NOTICE OF MOTION

TRANSFER OF POWERS (VARIATION) ORDERS, 1960

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to give notice of the following Motion:—

THAT this Council approves the draft Orders entitled "Transfer of Powers (Variation) Orders, 1960".

ORAL ANSWER TO QUESTION

QUESTION No. 82

Mr. Alexander (Nairobi West) asked the Chief Secretary, has Government received the Corfield Report on the origins of Mau Mau and, if so, when will it be published?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard): With reference to Question No. 82 on 19th October, 1959, Group Captain Briggs asked a question which in my view is substantially in the same terms as that posed in Question No. 82. In accordance with Standing Order 24 (4) I must accordingly rule that that Question No. 82 is technically out of order. Nevertheless, if Government has any further information and if the Chief Secretary is in a position to make a statement, this would be of public interest and would

[The Deputy Speaker] probably meet with the wishes of this House. In that case, of course, there would be no question of any supplementaries.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENT: CORFIELD REPORT

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, the Historical Survey of the Origins and Growth of Moi Man has been received from Mr. Corfield and is with the Government Printer. I hope to lay it in Legislative Council early next month.

BUSINESS OF COUNCIL

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, with your permission before the suspension of Standing Orders in order to allow the Motion moved by my hon. friend the Minister for Legal Affairs to be taken I would like to mention for all hon. Members' information a decision taken by Sessional Committee, at a meeting today to the effect that after the speech by my hon. friend, the Minister for Finance, on 27th April we will, in view of the fact that there will be no Private Members' Days thereafter, have two days—Thursday and Friday, i.e. 28th and 29th April—as Private Members' Days for Private Members' Motions. This will give all hon. Members the chance to consider the speech by the Minister for Finance over the following week-end and we will then start a debate on the speech on Tuesday, 3rd May. There will therefore be two Private Members' Days, 28th and 29th, and the speech will begin on Tuesday, 3rd May.

MOTION

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Sir, I beg to move that Standing Orders be suspended to the extent necessary to enable Council to consider today the Motion of which Notice has been given earlier this afternoon to approve the two Transfer of Powers (Variation) Draft Orders, 1960, in view of their urgency consequential upon the reconstruction of the Government and the redistribution of Ministerial portfolios.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I feel that if there is to be any debate it should be on the substantive Motion which will follow the suspension of Standing Orders and I do not propose to add anything to what I have said and beg to move.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock) seconded.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

MOTION

TRANSFER OF POWERS (VARIATION) ORDERS, 1960

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that this Council approves the draft Orders entitled "Transfer of Powers (Variation) Orders, 1960".

There are, Sir, two draft Orders involved and they are the two Orders which I laid in draft earlier this afternoon. Since the enactment of the Transfer and Delegation of Powers Ordinance, in 1955, certain powers and duties originally vested by various laws in the Governor and in the Governor in Council respectively have been transferred by Orders made under that Ordinance and approved by this Council to specified Ministers who have been designated in those Orders by reference to the titles of their Ministries. From time to time changes have been necessary and those Orders have been varied. Now, since the abolition of the Ministry of African Affairs and the reconstitution of the Government and the redistribution of portfolios, it is necessary to make formal variations of those existing Orders to take account of the reconstituted Ministries and to transfer the powers and duties in question to the appropriate Ministers today. It is proposed, as hon. Members will see in the draft Orders, to transfer these powers in the proposed Orders to the Ministers responsible for the particular matter in question and without attaching a specific designation founded on the titles of their Ministries. This will facilitate any changes in subjects as between portfolios, since it will always be the Minister, whatever his title, who is responsible for the subject in question; and this arrangement is in fact in accord with the definition in the Interpretation and General Provisions Ordinance of the term "the Minister" which is, in that Ordinance, defined as being the "Minister for the time being responsible for the matter in question".

Sir, this is a formal matter but it is necessary that these Orders should be approved in draft and then submitted to the Governor in Council in accordance with the Ordinance to be made formally and to be brought into force so that we do not by reason of the absence of these formal variations in sympathy with the redistribution of portfolios retard the normal legislative processes of Government.

Sir, I beg to move.

Mr. Webb seconded.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard): I will call upon Mr. Coutts to move the Adjournment.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, as I may wish to speak in this debate, may I ask another Minister to do so for me?

ADJOURNMENT MOTION

PROPOSED STRIKE ON GOOD FRIDAY

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that this Council do now adjourn to give an opportunity for a debate on a certain matter.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I wish to raise on the adjournment the matter of the call by the Nairobi People's Convention Party for a one-day strike on April 15th, Good Friday, and a procession to deliver a petition to Government House on that day for the release of Jomo Kenyatta.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, there are three reasons for raising this matter today. Firstly, Kenya is predominantly a Christian country and it is right that this House should have an opportunity to register its indignation and its shame at this attempt to desecrate Good Friday by blasphemously associating it with the worst of political motives and with a name that has vilified offended against Christian and human behaviour. Here I would like, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to congratulate the Nairobi African National Congress Youth Wing and the Mombasa African Democratic Union for what is reported in today's newspaper as their particular attitude to this. I shall quote what the Youth Wing have said: "Another reason is that the day chosen by the National People's Convention Party is Good Friday and nothing should be done to interfere with the religious observances of a large number of people."

I would also, Mr. Deputy Speaker, like to express appreciation of the way in which the Kenya Broadcasting Services have handled this particular matter through the African vernacular broadcasts on Monday and Tuesday of last week and to express disappointment that the commentaries on those two days were not released in English to all the English-speaking papers as I am sure they would have been of very great interest to a far wider audience. I would invite the Kenya Broadcasting Service to at least put these out in the English programmes.

A second reason for this debate, for raising this matter today, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that it will give an opportunity, I believe, for African Elected Members—those on my left and in front of me—to state their particular attitude on this matter. It would, of course, be refreshing and encouraging to hear words of condemnation from them here today.

Thirdly and lastly, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it does give an opportunity to the Minister for Labour to say whether he has investigated whether the Trade Union Movement is in any way implicated in this particular move. We all know quite clearly, of course, that through personalities the Nairobi People's Convention Party is closely linked at any rate with the Kenya Federation of Labour and the reasonable assumption is that there is or might be a connexion between them in this particular respect. I hope the Minister for Labour, when replying, will be able to assure us that there is not, because, of course, the Trade Union Ordinance, section 17, does enable the Minister to cancel or suspend the registration of a trade union if it is discovered that it is being used for purposes outside the definition of Trade Union in the Ordinance. I did tell the Minister this morning that I would be raising this particular point and I hope he has had adequate time in which to find out something about this possible implication.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support the Motion for the Adjournment.

Mr. Mate (Central Province North): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, while I am not a member of the Nairobi People's Convention Party, and it is a pity that the Member for Nairobi Area is not here, arising out of the speech of the Member for Nairobi West, there are one or two things I would like to point out.

Personally, I would sympathize with the desire to do something on the part of the Nairobi People's Convention Party for the release of Jomo Kenyatta and the other detainees. On the choice of dates it has raised doubts in my mind whether they were very wise in choosing the day, they have chosen, which coincides with another very important and sacred date for the majority of our people, such as Christians who like to see this day preserved, and our Government does recognize that. I wish they could have chosen a better day, or they would have been advised to choose a better day for that kind of thing, because, Sir, I feel it does offend many Christians to have this particular day chosen for this kind of thing. I am sure too that there may be Christians in the Nairobi People's Convention Party who might find themselves in a dilemma. So, on the question of date I think I am speaking for many people when I say that it is an unfortunate choice, and I feel they could have chosen a better day.

On the question of the exercise as it affects the release of Jomo Kenyatta and other detainees I differ very much from the Member for Nairobi West. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have held many meetings since coming back from London, together with many other African Members [Mr. Mate] throughout the Central Province and Nairobi. I would like it to be known that contrary to popular opinion, or so-called popular opinion, it is the view of all the people, of the great majority, 99 per cent of the people, in the Central Province, the K.E.M., that Jomo Kenyatta and other detainees should be released.

An hon. Member: (Inaudible.)

Mr. Mate: Yes, questions you can ask, but I have held these meetings and the public opinion has not raised any questions. And I would like to challenge anyone who says that that is not the popular opinion in the Central Province, and in so far as these societies in Nairobi wish to make it very evident that we want these people back—not only Jomo Kenyatta, but other people—I am speaking as representing public opinion in the Central Province—and I would like the hon. Member for Nairobi West or even the Government to challenge me on that publicly. The time is coming when this question must be looked upon in a much cooler atmosphere and what the Member for Nairobi West likes to associate with the names of these people—anything horrible he can think of—I am sure in the Central Province we want to see things repaired. We do not share his point of view. And, Sir, I would like to remind our Government that history in our own lifetime has shown that there is not a matter which is beyond the Kenya Government to use its influence for the release of all these detainees from the Central Province. Without dwelling on this, because I could quote cases of politicians who from time to time have been released from detention—Archbishop Makarios, Dr. Hastings Banda, and many others—and in the Central Province we are not being moved only by emotion, but we feel it is time that this matter was given more attention. And so, Sir, while regretting that the Nairobi People's Convention Party should have chosen a day like Good Friday—I hope they will change their minds—I would most categorically differ from the Member for Nairobi West in so far as the wish of our people, that Jomo Kenyatta and many other people I could mention here should be given a chance to come home and settle back in their own homes. The Member for Nairobi West may have his own reasons for not wanting to see these people. If they are political reasons he is out of date. Political advance in Kenya today has gone beyond the mere question of not liking a face. And, Sir, I would like to submit to this Government today that I have this opportunity to state that this is the general opinion of the Central Province that these people should come back, and those who claim to represent public opinion in the Central Province, I challenge them to any public meeting today to share a platform with me, in challenging the submission of the Kikuyu, Embu and Meru people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

The Temporary Minister for Labour, Social Security and Adult Education (Mr. Luyt): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would like to thank the hon. Member for Nairobi West for letting me know in advance that he intended to raise the trade union aspect of the issue that he has ventilated this afternoon. This has given me a little opportunity to attempt to find out whether or not the trade unions were implicating themselves in the strike called for Good Friday.

I would agree, Sir, that it would be reprehensible for trade unions to associate themselves with the use of the strike weapon to coerce Government for a purpose such as this, or any other political purpose, but I am very glad to say that in so far as my enquiries have been able to cover the ground, I have no information whatsoever that any trade union is officially associating itself with the call for this strike on Good Friday. It may be that there are individuals who have political affiliation with the body which has called this strike. Those individuals themselves may be prominent trade unionists, but despite that I can repeat that I am not aware of any trade union, as such, associating itself with this call for a strike on Good Friday. Under those circumstances I am quite sure the hon. Member would not wish me to dwell on what sanctions, in terms of the provisions of the Trade Union Ordinance, might be applied to any trade union. In any case prior to the commission of any potential offence it would, I think, be wrong for me or for the Government to dwell upon these sanctions that would be applied.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, the hon. Member for Nairobi West really raised three points in his brief speech. The first was the offence in a Christian country to Christian people. Second, he hoped that Africans would state their particular attitude to this strike; and the third was the implication of the trade union movement. My hon. friend the Temporary Minister for Labour has dealt with the third point and therefore I do not propose to touch on it.

As regards the second point, the hon. Member for Meru has made his position obviously quite clear and I would like to answer the hon. Member for Nairobi West's first point and also the hon. Member for Meru.

I would agree with the hon. Member for Nairobi West that this form of demonstration in a Christian country is liable to offend good Christians anywhere, and I think, also with the hon. Member for Meru, that whatever the reason, this was and is a particularly bad day for anyone to choose for a demonstration.

I have noted also what the hon. Member for Nairobi West has said about the vernacular broadcasts and I will pass on to the proper quarter the possible criticism which he has had about not releasing in English the commentaries which have been put out in the vernacular, but also the commendation which he has made of the commentaries themselves.

Now, Sir, I come to probably what was the real core of the hon. Member's intention in moving this debate on the Adjournment, and that is the whole question, once more in this House, of the release of Jomo Kenyatta. I noted that the hon. Member for Meru has said that most people, in fact all people, in the Central Province would wish Jomo Kenyatta to be released, and he hoped that the Government would use its influence to release him. He also stated that he hoped there would be more attention paid by the Government to this matter. He also said that if the hon. Member for Nairobi West wanted him released for political reasons this was not a good reason; but I would like to tell the hon. Member that the Government is not restricting Jomo Kenyatta for political reasons. I would also like to repeat what I have said in this House before—that it is not the Government's intention to release Jomo Kenyatta, restrictees or detainees as long as this Government believes that these people are a danger to security or to their fellow peoples in this country. It has been stated by me in this House and it has been stated quite recently by His Excellency the Governor that as long as these conditions remain this Government has no intention of releasing these people. I will say that the case of each person is considered and considered regularly. If we consider there is no longer a security risk then obviously that person will be released, as indeed we are releasing people every day of the week, and I do not think it is necessary for me to add any more to what I have said now or what I have said in the past; and, Sir, I also support the Motion.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard): That brings us to the close of business on the Order Paper, but before I move that we do adjourn I understand that the Chief Secretary has a further statement.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENT

VALEDICTORY

MR. A. HOPE-JONES AND MR. D. L. BLUNT

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, today two of my colleagues are virtually leaving the Front Bench of this House. One, I think, has not appeared today because he has already tendered a resignation which has been accepted, and the other, I think, is with us for the last time. I would, Sir, therefore, with your permission, like to say something about both of them as indeed I feel it should be customary for us to say something about people with whom we have served for some considerable time.

I would like to start by referring to my friend and colleague, Mr. Arthur Hope-Jones, who has been for some 13 years either Minister for or Member for, or connected with, the Portfolio of Commerce and Industry. Sir, Mr. Hope-Jones has been in this country since 1946, and speaking both as a Member of the Government and one who from time to time, when I have got time, dispassionately looks at Kenya and its development, one cannot but be struck with the fact that practically all the commercial and industrial development of any real importance has taken place in this country between the years 1946 and 1960. Prior to the year 1946 very little had been done by the Government in a positive way, although I would not like to belittle the efforts, particularly of the Industrial Development Board, during the war years. Therefore, I feel that this Government and this country owes a considerable debt to the person who has been mainly in charge during these years.

We will also, I think, miss in the House the ebullience of Mr. Hope-Jones's own presence. I must say that I have always envied his ability to stand four square to all winds and put his feet apart, to hitch his coat above his braces, stick out his jaw, and without a note whatsoever of any kind, to demolish all opposition which was raised against him. The staccato sentences which he habitually used in demolishing that opposition reminded me more of a machine-gun than the normal speech which is produced by people in the Legislative Council.

All of these things, Sir, we will remember, and on your behalf, and indeed on behalf of all Members of the House, I would like to wish Mr. Hope-Jones the best of luck now and in the future.

The other person whom we have now lost is Mr. Blunt. It is not really necessary for me to repeat in this House the number of things which Mr. Blunt has done for the Colony of Kenya during the time he has been here. Most people will remember him, those who have been in the Colony for a long time, as a very eminent Director of Agriculture rather than as a Minister, the post of which he has carried also with distinction in more recent years. In his own Ministry, at the council table, and even in this House, he has very seldom pushed himself forward and yet one always knew the force of character which lay behind whatever he said, and one was bound to respect whatever he said.

ADJOURNMENT

We respected him both for himself and for his deep knowledge of a large number of things. Even at this moment he has been representing this Government at a conference which has been called to consider the threat of locust devastation in the northern parts of Africa, and we know that probably nobody in this country has had a greater knowledge of the desert locust than Mr. Blunt or has, in fact, done more for this Colony in the field of locust prevention. Those of us who remember the middle 'thirties will remember the scourge of locusts in this country and the fact that these scourges have not been as frequent recently as in the past has undoubtedly been due to the Desert Locust Research Organization for which and with which Mr. Blunt has worked for many years.

I would also like to refer briefly to the very brave manner in which he personally has borne what must have been an intolerable illness for so many years. I only hope that if any of us should be so unlucky as to be struck with such an illness that we ourselves will be able to bear it with such courage and such fortitude.

Sir Charles Markham (Ukamaba): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not think you should adjourn this House until somebody from this side of the Council has shared the tribute moved by my hon. friend, the Chief Secretary, to the two Ministers, Mr. Hope-Jones and Mr. Blunt.

As far as both gentlemen are concerned, Sir, I feel, on this side of the Council are deeply conscious to the debt we owe them for the help they have given us and the help they have given Kenya during the many years they have served her.

As far as Mr. Hope-Jones is concerned, he has been a personal friend of mine since I came back to this country in 1948, and I am very sorry indeed that the wind of change has resulted in the fact that there is no longer a vacancy for him in the Kenya Government. But, nevertheless, Sir, we hope we will see him back here in another capacity soon, Sir, perhaps, as we know, in charge of a very big project in Mombasa.

As far as Mr. Blunt is concerned, Sir, I share the Chief Secretary's remarks, and I know that we all do on this side of the Council, about his courage, particularly in the last two or three years; and, Sir, I would like to say that we wish him and Mrs. Blunt the very best of good fortune in the future.

Question that the Council do now adjourn put and carried.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard): That brings us to the close of business for the day, and I accordingly adjourn this Council until 3 p.m. on 27th April.

The House rose at ten minutes past Three o'clock.

Wednesday, 27th April, 1960

The House met at Four o'clock.

MOTION

THAT MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that Mr. Deputy Speaker do now leave the Chair.

On Tuesday, 12th April, the Permanent Secretary to the Treasury laid on the Table the Estimates of Expenditure for 1960/61, that is for the year ending the 30th June, 1961. He also laid Sessional Paper No. 4 of 1959/60 being the Development Programme for the three years ending the 30th June, 1963, and the Economic Survey for 1960. I now present to the Council the Estimates of Revenue for the coming year 1960/61 together with the Financial Statement. I would like to express my appreciation to the Permanent Secretary to the Treasury and to all those officers of the Treasury responsible for the production of the Estimates and the accompanying documents. As a result of the Constitutional changes, which were announced only a few days before the Expenditure Estimates were laid, this task was even more onerous this year than is usually the case not only for the officers of the Treasury but also for the Government Printer. All concerned, however, showed their usual enthusiasm and efficiency with the result that the job was completed on time.

I would also like to acknowledge the work of the Economic Research Division and of the Kenya Unit of the East African Statistical Department both in providing information connected with the Estimates and in preparing the Economic Survey. This is a new departure in our Budgetary procedure. The Survey contains detailed information of our economic progress during the past year and sets out the considerations which are likely to affect the economy during the year ahead. It also gives in a clear and easily readable form the detailed economic information which would otherwise have to be included in this speech. I hope that this innovation, which will assist Members of the Legislative Council in preparing for the Debate on the Financial Statement, will be generally welcomed. It will also provide a wider public with an account of our progress.

It now remains for me to draw attention to some of the more important high-lights affecting the economic sphere. Last year, at the end of his Budget Speech, my predecessor said that we must forge ahead with our plans for development and expansion, accepting, if necessary, a certain amount of calculated sacrifice, so that a Minister for Finance in Kenya could say to this Council, "We can—we have met our commitments. We stand firm again". The Economic Report and the Estimates before the House show that this has now been done. The credit is, if I may say so, that of the people of Kenya whose work, determination and energy have made this possible.

Kenya depends on world conditions for its prosperity. Our exports are almost entirely agricultural, competing in the world markets with those of other primary producing countries. Our imports come from the industrialized countries of the world. The size of the import bill depends in part on the income which the Colony receives from the exports sent overseas. I say "in part" because we receive many advantages from our geographical position and our invisible exports, including tourism, are quite important in helping to pay for our imports.

The world market for primary products has been fairly stable at low prices, but has been improving during the last year. The f.o.b. price of sisal fibre, for example, increased by some 30 per cent, while the average price of meat and meat products was higher by some 15 per cent. The f.o.b. price of coffee per ton was some 2 per cent lower in 1959 than in 1958 and a similar drop was experienced in the f.o.b. price of tea. Overall, however, our export index held up well. The

[The Minister for Finance and Development] world market has been fairly buoyant, but only in so far as extra quantities have been absorbed at similar or slightly better prices than in the previous year. It will be through increased quantities of exports rather than from higher prices that primary producing countries will increase their incomes during 1960.

The industrialized countries of the world have been having a boom year. Production has been increasing and demand has been expanding. This prosperity has increased the demand for our products. It may well be that with boom conditions in the industrialized countries their export prices may increase. In that case our terms of trade could get worse and we should have to export more in order to obtain the same amount of imports during 1960. It is against this background of world conditions that we have to make our own forecasts for 1960.

1959 was a better year than 1958. In 1959 agricultural production improved, prices were more satisfactory, and the returns to all farmers were better than in the previous year. The total contribution of cash agriculture to the gross domestic product was some £35 million compared with £33 million in 1958. The most remarkable expansion has been in the sphere of peasant farming, where the monies so far spent on the Swynnerton Plan are now coming to fruition and where we are really beginning to reap the benefits of land consolidation and farm planning. The increase in the cash incomes of our peasant farmers, including incomes from livestock activities, was nearly £1,500,000 or 20 per cent higher than in 1958, while their payout from coffee sales alone was some 75 per cent larger than in the previous year. These developments are still in their early stages, since with such crops as coffee and tea it is not immediately that one obtains increased harvests. We may expect that, as the modernization of peasant agriculture proceeds, the increased output should be even more considerable and the incomes of the farmers much higher than at present.

Wholesale and retail trade had a satisfactory year, while the manufacturing industries maintained their position and showed signs of improvement in the early months of 1960. Mining had a record year.

Building and construction suffered somewhat, but not to the extent felt in 1958. In that year there was a great fall from the boom of 1957, but, although we have not returned to the building output in value terms of 1957, 1959 was better than 1958. Some indication of what is in store in 1960 can be seen from the value of building plans passed in Nairobi City. Although the annual figures for 1959 showed a slight decline, compared with the first three months of that year, the first three months of 1960 showed an increase of 30 per cent. We realize that some of these plans will not become buildings, but most of them do.

Our exports showed a healthy increase of £4 million. Imports remained relatively unchanged, so that the adverse balance of trade on external account fell by £4,500,000. We were still importing capital goods and producer materials as well as consumer goods, and our trade position was helped by the favourable balance of trade with our neighbouring territories of Tanganyika and Uganda, where we had a favourable balance of some £7 million, which reduced our overall visible trade balance to £16 million.

During 1959 there was a slight increase of about 3,700 in the number of persons employed. The increase in the Wage Bill was some £2 million compared with 1958 and the total for the Colony has been estimated to be of the order of £80 million. A Commissioner is examining the unemployment position. I personally prefer to call it the employment problem. In the modern industrial state, paid employment is the normal condition of the mass of the people. This is not so in a country like Kenya where the whole idea of paid employment only came into being during living memory. In any case, however, the answer is to increase the opportunities for our people to earn a decent living, whether through self-employment or through wage-earning. That is, of course, one of the major objectives of the Government's development plans and policies.

Our efforts in 1959 were successful and the year was one of resumed growth during which the gross domestic product showed an increase of 31 per cent at current prices. If we take only the monetary sector, the increase was of the order of 5 per cent. Allowing for population increases and price changes, an estimate of the real growth per head—again in the monetary sector—was of the order of 3 per cent, which compares most favourably with 1958, when there was a slight fall. The price level has, of course, remained remarkably stable, the Nairobi cost-of-living index being only one-third of 1 per cent higher in February, 1960, than in mid-1958, about 1 per cent higher than in mid-1957 and less than 5 per cent higher than in mid-1956.

Turning now to 1960, I am advised that the trend should not be very different from 1959. Government expenditure, including all public activities, on capital construction, will be running at a high rate; in 1959 it was £14 million. Our agricultural production and exports should continue to increase. If prices remain fairly satisfactory, then total income from these exports should also expand. It is thought that in the cash

[The Minister for Finance and Development] sector the gross domestic product could increase by about 4 per cent during the present year. This improvement, which is needed year by year if we are to have those higher standards of living and improved services for which everyone is asking, will, of course, require political stability and an economic climate which will encourage existing enterprises to continue their efforts and investors to develop new projects. Talk of "liquidating" large-scale farming will do no one any good. Nor will such expedients as putting farms on a care and maintenance basis or "mining" the land. What we need in the way of policy are measures which will encourage all such farmers to continue with development to their own and everybody else's profit.

At the present moment some £40 million is invested annually in Kenya in "gross capital formation". This means that both for replacement of obsolete equipment and buildings, and for the development of new land, the equivalent of 25 per cent of the gross domestic product in the monetary sector is used. Net capital formation, the amount spent on additions to our capital, is possibly in the region of half the gross figure, and of the total much is financed from overseas. £5 million of private money is invested annually in large-scale agriculture alone and it is essential that this should continue. The Government invests very large sums in peasant agriculture. All this investment must be continued if the income per head is to grow at a satisfactory rate and to result in a national income which will permit us to have those conventional necessities, which do not mean cigarettes and beer but schools, hospitals, roads and other assets to future growth and amenities for the well-being of the community.

Whilst I am still dealing with economic matters, there are two other points to which I must refer. The first concerns the allegations that there has been a fall in confidence and an outflow of capital since the end of the Constitutional Conference. Certain statements were made whilst I was in London and a figure of £900,000 a week outflow was mentioned. It was also suggested that currency control might be introduced. At the time I made what enquiries I could from the authorities both in London and in Nairobi, and I was informed that there was nothing in the situation to cause alarm. Since I returned to Nairobi I have been able to obtain further information on the subject. I was not altogether surprised to learn that there had been some outflow. It is not unnatural, at times of change, for people with liquid assets to transfer them to places where they believe that they may be safer. I was, however, also glad to learn that, as I had expected from the information obtained in London, the figure which was mentioned was highly exaggerated. I am also advised that the flow has eased up during the current month. Nor is this the whole story. Throughout the period, money for investment has continued to come in to the Colony and in to the East African area generally. Here again, the amount has probably not been as great as in normal times which, once more, is not surprising in a time of change and uncertainty. The fact, however, that the flow has by no means ceased—some of the sums introduced are, I understand, of a sizeable nature—shows that there are still people with faith in our future.

To the extent that there may have been a net outflow of capital during March, I think that it may have been due not only to uncertainty as to the future but to fears that some form of currency control might be introduced. I said in London, and I repeat it here, that the Government has no intention of introducing any measures which would impede the free flow of capital between this Colony and the rest of the sterling area. If people wish to transfer their money from Kenya to London or to other parts of the sterling area, they are perfectly free to do so. I hope, however, that there will not be any large-scale movement and, as I have already said, my information is that the degree of outflow which appears to have existed last month, has now eased up. I shall, of course, continue to watch the position and will inform the House of any important changes.

It may be said that statements such as mine are all very well now, but what of the future. The fact is that, whatever the political complexion of any future Government of this Colony may be, our economy will remain very much dependent on the rest of the world not only for its development but for its very maintenance. Any interference in the free flow of money would, in my opinion, kill not only development but the economy itself stone dead. There would be an end to everyone's dreams of a better life, of more schools and an improving standard of living. I cannot believe that any foreseeable Government of this Colony is going to ignore these facts. I can, therefore, see no reason why anyone should have fears on this score, now or in the future.

My other point concerns the Fiscal and Economic Commission which is to examine the East African common market arrangements, together with those for economic co-ordination between the Territories and for fiscal uniformity. The Commission has been directed to pay special attention to the measures for facilitating inter-territorial trade in local products and to developing local industries in East Africa; to those for

[The Minister for Finance and Development] securing uniformity in fiscal and financial matters, including the allocation of customs, excise and income taxes between Territories; and to the provision of revenue for the East Africa High Commission. They will consider the advantages and disadvantages of the present arrangements, whether they are economic and fair to the interests of each Territory, and they will make recommendations.

The Commission will begin its work fairly soon and it would not be for me to attempt to anticipate its findings. All I would say is that I, personally, am a convinced believer in the value to us, and to all the territories of East Africa of the common market. So far as Kenya is concerned, the figures which I have already quoted, and to which reference is made in the Economic Survey, speak for themselves. I do not, however, believe that our gain is anyone else's loss. I believe that the common market is a stimulus to production and to trade throughout the area of East Africa, and that all territories benefit from it. It is my view that, if in the past we had had the misfortune to be "balkanized", each of the territories would have been poorer in their economies, quite apart from the cost of administering separate customs and income-tax administrations. I would, therefore, regard the maintenance of our common market as being of the utmost importance to the welfare of us all.

I shall next deal with the general capital and development position.

At 30th June, 1959, there was a deficit of a little over £4,560,000 in the Development Account financed as to £2,400,000 from Revenue Account and Tax Reserve Certificates and as to the balance from short-term borrowing including internal borrowing from the Government's own resources. The revised estimates of expenditure for 1959/60, given in Table III of the Development Estimates, total £10,259,000. This figure is based on the revised estimates submitted by Ministries. However, on the basis of the experience of previous years, and the actual issues made from the Exchequer by the end of March, I regard £9.6 million as a more realistic figure for actual expenditure in the current year. This expenditure will be covered almost in full from loan funds raised during the year, or from other receipts.

The loan funds' figure of £6,225,000 for this year includes £4 million of exchequer loan money, and the "other receipts" figure of £2,970,000 includes £800,000 surrendered from the sugar equalization fund. I propose also, as I fore-shadowed in the debate on the speech from the Chair, to authorize the transfer to the development account of £1 million, being the bulk of the surplus of almost £1,150,000 in the Colony exchequer at the 30th June, 1959. This will cover the allocation of £750,000 for public works non-recurrent in the 1960/63 Development Plan. There will also be a further £250,000, of which I propose that £100,000 should be used to increase the target for the number of families to be absorbed into employment in the Government's forest estate under the supplementary forest scheme from 5,000 families to 6,000 families. The remaining £150,000 will reduce the "capital gap" on the 1960/63 Plan to approximately £1 million.

The 1960/61 Development Estimates total nearly £10,128,000. The details of the various projects are set out in Sessional Paper No. 4 of 1959/60. Over 65 per cent of the expenditure will be on economic services, particularly agriculture. I am convinced that the Government is right in the emphasis which has been placed in the programme on the development of agriculture. This will make the most immediate impact on the national income by encouraging the growing of an increasing acreage of cash crops for which markets can be found at profitable prices. It is only by an increase in the national income that the country will be able to meet the ever-increasing demands for improvements in the less immediately productive social services—in particular, in the sphere of education.

Included in the Development Estimates is £300,000 for loans to African farmers and £300,000 for feeder roads in African areas. Last year, my predecessor referred to the discussions which had been opened with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to see whether they could make available on a loan basis funds for this purpose. As honourable Members are aware, my colleague, the Minister for Agriculture, and I, and you, Sir, have recently been having talks in Washington about these schemes. The total project will cost some £6 million, of which £2 million will be for agricultural credit and feeder roads in the areas of high potential, during the currency of the 1960/63 Development Plan. We hope to be able to provide some £4 million from our own resources, including loan-funds and assistance from Her Majesty's Government. I am happy to be able to say that, subject to the approval of the Bank's executive directors, and to the passage by this Council of the Ordinance covering this borrowing from the Bank, we have reason to believe that the remaining £2 million will be forthcoming from that source. This will make it possible for us to go ahead with a much-increased credit programme for African farmers in the areas of high agricultural potential and with schemes for providing a

[The Minister for Finance and Development] greatly improved system of feeder roads in these same areas.

The House may also be interested to know that we told the Bank about the scheme for increasing agricultural production which was referred to by the Secretary of State during the Lancaster House discussions on constitutional affairs. The Ministry of Agriculture and the Treasury are still working out concrete proposals in connexion with this scheme and until this has been done we shall not know to what extent, if any, the World Bank will be able to participate. I can, however, assure the House that the preparation of the scheme is being treated with the very greatest urgency by all concerned and that I, personally, feel confident that funds will be forthcoming from one source or another to finance a worthwhile project, of benefit to farmers of all races who are prepared to press on with the development of their land.

In addition to the projects in the Estimates, it is expected that at least £1 million will be spent on the £4 million Contractor Finance Road Programme. A further project, not included in the Estimates, is the Nairobi City Council's £1.5 million Contractor Finance African Housing Project. This project also will get under way in 1960/61, and total expenditure by the Government and the City Council combined is likely to be at a higher level than in any previous year of Kenya's history. This will make a notable contribution to employment as well as to our housing resources.

As I stated earlier in my speech, expenditure on buildings will be running at a high level, and will absorb to the full the capacity of the Ministry of Works.

I also referred at an earlier stage to the employment problem. The Development Programme was examined several months ago with a view to seeing whether, by including in the Plan some of the proposals of Ministries which had had to be cut out in order to bring the total of the Programme within the funds likely to be available, further employment could be created. The enquiry showed that an adjustment on these lines would not be likely to improve the position, since it would involve cutting out more immediately remunerative projects for others of more doubtful or longer term economic value.

There is, however, one project in the Plan referred to on page 46 of the Sessional Paper—namely, the Supplementary Forest Development Scheme, which is a scheme specifically designed to reabsorb landless and unemployed persons on new forest stations. Some 4,000 families have already been absorbed, and the money provided in the Sessional Paper is designed to increase this number to 5,000. As explained earlier, I am now proposing, at a cost of about £100,000 to be found from last year's revenue surplus, to raise the target still further to 6,000 families. For purpose of comparison, the House may be interested to know that it would require a special building project costing about £300,000 to employ 1,000 workers even for a short period. Far more than £300,000 would be needed to employ the same number on roads.

The problem of financing a development programme of over £10 million during the coming year will be formidable. It will be necessary to borrow—either by way of exchequer loan, by public issues on the market or from short-term sources—a further £6,500,000 during the coming year. It will not be easy to obtain all we need by exchequer loans and public issues on the local market—particularly bearing in mind that it will be necessary for the Government to convert or repay in June, 1961, the 4 per cent local loan of £2,925,000 raised in 1954. I am confident, however, that it will prove possible to finance in one way or another the expenditure shown in the Estimates, and that this ambitious programme is fully justified and entirely necessary if we are to secure that growth in the economy of the country which is essential to our economic progress.

