the permanent secretaries in departments like the Post Office, and the Ministry of Education, are appointed to a secretarial office, and from appointment to a secretarial office, showing the necessity of administrative ability. Such departments as could not conveniently be grouped would come under the heading of the Colonial Secretary, whose principal task, however, would be to act as consultant and co-ordinator, rather than on the lines of a Minister without portfolio. There would thus be four or five secretaries who, with the Colonial Secretary as business in-charge and such non-official members as might be appointed, would form the Cabinet or Executive Council. Together they should constitute a team capable of planning and executing development. Unless the present "bottleneck" is widened some extremely unbusinesslike waste of resources will be launched too hastily, with resultant waste of funds.

The impetus to reorganise must come from the top, since local Governments will not acknowledge their inability to deal with the speed and efficiency required. Colonel Stanley, who has earned the gratitude of the Colonies for his persistent advocacy of their needs, has the courage and vision to see that the machinery is brought up to date.

[Editorial comment appears under Matters of the Day.]

Memorandum
I have recently reported that the Ministry of Food had offered to buy matoram in Kenya. Our latest information is that there are only two or three growers, with very small acreages. So far as we know, there has been no export of the product, which is used in the flavouring of sausages.

Kenya Association

Mania for Social Planning

The report for November of the Kenya Association states:

A well-known anthropologist, now with the forces, who before the war was engaged in research in Kenya and with it a hope that the Peter of Kenya had his work, writes:

Kenya first suggested to me that the Government was tending towards a policy of constant change.

(1) Society is never static, but is in constant change. The Government are endeavouring to improve the controlled by financial and the agencies (legislative, administrative, etc.) of organized social welfare.

(2) Changes are attributable to obscure forces being on independently of human will and largely uncontrolled and uncontrollable by it (e.g. population changes, changes of taste, fashion, social convention, etc.).

(3) Leadership and authority tend to come from the top and are not really aware of the extent to which they are dependent on the masses.

(4) The Government for social planning is in a quandary, what the answer is, it is difficult to say, except widespread, constant and detailed research to improve the efficiency of the official mind, and to be sure that the changes are for the better.

(5) In the Colonial sphere the juxtaposition of the various races tends to about 1/3 and 2/3, so to speak. The tension and conflict in Kenya are symptoms of the increased pressure, as it were, in a narrow-minded and narrow imagination of trying to put the pieces on 1/3 and not on 2/3 very well.

(6) The Government (and the political activities of the people) were really to use skilled and knowledge of the past could be (by full use of the contemporary skill of the world) could be stepped up to 1/3 and so be a bit ahead of 1/3.

(7) The principal components of 1/3 are (a) intensive research in all political, economic and racial aspects of difficulties, (b) long-headed and fundamentally liberal-minded administration, and (c) an immense effort by the responsible leaders to plan and act in the spirit of 1944, not with a hangover from 1933.

The House of Commons has set up machinery capable of securing that money is spent only on objects for which it was voted, but has not devised satisfactory permanent machinery to secure the economy in that expenditure. Any Select Committee set up by the House itself, is likely to be trapped by the firm in which it enters or associates are presented to the House. — Select Committee on National Expenditure.

The total invested in war savings is the vast sum of £170,000,000, equivalent to £35 for each of these five years for every man, woman and child in the United Kingdom. — Lord Kitchin, Chairman of the National Savings Committee.

A suspicious circumstance is that a famous Viennese dermatologist was recently awarded a high order by the Emperor for meritorious service to science. Undoubtedly this surgeon has his hands full attending the fit-too-well-man faces of leading statesmen. — The Third Reich.

Millions of uniforms can be recycled and converted for distressed Europe. Many English tabs were inserted. It would be the best of advertisements. Almost every house in the country has a uniform of some sort doing nothing. Why must Yorkshire looms be employed on sending out shoddy stuff, which English people will not buy to those countries which are short of clothing? — Mr. A. H. Anderson.

As soon as hostilities in Europe finish we could invite over here the parents, wives or sweethearts of all those American wounded whose injuries are such that they cannot be sent back to the States. There would not be an excessive number, and the cost to the Exchequer would not be prohibitive. The essence of the gesture would be, of course, that they would come as guests of the British people. — Sir Arthur Evans, M.P.

A great section of the Germans has been schooled in barbarism, and still greater numbers have acquiesced in the perpetration of crimes against humanity. We cannot acquit the German and Japanese peoples of all responsibility. It is just and right that they should make what reparation and restitution is possible. It is madness to expect the Germans and Hitler Youth will suddenly turn into good, peaceful citizens and democrats. — Mr. Attlee.

The city of Westminster had 1,954 alerts and 1,393 air raid incidents in the first five years of the war. High explosive bombs caused 1,071 incidents, mines 11, oil incendiary bombs 94, and flying bombs 10. — Mr. L. R. McColvin, Westminster City Librarian.

Colonial Development Planning

Sir Frank Stockdale, for the past four years Controller for Development and Welfare in the West Indies, has been appointed to the new Colonial Office post of Director of Colonial Planning, and will take up his duties in April.

He was Agricultural Adviser to the Secretary of State from 1934 to 1940, Vice-Chairman of the Colonial Advisory Council on Agriculture and Animal Health throughout that period, and Chairman of the East African Agricultural Cashes since 1931.

He has travelled widely in East Africa, and has had exceptionally wide experience of the planning and execution of colonial development and welfare projects of all kinds, large and small.

Maj. Christopher Holland-Martin

Major Christopher J. Holland-Martin is on the point of leaving England for East Africa to take up the duties of private secretary to Sir Philip Mitchell, the new Governor of Kenya.

Born in 1910, the son of the late Robert Holland-Martin, C.B., Chairman of the Southern Railway, and Mrs. Holland-Martin, of Overbury Court, Worcester-shire, he was educated at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, then went into the City and a member of the London Board of Marine Bank.

Commissioned in the Royal Engineers (Territorial Army) in 1939, he served in this country until March, 1940, when he was forced to resign on account of ill health. A few months later he was re-commissioned and attached to the War Office, and at the beginning of 1941 he went to New Zealand as A.D.C. to the Governor-General, later he became Military Secretary and Comptroller, and held those offices until early in 1944 when he returned to England. He was at the War Office from June until last month.

Obituary

Mr. James A. Findlay

MR. J. A. FINDLAY, who died last week at the age of 60, had for many years been connected with Messrs. Rows, White and Co., Ltd., for whom he had undertaken the secretarial and agency duties in connexion with a large group of sisal and rubber estates in Ceylon, Malaya and Sumatra.

During the war, in association with Mr. Walter Schoeller, the late Johann Franz, and Mr. Alfred Wigglesworth, he became connected with a number of sisal estates in Tanganyika Territory, notably the Ambou, Kikwetu and Ruvu plantations. By influencing the boards of the Lewa and Kamna companies which had been engaged in rubber growing in German East Africa to invest in these sisal estates, he was instrumental in enabling them to pay dividends which would not have been earned from the production of rubber.

Mr. Alfred Wigglesworth writes:—
Findlay was well known in the City to a large group of printers and business men, and his integrity and affable, kindly way endeared him to many. He made no enemies. No difficulty ever caused him any perturbation, as he went calmly on his way during the terrific ups and downs of rocking commodity markets. Few knew that he was a keen musician and had composed an opera. His daughter inherited a taste for music, and is a distinguished violinist. Her mother died many years ago, but is survived by his son, Philip Findlay, of Princes Risborough.

Findlay was active until the end, and had arranged to attend a meeting on the very day of his death. He will be greatly missed by his business and private friends.

Mr. Oscar Kaufman

WE REGRET to report the death in Cape Town some weeks ago of Mr. Oscar Kaufman, one of the best-known business men in Southern Rhodesia, and a past President of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of Rhodesia and of the Bulawayo Chamber of Commerce. He was modest, kindly, but rather practical, and gifted with a keen sense of humour, and he had been a generous supporter of many good causes.

Born in Rumania in 1885, he arrived in Rhodesia when only 12 years of age, and had lived there ever since, except for a few years spent in the country as a buyer for the wholesale trading house of C. Salomon. He married Miss Rebecca Salomon in 1910, was admitted a partner in 1921, and the estate of the firm was then changed to C. Salomon and Kaufman, which it became Kaufman and Sons and Kaufman.

Mr. Kaufman, who always took a keen part in public affairs, had served on the governing bodies of public organizations, engaged in social, political, and commercial affairs, and he was for many years President of the Hebrew Congregation of Bulawayo.

He was a member of the Economic Development Committee which in 1940 produced a broad-minded and businesslike report, and he had served on other commissions and committees concerned with economic matters. He was Chairman of the Commerce Section of the Rehabilitation Committee for Metropolitan Rhodesia, and thus bore the chief responsibility for planning the re-absorption of Servicemen into business life in the Colony.

He is survived by Mrs. Kaufman and three sons, Major Ivan Kaufman, Captain Roland Kaufman, and Captain Basil Kaufman.

Et Saged Ajeel Mahdi, one of the two remaining sons of the Mahdi, recently died in Omdurman at the age of 61.

Mr. Alexander Birnie, of Selukwe, who has died at the age of 72, had spent 40 years in Southern Rhodesia.

The death is announced of Mr. G. H. Oldfield, from 1903 to 1934 secretary of the British Cotton Growing Association.

Mr. Anhur Rubidge, Peaceke, whose death in Southern Rhodesia is reported, had been in the Colony for 46 years.

Miss Marguerite Clarkson was recently killed at Penhalonga by falling over the Mozzi Falls, a drop of about 250 feet.

Dr. Edmund Solow, a medical officer in Bechuanaland, was recently killed when a rifle in his baggage accidentally went off. Dr. Solow, who was 24 years of age, was born in Bulawayo.

Mr. Charles Harris, whose death in Glasgow in last year is reported, was formerly employed by the British South Africa Company and the Southern Rhodesian Public Works Department.

Mr. C. Cairns, who died recently in Southern Rhodesia in his 71st year, had lived at Meikle's Hotel, Salisbury, ever since it was built. He first reached the Colony in 1899. For many years he had practised as an accountant.

Mr. William T. Bevan, J.P., Cardiff's oldest magistrate, who died last week at the age of 82, had always been greatly interested in East Africa, which he visited some years ago. He had been in the Colony for 46 years and at the age of 72 made an aerial tour of this country to urge the air training of boys.

Mr. Robert Craig, who has died in Ndola, served with Grenadier Guards in the Nile Expedition of 1908, through the South African War, the South West African campaign of 1914-15, and then with the 2nd Rhodesia Regiment in German East Africa, being wounded in the attack on Latetia Hill. He was afterwards a stock inspector in Barotseland for some years.

Native Tradesmen in the Army

In the course of an interesting article in the Fortnightly on "Native Military Development in East Africa," Mr. Russell Swallow writes:

General Sir William Platt, during the recent operations of the King's African Rifles, was Commander in Chief in East Africa. In the past the Division had been made solely between Swahili, Nyanja and Somali-speaking troops. Now, wherever practicable, each battalion is recruited from one Colony, and all units have been numbered accordingly. Besides simplifying the military problem, this system has advantages for the African. The young soldier is welcomed once into a file that includes many members of his own tribe. New bonds are forged between troops from the same area. In Tanganyika men here, the askari of a former province, are being expanded to embrace more important communities.

