The distribution of educational resources and opportunities in Kenya

by

Kabiru Kinyanjui

Discussion Paper No. 208

Institute for Development Studies
University of Nairobi
P.O. Box 30197
Nairobi, Kenya

August 1974

The author wishes to thank O. Gakuru, John Kamau and Mr. Muraya for their assistance in preparing this paper. The research on which this paper is based was partially supported by the African-American Institute, and the author is most grateful for this support.

Views expressed in this paper are those of the author. They should not be interpreted as reflecting the views of the Institute for Development Studies or of the University of Nairobi.
THE DISTRIBUTION OF EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES AND OPPORTUNITIES IN KENYA

BY

Kabiru Kinyanjui

ABSTRACT

This paper describes some preliminary data on the disparities in education provision in Kenya. Comparisons are made between educational opportunities in rural and urban areas and among different rural communities. The financial burdens of education are also shown to be distributed unevenly among different social groups. The origins of inequalities in education provision are traced to the colonial period, and the disparities in the provision of primary and secondary school places, which have persisted and in some cases increased since independence, are pointed out.

In addition, the quality of the education provided by different primary schools and by the three different types of secondary schools, as measured in terms of equipment provided, teachers' academic qualifications and school leavers' examination scores, is compared, and the prejudice against Harambee school leavers in the labour market is discussed.

It clearly emerges from this analysis that educational benefits are being distributed in favour of the economically and politically powerful districts and provinces in the country. The existing stratification of schools at primary and secondary levels perpetuates the income inequalities in the society.