I am also confident that we are wise to plan for total development expenditure of some £27 million during the period 1960/63. It is true that finance will not be easy to find—it never is—but it should not be impossible. It is also true that additional loans involve additional debt charges. But, as the economic story for 1959 shows, they also generate more income. The fact is that countries like ours must develop or stagnate. In spite of all the difficulties we have been through, wise development expenditure in the past has made it possible for us to sustain services of a scope and standard which would not have been thought possible even ten years ago. There may be risks in continuing to plan for development at the same rate in the future; but I think the House will agree that the risk of not doing so would be infinitely greater.

Before proceeding to the recurrent Budget, I have one further thing to say about development finance. It is always desirable that some part of any capital programme should be financed from recurrent revenue if that is at all possible. At present we cannot do this by provision in Estimates. Prudent financial management will, however, tend to throw up small annual surpluses. Such surpluses are needed in the early months of each financial year to cover the normal excess of exchequer issues over receipts in that period. Subsequently, I believe that we should

[The Minister for Finance and Development] transfer them to capital account. We shall do this as to £1 million this year and I would hope that similar action would be possible in the future—though the amounts might well be less.

I now turn to this year's out-turn and to the Estimates for the coming year and, at this point, I shall—as has been done in previous years—set before the Council the pattern of net expenditure covered by the total figure of £32,014,675 in the printed Expenditure Estimates. There is, in fact, little change. Basic administrative services, law and order, defence and revenue collection still account for about 34 per cent. Economic services, which include roads, water works, agricultural services, forestry, game and fisheries, lands and mines, commerce and industry, account for some 15 per cent. The social services take up about 25 per cent (of which the bulk—nearly 19 per cent—is for education). Financial charges of a recurrent nature—public debt, pensions, and payments to local authorities—take up nearly 18 per cent. The remaining 8 per cent is taken up by various general and ancillary services such as public works and printing.

I would also, at this stage, refer to the tables of comparative expenditure and revenue over a four-year period published at pages (vii) to (viii) of the introductory pages of the Expenditure Estimates. I hope that Honourable Members will find these tables of some value in viewing the Budget in historical perspective. It is intended that they should become a regular feature of our published Estimates and that the perspective should be lengthened in due course to at least five years.

With regard to the current year, the original Estimate—including emergency expenditure—was £32,325,520. There will be savings of £408,339 on our contributions to the High Commission, it having been agreed that Kenya's surplus balances with the High Commission should be reduced to £100,000 by the 30th June, 1960. The payments being made to the High Commission this year are being reduced with this target in view. There are also likely to be savings of approximately £153,000 in the Public Debt Vote. These arise because, when the Estimates were prepared, it had been anticipated that half-yearly payments would have to be made, on exchequer loans obtained from Her Majesty's Government. In fact, payments are to be made annually, and not half-yearly, and this means that no payments will have to be made in the current financial year on exchequer loans obtained during the year. These savings will be partly offset by the need for supplementary provision on a number of votes. Although, however, after allowing for all savings and Supplementary Estimates, the total revised Estimate will be some £32,175,000, I do not, in fact, anticipate that actual expenditure will exceed £32 million.

The revised Estimate of Revenue for the current year approximates very closely to the original Estimate. I have no reason, at this stage, to revise the original Estimates for Customs and Excise or for Income Tax, and an anticipated shortfall of some £180,000 in collections of graduated personal tax will be more than covered by increased extra exchequer receipts. The revised Revenue Estimate—as shown in the statement on page (viii) of the Estimates presented to Legislative Council—exceeds the original Estimate by £37,287.

The Estimates, as presented, envisaged a surplus of £68,266. In view of the savings that have been made on our contributions to the High Commission, and on the Public Debt Vote, I shall be disappointed if we do not have a surplus on the year of about £430,000. As hon. Members will see from the financial statement, this will mean with the unspent balances of £229,000 brought forward from 1958/59 the overall balance in the Colon; Exchequer Account at the beginning of the 1960/61 financial year—after allowing for the transfer of £1 million to Development—will be approximately £800,000. This represents less than two weeks' revenue and is a very small reserve to hold against the excess of expenditure over revenue which, as I have said, is normal during the early months of the year and to meet possible shortfalls of revenue or other unforeseen contingencies which may arise during the year. Ultimately I would hope to be able to transfer the bulk of it to Development Account. But that will depend on the circumstances of the coming year.

The present year is the last in which we shall receive assistance from Her Majesty's Government towards Emergency expenditure and it may, therefore, be of interest if I indicate the amount of total expenditure on the Emergency for the period from 1952 to the 30th June, 1960. The total figure is likely to be £57,185,424. Of this, £25,050,000 will have been met by grants from Her Majesty's Government; £6,050,000 by interest-free loans, which we shall before long have to begin repaying; and no less than £26,085,424 from our own resources.

As explained in the general memorandum note printed on page (v) of the 1960/61 Estimates, estimated expenditure in 1960/61 represents a net reduction of £310,845 on the provision made in the current financial year, but—after allowing for the reduction in expenditure previously met from the Emergency Fund from £1,600,000 to £514,000, and after taking credit for the generous decision of

[The Minister for Finance and Development]

Her Majesty's Government to relieve us of responsibility for the recurrent cost of the East African Land Forces, for which £1,128,000 was provided in the current year's Estimates—there is a true increase of some £1.9 million. On the great majority of votes there has been a virtual standstill. The increases fall into four main groups.

First, there are the increases in public debt, in pensions and in local government contributions—mainly statutory—which may be regarded as commitments, and unavoidable, and which total some £550,000, and which are likely to rise still further in future years. In particular, the annual increase in public debt will—if we carry on with our necessary but ambitious Development Programme—exceed the increase shown in the 1960/61 Estimates of £341,000.

The next group is the social services. The increase on education and health totals over £650,000—ignoring the provision for passages. The net increase of over £530,000 on education is a formidable figure which we could not have found but for the decision of Her Majesty's Government to relieve us of the recurrent cost of the East African Land Forces. I am fully conscious of the need not to abandon our programme for the improvement of educational facilities, particularly in African education, and particularly at the intermediate and secondary stages. It will be noted that the increase in 1960/61 for commitments and for social services totals over £1.2 million. We are likely to be faced with a similar or increasing bill in future years. This bill can only be met from an expanding economy—if the improvements in the health and education of our people are reflected rapidly in greater productivity in all sectors of our economy, but especially in our agriculture. We cannot expect Her Majesty's Government to take over a large proportion of our expenditure every year—nor, indeed, must we forget that the day may come when we shall have to resume responsibility for the cost of our own forces. It cannot be said too often that, while the outside world will help us to develop our resources by grants and loans of money and skilled manpower, no one owes the people of Kenya a living and if we are to progress we can only do so through our own efforts.

The increase still to be explained is £700,000, of which nearly £100,000 relates to passage costs. In accordance with my undertaking last year, I have had the passages vote split up amongst the services to which it relates. This has, as I suspected it might, led to an immediate increase in total provision—instead of one margin there are now several. The total may not, however, be spent and I am sure that we shall have greater control in the future.

Of the remaining £600,000, some £377,000 relates to my third group, namely, administration and the maintenance of law and order. These increases are explained in detail in the memorandum notes on the Chief Secretary's Vote and on the Police and Prison's Votes. I am hopeful that we have now reached an establishment and a level of expenditure for these services which can be held in future years.

The remaining increases, which constitute the last group, total some £223,000 and relate to a number of miscellaneous votes. £63,000 is for the Ministry of Local Government, largely arising out of the ministerial changes that have taken place, but including an additional £15,000 for the relief of distress; £50,000 is for the Ministry of Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries, and includes £24,000 for anti-poaching measures and £10,250 required for the take-over from the High Commission of the Lake Victoria Fisheries Service; £49,000 is an increase in our contribution to the High Commission, of which nearly half will be required for the East African Directorate of Civil Aviation and the E.A. Meteorological Department, and arises mainly because of the tapering of grants received from the Ministry of Civil Aviation in the United Kingdom; the greater part of the balance relates to some necessary strengthening of the revenue-collecting departments—namely, the E.A. Customs and Excise Department and the E.A. Income Tax Department.

Lastly, the increase under the Ministry of Agriculture totals £42,000. This is almost fully explained by the need to provide £40,000 to subsidize the price of local rice. The cost of this rice subsidy will be more than fully offset by revenue obtained from customs duty on rice imports. The only other significant increase, is on the Ministry of Labour, and includes the provision of a new post of officer-in-charge, employment services, and some strengthening of staff at labour exchanges.

I feel that, at this stage, I should again make it clear that it is unlikely to be possible—on the basis of the forecast of the probable growth in the national income given in the Economic Survey—to finance in future years as large an increase in expenditure as is contemplated in 1960/61. In fact, it will be necessary to hold the majority of votes at approximately their present levels, and to cover the need for additional provision for increments and other adjustments—by administrative economies. This applies to levels of pay as much as to anything else. The Government has always recognized

[The Minister for Finance and Development] that selective salary adjustments may be needed to assist recruitment or to retain the services of experienced staff. This still holds good. It is also probable that we may have to look in a more general way at the relationship between the remuneration of our civil servants and that of comparable employees in the field of recruitment. As the Economic Survey shows, however, the cost of living has been stabilized over the past three or four years. In these circumstances any general upward movement of salaries would appear to be unjustified. It would also have most serious economic and financial consequences. Our total salaries bill, including Development, is now about £18 million and even a 5 per cent overall increase would cost some £900,000 involving cuts in services or increased taxation, or both. It must, therefore, be recognized that, however distasteful the fact may be, we cannot afford general salary increases and that, even where adjustments are unavoidable because of market considerations, they can only be granted to the extent that the country can afford to pay.

I turn now to the problem of financing the overall net estimate of £32,014,000. The Revised Estimates of Revenue for 1959/60 total £30,831,000 and there is, therefore, an additional sum of £1,183,000 to be found in 1960/61 in order to balance the Budget.

Revenue receipts from all sources other than customs and excise and income tax in 1959/60 total some £6,580,000. We are likely to receive an additional amount of approximately £203,000 from these sources in 1960/61. I need not go into these items in detail, but I expect that we shall receive an additional £75,000 in land revenues largely as a result of the revised valuations of land, and an additional £90,000 in interest on loans made from Development Funds. There will also be a small increase in receipts from graduated personal tax.

This leaves an additional amount of approximately £1 million to be produced from our main stand-bys—namely, customs and excise and income tax. In spite of the increase in the national income set out in the Economic Survey, which amounted, to some 5 per cent in the monetary sector in 1959, I do not anticipate that income tax receipts in 1960/61, at present rates of taxation, will exceed the 1959/60 estimate of £10,550,000. The reason for this is that the 1959/60 figure will be swollen by the recovery of arrears from previous years, and actual collections in 1960/61 are likely to approximate closely to actual assessments on the year of income 1959. Actual assessments on the year of income 1958 will total only about £10 million, and I do not anticipate that assessments on the 1959 year of income will exceed £10.5 million.

I feel, therefore, that I am being reasonably optimistic in forecasting receipts of £10,550,000 from income tax in 1960/61. The estimate for 1959/60 of customs and excise is £13.7 million, and is likely to be achieved. The Economic Survey forecasts a rise of approximately 4 per cent in the monetary sector of the national income in 1960, and it would, I feel, not be unreasonable to estimate that there will be a corresponding rise of about 4 per cent—or £550,000—in receipts from customs and excise at the present rates of duty in 1960/61.

Honourable Members will have noted that, given the expenditure proposals contained in the Estimates of Recurrent Expenditure and the Revenue forecast which I have just given, we should be faced with a deficit if existing levels of taxation were to be maintained. As the House is aware, I do not believe that a poor country like Kenya can afford the luxury of deficit Budgets. Before, however, dealing with my proposals for closing the gap, I have to propose a number of revenue changes which are designed not to produce additional money for the Exchequer but to encourage or protect local industry or to rectify anomalies or to close loopholes in our system of revenue collection. I would, at this stage, ask Mr. Deputy Speaker that, in accordance with our usual practice, this speech be taken as Notice of Motion to be placed before the Committee of Ways and Means dealing with the measures I am now proposing.

I first deal with protective measures. The duty on tomato purée is at present 22 per cent. The local tomato purée industry processes a valuable cash crop and it is estimated that it can provide for the full requirements of the East African territories in a quality superior, by analysis, to that of competing imports. In due course there should not expand into the export market and thereby provide a very useful outlet for a cash crop. It is, however, necessary to assist the industry to capture the internal market. The local product is not sufficiently well known to achieve this. With this in view, I now propose that the duty be increased to 30 per cent ad valorem. This increase will, at the worst, have a negligible upward effect on household expenditure.

My next proposal affects footwear. The duty on boots and shoes is at present Sh. 1/50 per pair or 22 per cent ad valorem. I propose to introduce a new tariff item under which the specific duty on footwear, excluding footwear without uppers and excluding footwear with uppers of cotton and soles of rubber or rope, and also excluding children's footwear, should be Sh. 5 per pair. The ad valorem duty will remain at 22 per cent. Members will have noted that this change in duty will only affect leather boots and shoes worn by adults. Similarly, I propose that the specific duty on imported leather for boot and shoe uppers should be increased from 50 cents to 75 cents per square foot. The object of these changes is, first, to protect the manufacturers of leather footwear in the medium and low grades of shoes and, second, to protect our local tanneries. As Members know, small cobblers have been encouraged to establish cottage industries using local leather. We have also, for a long time, had small shoemaking establishments in the Colony. All these will be protected against the importation of cheap and shoddy footwear made of leather. Since what are commonly known as "tackies" are excluded, as are children's shoes, those members of the community who can only afford rubber-soled shoes with cotton uppers will not be affected by this change. Nor will those who have to provide shoes for growing children. Finally, fashion footwear of the best quality, which has still to be imported, will not be affected since the duty on the most expensive grades will continue to be assessed on ad valorem rates.

Last year, new duties of a protective nature were introduced for enamel holloware. These duties appear to have given effective protection to our local industry, for, instead of the increase of revenue which was anticipated in last year's Budget, there has, in fact, been a considerable fall. One disadvantage of the rates imposed last year was, however, that they were at the same level, 50 cents, for all sizes of cups, mugs, plates and saucers. Similarly, the rates for other types of enamel holloware were flat rates irrespective of the size of the article. It is now proposed to provide different levels of duty for different sizes of article. The rate for the smallest sizes of cups, mugs, plates and saucers will, for instance, be only 25 cents as against the present 50 cents. The existing rate will continue to apply for medium-sized articles, whilst the larger ones will pay 75 cents. Similar adjustments will be made in respect of basins and bowls where the existing specific rate is 75 cents. The specific rate on stewpans, saucepans and casseroles will remain as at present Sh. 1/25. The ad valorem rate of 30 per cent will also remain unchanged. This is not a revenue proposal and it is difficult to say what the exact effect will be in terms of revenue. In view, however, of the success of the measure of protection already afforded, the financial effect is unlikely to be appreciable either way.

I am proposing to make a small change in Tariff Item 58 (n) by providing that waste and scrap metal shall be imported free. This will not only assist local industry engaged in processing scrap metal but will remove an anomaly. The local printing industry will be assisted by further changes which I propose to make under Tariff Items 68 and 136 (a). These changes will exempt sensitized plates, printers' ink-dryers and certain other constituents of printing ink from duty. The financial effect of all these measures will be negligible.

The last of my protective proposals relates to the introduction of a new Tariff Item, 165 (e), introducing a new duty of 22 per cent on crown corks. Previously these were imported free as packing materials. The new duty will protect our local crown cork industry against cut-throat competition which only arose after our industry came into operation. I am informed that the local company is capable of meeting the whole East African demand.

My next series of proposals are of a technical nature. The more important relate to the imposition of duty on certain types of synthetic fibre which are not covered by the existing tariff. This, while being technical and stopping a loophole, will produce sufficient revenue to offset decreases resulting from protective measures and reliefs; the exemption from duty of "off the highway" vehicles which are used primarily for constructional work is another of these proposals; a simplified method of protecting the local bottle-making industry, while allowing free import to bottles of a type which are not made locally; and the exemption from duty of certain scientific, educational and religious equipment. There is also a number of minor amendments dealing with new types of building material, clip bolts, "float" glass, prizes and awards, and road and traffic sign materials. Finally, the tariff item relating to baths and other sanitary ware is amended so as to extend the scope of the exemption from duty to all articles of this nature, irrespective of whether they are made of earthenware, stoneware, porcelain or plastic or of any other material. The financial implications of this measure which merely makes it unnecessary to extend the scope of the item every time a new material is invented, are nil.

I now come to a series of proposals designed primarily to assist the tourist industry. They will, however, also benefit residents of Kenya and will simplify the administration of the Customs Tariff. The first of these measures relates to Customs' Tariff Item 144 covering passengers' baggage. I propose that this item should be revoked and replaced by a completely new item. The current

[The Minister for Finance and Development] item was drafted many years ago to meet conditions in the early pioneering days when many kinds of goods were not readily available in the shops as they are today. Consequently it reflects history rather than present-day facts. For example, it permits binoculars and cameras to be brought into the territory duty-free, while cine projectors are assessed to duty. Portable typewriters are free, while tape-recorders are dutiable. These anomalies are now being rectified in favour of the taxpayer. It has also become apparent that the concessions granted by the present item are too limited for certain types of passenger, particularly tourists and people arriving to take up residence in Kenya for the first time.

New residents will, in future, be assisted by being permitted to import into the territory free of duty all used personal and household effects. They will also be permitted to introduce free of duty a motor vehicle which they have owned and used for at least a year between the date on which they took delivery abroad and their own arrival.

Such people will, of course, have to be prepared to pay duty on any goods which they may sell within two years of the date of importation. They will also have to produce satisfactory proof of their previous possession.

Tourists and visiting businessmen will be assisted by being permitted to introduce free of duty all their requirements for personal and household use during their stay. Here again, of course, they will have to satisfy the revenue officers that the goods concerned are appropriate in quantity and kind for the purpose of their visit. They will also have to re-export these goods or pay duty on departure.

Another measure designed to assist tourists relates to the import duty on binoculars, telescopes, cameras and films. At present East Africa as a whole receives some £40,000 a year in duty on these articles. The Kenya share has been estimated at approximately £18,500. I now propose to introduce a new tariff item, 140s, under which all these articles will become free of duty. This will not only assist the tourist industry but will remove a frequent source of dispute and irritation in the examination of baggage at ports of entry. It will, of course, also give local traders an opportunity of increasing the sale of these articles to visitors to the Colony.

A third measure designed to assist the tourist industry relates to the admission of arms and ammunition. At present, under Tariff Item 166, rifles may be imported free of duty by members of rifle associations and clubs solely for the use of their members. I propose that this item should be revoked and replaced by one under which all arms and ammunition may be imported free. The loss of duty from this measure will be some £3,000 a year. I need hardly say that it will still be necessary for those who wish to possess arms and ammunition to obtain the usual licences.

My next proposal relates to the excise tariff and is also, to a large extent, a tidying-up measure. There is at present no provision for the imposition of an excise duty on locally manufactured wine. I am advised that this omission should be rectified. I propose, therefore, to introduce specific duties at the following rates. On still wine Sh. 6 a gallon and on sparkling wine Sh. 18 a gallon. These rates are approximately equivalent to 75 per cent of the lowest specific rates of Customs duty on each gallon of imported wine. The imposition of an excise duty will make wine an excisable article. In this connection honourable Members will wish to know that consideration is being given to amending the Excise Management Act to permit and control the fortification of locally made wines with spirits, and the mixing of imported and locally made wines.

I now turn to the proposals designed to increase the revenue.

For some time I have had under consideration the adequacy of our present arrangements for the taxation of motor vehicles. The revenue from this source is, of course, hypothecated to the Road Authority for expenditure on our roads. The present position is that motor vehicles with four or more wheels which are powered by petrol are taxed in a full year at a minimum rate of £4 for the first 1,500 lb. tare weight with an increase of £1 for every additional 250 lb. tare weight or part thereof. These fees are doubled for motor vehicles powered by any fuel other than petrol. There are some other special types of vehicles whose numbers are, however, insignificant for which enhanced licence fees are payable. Additional charges are also made for public service vehicles depending on the number of passengers which they carry. Half fees are charged for trailers, and tractors used for agricultural purposes are charged at a flat rate of £2 per annum. Motor-cycles pay an annual licence fee of Sh. 30 without sidecar and Sh. 40 with sidecar. These last rates and the minimum rate for all petrol vehicles have remained unaltered for the past 32 years. The double rate for motor vehicles powered by other fuel was first imposed 20 years ago, while the increase of £1 in the fee for every 250 lb. tare weight dates from 1952. Before then the increase was Sh. 10

For the year 1959, the total number of licensed motor vehicles in Kenya, including motor-cycles and trailers, was about 78,000. Of this total, 57,000 were in the light vehicle class weighing 4,000 lb. or less. Within this class in the four years 1956 to 1959 inclusive the number of vehicles in the categories up to and including 2,500 lb. tare weight increased by 41 per cent. Those in the middle category from 2,501 lb. to 3,400 lb. increased by 21 per cent. Those in the heaviest category from 3,401 lb. to 4,000 lb. decreased by 19 per cent. In the past three years, the total number of vehicles registered in the Colony increased by 14.8 per cent, but, in spite of this the average return in licence revenue was slightly less in 1959 than in 1957. This is, of course, due to the swing in recent years towards lighter-type passenger vehicles which is hardly surprising in view of the greater efficiency of small modern cars coupled with the great improvement which has taken place in our roads. I would like to say here that this improvement reflects great credit on the work of our Road Authority and of the roads branch of the Ministry of Works, and I take this opportunity of paying a tribute to their efficiency and activity.

It is, of course, obvious that, as the traffic density increases and higher road standards are demanded by the motoring public, more and more money is needed for the maintenance and betterment of our road system. At one stage it was expected that the hypothecated revenue would automatically take care of this. Unfortunately, the trend towards the purchase of lighter vehicles has falsified this view. I consider that steps must now be taken to insulate the revenue from licence fees against this tendency and to try to ensure that the recurrent revenue from this source more nearly keeps pace with the increasing traffic. I propose, therefore, that with effect from the 1st January, 1961, the minimum annual licence fee for petrol-powered vehicles should be £8 and that this should apply to all such vehicles of up to and including 2,500 lb. tare weight. I also propose that the minimum licence fee for motor-cycles should be increased to £3 per annum without sidecars and to £4 per annum with sidecars. The fees for vehicles of 2,501 lb. tare weight and above will remain as at present. I am advised that this measure should provide rather more than £50,000 additional revenue for the Road Authority in a full year. An additional advantage will be that, by charging fees at one flat rate for nearly half of all the vehicles licensed in the Colony, we shall considerably ease the administrative task of the licensing authorities, thus enabling greater attention to be paid to the correct assessment of fees for the vehicles outside that group.

The new arrangements will involve an increase of £4 in the licence fees of 3½ per cent of the vehicles in the under 2,500 lb. tare weight group. This works out at about Sh. 1/50 a week. Fourteen per cent of the vehicles in the same group will bear an increase of £3 in fees, 35 per cent an increase of £2, 20 per cent increase of £1, and 27½ per cent will bear no increase at all. The increased fee for a motor-cycle without sidecar will cost 58 cents a week, while that for motor-cycles with sidecars will cost the owners an additional 77 cents a week.

I have also been considering the taxation of motor fuel. At present petrol pays Customs duty at the rate of 75 cents a gallon. It also pays consumption tax at the rate of 32 cents a gallon. The proceeds of the consumption tax, like those of the vehicle licence fees, go to the Road Authority. No duty or tax is paid on light diesel oil used in motor vehicles. These vehicles, however, as I have noted, pay a double licence fee.

In Nairobi a gallon of petrol is at present sold for Sh. 3/60 and a gallon of light diesel oil for Sh. 2/18. I have already spoken of a swing in recent years towards the licensing of lighter types of vehicle in the under 4,000 lb. tare weight class and of the adverse effect which this has had both on the Customs duty and the consumption tax revenue. This is illustrated by the fact that, in spite of the increase of nearly 15 per cent in the number of vehicles licensed in the Colony between 1957 and 1959, the average revenue per vehicle obtained in licence fees and consumption tax fell from Sh. 358/61 to Sh. 334/86 or 6.6 per cent. I am advised that of this drop of Sh. 23/75 per vehicle per annum, 98½ per cent was attributable to petrol consumption tax revenue. This cannot all be accounted for by the move towards smaller cars. There has indeed been a parallel movement in the larger vehicles from petrol to diesel fuel. In 1954, only 10 per cent of lorries and trucks, and 15 per cent of omnibuses and coaches were diesel operated. In 1959, the figures were 31 per cent and 63 per cent respectively.

In theory, the double licence fee paid in respect of diesel vehicles compensates for the fact that light diesel oil used in such vehicles pays neither customs duty nor consumption tax. Unfortunately, this is not borne out in practice. For instance, the annual licence fee for a five-ton petrol lorry is about £24, whereas its diesel counterpart pays about £52. The difference of £28 represents the fuel tax on some 524 gallons of petrol, which, at 10 miles per gallon, is the equivalent of some 5,240 miles. Up to this mileage the

[The Minister for Finance and Development] diesel vehicle contributes as much as, or more than, the petrol vehicle, but thereafter the contribution becomes less and less as the annual mileage increases. Not only, therefore, is the present system weighted in favour of the heavier diesel vehicle, but the revenue is not receiving a contribution towards the wear and tear on the roads in proportion to the annual mileage run. Further, the heavy road user contributes relatively less than, say, a farmer who needs to run a heavy vehicle in connexion with his business, but who may cover a relatively low mileage per annum.

Here, clearly, is a state of affairs which calls for adjustment. My second measure, therefore, involves the imposition of a customs duty of 75 cents per gallon on light diesel oil and a consumption tax of 35 cents per gallon on the same commodity. I also propose that the consumption tax on petrol shall be raised by three cents per gallon to a total of 35 cents per gallon, so that the duties and taxes on petrol and light diesel oil will be at equivalent rates.

I have two important points to make following on these proposals. The operator of a diesel vehicle would be unfairly penalized by these new arrangements if he were to continue paying a double licence fee for his vehicle. In order to remedy this situation, I propose that the double licence fee for diesel vehicles should no longer apply after 1st May, 1960. I also propose that refunds should be made in respect of the period from 1st May to 31st December, 1960, relating to the unexpired portion of licences for the current year where a double-fee has already been paid. Full details of the arrangements for such refunds will, I hope, be published tomorrow.

My second consequential point concerns the effect of the new duty and tax on our major industry, agriculture, with which I wish to couple, in this context, the saw-milling industry. Information has been produced which indicates that the effect will be severe in both cases. I propose, therefore, that farmers and saw-millers may apply for a refund of the whole of the duty and tax paid on light diesel oil where this can be shown to have been used in agricultural tractors and in tractors employed in logging. I intend that claims should be made quarterly in arrears to the Ministries of Agriculture and Forests respectively. Honourable Members will recall that similar arrangements formerly applied to the refund of duty on kerosene used in agricultural tractors. Full details of the arrangements will be published shortly.

I estimate that in a full year the return from the customs duty towards the general revenues of the Colony will be of the order of £450,000. The consumption tax, including the small increase in the petrol consumption tax, should bring in an estimated £260,000. This, together with the £40,000 to be derived from licences on the smaller vehicles during the next financial year, will go to the Road Authority. They will, however, lose approximately £95,000 as a result of my proposal relating to licence fees for diesel vehicles, so that the total gain to their revenues will be of the order of £205,000. It will, of course, be necessary to increase the provision for the statutory grant to the Road Authority—Revenue by this amount. The Revenue Head—Other Licences, Duties and Taxes—has been increased by a corresponding figure. A considerable part, if not the whole, of the £450,000 increase in general revenue will, of course, also be taken up in meeting loan charges on capital road works.

Honourable Members will wish to be informed of the effect of these proposals on the cost of living. I am advised that the rise in vehicle licence fees and of the increase of three cents in the petrol consumption tax will have a negligible effect. I am also advised that the total effect of any increase in the cost of transport of merchandise on the Nairobi cost-of-living index, due to the Customs duty and consumption tax on light diesel oil, will be less than one-third of 1 per cent. Finally, I am advised that, in terms of passenger miles, the new measures should have only a fractional effect on passenger transport so far as the travelling public is concerned.

This completes my proposals relating to revenue from Customs and Excise Duties, and from vehicle licences. As I have stated, it is intended that the proposals relating to licence fees should come into effect on 1st January, 1961. All the other proposals relating to the Customs and Excise tariffs, and to the consumption tax, will come into force at midnight tonight. Confirmatory legislation will be published and introduced at the appropriate time. At this stage, all I need do is to inform the House of one further procedural innovation. In the past, each type of revenue measure has been dealt with in a separate Bill. This year, we propose to include all the revenue proposals in one comprehensive Finance Bill. I trust that this will be found to be a convenient method of proceeding and will thus commend itself to all Honourable Members.

It will be remembered that the overall net Estimate of Expenditure for the coming year was approximately £32,014,000. The increase in the statutory grant to the Road Authority will bring this up to £32,219,000. This year's revised Estimate of Revenue was £30,831,000. We anticipate that, at existing levels of taxation, a further £753,000 will accrue during 1960/61, bringing the

[The Minister for Finance and Development] total to £31,584,000. This leaves a gap of some £635,000 which will be rather more than covered by the proceeds of my indirect revenue proposals. These will bring the total revenue figure to £32,239,000, leaving us with an estimated surplus of approximately £20,000. I have, therefore, no further revenue proposals to make.

Mr. Deputy Speaker. At the beginning of this speech I said that the people of Kenya, had through their efforts, made it once more possible for us to stand on our own feet. The way ahead will not be easy. We shall all have to work extremely hard in the future.

We must continue to eliminate waste, to put economic necessities before all else, and to endeavour to increase our efficiency in all walks of life. If this is done, and only if this is done, we shall be able to provide all our people with more of the social and other benefits to which they naturally aspire. Given cool heads, stout hearts, hard sinews and—dare I say it—slow tongues, I believe that it can be achieved. May I express the hope of the Government and of all Members of this Council that it will, in fact, be achieved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move.

Mr. Webb seconded.

ORAL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

QUESTION No. 80

Mr. Alexander asked the Minister for Finance and Development is it a fact that Tanganyika and Uganda have anti-dumping legislation and does the Kenya Government intend to do the same and if so when?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Yes, Sir, I invite the hon. Member's attention to the Bill published in the Official Gazette Supplement No. 25 of 19th April, 1960.

QUESTION No. 84

Mr. Kirpal Singh Sagoo asked the Minister for Education what arrangements are at present in force for the filling of the post of Assistant Director (Asian) in the Education Department?

The Minister for Education (Mr. Mathison): There is at present no substantive vacancy in the grade of Assistant Director of Education, but the duties of the Assistant Director with special responsibilities for Asian Education are at present being admirably discharged by Mr. G. S. Amar, formerly Principal of the Duke of Gloucester School.

MOTION

MARRIED WOMEN OFFICERS' SALARIES

Mrs. Shaw: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that this Council regrets the necessity for the abolition of special salary scales for temporary and contract officers, as a result of which married women have either to accept re-engagement at lower salaries or to leave the Service; and asks Government to review the problem in order to prevent hardship to such officers and the loss to Government of their ability and experience.

Sir, this Motion speaks for itself and in moving I shall not attempt to do more than to tell Council a certain amount of the background of Circular 51 instancing cases to show how harshly the abolition of the special salary scales will react on certain sections of the Civil Service; also in asking for the support of hon. Members of this Council, Sir, I shall try and show what disastrous and far-reaching effects the provisions of this Circular will have on the efficiency of Government Departments as a whole.

Now, Establishment Circular No. 51 of 5th December, 1958, was—at least I imagine it was—conceived by our late Minister for Finance as a part of the £1,000,000 economy cut made by the Minister in that year's Budget. I obtained a copy of the Circular, a masterly document, and reading it through several times I found it was almost impossible to extract a clear picture of the intentions from this mass of provisions. But, then, I am not a civil servant! The Circular was full of such phrases as: "At an increment point appropriate to his qualifications and experience, this to be determined by the Civil Service Commission or by the Director of Establishments"; and just as you came to the conclusion that all would be well with your hard-working civil servant you found that the next paragraph would begin: "Notwithstanding the above, such officers", etc., and you were back where you started.

Indeed, never have I come across a clearer case of "What the Lord giveth the Lord taketh away", and after some such paragraph this action would be unduly harsh and in this case the following will apply", etc. I would ask you to note the adjective "unduly". So that the Director of Establishments, although admitting that the provisions of Circular No. 51 are harsh does not wish them to be unduly harsh. Harsh they are, indeed, Mr. Deputy Speaker, when you realize that women who have given years of loyal service—long and devoted service—through no fault of their own are to have their agreements terminated thereby losing all their hard-earned increments. I have always imagined that, although the door to the ivory tower was most jealously guarded, once you were inside you could expect, or hope for, at least just and fair treatment, unless, of course, you committed a misdemeanour, in which case you lost your increment or possibly your job. One of my family who was in command of the Kenya Navy in the First World War did have that unfortunate experience. He ran that noble vessel aground on a promontory in Lake Rudolf, with the result that he lost his increment, and that promontory has been known ever since as Increment Point.

I do not intend to bore the Council with a mass of figures that I have at my disposal, but I should like to read just a few taken from a Ministry of Education circular dated 23rd July, 1959, to show just how harsh the provisions of Circular 51 are even after modification.