Members of all the 70 classes of tradesmen in the African Command in motor-car and lorry driving, Africans of all different tribes have shown great aptitude. Their main failing is over-confidence, but the steady level-headed man makes a fine driver. As in everything, he is a born imitator. A few weeks in a driving school, some practice on the open road, and he is set to drive in convoys. Mechanics present harder problems. About 12,000 Africans from Kenya alone have learnt to drive, nearly half have passed first or second class, a demanding mechanical knowledge.

Clerks, welders, cartographers, butchers, electricians, carpenters: the list is almost unending. The Native Artificers Training Depot at Kabete alone turns out over 1,000 tradesmen every month. In the lower grades nearly all have been trained from the outset. Army leaders have learned that the unteachable African is a myth.

Mission Work in Ethiopia

It is recently reported that foreign missionaries were henceforth barred from working in areas of Ethiopia which are inhabited mainly by adherents of the Coptic Church.

The Catholic Herald has written that since in future the Ethiopian Minister of Education will be in command of a Commission on Missions, and he will have to control the entry of missionaries and to design the official areas.

It is not clear who seem to be responsible for these regulations. The first is the rather unexpected association of Catholic missionary activity with the Italian rite. The Italian treated the Ethiopians very harshly, exiled the Coptic Patriarch and tried to liquidate the Coptic Church. However careful the Church authorities may have been, it is probable their apostolic work from Italian imperialism would not have impressed the Ethiopians. The British, another prominent example of the consequences of their own war, following imperialist steps.

The second influence is the Ethiopian interest in its own dissident Coptic (or Ethiopian) Church. The Emperor himself is said to be interested in Catholics of the Eastern Rite, but his advisers are strongly opposed to any such national Church. At present about half the population of the country belongs to the Ethiopian Church and about half is Muhammadan or pagan. Catholics are a tiny minority, about 20,000 of the Latin rite and about 30,000 of the Ethiopian rite.

Hostel for Coloured Seamen

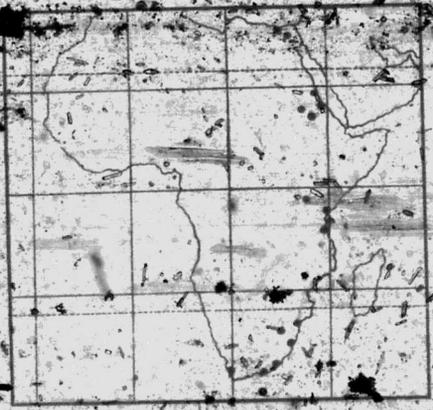

When the Secretary of State for the Colonies recently opened Colsea House, Liverpool, as a hostel and club for coloured Colonial seamen, he said that the scheme, sponsored by the Colonial Office, had cost about £10,000. He commended the public spirit of the Liverpool proposal to establish a permanent coloured community centre (which is to be called Stanley House), and mentioned that more Colonial merchant seamen use that port than any other in Great Britain.

Ducks Reduce Bilharzia

Dr. Alan Mozley, who has done so much research on bilharzia in Southern Rhodesia, has urged all Rhodesian farmers to keep ducks (preferably not Muscovies), since they eat bilharzia snails and those that carry the liver fluke of cattle.

Questions in Parliament

Settlement in Tanganyika

Text of Governor's Statement

BEFORE THE HOUSE OF COMMONS TOBY for the Christian Mission, Mr. C. S. Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he could make any statement regarding the proposals for creating non-Native settlement in Tanganyika, and what any steps were being taken to implement the Tanganyika Development Report of 1940.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies replied: "I have not found a permission. I will circulate in the Official Record any statement made by the Governor of Tanganyika on the subject of non-Native settlement. In his address to the Legislative Council on December 7, 1944, the Post-War Planning Committee in Tanganyika is now engaged in framing a comprehensive programme, with the Development Report of 1940 as a basis, in so far as it is applicable in the circumstances of today."

Following is the statement: "In December, 1939, Sir Mark Young in a statement before the Legislative Council laid down certain principles which guided the policy of the Government at the time of the expansion of non-Native settlement. As I have already stated on a previous occasion, these principles continue to guide the policy of this Government. They provide that while no limits necessarily imposed by factors such as the available land and labour supply, the encouragement of non-Native settlement should be regarded as an integral part of the plans for advancement of the general prosperity of the country, subject always to the condition that the highest settlement in view is such as to give a reasonable assurance of being economically successful and contributing to the general development of the Territory."

"The Central Development Committee, reporting in 1940, accepted non-Native settlement as a central feature in the consideration of the wide schemes of development put forward in their report. What that Committee had in mind, to use their own words, was 'the encouragement of settlement by non-Natives who are prepared to accept the general policy of steady advancement on the standards of living of all inhabitants, not only their own'."

Potent Influence of White Settlers

It is the view of the Government that successful settlement by non-Natives on these lines would provide one of the most potent influences in helping to raise the standards of African life. It goes without saying that all plans for the expansion of non-Native settlement must be conditioned by a scrupulous regard for the rights and interests and the fundamental needs of the African population and must make due provision for the potential development of possible new types of African land settlement.

"War conditions have prevented progress in the pursuance of this policy for the past five years, but, with the approaching termination of the war in 1945, the measures which should be taken to investigate further the possibilities of settlement of this kind have now come into view. The possibilities of success in non-Native settlement must clearly depend to a considerable extent on post-war conditions, all of which cannot yet be clearly foreseen. Many of them will be affected by factors lying outside the scope of local action. It is apparent, however, that whatever these conditions may be, preliminary steps should now be taken to set up an organization in this country which will make the fulfilment of this policy possible as soon as peace returns."

The Post-War Planning Committee has recommended the setting up of a Land Settlement Board and the appointment of a land settlement officer, and steps are now being taken to give effect to these recommendations. A land settlement officer has actually been appointed.

Furthermore, sub-committees of the Post-War Planning Committee have been set up for the areas most likely to be affected and have been asked to investigate and report on the availability of suitable land for non-Native settlement and to give such details as are possible as to the areas available, the nature of the country, water supplies, accessibility to markets and other factors affecting the suitability of the land for settlement. They have also been asked to report on the availability of land for special types of non-Native settlement. These inquiries are not yet complete.

They will be coordinated and continued by the Land Settlement Board, whose first task will be to assess the suitability of the land available for the purposes in view, within a wide range of the main transport systems of such extensions of that system as may be found feasible, and to report on the conditions under which it may be hoped that such settlement could be established with a good prospect of success as a contribution to the economic development of the country. The Board would also be asked to report on the number of persons for whom accommodation could be found in the available areas.

"Another aspect of economic success and of development which will contribute to the general prosperity and welfare of the Territory are essential conditions in the fulfilment of this policy, and it is apparent that the expansion of non-Native settlement on sound lines must be gradual. Any attempt to force the pace regardless of the availability of markets, labour supplies, and other conditions which together make up what might be termed in this connexion the absorptive capacity of the country, would involve the grave risk of economic failure which would be disastrous to the future of the Territory."

"It must also be clearly understood that the Government could be justified in providing special financial assistance to settlers, particularly so as to ensure the admission of suitable settlers who are not otherwise likely to be attracted. If sufficient capital, there could not be any question in Tanganyika of continued subsidization of any non-Native settlement, which assistance proved to be uneconomic."

Mr. C. S. Jones asked what progress was being made in Kenya in encouraging Africans to grow coffee, and whether any organization had yet been set up whereby coffee produced in the Native reserves could be improved to a quality equal to that produced by Europeans and sold safely under the Kenya

General Stanley: "I would refer to the statement of the hon. Member for the English Channel on December 13, to which I have at present nothing to add. It is a matter for regret that the sufferings of the population of sufferers from leprosy in the Colonies were treated in leprosy settlements."

General Stanley: "In those Colonial territories where the disease has the largest incidence only a small proportion of the sufferers are in settlements. The policy generally followed is one of voluntary as opposed to compulsory segregation, and it is encouraging that in certain territories a stage has now been reached when considerable numbers are being discharged annually from such settlements with the progress of the disease arrested, and returned to their villages under observation."

Medical Aid to Ethiopia

Mr. Cress Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he was aware that the Society of Friends Ambulance Unit, which had been providing three-quarters of the medical personnel of Ethiopia, recently gave that Government notice of its intention to withdraw because of the increasing difficulties of operation, shortage of drugs, fuel, personnel and inefficiency in Government administration; and whether, in view of the resignation of approximately 13 of the 30 British subjects who accepted appointments in 1942 as advisers to the Ethiopian Government, further steps were being taken by His Majesty's Government to help forward the health and development of Ethiopia.

Mr. Eden: "Understand that the Friends Ambulance Unit provides about half the European medical personnel at present in Ethiopia, and that their intention not to withdraw from Ethiopia was fully aware when they first arrived in Ethiopia at the end of 1942 was to remain in that country for one year only pending the organization of Ethiopian medical services. The Unit has now given its devoted services for two years, and the Society of Friends now feel that they should be free to discuss their future."

As regards the health and development of Ethiopia, these are matters for the Ethiopian Government. His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have, however, an obligation to assist the Ethiopian Government in obtaining the service of British subjects whom they may wish to employ in a medical or any other capacity, and in the course of the negotiations for the replacement of the staff of 1942. His Majesty's Government have offered help calculated to promote the health and development of the country."

Sir S. Lyle asked the Secretary of State whether he was aware that the rates of salaries in London were higher than many Native salaries could afford.

General Stanley: "Colonial members of the Forces who visit London are accommodated in the ordinary Service hostels and institutions. In addition, there are three special hostels which cater for their needs. The charges at these institutions range from 1s. 8d. to 1s. 10d. a night for ordinary accommodation, including bath, and from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. a night for more superior accommodation, such as single rooms and cubicles, including bath and breakfast. In addition to their Service pay and allowances, colonial members of the Services—other ranks only—who spend their leave in the United Kingdom receive a special leave allowance of 5s. a day whilst on leave. This allowance, granted in circumstances where ration allowances is not feasible, is for the purpose of helping to assist them to meet their extra expenses whilst on leave in the United Kingdom. It has no reason to believe that they find it difficult to meet the modest charges of the institutions to which they are referred, and I am satisfied that their living conditions in London compare favourably with those of other Servicemen. These and other matters concerning colonial members of the Forces have been, and will continue to be, closely watched in consultation with the Service Department."

Effect of the War on Kenya

"THE war has done much more than bring Kenya temporary prosperity. It has brought us into much more closer personal contact not only with our immediate neighbours, but with the Rhodesias and Nyasaland, the Belgian Congo and the Union of South Africa," said Sir Henry Moore in a mediatory speech to the Legislative Council of Kenya.

"We have welcomed troops from all these territories within our borders, and we have seen from the other fellow's point of view. Through we are now in an operational area, questions of supply and production, as well as those of African manpower, are still largely dealt with by the Ministries of Home or an East African basis. The activities of the East African Production and Supply Council and of the Government Commission are therefore all making for a closer solution of our common problems. Under the stress of war all our energies have been directed to a common objective. Local and inter-racial rivalries have in some measure been subordinated to the realization of our common war aims. But when these war-time pressures have come to an end the path of peace may prove even more perilous than that of war unless these prejudices and rivalries can be dissolved. Their dissolution will call for the exercise of high qualities of statesmanship, tolerance, and mutual goodwill on the part of all races."

