CASELAP is participating at the national workshop on land management for County Governors, organized by the National Land Commission. The meeting, from 17-20 July will discuss and analyse various core issues related to land management and administration, particularly in a changed governance system. These include the role of County Governments in managing land, transitional challenges and opportunities, and the roles of other stakeholders. CASELAP's Dr. Collins Odote is present at the workshop to present a paper entitled "The role of County Governments in land management/devolved functions." Land management is a core element of CASELAP's research and teaching mandate such that this outreach can only add value to the Centre, and to successful implementation of new land laws, and devolved government functions.