To take Conversion Table No. 9, Scale TBW4, pre-Lidbury, teachers on the lowest two grades, i.e. £879 and £912 per annum will not be affected, but the next post at £945, after conversion, will revert to £912 basic, a loss of £33 per annum, whereas at the top scale the loss per annum will be £66. This is for teachers with over 20 years' service. In the post-Lidbury Conversion Table No. 4 the teacher is much worse off after conversion although in the same way the two lowest grade salaries will not be affected, and on the third rung of the ladder the loss is £27 per annum, whereas at the highest level it will be £102 per annum. Now, this may not sound a very big loss, but for most of us who have to wrestle, and I believe that we are all in the same boat today, with the family budget and the ever-rising cost of living, this is quite a loss.

The scales I have quoted are those of the teaching (married women) staff who are better off than their less fortunate sisters, because the Minister for Education, and the Director, having the sense to realize the disastrous effect of Circular 51 on the teaching establishment, where, to take one secondary school alone as an example, the Kenya High, I believe that the percentage of married women teachers is over 50 per cent, but the Kitale School is over 90 per cent. They fought against this ruling, but in Kenya and in London. As a result I believe that Establishments Circular No. 10 was produced by the Ministry of Education, Labour and Lands on 23rd July, 1959, which brought in certain modifications.

With your permission, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I wish to read an extract from that Circular No. 10, namely, paragraph 4 (ii): "It is appreciated however, that it might be necessary to consider special reassessments outside the normal conversion arrangements referred to in (i) above for certain categories of staff to whom market value considerations apply." I want the Council to note that—"... to whom market value considerations apply; when it was agreed that special reassessments were necessary these would be effected by placing the officer concerned at the equivalent or nearest point in the permanent basic scale below his or her salary on the inducement, contract or temporary scale on which he or she was serving prior to reassessment." That is a fairly clear one. Circular No. 10 was much easier to understand than Circular 51. But that is because I think it was drafted by such very brilliant people at the Ministry of Education, as the head of the Ministry of Education. That paragraph in Circular No. 10 clearly shows that Government's fears as regards Circular 51 and its effect on their ability to compete satisfactorily with commercial concerns with staff of this category, and that is the point I want the Council to note. This applies now to every department in Government and yet I cannot find any evidence that other departments received this Circular No. 10; so they obviously will be subject to the full blast of Circular 51.

I know the alarm and despondency felt by most Ministers at the prospect of losing the services of their senior women clerks as a result of this ill-conceived and doubtful economy. The Ministers may feel alarm and despondence but, Mr. Deputy Speaker, they do not seem able to do anything about it, and that is why on behalf of the women civil servants of Nyanza I have been asked to take this up. What amazes me is Government's complete inconsistency in this, because if I remember rightly, and I am not very likely to forget as I nearly lost my second election through it, the Government were thrown into a state of terror and confusion in 1951 when we, on this side of the Council, were trying to cut out these very self-same posts in the Provincial Administrations. I also seem to remember that our late Speaker was heard to cry from the Government benches: "You must stop, you cannot do it, you do not know what you are doing." So being, as always, subject to the directions of a boss he was affectionately termed

"C.B.", we stopped, but Nyanza's clerks had gone by then, and I was led to believe that Provincial and district commissioners had to do their own typing for three months. The result of Circular 51, I do not think will be quite so catastrophic—not quite as catastrophic, but probably more widespread—but it will mean that when responsible women secretaries go, as they may be forced to do through economic pressure, because they are very hard to come by even in the commercial world, you may have to replace her by a glamour girl of 18.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Shaw: Now apropos of that reaction, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like just to recount that for a short period we in E.E.M.O. suffered from such a glamour girl, and although she undoubtedly gave our male members a thrill by her beautiful figure when she handed them a cup of tea, we never suffered from such illiterate, badly spelled and badly typed correspondence, and I think the glamour wore off in a very short period before all our files were in a state of confusion. Now this may be an extreme case as of course there are very efficient girls who are fully trained secretaries, yet even so, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Ministers will have to entrust all their confidential files on security, etc., to a young girl who should not be given this responsibility in my opinion.

In our legislature in 1951 we did our best to make this unwise economy but we did have the excuse that at least we did not know what we were doing, for the post of confidential secretary that year was wrongly designated in the Budget as "extra clerical assistance". Then in that debate eight years ago the Government fought "tooth and nail" to keep their valuable confidential secretaries, and I remember the Chief Native Commissioner of that day making an impassioned speech for the retention of these ladies by saying although it was a delicate subject that they were needed for the manpower production!

I am not suggesting, Sir, that that applies to the case today, but I do suggest that these married women with long service have the knowledge gained from years of experience and the capabilities required to hold positions of trust which a young girl cannot possibly possess. For instance, a confidential secretary to a Minister must be the soul of tact and discretion, if she is to fulfil her first duty, that of protecting the Minister from the assaults of all and sundry, and above all, she must be responsible and completely trustworthy. These are all qualities beyond prize, and these qualities are not learned through any secretarial training I have ever known, but only come from experience. I would have thought Mr.

[Mrs. Shaw]
Deputy Speaker, that these attributes being so lightly cast aside by Government were essential to the smooth running of the Government machine, and indeed I know that they are, and I know that many of the Ministers are feeling the greatest concern, if not alarm, at the thought of losing the services of these very high prized confidential secretaries. Years of experience they have, and very often specialized knowledge of the department in which they serve. To quote from HANSARD of 1951, in winding up the debate the Chief Native Commissioner, as he was called then, said that even in that day Ministers were overburdened and had many more calls upon their time than they could possibly manage. He said they had far more to do in the way of attending meetings, conferences, etc., than they ever used to, and that has got to keep them in their offices to some extent, and I said then and I say now, we all want to get them out of their offices to attend to more essential business. Therefore we want these secretaries to do the inescapable jobs they have to do and therefore we must give them efficient and up-to-date stenographers. It is the right and proper function of these temporary clerks to advise the Ministers of that. That was said by the Chief Native Commissioner that in those days Ministers were overburdened and heads of departments were overburdened, and I submit, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that they are a great deal more overburdened today. They have to be out of their offices sometimes for long hours at a time, and it is then that the services of these very highly skilled and experienced women are most essential. I could not agree more than I do with what was said by the Chief Native Commissioner, that it is false economy to undermine the efficient running of Government departments. What is the use of bringing out a team of Organization and Methods from Her Majesty's Treasury as an economy measure if you then bring in a ruling which strikes at the very root of good organization.

Now I should just like for the benefit of Council to summarize the position of married women employed by Government. It is as follows. At least, this is how a lay person reads it. (a) She can only be employed on temporary terms whatever her qualifications or experience. (b) On temporary terms vis-a-vis permanent or contract officer. (c) Her earning wage is considerably less. (d) She has no security and can be given a week's notice. (e) Medical benefits are practically nil. (f) No housing allowance. (g) No travelling allowances. (h) No pension or gratuity. Yet in many cases they do much the same work. Yet in have similar qualifications and yet get none of these emoluments in Circular 51.

You will realize that Government was very unlikely to be able to keep their permanent prized confidential secretaries or to recruit the same calibre of staff from the ranks of married women to a branch of the service so particularly unattractive. Therefore I beg hon. Members of this Council to consider the injustice and, in the terms of the Motion ask Government to review the problem in order to prevent hardship to such officers and the loss to Government of their ability and most valuable experience.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to move.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to second.

Question proposed.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coult): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would like to start by congratulating the hon. and gracious lady from Nyanza for putting a very clear and, to me, a very succinct case. Perhaps more succinct than the circulars to which she took such great exception, if we are to believe what she says.

Her case appears to be based really on two facts. The first is that what is commonly known in the Service as the marriage bar, that is preventing married women from joining the permanent and pensionable service, should be abolished and, secondly, that we are not treating those women, that is those married women who have served the Government for a very long time, well.

Well, I would like to deal with the whole problem in, possibly, rather a wider and more detailed manner than the hon. lady has done in order to try and show to the House why Circular No. 51 was issued at all. Therefore, I would like to go back to the initiation of temporary salary scales and contract scales which became valid from 1st January, 1955. Now, they were introduced for a very special reason. There were at that time in the Colony what one might describe as boom conditions; it was not possible, therefore, for Government to obtain the staff that they required in what was then still an expanding service. Unless these salary scales were paid the Government was unable to obtain that staff. I may say that at the time that they were introduced they were accepted with the greatest of reluctance by the staff side of the Civil Service because these salary scales were in excess of those drawn by people on the permanent and pensionable staff and, indeed, they are still in excess and, if I might correct what the hon. lady said towards the end of her speech, that in fact the earning rate of people on such temporary and contract scales is not correct; they have been all the time since the original temporary and contract scales were introduced earning more than the permanent and pensionable staff. Indeed, it was resented at the time by the permanent and pensionable staff. Therefore, all that Establishment Circular No. 51 sought to do was to put back the position of the Service to what it was on 31st December, 1954, and in so doing we asked staff as a whole to accept the fact that we wished to sort out what seemed to use to be an anomaly in the Service and which had lasted four years and which we felt ought to be changed. The abolition, as the hon. lady has reminded us, occurred in December, 1958, and in so abolishing temporary and contract scales, I feel that there is a particular point of principle involved, that where you have got temporary staff—and they are temporary staff—where you have got contract staff and the contract comes to an end, then I think it is the right of every employer, the right of every management, to alter the terms of the particular employment if he so wishes or if, as is the case, the Government so wishes. In the case of permanent and pensionable staff, of course, there is an entirely different criterion. But, having said that, we realized, of course, that there would be some difficulties within the Service in making a change of this nature and might I impress upon the hon. and gracious lady that in fact had nothing whatsoever to do with the late Minister for Finance. This was a matter which was discussed at the time when the Government was considering reducing expenditure in various ways, but that was not, as I have already tried to point out, the major reason why we brought out Circular No. 51. The major reason—I would like to underline this—was to revert to a position which we originally had in 1955.

Well, as the hon. and gracious lady has said, certain adjustments were then made, such adjustments appeared to be necessary as she herself has said for teachers, certain adjustments were made in the stenographer/secretary category which she herself has personally referred to.

The Civil Service Commission was consulted on this matter and their advice was also sought in regard to appointments which are normally dealt with by the Director of Establishments. As a result, assessments of salaries were agreed as follows and I would like to give the hon. and gracious lady the details of these assessments, that all staff in clerical and executive grades excluding Personal Secretaries Grade 1 and Grade 2 were, or they will be, converted to the point in the Permanent Salary Scale which corresponds to the point at which they were serving in the temporary, contract or inducement scale.

In other words, we have tried as far as possible to equate the actual salary which they were drawing to that point in the new scale which they were entering which would give them approximately the same salary.

Officers who as a result of the Lidbury revision were placed on shadow scales—and I would ask the hon. and gracious lady not to ask me to go into the complexities of the shadow scales—and subsequently were placed on temporary and contract scales, were allowed on reassessment to revert to the original shadow scale and then to that point that they would have reached if they had remained on the shadow scale, once again in an attempt to try to equate the salaries.

Professional, technical and other grades, including Personal Secretaries Grades 1 and 2, to which market value considerations apply, which is the point which the hon. Member for Nyanza made, that a times the Government must consider market values of certain staff, although it is quite impossible—and I would like to stress this that it is quite impossible—for the Government to compete satisfactorily with commercial concerns for it seems to me always that commercial concerns have grades of salary, conditions, which are to a large extent quite different from those which Government have laid down from time to time in the past, and the Government has never tried to compete with the salaries paid by commercial concerns at any time. What we have said is that where we think that market value considerations apply, then we must try and do what we can about it in adjusting these salaries. That is what happened in the case of Personal Secretaries Grades 1 and 2.

Then, finally, education officers, women and assistant mistresses serving on temporary terms who, under the Lidbury revision, converted with inducement have had, or will have, their salaries assessed on re-engagement on the specially constructed shadow scales which would have been assigned to them had they originally converted on the basic scale. Therefore, I agree with the hon. lady that it was necessary to reassess, and indeed this is what she has asked us to do, give discretion to review the particular scales. We have reviewed quite a number of them, although we have not reviewed them all, and perhaps it would be pertinent for me at this point when I am talking about reviews to say that it is not possible for the Government to accept the Motion in its present form. I do not propose to move an amendment, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but the Government certainly could have accepted a Motion such as this: "That this Council asks the Government to review the problem of married women in order to prevent hardship to such officers and the loss to the Government of their ability and experience", but I will explain in more detail what parts of the Motion I am prepared to accept without accepting the Motion itself.

Now pool stenographers and secretary stenographers were re-graded, because, as I have said, there was the question of their market value and the result was that there are new scales introduced in Personal Secretary Grade 1, Personal Secretary Grade 2, Secretary Stenographer and Pool Typist.

I would also like hon. Members to note that the enhanced conversion arrangements for certain categories of temporary staff serving on temporary or contract scales has resulted in married women being placed at a higher place in the basic scale than single women in the same grade, serving on that scale on permanent terms. For instance, a married woman appointed at the minimum of the (CW) 5-4 Temporary Scale as a Personal Secretary Grade 2 and had reached the £831 point on that scale on completion of three years' service, would convert to £825 permanent scale. On the other hand, the single woman who had accepted permanent appointment as a Personal Secretary Grade 2 on the same day and had entered the permanent scale at the minimum, would only have reached the £705 point in that scale after three years' service, therefore she is drawing £120 a year less than her married colleague on the basic scale, so I would like to point out to the hon. Member that it is not all hardship on the married woman and indeed on the general question of hardship I would like to query whether in fact what Government has done has created particular hardship.

The hon. lady has said that the main hardship is loss of salary in a difficult time which I admit quite freely. But if you examine the result of having equated these people to the new scales as nearly as possible to the actual salary which they gain on the new scale, you will find by looking at them—and I believe the hon. and gracious lady has been shown or given the tables—that it is not until people have completed eight, nine, ten years, that in fact they begin to show an actual decrease in cash.

Now, I do want to deal in a moment with those people, whether they be on temporary or contract terms who have served the Government for a long time, which I think was the hon. Member's main point—I will come to that in a moment—but in fact had these people lost money by being converted? The hon. lady did not mention the question of gratuities, but when the new scales were introduced the people placed on these scales were not liable to be paid gratuities at the end of their service. Now, in view of the fact that they have been put back on to the basic scales, the old arrangement whereby people could draw gratuities at the end of their service once again applied. Therefore, when considering how much someone may have lost immediately on their pay packet, then the hon. lady must consider how much she may gain at the end of her service as the result of the gratuity which will now become available for her.

As regards the general effect of Circular No. 51 on the Service, I want to point out that in the clerical grades on which no special reassessments of salary have been necessary, enquiries have revealed that there have been only four resignations of married women which are known to be directly attributable to the circular.

Now, the hon. lady's reply will probably be that the full effects of the circular will not take place until the end of this year and that is quite correct, I accept that. Therefore it is not possible really for the Government fully to assess the effects of the circular at this time and I would suggest something, perhaps, to the hon. lady that the moving of this Motion was a little premature because we do not know yet whether all the disastrous effects that she referred to in her speech are going to take place. "Disastrous and far reaching" she called them "due to an ill-conceived and doubtful economy" and that we have "lightly cut aside" the feelings and also the real needs of married women in the Service". I would like to say that I would like to wait until the end of 1960, bearing in mind the other things which have taken place in the mean time, to see whether or not these terrible effects will take place.

I should point out that in the teaching service there have been no resignations by serving married women teachers nor are any large scale resignations anticipated when that circular becomes generally operative.

It is also pertinent to note that at the last meeting of the Civil Service Commission, on 20th April, 1960, it was stated by the Commissioner that the abolition of temporary and contract scales had led to increased requests from temporary and contract staff to transfer to permanent and pensionable terms and as far as I am concerned—and I am concerned very much at the present moment—it seems to me that it is far more important that we should have people on permanent and pensionable terms than that we should be employing a large number of temporary and contract staff.

This brings me to the point—the main point I think—which really lies behind this Motion. And that is the question of the abolition of the marriage bar. Now, in Government we have considered this time and time again. It is very difficult problem for very obvious reasons. A married woman, in the majority of cases, cannot be expected to give the same continuous service over a long period as her unmarried colleague. It is inevitable and I hope that it would be inevitable, that her family must necessarily occupy much of her time and her interests. If little Willy happens to be knocked over on his fairly tricycle when mother is working in the Secretariat, I would consider it inhumane for mother to remain in the Secretariat and not go to the assistance of little Willy, indeed I would expect her to do so, but it does mean that she is leaving the place of her employment for a family reason. Also a married woman will also wish to share her husband's place of residence and accompany him in the event of his being transferred to another station, other than one in which she is employed.

Now, I know I will be told by people, "But this is what happens in the United Kingdom. The marriage bar has gone. Why can't they bring it here in Kenya?" And my answer to that is because conditions in Kenya are quite different at the present time from those in the United Kingdom. By and large people in the United Kingdom are born, brought up, live, work and very often die in the same home town and therefore it is possible to have permanent conditions for these people under which they can work and therefore they can be members of the permanent and pensionable staff. If you can imagine the large number of people whom we employ at the present moment, for instance, in the administrative and police services, all of whom can be transferred at any moment all over the Colony, if their wives are employed obviously they will wish to accompany them and they cannot therefore as I have already said carry out everything that Government expects of them. There are also objections, I feel, from the wider social point of view to the employment of married women on permanent terms to the exclusion—and here is a major point of view—of men and of single women. Having said that, then what is Government's answer to this difficult problem? The answer seems to me to be exactly what the hon. Member is asking for and that is consideration for that group of married women who has served the Government long and faithfully and here I agree with her entirely. We should not as Government overlook the very faithful service which has been given by quite a number of married women to this Government for many years.

Mark you, I am sorry that we greeted with such a raucous roar her suggestion that we might turn over to rather more gaudy forms of life. I am not quite certain what the expression was. However, I do not want to say either by the roar that we produced or by what I am trying to say now that we minimize in any way the enormous amount of work which these married women have done for the Government.

Having considered it, therefore, we decided to put certain proposals to the staff side and here are the proposals which were put to the staff side by the Government quite recently. Firstly, that a married woman who had completed twenty years' continuous service on temporary terms should be considered for admission to the permanent and pensionable establishment immediately prior to her retiring from the service under section 6 of the Pensions Ordinance on medical or age grounds or on abolition of office. Secondly, that in cases where a married woman does not complete twenty years' continuous service or if she does will not be eligible for admission to pensionable terms because the post she is holding, is a non-pensionable one, on ultimately leaving the service in the circumstances mentioned in regulation 26 of the Pensions Regulations she will in common with other temporary staff qualify for a compassionate gratuity under that regulation after completing the qualifying period of ten years instead of fifteen years as at present. So therefore, we are proposing that where it is right and proper anyone who has completed twenty years should be admitted into the permanent and pensionable staff and therefore get a pension or if for reasons which I have mentioned she has not completed twenty years we are reducing the minimum in which you get a gratuity from fifteen years to ten years. Therefore, we felt that for the reasons, and there are many others, which I have given why the Government cannot agree to the abolition of the marriage bar, in default of that we propose these two proposals that I have now read out to the House. Well, we have had a reply from the staff side of the Central Whitley Council and I do not propose to inform the House what they have said. They have other ideas on this matter, but I would like to say that they have asked us to open negotiations with the staff side with a view to improving the terms of service for married women and that we should be informed of certain resolutions which they have put forward at their staff meetings. The matter, therefore, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is really where it should be and that is for discussion between members of the staff side and the Government and particularly on this matter which I have myself laid emphasis on and that is the rewarding of those women who have done a considerable amount for the Government in their service.

Sir, I do not think it necessary for me to say any more on this subject. I am glad that the hon. lady has ventilated this particular matter, but as I have already said, I think we should leave it to the two sides to discuss the particular details of these proposals.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think the whole of this subject and the Circular No. 51 of 1958 went wrong because it was published without any agreement with the staff side. And I think there are signs of it going wrong again because my information is that these proposals to which the Chief Secretary has just referred before he sat down have again been put down in writing before agreement with the staff side. It would seem that once again the whole of the Whitley Council system is going wrong because my understanding of the Whitley Council is that it should not be a bargaining match between Government on the one side and the staff on the other but that both sides should enter it in a spirit of negotiation and come to a conclusion. But once again, apparently, the Government have put forward proposals on married women employees, without in this case even consultation with the staff side. That being so, Mr. Deputy Speaker, what we believed had been put right is still seriously wrong and that is the whole conduct of Whitley Council.

May I now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, just deal with some of the remarks by the Chief Secretary; some remarks were, perhaps unwittingly, misleading to the House. The first remark concerns his reference to the introduction of temporary and contract scales on 1st January, 1955, in what he called boom conditions. He went on to say—and this is the part that I think we must get right—that because of those conditions, or that was the inference, that the temporary and contract terms were established in excess of the permanent and pensionable terms. Now, from that remark it might well be imagined by hon. Members that the cash value or the cash value of employment of contract and temporary officers was in excess of that of the permanent and pensionable staff. What he did not say, what he did not tell us, to complete the story is, of course, the temporary and contract officers receive an extra cash payment to compensate or perhaps less than compensate for the hidden benefits received by the pensionable and permanent staff. In the case of the pension itself this is estimated, for this purpose to be worth some 25 per cent. and in addition to that they have subsidized housing, free medical, and in most cases free passages which all total to approximately another 25 per cent. Therefore, the House should be clear in its mind that in terms of cash value it is not receive more than the permanent and pensionable staff.

The Chief Secretary then went on to say that because staff are temporary and contract that the Government therefore has, of course, the right to deal with them as they think fit at the end of their temporary engagement. I am for the moment purely dealing with this word "temporary". I believe we have got here, to get right what is the actual position, and I am glad to say that the Chief Secretary did put much of this right towards the end of what he had to say when he acknowledged that the word "temporary" is really a misnomer applied to a person because the Regulations do not permit of them to be referred to as permanent but in all other senses they are as permanent as many of the permanent and pensionable staff. He did refer just now to married women who have got 20 years' service, who are now to have some special arrangement. In that he acknowledges and clearly helps to define the misunderstanding regarding this word "temporary". Then, Mr. Deputy Speaker, he put his feet right into it when he started to deal with this whole question of market values and reassessments. Here I believe that he has perhaps taken far too little note of what the Royal Commission on the Civil Service in Britain of 1953-55 had to say about this particular problem in connexion with civil servants. And, of course, it relates very specifically to the problem of the rather special nature of the civil servant or of many, very many, civil servants whose only opportunity is in the Civil Service and therefore can never really have their salaries measured against occupations outside the Civil Service. Here, with your permission, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to quote a few short extracts of what was stated in this Royal Commission Report which I believe may help to put right a particular approach to this very question and most of these extracts come out of the paragraphs 90-95 of this particular Report: "We believe that the State is under a categorical obligation to remunerate its employees fairly. It may be held that if rates of pay are such as to recruit and retain an efficient staff they must be fair or even that this is what is meant by calling them fair. We do not agree. The proposition that the Civil Service is recruiting and retaining an efficient staff does not necessarily prove the proposition that the rates of pay are fair. The skills of some Civil Service classes are not particularly marketable except in very narrow fields. It would not, in our view, be correct to infer either that where there is little or no wastage the present rates are necessarily fair or that where there is marked wastage rates are necessarily unfair. We see very considerable danger in the assumption that civil servants are fairly paid and that the Service is in a healthy state because its members appear to be carrying out their duties efficiently. The process of deterioration arising from the sense of grievance on the part of the staff may be a slow one, particularly in a service with the high traditions of the British Civil Service," and let me add there, and the high traditions of the Kenya Civil Service, "and by the time the tendency manifests itself irreparable damage may have been done. We think that in the conduct of wage and salary negotiations concepts of fairness and of the existence of a wage and salary framework not covered solely by the law of market play a large and increasing part. We should express the end as the maintenance of a Civil Service recognized as efficient and staffed by members and whose remuneration and conditions of service are thought fair both by themselves and by the community they serve."

There is no doubt, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the Civil Service, or those members of it to whom this particular Motion relates, do not consider they are being treated fairly; and here I would refer the Chief Secretary to this News-Sheet that has appeared in Kenya, No. 1 of 1960, issued by the Senior Civil Servants' Association of Kenya. It is a pity that this has not received wider publication outside the Civil Service because it is a public document and it is printed by the Government Printer, and I believe that it would be of considerable interest to the public of Kenya as a whole. This is what it says on this particular subject. This is quoting a resolution that was passed unanimously, and I quote: "This Association considers that Establishment Circular 51 of 1958 should now be revoked and that the marriage bar should be abolished." I understand that already there are over 1,000 civil servants in this particular Association, but, in addition to that, the Clerical and Allied Civil Servants' Association have passed a similar resolution. It is quite clear that those to whom this Motion applies do not consider that they are being treated fairly, and I doubt very much whether anything that the Chief Secretary has said today will be taken as having answered them fairly. It is perhaps timely to say here that when we have had the opportunity to think a bit more about what he has said and to read it carefully from the HANSARD we will be back again on this subject when we come to debate the Budget headings.

The Chief Secretary did say that the marriage bar had been abolished in the United Kingdom but then went on to argue that that really was not applicable to Kenya because the conditions here are so very different. I wonder, Mr. Deputy Speaker, whether now in the year 1960 the conditions are all that different, and I am thinking particularly of the vast number of these types of temporary and contract officers that are stationed in the urban areas, and, as the Chief Secretary has said of Britain, people are "born and live and die in the same home town". That was one of his arguments for suggesting that conditions were entirely different in Kenya. Well, I put it to him, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that particularly in the urban areas, and I am thinking of towns like Nairobi and Mombasa and Nakuru, there are many people who today are completely settled in those places; and the fact that Government are able to consider long serving married women does suggest that perhaps the conditions are not all that different.

The Chief Secretary did say that the hon. Member of course had omitted to refer to the gratuity that was applicable in the days before the introduction of Circular 51, and a system that would be applied again. Surely the answer to that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that if the gratuity system was satisfactory before the introduction of Circular 51, what was the need then to introduce Circular 51—and it is quite obvious that the civil servants did not particularly take to the gratuity system and wanted a new system that would bring them more into line with permanent terms.

Then the Chief Secretary justified the rejection of this Motion, and it is a great pity that Government continuously have to reject reasonable Motions reasonably presented like this, because of course it was premature, as he said, that it had not had time to run, at the end of the year there would be no more, and that in any case there had been few resignations and no resignations by teachers. Now, my answer to that one, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is what I quoted from the Royal Commission Report. Very many of these civil servants have no alternative employment. They are specialized and it is utterly misleading to say that because there have been no resignations therefore the system must be all right; and I hope that somebody from the Government side will answer that particular quote from the Royal Commission Report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I believe this Motion has been timely. The hon. Member put it down as long ago as November. I believe that she has done a service to the country and to the Civil Service for having done so, because it looks as though it may have prompted Government to think again. It is quite clear to us on this side of the House that all is not well in the Civil Service and, contrary to what the Chief Secretary has so often told us, we believe that we are helping to create a satisfied Civil Service because they know that there are people on this side of the House that are prepared to ventilate their particular grievances in a way that they are not allowed to do themselves. I do suggest that this Motion has been timely and has been useful, and

I think it is most disappointing again to find Government having rejected what is perfectly reasonable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I do not propose to speak at any great length on this Motion as I think that most of the points that have been made have already been dealt with by my hon. friend the Chief Secretary. There are, however, one or two matters which have just been raised by the last speaker that I would like to deal with.

The first, Sir, is his complaint that Circular 51 was introduced without proper consultation, without agreement. Well, Sir, in the first place I am informed that there was consultation. I am also informed, Sir, that at one stage the then leader of the staff side agreed to the proposals, but that subsequently he decided that he had not agreed. Apparently there was a certain amount of difference of opinion on that one. But, Sir, what I cannot understand is the suggestion that in all cases before any action can be taken there must be a complete agreement. There must always be cases where one reaches a point at which after very long consultation some final action has to be taken. We had, for instance, an example of that some years ago when we consolidated Civil Service salaries, when we consolidated the cost of living allowance in Civil Service salaries. There had been a lot of argument about it one way and another and the Government and the staff side could not reach full agreement as to the amount of consolidation or even as to whether consolidation was the best thing or whether we should give additional cost of living allowances. In that case the Government in the end, not being able to agree, had either to do nothing at all or had to act. In that particular case it acted because by doing nothing at all it would have been certainly going further against the interests of the Service than in taking some action. In this particular case the conditions, I agree, were quite different in that the action being taken was not in the interests of certain members of the Service. But there again the Government having decided that it was a good action, having tried to persuade the staff side that it was a good thing to do and failed, came to the conclusion that it ought to take the action it did and felt indeed, and still believes, that in doing so it committed no breach of faith since the terms that were altered were terms in respect of temporary staff and contract staff where there is a contract, express or implied, and where it is perfectly reasonable to make alterations from time to time in accordance with market conditions.

Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that here again the whole conduct of Whitley Council is going wrong and that there is not sufficient consultation. He suggests that in the offer of pensions there has not been proper consultation because the Government wrote a letter before they had any discussion. I am not fully conversant—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not think that I mentioned pensions. That is a question that you have got to answer later on. It has been put down. I have not mentioned it, at least not in this context.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Yes, Sir, I thought that the hon. gentleman mentioned something about the proposals regarding pensionable service, as counting for pensions, the proposals put forward. I thought that what he said was that certain proposals were put forward in writing before there had been discussions.

Mr. Alexander: About married women.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Yes, about married women.

Well, Sir, so far as that is concerned I cannot see quite what there is in that that is against the spirit of Whitley Council. Surely if one is going to make proposals for improving or changing the terms and conditions of the staff one must put those proposals to the staff side in some way, and I would have thought that the best way of all was to put them on paper. Then they are there ready as a basis for discussion, and discussion can be a good deal more to the point than if one merely sits round the table and puts the things across verbally.

I certainly can see no reason why Government proposals should not be put to the staff side in writing any more than I can see any reason why the staff side should not, if it so wishes, put its proposals to the Government in writing. My own view is that in most cases the negotiations will be considerably assisted by that.

And again, Sir, as regards entering into discussions with a spirit of negotiation, the Government does enter into discussions with a spirit of negotiation, so, I am sure, does the staff side, but as far as I can see one cannot always achieve agreement. It would be quite impossible, and I think we should get away from the idea that negotiation necessarily means one ends up somewhere halfway between the two points of view. That is, that in all cases the Government must compromise. I certainly think that that would not be in the best interests of the taxpayer, and I hope we shall never reach the stage, at which, in these matters, the Government will always feel that if the staff side makes a demand it must give way to some extent. There may be cases where the Government should be prepared to go even further than the staff side have asked, if that is right, but there will also be cases where I believe that the Government should stand quite firm in the interests of the taxpayer. In neither of those cases though does it mean that there can be no negotiation. Of course there can be negotiation, and negotiation can end with the status quo.

The hon. Member, Sir, said that my hon. friend the Chief Secretary had been misleading in suggesting that the terms agreed for temporary and contract staff were better than those of the permanent and pensionable staff, and he suggested that the main reason for increasing the levels of pay in 1955 for this type of staff was that they were being given something to make up for the hidden emoluments of the permanent staff. I was present at the time and I had a certain amount to do with the arrangements that were made at that time, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that there was in fact, no intention, certainly that the extra cash payments should be made for that purpose. The extra cash payments were made to deal with a particular situation, a boom time, as my hon. friend the Chief Secretary says. And of course there is the further point that in terms of cash—in terms of—say, home income for instance—the temporary and contract staff were, in fact, better off through getting more pay than were the permanent and pensionable people living next door to them. It is true that the temporary staff did not get pensions, but then that, of course, is one of the incidents of being temporary. As regards contract staff the position depends on various considerations. In some cases contract staff get gratuities. In some cases they do not. It all depends on the terms of the contract, but there again, one of the obvious points is that they do not get pensions, and they go into the job knowing that perfectly well. Equally, the people that we are dealing with in this Motion this afternoon are married women.

Well, Sir, in that case it would be rather unusual that they should get housing benefits, or even that they should get passages. The fact is, Sir, that in terms of cash they were certainly better off than the people working alongside them who may very well be single women of the same age who might equally have obligations of a family nature and who certainly have no husbands to assist them in keeping the household accounts paid for.

Now, Sir, there is another point of some interest on this question of what is temporary and I was very glad the hon. Member raised this because it is rather interesting to see what the numbers we are concerned with are. On 31st October, 1959, there was 1,261 married women in the service. Of those 99 only had served for ten years or more, and only five, of whom four had already reached retiring age, had served for 20 years or over. That, Sir, is the measure of the numbers concerned with long service, with ten years or more. I would entirely agree with what the hon. Member said that these people who have had long service, who have shown they are serving the Government faithfully and over long periods should have some special consideration given to them, and as my hon. friend, the Chief Secretary, said, proposals of that kind are under discussion. I hope that they will be brought to a successful conclusion, and certainly if the staff side has different views from those of the Government, the Government, I am sure, will be perfectly prepared to consider those views; but naturally, certainly without knowing what they are, I would not be prepared to give any undertaking that they would accept them.

Now, Sir, a certain amount was said about making sure, not only that the service was paid fairly, but that it thought it was paid fairly. I entirely agree that that is a very desirable thing to aim at, but of course it is equally something of a council of perfection. Most people, I think, rather feel that their pay could usually do with being just a little higher than it is at any time, and I should be very surprised if we ever reached a state where no people on the staff side would like to have just a little more pay perhaps than they have at the present time. But I certainly agree that one should aim at making sure that the rates of pay are fair, and I think that as far as possible they should be fair on the lines of what the same sort of people get in other outside types of work, so far as that can be gauged. I agree that it is not at all easy to find suitable comparisons, but with a certain amount of effort I think that it is not impossible in most cases to find reasonable yardsticks, and certainly the effort should be made. But, Sir, on this question, the Government does not consider that in this particular case the new scales introduced for married women are unfair. The rates of pay are exactly the same for them as for their single people working alongside them. They are exactly the same as in those cases, and I cannot really see why they should normally be any more. It would be a very new principle to introduce if we were to say that because people were on temporary terms of employment they should be paid more than the permanent employees of the Government, and I think it would be a very bad principle to introduce too. In many places, in fact, the normal principle is

[The Minister for Finance and Development] exactly the opposite and temporary staff receive less in the way of pay than permanent staff. We certainly have not done that, and we have no intention of doing so, but we have merely brought them back to where they were in 1955, at the same level as the permanent staff of the Government.