"These qualities are part of our heritage as Englishmen, which it has always been our pride to cherish and maintain. It is by their exercise that Kenya can prove her fitness to play her full part in shaping the future destinies of East Africa."

The Union has now decided to nominate a large farmer in the constituency as an Independent Conservative. Colonel Sandeman Allen has been for many years a member of the Executive Council of the Joint East African Board, and recently paid a brief visit to East Africa on Army business.

Kenya Co-operative Creamery

At the recent annual general meeting of the Kenya Co-operative Creamery, Ltd., Captain E. C. Lang said that Mr. Geoffrey S. Hunter had become secretary of the company in 1925 when there were fewer than 50 members, whereas the membership had now reached four figures. It was decided to tender a presentation to Mr. Hunter on his departure to become London manager of Messrs. Dalgety & Co., Ltd. The new secretary is Mr. Arthur M. Green.

Sudanese Nationality

The Egyptian Pflme Minister, Ahmed Maher Pasha, has announced that when the Government learned that the Sudan Government was considering the issue of a statement on Sudanese nationality, he telegraphed to Sir Hubert Huddleston, Governor-General of the Sudan, asking that no decision be made before an agreement had been reached between the two countries. The Governor-General replied that the question of nationality was not under examination, and that any legislation regarding the question would require the consent of both the British and Egyptian Governments. Aly El Barei, a Sudanese candidate in the Egyptian general election, withdrew his name last week, saying that his decision was dictated by the high politics affecting the unity of the Nile Valley.

Medical Aid for Employers

A Representative Council of Medical Aid Societies has been formed in Southern Rhodesia, where Mr. N. A. Philip recently appealed to Chambers of Commerce, Industries and Mines, the National Farmers' Union, and other bodies to cooperate in the formation of an organization which would bring the advantages of medical aid societies to the employees of small businesses.

Mr. Duncan Cameron

Mr. Duncan Cameron, who is in his 44th year of residence in Beira, was recently presented by the Sporting Clubs do Beira with a gold medal in token of appreciation of his services to local sport. It was in 1896 that he first reached Portuguese East Africa to join the staff of the Beira branch of the Bank of Africa, which he left three years later to begin business on his own account as a general, clearing and forwarding agent. One of the founders of the Beira Sports Club (later renamed the Beira Amateur Sports Club) and the Beira Golf Club, he played tennis, cricket, and golf, and helped to start yachting.

Native Febrifuges

The Forestry Department of Nyasaland suggested last year that in view of the present shortage of quinine, the various Native febrifuges might be of interest, and samples of six plants, only one of them a tree, were supplied to the New York Botanical Garden, the results of whose tests have not yet been notified. Material from the tree Holarhena febrifuga were later supplied to the Board of Scientific and Industrial Research in India at the request of the East African Agricultural Research Station at Amani. According to the last annual report of the Department in Nyasaland, a febrifuge is derived from the tree, which is widely known and used by Natives of Nyasaland and elsewhere.

An ordinary dividend of 6% (net) will be paid on February 17.

Lewis and Peaf, Ltd., general produce packers with East African connections, estimate that there will be a small profit for the year to December 31, 1944, but there will be no preference dividend, which is in arrears as from July 1, 1940.

The tobacco crop produced during 1944 in Southern Rhodesia was the worst for some years, according to the annual report of the Colony's Tobacco Marketing Board, which states that the total production was mainly due to excessive rainfall. The average price of flue-cured leaf dropped from £2,280 to £1,064 per lb. while fire-cured fell from 12,641 to 5,250 per lb., in both cases on account of the heavy increase in poor quality leaf owing to climatic conditions. The marked fall in the number of buyers of low-grade leaf is attributed by the Board to the high spending-power of the British public, resulting in a demand for better cigarettes and a decrease in pipe-smoking.

Broome Rubber Plantations

Sir Lionel Smith-Gordon's Statement

THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF BROOME RUBBER PLANTATIONS, LIMITED, was held at 19, Bechurch Street, London, E.C.3, on Thursday, December 28th, 1944.

SIR LIONEL SMITH-GORDON, Bt., Chairman of the company, presided.

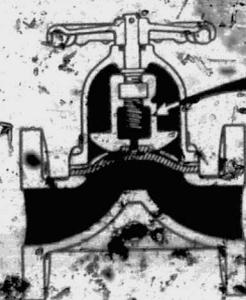

THE CHAIRMAN had circulated to the shareholders with the annual report and accounts a statement in the following terms:—

The Japanese are still in possession of Malaya. Therefore no news whatsoever is obtainable regarding the condition of your estates. Our hope is that we may re-occupy the properties in due course and once again build up the business of rubber production.

When the enemy is driven out of Malaya, it is anticipated that the initial scheme of rehabilitation will be under Government auspices. It must be obvious to all, however, that co-operation within the industry, in the widest sense, will be necessary. The closest attention of the Board is being given to this all-important question of rehabilitation, and also to that of compensation, regarding which no Government policy has been stated up to the present time. A representative Committee of Eastern Industries is endeavouring to protect the interests of all concerned in this respect.

Financial assistance to dependants of those members of the staff who are in enemy hands continues to be given as and when deemed necessary.

The directors' report and the annual accounts were adopted.

LATEST MINING NEWS

Outlook for Rhodesian Copper

Lord Rhodes said at last week's annual meeting in London of Rhokana Corporation that the Imperial Government's policy of full employment, which had been supported by all political parties, made it certain that Rhodesia would be a mining country.

He added that though the company had not intended to enter into contracts for the sale of the company's output at the end of January arrangements had been made for the sale of a very considerable proportion of the production during the month of March.

Sir John Waddington said in Lusaka last week that the Northern Rhodesian copper mines had obtained contracts from the United States for the first quarter of 1945, and the mines would continue production on approximately the present basis for the next three months, but that there would be a reduction in production during the winter months.

It is reported that the Rhodesian Copper Corporation in the U.S.A. has bought 100,000 shares of copper stock which have been bought by the U.S. Government at about 30,000 and 40,000 shares respectively. During the year production has been estimated to be about 200,000 tons a year, but the British Empire Stock Supplies only about 20% of that total. Civilian demand before the war was about 2,000,000 tons a year.

There have been repeated rumours recently that a World Copper Conference may soon be held. The U.K. remains the largest importer of the metal, in regard to which the U.S.A. is normally self-sufficient.

Copperbelt Strike Ended

The strike at the Nchanga mines in Northern Rhodesia, which had lasted for more than six weeks, has ended. Just before Christmas the company applied to the Governor for permission to close the mine, and Sir John Waddington thereupon issued a statement to the officials of the mine and the Northern Rhodesian Mine Workers' Union that he would have no option but to agree unless the deadlock were removed. A Billor was immediately taken in the Central Council of the Union, with the result that the workers at Nchanga were recommended to return to duty, though the President of the Union stated that the ultimate decision must rest with the miners at Nchanga. Essential work was resumed on Christmas and Boxing Days, and full production was reached by December 28.

Diatomite

Diatomite has been discovered in Northern Rhodesia. It is used mainly as a polishing powder for metals and other metals and for packing for boilers and steam pipes.

Rhodesian Mineral Production

The gold output of Southern Rhodesia in October totalled 48,973 oz., valued at £414,377, and the production of base metals in the same month was worth about £360,000.

Tanam

Tanam's Gold Mining Syndicate, Ltd., which has a large interest in Rosterman Gold Mines Ltd., reports a profit for the year ended December 31, 1943, of £4,131, which reduces the debit balance to £13,428.

Wolfram Price Reduced

The Ministry of Supply announces that its price for the purchase of wolfram will be reduced by 2% as from January 1. The new price is to be stabilized until the end of June next, the matter being reconsidered in the meantime.

London Rhodesian

Because the directors were unable to submit their annual report and accounts, the meeting in London on Friday last of the London and Rhodesian Mining and Land Co., Ltd., was purely formal, the meeting being adjourned to a date to be fixed not later than the end of February.

Minerals from the Belgian Congo

The Service of Economic Affairs of the Belgian Congo announces that in 1943 the Congo exported 188,204 metric tons of minerals, the highest 166,271 tons in 1938. The values of the (0.025 tons), 12,883 tons of manganese (3,207 tons), 10,217 tons of tin ingots (1,867), and 6,012 tons of cassiterite (6,657). The year's production of unrefined gold totalled 18,872 kilograms (43,505), and that of diamonds 1,737,000 carats (197,502.40).

Mining Personalia

Mr. D. Kerr Cross, of the staff of Rosterman Gold Mines, Ltd., has left England to return to Kenya. Mrs. Kerr Cross hopes to follow later.

Mr. H. P. T. Latté, M.B.E., M.A., has joined the board of Ankole Tinfields, Ltd. By a typographical error, which we regret, his name was misspelled in our last issue.

New Chairman of Union Miniere

Paul van Biele, a director and member of the Managing Committee of the Union Miniere du Katanga, has been elected Chairman of the company. He was also Governor of the Province of Katanga, who was also Governor of the Province of Katanga, who was murdered by the Belgians during the German occupation of Belgium.

Dwa Plantations

Dwa Plantations, Ltd., report that the operating profit for the year ended December 31, 1943, after providing for the maintenance of sisal areas and the depreciation of buildings and machinery, totalled £40,008, compared with £40,008 in 1942. In 1943 the debenture interest was £25,055, leaving a net profit of £14,953. The company's total assets of £2,342,740 brought forward from the previous year caused the available balance to be £1,087,685. The directors have recommended that a dividend of 3,294, there was a transfer to the debenture redemption account of £4,060, and that a dividend of £1,000 be reserved for the deferred maintenance of estates. The dividend was £2704.

The output of sisal and sisal sheath, 10,000 tons (8,000 from Dwa, 2,000 from Kariakoo) and 1,000 tons (800 from Misinga estate) during the year 12,400 lb. of rubber were collected. The prospects did little more than cover the cost of collection. Labour shortage was the cause of the low output.

The report states that the directors are of the opinion that owing to the high price of labour, the maintenance of sisal areas and the maintenance and replanting of rubber orchards together with the five years of war in which maintenance has been made difficult by reason of the shortage of labour and the necessity of using all available labour for production, have had cumulative adverse effect upon the Dwa estate and considerable expenditure will have to be met in the next few years to put the estate in proper order.

The directors are Mr. S. B. Hoag (Chairman), Sir W. H. Heley (managing director), Mr. G. Forlock, and Mr. A. Rawlins.

