

Prof. Atinga attends Plagiarism software workshop at medical school library

On the 12th May 2015 at the medical school library Prof. Atinga attended a workshop for the College of Health Sciences led by a team from the main library on plagiarism software.

During workshop Prof. Atinga and other chairs of respective departments were introduced to the software. They found it be very versatile and relatively easy to use. Most felt this would greatly help in reducing the scourge of plagiarism.

While awaiting formalization and roll out to members of the university, each school was issued with a password for their initial use. The department of surgery was allocated a password for the school of medicine.