Mention was made, Sir, of a resolution by the staff side that Circular 51 should be withdrawn and that the marriage bar should be revoked, and we were told that both civil service associations had put forward those resolutions and agreed them unanimously. Naturally, Sir, the Government will have a look at those resolutions, if they have not already done so. But there again, I am not at all surprised that the staff side agreed to these proposals unanimously. After all, it is the function of a staff side to fight as hard as it can for the best conditions possible for its members, and that quite irrespective of what the Government's view may be. Of course it is their job to fight for better conditions, and I should be very surprised if the staff side had not carried a resolution of this kind, but that does not necessarily mean that it should be accepted, and it does not necessarily mean that it will be in the best interests of the taxpayer if it were accepted. I must say that I personally have always had a great deal of sympathy with the idea that the marriage bar should be removed. In strict theory I fully agree that the case is a very, very strong one. But having looked at the various objections, which we would have in our case, I agree entirely with the Chief Secretary that we would run up against all sorts of snags if we tried to introduce it in this country. I agree with what the hon. gentleman says, that there are quite large numbers of static people in the country, but equally there are quite large numbers who move around from time to time, and I am afraid that if we had something of this kind in our conditions we would have so many hard cases put to us that in the end a coach and six would be driven through any idea that in fact the married woman was serving in exactly the same way as the single woman or a man.

Now, Sir, I understand that there is a study group at the moment looking at various points concerned with civil service matters, and of which I believe the hon. gentleman is a member, and I have no doubt that this may well be one look at. I do not know. But certainly we hope that they will give the greatest attention to all these civil service matters, and if they can produce the answers to us, and if they can assure all members that the Government does give a lot of attention to this—after all we are, some of us on this side of the House, at any rate—are civil servants ourselves, and so I hope that it will not be thought that we are completely out of sympathy with other civil servants. But we also do our best to look after the interests of the taxpayers on the other side and in the country, and to get the best possible—to bring about the best possible solutions for all concerned.

Sir, I beg to oppose.

Mrs. Shaw: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I regret very much Government's inability to accept this very reasonably worded and moderate Motion. I would thank the hon. the Chief Secretary for the details of the scales on the conversion points which were very interesting, and some of them would certainly appear to be revised, which I am very grateful for. I would not dream of asking him to go into the realm of shadow. The substance, certainly, of Circular 51, is quite hard enough for us to understand. However, I am of a very simple and trusting nature, and although I do not believe all I read, and certainly not in the Press, I usually believe Government circulars, and I would point out to the hon. the Chief Secretary, the Director of Establishments, who I am sure is a truthful person, did say Circular 51 was harsh. Well "harsh" in the meaning of the term—I can quote from the circular if the Chief Secretary doubts it—but "harsh" means one thing. The terms were harsh. He said he did not wish to be unduly harsh, and so he revised those terms in Circular No. 10, or modified them. I would suggest to the Chief Secretary that "forewarned is forearmed", and it is better to plan your campaign to prevent disaster than to wait until disaster has happened and then have to plan for it afterwards.

I would also add, as to "little Willy", for the most part my plea was on behalf of married women with long service. I would say "little Willy" was probably falling off his motor-bike if he were not a sober civil servant himself, so I do not think that that applies very much.

I do thank the Chief Secretary for going into the subject with a view to awarding those married women who have given long and faithful service, and I would like to say that I support very much indeed what my friend, the hon. Member for Nairobi West, has said, as I know from going around in my Province and in other parts of Kenya, that there is a good deal of dissatisfaction with the working of the Whitley Council at the present moment. As to the hon. Minister for Finance's reply, I think it was rather a typical "ivory tower" reply when attacked by [Mrs. Shaw] the Philistines, and it sounded awfully like a Government circular. In fact, I began to think it was almost as incomprehensible as Circular 51. The Government's interpretation of temporary is unusual. To talk of temporary terms when you talk of two years seems to me unusual. It is certainly unusual in commerce and certainly in agriculture. I would say temporary employment would mean up to six months, possibly a year, but not 20 years or 30 years.

I was also glad to know that he feels that possibly there should be abolition of the marriage bar or at any rate of the marriage bar, and I hope he feels the same way about marriage under the Income Tax Act later on.

I do thank the Chief Secretary very much for having gone into this so thoroughly. I do not consider it was untimely or premature, for as he knows as well as I do, the Motion was handed in last November. It might have been premature then because he might have the answer, and I believe he has some of the answers now, so that I think possibly the handing in of the Motion in November has had already some of the desired effect, and some of the disabilities under which married women might be penalized under the new terms have been already adjusted and possibly removed. However, I would like to join my hon. friend in saying that while I think it has served a useful purpose in airing this grievance, or these grievances, and I do not consider it is now untimely—in fact I think it is extremely timely—I should like to warn him at the same time that we will possibly return to the attack on another occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to (Inaudible).

The question was put and negatived.

MOTION

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ORDINANCE: REVISION SECTION 17(e)

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move the following Motion:—

THAT whereas it is normally recognized that the ruling of a superior court in an appeal case against a conviction by a subordinate court, constitutes the complete clearance of the accused both of his character and from the sentence; and that as this is a matter of urgency; this Council therefore calls upon the Government to review the application of section 17 (e) of the Legislative Council Ordinance to comply with this basic principle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the particular legislation in question which I quote is as follows. Section

17 (e) reads—and this refers to the circumstance under which a Member may resign from his seat or be replaced otherwise. "If he is sentenced by a Court in any part of Her Majesty's dominions to death or imprisonment (by whatever name called) for a term of or exceeding six months." Clearly Sir, the intention of this piece of legislation is that where a Member is convicted and sentenced—add those words—and sentenced—for a period of more than six months, he would lose his seat in this Council. The immediate question that arises, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is whether a Member so convicted would be deemed to remain convicted and sentenced even after winning an appeal and having the sentence quashed. I have two most recent cases in mind. I want to remind hon. Members of the case of the previous hon. Member for Machakos. For some offence he was convicted to about nine months imprisonment. On appeal this period was reduced by a superior court to about three months. Despite the findings of the superior court, the interpretation of the present legislation remains that this man is, in fact, to lose his seat in the Council on the basis of this legislation. In other words convicted for six or more months—sentenced for six or more months, and the question which I would like the Attorney-General to explain to the House is exactly how this interpretation is arrived at, and whether, in fact, we are now not to believe that clearance by a superior court after a conviction, in fact, constitutes the complete clearance of the person of his character, and also of the sentence. Mr. Deputy Speaker, if we were to interpret this on the basis of the present interpretation by the legal officers, it would almost certainly create a very important question as to the meaning of appeals and the significance of the result of the decision of a superior court. There is this very, I think, interesting case, the latest one in which the previous Member for Nyanza South was convicted for a period of about a year and sentenced for a period of a year. Now, Sir, whilst this hon. Member had given notice of his intention to appeal, and before the appeal was even heard, the Government published in the Gazette that the seat was declared vacant on account of his conviction for more than six months—in other words in its interpretation of this particular clause of the law. May I humbly suggest that whatever good intentions there may be behind this particular provision, the fact that this case was still sub judice should have been taken into account and rightly or wrongly the impression was given that the results of the superior court mean nothing at all, and that the Government, in its own mind, is already prejudiced and prejudices the possible outcome of the appeal. A psychological situation is created whereby the appeal cannot but be inter-

[The Minister for Finance and Development] exactly the opposite and temporary staff receive less in the way of pay than permanent staff. We certainly have not done that, and we have no intention of doing so, but we have merely brought them back to where they were in 1955, at the same level as the permanent staff of the Government.

I do not consider it was untimely or premature, for as he knows as well as I do, the Motion was handed in last November. It might have been premature then because he might have the answer, and I believe he has some of the answers now, so that I think possibly the handing in of the Motion in November has had already, some of the desired effect, and some of the disabilities under which married women might be penalized under the new terms have been already adjusted and possibly removed. However, I would like to join my hon. friend in saying that while I think it has served a useful purpose in airing this grievance, or these grievances, and I do not consider it is now untimely—in fact I think it is extremely timely—I should like to warn him at the same time that we will possibly return to the attack on another occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to (inaudible).

The question was put and negatived.

MOTION

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL ORDINANCE:
REVISION SECTION 17(E)

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move the following Motion:—

THAT whereas it is normally recognized that the ruling of a superior court in an appeal case against a conviction by a subordinate court, constitutes the complete clearance of the accused both of his character and from the sentence; and that as this is a matter of urgency; this Council therefore calls upon the Government to review the application of section 17 (c) of the Legislative Council Ordinance to comply with this basic principle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the particular legislation

17 (c) reads—and this refers to the circumstances under which a Member may resign from his seat or be replaced otherwise. "If he is sentenced by a court in any part of Her Majesty's dominions to death or imprisonment (by whatever name called) for a term of or exceeding six months." Clearly, Sir, the intention of this piece of legislation is that where a Member is convicted and sentenced—I add those words—and sentenced—for a period of more than six months, he would lose his seat in this Council. The immediate question that arises Mr. Deputy Speaker, is whether a Member so convicted would be deemed to remain convicted and sentenced even after winning an appeal and having the sentence quashed. I have two most recent cases in mind. I want to remind hon. Members of the case of the previous hon. Member for Machakos. For some offence he was convicted to about nine months imprisonment. On appeal this period was reduced by a superior court to about three months. Despite the findings of the superior court, the interpretation of the present legislation remains that this man is, in fact, to lose his seat in the Council on the basis of this legislation. In other words convicted for six or more months—sentenced for six or more months, and the question which I would like the Attorney-General to explain to the House is exactly how this interpretation is arrived at, and whether, in fact, we are now not to believe that clearance by a superior court after a conviction, in fact, constitutes the complete clearance of the person of his character, and also of the sentence. Mr. Deputy Speaker, if we were to interpret this on the basis of the present interpretation by the legal officers, it would almost certainly create a very important question as to the meaning of appeals and the significance of the result of the decision of a superior court. There is this very, I think, interesting case, the latest one in which the previous Member for Nyanza South was convicted for a period of about a year and sentenced for a period of a year. Now, Sir, whilst this hon. Member had given notice of his intention to appeal, and before the appeal was even heard, the Government published in the Gazette that the seat was declared vacant on account of his conviction for more than six months—in other words in its interpretation of this particular clause of the law. May I humbly suggest that whatever good intentions there may be behind this particular provision, the fact that this case was still sub judice should have been taken into account and rightly or wrongly the impression was given that the results of the superior court mean nothing at all, and that the Government, in its own mind, is already prejudiced and prejudices the possible outcome of the appeal. A psychological situation is

[Mr. Mboya] appeared by some section of our people as a pre-judged hearing, and if the person loses that appeal many of them might very well shrug their shoulders and say, "Well, this was the intention", or "This was expected", so that I do want to suggest that apart from the immediate effect of this piece of legislation on the particular person in question, and apart from the significance of this interpretation in relation to the basic principle that the decisions of a superior court negate those of the subordinate court, there is also this psychological situation which can be created in a particular case, where people may begin to feel that the matter is prejudged and the appeal, especially with those who cannot distinguish between the Government, the judiciary and the Attorney-General's office, that in fact all these people may perhaps have all agreed previously that the appeal would be thrown out. Now I suggest this is a very dangerous psychological situation to be allowed, but apart from that Mr. Deputy Speaker, my main argument in moving this Motion is to find out from the Attorney-General why there is this particular interpretation in respect of the status of elected Members when this interpretation would not apply in respect of say an ordinary criminal—say a person who was accused of stealing some money or a bicycle. If that person were sentenced to one year, and on appeal he won his appeal, and the sentence was quashed, if I met that person on the street and called him a thief, or referred to him as a thief, I might get myself into trouble because in law his status is that of a person who is completely clean, clear and free, on account of the decision of the superior court. But, when you take a Member of this House, even if he won his appeal, when you meet him in the street, he is a Member who has had his seat vacated on account of having been convicted and sentenced for six or more months.

The fact is the man was never convicted or sentenced to six months' imprisonment or more. I would like to know whether the question of the difficulty of interpretation—if it is the interpretation which is wrong then I should like to request the Government to review the whole situation and if it is a matter of wording of this clause, that it should be so reworded as to fulfil the basic essentials of the administration of justice. If, on the other hand, the law itself is wrong and unfair as it does appear to be on the basis of the experience we have had so far, then I strongly suggest that it is time the law is amended.

Now, Sir, I do not wish to make a long speech on this subject, because I think the facts are pretty obvious and the situation which we face which is one which must give a great deal of concern to those people who are interested in the fair administration of justice. What I call upon the Government to do today is to explain this very strange situation that faces Members of this House. Now whether, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is the Members themselves, as the makers of the law, who have decided to put this extraordinary situation on themselves, I do not know, but certainly if there might have been a Council in this country which thought fit to do so, I submit this Council does not think fit to do so, because this Council is a bit more interested in how fairly and how justly the law will be administered. There is just one little problem that I think may exercise the minds of the Government and that would be, perhaps, the problem that may arise when a Member is convicted for more than six months and gives notice of an appeal, the problem may arise as to what happens with regard to the representation of his constituency in the period pending the many appeals that may come after the decision of subordinate court. But I think that is the only difficulty—I have been trying to think of what sort of difficulties there may be and I think this is possibly the only argument the Government could put forward—and perhaps it would be possible in a case such as this, and I am not sure that it would arise, there are two ways to approach it, one is that all efforts will be made to try and have these appeals as quickly as possible in order to fulfil the needs of the constituents. The other is that if they should drag, despite the efforts to speed them up, perhaps it would be possible in special circumstances to treat the particular Member as an absent Member, such as when any of us want to go on leave, we have the right to have a replacement, temporarily. The declaration of the seat as a vacant seat before a person is actually convicted, before the decision of a superior court which may set aside the decision of the subordinate court—you cannot possibly call that man a convicted criminal. So, instead of declaring the seat a vacant seat, if there should arise circumstances in which the appeals take a long time and the needs of the constituents might be jeopardized, that provision can in fact be made for a temporary replacement without necessarily declaring the seat a vacant seat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not wish to add much more to what I have said, except to call upon the Government to clarify this situation in the first place and at least to review the particular causes of the law to meet the basic principles inherent in the fair administration of justice.

I do not think it would be enough for Government to suggest to us today that this matter

[Mr. Mboya] will be looked into when the Legislative Council Ordinance is reviewed, as we know it will be reviewed for various other reasons. I think that regardless of the possibility that a view is to come in the next few months, we should at least know the Government's explanation on this particular clause of the law at this particular time and if the Government is willing to accept my submission, then we should like to have a definite promise that this is an aspect of the law that will, in fact, be changed when the review takes place.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to move.

Mr. Travadi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to second the Motion moved by the hon. Mr. Mboya.

The suggestion of amending the Standing Orders which in the very face of it looks as if it takes no cognisance whatsoever of the appellate courts existing in this Colony. The accused, having been once convicted by a subordinate court, is taken for granted as a man who is guilty, even though he goes through the process of one or two appeals and sometimes gets acquitted. But to me it appears, that, the conviction and sentence is indeterminate and not final until a superior court decides one way or the other. I, therefore, think that if the man—suppose by chance he gets his sentence quashed and if he is found to be an innocent person—the country is deprived of his services in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do realize, as the hon. Mover has already felt that there are certain cases where the subordinate courts may refuse bail to convicted persons in certain circumstances. It may be that this House may be deprived of the services of such a person, but the solution may be something on the lines of Standing Order 21, where it is suggested there that a person "outside the Colony" may have a temporary Member appointed therefor, that would very well meet the situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is nothing much to say about this thing, the Motion requires a little further research, I should say, and a review too, which will meet the situation created during the last year and a half by these two hon. Members losing their seats in this House; I, therefore, beg to second the Motion.

Question proposed.

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, the provision quoted in this Motion was passed by this Council—this very self-same Council—in 1958. We may have been wrong, but the hon. gentleman cannot disclaim the responsibility of this very Council for this very provision. It is our own work and nobody else's work but ours.

Now, Sir, there are, however, provisions elsewhere in the Order in Council and the regulations relating to Specially Elected Members in precisely the same terms, so that the principle is the same, despite the fact that it is applied by different statutory provisions to different classes of Members.

Let me say at once, Sir, that I entirely agree that this is a most unsatisfactory provision. It is, however, a provision in common form, it applies not only in this territory but in many other territories. Let me also say that in my experience it is almost universally regarded as a most unsatisfactory provision. But, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the problem is and has been to find a practicable alternative, because let us consider for a moment what the underlying intention of this provision is. It provides that if a Member of the Council is sentenced in any of Her Majesty's dominions to death or to imprisonment for six months or more, he shall thereupon automatically vacate his seat. Just to interpose at this stage, it is not a question of interpretation, it is a question of automatic operation of this provision. It is not a question of my or anybody else's interpretation, it is a question of the automatic operation of this provision enacted by this Council.

That is the effect of the provision and the underlying intention, of course, is twofold. First, that this Council should not be brought into discredit by retaining among its Members someone who has been found by a judicial decision in a court of law to be guilty of a criminal offence for which he has been sentenced to the relatively serious or grave punishment of imprisonment of six months or more. There is, shall we say, the standing and repute of this Council to be served by this provision.

Secondly, on the more personal consideration, underlying this provision is the thought that a Council such as this, representing the legislature of the country, should not—quite apart from its own credit—have among its participants, participating as a constituent Member a person who has been found guilty of such a crime.

For those two reasons this provision has been in force for many years in a large number of territories as a vindication of the legislature itself—a vindication of its repute, standing, the appearance of its own integrity, the integrity of its membership.

There is, of course, the third consideration which has been mentioned by my hon. friend the Mover, that is that where the representative of part of the electorate is committed to prison for a period of as long as six months or more, it is not right—this is the thinking behind the provision, I assume—that that part of the electorate should be left unrepresented.

[The Minister for Legal Affairs]

Now, Sir, obviously we should in this provision cover the case of the alteration of the findings of the court of the first instance on appeal, if it should affect the criterion of disqualification to which this provision applies. That, however, presently, as I have said, very great difficulties. In the last, or should I say the last but one, constitutional exercise in which I participated—something over two years ago—very careful consideration was given to this particular point by myself in consultation with the Secretary of State's Legal Adviser and his staff. We could not at that time find a suitable alternative which was satisfactory. We found alternatives which were in some respects improvements but did not sufficiently cover all possible contingencies. Despite the fact that that alternative was not adequate—really satisfactory—the drafting of the alternative provision ran into several pages of detailed and complex provisions which would have considerably swelled our Ordinances and constitutional documents.

Now what are the difficulties? The main difficulty is, as the Mover clearly appreciated, the question of appeal, but there are other difficulties that stand in the way of framing an appropriate disqualification in this particular context. Take the question of appeal. In this country a person who is convicted by a magistrate, has within the limits applied by law, first of all the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. He has that right of appeal within a certain period of limitation. Thereafter, if unsuccessful he has a right of appeal from the Supreme Court to the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa—again within a period of limitation statutorily prescribed. But although there is, both in respect of the first and second appeal, a statutory period limiting entry of appeal, there is a provision for the admission in certain circumstances of appeals out of time. So you cannot find yourself firmly on the period limited for appeals because you may still, even after the expiration of that period, have appeals admitted, on adequate grounds, out of time.

There is yet a further avenue of appeal from the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. That appeal is unlimited statutorily in point of time. So at what time, virtually, can one say that a man has exhausted this avenue? You can say that if he does not enter his appeal from the Magistrate's to the Supreme Court within the 14 days limited by law—if my memory serves me right—then his vacation should operate then. All right, we provide for the vacation of his seat on the fifteenth day if he has not entered an appeal within 14 days. He then vacates his seat on the fifteenth day and on the sixteenth day he has his appeal admitted out of time.

But supposing he does not do that? Supposing we cover that somehow. He then, after failing in the Supreme Court—again I cannot remember the period—he has, say, 30 days in which to appeal to the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa, and he does not enter his appeal within the 30 days. We therefore provide that on the thirty-first day, he not having entered his appeal, his seat becomes vacant. And on the thirty-second day he has an appeal admitted out of time.

Suppose he has both appeals admitted out of time, and he loses his appeal in the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa. We say "Right, normally that is the end of the appellant process". We provide that on the day following the decision of the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa he vacates his seat. The following week, the following month, the following year he enters an appeal to the Privy Council. Therefore it makes a nonsense of your attempts to provide for the processes of appeal in relation to the vacation of seats for conviction and sentence for a criminal offence. It is extremely difficult and one must recognize the practical difficulties and the mobility so far of the very considerable accumulation of wisdom in this matter in the Colonial Office and other places to find suitable alternatives. Perhaps the Council will understand, therefore, that in its own interests we have had to stand on this provision, providing that vacation operates automatically on conviction and sentence of imprisonment for six months or more. It is not a satisfactory provision, it is unfair to the individual if he succeeds on appeal in either having his conviction quashed or sentence reduced to below six months, but in a sense—and I do not wish to be misunderstood—the individual in such circumstances is less important than this Council as the legislature of the country.

There are other difficulties—practical difficulties—in the way of framing this particular ground for vacation of seats. A person in this country can be imprisoned for up to six months for civil debt. He can be released at any time during that period, his term of six months which he serves for debt, for a variety of reasons. If he pays the debt of course he is released at once. He is released if the judgment creditor requests his release. He is released if the judgment creditor fails to pay his subsistence allowance. He is also released if he is not in a fit state of health to continue in confinement. You have again the same degree of uncertainty as to the term, as to the period, of his disability.

There is also the difficulty of imprisonment in respect of default in payment of a fine. The person gets the sentence of imprisonment for six months in default of a fine, he does not pay the fine, he goes to prison. But at any time during that term of six months he can pay his fine and get himself released. There again is the uncertainty as to the period after which his disability would or should cease.

Another difficulty is in relation to consecutive sentences. If a person is sentenced for a number of offences to terms of imprisonment aggregating six months or more, should he or should he not suffer the vacation of his seat? The very fact that he would be continuously in prison for more than six months would suggest that he should vacate it.

Now, I do not want to suggest to this House that this problem is necessarily insoluble. I do assure the House, though, that a very great deal of thought and deliberation has been devoted to its solution, not only by me and my Office in this country, but, I know in the law offices of other territories and by the Legal Adviser to the Secretary of State and his staff with the collection of experience and wisdom which is centred in the Legal Division at the Colonial Office reflecting experience throughout the different territories.

I am at present giving most anxious consideration to the possibility of solving this problem in one way or another in framing the electoral system under the new constitution, and I have already thought that it might be possible to solve it by means of a declaration of incapacity, as we have already provision for in respect of certain classes of Members of this House, and the appointment of a temporary Member during that period of incapacity. I have considered the possibility that the House might, either in conjunction with a declaration of incapacity and suspension and substitution by a temporary Member, or quite apart from that, the House itself might conceivably exercise a power of expulsion. I am not entirely satisfied that that is a suitable provision at this stage of our development. But I do assure my hon. friend the Mover and the House at large that this particular issue is receiving and will receive very careful consideration in regard to the framing of the new constitution and the electoral laws thereunder.

As I say, the two objectives which we must meet—the three objectives—are the maintenance of the integrity of this Council and its standing and repute, the exclusion of anybody who has demonstrably been shown to be unfit to participate in its deliberations and, thirdly, to ensure that no part of the electorate is left unrepresented by reason of the incapacity, disqualification, whatever you may describe it as, of the Member representing that part.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not think that there is more that I can say. It will not, of course, be possible—indeed there is not time if we make the progress which I hope we shall make on the preparation of the new constitution, to take this as an isolated issue in regard to the amendment of the various provisions of law in which this principle is embodied, but on the understanding, as I have explained, that it will be reviewed and every possible effort made to repair what I entirely agree and accept is a defect and shortcoming, in the context of the new constitution, on that understanding the Government will accept this Motion.

Mr. Ayodo: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the Motion. I know that legal arguments can be very long and complicated—but fortunately this one is very simple, because we know that there is a principle that we respect, and we also see here that, that same principle is violated and I think that we could simplify the case by accepting, that this section of the Ordinance be amended and that this be treated as a matter of urgency. The hon. Attorney-General in reply said that in this case the person may not be as important as the body here. I would like to say Mr. Deputy Speaker, that this sounds very much as though we neglect the individual; tomorrow such a thing may happen to anyone, and if it happens to me or to anybody else in this House, I do not think that anybody could argue reasonably that the stand is fair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, we are not interested in who is responsible in this particular case. We are only interested in having it amended. And so, as I said, this is a simple and clear case, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I would only like to conclude by saying that we should see that we get rid of these unnecessary things from our law books because if we see clearly that this is wrong and unfair and still do not see the urgency of amending it, we are actually making or showing that our books are not respected at all.

So, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would conclude by saying that I support the Motion and that the amendment of the same should be treated as an urgent matter.

I beg to support.

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, the Attorney-General has indicated the Government's willingness to consider the review of this particular section of the law or the Ordinance when they review the Legislative Council Ordinance in the next few months. For that I am glad. But I do want just to make a few observations on some points he made in his speech which I think the Government should not treat lightly when this review is made. I think he made the following point, that the respect and dignity of this House was above the consideration of an individual. May I submit that in my Motion there is no consideration of the individual? May I submit to the Attorney-General that the observance of the fair and just administration of justice is far more important, the principle involved is very much more important, than just the so-called dignity of this House. Nobody can convince me that we in this House should be privileged in this country to take a short cut in abusing the administration or ignoring the fair administration of justice for what is called the dignity of this House. I, therefore, cannot accept that particular statement in the least.

There is also, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the curious position where a person may, for the same offence, for example, be sentenced to six months and another person perhaps for the same offence sentenced to less than six months with a fine. It would be considered that a man who has a fine is a cleaner person although guilty and therefore deserving of the dignity of this House and because someone else has the misfortune of being sentenced to a prison term he is "dirty" and does not deserve the dignity of this House. Mr. Deputy Speaker, is it a question of seeing the inside of the prison that is involved or the fact that you are convicted for a certain crime? This is an anomaly which must surely be looked into. I cannot myself accept the submission that all that we are interested in, in so far as the dignity of this House goes, is the question of whether or not a person has been into prison. I think the question that is involved, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is whether or not if persons are convicted of certain crimes they should be disallowed from continuing to sit in this House. Or it is a question of considering whether that crime is of the magnitude that requires such drastic steps to be taken. I think too that when the review is taking place, therefore, this anomaly of merely saying that six months in goal should be looked into and that we should decide what is going to be the actual criterion on which we should take action.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Attorney-General laboured for quite a time on the question of the problem of appeal and so on. I, in my original statement, did concede that there might be a problem in so far as appeals were concerned. However, I do not want to say very much on this since he has already promised that some review will take place and since he concedes that this is an unsatisfactory situation and that he envisages there will be some possibility of some changes in the new legislation. But I do want to say this, because he used the word "guilty" and I am not sure myself that his definition of "guilty" in this particular case when he referred to the problem of the period that may be required or the time that may be taken during the appeal was particularly well advised. I have already stated what I think is the situation if a person is convicted by a subordinate court then he appeals and so on, and if in the appeals the superior court set aside—

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): I thank the hon. Member for giving way.

I never sought to suggest that the decision of the superior court overriding an inferior court should not be respected. The fact of the matter is that until a man has been found guilty and convicted or sentenced he has nothing to appeal against.

Mr. Mboya: I am glad to hear the explanation made. I think it is totally irrelevant to what I was trying to say. The point I was making was that the Attorney-General used the word "guilty" in referring to the particular person who may be involved and also stated that once convicted the interpretation in this particular case meant that the clause applied automatically. My contention was that if you insist on using the word "guilty" then I think you must concede the fact that once convicted by a subordinate court this person had this right of appeal and until such time as he has failed to exercise that right, until such time as he has himself given up the right of appeal, until such time as a superior court has confirmed the decision of the subordinate court, that person still is in a class where it is difficult to justify the use of that word in any positive sense; and so long as you concede that the decisions of the superior court apply in respect of any type and form of criminal then I say that the dignity of this House cannot be blind to the basic principles in administering justice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to move.

The question was put and carried.

ADJOURNMENT CLAIMED

UNDER STANDING ORDER 12

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order No. 12 I propose to move the adjournment of the Council for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance arising out of a Press cable received today in Nairobi concerning the publication of the Corfield Report and with your permission, Sir, I wish to move the adjournment of the House.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I will explain to hon. Members what the procedure is. Standing Order No. 12 provides that if any Member rises in his place and proposes to move the adjournment of the Council for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, and if—

(a) Mr. Speaker rules that the matter is a definite matter of urgent public importance; and

(b) not less than 10 other Members rise in their places to support the Mover, then Mr. Speaker shall nominate a time on the same day at which such Motion may be moved.

I have had the opportunity of discussing the matter that Mr. Alexander proposes to move, and which he has just mentioned to the Council, with both Mr. Alexander and the Leader of the House. It seems to me that it is a matter of public importance and it also seems to me that it is a matter of some urgency. In arriving at that conclusion I have applied the principles which are applied in the House of Commons in England, that is to say, I have first seen whether this is a matter of recent occurrence and has been raised without delay. That is so. Secondly, I have considered whether there is any other opportunity for ordinary parliamentary debate and I do not consider that there is such an opportunity. The third matter, is whether it is a matter of public importance and in England that is normally left by the Speaker to the decision of the House. I consider that there is a prima facie case of urgent public importance here and I therefore rule that this is a matter of urgent public importance. If 10 other Members rise to support Mr. Alexander I shall nominate a time for the debate.

Twelve Members rose.

ADJOURNMENT—MOTION

PRESS TELEGRAM ON THE CORFIELD REPORT

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I shall nominate now for this adjournment Motion and this is, of course, a similar adjournment Motion to the half-hour Motions we have on the adjournment of the Council.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am grateful for your indulgence in this matter and I am sure that as a result of this Press report to which I will refer in a few moments this is a matter of public importance in Kenya and at the moment it is seriously urgent. It concerns the publication of the Corfield Report, a Report the publication of which is anxiously awaited in this country and in other parts of the world and particularly in Britain. This particular Press report could be, I consider, Mr. Deputy Speaker, damaging to the Government of this country, damaging to other persons in this country, if the insinuations and the innuendoes that are arising from it are proved to have any validity in them whatsoever. I will quote, Mr. Deputy Speaker: this is a Reuter report dated 28th April, London. The London Daily Telegraph in a despatch from its special correspondent in Nairobi today said that a report which should "give a convincing picture of the guilt of former Mau Mau organiser Jomo Kenyatta was being edited in London on legal grounds. The despatch by Ian Colvin said the Corfield Report, a 300-page official survey of Mau Mau in the making, had long been available to officials and was to have been published in Nairobi on 3rd May. Its editing was one sound reason for the misgivings of many British officials who, the despatch said, would resign or apply for a transfer from Kenya if Kenyatta was released. If the Government had published the Corfield Report as a White Paper it would make it immune from legal proceedings", the newspaper, added. The rest of the report goes on to refer to current matters regarding security and as this will be published no doubt in full in the Press tomorrow and here in Kenya I do not propose to quote it.

The Daily Telegraph, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is a responsible London paper. Mr. Ian Colvin is a very responsible correspondent of that paper and I believe that reports like this must be dealt with immediately on the floor of this House if there is the opportunity to do so, and you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in your judgment, have given us the opportunity to do so. There are serious inferences in the words that I have quoted, and I believe our Government owe it to us and to ourselves to answer this matter immediately today because I believe it will help certainly in Kenya to correct what might be the wrong impression as the result of this Press report if what is said from the Government side is published tomorrow together with this particular Press report that I have read out.

Mr. Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that the Council do now adjourn.

Question proposed.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would like first of all to put on record that although I agree that this adjournment debate is of great public importance I submitted to you myself that I did not think that it was necessarily urgent and that it might have been taken as an ordinary adjournment debate tomorrow in which case I might have been in the position to answer what, after all, is merely a Press report which the hon. Member for Nairobi West has read out to the House and not asked me specifically to comment on or said on what points he wants an answer from the Government. Having listened to it, I would like to say first of all that as I answered him in the House very recently we still hope to publish this Report in early May. These were the words which I used at the time and I repeat them and I still hope that we are going to publish this Report in early May. The next point I imagine which the hon. Member has raised is the question of the editing of the Report and I have had time to go out and get for myself a copy of the HASSARD of 11th November, 1958, when I replied to a question by Group Capt. Briggs and also a supplementary question by Sir Charles Maikhandi when the hon. Member on that occasion asked, "Will the Chief Secretary give an assurance that the House will have an opportunity of debating this Report?" I replied, "No, Sir, I can give no assurance of that nature because although it is the intention of the Government that the Report should be in a form which could probably be published, it may not necessarily be in the public interest to do so."

[The Chief Secretary]

Now, Sir, on the receipt of the Report, it is perfectly obvious that some editing must take place. The author whom the Government commissioned to write this Report wrote a very full report indeed for Government's information, on all the points which we asked him to inquire into. There obviously must be in the public interest to publish and indeed the author himself suggested that certain of his chapters should be abridged and he returned recently to Kenya for that particular purpose and carried out the abridgment of these chapters at our request.

Now, Sir, as far as London is concerned, the hon. Member probably remembers, or probably will know, that Mr. Corfield lives in London and it is not possible at this stage after his departure to consider the editing of the Report without referring the matter to London and to Mr. Corfield. I do not know what other points he wishes me to comment on, except that the Daily Telegraph report apparently said "long been available". I pointed out—I think it was only last month—and told the hon. Member that we had just received the Report and it was with the printer.

