Abstract:

Conflict and conflict situations leave us in a dilemma where we keep asking, what next? In conflict situations, the sad faces are more than the happy ones. Military training is becoming compulsory for women, and children are left alone in the ruins of war; mined fields and rebel groups abduct children to be made soldiers. In many African countries, peace keepers is an ever present phenomenon, women travel over long distance of perched land to search for water, African forests have been put in high eco alert, benefits from rich resources as oil rarely benefit the population. This paper tries to answer the question do we still have any hope for finding viable solutions to these conflicts?