The annual meeting was held in London last Thursday.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

PLANNING FOR AFRICA must be done in Africa. That principle, which has been accepted by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, does not of course commend itself to the voluble oracles in Planning in Africa this country who are For Africa. They are persuaded that their own doctrinaire and physical aloofness invests their judgment with some peculiar visu and authority. While this antagonistic and antagonizing attitude has most frequently been shown by political extremists, who have often pontificated for years without ever having set foot in Africa, we recall more than a few occasions on which the Colonial Office itself has shown an unwise tendency to imagine that remoteness sets a special seal upon the ukase of one of its senior officials. Britons overseas will never endorse that fallacy. Their demand is that more trust should be placed in the men on the spot. Thus the Parliament of Southern Rhodesia and the Legislature of Northern Rhodesia long ago recorded their emphatic acceptance of General Smuts' proposal for a Pan-African Conference, and the European elected members of the Legislative Council of Kenya have now tabled a motion requesting His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom to invite the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa to convene such a gathering without delay for the purpose of planning and co-ordinating the development of British Africa. The intention, said Mr. Alfred Vincent in speaking to this motion, was that the opportunity should be provided of planning in Africa for Africa. He added that the request for this meeting was an acid test of the sincerity of the Imperial Government, which must realize that Africa had grown into nationhood, that it could not be an after-thought at a peace conference, and that it had the right to discuss in advance the constitution and powers of the proposed regional advisory councils.

It may now be disclosed that private notice of the intention to raise this matter was given to the Government of Kenya before the departure of the former Governor, and very wisely Mr. Vincent and his Non-Official Participation. colleagues preferred to await the arrival in the Colony of Sir Philip St. John. The new Governor quickly showed his sympathy the Government of Kenya would be exceedingly happy to take part in any such African conference, but it is naturally ruled that the official members of the Council should neither speak nor vote on the motion. Whether reference was made during the session to any African representation in Kenya is not an African conference does not appear in the telegraphic Press summaries from which we quote. It is a matter addressed to a Government to participate in a similar conference would in its own right be a conference should be composed of representatives of official representatives would be unsatisfactory, not only for Kenya and the rest of East Africa, but even more so to the two Rhodesias and South Africa. That will be a matter understood by a Government who knows the Union and Rhodesia so well. There should therefore be no assumption in any quarter that it is unbecomingly that the Government of Kenya would accept an invitation received, means that its nominees would be solely official. On the contrary, we take it for granted that Mr. Vincent, leader of the European elected members, is a certain choice, and in view of the economic and which economic matters would they be? The President of the Association of Chambers of Commerce and Industry of East Africa suggests himself as another suitable selection. General Smuts has so often pleaded the cause of pan-Africanism that he would be the universal choice as the convenor and chairman of such a gathering. Though the pressure of his political duties may make some delay inevitable, a meeting of this kind cannot be safely postponed until the end of the war, because such swift and sweeping changes are already occurring in the Central, South and West Africa, in all of which great plans for still further development are reaching the stage of large-scale application.

While non-official leaders throughout the territories are convinced that the British territories in Africa should confer as a matter of practical prudence, they also feel as Mr. Vincent said with refreshing candour, that it is necessary to test the sincerity of the Imperial Government, and particularly of the Colonial Office. Is that surprising in view, for instance, of the remarkable disclosure made by Sir Dudley Huggins and reported in this issue? It is probable as it may appear, the Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia was not told even in confidence during his recent visit to this country that the composition of the Legislative Council of Northern Rhodesia was to be changed, and his Government was not notified in advance of the former publication. No businessman would have done himself so negatively, and if politicians in Great Britain choose to act in that way they must not be surprised to find that suspicion has been aroused in their own minds and quite unnecessary feelings. It would be the height of silliness to argue that such a matter concerns Southern Rhodesia alone, and not the other neighbouring countries, and that they may commend themselves to the British Whitehall, but certainly to the Rhodesians and other Africans who understand that they must work out their own salvation in close collaboration with the so-called Dependents.

Incidentally, the public should be reminded that the Central African Council which the Imperial Government intends to create for the two Rhodesias and Nyasaland is regarded with less confidence in Africa than in this country. Indeed, so far as we are aware, no public leader in East or Central Africa has shown any particular approval of the new international body. When at the time of the secretary of States' announcement, EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA wrote without enthusiasm of this very belated and partial imitation of the recommendations of the Bredisloe Commission, a few readers long in the Colonial Service suggested that we were unduly critical and pessimistic. But that we interpreted aright the disappointment of the leaders of Rhodesian and East African opinion is now evident beyond question. They do not mistake the shadow for the substance, or bow in obeisance before a new piece of machinery particularly as they know the manifold defects of the device of similar design which the Colonial Office has so long tolerated for East Africa. British Africa wants practical action, not political camouflage; wise innovation, not adherence to outworn precedent; a regional outlook, not continuing centralism; and, above all, a greater and ever-growing share in planning its own progress.

THE 100th BOMBERS SQUADRON, RHODESIA, has been successful in its operations against the Mu River bridge and the enemy's lines of communication. The war was prepared by successful attacks...

A South East Asia Command communiqué says of the town, which the 11th East African Division helped to take...

The townships of Ye is at the centre of a fertile paddy plain, and is situated on the east bank of the Mu River. It is the terminus of a metre-gauge railway that bears a familiar curve around the Chindwin valley to the east, and a road runs north-east to the rich rice lands...

Ye is a prosperous community, and has a municipal council. There are many schools, a police station and a hospital. The town is situated on the east bank of the Mu River, which flows into the Irrawaddy 25 miles east of Mandalay. During the monsoon season, when the Mu is in spate, the bridge is washed away. When the monsoon ceases, a new bridge is built to enable light motor-cars and bullock carts to reach Ye from Yaw...

The capture of Ye is approximately 11 miles from Kading, and the capture of the Mu River, which the plan which controls the river supplies for the snowbo plan is taken intact, will ease the position regarding supplying our troops with water, a matter which was previously proving to be somewhat of a problem.

The communiqué of January 7 said: "Our troops continued to advance from the bridgehead established east of the Mu River. There were many clashes in the Ye and Yaw sectors, and at Thavetpyin, three miles east of Ye, where the enemy was firmly entrenched, there was severe fighting."

Japanese Completely Outwitted. Mr. O. M. Green has written in the Observer: "The Burma campaign will rank as a classic for the age. The Japanese plan and executed them to attack according to his own plan, and for the superb fighting of the 14th Army, that unique and perfectly co-ordinated machine of 20 different nationalities from East and West Africans to Kachin hillmen from British regiments, Indians and Chinese. The Japanese were quite confident of reaching the coast of the Malay Range in Arakan in February and at Imphal and Kohima in March. But the lines formed by the British, Indian and Chinese forces, which simultaneously cut off Japanese supplies completely, worked the Japanese who met a crushing defeat at all points with a loss of 25,000 men."

A surgeon captain in charge of a hospital ship which recently brought back invalids from Asia to East Africa, reported to the East African Command...

Medical officers, nursing sisters and sick berth staff have been much impressed by their cheerfulness and by the general outlook of their personal habits, which, combined with their high level of cheerfulness and ready obedience, have made light work of the task of bringing over a very full ship.

An officer, two N.C.Os. who had just returned from the Middle East, and 30 Africans of the Belgian Congo Force Paratroque are on their way to join the Belgian Field Hospital on the Chindwin front. This contingent composed entirely of volunteers selected from a large number of Europeans and Africans who had offered to serve in the Far East, will be used as a reserve and relief staff for the hospital, which has so far suffered no battle casualties though close to the front line. Two Africans have died of disease.

About 1,500 Southern Rhodesians are serving in the South South African Armoured Division in Italy, said Colonel J. B. Brady, M.P. for Bulawayo East, in Parliament recently.

That about 18,000 men in the Royal Air Force had been evacuated from Southern Rhodesia in three months, 2,000 had been evacuated again, leaving an increase of some 10,000 in the European population, was recently stated in the Department of Southern Rhodesia by the Minister of Agriculture and Lands.

Casualties

Admiral Sir Malcolm Ramsay, K.C.B., K.B.E., M.V.O., Naval C-in-C. of the Allied Expeditionary Force, who was killed last week in an air accident in France, was a sub-lieutenant on the H.M.S. Hyacinth when that ship took part in the Italian campaign more than 20 years ago, and was landed with the naval brigade on the island of Sicily. Admiral Ramsay was recruited for his services in organizing the British evacuation from Dunkirk in 1940, and it was he who planned the amphibious operations in North Africa, in Sicily, and in Italy in this war. He was the supreme naval commander when the Allied army landed in France last July.

Commander George William Rowley, Q.B.E., D.S.C., R.N., who was killed in the same flying accident as Admiral Sir Malcolm Ramsay, served at one time in East African waters in H.M.S. ERFINGHAM, then flagship of the East Indian Squadron.

Wing Commander Alexander (Paddy) Pearson, who has been killed in an aircraft accident, was very well known throughout East Africa before the war as a pilot of Wilson Airways. Like his friend and fellow-pilot, the late T. Campbell Black, he had been a farmer in Kenya for a time, but he was happiest in the air. A cheerful soul and an excellent aviator, he made light of all difficulties, and was quickly the friend of his passengers. He will be widely missed and long remembered.

Lieut. James Clegg, who was reported missing in Afghanistan, where he dropped with the 1st Parachute Division, is a son of a well-known farmer in the Subukia Valley of Kenya. Lieut. Clegg was a Rhodes scholar at Oxford at the time of the outbreak of war.

Mr. Leslie Sheppard, of U.N.R.F.A., who was killed by a mine in Athens on December 30, served with the Ethiopian patriot forces in 1940. He gave up the rank of lieutenant-colonel in order to join U.N.R.F.A., and he volunteered that organization to be killed in the field. He was 59 years of age.

Third Officer Brenda Quinlan Stafford, W.R.N.S., who has died in Portsmouth at the age of 22, was the daughter of Mrs. J. Hall, Kenya Colony.

Acting Squadron Leader M. L. W. Ellacombe, R.A.F.C., No. 48 (B.N.Z.) Squadron, formerly of Livingstone, Northern Rhodesia, has been awarded a Bar to the D.F.C. The citation reads: "Throughout a large number of operations, Acting Squadron Leader Ellacombe has displayed outstanding gallantry and a fine fighting spirit. During August, 1940, his aircraft was so badly damaged by enemy action that he had to make a crash landing in a field. A few days later, on a further enemy action, he was forced to leave his burning aircraft by parachute."

After three months in hospital, he was discharged, and in August 1942, during an attack on Aleppo, he was again shot down. After being rescued from the sea, Squadron Leader Ellacombe served in a night fighter squadron. Since the award of the D.F.C. he has destroyed an enemy aircraft and successfully attacked a large variety of targets. He is an excellent leader and fine commander, and his is a fine example of gallantry, valour, skill and courage."

The D.F.C. was also awarded to Acting Officer F. W. W. Hayward, R.A.F.V.R., 133 Squadron, who received his citation in Rhodesia.

During his first tour in the theatre, he served on strong teams and participated in the invasion of Sicily and the capture of Rome. He has since been awarded the D.F.C. for his gallant and skilful flying during the operations over Italy.

On another occasion he was awarded the D.F.C. for his gallant and skilful flying during the operations over Italy. Valuable Photographic Reconnaissance Flight Officer Donald Redfern, R.A.F.V.R., No. 682 Squadron, who was trained in Rhodesia, has received the D.F.C. The citation reads:

While operating mainly in the theatre, he has shown a keen interest for operation, which combined with his gallant devotion to duty, has set a fine example to his crew and largely contributed to its successes. He has completed a large number of photographic reconnaissance sorties, frequently covering areas defended by enemy fighters. Despite the danger of interception, he has always pressed on to complete his mission.