The other point I think which he no doubt wishes me to comment on is the question of whether people in the service wish to resign on this issue. All I can say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, is that I have no knowledge of that whatsoever, and I do not know what else the hon. gentleman wants.

Mr. Slater: Mr. Speaker, I think on the whole that is a very satisfactory reply to a question which I am sure is a matter of great urgency. It is most important when these Press reports come that Government should state the full position with the least possible delay, and I would have expected the Chief Secretary to be grateful for this opportunity.

There is one question, however, arising out of this newspaper report which he has not answered quite specifically, and I still think remains to be answered by some other Member opposite, and that is whether the editing in London is purely editing by Mr. Corfield or by anyone else.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Deputy Speaker, surely if this report has been signed by the commissioner or whatever he may be called he is functus officio and he cannot alter that Report in any manner whatsoever. I do not know what my hon. friend means by editing the report, but editing the report might be anything. It might mean alteration, but I say, and with all diffidence, that if the report has been signed he is functus officio and he cannot alter it in any way other than dot the "i's" and cross the "t's".

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not honestly know what the hon. Member for the Coast means when he says that an author is functus officio. Surely the author has the right to alter, abridge, change or do what he likes with his work before publication. To suggest that an author ever becomes functus officio, I think, frankly, is somewhat misconceived.

So far as the editing is concerned, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the fact is that no changes or contractions of the report can or will be made otherwise than by or with the consent of Mr. Corfield. I feel that that is the position in respect of any author. There are certain parts of the report which, as the Chief Secretary has mentioned, are not considered to be in the public interest to publish, but no part of the report will be omitted or abridged or contracted without reference to Mr. Corfield and without his consent. In particular I might mention one or two points in which I personally am concerned, and that is that where there are references to individuals in certain contexts by name, and where the publication of their names might conceivably be a danger to their own personal security then I have, as have other people who have seen the report, recommended to Mr. Corfield that those names be omitted. For similar reasons other parts of the report will be omitted.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I once had the privilege of serving on the staff of the Daily Telegraph and I feel quite sure that this report of theirs will be a sound one.

[Air Commodore Howard-Williams]

I would like to ask whether Mr. Corfield has been requested, Sir, to take anything out of the report by Mr. McLeod or by anyone else.

Mr. Ngame: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, it seems to me, Sir, and to the Members on this side that the seriousness of the matter is, how could the news of the report leak to the other part of the country when the Members of this House are not aware of it. That is why we are worried about it.

It is the practice in this House that any report which is coming for publication should not leak to the public unless the Members of this House are aware of the position.

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Speaker, Sir, I must confess that I feel a little confused as to who is doing the editing and who has asked for the editing, because the Chief Secretary on the one hand has said that the author has the right to edit and I concede him that right. He has said that nothing will be abridged, or taken out, without reference to Mr. Corfield, which suggests that someone else is editing the report in some other place and is going to refer it to Mr. Corfield.

The other thing that surprises me is that it may be true and we may concede that it may not be in the interest of the public to publish certain parts of the report. The question that strikes me is whether in this particular case the report was finally produced in a final form and the Kenya Government has now asked for its editing apart from whatever editing the author himself may have seen fit to do. Now, if that is the case then perhaps the Chief Secretary might have told us that there are certain parts of the report which the Government has considered should not be published but this is not what we have been told—that in fact there are parts of the report which should not even appear in the report and then there will be parts of it which will not be published.

I am terribly confused about this report.

Mr. Travadi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have a small question, Who is going to be the "Big Brother" here of "1984 by Orwell"?

The question was put and carried.

ADJOURNMENT

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I accordingly adjourn Council until 9 o'clock tomorrow, Friday, 29th April.

The House rose at Five o'clock.

Friday, 29th April, 1960

The House met at Nine o'clock.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) in the Chair]

PRAYERSMOTION*SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDERS

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move:—

THAT Standing Orders be suspended to the extent necessary to enable Council to consider today (Private Members' Day) the two Motions of which notice was given yesterday, 28th April.

As hon. Members will see, the two Motions deal with limitations of speeches referring to a debate which will begin on Tuesday. It is therefore inevitable or from my point of view necessary that we should take the two motions although today is Private Members' Day and I apologize to Private Members that this should be necessary.

I beg to move.

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones) seconded.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

MOTIONLIMITATION OF BUDGET DEBATE

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move:—

THAT speeches on the Financial Statement (Budget) be limited to 30 minutes except in the case of two Members of the Government side in addition to the Mover and six Members of the non-Government side of whom one, shall be an African Constituency Elected Member, one, an Arab Constituency Elected Member, one, an Asian Muslim Constituency Elected Member, one, an Asian Constituency Elected Member not being a Muslim, one, a European Constituency Elected Member and one, a Specially Elected Member, whose speeches shall not be so limited.

Hon. Members will remember probably that this Motion is in exactly the same terms as a Motion which I moved at the same time last year, and therefore Sessional Committee has put before the House the same proposals for the limitation of speeches as were in operation this time a year ago. The Sessional Committee still feel that it is necessary in a debate which is of great importance for the country that as many people as possible should get a chance to speak, and that, therefore, is the reason why this Motion is put before the House.

Sir, I beg to move.

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones) seconded.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

MOTIONLIMITATION OF DEBATE ON ANNUAL ESTIMATES

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Courts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to move that the following limitation shall be applied to the business of the Annual Estimates:—

(i) On the Motions "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair" to enable Ministers to initiate debates on policy all speakers other than the Mover in moving and in reply be limited to 30 minutes.

(ii) In Committee of Supply all speeches shall be limited to 10 minutes.

Sir, the remarks which I made on the previous Motion apply equally to this one. It is in exactly the same terms as last year and I would suggest to all hon. Members that these limitations in both cases are necessary.

I would also just like to mention that in Committee of Supply people can, of course, talk as often as they wish and the interpretation of (ii) is that they may talk as often as they wish but only for ten minutes at any one time. In Ways and Means, of course, according to Standing Orders, Members are only allowed to talk twice.

Sir, I beg to move.

The Minister for Housing, Common Services, Prebitala and Approved Schools (Mr. Amalemba) seconded.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

MOTIONTRIAL BY JURY: RIGHT OF EVERYONE

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move:—

THAT in view of the changing conditions this Council strongly urges Government to take immediate steps to extend the right of trial by jury to everyone in Kenya.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, this Motion is intended to bring up a feeling that some of our citizens in Kenya have regarding justice in the courts in certain cases. I am given to understand that some communities in Kenya are not very keen on this kind of thing, but if the right was there for everybody they would be free to opt not to be given this opportunity, so I do not think that ground would stop any Member from supporting the Motion in principle even if they felt that as far as their communities are concerned the Motion was not very important.

Sir, it is important in this particular case to see that in some cases and in some communities, especially the European community in Kenya, they have the right of trial by jury, but in the case of Africans, especially in the African community, they have not. Government have their own reasons, and the Legal Department, for not making this facility available. But from the African point of view our system of justice, before the British Government and the British way of doing things in Kenya, was something very near. What it aimed at was the system of trial by jury. By that I mean, in any particular case, whether in a clan or in a tribe, it was done by referring to the customs and referring to the traditions of the people, and having the elders sitting round to decide. They were the court and partly the prosecutors and partly the judges, in that when a thing happened to a particular individual generally, in almost every case of African tribes in Kenya, the members of that clan or tribe, or the senior members, would sit round and see what ought to be done; and in their own consciences in matters where things were doubtful they had the opportunity to weigh the particular issue and assist in coming to the finality. So it is not a strange idea so far as the Africans are concerned to have somebody's equals look at the traditional way of doing things, or the customs, and assist the magistrate or the judge in passing the particular sentence. This is why, to the African mind, trial by jury is not a new idea.

It is true that the organization was not as elaborate as it is today in Kenya. We have the system of courts in Kenya today, the Government courts and the African courts, and in some cases we have had what are known as assessors in certain particular cases to give their own opinions or their own sense of judgment about a particular case about any particular individual, which is partly something nearing the idea of trial by jury. The only position where I feel complications might come in is where the English or the British common law is so different from what you might call the African common law, and that will be for the Attorney-General and his Legal Department to assess how to facilitate this because today we have African courts and we have the proper Government courts which try to facilitate the two differences apart from the criminal cases which are straightforward when it comes to customary law, and the general feeling of the people is that the Attorney-General and his Department, as they have done, in devising courts for different communities, could try and see how this could fit in, Sir.

As to the details of this common law, say on the African side, and the assessments behind it, there is the British common law which I suppose the Attorney-General might say makes all the difference: I feel, Sir, that there is room for the legal-minded people to reach the essence of trial by jury or by having other people to come in in all sorts of cases. Take cases of manslaughter or many other such doubtful cases where the public or the jury might feel differently—members of the public might feel differently. On that one I would suggest that some enquiry might be required to see how it could be fitted in. Then there might be another difficulty, and the Government might say that there is too much money involved in the reorganization, but I would say that justice is justice from wherever it may be and if it is fair and right that this opportunity or right to be tried by jury would be working towards justice then equally with any other problem in Kenya the Government should set their minds to it and find ways of doing it. So if the arguments regarding its rightness are based on money then I will call that just expediency.

The principle behind the idea, if acceptable, is the first consideration, and I do not feel that the expediency side of this matter should be taken into account in Kenya where we have got so many problems of roads, agriculture, education, and we always come down to money. But the acceptance of the Motion here does not demand that the Government begin immediately to spend money on it, so that I feel that the two issues, the rightness of this method and the money question, should be separated to give the Motion a chance.

Sir, this is a very technical subject. If I were to go into the history of why there is this system, say, in Britain, and what usefulness it has so far as justice is concerned, it would take a long time. But the essential similarity of it, or the fairness of it, is such that I feel, particularly so far as the African is concerned, that we were very democratic in our way of judging things. It was done by the elders together, and this sense of responsibility for the justice of a country on the part of whoever may be the jurists is very true. I feel just in the same way as we have had assessors in certain cases, not only during the Emergency but before, and even now, that idea behind the right of trial by jury is very important. I would not like to venture into comparing the history of this system in other countries because I do not feel that it is of any particular interest to us now. What is of particular interest is for this House to see the sense of fairness involved in the method. I know that on the part of the African community for a long time many people have urged that this should be extended to all, and with the usual practices of how to select them and who they should be. Sir, I would not interest myself just now. That would be subject to the normal procedure. But apart from expenses and apart from this fear, perhaps, of differences in custom, I do not see why it should not be possible, and efforts be made, to make it possible in our courts so that we have this sense of justice conveyed to the public in so far as it affects particular cases that sometimes judges find it useful to have other people's opinions on.

So, Mr. Deputy Speaker, my plea to the House and to the Government is for them to enquire into this idea not so much as a political issue at all, but rather to see whether there is any benefit in it. I am not urging them to do it right now. I am just saying it is so important and I feel that the two ideas of justice, the British sense of justice by trial where somebody is tried by other people who know him or who have some feelings on this particular issue and the African court class of jury system have quite a lot in common. Therefore, I feel that if the House would give the Motion a chance of having this system extended as far as it is possible and practicable and finally in future to everyone, it would be doing the whole country a lot of good.

Sir, for those who may not like the system because of their traditions, I plead with them to look at it objectively. The system would be available for those who want it and need it and feel that it would be of service and I do not feel that that would be any ground for opening the door to everyone in the normal way. Those who did not like it would withhold from it and those who did feel it useful would feel that they are free to have it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to move.

Mr. Khamsi: Sir, I beg to second the Motion. I have not got much to say on the question of instigating trial by jury to everyone in Kenya except to urge that this is one of those privileges and facilities which have been denied to Africans for quite a long time now and in the year 1960 I feel that in view of the changing conditions there is no more necessity to restrict this facility or privilege to any one particular race. I entirely agree with the Mover of the Motion that this [Mr. Khamisi] may not be entirely a political issue, but it is more or less a matter of giving justice to all, and for that reason I feel that as justice is one of the fundamentals of any good Government, I feel that this facility or privilege should now be open to everybody who wants to make use of it.

Sir, there are very many anomalies in the practice of Government which may be political in nature which will have to be put right in due course, but I feel that this is one of the most important and perhaps the foremost anomaly which should be looked into as early as possible. The Motion urges this Council to strongly recommend the Government to do just that much.

With those few remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support the Motion.

Question proposed.

Mr. Travadi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I rise to support the Motion moved by the hon. Mr. Maie and in doing so I would remind the House that it was last year that I raised the issue in a Question to the Speaker. The answer given was that due to certain practical difficulties it was not possible to extend this system to the other two communities, the Africans and Asians. The matter was raised, as I understand it, in the House of Commons where Mr. Dingle Foot put the question and the same answer was given. However, there is one particular portion in the debate raised by Mr. Paget which is very interesting. Mr. Paget asked if it was not a fact that in practice it had proved almost impossible to get conviction of Europeans where the victims had been Africans and the cases tried by European juries. I consider this point worth considering, and my community, I would say, Sir, have been trying to press for this for the last 30 to 40 years, that this system should be at least extended to the Asians. Now, I think the Mover has very rightly used the words "due to the changing circumstances". All this had happened before the Lancaster House Conference but now the circumstances have changed and changed tremendously to the extent that the Government, if not now, yet after a year or so, would be forced or compelled automatically to come out to make a move to extend this system to all the races and then it would be too late for others to give this matter a thorough consideration.

Therefore, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would press that early consideration be given to this extension of the system to all the races, if not fully and if there are practical considerations, at least to a limited extent for certain capital or other offences where this particular system can be extended to all the races. I remember in England—I know as a matter of fact, and it is the case here, too—that all natural born citizens of the Sovereign between the ages of 21 and 60 are compellable to serve as jurors. I think that here you could raise the age if you want to; you could restrict it to certain offences; but somehow the system must be extended to all the races.

I therefore, Mr. Deputy Speaker, beg to support, but before I sit down I would like to make it clear that the same point was raised at the Lancaster House Conference when Lord Perth was presiding at a group meeting of ours, and we expressed the view that this particular right should be included in the Bill of Rights so that in future there would be no further trouble in raising the issue in this House or anywhere else, and I would earnestly request that when this Bill of Rights is drafted, consideration should be given there, so that the whole matter may get out of the Ordinances and the local legislation and then it becomes a right which can never be abrogated or interfered with by local legislature.

I beg to support.

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I very much appreciate the manner in which my hon. friend the Mover moved this Motion, taking it, as he said, out of the realm of politics into the realm of common sense. The two are perhaps mutually exclusive!

He asked that we should give consideration to this issue and I should like to assure him that we have given very careful consideration to it. It has a long history, this issue; it has been raised in this House and the predecessors of this House with a degree of regularity over the past 50 years and I think it was about seven years ago that the Government gave an undertaking that it would consider the matter and it has. About a year or so ago, rather more, we conducted a statistical exercise with the assistance of the Statistical Department of the High Commission and its Holerith machines to consider or rather to ascertain the practical implications in terms of cases and the like which such an extension of the jury system would entail. There are, of course, other factors to be taken into account, quite apart from the mere weight of cases.

First, I think it is important to recognize that a jury system only works really satisfactorily where the society from which the jurors are drawn, first, is sufficiently large and homogeneous to ensure against personal and communal prejudices or partiality on the part of the jurors, and, secondly, where that society contains a sufficiently large percentage of literacy to provide jurors of adequate quality in adequate numbers to service a jury system. It does not necessarily follow that merely because there is a society, a community, of over 6,000,000 in this country it can service a jury system for all. It is not enough, for instance, that a juror should be merely literate. He has got to have a sufficient knowledge of the language of the courts, English, to be able to follow the evidence, to assess the credibility of the witnesses and, of course, to appreciate the issues of law which he is required in the performance of his functions to apply to the facts. Because juries are judges of facts and they have to judge those facts in relation to the law applicable to the particular case in question, neither, Mr. Deputy Speaker, can it, I think, be claimed or would it be claimed by any distinguished jurists that the jury system is necessarily the only or unchallengably the best system. We in Britain have developed that system in the course of our history and evolution and we believe that, whilst not perfect, it is as good as any other system and better than most. But in Britain, of course, it is founded on a relatively developed society, a homogeneous community, in which the incidence of education and literacy of a sufficient quality is pretty high.

Now, when we conducted this statistical exercise we got as a result a large volume of statistics. I do not want to induce collective mental dyspepsia in this House by quoting too large and indigestible a volume of figures but I think it is worth giving some figures. We have taken average figures founded mainly on the year 1957. Now, in that year there were 398 Europeans charged with offences for which they were either triable only by the Supreme Court or could opt to claim trial by jury in the Supreme Court. Had the same option been available to the other races, the figure of 398—shall we say, 400, to bring it into round figures—would have been of the order of 52,000. Now, in the case of Europeans the proportion of those who opted to the total number of accused persons tried in the Supreme Court (by reason of the fact that the offences with which they were charged were triable only by the Supreme Court, or on opting for trial by the Supreme Court rather than by summary trial in the subordinate courts), the proportion was about one in twelve. Well, let us assume for the purposes of this consideration that if the right of trial by jury had been open to all races, let us assume that one in twenty would have opted for trial by jury. That would have meant that out of a total of 52,000 cases some 2,600 cases would have been triable by jury in the Supreme Court.

Now, dealing with the rather more mundane practical considerations, the statistics indicate that the average length of a jury trial is three days. There are 260 court working days in a year. The number of jurors is 12 in a capital case and five in non-capital cases. It came out in our calculations that the practical factors amounted to this: that we would require 30 additional judges. Now, to deal with the cost in terms of that figure, those judges at the present rates of salary alone would cost us an annually recurrent £87,000. But, of course, judges do not operate in isolation. They are, so to speak, at the pinnacle of a pyramid of services provided by clerks, interpreters, shorthand writers, and the like. There would, of course, also be the question of accommodation. There would moreover be the question of counsel to staff those courts and present the cases, the prosecuting counsel. Without attempting, as I say, to overload the Council with statistics, I think it is fair to say that the total cost would run into some hundreds of thousands of pounds of which a considerable proportion would be annually recurrent. That, one might say, is not in itself a decisive bar to the introduction of such a system but, of course, it would add very considerably to the financial burden of this country. There would, of course, be the problem of finding the necessary staff, from judges downwards.

Quite apart from that sort of consideration, we would have to find a sufficient panel of adequately qualified jurors, and in this connexion it is not sufficient merely to say that a jury of five is only two more than three assessors for any particular case, because the quality of jurors must necessarily be very much higher than the quality of assessors. Juries have different functions to perform from assessors. Assessors are for the assistance of the judge and their views and opinions are not binding on the judge. It is the judge who makes the decision and it is a fact that, while I very readily acknowledge the very great assistance—and I am sure the judges would wish me to do so—the very great assistance which they do derive from their assessors, it is a reality, which we must not shy away from that in a very considerable number of cases the judges have to dissent from the views and opinions presented to them by assessors and in a number of cases it becomes quite apparent that those views are quite hopelessly out of accord with the the evidence; that the considerations of law which have been explained to the assessors for application in the course of their deliberations have not been understood or appreciated; and that consequently the outcome of their deliberations as expressed in their opinions bears no relation to the true merits of the case, either in terms of fact or in terms of law.

Now, how would we service a jury system in terms of jurors? Our statistics indicate that particularly in the less populated areas of the country we would be very hard put to find adequate jurors; in fact, it would be impossible. Our relatively small jury list would consist of persons who would have to be, being the only ones suitably qualified, employed almost permanently on jury work. It would place an intolerable burden on that relatively small minority of the population. Moreover, one cannot consider this issue without having regard to another part of the issue, namely, would juries be racial or would they be multi-racial. Well, until the community of this country develops further and becomes more closely integrated, with higher general standards of education and literacy of a suitable quality, I think it must be recognized that your jury list in this country would consist preponderantly of European names. There would then be a considerable number of Asian names, and the African element in the jury panel would be relative small. I ask the hon. Mover and his Second to consider whether their people, the Africans, would at this stage of the country's development really prefer to be tried by a judge and a jury consisting mainly of Europeans and Asians—possibly wholly of Europeans and Asians—than as at present by a judge advised by assessors of their own race, knowing their own customary and traditional background and what-have-you.

It is, of course, unsatisfactory in principle that the jury system, as it is in this country at present, should be confined to persons of one particular race. Let me say, though, as a matter of historical fact, that they, the Europeans in this country, did not invent the jury system for themselves in this country. In fact, it was imported as part of the Indian law when the Indian criminal procedure system was imported by reference into this country. But of course, the Europeans in their origins in Britain had inherited the jury system in their own history and background.

The fact, therefore, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that while we have given the very closest consideration to extending the jury system, which, I entirely agree, is a desirable end, the fact remains that on these practical considerations, the inability of the community of the country as a whole to service at the moment a satisfactory jury system for all, and secondly the considerable practical difficulties in terms of costs and staff and accommodation, the fact is that it is not yet possible or practicable to introduce a jury system of general application to all races in this country. It may come, I hope and believe that it will come in due course; but it does mean that the country has got to advance somewhat further than it has already, both in terms of sociology, education and the like, and in the welding of the community into a homogeneous whole.

Now, dealing with some of the points which have been raised by previous speakers, I should like to say that I entirely agree with the hon. Mover that comparisons with systems in other countries are not really of very much assistance in our present circumstances. I have heard comparisons made in regard to this issue with other Colonial territories in which there has been, and is now, a right to trial by jury for all races. I have had personally some experience of such territories, and I am bound to say that while the jury system generally acts well in a large and developed community it is open to very considerable objection when it is founded on smaller communities and you have parochialism entering into the operation of the jury system. I have on occasion been confronted, when I was appearing in cases in other countries, by the most remarkable verdicts by juries which have caused considerable astonishment to all the persons in court. They have been diametrically opposed to the weight of the evidence and in complete and flat disregard of the principles of law applicable in the cases concerned. That, Sir, is something which does not arise, or certainly only arises very, very rarely and exceptionally, in a large community, a developed community, where the atmosphere in which the jury acts is wholly impersonal and objective.

I must not, I think, pass over the quotation from my hon. and learned friend regarding the contribution of Mr. Paget in the House of Commons debate, in which he said it was impossible to get a conviction of Europeans by European juries for offences against Africans. I think that is in a sense an illustration of the point which I have already made, because certainly by repute some years ago that was the position, as a lot of people understood it both in this country and particularly overseas. But I am very glad to say, and I say this as a considered view, that of recent years that view has certainly not been true, and I could again quote statistics, but I have quoted enough. But in present conditions in this country the jury system in the European community has, if I may use the phrase, "grown-up". It is no longer founded on a small community where personal considerations and parochialism intrude. It is at present running extremely well, fairly and impartially.

Now as regards the other point raised by the same hon. gentleman, that the right to trial by jury should be written into the Bill of Rights, until the situation is reached in which a jury system of general application to all races in this country becomes practicable, it would, of course, be a work of supererogation to include that right in the Bill of Rights.

[The Minister for Legal Affairs]

For those reasons, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Government, while in no sense out of sympathy with the motives behind this Motion, is not, of course, able to accept it and will have to oppose it when the vote comes.

I beg to oppose.

Mr. ore Tips: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the Motion. It is rather surprising to hear from the Attorney-General that the Government is not prepared either to reject or accept the present Motion.

Now, I think the Government should decide either way because in my own way of thinking I think there is unfairness somewhere in the administration of justice in this country. Either we extend the jury system to cover all races or do away with it. The question of saying that it would be very difficult to find fully-qualified personnel to serve as jurors—although there is something in that, I think—it does not hold much, because even before the Europeans came to this country we had our own court systems, and we decided even the most serious cases and punished people severely! and even now in the Native Tribunal Courts we have court elders and court presidents who are illiterate. They do not speak the English language at all, but it has been proved that even the verdicts given by such tribunal courts are upheld in the magistrates' courts when the appeal is lodged, so I do not think that that should be a bar to extending the jury system to all races.

The other thing, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, is that admittedly in some of the rural areas you might face the difficulty of finding suitable personnel to serve as jurors, but I do not see why in big towns, such as Nairobi where we have quite a large number of Africans and Asians and Europeans who have the required qualifications and understanding of the law, I do not really understand why such a system cannot be extended to such areas, such towns, as Nairobi, Mombasa and Nakuru for that matter. What excuse is there, for there are a whole lot of lawyers and people who can be classified as educated to any standard compared with some parts of England and other countries? Why only restrict it to Europeans? Why not to Asians and the Africans? Do I understand you cannot find the Asians or the Africans, for that matter, in Nairobi, who could serve as jurors.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not want to labour the House much, but in all fairness I would request the Attorney-General to review the whole position for the satisfaction of all in this country, because it is this sort of discrimination which does not help at all. Where it is possible apply the system. Where it is impossible and impracticable—well, review the thing, and as the time goes by introduce in such areas the system. With these few words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support the Motion.

Mr. Pandya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I support the Motion moved by the hon. Mover. I cannot see, Sir, how any Government on a question of principle could oppose such a motion. It is time that equal treatment was given to all peoples in this Colony, and that any pockets of discrimination should be removed as soon as possible. I think the Attorney-General did admit that this system was brought into this country as part of the Indian Criminal Procedure, and I think that from that it follows that this system was prevalent in India and the Indian people have been using this system for many years. We have also heard today that the African people in the tribal courts have been using this system, so it is not fair that the Asian and the African people should not be availed of, or given the opportunity to avail themselves of this system. It is a democratic method and indeed a practical matter, of importing justice in very serious cases. I cannot see how, if we accept the principles of justice, we can on the grounds of expense or difficulties deprive the Asian and African communities of the facility of trial by jury.

I think the Attorney-General did raise two points. One was in regard to the homogeneous society, and I would only say that let us have a beginning of trial by jury of people of the same race, and then extend it gradually to people of other races, and having really a multi-racial jury.

The second point was in regard to literacy, and I would suggest that if it is not possible to implement the system in its entirety, it may be gradually implemented to people of other races, and in other areas, as such educated people become available in those areas. It has been known that for the past many years the Asian community has been demanding the right of trial by jury, and the time has now come when the Government should review the whole situation and accept this Motion, so that it can now start working on how it can implement this system for the benefit of those people who are demanding this right and that they should be put on the same basis as the European community which has been having the advantage of this system for the last many years.

With those few words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support the Motion.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, it is very interesting that the Attorney-General and this side of the House differ very slightly, and on what I might describe in a single word as "expediency" only. The Attorney-General did say that it is a desirable end, and I say that is what we on this side are trying to say, but at the same time we are asking for a time when that desirable end could be reached, and that is why we would ask Government to take these steps. But, Sir, while I would agree with him on the facts of the practical implications and the other factors that he mentioned, there are other questions I would like to put to him and the Government for further thought. Sir, he said that a society is not homogeneous. That is very true. That is the problem we have got to deal with in Kenya. You are given data and you have got to get the answer. The Government must give us the answer to this. Here we are all of us, and we want to reach a state where we all feel that on this particular issue we are having each our fair share, and so, on that matter, I do not think we would differ.

On this question of money, I would only like to suggest as we are short of money, and nobody can deny that, surely on purely cold logic why should a section of the community of Kenya enjoy a luxury and also affecting an issue that is as important as justice? What right have the European community to enjoy this right? If it is argued, as it has been before, that they pay more taxes, higher income tax, they get better salaries, they get better houses, because they get better schools—what they call the “higher standard”—the African contribution in Kenya is so important and nobody wants to admit it. There is his labour—he is working in offices now—his taxes. At this time when we come to consider about money in Kenya we should never give anybody a luxury. It is unfortunate that the two things coincide in this. The trial by jury is a British system, and the community in Kenya who now enjoy it are British, so that if we try to talk of it for a section of the community in Kenya, the two things overlap, and with the other communities it is not quite easy to see how the two go together. So would the Attorney-General or the Government answer the question that in this heterogeneous community, or this community of Kenya, why should one section enjoy what to other people is a luxury? Because one practical thing is that we cannot afford to do this thing. I mean employing the extra staff. On the possibility—on the operation of this system and its importance, we cannot agree, and so the Government have not referred to the other communities why the benefit should be available to one community. I do not want to press this point too far, because it will be mixed up with racial discrimination, like many other services, such as education, or even hospitals, and I do not want to go too far. All I would like to ask the Government, is, “How are you going to say that you cannot get money to make it possible for that percentage of the population to have this right, but not for everybody?” Who is “everybody”? The African. They are not everybody, they are individuals, who want to enjoy the same rights like any other citizen. So that is only a question to Government for them to think about, and its other implications when we look at it.

Sir, the other argument raised by the Attorney-General is the understanding of the appropriate or complicated issues of law. I do not think I have it correct, but something to that effect. I understand that law is a very technical subject, and I do not even understand it myself, but if we are told because of this lower education some communities cannot have it, I feel, Sir, it is another anomaly here. It is really a question that because we are not educated we cannot have this right. We cannot have access to it. But, Sir, even here, this same Government have not even encouraged Africans to know law. They have done very little at all in encouraging African lawyers. Those who have tried to go out to countries like India or Britain, or any other country; in order to delve into this particular subject of law—I am talking seriously—they get all the discouragement one can think of, so when shall we get lawyers who can impart this knowledge to their brothers in due course? The Government here have another responsibility of having withheld this particular knowledge from the African community. We see so many European lawyers and so many Asian lawyers, but of African lawyers, so few. Any who try to get into this business through many channels get frustrated and here Government tells us you have a community but that community has not that knowledge. Well, shall we ever get it unless we have the lawyers next door, and how can we get them without their going to colleges, and I would ask Government here to encourage African lawyers by giving them scholarships. They come back here and are employed by the Registrar General for example or any other department, and they are as good as teachers for that matter. If Government can find any use for a man who comes back as a lawyer after all this trouble than employing him in an office and calling him a Government servant, they should not discriminate against this particular section of knowledge. And if the Attorney-General can do no more with this issue, he may at least encourage Government, or ask Government, to find more and more Africans opportunities of learning law, so that one day, I do not know after how long, perhaps we may have more and more lawyers.

So, Mr. Deputy-Speaker, I would agree with my hon. friend, the Member for Central Rift, that if we cannot avail every citizen of Kenya of this opportunity, let us abolish it. But I do not think it is right. We are trying to get there. We are not trying to go back. We want it and that is why I feel that Government should at least do something about it, and if Government are going to say that because of the money and these other factors we cannot do it, and take no steps to tackle this problem, while at the same time agreeing it is a good thing, then I feel the Government have a very difficult job, and it is their baby and they must carry the baby and look after it. All these arguments they give us are not completely satisfying. Either satisfy all or satisfy nobody. And, as I said, I would like to ask Government three questions. You talk of money. One community gets this service, or this opportunity, and without going into the economics I do not feel that anybody can convince the other communities that it is not discriminatory. And if as far as justice is concerned it is not important for an African or Asian to be given this facility, then surely it is not important, apart from custom, to give it to the European community. So, Mr. Deputy-Speaker, I feel Government should do something, and I would rather like to leave these questions with them, because as I see it I do not want it to be a political issue if I can avoid it. But what I mean is, if it will help to get justice and better justice for everyone in Kenya, and this plea is supported by all communities in Kenya, then Government should go further and enquire into the matter and see how soon it would be practicable, while at the same time alleviating some of these—what I may call—rather not so important factors. We talk of education. We have so many African court elders, and other responsible people around the place, and at least we could start some.

Mr. Deputy-Speaker, I beg to move.

The question was put and negatived.

MOTION

FAILURE OF LANCASTER HOUSE CONFERENCE

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy-Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that the Motion before this House:—

THAT this House notes the abject failure of the Lancaster House Conference to reach any agreement whatsoever, and reaffirms its acceptance of the Lennox-Boyd Plan for the next eight years, saving that there should be an electoral college with wider interests, professional and official, commercial and industrial to select the 12 Specially Elected Members.

Now, Mr. Deputy-Speaker, Sir, I raise this Motion because I believe what I have to say is true. What was wrong with the Lennox-Boyd Plan? It was signed, in the secret minutes, to which we have not access, to last ten years, and was accepted by the great majority of this House as a fair compromise, including many Africans; albeit, and agreed, not by eight honourable African Elected Members. Yet those recalcitrant eight, later inflated to 14 by the magnanimity of the Lennox-Boyd Plan, were supported at Lancaster House by the most flagrant abuse of power, generated by weakness, yet shown by Her Majesty's Government: One has only to read the editorial of East Africa and Rhodesia of 3rd March to see how base proved the purpose of the Lancaster House Conference, in these words, which with your permission, Sir, I quote. I shall only quote briefly. “So the Macleod Constitution stands as farcical, false and tragic. It is farcical and false because the African Elected Members regard it as out of date before it came into operation. It is tragic because it cuts the roots of confidence.” This new nonsense, Sir, recently heaved at us, is something I will not accept, as being outside the Prime Minister's statement in Cape Town, and I quote again, with your permission. “Merit alone is the criterion for a man's advancement, whether political or economic.” Modify your mind, Mr. Macleod, I say, or events will certainly modify it for you. A wind of change can blow the other way, in the East, particularly if it is a monsoon. Mr. Oates, the Chairman of the Convention of Associations meeting on 29th March last, said these words: “The Lancaster House Conference, concluded almost in secret by the Secretary of State, whom we have the misfortune to have as our master, showed unseemly haste without any thought of economic consequence.” Small wonder, Sir, the City of London will not underwrite this business for all the propaganda that we put around. Small wonder America will do so. There lies the root of our evil. What right have they to interfere, as they did over the suppression of my newspaper for instance?

I would have thought that Kenya was essentially a British sphere of influence. If I am wrong, Sir, the sooner my Maker claims me, the better.

An hon. Member: No!

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Thank you.

