

Homogeneity and the relation between earnings and firm size: evidence from two developing countries

Abstract

Large firms in Ghana and Kenya pay much higher wages than small ones. We use panel data to show this is not the result of employing high-ability individuals. The size effect remains substantial with controls for individual fixed effects.