On one occasion his aircraft was attacked by two enemy fighters. He tried to outdistance them by climbing to 42,000 feet, but was unable to escape. He finally evaded his pursuers by diving to 2,000 feet. On another sortie the Lyons area he flew well below operational height to obtain outstanding photographs. He has obtained exceptionally valuable results on many missions.

Warrant Officer Maxwell George Jordan, R.A.A.F., No. 166 Squadron, who also received his training in Rhodesia, was also awarded the same decoration.

During his tour of operations, Warrant Officer Jordan completed many sorties against targets in the Balkans. He also took part in three main-laying missions in the Danube, which involved flying at 900 feet in the face of strong opposition. In September, 1944, his aircraft was detailed to attack an airfield near Athens. On the second run it was damaged by anti-aircraft fire. Warrant Officer Jordan made a third run in order to drop his bombs accurately. The attack was very successful, the runway and landing area were extensively damaged, and several aircraft were destroyed on the airfield. He has consistently displayed cheerful courage and determination which have been most praiseworthy.

Captain John Crombie Brown, C.B.E., R.D.F., R.N.R. (1944), who was awarded the C.B.E. in the New Year Honours List, had had previous operations commended during this war for good service and brave conduct while commanding ships in the Home and Coastal Lines.

While commanding the WINDSOR CASTLE early in the war he was commended for bringing his ship safely through an attack by a German bomber, which dropped incendiary bombs on the deck and set fire to piles of mail, and a high explosive bomb which failed to explode. In 1943, when he commanded the ARUNDEL CASTLE, she was attacked by aircraft which launched glider bombs, torpedoes and high explosive bombs. One attacker was shot down, and the main was again officially commended.

He served the Line in 1906, was on active service throughout the last war, became second officer on the BRAMER CASTLE in 1919, and later first officer and chief officer in various mail vessels. He has commanded the WILMER CASTLE, MADDART CASTLE, CARNARON CASTLE, DUFFON CASTLE, FENICHER CASTLE, WINCHESTER CASTLE, BRIDGEMAN CASTLE, WINDSOR CASTLE, and ARUNDEL CASTLE, and was in command of the WINDSOR CASTLE when she was sunk in the Bay of Biscay in 1942.

New Central African Council Widely Criticized

Remarkable Disclosure by Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia

SIR GORDON HUGHES, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, in reply to a Parliamentary question, has disclosed that the Imperial Government's proposal for the establishment of a Central African Council is a "very important" and "very serious" matter. He stated that the Government's proposal is "a matter of expediency" although "it was not the way we would have hoped for."

However, it was stated that the matter for the Government to decide and take the consequences. As no vote to settle the Council have been taken as yet, the House is not in a position to say if it is satisfied that it was not in the interests of the Colony in the circumstances. He stated that had we refused the proposal, it would have been the death of such an amalgamation in this area, as it would have annoyed the other territories.

Mr. Lade, in his speech, there was not aware that the suggestion to form the nominated members of the Northern Rhodesia Council and to create what amounts to a Council with an elected Lower Chamber. If he knew that I believe we should still have favoured clinging to the status quo.

Benefits of Amalgamation

Effort, Minister of Internal Affairs, said in a public speech in Bulawayo that Southern Rhodesia could not accept the Central African Council as final and irrevocable.

"Our destiny," he declared, "is unquestionably amalgamation with the other territories of the vast and a large country, but the best interests of the sub-continent can be served by the amalgamation of the territories into a single political unit. Every sentimental, practical, and economic consideration is in favour of it."

On the same occasion, Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr, Minister of Finance in the Union of South Africa, said that if Southern Rhodesia went southwards and the war would have been over the good will of the Union of South Africa.

Mr. W. Welensky, Leader of the Labour Party of Northern Rhodesia, said at a public meeting in Broken Hill that if the constitutional changes represented progress, then it was progressing in a direction opposite to that which he wanted. If Northern Rhodesia accepted the intentions of the Imperial Government as now defined, then it would be merely a matter of time before the European would have to pack up and get out of the country.

Captain R. E. Campbell, another of the elected members of Council in Northern Rhodesia, said that the new constitution would place the elected members in that Protectorate under a "very tight" and "unpleasant" control. He considered the whole business a "hoop-la."

Mr. F. S. Page, M.C., wrote from Great Zimbabwe to the local Press:

"From the fact that the Council Secretary has announced that in present circumstances amalgamation is not possible, it is clear that the Imperial Government has not taken a statesman's agreement, and has taken an unfair advantage of a concession made in the interests of the war effort."

"I fail to see how the Colonial Office could have taken the non-official members into its confidence and put their advice before laying down the conditions under which it would only have been in a very few years ago, and it would have been a very different story. The Government is showing a distrust of the people of the Colony and the Office administration."

The proposal for the Central African Council, it is said, provided it is not too bound up with effecting a sound, provided it is not too bound up with effecting a sound, would strongly urge that Southern Rhodesia should presented by the Governor with three non-officials, one nominated and two elected members. Then some real progress might be made.

Mr. Brian Goodwin, elected member for the Nkana constituency, promptly proposed that the elected members should be elected by the people. He has already stated that the only reason was:

"A public meeting held in Broken Hill received that the statement made by the Secretary of State that amalgamation is impracticable does not bear examination. It decided to ask Colonel Stanley to clarify the position and to arrange either to visit Southern Rhodesia or to receive a delegation of settlers in London."

A Masterpiece of Evasion and Frustration

The Secretary of State's statement, received through the press, with its evasive and evasive, is a masterpiece of evasion and frustration. It tells us that the measures instituted after the Reid Commission did little to facilitate the more united working of the countries; it does not say that Northern Rhodesians of equal quality of Government are elected at short intervals; and it also promises to set up a Legislative Council before they can have become accustomed with the parliamentary system.

But the Government which failed to recognize that the two Rhodesias were practically a single economic unit, and that the need for a south-south or was some purposes could have been met by a Council of representatives of the need for amalgamation of a form of federation which would set the official seal on something already existing in practically every sphere but that of Government rule in the two Rhodesias. The Central African Council, which Colonel Stanley appears to have much hope in, may be a good but another of those stiff-necked bodies which promise so much but yield so little.

This Colony's Premier, elected in a democratic manner, will be competent to attend and advise his people and country. Who will hold similar powers to the Premier and Northern Rhodesia? The Governor, a semi-official, leader of the elected members? Unless the other representatives can attend with similar authority attaching to the Rhodesian representative, it is difficult to see how the Council ever becoming more than a consultative and expensive luxury.

Another Instrument of Delay?

Mr. A. M. M. M. M., Leader of the European elected members of the Kenya Legislative Council, said:

"Under this new set-up the necessity for two Colonial Offices, Governors disappear respectively in view of the added expense entailed by the new superintended council and secretariat. Similarly, the Governor of Kenya, Tanganyika, and Uganda is the ideal. The Central African Council, a half-hearted attempt at the right direction, but it is a belated admission by the Home Government that amalgamation of the British territories generally is essential. Whether the present step is mere window-dressing we have yet to see. The danger is that the new Council may become yet another instrument of delay and evasion, especially if the British Government fail to take concerted action. Much depends on the status of the Premier of the Council, on whether the decisions will be implemented whole-heartedly, or whether the whole object can be defeated through co-operative evasive tactics of Governors operating under the cover of the Home Government."

The East African Standard of Nairobi, writes:

"The new set-up is a Commonwealth of an Empire. In the Commonwealth we follow the principle of decentralization to the point where the members is in itself a sovereign State. The Empire is not a centralized principle of centralization. It is a decentralization of power and authority away from London. It is a decentralization of power and authority within regions where both the Government and the people are in contact. The distinction between the two is that we have the right to decide in this Central African Council the representative of the quality of the Central African Council, and the quality of the Central African Council is the quality of the Central African Council."

The East African Weekly News, of Nairobi, has reported that this glorified Governors' Council will be "indefinitely" less as it will have no effective powers whatsoever in the end it will prove a failure and an expensive failure. The only constitutional change in East and West Africa to be considered in the writing of the new constitution is a proposed constitutional change here in the

N. Rhodesian Legislature Meets

Telegraphic Report of Governor's Address

Special to EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

THE NEW LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF NORTHERN RHODESIA assembled in Salisbury on January 10.

Sir John Waddington, the Governor, in a brief review of the present situation, said the Council was charged with a heavy and important task. He was proud of the Northern Rhodesian troops who had had a distinguished share in the struggle in Burma.

Sales of Savings Certificates and War Bonds in 1944 were 250,000 and £120,000 respectively, considerable progress having been given by the savings drive organized by the Information Office. From the first sale of Savings Certificates in 1941 sales had totalled £327,000.

Agreement on the representation of the committees of various districts had been reached, and a number of arrangements had been reached regarding the control of the courts and the award of trustees who to be appointed to control the courts. It would delegate wide powers to local committees in regard to land-tenure and other matters.

Impending Constitutional Changes

With regard to the impending constitutional changes, the Governor said that "provision of the necessary arrangements would be the urgent task of the next meeting of the Council, and would probably be the last under the existing Constitution, and Sir John Waddington said that he asked forward the presiding over a Council with a non-official majority. The official members would cease their own responsibilities from the view of the Governor, and his advisers would not be able to prevail. Certain powers would be reserved to the Governor in order to avoid possible difficulties in circumstances in which non-official members would be asked to undertake the responsibilities of executive functions, but these reserve powers would be used with due regard to the gravity of the situation. The selection of nominated members would rest upon the Governor subject to the approval of the Secretary of State. Sir John would endeavour to obtain nominated members who would best advance the interests of the country.

The Central African Council, working through a permanent secretariat which was to be established in Salisbury, would promote the closest contact and co-operation between the three neighbouring Governments and their administrative and technical services. He hoped very soon to have informal discussions at a preliminary to the first meeting of the Council, and the intention was to have the new arrangements operating as early as possible.

The Governor regretted that he could not yet give any information regarding the rate of copper production for 1945, but he hoped that when definite decision had been reached a definite production figure over a period of 12 months would be announced, so that if output had to be reduced, he could consult the managements, the Officials' Association and the Mine Workers' Union as to the best means of coping in successive stages to avoid hardship to individuals. He trusted that industrial relations would this year be marked by that spirit of understanding which was essential to the welfare of the copper industry and the whole community of Northern Rhodesia.

There had been unfortunate delay in bringing the men's Compensation Ordinance into force, but a South African official with experience of this work who had been seconded to Northern Rhodesia, said that the Ordinance would be brought into force on March 1.

Improving Native Government

African provincial councils had made good progress, and the Secretary of State was taking a great interest in them. An interesting meeting was being held of preliminary meetings of the Council of African Chiefs.

Steps had already been made in organizing Native Government, the better pay for officials, financial stability of Native treasuries, and the gradual elimination of redundant Native authorities. Improved police force was already noticeable in some areas, and should soon become general. The development of social services for Africans was being framed by a sub-committee of the Native Development Board, and would be reviewed by Mr. C. G. the Development Adviser, and Mr. J. A. Wallace, the Commissioner of Native Development. The officers and the departmental heads would provide a development programme to meet pressing needs. Generous assistance under the Colonial Development and Welfare Act was expected. The Development Adviser was investigating the possibility of that economic development which was essential as the foundation for the improvement of living which were so urgently needed.