I now proceed, Mr. Deputy-Speaker, to give you some irrefutable facts which have emerged as a direct result of the Conference at Lancaster House. If there be any dispute over these issues then let them be aired here in this House. First, in truth—and we must here be interested in truth—the Conference failed to achieve its object because of the intransigence of the African Elected Members, and despite the versatility of [Air Commodore Howard-Williams] the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Michael Blundell, on his political trapeze. No agreement in fact emerged, for three reasons. First, our African friends—and they are our friends when all is said and done—wanted control and to grab the European land, which is only 5 per cent of Kenya, and from which we draw upwards of 80 per cent of our revenue; second, the thorny problem of education was not even discussed because it was thorny, which is never a good reason; third, some 80 per cent of the European electorate, as represented by the Briggs Group and myself, and the Member for Ukamba, were not even remotely satisfied. Agreed, some Specially Elected Members sought to win over the House of Commons and the Prime Minister. They should now surely be asked to find how they stand with their own members here who put them in. Otherwise they could be in danger of misleading the British Government. Why has their leader not held a series of meetings—and I am sorry he is not here—in Nairobi? I leave the answer to the Members of this House.

The second fact is that the former Speaker of this House, Sir Ferdinand Cavendish-Bentinck, an old settler of impeccable reputation, has thrown up his job in protest, as indeed have many others in doubt, regardless of their and our loss. Responsible men do not lightly abandon their heritage. Surely there is the red light.

The third fact is that there is talk among the Masai, for instance, that they will not be ruled by others. Oddly enough, their antecedents were European, witness the accepted authority, Mr. C. G. Seligman in Races of Africa, p. 142. With your permission, Sir, again, I quote, "The incoming Hamites were pastoral Europeans arriving wave after wave." Their coming to East Africa dates as far back as the plural period which gives them a title for at least 150,000 years. They are alleged to ask for a tribal solution, and all Kenya belongs to them if indeed it belongs to anyone. Surely, there lies the problem. They have been here for a known 5,000 years, possibly for some 150,000 years. The Bantu have been in Kenya for some 400 years. Further, we have a treaty with the Masai. What is to happen to that treaty? Is it to be torn up?

The fourth fact is that the hon. Member for Coast Rural, Mr. Ngala, Temporary, and I use the word "Temporary" with some significance, Minister of Labour elect, recently said that the Africans would claim the ten-mile strip. But the Arabs have been there for over 1,000 years and the Europeans, the Portuguese, for some 500 years, apart from our treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar. Are the British now going to give away something that they do not even possess? This man, this same African leader, says that the White Highlands are in dispute and therefore the Europeans should have no right to it when they, the Africans, get into power. But we have been given freehold and leasehold titles by the Crown. What does Her Majesty say to the use of her name in this regard? This could indeed be something over which she might be persuaded to refuse to accept the advice of her counsellors, and there are some among us who will take the trouble so to inform her. Indeed, the hon. Member for Nairobi Area—who I regret to say is not here with us this morning—recently said in a Press talk that the next Agreement will last for only a short time and that they must straight away work for uhuru. Now, within three years we have had three plans out here to kill all plans. Only one of them has succeeded and that is the Macleod Plan. The Lyttelton Plan, the Lennox-Boyd Plan, and the Macleod Plan. Are we to have another within a year or so? No one will give us the slightest assurance. All we get are back-handed back answers.

The sixth and last fact is that the Lennox-Boyd Plan was devised to last ten years, as I was at some pains to point out in my speech at Lancaster House. The Conference was brought about to devise ways and means within the framework of that Plan for further progress. What happened to those terms of reference? There was nothing wrong with the Lennox-Boyd Plan save that our African friends did not co-operate, any more than they will co-operate now, as we shall see, unless, of course, they are prepared to lose their seats, which will happen as sure as God made little Macleods.

There are the six main facts, as I see them, and they are, all of them, relevant. As one instance of the coming tragedy 14 members of two old settler families, whom I have happened to know for some 45 years, 45 years of residence behind them here, are putting up their land for sale and leaving for the south as soon as they possibly can.

Mr. Shaw: Shame!

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: It is significant that our African friends have opened their mouths so wide as to drive the best part of over 21,000,000—and I am not afraid to state that sum—out of the Colony and completely lose the confidence of the City of London.

I do not accept any assurance from Government any longer. They have let us all down too often, including many of their own people. Insurance money does not shy: it bolts. The stock market here has fallen. It is true that American money is on the way but not to these values;

[Air Commodore Howard-Williams] and somehow, Sir, that does not sound right for Britain. We here, Sir, accept the whole matter as having been engineered by America. They have ever sustained our African friends who proceed to the United States of America the moment they become of importance. Witness Mr. Ngala being invited for an eight weeks' sojourn and who will probably be doctored there, as was Dr. Mboya and Dr. Kiiano—America, where lynch-law still reigns. Ask the negroes. The importance of the American example has been raised in the past by our African friends. Do they realize, indeed does this House realize, that the American assault on our Colonial chastity is the most wretched rape in the whole wide world today? People who live in White Houses should not, Sir, drop muck. By the way, it took the combined efforts of Nikita and Salim to make me call it muck. Some 18,000,000 or more blacks in the United States of America are tied to the more menial tasks, wrongly so in many opinions. They are represented by some 17 Members in the House of Representatives, all of them coloured and none of them black, or, one to 10,000,000. Surely that is something which is disgracefully racial. In the Congress they have not achieved a single representative so far. There is seen the American democratic way of life. What is more important is that democracy no more works in America than it works anywhere else. Some of their States have a limited representation with no votes whatsoever for the black man. Yet these are the people who open their mouths widest in Africa and who pay for our subversion through their versatile Under-Secretary of State, Satterwaite the sinister I call him, always prating about democracy in Africa but never in America.

Macmillan is discussing and conducting an experiment in Africa, and—

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Sir, on a point of order, is the hon. gentleman right in referring to a Member of a friendly Government in the terms which he has just used?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): It is unworthy, I think, of the dignity of this House to do so. I was also wondering how the question of democracy in America is really relevant to the issue which is before us on this question, and I would ask the hon. and gallant Mover to adhere to the terms of the Motion in his speech.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I thank you and would say that I no longer regard America as a friendly country.

Macmillan is conducting an experiment in Africa from thousands of miles away. Let it be quite clear, Sir, that he shares every single life that will be forfeit in this experiment. I, for one, hate being a guinea pig and so should our African friends, because they will be the prime sufferers. The electorate have given ample evidence that they want the Coalition of Sir Ferdinand Cavendish-Bentinck. Then why, in the name of Almighty God, not come together and face up to these issues with realism, first as a race and then as leaders. Words, Sir, will not resolve this problem. Either we accept the Governments here and at home as honest or we do not. I prefer to give them both the benefit of the doubt in spite of everything. Some of their antics are indeed capable of another interpretation. If they be honest then the Macleod Plan can never function in that it will be the greatest betrayal in our British story. Even Mr. Macleod was apprehensive in that he begged us at the Conference not to apply his name to it, therefore I say, why not, once and for all, throw out and stick to the Lennox-Boyd Plan?

Mr. Deputy Speaker. I simply seek to make an honest woman of the Government that has been driven off the streets and has set up her practice with the aid of the telephone in a kind of multi-racial knocking shop against the wishes of all decent society, notably the loyalists, the Europeans, most of the Arabs, the Somalis, the Masai—

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Whilst we are no doubt very much entertained by this comedy turn, Sir, is it right to refer to the Government of this country as a "multi-racial knocking shop"?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): No, I really must ask the hon. Mover to restrain his language. The expression which he has used is wholly unparliamentary and is completely below the dignity of this House.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Thank you.

Only our hon. African friends want this thing on a basis of sois mon ami ou je tue—be my friend or I will kill you—which has ever been foreign to British justice and British rule. The Macleod Plan can but lead to trouble when every single casualty shall be laid at his door—a terrible thought for him to take to bed each night. The attempt by the Home Government to sell out their good friends the African loyalists and all the many odd groups of minorities in Kenya, that attempt is doomed by these words of mine.

I therefore beg Members of this House to put away the whip and vote with their conscience, as have a number of the best officials of Government, as a sign that honour is not yet dead. The point is simple. Either you favour a black dictatorship, on the lines of Ghana, our bases gone; our word no more, or you denounce a shame that was never before contemplated in favour of what was the Lennox-Boyd Plan. The criteria of all Government appointments (HANSARD, Vol. LXXXIII, page 1457) were to be, "merit and ability, experience and integrity" which was an assurance given to me by the Chief Secretary just before he went home. How can they therefore yet appoint an African Minister without he has first had experience as an assistant minister and proved himself? The Archbishop of Canterbury recently wrote to some of us to say, and I quote, "Will not African leaders who care for Kenya, even one of them, persuade their people to be content with one long step at the time?" The answer is "No". They see the billions of pounds the British have invested in this Colony over the last sixty glorious years, and want to grab the lot now. The trouble, Sir, is that the Colonial Office is a fool.

In conclusion, nothing phoney ever succeeds. It is surely far safer for the Colonial Secretary to have the support of a Commission or Enquiry, the politics out here being what they are, rather than take any risk.

We cannot allow a Home Government to heave away our heritage, in my view needlessly, as in Egypt, the Sudan, Iraq, Ghana, Nigeria, and now in Kenya, bogusly on the model of the Mother of Parliaments, but actually in favour of complete dictatorship which disposes of all opposition and sells our friends down the river of pristine politics, witness Ghana in particular.

This is my penultimate protest, Sir, on behalf of my constituents, including many Government officials, who put me into the Legislative Council on the sanctity of the White Highlands, and on the education of our children, essentials over both of which the Conference completely failed to agree.

Sir, I beg to move.

Mr. Maxwell: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support the Motion but not necessarily the references made in some respects by the hon. Mover.

I, too, was disgusted with the outcome of the Lancaster House Conferences. Those proposals are as repugnant to me now as they were when they were announced on Sunday, 21st February, 1960.

Mr. Macmillan, during a fairly recent tour of Africa, made reference to the wind of change taking place in this vast Continent. From that learned or erudite pronouncement one would imagine that the Prime Minister and his cabinet ministers had indeed made a unique discovery. We, who have lived in Kenya for many years, and who have made our home here, could tell Mr. Macmillan and his colleagues that outstanding changes have been taking place in this country due to the enterprising efforts of the European and Asian, over the past 60 years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, the proposals put forward by Mr. Macleod to replace the steady and progressive progress represents a hurricane, a cyclone, a devastating and catastrophic typhoon, which has done much to destroy confidence in this country, both from the investment point of view and security.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, what we want in this country is a fair and just constitution to meet the needs of all the peoples of this Colony: Freedom for all; and intimidation, and domination by none.

Question proposed.

Mr. Slade: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I oppose this Motion for two reasons. In the first place it requires us to note "the abject failure of the Lancaster House Conference to reach any agreement whatsoever". I propose to refute that allegation.

In the second place it requires us, if we have agreed on anything, to go back on our agreement.

It has been alleged, Mr. Deputy Speaker, not only by the Mover in this debate but in other places on other occasions, particularly I regret by the hon. Member for Nairobi Area, that there was in fact no agreement at Lancaster House. I am very glad indeed of this opportunity of alleging categorically that there was agreement at Lancaster House and saying why.

Sir, what happened at Lancaster House? We met first of all in full Conference and all put forward our different points of view. The Secretary of State then put forward a tentative outline of the possible basis of agreement on the franchise, which was rejected by all the delegates. At that point some of us, including the Group to which I belong, saw quite clearly that there was not very much prospect of the Secretary of State putting forward a realistic proposition that could command agreement among us. We also realized the absolute necessity of reaching agreement if any fruitful outcome was to be at all. Therefore, we approached the African Elected Members and entered into direct negotiations with them, which proceeded quite a long way. Those negotiations came to a point where there appeared to be a deadlock on one issue. At that point the Secretary of State intervened again and put forward some proposals to resolve the deadlock. Those proposals were accepted by the African Elected Members. When they were put to us in our group we discussed them with the African Elected Members but before agreeing to them, before we decided whether or not we would agree to them, we got a perfectly clear statement from the Secretary of State that there was no question of our being forced to agree to them and that if we did not agree to them, the matter was still open for further discussion, and there was certainly no assumption that he would impose any constitution in those terms, or indeed anything like them, or indeed impose any constitution at all. And it was in that atmosphere of complete freedom of choice that we also accepted these proposals, as resolving the main issue between us and the African Elected Members. And if that does not represent agreement, I do not know what does.

But much more important even than the fact of agreement, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that the great majority of us, all delegates there of all races, came to realize the absolute necessity of agreement. We came to realize much more clearly than many of us have realized before, the fundamental issues that we must all realize now in this Council and throughout the country. Sir, there are very few of us who have not at some stage or other, or even continuously, looked forward to the time when this country is independent and we can manage our own affairs. In my own case, when I first stood for election eight years ago it was the move towards the independence of Kenya that was one of the main planks upon which I stood. So, indeed, have many other of my colleagues at various times. Our only difference has been, at what speed to move and what final shape of independence to seek. That is all. We all want Uhuru for Kenya in our own way. But given that, Sir, how are we to arrive at any healthy form of independence for this country if we do not try to work it out among ourselves? Where on earth are we going to arrive, if we persist in the old conception of each racial community hammering at the gates of Whitehall for the solution that they think best for this country in general and their community in particular? Where can that get us? Where would it have got us at Lancaster House if we in our group, the New Kenya Group, had extracted from the Secretary of State precisely the solution that we thought right, if it had been unacceptable to other communities in Kenya? Where would it take us towards independence? What will independence mean to us if it is in a form imposed against the will of a large part of the people of this country? How on earth can we have a peaceful or prosperous country on a pattern which we have not agreed ourselves?

That is what we understand at Lancaster House, all of us, all of us who entered into this agreement. That, I say again, is what the people of this country must understand, and upon which they must base all their future thinking. We have got to stop asking the British Government to find a solution for us. We have got to start finding it for ourselves, by agreement among ourselves, and we have made that start at Lancaster House. That realization was born at Lancaster House and has already borne fruit. And when I hear references to the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Blundell, in the terms which I heard from the hon. Mover, and I hear too often elsewhere, as if he by himself had executed a series of political gymnastics and had let everybody else down, let me say here that he was our leader and he spoke for every one of us, with the agreement of every one of us and we are as certain today as we were then that we did right under his leadership. Mr. Deputy Speaker, that agreement that has been made at Lancaster House we intend to honour. There may be others, there evidently are others unfortunately, who do not intend to honour it, and therefore like to assert that there was no agreement. That is an old way of avoiding contractual obligations. We do not intend to take that course, and therefore we shall not be party at any stage to any proposition of going back on what was agreed at Lancaster House. I am quite certain, Mr. Deputy Speaker, whatever may be said by one or two hon. African Elected Members, the great majority of our African friends who were party to this agreement intend likewise to honour it. I do not see otherwise how they would now be joining Government and sitting on the opposite benches. I would like to take this opportunity of saying how very much we on this side welcome this development of African Elected Members joining the Government and sharing the responsibility.

I would add, Sir, that that alone is a tremendous development which is attributable to the fact of agreement at Lancaster House. Sir, it is very easy to appeal to fear, to appeal to emotions, to appeal to past history. We shall not get anywhere that way. We have to face that in this step forward in our constitutional evolution. It is a bigger step than some of us thought wise; it is a smaller step than others wanted. That is the essence of agreement, that neither party gets the whole of what he wants. But never mind, it is a step in the right direction and, more important, in the right atmosphere. We have got to preserve that atmosphere and cherish it and make it grow. We have not got to resort to those easy measures of killing the young plant. We have got to look forward and not back. We have got to put away the fear that breeds hatred and misunderstanding. We have got to put away the hatred and the misunderstanding that breeds fear. Those are the things that will destroy the confidence in this country. People talk of loss of confidence. Is not confidence a matter for us? Is it not up to us to decide whether or not we are going to lose

[Mr. Slade] confidence? Is it not up to us to do those things that will hold confidence but not undermine it? We can easily make it our own business to see that we in this country, and those who watch this country, do not lose confidence in our future if we make up our minds to it, and if we understand, I repeat once more, that we shall achieve a peaceful and prosperous maturity for this country by ourselves alone, not by calling for help from abroad, whether it is our mother country or elsewhere. We have got to start now and go on now and not be afraid of each other and not mistrust each other, however much some of us may fall by the way. I beg to oppose.

Mr. Zafud-Deen: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am convinced that the Lancaster House constitution was the only practical and reasonable solution to the problems facing Kenya. Sir, there are three types of people in this country whom we have got to watch. One is the man who will panic and create a disturbance and cracks in the economic fabric of the country and thereby he will break the tanks. The other type is the one who will try to maintain the privileges and entrenched rights which he has enjoyed so far, and yet another will, I believe, try to brag and gloat over what he might term his political victory. Sir, I think that we have got to watch very carefully these elements of destruction. If we do so, I am convinced we will save Kenya.

It is also a matter of great regret—and I agree with the remark made by the hon. Mover—that there were some people who pledged their support but they went back on their word as soon as they returned to this country. It is indeed a matter of great regret that they should show this unreliability in their behaviour on their return. Probably it was done simply to feed the emotions of the people in this country. I hope better sense will prevail.

Sir, I do not regret for the part and contributions made by me, and I am sure that I also express the feelings of many others responsible in drafting the constitutional proposals at Lancaster House. As I said before, it is my firm view that this was the only practical solution and now that we have it before us it is the duty of every true and loyal citizen to pledge his support to the future Government of Kenya and if we do so we are sure to build a society which would be built on justice and in this way we will have peace and order and prosperity in this country. If we do not do so, the fear which has been entertained by a very large section of the population, Africans, Europeans and Asians, that we might be faced with conditions of insecurity which might upset everything which has been built for this country and may lead to disaster.

Sir, in opposing this Motion I would particularly like to appeal to that section of the European community who have, I am sure in my mind very rightly, accepted the changes, "the wind of change", which is going to take place in this country. If opposition of this nature continues, then the danger is that we might break the possibility of building goodwill which, I am sure, is the only answer to the problems of Kenya. From my personal knowledge and contact with the African leaders I have no doubt any longer in my mind that they do mean to play fair with every member of the immigrant races in this country.

On the question of land, as references were made to Sir Ferdinand Cavendish-Bentinck, he himself has admitted that he has no intention of undoing what has been achieved in Lancaster House.

Sir, I think the only problem which is facing us in this country today is that we must try to build up a society, particularly of the African community, who can give that measure of a sense of security to the immigrant peoples which they desire. I also know that there are certain sections of the immigrants who have lost their faith but we have got to restore this. We also know, because we have been told time and again, that capital is flowing out of this country, but I am sure that all those people who really want to build a prosperous Kenya and who have got faith in this country will lose no time in reassuring the people that their skill and capital will help each other and in doing so we will be able to build a Kenya which will set an example to the world.

Sir, I beg to oppose the Motion.

The Minister for Commerce and Industry (Dr. Kioko): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I was not surprised by the arguments which were quoted by the Mover of this Motion, but I must say also that I was not impressed by them either. I feel that we have had a speech which seeks to persuade us to walk backwards instead of going forwards. We are told, for example, that this House should accept the Lennox-Boyd Constitution with some variations proposed in the Motion. It appears that the Mover does not even seem to know that the Lennox-Boyd Constitution does no longer exist. What we have is not a Lennox-Boyd Government, it is a Caretaker Government and the Lennox-Boyd Government has already been seriously modified, waiting for the elections which will mean the full implementation of the Lancaster House agreement.

Now, Sir, I was a bit surprised, if I may say so—although one could find the reasons why—that the Mover of the Motion sought to play the hero, leading the Masai and speaking for the welfare of the Masai. Now, Sir, this kind of late advocacy for the welfare of the Masai is a bit out of place, particularly when you consider that if the Masai have any complaint to make in this country it is the fact that there has been a lot of lack of balance in the development of Kenya. When there is education in one area, there has not been adequate education in another. While in some provinces or in some towns progress has been fostered, in the Masai area it has not. If this is the kind of advocacy I could see, I would be happier; but to say today rather late that it is the duty of the Mover to tell the House that the Masai tend to it is firstly very difficult to prove and, secondly, I am glad to say Mr. ole Tipsis is present and could speak perhaps more authoritatively on the standard of the Masai development.

Now, Sir, the point is this, that while the African Elected Members and other Members and other people in the Conference, accepted the Macleod proposals, they accepted them with some reservations and under those circumstances it is quite understandable when somebody speaks about the Macleod Constitution that they tend to criticize some part of it because these are the very qualifications or, shall I say, reservations that they frankly told the Secretary of State himself. I therefore am not surprised to find that, for example, the leader of the African Elected Members, Mr. Ngala, has made a statement which might not be complete praise of the Macleod proposals because each person has his duty to keep the world aware of some of the reservations these people have. Nevertheless, Mr. Deputy Speaker, what the proposals did was this: it gave us a clear road for the constitutional development of this country. Now, that was made very specific. How soon we shall get independence depends on a number of factors, one of which I hope will not be some people in this country trying to tie heavy stones on our feet so that we do not walk fast towards the goal that has already been declared, the goal of independence.

The second thing is that having cleared the road, the constitutional road of development, the standards and the principles governing that development were also clarified. People say quite clearly that those ideals, those principles, which have been admired and supported by the majority of the world called democracy, will be the principles and the ideals that will govern the form of government that is to be developed in Kenya. Now, Sir, there are people who do not believe in those ideals. I am not simply talking of the purely mechanical aspects of government; I am thinking of those ideals like justice, equality before the law and so on. If it is the duty of some people in Kenya to fight against the establishment of those ideals and those principles, then I would say that those people are out of step not only with Kenya but with the entire Western world.

May I say that I am not particularly worried when the Mover tells us that there is a lot of flowing of capital out of this country. I have put more emphasis on the words of the Minister for Finance who told us just recently that although some capital might have been leaving Kenya that the pace is slow and is actually insignificant. I could actually add this, that if there is any further lack of confidence in the economy of Kenya, it is mainly because of people of the type of views such as the Mover that create the instability in question. We have a duty and that duty is to affirm that we mean the development of Kenya not only towards political freedom but also towards economic prosperity. That confidence is very much going to depend on the attitude and the actions of the African Elected Members, I know, because after the elections the African Elected Members may have a political group in the House. We are aware of that but we can also tell the world today—and I can say this confidently knowing that all my other colleagues believe this with me—that there is no question, no question, of disregarding the economic problems of the country just for the sake of political controversy. Already during the short time that I have had the duty—and I call it a duty—of being Minister for Commerce and Industry I have been visited by quite a number of business men, some of whom have been business men in Kenya for some time and others who are passing through Kenya and just want to know what kind of things go on in my mind and in the minds of my colleagues as far as investment is concerned.

And I have assured them, as I shall assure this House, that any person who seeks to increase the prosperity of this country, any person who wishes to see that in search of profits he shall also help to fight against unemployment in this country, any person who comes here as a human being, not as a person who believes himself superior to other men, this country will welcome such a person. Not only that, we are not economists. We are practical. We are not going to say this must be the only theory followed for economic development. We are interested in meeting the problems as they come, and now we are faced with unemployment, and we have to do something about it. But when we are trying to create this confidence, and when we ourselves are very confident that we shall do our part and do it well, we do regret that there are other people, not in this House, but outside the House, very busily fighting against that confidence by saying that the African Elected Members are incapable of governing, or by saying that these people are not very interested in security, or by saying we do not know what they will do with the Europeans or Asians. In other words, they are the ones who are saying they do not believe in Kenya because Kenya is primarily in African hands, and that is the mistake and the evil that is being committed, and what we must fight against. We want everyone who believes in Kenya to ratify the confidence of the world, and if you say I do not think this is correct, I do believe that the speech which was made in support of this Motion was doing that. It was actuating the opposite. And I would just finally say that it has been depressing to me to see some people who consider themselves leaders giving false hopes to the European community; trying to say that despite the Lancaster House Constitution we might be able to maintain some part of segregation or some part of the minority privileges and so on and so on. I would ask the European leaders to be as practical as they can, and better tell their people what course Kenya shall follow and what would be best for them to fit themselves into the developing society. We have now studied the common roll elections, which is the beginning of integration of the Europeans and Asians into the very largely African society of Kenya, and I believe that the practical leaders of the European community will be those who tell them we are not being considered as the European community, we are part of Kenya and the politics of Kenya is along the road of integration because any other speech is really giving false hopes, so may I say that we do not believe that Kenya requires a frightened circle. We have frightened circles—we have had them and seen them but I am saying this is going to be a country which will progress. This is a country that is going to be safe and attractive for investors. This is a country in which justice and freedom will go hand in hand, and the only thing that will take us away from that will be the frightened paralytic views such as are expressed in the purport of this Motion.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, after the speech of the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, I really wonder what new comment I can make on the words of the hon. Member for Nairobi North on uhuru. What new comment could I make on his speech on uhuru?

Sir, it is most depressing as far as the African community is concerned to find that the Member for Nairobi North is ready to call a tune he cannot dance. He spoke so emotionally, and I do not want to answer him in kind. As far as the African community is concerned he said he spoke for the European elector who elected him on the ticket of the sanity of the White Highlands. Speaking for the African community at large, including the Masai, the Lancaster House plan is supported and held by the Africans of Kenya, and he should understand that we mean to support it, and we mean to co-operate in order to make it a success. So, if he has any worries as to what the African feels about it, I should say we feel it is the right turn that Kenya politics should take at this stage towards the goal of independence, and all we would ask him and any of his kind, is to try and show that goodwill which he preaches. I think it would be a pity for me to pass his comments without answering some of them.

He talked of land. He talked of those old stories of who came before and where and how. I want to dwell more on the distribution. In the classification of the land in Kenya today, the Kenya Government has what is called "Crown" land, "native" land and alienated land—not White Highlands. Given to aliens—to strangers. The British Government knows very well that the Asians and Europeans are strangers in this country.

Sir Charles Markham: Nonsense!

Mr. Mate: Do not call it nonsense. It was alienated, and is known in the Laws of Kenya as the White Highlands. It has been given to aliens, and to come here and raise our emotions as they can be raised, and as he said, somebody said, the White Highlands are not in dispute they are in dispute, and I am telling them frankly if they want to raise emotions it is a dance they are calling which the Government cannot dance. As far as the African is concerned, I do not see why they should take Kenya names if they want to be strangers. The places should be called by their own names. These are African places, and that is what we were primarily concerned with in Lancaster House. Kenya is an African country, and I am the African, not him, and if we are going to talk about the White Highlands and European land and that and all these things I am not the opposite to him, so he can feel as much as he feels me when he talks about land in Kenya and that no changes can be in modern vocabulary. I know there is Crown land, there is native land and there is alienated land, and if I know my English at all it is given to strangers. If he is asking me to dance to that tune with him, or is he asking me to co-operate and if so what is the language he is going to use? He has mentioned a coalition such as was suggested to us in Kenya, or rather I hope not to all the minorities. He has asked that we co-operate with an organization—I think he called it the Sir Ferdinand Cavendish-Bentinck Coalition. When he talks of "we" does he represent the Africans in Kenya or is he thinking of the Europeans? And if that be the case why is he not sitting on the Chair of this House today. He should be continuing the good work here in this House. Why should he go out of it. We Africans have very strong feelings on the question of land and we shall not compromise to anybody whatsoever. We shall not, and if anyone wonders why I feel like that, I am telling him I feel like that—

[Mr. Mate]

Sir Charles Markham: (Inaudible.)

Mr. Mate: That is all right. I am glad. Because you recognize I am there. I feel, on the question of land, it is the Kenya black soil, not white soil. It is wrong to call it the White Highlands. On the question of land, I hope, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Mover of the Motion will not dance to the tune he is calling because some of us have decided honestly and sincerely to work for a better Kenya, between the two poles of the New Comment and the so-called Uhuru of some time ago, and if he is ready to come with us in this between the New Comment and Uhuru he is most welcome. The speech of the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, I feel is the kind of speech that the Member for Nairobi North should be bringing up in this House today.

He went on further to comment on outside countries and their relationship to Kenya. I do not know whether he is talking of Kenya as a whole or of certain parts of Kenya when he talks of America, the U.S.A. What of South Africa? Who are oppressed in South Africa? Africans, black men or white men? Does he think that we do not hear, or see? Africa is an African country whether poor or rich, and we are going to stress that at every stage, but that does not exclude anybody. I am saying if you have come and want to stay with me, let us stay as friends, but I do not want to give you false assurance that because you enjoy a big car, you enjoy a big estate, you enjoy a big house, we cannot have a change. We must have these changes, and for a moment it is good to be able to speak plain language to the Europeans of Kenya. Since we came back from London the Press have been the chief trouble-makers. The United Party has been going all over the place counting that tribe and the other tribe. What do they want us to do? Do they want us to go back to Lancaster House and do something different? Well, I only hope that these are the necessary reactions in the situation which we have in Kenya, and that by the time we come to the end of the year, each will have seen that he is wrong, and for those who feel Kenya is not for them, I would be quite happy for them to pack up. It will mean more land for the Africans. If they do not like the change in Kenya and they want to live in comfort as foreigners they must remember that there were changes in Britain. I am quite happy that they leave and there will be more land for those who are landless. But all I am asking them is to co-operate constitutionally for us to reach that kind of Kenya of faith and goodwill as pictured to us by the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade. So on the question of land I am giving every assurance that those who want to go from Kenya, they can go, and we shall have a use for their land. Those who want to stay, we will stay together and work hard for Kenya. So from the African point of view, these are things I have said in meetings. I have asked for them in meetings, and I have said goodwill yes, but changes must come and for those who want to go they should not tell us, but pack and go. And I feel I should be frank in this meeting here—in this House here—to express at least the Central Province point of view, and I feel that the choice for me in this debate now is either to go with the hon. Member for Nairobi North, which I cannot, or the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, which I feel I could, and I am willing to go. So any assurances the Europeans want from me as far as Kenya is concerned, it is a black country and it will remain black and in Africa. And if it is black they can interpret it as they like. We have all the use for all the land they want to leave. Those who want to stay may stay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, in the future Kenya that I see we shall always meet each other—those who mean to stay in Kenya. We shall always need to act together. In fact just now in offices, in business, in trading people are working together and in European farms we have African labour. And yet these Africans are supposed to be just nothing. They cannot even have a vote, which they would not have if we do not implement the Lancaster House agreement. They want to deny them that on their own soil where they have no right as Africans. They cannot have a piece of land which they live on just because the British Government classifies the land in Kenya, and because certain sections do not want any changes. Sir, we are working together today in various places in all walks of life in Kenya, and we could improve that, not on the basis of fear that somebody might want to go and capital may not come into this country. Whether this capital comes is a matter of whose pockets it goes into—not that we have not capital in Kenya here. There is plenty of food and yet some people go hungry. We must have a change so that everybody can have a fair share.

Then he talks about the minorities in this country, having become minorities in 1960. When the British Government assumed the government of this country their voice was predominant. Have they only today become the minority. Why are they worried after sixty years? They are enjoying a nice piece of cake. Let somebody else have a chance to enjoy the piece of cake.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am so tempted to answer the Member for Nairobi North in his own language, and I do not have to go to that extent, but I want to answer him with equal emotion. I want to ask him not to worry so much about the minorities today. He has always claimed to be a member of a very civilized race, a member of a very well-informed race. Why is he worried today as the change has not even come? We are having a caretaker Government so that people can see exactly what is going to happen and get ready for it. If he enjoys being a leader why is he worried today? But because I know the majority of Europeans in Kenya are not like him I do not think I should have any worries at all, because I know the majority of Asians, the majority of Africans are not so worried as he is, and because I know he has his opposite numbers among the African people, but the majority in Kenya want to work for a happier Kenya, and I do not think we should spend any more time on this.

Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mate: Hear, hear, because you feel a bit touched. But for the sake of saving time and giving other Members a chance of saying what they want to say I would call upon the Member for Nairobi North to withdraw his Motion and come with me and the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, and we shall get the kind of Kenya he wants without worrying about which way to go about it.

I beg to oppose the Motion most strongly.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is discrimination, I think for hon. Members opposite. I will not take very long, Sir. But I might of course even take longer if I am interrupted.

Sir, I personally think this debate, part of the debate, has been worth while, but I believe that the speech of the Mover was very well worth while to him as a practice for the next public meeting he will address. The type of speech that he made was really for a public meeting, and not for this House. I believe also, although I have had to wait a little time to get on my feet because the last speaker, like me, his emotions were raised, and of course that is the result of the sort of speech that the hon. Member for Nairobi North made, and that is the sort of thing I would have thought we would have tried to do our best to get away from and try to bring back to this House and keep in this House the spirit which we achieved in Lancaster House. That, Sir, I believe is the most important task of this particular Legislative Council.

Sir, the real reason why I wanted to speak was because of certain remarks which were made by the hon. Mover with regard to Mr. Blundell. I would like to say first of all that if anybody had done for this country what Mr. Blundell has done in the last ten years, that anybody would deserve, as Mr. Blundell does, a respite, which he is taking at the moment. And that is one of the reasons why Mr. Blundell has not been active publicly as I understand the hon. Mover has criticized.

Another reason, and I want to make it quite clear, was that he was advised not to act publicly and have a number of public meetings by the New Kenya Group because we felt, and we still feel, that at that time it was right to allow the people of this country to assimilate quietly and logically what indeed was the result of the Lancaster House Conference. Having given them time to do so, then after that was the time to have public meetings. I believe also that the public meetings that have been held, and I am not by any means pointing a finger at any one particular race in this in the last few weeks since Lancaster House have done no good, and I believe the advice given to Mr. Blundell was the right advice and I have no doubt when he comes back he will be putting his point of view as he does, strongly and clearly, logically and in doing so he will get support and increased support, as the New Kenya Group will, of the people of this country.

