

ABSTRACT

This study seeks to investigate the challenges facing humanitarian intervention as a of third party mode conflict management and whether it is adequately and timely used in situations of conflict that lead to widespread violations of human rights of victims. Secondly study will also investigate whether the general principles of humanitarian intervention state sovereignty and consent are applicable in cases of gross violation of human rights. will be used as a case study. Both primary and secondary data will be consulted in conducting this research. data will include structured interviews with key informants being Sudanese refugees Kenya and Sudanese Embassy officials, Individuals who have worked in Sudan and other conflict areas, individuals working in NGO world and have extensively worked in Darfur region and other conflict areas and finally academicians in the field of conflict. This study has critically analyzed the concept of humanitarian intervention in Darfur with a view to adding on to already existing literature on the subject. At the end of the study it will clearly come out that humanitarian intervention should take place in the Darfur region in order to avert the suffering of the civilians in this region.