Referring to the Labour Department, the Governor said that the Government, assisted by compounders and others, had strengthened the channels of contact through which the African labourer could express his views. The good behaviour of African mine workers in a year occasionally disturbed by industrial disputes indicated some progress in this respect. The African Labour Corps had rendered excellent service for transport, and the maintenance of this Corps with its messes was a matter for Government in regarding the labour. It was a heavy subsidy to farmers, which amounted in the 1944 estimates to about £20,000.

The supply department had continued its good work, and there was little cause for trouble at the supply of commodities. It was a possible possibility for the next few months in which even a small amount of rain would be of great value for existing stocks, but the production and consumption of potatoes. A comprehensive report on the progress of the Government's activities since its formation would be available shortly. Northern Rhodesia was using 970 tons less petrol a year than in 1943.

The work of the Health Department had expanded, but there were large Native areas in which medical facilities were entirely inadequate. Proposals for improvement would be included in the 1945-46 development plan to be presented to the General Assembly, and the Health Committee had progressed well. With the Secretary of State's approval, a team of experts had departed from Northern Rhodesia to carry out an account of the disease and widespread malaria, and to encourage the Africans to take advantage of a grant for the services of medical officers.

Yellow Fever and Sleeping Sickness

The Babovale yellow fever survey had been completed and of 1,004 blood specimens, 935 were found to be protective. Since none had been confirmed by inoculation, they must at some time have been infected, but no actual cases of yellow fever had been discovered. Barotsse Province had been surveyed, but the results had not yet been received. They would continue to determine the epidemic areas.

There were 95 sleeping sickness cases during the year. 14 in the Eastern Province, 21 from the West, and 2 from the Northern. Three from the Southern and 2 from the West. Of this total 13 had died. Operations against the tsetse fly, the special reference to sleeping sickness, had been undertaken by the Game and Tsetse Department in a fairly large scale at the Fort Jameson district and at the Mankwago Hill.

Recruitment of medical staff for the Micosis area had not yet been possible, but a highly skilled and experienced man had been appointed and should arrive at the end of the month. Compensation for miners contracting a compensable disease who had worked underground in South Africa or Southern or Northern Rhodesia was under consideration, and an early conference between representatives of the Governments was hoped for. The South African Government specialist, Dr. Lambrechts, had spent three months investigating the ventilation and dust conditions of mines in Southern Rhodesia from the standpoint of micosis, and had submitted a comprehensive report, which was now receiving urgent consideration by the Government's technical advisers. It would be made public as soon as possible.

Well Connected Ghost

A night wanderer in Naludu, in the Mordoran Province, met a ghost and beat it to death with his stick. Unfortunately the ghost turned out to be a relation of the head of the tribal administration. — Sudan News Letter.

Gezira Cotton Scheme

The Financial Secretary of the Sudan, Mr. J. W. Miller, said recently that the Gezira cotton scheme now covers 835,000 feddans, an area which could be doubled if further water supplies could be obtained from the Blue Nile. Government, when it took over the concessions from the two great cotton-growing companies, could, he said, appoint a board of managers on which the Native tenantry would be represented; it would be a decentralized agency working within the framework of Government policy. Mr. Miller said that the Government had spent about £14,000,000 on the Sennar Dam and the canals for the growing of cotton, and that the companies whose concessions were being taken over had already invested £2,800,000.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Discharged in Tanganyika

Unhappy Experience of a Reader

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

SIR, I have read with interest in mid-December the letter you published in your August issue under the title "I Leave It to the Chief Boy." Your correspondent confined himself to the demobilized African soldiers, and these discharged soldiers will not be the only ones affected by post-war conditions in East Africa. The bona fide European resident of East Africa who joined the forces at the beginning of the war, even at great financial sacrifice, must also be considered.

After serving for 3½ years in the East African campaign I was invalided from the Army in September, 1918. Being a resident of Tanganyika, I was not granted a passage to England (although by the time I had left the Army I had resided in the tropics, without vacation, for nine years), but instructed to report to the Director of Man-Power, Tanganyika, who, I was told, would arrange suitable employment for me in that Territory. I should say that whilst I had been in the Army my previous occupation had ceased to exist.

Without going into too many details, I will merely say that in spite of my application to the Director of Man-Power to most of the larger Chambers of Commerce, and an interview with the Governor of the Territory, himself, no employment was forthcoming, and that it was not until the British Legion took my case up that Government consented to employ me on a temporary basis in one of the most subordinate positions which it had to offer.

By the time I was able to earn some money, eight months had passed since leaving the Army, and had it not been for a relative with whom I was able to live, I should quickly have been reduced to destitution.

There is no need to stress my point, or to enlarge on the fact that numerous well-paid jobs are at present held by wives of Government officials in East Africa, by ladies who before the war would indignantly have repudiated the suggestion that they were comparatively qualified to hold such a position.

Tanganyika has obviously no post-war settlement scheme worked out for European ex-soldiers, and there are many cases of flagrant nepotism being practised in the Territory. Unless something is soon done to alter this state of affairs, and make adequate arrangements to absorb at the end of the war the demobilized soldiers who were normally resident in East Africa, there will come into being a large number of justifiably aggrieved men who, if not quickly given the means to earn their living, will through no fault of their own, become an embarrassment to the country as "poor whites."

At the moment Tanganyika is a reserve for Government officials and their relations. Private enterprise must be given a chance and the non-official helped to earn his living, not hindered.

Yours faithfully,
EX-SOLDIER, E.A.A.

Tanganyika Territory.

Colonial Service Needs Reform

Views of Former Tanganyika Official

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

SIR, Your issue of August 17, which contains Mr. G. F. Sayers's letter on my article entitled "I was a Colonial Civil Servant," has only just reached me. May I reply to some of the points raised.

Mr. Sayers states that in his experience promotion in the Colonial Service was by no means the sole factor in assessing claims to promotion. This is true of the highest appointments. I was referring rather to the case of more junior officers, with less than, say, 15 years service. I believe I am correct in saying that any such has received promotion on grounds other than seniority, he must be a vari avis. I never heard of him while I was in Tanganyika. Maximum efficiency demands that every officer, so far as is practicable, should be utilized to the fullest extent compatible with his ability and experience. Colonial administration is not so complex a matter that a ripe experience cannot be acquired, given favourable opportunities, in considerably less than 15 years.

My correspondent also says that the service is quick to recognize and appreciate real talent. I agree. The device of sending administrative officers for special duties taps at least some of the ability which would otherwise be adequately employed. But this is not promotion, and the greatest responsibility which secondment entails does not carry with it any remuneration other than that to which the officer's substantive rank is entitled. Greater satisfaction there is, of course, but that is not an M.P.H. argument. It is a shame to make a man's record of achievement since it was under the rule, opinions may differ. I believe that progress has not been satisfactory, having regard to the country's resources. For this the Treasury must bear its share of blame. It has overlooked the elementary economic truth that money is not wealth, but merely the symbol of wealth. It has conducted its business on outmoded and discredited financial principles. The evidence of two world wars confirms that the true limits to what can be done are set not by the amount of money available, but by the supply of materials, labour and organizing ability. The proper function of cost-accounting is to determine priorities, not to stifle enterprise.

I am whole-heartedly in agreement with Mr. Sayers's proposal that a Promotions Board should be re-established. I am sure that the psychological value alone of some such innovation would be great. One hopes that this suggestion, coming as it does from one who served Tanganyika with distinction for many years, will receive the attention that it merits.

May I conclude with the remark that I am not unmindful of the excellent work being done by some colonial servants under adverse conditions. On this country, my object is to assist them by directing attention to defects of the existence of which they are as well aware as I am, but concerning which they must of necessity remain silent.

Yours faithfully,

Central Mediterranean Forces. A. GODFREY HARVEY

POINTS FROM LETTERS

Opportunities Lost in Kenya

Heartiest congratulations on your excellent leading article on the changes of Governors in East Africa. Your account of the opportunities lost by the late Governor of Kenya must be published.

African Diet

Africans who work in our townships in Kenya are certainly altering their diet. In particular, they are eating less maize and more bread, flour, meat, vegetable, sugar and fat—which is, of course, all to the good.

Governments Not All-Wise

Congratulations on your leading article exposing Uganda's ideas as a Public Relations Department. It is sad that business men, after a long period of Government control and segregation in Africa, from world opinion, could seem to be succumbing to the idea that Government is all-wise and all-beneficent.

Constructive

I enjoy your letters of comment because I find your point of view so reasonable, so much more sensible than the hot-air solutions proffered by would-be experts. Of course, read each issue from cover to cover, and find much to be satisfying. EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA has always been a medium for a constructive policy.

The following New Year honours are now to be added to the list published in our last issue, which went to press before the full honours list was available.

is Khartoum's Stone-Age Village

Mr. A. E. Peck, Commissioner for Archaeology and Anthropology to the Sudan Government, said in a recent broadcast talk from Khartoum that archaeological excavations which the Antiquities Service has begun in Khartoum near the Civil Hospital already show that the site is that of a Stone Age village.

At least one of the fossilized human skulls discovered appears to be more primitive than the ordinary modern homo sapiens, either black or white. The people in question may have been cannibals for broken human bones have been found with a deposit of lime covering fractures, indicating that they were broken possibly to attract the marrow.

Mr. Peck also said that the Nile when the river was high probably flooded a large forest which now stands the town of Khartoum, while a secondary channel ran across the aerodrome, north of the cemetery, and through the railway station. In fact, probably, when the Nile was high, only the ridge on which stands the fort, R.A.F. station, and one excavation site, stood high and dry. That is why there are also ancient sites of some character, though not necessarily of the same period as our site, both near the fort and near the R.A.F. station.

Better Farming by Native Prisoners

The farms operated by the Prisons Department of Uganda is stated in the annual report for 1943 to be making progress. It has relieved the central prison of 480 long-termers, and one with more than two convictions is sent to the farm. The superintendent, a man with experience in local plantation work, found on his appointment that the prisoners were cultivating less than 200 square yards daily; that task has now been raised to 120 square yards a day. Mutching the maize with elephant grass reduced the loss by white ants from 70% to 5%, and pruning with the oil runner increased the yield by 20%.

Boarding Schools for African Girls

An urgent need in East Africa is the raising of the standard of girls' education, and the application made by Tanganyika for a grant to build two boarding schools for African girls is a step towards this aim. A free grant of £11,000 has been sanctioned under the Colonial Development and Welfare Act, 1940, and work on the two boarding schools and on eight new provincial girls' schools will begin as soon as possible. One of the main reasons for making this application in advance of a general programme of educational development which is contemplated in Tanganyika is that, until now, although it has recently been decided to open Makerere College to women students, Tanganyika women are not now in a position to take advantage of this departure.

Statements Worth Noting

"Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man sows, that shall he also reap." (Galatians VI.)

"If Uganda were really Christian, it would solve the problem of the whole of Africa." — Bishop of Uganda, Mombasa.

"I am not suspicious of change, but I am suspicious of the intention of a healthy, balanced Africa." — Africa, our hope.

"I hope the Government will appoint a National Health Commissioner." — Mr. R. S. Social Services, Southern Rhodesia.