Sir, the other thing, I deplore the type of remarks made about Mr. Blundell, or anybody else for that matter, but numbers of such remarks are made, about Mr. Blundell especially, and as he is the leading political figure in this country, he has, of course, to accept that. Such remarks as "trapeze acts". Well, of course, if you are a trapeze artist you have to have a very fine sense of balance, and Mr. Blundell has that. Also, those experts in such matters, being the stars of such occasions, have, I am afraid, to be followed around because the public like it, by a troop of clowns, and that indeed is what Mr. Blundell has to suffer.

Sir, I only want to make one other point. As far as the other remarks about Mr. Blundell are

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] concerned, they were answered very well indeed—better than I could have done—by the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade. And indeed the whole of his speech I give complete and entire support to. I think it was one of the most statesmanlike speeches which have been made in this House. He did, in fact, put before this House, the philosophy of the New Kenya Group, and that is what we stand by.

One other point I want to make, Sir, and rather emphasize what other speakers have mentioned. Is it not time that those who consider themselves leaders of all communities started to be more positive? To my mind in the last few weeks there has been too much of this negative criticism. There is no going back. In fact the road we are launched upon is the right road. We do not all think it may be exactly the right vehicle to go in, but it might have been of a different pattern, but we have got it, and let us get into it and drive it and go along the road properly and amicably.

Sir, I believe that the type of Motion, the type of speech that has been put before this House today does very great harm, and will do very great harm to the future of this country because people do not always look at the positive side, and they always pick out the weaknesses of their colleagues and opponents. When I hear, as I do, the criticism of African Elected Members all round—it is a negative criticism that is brought forward all the time—why do not people look at the courage—the courage that has been taken by the hon. African Elected Members who have joined this Government? I can assure hon. Members it was a very courageous act. I know what it is like to be Minister and a Member of a constituency. I know what it is like to be called a "stooge". In fact, Mr. Blundell and myself were the first two who took the step of leaving the Opposition and joining the Government, and for years we had to face that criticism—"a Government stooge—what will you do for us now you are in the Government? Your mouth is blocked." And we had a very nasty time, and we know very well what other hon. Members will have to go through, but because they thought it was right they have done it, and they have shown great courage in doing it. Cannot people recognize that instead of trying to be critical and negative the whole time?

Sir, I do not want to add much more, I could go on, as all hon. Members who feel deeply about this subject in this Council could go on in this debate, but time is short, and others wish to speak, and I very strongly oppose the Motion.

Sir Charles Markham: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I shall be very brief on this. I listened with attention to the speech made by the Mover of this Motion, and I must admit that I share the views expressed by other hon. Members in this House about the manner in which it was moved. I thought for a moment, Sir, of the two predecessors of Nairobi North, and Sir, I think if they had been here they must have rather a nasty shock.

Sir, I would like to comment—he is in the Council I see at the moment—on the speech made by the Minister for Commerce and Industry. Sometimes, Sir, he has given this House many speeches, but I thought that the words of wisdom which came from his mouth were well worthy of our attention. And then, Sir, having praised him, and listened to what he said, most of the good he did was undone by the Member for Central Province North, who then, Sir, quite frankly, got more racial than most people have done today.

There has been some misunderstanding, and I think it should be cleared up, because the Member for Nairobi North and other Members who have spoken have talked about this word "coalition", and I do not want to discuss that, except to say one thing. Even if we disagree with some of the details of the Lancaster House proposals, nevertheless the principle behind the Macteed proposals must be accepted, and that means we accept the fact that there will be a large African majority in the next Legislative Council. You cannot, Sir, put the clock back, and nobody wants to do so, and there is a very great difference. I am not going to get emotional on this, but what we have to avoid is this clash of personalities which seems to arise every time certain names are mentioned in Kenya. I regret very much, Sir, that this Council Chamber should have become almost a debating society where certain allegations are made and counter allegations equally. This is not, Sir, the time to discuss the White Highlands, or the Highlands, or to give the hon. Member who made such a long speech a lesson in the English language on what alienation means, but the fact remains, Sir, that this debate, I think, has not been of value, but perhaps in many ways of great harm to us. I would suggest that this confidence which we all want—confidence for Kenya and our own people who are part of Kenya—will never be restored if we are trying to put the clock back, and also trying by speeches to abuse anybody who does not agree with us. I would have thought, Sir, in this particular instance, it would be very much better for the hon. Member for Nairobi North to have produced some constructive suggestions of how he could have solved the problem. There are problems facing his and my community. There are problems facing my Asian friends, and I know also my African friends. This is a time when we have got to find the answer to those problems, and I cannot believe, Sir, that a speech such as was made by the hon. Member will solve it. I only spoke, Sir, today, because my name was coupled in his opening remarks, and I do not wish to be associated with them.

I beg to oppose the Motion.

Mr. ole Tips: Mr. Deputy, Speaker, Sir, I rise to oppose the Motion very, very strongly. In fact, I do not see why such a destructive Motion should be brought into this House. However, the hon. Member is entitled to his own views. This Motion has been allowed in, and as such we are duty bound to debate it.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I entirely fail to see what made the hon. Member for Nairobi North bring such a Motion before the house. He, himself, participated in the Lancaster House discussions. He had his own flag of his own liking. Fortunately that flag has dropped, and I think that is the reason why this Motion has been brought to this House. I hope this flag will not appear again. Now, we have made it very, very clear, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that we, as leaders of our people accepted the Lancaster House agreement in good faith, and gave it our blessing because we believed it was the only rightful way for Kenya to follow. Of course, we know that it fell very, very short of our people's expectations. Nevertheless, it was the right course in the right direction, and in accepting it we thought that we would show the few "doubting Thomases" in this country that we, as a community, in our own country, Kenya, can shoulder the responsibility of the Government, and that we are all out to govern ourselves and attain independence, and as such I feel that we should all work and work hard together so that we attain our independence even today. Anybody who stands in our way—anybody who tries to dwell on the glories of the past, I think is quite mistaken. There is nothing to stop us here from governing our mother country. Anybody who dislikes it—anybody who thinks he can remain as a boss all the time—and in inequality to the indigenous people, has no place in Kenya. Let him go to wherever he wants to go. Let him go and plan his destiny there, but not here. We want him to remain here if he so wishes as an equal, and we want to give equal opportunities to everybody. These privileged positions, we are just beginning to get fed up with them.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have heard some previous speakers talk too much of having something in common with the Masai. I am just at a loss to find what they have in common with the Masai. Did they bring the Masai to this country, or did they find them here? The Masai were standing on their own feet and any talk of having anything in common with the Masai is absolute nonsense, if I may say so. Now, if that is the case, the Masai as a tribe, which some of our friends want to make a bit of political capital out of, were found by them in this country. They were a strong tribe, if I may say so. The so-called White Highlands which have been under dispute ever since the European came into this country—a great part of it belonged to the Masai. The same people who today claim to be the defenders or protectors of the Masai drove them away into the wilderness, into semi-desert country, and took over their best land. What a ridiculous thing to justify their allegations of support from the Masai. In fact today politically, economically, educationally the Masai have been really left backward. Why did we not hear all this talk of defending or protecting the Masai before the Lancaster House constitution? Where are they? What has happened to the Masai in the last 60 years or so?

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to make it very, very clear to anybody that in Kenya we had, and we still have, many different tribes—different tribes actually lived side by side—and even when we attain our independence there is no question of trying to dominate anybody or trying to dictate to somebody. What we are out for is true democracy and nothing else. Those who do not want democracy—well they can flee and go. We shall help them pack their luggage and see them off, because they are a liability rather than an asset to our country.

Now, we hear quite a lot of talk of lack of confidence in Kenya. I am just beginning to wonder, Mr. Deputy Speaker, what are those people who have no confidence in the country doing here? They are claiming all the time that they are Kenyans, but what right have they got to remain here? If they have no confidence then let them go. Let them go away and go somewhere else where they can create and have confidence. But to obstruct the well being and prosperity of the people of such a beautiful country as Kenya, in order to meet some selfish ends, we are not going to have it, Mr. Deputy Speaker. And sometimes I even fail to understand the mentality of some people in Kenya here. Surely Kenya cannot remain in isolation of what is going on throughout the continent of Africa, and throughout the entire world. So, if I may stop and let other Members express their views, I would say this. Let us move forward together, confidently. Let us throw away any fears or suspicions. Let us be constructive rather than destructive, and anybody who wants to be destructive I am sure is trying to cut his own throat.

With these few words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to oppose the Motion.

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): Mr. Deputy Speaker, whether or not the hon. Mover is right is not just a matter of opinion, it is a matter of historical fact. Of course there was a very considerable measure of agreement at Lancaster House. It is of tremendous importance because for the first time in the history of our country there has been agreement between a large number of the representatives of all races in Kenya, and it is, as the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, said, an historical event of considerable importance. The agreement naturally was subject to certain provisos. Those provisos were that there should be the continuation of the spirit of co-operation which was shown at Lancaster House on our return here to this country, but Motions such as this are not conducive to the continuation of such a spirit, and for that reason I do deplore it. There were other provisos, such as the provision of safeguards. Those have to be worked out, and again the atmosphere must be created by the responsible people in this country wherein those safeguards can be satisfactorily worked out. Naturally there was disappointment on the part of many people because nobody achieved all they wished to do at the Lancaster House Conference. There was disappointment, and some of the less courageous Members who attended that conference expressed their disappointment in that they did not back up the findings of that conference although they may have supported them there, and they gave some of their constituents reason to believe that they had achieved more than was actually achieved. But never mind, we have had an earnest of that good will in the fact that now, at this moment, we have three more African Ministers on this side, and I do welcome them, and congratulate the hon. Minister who spoke today on the tenor of his speech.

The situation is not wholly satisfactory, and I must make brief comment on the aspect raised by the Mover with regard to the economy of the country. There, I think, was the only matter in which he was correct when he spoke. Of course the economy of the country has suffered in that there has been some lack of confidence shown which is demonstrated by the Stock Exchange market here in Kenya on account of the imminent change, and I do sincerely hope that Her Majesty's Government will put that aright by making an early statement to the effect that the new constitution will remain for sufficient time to ensure that anything that follows upon that will only follow when they can be quite certain that the Government of this country will be in responsible hands.

The hon. Member, I fear, dragged many red herrings across the debate—some of them mal-dorous. These, of course, were in the form of reference to the Masai land and to the ten-mile strip, which are nothing whatsoever to do with the Macleod constitution. Those are problems which will have to be discussed, no doubt, at some future time, but do not arise imminently from the discussions in Lancaster House. He did say graciously that he would give Government the benefit of the doubt, and I must give the hon. Member also the benefit of the doubt in that he believes that he was contributing to the future weal of this country, but in that I disagree with him most strongly, and I do urge that we shall refrain from trying to re-debate the conference at Lancaster House and concentrate on creating an atmosphere in which that spirit of co-operation then engendered may continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to oppose.

Major Day: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I have at last managed to get on my feet. I did not think I would be able to, and I do not want this morning to give anybody the impression that I wholeheartedly support this Motion, but I must in fairness say that I think the Motion which has been put forward has at least given place, or given the opportunity for a pretty lively debate, and furthermore, for an expression of opinion which to a certain extent, I believe, has cleared the air.

Now, I would like to make it quite clear that the speaker—the one before last who sat down—the hon. African Elected Member, impressed me greatly with his concluding remarks. He said he thought we should go forward in confidence, in mutual trust, together, and that, Sir, is precisely what I contend we all do want to do. But, and this is a but which I will endeavour to be completely honest over, the but is this. When we hear, Sir, certain talk, perhaps emotional talk about our land, about alleged privileges which we are supposed to have enjoyed, about certain attitudes which we are supposed to take towards people of other races, it makes us wonder, Sir, whether there is true sincerity behind statements such as that. Now this is a time indeed for sincerity. I was a Member of the United Party delegation at the Lancaster House Conference, and I have heard people talk about agreement, but factually I must say that we, as a delegation, did not agree at that Conference. This is a fact, and I think everybody knows it. We were, of course, in the minority. Some type of agreement was reached by the other delegates. Arising from the question which has been much discussed today as to whether there is any merit in continuing to gnaw at the Lancaster House Conference, to gnaw at the entrails of it, and to discuss whether or not anything can be changed, it is my opinion, Sir, that the Conference as such was disastrous, as I contend it was to my community, it is there, and we must, in the interests of our community, and I am speaking quite unashamedly as a European representative, we must endeavour, perhaps within the framework—you could put it that way—and it would be quite easy to trip me up on this one, to try and get a more equitable agreement, a more equitable arrangement of some unpleasant facets which evolved from the constitutional conference. I would like particularly, Sir, to try to refer to the question of the fear, and it does exist, which we Europeans, or many of us European farmers, have over the question of land. These fears might be dispelled if more people spoke as the new African Minister spoke in this House today, but Sir, unfortunately these only occasionally occur, but more often we have heard talk such as we heard from one, I regret to say, one of my hon. African Elected friends on this side of the House today. How can this possibly produce confidence in us? Now, we, therefore, quite naturally and reasonably seek reassurances.

The second point which I think, Sir, in equity we have a right to ask for is reasonable and fair communal representation. I do not want to dwell in detail upon this but it is something which in equity no man with any justice, or no Government, seeks to produce a lasting and just solution in this country can possibly ignore; nor am I prepared to believe that the reasonable people in the other races, and particularly among the Africans, who are looking forward perhaps in some cases too eagerly to what they believe to be their rightful ultimate political control of their country, I do not believe, Sir, I repeat, that these people will deny in discussion the justice of our contention.

Now, I do not wish to dwell in detail upon what has happened economically because I am at one personally with every single speaker in this House this morning who has said that if you think confidence is low you do not go about talking about it, because nothing will make confidence lower than to continually discuss the matter. It is like a snowball and although in our heart of hearts we know that things could be far better and that we are suffering from a lack of confidence it is not a matter, Sir, which I think can be profitably discussed. What we want is something which will remove that lack of confidence and I venture to suggest that these two specific points which I have enumerated would do a great deal, Sir, towards doing that.

Now, I must in fairness say that I thought the Mover of this Motion showed courage by introducing it. I would also say that I must also reiterate that it is, not in my opinion practicable to go back to the Lennox-Boyd Constitution. We feel, however, Sir, that such is the lack of confidence and such is the apprehension and the reasonable and just apprehension, not only among the Europeans but, I venture to suggest, also among other minorities in this country, that his suggestion, which was the suggestion that we in the United Party delegation repeatedly put up in London at the Lancaster House Conference, namely, that there should be a Commission which should come out here and study the implications in detail of this new Constitution and it would be very wise, Sir, and something which could be done and would not only be wise but, I think, would go in a long measure towards removing these unfortunate feelings, these unfortunate feelings of lack of confidence which we all know, if we are honest, do very strongly exist today.

Finally, Sir, I would say this. We are talking about goodwill. Is there one single African here present in this House today, an Elected Member or otherwise, who can honestly believe of in any way produce proof that any European in this country seeks to dominate his race or any other race in this country. We are not here to do this, Sir. We do not wish to do it. I personally have never wished to dominate anybody, and I am quite sure I am speaking for the vast majority of my own constituents and for the vast majority of the Europeans here today. But we have a duty, a moral duty, to our own people; just as you African Elected Members at the Lancaster House Conference fought for your people so we, at the Conference and here today, must fight for the just rights of our people.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think the speech of the day, if not of the year, has been made this morning by the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade. I would like to say here and now that I agreed with every word that he said in this House. If we can follow the type of advice we received this morning I believe that the future of Kenya is entirely sure.

Now, turning to the speech of the Mover, I find myself, in listening to it, that it was packed full of statements that had no substantiation whatsoever.

The first statement that I want to attack is when he said that the Lennox-Boyd Constitution was supposed to last for ten years. He referred also to secret documents where this is stated. The only two documents that I know of that refer to the Lennox-Boyd Constitution are the Constitution itself and a certain Paper known as Command 306 which was issued by Mr. Lennox-Boyd himself in amplification of the Constitution of the time. That was a public Paper. So, indeed, is the Constitution. The only reference to a ten-year period was to the length of time in which the proportions of the Specially Elected Members would stand. There is no other reference in any document that I know of to ten years except to that specific fact. Therefore, the Lennox-Boyd Constitution, as such, was never meant to last for ten years.

Secondly, his reference to America this morning I regret profoundly. I do not think that at the present time in Kenya, when we need the help of everyone outside and inside this Colony, that it was wise to attack a country which has undoubtedly helped us in many ways in the past and, I am sure, will help us again.

The examples which he gave, I thought, were weak, and I also say that to accuse the country virtually of subversion without proof was entirely irresponsible.

Thirdly, he said that the Government had given assurances which it had no longer kept and therefore there was no confidence in the Government. On behalf of the Kenya Government I would like to ask what these assurances were, when we have not kept them, and, once again, he did not state anything to back up his remarks on this occasion.

Fourthly, he talked about black dictatorship. I have examined the proposed Lancaster House Constitution with great care and I cannot see where a black dictatorship comes in. Dictatorship postulates that there will be one person in charge in the Executive, and with the Executive I cannot think that there is going to be one person in charge, and of the Executive out of 12 only four will be Africans.

I therefore say that his speech seems to me to be a potpourri of mis-statements, of noxious epithets and of egregious sophistry.

Having said that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I will admit and agree with the hon. Member for the Aberdears that this has given us an opportunity for an extremely good debate. I also enjoyed the hon. Member's discourse on history. I notice that he did not mention the effect on the Williamsons in Wales of the Macphersons from Scotland. Perhaps on some other occasion he may be able to deviate into such lines of history.

However, I come, Sir, now, to the main point about this debate and in the Motion. In the Motion itself there are the words "abject failure". Now, Sir, I say without fear or favour that the Lancaster House agreement was not an abject failure. I would like to repeat what the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, said about African Ministers. I, as Chief Secretary on this side of the House, have been hoping that African people would take part in this Government through their Elected Members; and indeed, time and time again when we have been challenged from the other side of the House I have said, "Here is your place; to come and help, to come and make things different if you feel that way", and they would not come. Now we have got three African Elected Members on this side of the House and therefore I consider that the result of the Lancaster House agreement was not a failure.

In making these statements, Sir, I would not like to minimize in any shape or form the enormous contribution which has been made to this Government by the Minister for Housing who has solidly and with great courage sat on our side for a long time now and shown the rest of the world what can be done if Africans are prepared to join this Government in Kenya.

Finally, Sir, in Lancaster House, what were the three alternatives. They were, in my view, stalemate, imposition, or agreement between the people of Kenya. Now who, in their senses, were going to choose the first two? I believe that what came out of that conference was a very large measure of agreement between the peoples of Kenya, and therefore for that reason alone it was not an abject failure.

On these grounds, Sir, I reject this Motion, and I would like to tell the House that if this Motion goes to division there will be a free vote and there will be no Whip exercised by the Government.

Mr. Travadi roic.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): The debate is limited, as we know, to two hours, and I think it would only be fair at this stage to call on the hon. and gallant Mover to reply.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I am at the outset delighted that my Motion has been so well received by the House.

I disagree with every word that has been said against the Motion and have never in my entire life ever heard so very little argument adduced against it.

I would like, Sir, if I may, to answer briefly some of the points that were made, particularly the reference to the Member for Nairobi Area saying that in his view there was no agreement at Lancaster House. In other words, there is something in the point that I made in the Motion that there was no agreement made at Lancaster House.

I would like, Sir, if I may, also to congratulate the new Minister for Commerce upon what I thought was a very fine address. I did not, I would like to say, attempt to lead the Masai or anyone else. That is not my role. One cannot [Air Commodore Howard-Williams] help making the observation that he said that he accepted the Plan with reservations. That does not mean agreement.

The Member for Central Province North gave the whole show away when he said that the land was in dispute. As a matter of interest to him, I am not ready yet for uhuru, as I told him and his friends at the Lancaster House Conference. I thought that they had got it ten years too soon. As a matter of interest to him, Sir, I would like to say that I am one who is staying in Africa with my friends the Africans. I would like to make that point completely clear.

The Minister for Local Government—I think it still is Mr. Havelock—made some remarks about the hon. Specially Elected Member Mr. Blundell. I would like to make it perfectly clear that nothing I said was personal. I admire the hon. Mr. Blundell and when I criticized him or mentioned him being on a trapeze I said that with the construction that he, the Minister for Housing, gave.

Now, Sir, I would like to say a word about what the Member for Central Rift said. As a matter of interest to this House, he said that at Lancaster House the flag I showed fell down. He said that he did not want to see it again. All I wish to tell the House is that this was the Union Jack.

The Minister for Tourism agreed that the economy has suffered; unhappily. So has the Civil Service.

Major Day said that there was no agreement and that the Conference was disastrous. I would like to underline that.

Now, the chief Secretary said that no assurance was broken. The assurances were not kept; notably at Lancaster House where I contend that the whole construction was bogus. I do not accept the Lancaster House Constitution.

Now, Sir, I would like very briefly, if I can sort out my papers, to go on. I do not for one accept that I agreed anything whatsoever at Lancaster House. What is more, in the good company of many others, I was induced to go there under false pretences, which is where my answer to the Chief Secretary comes in. The Conference did not keep to its terms of reference, which were to try to find some solution within the confines of the Lennox-Boyd Plan. My speech, as well as some 50 others, went unheeded and were used only as a cover up for what I must still maintain was the subsequent fraud. It was not a Conference in fact but a symposium of intrigue wherein the Secretary of State, may God rest his soul, saw groups in secret—and then calmly announced an agreement which did not exist. The vital question of the land remained unresolved, and what else were we there for? The vexed questions of schools and education were not even discussed, and I had raised the subject with a proposal that there should be a loan for £25,000,000 for African education spread over the next ten years. For the Colonial Office to declare that an agreement had been reached is hocus-pocus, skull-duggery and jiggery-pokery in one.

Sir, I will not keep the House very much longer.

The MacLeod Plan savours too much of Hitler dealing with von Schusnigg, the Austrian Chancellor in 1938, of which the House may recall that Mr. Winston Churchill said, at the time, in the House of Commons, "One can hardly find a more perfect specimen of humbug and hypocrisy." Cozenage and coxon were abroad, quislings were on the wing, deceit and guile were the modus operandi. In fewer words, the whole outfit was nothing but a gigantic hoax—the three card trick played with the cards.

Accepting my thesis as correct, then, if we are honest, this House can and will make a gesture which will ring the world. We can still throw out the MacLeod Plan as indeed has your predecessor, Sir, to give us a lead, and I would like to applaud him, with a clatter that will echo the smash of Millennia as the walls of Jericho came tumbling down. Why not?

The Marquess of Salisbury in the recent House of Lords debate, following an excellent speech by Lord Delamere, challenged the Prime Minister's statement, and I quote, "Overseas I feel that our authority and influence have never been so great." That was the Prime Minister. "Is it really true?" the noble Marquess rightly asked. "Indeed I sometimes feel that in many ways it is rather like the latter years of the Roman Empire. Then, as now, at the centre the people never had it so good—but the Roman world was shrinking. He quoted Mr. J. R. Godley who wrote to Gladstone nearly 100 years ago, with reference to the Roman Empire. "It was not the loss of Dacia but the satisfaction of the Roman people at the loss that was the omen of the Empire's fall."

I therefore, Sir, finally appeal to all good men and true to vote with their consciences on this issue and to make history where they will otherwise bury it.

Sir, I beg to move.

The question was put and negatived.

Hon. Members: Divide!

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

EXTENDED SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to give notice of the following Motion:—

THAT in order to conclude the business of the Financial Statement and the Estimates in time to complete other outstanding business by the end of June, the Council should sit on the morning and afternoon of Thursday, 5th May, and thereafter on the morning and afternoon of Wednesday in each week until the business of the Estimates is concluded.

SESSIONAL PAPER NO. 4 OF 1959/60

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to give notice of the following Motion:—

THAT this Council approves the contents of Sessional Paper No. 4 of 1959/60. (the Development Programme 1960-63).

Sir Charles Markham: On a point of order, Sir, can we divide if only two or three people are in favour of the Motion?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): It is specified in Standing Orders that if one Member requests a division and five other Members support that Member I have no discretion in the matter.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: On a point of order, Sir, may I withdraw the Motion?

The Deputy Speaker: The decision does not lie with me. The Motion is in the possession of the House, and if it is the will of the House that it should be withdrawn then it can be withdrawn.

A situation has, however, arisen to which our Standing Orders do not apply but which is covered by the custom of the House of Commons. That is to say, the Ayes are unable to produce two tellers. In accordance with the House of Commons practice I declare that the Noes have it.

MOTION

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, in view of the very satisfactory conclusion of my first Motion I propose to withdraw the second.

ESTIMATES COMMITTEE AND BUDGET

Mr. Travadi (Central Electoral Area): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to give notice of the following Motion:—

THAT the 1960/61 Annual Estimates of Expenditure of the Colony and Protectorate of Kenya for the year ending June, 1961, referred to the Estimates Committee of this hon. House, which said Committee should report to the Council in time, what, if any, economies, it considers should be made in the said Estimates.

To carry out its duties, this House empowers the said Committee to examine the organization of every Government Department and to recommend—

- what services are necessary to keep a reasonable efficient Government machine in being;
- what amount is required to be voted for each department to provide the cost of such essential services;
- what curtailment of expenditure or services is necessary and/or desirable;
- the order in which such curtailment should be effected.

ORAL ANSWER TO QUESTION

QUESTION NO. 88

Mr. Khamisi (Mombasa Area) on behalf of Mr. Mate asked the Minister for Works—

- What progress has so far been made in the building of the new Embu to Meru road?
- Can the Minister give an indication of when this road will be completed?

The Minister for Works (Mr. Nathoo): From the Embu end eleven miles of road have been finished to an all weather standard plus three miles partly completed.

From the Meru end forty miles have been finished to a dry weather standard up to the Mutonga river. Three major bridges have been built and three remain to be built.

The whole road should be open as a dry weather road by the end of June 1961 and completed to an all weather standard by the end of June 1963 if the International Bank loan, which was the subject of a recent Motion in this House, is successfully negotiated.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Order for Committee read.

MOTION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

(Continuation of Debate on 27th April, 1960.)

Sir Charles Markham: Mr. Deputy Speaker, at the start of what generally appears to be a mammoth debate, I have been fortunate to be the first person to bat from this side of the Council and I shall not, Sir, on behalf of my colleagues claim the extra time which has been allowed. I will leave that, Sir, to somebody else.

I would first of all like to congratulate the Minister for presenting the first Budget of his career in this Council. It had, Sir, one very meritorious aspect as far as I was concerned. I managed, Sir, to keep awake throughout it and it also, Sir, had a very nice aspect as well, it was brief and very much to the point, I would congratulate him, Sir, for having given to the Members of this House the economic review which made it so much easier to follow what he was saying. I hope, Sir, that in future his successor in years to come will follow this practice.

Sir, this Budget, although mainly concerned with the financial health of the Colony, other aspects must also be considered in the general picture facing us today. I am sorry to say that I shall have to confine the majority of my remarks to certain aspects which I consider should be brought before this Council which affect the economy of the country. Sir, we have always said, and I think both sides of this Council accept it that Kenya despite having a fairly buoyant economy is also vulnerable to any single action which might affect that economy. I must warn the House that there are aspects of the present security position which cause us concern and which must be brought to the attention of hon. Members.

Sir, in March of this year I asked the Government in a question for Written Reply to give details of the present security position, particularly that pertaining in the Central Province. That reply, Sir, has now been received although I do not know whether it has yet been attached to the Official Report of this Council. Nevertheless, that reply given by the Minister for Defence was in some detail, and I hope, Sir, that it will receive some publicity as it sets out the position most clearly.

Now, although certain Ministers who are directly involved have discussed the problem with farmers who are concerned with it, it is my view that the House should be made aware of the serious position which exists in parts of my own constituency, and that of my hon. friend, the Member for Kiambu, regarding strikes, intimidation and the general contempt of the law which exists today. I know, Sir, that my hon. friend, the Member for Kiambu, will elaborate on this subject as it concerns his constituency. I am only raising this matter today, Sir, because of the concern which has been expressed by farmers in my own area on the position today and in order to allow the Government to make a factual statement on the latest position.

I wish, Sir, first of all to refer to the wave of wildcat strikes which have been going on in the Thika area, particularly. Now, strikes, Sir, are nothing new anywhere in the world, particularly if the example of Great Britain is taken into account. But a disturbing feature of the strikes that are going on at the moment in the Thika area, and I am using the words "Thika area" in the general sense rather than particularly meaning Thika itself, is that they all show, or nearly all show, one particular pattern. The pattern, Sir, is a strike against the personality of a headman or a manyapara, and in almost all instances the headman concerned was one of those who were loyal to the forces of law and order during the Emergency. There is no pattern at all of unrest because of labour conditions or rates of pay, but it seems to be a campaign directed by people—I wish I knew who they were—against headmen in particular.

This problem of wildcat strikes has resulted in the labour relations becoming strained, to say the least, and doubts are being expressed by farmers that if this continues then the position, the farming position, will become intolerable. I will come back to that subject, Sir, in a few minutes.

The second problem is one which is nothing new in Africa, and it is well known to all Members of this Council, and that is the problem of intimidation, and whereas no actual violence has been used in the majority of cases threats are made that names will be taken and that the day of reckoning will come once independence is granted. In other words, Sir, to put it more crudely, "Do what you are told or take the consequences".

This is a pattern which, again many hon. Members of this House will remember, was so prevalent in 1951 and 1952.

I realize, Sir, the limitation of the law in this respect, and I realize that unless people will come forward who have been intimidated and give their evidence in court, nothing can be done about it. Nevertheless, with the changing pattern, with perhaps a change of Government coming in the not so far distant future, you can well imagine that only a fool would risk his life for the sake of what is now known as a "temporary regime". I regret, Sir, having to say this, but if I was one myself I would think twice before I gave evidence in a court, thinking back into history to what happened to those who did so in the past. This is a problem, Mr. Deputy Speaker, which must be tackled, but I do not want to pretend on this side that I know the answer to this problem. I do not pretend, Sir, that I know how Government can tackle the problem, but the fact remains that whilst intimidation exists in this particular field, it will be impossible for industrial relations to be improved and also it will be impossible for those people who wish to work in freedom to carry out their work without their lives, or their future, anyhow, being in jeopardy.

My third point, on this subject, Sir, is a point which, perhaps, cannot be borne out by the facts. Nevertheless, it is a point of view which has been expressed quite openly by certain people, and the point of raising it now is to give Government the opportunity of telling us what the facts are. People are saying that Mau Mau which so nearly killed us economically a short time ago, has revived again in some of the country districts. We know, for example, that some of the Mau Mau songs are being sung again. We have heard examples of police being jeered at. We also know of some of the Mau Mau battle cries being used again by crowds, of people in Central Province. I am not suggesting, Sir, to this House that oath taking ceremonies are taking place on any scale at all. In fact I believe the evidence is to the contrary, but nevertheless even without the bestial oaths which Mau Mau used, I am asking the Government now, Sir, to state whether they have any idea as to the aims and objects of Mau Mau being continued, perhaps under a different cloak and a different name. I said a moment ago, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I apologize to the House for raising these issues, particularly as it is the first Budget after we have left the Emergency, but it is only right that in a debate as important as this, when we consider the whole financial future of Kenya, that these facts should be made known and an answer given by the Government. Coupled, of course, with what appears to be a revival of the Mau Mau beliefs, we have this renewed campaign going on in Central Province, and in Nairobi in particular, for the release of the person who was convicted of being the manager of Mau Mau, Jomo Kenyatta.

Mr. Odinga (Nyanza Central): Hear, hear.

Sir Charles Markham: The hon. Member for Central Nyanza, who as usual gave his "hear, hear" which we are so used to in this Council, described the Mau Mau movement, according to a Press report which appeared in a Sunday newspaper, to the President of Yugoslavia in very different terms to what the majority of people consider Mau Mau to be.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Deputy Speaker, was asked specifically about the release of Kenyatta, and I was somewhat surprised, I must admit, to see him, and I use a vulgar expression, "pass the buck" straight back to the Governor of Kenya. In view of this, Sir, in view of the fact that His Excellency, who is now solely concerned with his Council of Ministers, (and I must say I do not believe it), it is necessary that the Government should issue a strong statement so that once and for all this subject be cleared out of the way. Whether we believe in his release or his new detention, Sir, is beside the point at this stage, but what cannot continue is the present uncertainty where rumour and counter rumour are having a very damaging effect, particularly in those parts of Kenya which were directly involved with Mau Mau.

Now, Sir, I have talked about the wildcat strikes, but I want to make it perfectly clear, particularly as the hon. Member for Nairobi Area is in the Council now, that I am not opposed to trade union activities. In fact, Sir, I have said in this Council before, that they have a very valuable part to play in the future development of the Colony. I would like to tell him, Sir, in case he thinks that my remarks have been criticisms, particularly regarding strikes, that the strikes in the Thika area have not been started on the advice of the trade union concerned. They have been a different cause, and I am very glad to say that my information is that there are going to be direct negotiations between the Coffee Growers' Association and the Plantation Workers' Union. I believe that is the right course to take, and Sir, I wish them both the very best of luck in their negotiations. But let me say as well, Sir, that whereas the present Plantation Workers' Union has my full support, I hope the hon. Member for Nairobi Area will use his best influence to make certain that all the various trade unions will remember that joining a union by a worker does not mean that automatically there will be increased pay and benefits, and in fact the trade union movement, which started a long time ago in Great Britain, has a dual responsibility, both to the workers and to the country, I hope, Sir, as I said a moment ago, the hon. Member will use his best influence to make certain the trade unions do not get a reputation in some of the industries of being irresponsible and being completely out of touch with the economics of the country. Provided, Sir, that he can use his influence, then I can see in the future a great possibility where there is the closest liaison of friendly co-operation between the employer and the employee, remembering as well, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that as time goes on more and more of the Africans will become the employer class, and therefore it is important that they too should appreciate the way the thing works, so that both sides consider it a fair arrangement.

