

Some of the vaccination procedures which may be used to induce partial or complete immunity to parasitic diseases are outlined, and the problem of identifying protective antigens is considered with reference to schistosomiasis, trypanosomiasis, leishmaniasis and malaria.