"Southern Africa regards itself as Kenya's big brother anxiously to help, but I am quite sure, not to dictate." — Sir Henry Moore, late Governor of Kenya.

"The Government's economic policy must not be monopolies except where they were used in the pre-independence." — The Minister of Finance of Southern Rhodesia.

"A change of farming methods—on a say, co-operative lines—might mean a late application for Africans of advances from the Land and Agricultural Bank of Kenya." — The Rev. E. J. G. G. M.C.

"Indian contractors built a school for Indian girls in Mombasa for 10,000 shillings the Public Works Department had estimated the cost at 215,000." — Mr. A. J. G. M.C. addressing the Legislature of Kenya.

"I regard the office which I have now held for two years as one of the most important in the Government, and without exception the most interesting." — Colonel Oliver Stanley, 1936 Secretary of State for the Colonies.

"The certainty that we must be ejected from unutilized districts has stiffened the popular determination that the reserves shall be inviolate, and that the game shall be in a state and that the game shall be preserved for us, our children and our children's children." — Mr. J. P. S. S.

"The Chief Distribution Officer is in touch with the Kenya African Traders and Farmers Association with the object of making arrangements to ensure that African shopkeepers in certain areas obtain supplies of imported goods." — Mr. J. P. S. Director of Distribution of Kenya.

"When the African has profited by the various arrangements made in Southern Rhodesia for his advancement, will he not start to press against the rather low ceiling which at present limits his advance in industrial employment?" — Sir Alfred Peck, M.P., in a speech in the House of Commons.

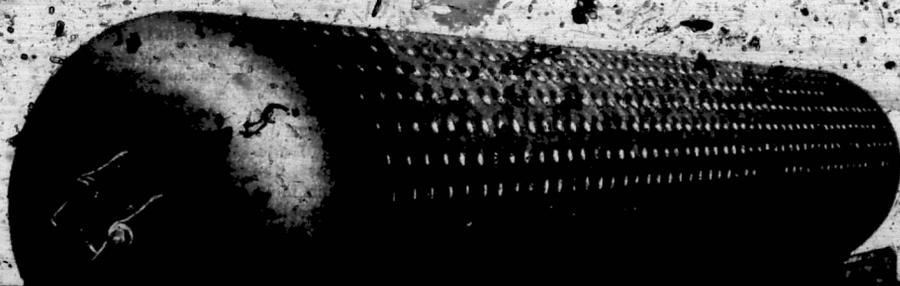

"If, in the early 1900s, 100,000 acres in Kenya, about 6,000,000 acres, was taken from its owners and given to the Africans, it would mean only about two acres per head, and it would not do more than a fiasco with the African present methods of using land." — Mr. C. H. D. President of the Uganda Chamber of Commerce.

"It should be possible for Christian people in East Africa to find a solution of what is termed the Indian problem, which is really the vital one of our African relationships. It should be raised from the lower level of racial bitterness to the higher level of Christian brotherhood." — Mr. G. S. M. Commissioner for Local Government, Lands and Settlement in Kenya, in an address to the Christian Council of Kenya.

Background to Foreign Policy. — Our contemporary diplomacy is an enormous failure. Who is to blame? Probably neither our outstanding Minister nor our poor experienced Foreign Secretary, nor the present staff of the Foreign Office, all of whom are so overworked and overburdened by the variety of problems with which they are faced that they often cannot find the work for the time. The fault lies in the system. The machinery of diplomacy is completely out of gear. It has been strangled by the ever-growing complexities which have arisen. Unless we can make up our mind what our foreign policy really is, and on so long view decide the role that we intend our country to play, we shall continue to lose the confidence of foreign nations and of our own Dominions, and to proceed in losing politically and economically all that our armed forces have gained with such glorious heroism. — Weekly Review

The Prison Beast. — The trouble about this country is that much as we have suffered we have, by the luck of not having been invaded, not suffered enough to understand completely the menace facing us. There is a man in Brussels today whose legs were torn apart on a rack by the Germans until his body split. There is a woman about 22 years of age who was brought into a chamber naked. Her wrists were tied behind her back, then a rope through a pulley in the ceiling was tied to her bound wrists, and she was lifted off the floor. The lift broke both her shoulder. While she hung there she was brutally flogged with a rubber whip, and every few minutes dashed to the ground, to fall on sharpened pieces of wood which lacerated her severely. There were men in that prison whose weight fell in a few weeks from 16 stone to six. There are five posts standing in a courtyard at which men were shot day by day. Close to the posts is a very primitive gallows on which men were not hanged but strangled with chains. — Mr. John Gordon, in the Sunday Express.

U.S. Expresses Robot Raids. — Robot Raids against New York will probably take place within the next 3 or 60 days. The attempt will probably be limited to 10 or 12 bombs, launched from long-range aircraft, submarines, or surface ships. The Germans have at least 300 U-boats in the Atlantic. Six or eight would be needed to attack New York. Admiral John Ingram, C-in-C, U.S. Atlantic Fleet, Factors of Dispersal. — Nothing has so puzzled public opinion in Great Britain (and might almost be said in America) than the report, which is the property in America, that there are in the United States and Canada, whether they have fewer than 50 divisions or the Western Front, 2,000,000 land troops. Between them the British Commonwealth and America have about 20,000,000 miles of coastline. The land forces in the west probably number not more than a million. They have the advantage of shorter and better communications and prepared defensible positions. Apparently the Allies have not on land the numerical superiority required for an offensive breakthrough on a large scale. The experience of the last three weeks shows that in modern war a few thousand heavy bombers are no substitute for a strategic reserve of land. We might have suspected that in August when the Allied successes went unexploited. The experiment in Canada at the Quebec conference of using air power to bring about the collapse of Germany has produced not altogether favourable results. The need seems to be for a mobile and substantial reserve of land forces capable of exploiting a breach anywhere, the German line or of dealing with a German counter-attack without affecting preparations on other parts of the Allied front. None the less, German collapse, like German recovery, may come more quickly than has been expected. From the upheaval that has taken place after the German incursion we can draw some conclusions about three things: the danger of dispersal in Europe before tackling anything but essentials in the Far East; and the dangers of over-reliance on air power alone. — Observer.

General Plastiras. — The new Prime Minister of Greece rose to his generalship from the ranks. He was three times promoted for valour in the 1922 campaign against Turkey. He headed the Revolutionary Committee which forced Constantine to abdicate, and later compelled George of Hellènes to give up his rulership. Plastiras was married to a Greek Minister. He is responsible for the Greek disaster of 1932. They were shot. In 1935 he was overthrown and deported. For 12 years he lived as an exile in the Riviera. The Greeks also called him 'The Compassionate One' for he has adopted 500 orphans as his own children. — Daily Mail.

Taming the Hun. — Hitlerism is endemic in the German character; the gross arrogance of the German; the vulgar selfishness which is so particularly his; the bullying shouting, Zuberi attitude of mind; the authoritarian complex which calls for a loud, noisy display of force and knowledge in all his activities. It might have long before the 1914-18 war. Not for nothing did Nietzsche refer to the Hun as a lion beast, not for nothing were the Germans for generations talked of the brutto Teutonico. But the taming of this kind of man is not moved, except in times such as the present, by the moralizing of the Continent. We see everywhere indications of our own simple tolerances. Our upright simple outlook causes us to tolerate values. We meet gentle German pastors and philosophers, kindly German passants, schö korsetts, German townfolk, hotel-keepers, guides, si ha un mal uomo, whose civility depends on their correct conduct. We meet korrekts officials and hard-headed businessmen. They all look upon us as unser beste Engländer. No doubt there are acceptable individuals in a nation of 70,000,000. But history can only regard that as a mass the Germans are a war-mongering, aggressive people, a menace to the rest, continued existence of mankind and its works. The mere occupation of Germany for a decade or so will not do it. The Romans were in Britain for centuries. The Britons learned much from them by precept and example. We need to take an exceptionally long view of this villainous task. Let Germany therefore be kept totally under Allied control for several generations, so that the example of the violent and tolerant Hun may make its impression on these raging, raging war-mongers of the Hun. — Mr. H. S. Applethorn, in The Times.

Responsibilities of the Press. — Nobody must think of asking the Press to keep from its readers the divergence of views between allies, but the Press should never allow readers to forget that the mass of common interests infinitely outweighs passing disagreements. Those who would public opinion must sustain from useless recriminations. Mutual contact has become more necessary between our statesmen and the Press. Mr. Massigli, French Ambassador in Great Britain,

Pan-African Conference

Advocated in Kenya Legislature

We recently reported that Mr. Alfred Vincent, Leader of the European-elected members of the Legislative Council of Kenya, had given notice on a motion asking for an immediate pan-African conference.

The motion was introduced by the Legislative last week and a telegram about it from Nairobi to The Times reads:

"It is my conviction that the Council Committee that no further time should be lost in endeavouring to achieve the fullest collaboration in examining problems common to adjoining British African territories and that they should request the Secretary of State for the Colonies to urge the British Government to invite the Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa to arrange a conference of the Secretary, to include non-official representatives from Kenya Colony, an order to plan and to co-ordinate the development of British territories in East and Southern and Eastern Africa."

The motion was introduced from the Imperial point of view, and there was nothing in it that suggested disloyalty to the British Government. It merely asked for the right to come to terms with neighbouring territories on mutual problems. This right was recognized also by both Northern and Southern Rhodesia. Southern Rhodesia has made this clear by a unanimous resolution of her Parliament in May, 1943, that a pan-African conference should be called immediately, and Northern Rhodesia had confidentially advised that the conference would be held.

Must Plan on the Greater African Level

Mr. Vincent said that Africa was a separate problem today. The best plan on the greater African level that they could not afford to wait for the peace conference. America and Great Britain must be made to realize that this great continent had grown into nations in fifteen months had elapsed since Southern Rhodesia passed its unanimous resolution, and no reason had been given for its delay.

Was the British Government afraid that a conference would give rise to inconvenient political questions by those at Home who were always suspicious of anything intended by the white communities of Africa? No member of the Council would enhance any influence to effect a change in the Native policy of the territories unless it was directly beneficial to the Native themselves, and unless it had been fully discussed with those responsible for Colonial Native policy and Native interests.

For fear, no doubt, of the possible influence of South African politics and probable changes in their Government. Whatever party held power in South Africa must seek markets for the country's industrial expansion, and must foster good relationship with adjoining territories in the interests of the people of South Africa alone. He feared nothing on this score. Changes of Government were bound to occur, but meanwhile it was sane to expect Africa to stand still.

Planning for Africa must be done in Africa, he said. I welcome the frank admission of Sirs by the Secretary of State for the Colonies. We may see now the opportunity to do that planning. The request for this conference is the acid test of the Imperial Government's sincerity.

Earlier in his address Mr. Vincent had stated that he would welcome at the proposed conference members from Belgian, French, and Portuguese territories in Africa.

Proposal Welcomed by the Governor

The Governor, intervening in the debate, said that the Kenya Government were invited to take part in any conference of the neighbouring States in Africa, whether in the Union or elsewhere; they would be exceedingly happy to do so. Nevertheless, the motion was one which by its nature made it desirable that official members should not speak or vote on it.

Mr. Vincent's opposition came from Indian members, who declined to have anything to do with South Africa unless the Union Government removed disabilities suffered by Indian in the Union.

A telegram to the Daily Express reads that Mr. Vincent said:

"Regional councils, with which the peace treaty may well endow us, may be a source of good or a source of danger, and we have a right to discuss the constitution and powers of these councils before they are foisted on us. If not, we may again be hammered for a quarter of a century."

"We realize that we must have to do all we can to help rebuild Britain's export trade after the war and develop this Colony as a real asset to the Empire, but we cannot expect to be in a position to do so unless we first put our own African house in order. We cannot afford to wait for a peace conference. We cannot again be an after-thought of a peace conference."

According to the Daily Herald, the spokesman for the European elected members also declared:

"Barriers between territories between a Colonial bloc, Southern Rhodesia and South Africa, must be broken down. The sub-continent must never be allowed to sink back into the pre-war state of artificial division."

The reporter report, as published in an abbreviated form in many newspapers, gave the name of the Governor as Sir Henry Moore, who, as our readers are aware, left Kenya some weeks ago. The present Governor, Sir Philip Mitchell, was sworn in a month ago.

Official comment on the motion was given by Mr. Momen.

Social Centres for Africans

A grant of £50,000 from the Colonial Development and Welfare Fund has been made for the building and equipment of social centres for Africans at the headquarters of the main districts in Tanganyika and in certain rural districts of the Territory. The centres are intended to provide meeting places for more advanced Africans, including ex-Servicemen, act as educational centres for adults, and fulfil some of the functions of local clubs. The Tanganyika Government and the Native administrations, which will be closely connected with the scheme, will share the recurrent costs of management.

Most of the centres will be provided with a club-room, lecture-hall, library and reading-rooms and an office which could be used as an employment bureau. In the larger centres there may be a hostel with a few beds and a canteen.

The Government of Tanganyika is of the opinion that such institutes will play a useful part in the social and cultural development of Africans after the war.

East Coast Fever and Overstocking

Under Native conditions every calf which dies means a cow which ceases to milk, and in order to secure a bare minimum supply of milk for his domestic needs, and in order to maintain, let alone increase, his number of cattle, the average Native stockowner finds it necessary to keep far more cows than would be the case if a larger proportion of the calves could be reared. East Coast fever should be one of the fundamental causes of overstocking is so paradoxical that this aspect of the problem appears to have been overlooked in the past. — Report of South N. East Local Native Council.

Missing Air Line Found

The British Overseas Airways Lockheed Lodestar air-liner "Lyndhurst," which left Nairobi for Juba on November 29 with seven Servicemen as passengers and a crew of three, has been found in the hills some 50 miles from the Kenya capital. The aircraft had evidently crashed into a hillside, and it is almost certain that crew and passengers were killed instantly.

Nyasaland's Post-War Plans

Tea, Tobacco and

Further interim reports by the Post-War Development Committee of Nyasaland have arrived in this country. They deal with agriculture and livestock husbandry and demobilization.

In regard to European crops, the members of the Committee (two senior officials and six well-known non-officials) were of the opinion that together with the European and other crops, the possible future vacancies of the market should be considered. It is considered that the sparsely populated land which offers possibilities for the development of the crop tobacco in the Northern Province. We think that the Government should provide sufficient security of land-holding to allow the Europeans to develop the secured industry in the Northern Province. Certain areas which we have in mind suffer from a certain degree of infertility, and we emphasize that facilities for irrigation and necessary water should be made available, as does the irrigation territories.

Tea is one of the best prospects for large-scale development in the Northern Province, and it is hoped that a very definite and definite proposal for assisting its development will be put forward to establish the industry as quickly as possible. So far the areas have not shown themselves susceptible to disease in Nyasaland, and we understand that Government is investigating the growth of tung trees by natives in the Northern Province.

Under the grant of an exclusive licence, pyrethrum growing has been started in one selected area. The licence is held by a European farmer, and the crop is grown and produced by Native tenants. It has not yet been proved that pyrethrum is a profitable undertaking in Nyasaland, but there is nothing to indicate that the required hundreds of product cannot be obtained. It is suggested that a number of grounds are most suitable for the extension of the industry to other suitable areas, and it is suggested that plots have already been established.

Experiments for Quinine Production

Work is being done in close experiments to be made for the growing of cinchona in view of the monopoly held by the Dutch East India Company. Experiments are now being made at Vindula, Chitanga, Chimba and elsewhere, and we understand that it is probable that other suitable areas will show themselves to be suitable.

The Committee are of the opinion that the soya bean could be grown by Africans in co-operation with the difficulty hitherto being that Africans in the Protectorate have not taken to this food, though where Europeans have been by means to encourage its use. For instance, at the Jeanjean school success has been marked. It is therefore suggested that demonstration grounds should be employed to make soya bean popular.

The area of tobacco grown by Africans on Trust lands was 73,177 acres in 1942, and the production figures during the years from 1929 to 1943 inclusive are given as follows: 1929, 29,230 lb.; 1930, 7,245,120 lb.; 1931, 16,430,000 lb.; 1932, 12,438,907 lb.; 1933, 13,542,392 lbs.

It is stated that cotton growing could be extended. Many new areas and research is advocated to find disease-resisting strains and means of increasing the yield.

Cotton lint exports during the last five years are stated as being: 1942, 2,557,794 lb.; 1943, 2,653,000 lb.; 1944, 2,250,820 lb.; 1945, 1,100,000 lb.; and 1,439,110 lb. respectively.

The Committee is of opinion that the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, but there is need for a re-arrangement of the work of the 130 departments, as suggested by the Director of Agriculture and the Chief Veterinary Officer.

Country Exceptionally Well Forested

Nyasaland is exceptionally well provided with forests than most parts of East and Central Africa, slightly over 9% of its total land area being now contained within reserves, demarcated village forests, closed hill slopes, and the protected banks of streams. Other woodlands in water courses and unoccupied corners of private estates are estimated at about 10% of the total area. The latest comparable figures for Northern Rhodesia, Tanganyika Territory and Uganda respectively are given as 3.4%, 1.5% and 1.2%.

The Committee are of the opinion that the Government should consider the bringing under State control a certain percentage of the total area of the country, and should consider that a certain percentage of the total area should be reserved for any particular purpose. For example, rural areas should be reserved for the purpose of the production of a certain percentage of the population, as great a proportion of the population should be reserved for human habitation by means of a certain percentage of the total area that is reserved for the purpose of the production of a suitable equivalent.

Generally, we consider that the aim should be to deal with an aggregate of 5,000 acres in the first five years and with 11,000 acres in the second five years. While extra European supervision will be necessary in the initial stages, the policy should be to train Africans to take the place of those Europeans and to take over the type of work.

As regards the production of saw timber for European and industrial needs, the Forest Department's current programme allows for an annual felling of 105 acres. We think that this should be increased to 200 acres a year involving operations at five different centres.

The recommendations in regard to the demobilization of Africans are given in our war columns.

Nyasaland's Non-Official M.L.Cs.

The Governor recently told the Legislature of Nyasaland that he was authorized to say that the Secretary of State for the Colonies had expressed sympathy with the views of the European community to choose its own representatives on the Legislature, and that he would give full consideration to any proposals advanced by the non-official members. It is understood that Sir William Tai-Bowie, their leader, will make proposals forthwith.

Nyasaland's Budget

Nyasaland's revised estimate of revenue for 1944, excluding grants from the Colonial Development and Welfare Fund, stands at £796,895, and the revenue estimate for 1945 is £773,851 after allowing for a drop of £20,000 in receipts from income tax. Grants from the C.D.F. and in-aid of loan interest charges are calculated to raise the gross revenue to £1,046,229, and the gross expenditure is put at £1,080,769.

LATEST MINING NEWS

N. Rhodesian Copper Industry

We can now amplify our recent report of the address given by the Governor of Northern Rhodesia to representatives of the Chamber of Mines, the Northern Rhodesian Mine Workers' Union, and the Officials' Association.

We found that the speech of the world's chief copper producers, Sir John Addison, on the copper industry is a challenge to the world's copper industry to compete successfully in the world's markets. I suggest that this can be achieved only if all internal strife in the industry ceases, and all parties face the future united in their determination to overcome any difficulties that may arise.

"I stress this not only in the interest of the copper industry, but in the interest of the whole of Northern Rhodesia, for the future of all other minerals in this territory will depend on a successful solution of the problem of copper production."

Since the new contracts were not to be renewed, it seemed possible that there would be some reduction in output, and there must be careful consideration how the rate of any such reduction could be put into effect with the least detriment to the industry and the least detriment to individuals.

Of retrenchment Mr. John Waddington said: "A short time ago, when retrenchment on a small scale became necessary at Broken Hill, I called a meeting of representatives of the management and the Union to arrive at agreement on general principles in this matter. As it was, then, only a matter for Broken Hill, the Officials' Association was not brought into the discussion. It is, however, that the general principles which were under discussion then would become of general application in the event of a further sale of Broken Hill, and I like to refer to the matter now that representatives of the Officials' Association are present."

The Governor said that any comments on the proposals, a copy of which was given to the Association, would be welcomed. Although the recommendations were of a general character, he hoped they would prove of value if the retrenchment became necessary.

Outlook for Copper

Last week we summarized authoritative statements regarding the outlook for Northern Rhodesian copper. It has since been suggested that the stocks of the metal in the United Kingdom are about equal to a whole year's requirements. The French Government has, however, made some purchases, and further demands from the Continent are likely to be met from U.K. stocks.

S. Rhodesian Mineral Output

The gold output of Southern Rhodesia in November totalled 47,685 oz., a fall of 688 oz. from the previous month's total, but the production of base minerals was higher, being valued at £211,544. This is first month in which production has passed the £200,000 mark.

Exploration Company Reconstruction

The Exploration Co., Ltd., which has an issued capital of £250,255, is to reorganize its capital. Before the war the company lost heavily through salubrious Rhodesian Goldfields, Ltd.

S. Rhodesian Mining Commission

During a debate in the Parliament of Southern Rhodesia the Minister of Mines disclosed that the fee to be paid to Professor Frankel, Chairman of the Mining Commission, is to be £2,000, on the understanding that the inquiry does not last more than six months. A supplementary fee will be paid if that period is exceeded.

Since Professor Frankel is now visiting Europe in connection with the question of gold, the Government of Southern Rhodesia is also anxious to have the great value to the Colony in connection with the gold and otherwise.

The Minister, Mr. W. B. Fergusson, said that the Rhodesian members of the Mining Commission, particularly Mr. Durham and Mr. Owen, had agreed to serve for a period of six months, since they regarded the work as an opportunity to serve the State. Mr. Hill, who has just retired from an important mining post in the Union of South Africa, has likewise accepted a very low fee of £1,000 as a mining consultant to the Colony.

A LINK IN THE ALLIED CHAIN OF WAR SUPPLIES

Troops, war equipment, food, and thousands of tons of other material essential to the Allied war effort pass daily over the Rhodesian railway system.

War-time conditions have never made it easy to handle the greatly increased volume of traffic, but difficulties have been overcome, and the Rhodesia Railways continue to form one of the important links which hold together the great chain of Allied war supplies.