Now, Sir, I have spoken enough on this problem of security, but I know other Members will speak on the subject too. This, Sir, as I said a moment ago, is our first Budget since the end of the Emergency. There are dangers of a revival of Mau Mau and we pray that we will not see next year's Budget in with yet another Emergency, because if it does happen again, then the tragedy will be too obvious, and I hate to think what will happen to any of us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, a lot has been said, both in this Council last Friday and throughout the country, about the general situation, particularly that of confidence and I do not believe, that we can usefully go over all that was said on Friday. In fact, Sir, I hope we do not.

But there are one or two questions I would like to ask the Government so that we can know something of what is going on and which might help later speakers in this debate, particularly on certain subjects.

First of all, Sir, it seems a long time ago now since Government gave notice of a Motion debating Sessional Paper No. 10. All I want to ask, Sir, today, from the Minister concerned is, could he tell the House when Government proposes to debate it in this Chamber? My second question to the Government on the land issue as well, is to ask whether the Minister for Agriculture will make any statement regarding the outcome of his discussion with Her Majesty's Government in London and also with the World Bank in America. This subject is of particular importance to farmers of all races and I feel certain they would like to know the answer to that one.

To revert back, Sir, to the Minister for Lands for a moment, perhaps, Sir, he could also tell the House when he speaks during the course of this debate of any information regarding the policy of the land rent revision which is due this year. There are unfortunate rumours going about throughout the country that the Government valuer has placed an extremely high value on certain land and has forgotten one important feature—unimproved value. Nevertheless, if the Minister gives us information it might allay some of the fears which I know are abroad.

I am only asking that question, Sir, because I always believe it is better when a rumour starts, to get that rumour killed as quickly as possible, because nothing spreads faster in Kenya—and I suppose anywhere else in the world, too—than a latrine rumour.

Now, Sir, turning to proposals made by the Minister for Finance, I would like to ask him, Sir, if he could tell the House when he replies to this debate—in a long time hence, I assume—if he could give the House some details of how his proposals regarding the tax on light diesel oil will operate. Will all farming activities be exempt from this tax? If not, Sir, I can foresee many difficulties. For example, the person with a diesel tractor will claim the rebate and then use the diesel either in machinery used for pulping coffee or irrigation or alternatively other agricultural purposes. Provided it is used for general activities in farming, perhaps the Minister will tell us if the full rebate can be granted.

But, Sir, there is another issue which was raised in the paper this morning which I also believe concerns the Minister for Health, and that is the fact that this tax will operate unfairly against those people who are using boilers requiring light diesel in hospitals, and as well, Sir, there are industries who are equally involved. Those people using a certain sort of diesel engine cannot convert their engines to heavy diesel and so will bear this very expensive additional cost.

Now, reading the speech of the Minister for Finance, and having heard his as well, I gained the impression that this tax was for diesel in vehicles and not for industry or the like, and if he can give the House some assurance that industries, hospitals, schools—all the people who are using diesel engines, it will not be penalizing people who are already working out the additional cost they will have to bear should this tax come into operation. I am not certain, Sir, whether the Minister when he replies is aware that certain diesel engines cannot be converted to heavier fuel and if I can make a plea, Sir, if I could wear another hat for a moment, and ask him to help the hospital who, after all, will be a considerable sufferer if this tax goes through, and gain our gratitude. My suggestion would be, Sir, for the influence of the new Minister for Health so early in his career on the Government Front Bench to persuade the Treasury that perhaps they were wrong, then, Sir, I will certainly vote for him in the next election.

Two of the other small details, Sir, regarding the Budget; there has been a certain amount of talk in Kenya and correspondence regarding the progress being made regarding the contractor-finance scheme which was put forward in this House by the Minister for Works. I do not wish, Sir, to raise details at this stage because we could have an opportunity under his particular Vote, but as it is a matter on which the revenues of the Colony are pledged, perhaps he would tell the House, Sir, of the future programme under contractor-finance and what snags, if any, have been found in the present system.

Now, Sir, there are other subjects which I know will be raised by my hon. friends from both sides of the Council, such as the question of the future of the Civil Service, for example. Such as the question of unemployment, but I would like to say at this present stage at the very end of my speech, that I believe that this present unemployment problem is a problem which requires the full energy of Government if we are to defeat it. I know as well, Sir, that we will be told that money means everything at this stage. But I view with alarm the idea of seeing thousands of people looking for work in order that they can live, and I hope, somehow or other, that a magic wand can be waved across the top hat of Government finance, and out of that top hat will not come a rabbit—a white rabbit, even—but perhaps enough money to solve this particular problem.

Now, finally, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I want to suggest to the Government two matters which I believe they can take which might assist them in their campaign of trying to tell the people what the Government does. We have the new Minister for Information and Broadcasting. I would hope, Sir, that during this coming year we can use these media of both the written word and the spoken word to tell the people what is going on, to explain to them that if by chance their foolish behaviour results in the economic collapse of this country, then there will be no money for education, there will be no money for social services or the hospitals. At the moment the large majority of people think that money seems just to grow or seems to come from a source which is undefinable and I hope, Sir, that the new Minister will use his best efforts to try and get over to the people that the economy of the country belongs to the country and not to one section or to one race.

I would also like to suggest, Sir, to the Minister for Commerce and Industry that he, being the Member for the area concerned, should also use his best influence to explain to people that they will achieve nothing by the present policy being adopted by some of intimidation. I hope, Sir, the Minister for Commerce will do that.

My last hope with regard to the Government, Sir, is in regard to the newly appointed Minister for Labour, that he should come back to Kenya

[Sir Charles Markham] as quickly as possible because we need him badly at the moment and we also want him to play his part in making certain that as Minister for Labour he has a chance of solving some of the difficult problems facing the Government at the moment.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in conclusion I am not going to repeat the platitude which we hear so often about economic stability depending on political stability, we all know that. Whether, Sir, Her Majesty's Government do I am not certain, but nevertheless what is unhealthy, looking at our financial state of health, is the fact that this lack of confidence is affecting greatly the local stock market. It is reflected in the price of land and, what is more, we have got to solve this problem. I have every faith, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in the future of Kenya. My parents came here well over forty years ago. What I am frightened about is that perhaps sometime for the sake of an immediate solution our strategy may be wrong and I would ask the Government to devote as much time as they can in this forthcoming financial year to solving the things that are causing the misery, rather than trying to produce any scheme for a Temporary solution. Mr. Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Hassan (East Electoral Area): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to request a little extra time.

I would like to associate myself with the previous speaker and pay a tribute to our new Minister for Finance. Before he presented the Budget in this Council there was talk in the lobby that it is going to be a dull affair. Mr. MacKenzie is a very slow speaker and probably we may be burdened for hours together with a long speech. But when he came up and stood at the centre table, nicely polished and dressed up with a beautiful rose in his buttonhole, he started his speech and he spoke so brilliantly and so fast that some of us that betted on the derby very kindly arranged by the Member for Akamba, knew we would lose the derby hopelessly. The Minister gave his speech in the quickest possible time: an hour and twenty-seven minutes.

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Twenty-four.

Mr. Hassan: I am sorry, Mr. Jones of the Back Benches was the lucky winner. Now I have the very great pleasure of paying this tribute although we thought that we might miss the very fluent speaking of Sir Ernest Vasey who was Minister here for years but the Minister's speech made on Wednesday last, was up to the high standard set by his predecessor.

I fully admit, Sir, that the Minister performed his duty as a responsible Minister of the Government and presented the Budget ably on behalf of the Government that he did his duty very effectively, as I, a Member of the Opposition, have also a duty to perform on behalf of my community, and I hope he will not mind if I comment adversely on some of his proposals. But before I start my serious speech on the Budget, I would like to refer to certain remarks by the previous speaker with regard to the great fear that is being felt regarding security in the Central Province. I would like to make it perfectly clear to this House that we, in the Coast Province, are not facing any difficulties. We have no "wild cat" strikes, neither are we frightened by any fear that strikes are going to cripple any of the industries.

I would only say one thing, Sir, that, now that we have three African Ministers and some Assistant Ministers in this House, there is not the least objection that the Government should try to take advantage of their presence that they should take reasonable share in the defence of this country, and if there is any out of the way action being taken by the African masses, they should be in a position to educate them and tell them what is good for the country and how best to carry on to end those strikes.

I have comments to make particularly on the two proposals. One of them—which the previous speaker also mentioned—is the duty on light diesel oil. Consumption tax and the customs duty on light diesel oil, is likely to cause hardship to the low income groups of all races. It appears that the Minister did not give very careful consideration to the implications of this tax on the poor people. Some people feel it is forced on this Government by the Railway because they wanted to eliminate so far as possible competition by diesel running vehicles from Mombasa onwards. Others feel that it was entirely due to the jealousy of those running petrol vehicles, who were always claiming that it is unfair competition that the diesel vehicle owners are having diesels without any duty being paid. But so far as it affects the Coast Province, I would like to give details to the Minister: Part of the country in the Coast where roads running hundreds of miles are not, in actual fact roads but simply tracks chiefly made by the lorries themselves. There was a time when people at the Tana River, Lamu and Malindi District felt they could not possibly market their produce economically in the Mombasa town where the market was waiting for them because of the exorbitant cost of the petrol.

[Mr. Hassan]

A considerable number of business people bought very expensive diesel lorries and started helping the producers in the Malindi, Kwale, Tana River, Garissa and Lamu areas. They have been transporting fruit, fresh fruit, vegetables, meat and animals on hoof, and fish from the Lamu and Tana River Districts which were utterly wasted in those areas and nobody could possibly bring them economically into the Mombasa market. It was the owners of the diesel vehicles which started helping the producers and today in Mombasa we find those fresh vegetables and fruit coming in every day, at a fairly cheap cost.

Three have also been certain attempts made—and which have been very successful—to transport fresh fruit from Malindi by diesel lorry to Nairobi and then despatch them to the London market by air. Hundreds and thousands of bunches of bananas which used to be a perfect waste and which the producer never thought he could make any use of are now being brought by those diesel lorries into Mombasa. Increased taxation will certainly kill that trade. It will never be possible for the diesel lorry to transport such things to the Mombasa market unless at a very much increased fare which will not be in the interests of the producer.

The bus service which is working within the town of Mombasa and within ten miles in the surrounding areas has helped considerably to remove the very heavy congestion in the population and has helped to deal with the lack of accommodation in the major town. A very large number of labourers have been daily taken away from Mombasa at a very cheap cost to the neighbouring reserve and the neighbouring area within ten mile of Mombasa. It has assisted the town authority where lack of accommodation was a very serious problem. They shall have to raise the fare for those people which already amounts to almost 25 per cent of their monthly wages. By a further rise, it is expected that it might touch about 40 per cent of their wages. It will be impossible to assist those people by transporting them daily from their work to the neighbouring areas and bring them to their work early in the morning to help the labour services which are so urgently needed in Mombasa.

Another matter which will have a serious repercussion is the question of ferries. There is a ferry functioning taking people from Mombasa to the mainland. They will not be able to work that ferry unless at an increased fare and from that Likoni area there have been frequent demands for a subsidy for that part of the ferry which the Government has always refused and they have threatened that if a further demand is made for a subsidy for that area that the subsidy shall be removed from Nyali Bridge. Under today's conditions, any further increase of the ferry fare in that area will affect very adversely the lower income group and the poor people and even the development of that area.

Another matter which is of very serious importance is the question of mills, sugar mills, for instance, in the Ramisi. I understand that they are also using the light diesel oil and the heavy cost of producing the sugar will naturally force them to demand increased prices for sugar which will not be to the advantage of the lower income group.

I thought I had better bring these matters to the notice of the Minister because the increased duty from the light diesel oil which will amount to the tune of about £600,000 to £700,000 is not coming from sources who can afford to pay and who have the capacity to pay but will be coming out of the pocket of the lower income group and the poor people. And those people who spend 50 per cent to 100 per cent more for diesel vehicles for transport in areas where there are no roads to speak of will be very hardly hit if they are called upon to pay for the oil a price almost the same as they would have to pay for petrol. It will create hardship for those people in the Coast Province.

I would like the Minister to give very serious consideration to whether he can reduce consumption tax and customs duty to extend help and assist poor people to continue towards the development of the Coast which would not be in existence if we had not had those diesel vehicles functioning in the Coast. We never had any transport working economically in that area right up to Garissa and Lamu before the diesel engines were introduced into that part of the country.

Another matter which is helping and assisting the meat supply of Mombasa is the question of the transport of sheep and goats brought 200/300 miles from Garissa for the Meat Commission into Mombasa. It was never possible to get sheep and goats from Garissa to Mombasa without very heavy losses being experienced on the way—sometimes 7 per cent, 10 per cent, 15 per cent, or 20 per cent—and this system was introduced by the diesel double-decker lorries which brought all the sheep and goats and transported them to the Mombasa market without any loss. I would like the Minister to consider this matter very seriously.

I would like to summarize my points on this particular issue for the information of the Minister. Firstly, it will cause increased bus fares in towns; secondly, an increase in ferry fares; thirdly, the higher cost of working ginneries will cause ginners to reduce the price of cotton for the Africans. Next, the higher cost of sugar factories will cause an increase in sugar prices and it will be uneconomical to transport sheep and goats from Garissa to Mombasa and fresh fruit may never reach the Mombasa market in future. Fish from Kiunga which is about 150 miles from Lamu is brought in by diesel lorries via Lamu to Mombasa and even Nairobi today. If it were not for the diesel lorry it would have been absolutely impossible and uneconomic to bring fish into Mombasa and Nairobi, a commodity which previously could not be brought to these markets. All the fresh bananas that were produced in the Malindi District in very large quantities will never be marketed in Mombasa now because the cost of transport will make it uneconomic.

Now, the second point which I wanted to bring to the notice of the Minister is this—of course, he will naturally tell me, "I am raising about £600,000 to £800,000 by this method—how on earth could you possibly fill the gap?" I would like to suggest to him that there are sources from which you could easily raise this amount from those who have the capacity to pay it rather than creating hardship for the poor people. I would like for your information to mention, Sir, that there are three items which could be taxed, that is, beer, whisky, and tobacco and cigarettes. All these things are luxuries. They are not a necessity for life and those people who like to enjoy these luxuries can afford to waste a little more.

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): I am most grateful to the hon. gentleman for giving way. Could I ask him to explain to the House whether he owns a diesel vehicle; whether he drinks and whether he smokes?

Mr. Hassan: I think I will reply to this at the end of my speech! So these are the three sources which could have been very easily taxed to fill the gap. There was no need to tax the diesel oil, the cost of which is to come out of the pocket of the poor people.

Another matter refers to the question of revenue and expenditure. Sir, the Government is fully aware that from 1952 right up to this, the revenue has increased by about 80 per cent. In 1952 it was only £16,000,000. The expenditure in 1952 was only £13,000,000 and although the revenue increased by 80 per cent the expenditure has increased by 250 per cent. There is no doubt that we had an Emergency to face in this country and this Government and the Ministers going out to raise loans had the sympathy of those who were helping us to raise this loan and giving us interest-free loans and other loans because of the great difficulties the Kenya people were experiencing of going through the Emergency. During that time the Government increased the services considerably to meet the increased work, particularly that of the Emergency. The Emergency ended and we were helped by the United Kingdom Government with one million and a little more pounds and they undertook to take up the military cost of the country. Another £1,000,000 was given by the police for reducing that expenditure.

We are facing a period when we cannot possibly claim to be going through the Emergency. I would like to ask the Minister why this amount of £2,000,000 which has come in and why at the same time no savings have been effected in the Budget to show an increased surplus so that we should be in a position to stand on our legs in case of emergency or in the case of difficulties in the future, at the same time to help and assist the development both of agriculture which we want so badly and to help the social services and health services of this country which are needed very urgently!

When I see the Budget I find our revenue is £29,000,000 and expenditure is £32,000,000, and the amount which the Imperial Government gave us and the savings that we have evidently appear to have been distributed among the different departments, so that we are not in a position to show to the world that we can also help ourselves to be self-contained and stand on our legs today. A great deal of staff in the Civil Service was taken over during the Emergency on temporary appointments and it was clearly understood that they were engaged on temporary work, and that immediately the Emergency was called off these people knew that they were temporary and should naturally go back to their ordinary day to day work, and I am surprised that the standard of the present Budget has been maintained even after the Emergency and that the cost is more than our revenue, the revenue which is a product of the maximum taxation which the people can hardly pay in this country. I do not think it is at all possible to increase the income of this country from any further taxes because taxes here at the moment are the maximum the people of the country today can bear. The cost of living today is so heavy. Further, it is not possible for the middle income group to make both ends meet.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would be glad, for the purposes of my reply when I come to it, if the hon. Member would explain a little further how he worked out, that the revenue is £29,000,000 and expenditure is

[The Minister for Finance and Development]—£32,000,000, since I was under the possibly mistaken impression, but nevertheless under the taken impression, that I had budgeted for a small surplus of £20,000, Sir, next year, and I would be glad if the hon. Member would explain a little further.

Mr. Hassan: Well, Sir, you have filled the gap by the amount which was shown as a saving by the Police Vote—£1,500,000—and the other amount which was given by the Imperial Government because they took over the military expenses. Therefore you have to add the £2,500,000 to the £29,000,000 to show a surplus of £21,000. That is how you have made up your revenue and expenditure, because I do not find anywhere the £2,000,000 which are in our hands, but it has been absorbed into the expenditure for the different departments.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Perhaps if I could explain to the hon. Member, Sir, the savings, the money that Her Majesty's Government is giving towards the cost of the Army is a saving in expenditure and naturally would not be shown anywhere as revenue.

Mr. Hassan: But I hope it would be shown somewhere in the expenditure to the different departments, because it is not shown as a saving at all. I am afraid I am not a great expert in economics but that is how I think it is.

However, what I wanted to see was the Minister laying the foundation of a surplus in Kenya which we had in 1952—£2,000,000 to £3,000,000—which was absorbed by the Emergency, and now that we have undertaken after the Emergency to stand on our own feet it was necessary to have shown a bigger surplus over expenditure as a commercial concern. I do not think any commercial concern could possibly have the overheads running up to 70 per cent or 80 per cent of the capital. It has been generally talked about in this country that most of the departments are very heavily overstaffed and there is an urgent need for a committee similar to what we called the Bowring Committee to go through all the departments and see the number of misfits there are removed from the different departments. It has been proved that the departmental increase in staff has been something like 300 per cent to 400 per cent, although the amount of work which they are carrying on is nothing in comparison with what it was four years ago.

So far as the present position of the lawlessness is concerned, the hon. Member who has just spoken mentioned about the release of Jomo Kenyatta. Although it was not necessary for me to repeat it I would like to bring it to the notice of the Government that the Asians also sent a deputation to the Secretary of State when we were in London and it was brought to his notice that now that the foundations of peace are being laid by the Secretary of State for the Colonies it is time that most of the detained and restricted persons should also be released. This will create a great deal of confidence. He was very kind to tell us he will consult on this matter with the Governor and see what can be done about that.

Sir, this matter is now being dealt with by the politicians in a general way in this country. In fact, such a thing was happening and it was with a view to eliminating this agitation that I put up the suggestion to the Secretary of State. We have gone a step further and the African Ministers have taken up their Ministries in the Government, so that the burden of the responsibility and of security is not alone on the shoulders of the Government but it is also on the African Ministers who were never a party to sharing this burden in the past; and I would like to suggest, Sir, that the Government should take full advantage of asking these African Ministers to share that responsibility. They will be able to remove all the fears and suspicions which are in the minds of the immigrant races in this country by acquainting their people as to how to behave so that they should be good comrades and an asset to this country. I would like to ask the Government that that responsibility to a great extent must be placed on the shoulders of these Ministers in the future particularly so far as the suspected and detained and the lawless element of their own community is concerned.

With these few words, Sir, I support the Motion.

Sheikh Mackawi (Arab Elected Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I should like to congratulate the hon. Minister for Finance and Development on the way he has presented his first Budget to this Council, and on his excellent speech.

Sir, I welcome the revocation of customs tariff item No. 144 which covered passengers' baggage, and has been replaced by a new item which enables passengers to import free of duty all their requirements for personal use during their stay here. This no doubt is a welcome innovation in encouraging more tourists to Kenya.

Sir, I wonder, however, whether every possible thing has been done to encourage more tourists into Kenya. I see very few tourists from Ghana, Nigeria, the Middle East, India, Pakistan and other Far Eastern countries. It would be interesting to hear from the Minister for Tourism what publicity has been carried on in these countries in order to attract tourists from this side as well. I believe that there is a considerable number of tourists from this area who would like to come to Kenya if they knew more about this country.

[Sheikh Mackawil]

I should like, however, to sound a warning to this Council that if those tourists from that end were to be attracted to Kenya, and they could be of great financial gain to this country, then this country must change its attitude towards the colour bar that is being practised by the hotel industry of this country. I would particularly request my hon. friend, the hon. Minister for Commerce and Industry, to give this issue his very serious and personal consideration.

Perhaps, Sir, I could also draw the attention of this House to another aspect of racial discrimination. We are always speaking in this House of racial co-operation, and that we should all work together as Kenyans; yet, I see this racial discrimination being put into practice, particularly by the Government of this country.

Now, Sir, some time ago I happened to visit Mathari Mental Hospital and the Shimo-la-Tewa Prison, and I could never see a more clear example of racial discrimination than in both these places. The accommodation and food of the Europeans and Asians are of a considerably higher standard than those given to Arabs and Africans. The food, particularly, given in the Shimo-la-Tewa Prison to Africans and Arabs is terribly disgusting. During my last visit there, I asked the officer in charge to bring the food which is given to Arab and African prisoners to his office, and he at once retorted to me that I had no right whatsoever to inspect anything of the prisoners because I was not on the official list of visitors to the prison. I was very shocked that as I was the Arab Elected Member representing the people, and of course their voice, yet I had no right to look into their grievances. Instead I found in the list the name of an Arab Government official as a visiting member, who this Council will agree with me, is unable, for obvious reasons, to raise any protest against the authorities.

Now, Sir, I should like to point out where I completely disagree with the hon. Minister for Finance. The introduction of the higher licence fees for smaller vehicles, seems to have hit the hardest those lower paid clerks, and junior officials. In fact, he has harmed the very people whom we should seek to accord relief.

Lastly, Sir, before I sit down, I should like to deal with the question of Arab education. Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would repeat every time and every day and every hour on Arab education, and I hope the hon. Minister will give his consideration so that I should stop my mouth in this House about the Arab education. There are 500 or 600 Arab boys who at the beginning of this year were refused admission to the Arab Boys' Primary School at Mombasa, because of lack of accommodation at the said school. These boys, Sir, will be thrown onto the streets, and the Government is morally, if for no other reason, responsible to see that they obtain the opportunity of at least learning to read and write their names. I have time and again appealed in this Council for the building of a second Arab primary school at Mombasa, where it is very desperately needed, but all my appeals have fallen on a deaf ear. No provisions were made in the last development period for this school. I think, Sir, a positive statement must now come from the hon. Minister for Education as to where and how soon this school will be built to relieve the most appalling conditions of the Arab Primary School at Mombasa. That, Sir, goes for Arab primary education.

Now, Sir, I will say a few words on Arab secondary education. My information is that the modern secondary course conducted at the Arab Secondary School is a complete failure. I should like the Director of Education to have a thorough investigation of the results of these courses, and to consider the possibility of introducing commercial subjects instead of the modern secondary courses.

Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Mboya (Nairobi Area): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, speaking early in this debate I would like to join with my colleagues in expressing appreciation for the manner in which the Budget speech was presented to the House by the Minister in his first Budget. I am sure that all of us have appreciated the clarity with which he has tried to analyse the various points in the Budget, but no doubt he expected us to disagree with a number of the proposals that he made in this Budget. I would like to make a few observations on a number of points arising from the Budget speech itself in the first place.

Reference is made in the speech to the need to protect local industry. And I, Sir, would like to welcome this emphasis in the speech. We cannot over-emphasize, especially at this time, the need, not only to protect local industry, but to encourage the development of more and more local industries. It is absolutely important that we do what is possible to encourage and help local industry, and it is therefore my hope that it is not just going to be a question that ends with the various proposals which have been made in the Budget, but rather one which will continually be examined to facilitate further protection —but I would not like to use this word "protection", but rather to facilitate continuous and growing expansion in local industry. We are faced with a rapidly growing consumer population. We are faced with rapidly changing attitudes and demands on the part of our people, and I do not think it will be wise to depend entirely on an export/import economy. I think there are obvious opportunities that must be seized, and if the Government approaches this point, this particular situation, realistically, there are very definitely opportunities here to develop local industry.

Whilst discussing this question I would like to mention a rather unfortunate situation I heard the other day of some person who was trying to develop some local industry, but met with a lot of difficulties. I think as a result of the practice of some monopolistic tendencies in an attempt to protect some of the local industries. I am not sure what this man calls himself, but it is some sort of textile industry in the Limuru area, which met with difficulties as a result of what was termed protection of another textile industry within the country. I think there is room, Sir, in this country, for very big expansion in local industry, and I was surprised to hear that some local industry was granted monopolistic rights to the extent that it would not allow the protection of some other industry of the same type. If this is meant to protect this sort of industry from competition, then may I suggest that it is necessary to examine very carefully this situation in order that we do not make the mistake of preventing healthy competition to develop among those people who wish to create local industries.

Sir, on this question of developing local industries, I am forced to make observations on the question of how much, or what part, the Africans are intended to play in this development. May I suggest that it is necessary for the Government at this stage to accept without any reservation, the fact that African participation both as consumers and also as producers, is absolutely essential, and we must move away from the past policies which merely looked at the situation in the simple terms of European capital and European skill being the mainstay or the backbone of our country's economy. This population has done a tremendous good in a sense to the development of this country until now, but I must add this, that in a developing country such as ours, the economy cannot entirely be based on the activities of a minority group such as the European community in this country, nor should it be based on the European community as a European community. It should be much more expanded, and it should cover all aspects of development, and particularly it must envisage the participation in the economic life of the country by the majority of the people of this country. It is not enough for the African community to participate in the economic development of this country merely as consumers or as workers. The Africans constitute indeed a great potential market for our local industries, but they also constitute a very big potential in terms of the production side in developing this local industry. This means that further review must be made of the Government's policy in so far as methods of credits and capital formation are concerned. The question of controls, limitation by licences and other methods that have been used in the past must be examined very carefully, and a deliberate policy must now be introduced seeking to encourage and assist Africans in entering into competition with the other races in this country in the field of production.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like the Minister when he or one of his colleagues replies in this debate, especially to enlighten me on the question of what has happened to the I.C.A. money that has been made available to this country, but which African residents in towns like Nairobi, Mombasa, Kisumu and other urban areas have not been able to make use of. This money apparently, as I understand it, is lying about, and has not been used for several years merely, because there has been no agreement as to the method of administering it between the local authorities and the Government. This seems to me to be a great pity, especially when we are talking about the lack of capital and the need to encourage Africans to enter and participate effectively in the field of production. I would like, when the Minister speaks, for him to enlighten us as to the relationships that exist between the controls exercised by local authorities and those exercised by the Government through either the Ministry of Commerce and Industry or the other appropriate Ministry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Minister should also look at this question, the question of African participation, in terms of the credit facilities available to Africans, and also in terms of the restrictions that exist for Africans in markets and trading centres. I will give one little example to illustrate my point. In most African markets and trading centres today African traders are not allowed initially to start off by building temporary structures or temporary buildings for trading purposes. Next door you might find an Asian who is allowed to continue to trade, and even at this stage to build a corrugated iron sheet structure. Now this apparent discrimination in the treatment accorded to the African or Asian or other race, is not only unfair, but it is also harmful to African efforts, and especially when one takes into account the fact that Africans have not as many opportunities for capital or credit as the other races in this country. Now, Sir, if the Minister wants to see the point I have tried to illustrate he might take a very short trip to Dagoretti, and he will see that at Dagoretti, for example, in the trading centre the Asians are allowed to continue to trade in a corrugated iron sheet building, and in the African market they are being forced to build nothing short of a permanent structure. This means that the African has right at the outset to find enough capital for the building and then more capital for trade, whereas the Asian, who has more, perhaps, and in this case I am prepared to say more, facilities at his disposal, is not required to observe the same restrictions. It appears to me, Sir, that something is definitely wrong. I am not myself sure that we can insist on too high a standard in these matters.

In fact, too high standards will have the unfortunate result of making it impossible for willing and able Africans to enter and compete effectively with the other races in trade and industry, and I would like very much for the Government to investigate this particular point and let us know precisely what is happening. I would also like to suggest very seriously to the Government that it is harmful, however desirable it may be from the public health point of view, it is harmful to insist on too high a standard—a standard that is not yet possible in terms of the means available to our various people. I think our standards must aim as high as possible, but they must also be practicable and realistic. Realistic in terms of accepting the situation as it exists, although aiming to improve it as we go on, and in this connection I would like to suggest that the insistence on African traders, immediately they start to trade, to build permanent buildings is an unfair restriction on Africans entering trade.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I also want to refer to the question of leases, especially in the urban areas and in the markets. Sir, if an African owns a plot or premises in a market, these markets are not defined at the moment, and consequently even if he has a permanent building worth some Sh. 30,000 or Sh. 40,000, this cannot help him to raise a loan that he needs for his trade, merely because the markets are not yet defined. When he owns such a building in a trading centre very often the problem is that until now he has not been given a lease. Now something has to be done to get these Africans out of this apparent vicious circle from one to the other. In the market, the market is not defined. In the trading centre the lease has not been granted. In the towns the leases are not yet defined although I understand agreement has been reached that leases will be granted and the period has also been specified. I think, Sir, that we cannot over-emphasize the urgency and the need for the Government immediately to act in this matter. It is a handicap which many African businessmen willing and able to participate in the development of our country have not been able to meet or to overcome effectively, and as a result they have suffered serious consequences. I know of cases where people have been encouraged, in fact they are required by regulation to build permanent structures in the markets and trading centres, and having built these permanent structures and spent all their capital building permanent structures, they are unable to get any credit facilities to enable them to trade in order to repay the loans they have taken to build the trading premises, and I think there is something seriously wrong if we must require a person by regulation to build a permanent structure, and then leave him in the air once he has fulfilled this particular regulation. I would like strongly to appeal to the Government to take up this matter with a sense of urgency.

Lastly, there is the question in this particular connexion to which I want to refer, and that is the question of the T.L.B.'s—the Transport Licensing Board, especially with respect to licences for passenger transport. I have had occasion to appear before the Transport Licensing Board on behalf of a number of people, and I must say this, that whereas we appreciate the argument that traffic density will determine as to how many licences will be issued on various routes, we cannot but say this, that in view of the early start of Asian and other non-African companies in this particular field, many Africans who are able and willing to enter into competition in this field are today being denied because they happen to be late in coming out and finding enough money to buy buses and so on. And I think, Sir, that it is necessary in the spirit of trying to help Africans to enter and compete in the economic development of this country that some way must be found, even despite the traffic density, to encourage Africans to enter effectively in this particular field. I know, and I am not suggesting that there are not routes on which there are African buses, but I know also that on the more important and long run routes the Africans are finding it extremely difficult when they apply for transport licences. There are numerous objections before the Transport Licensing Board by such companies as the O.T.C., the Kenya Bus Service, the Meralli Company, the O.M.T. and so on, but all these are big, old established companies with which a single African bus cannot really compete effectively, and yet they stand in the way of this humble African businessman who merely wants to start in business and to try his talents. I cannot myself agree that the arguments used are fair arguments, and I must try and convince the Government that some change in policy is absolutely necessary in this matter. Perhaps—I am not suggesting that is a question of the attitude of the Chairman of the Board—but I think it is a matter of policy. I know the Chairman of the Board, and I see him looking at me, and in fact I am prepared to say he is a very good friend of mine, but, Sir, something is definitely wrong with the policy because despite that friendship I have never been able to get him to accept one single application.

Sir Charles Markham: You had better change your friends.

Mr. Mboya: Well, I do not know. I might not consider this question, but I must seriously suggest that a policy in respect of the issue of transport licences must be re-examined, and especially this question I have put forward, the need to encourage Africans in all spheres of business. Now, Sir, if we were to take this argument to its logical conclusion, before we were to accept that because of traffic density or because of some well established companies like O.T.C. and Kenya Bus Service and Meralli are able to buy 100 buses on the basis that they have had a licence for the last 20 years, there will hardly be any place for other people to start in business even in other fields when they very well reach the position where we are told that we need not apply for a grocery shop in Nairobi because all the Patelis have taken all the grocery shops. So I must suggest that there must be in these fields room for healthy and fair competition. If Mr. Meralli's organization and management is good enough he will compete with Kamau regardless of the fact that Kamau is an African, and I think this is the attitude that we want to develop, but I think protection of the nature that lends itself to indiscriminate action as exists in the public transport business is one that must be discouraged.

Mr. Tyson (Nominated Member): And the African lose his money.

Mr. Mboya: I beg your pardon. Now, the other point that is mentioned in the Budget speech and on which I want to make a few observations is regarding tourism. Now, Sir, tourism is something that we all want to encourage. The Minister need not worry about that. We want to help in this field. We want to encourage people to come and see not only the wild beasts but to get to know and understand our country and appreciate its problems and so on. I think the emphasis must not just be on encouraging them to go to the National Parks. I think it must be more than that. But even if we did not deliberately try to make them see the other parts of our country's life, it is inevitable that a tourist coming to Kenya will go away with certain impressions. Even having seen the giraffes and the rhinos. And one other thing that strikes me, especially having travelled as much as I have done, is the sort of impression a tourist must get when he comes to Kenya. He arrives at Nairobi Airport, and then travels in our cars and so on, and sees our way of living, the structure of our society, and so on. I think we must aim at giving them a better impression than we are able to give at the moment. For example, and Sir, I am not merely looking for grievances. I am trying to suggest important questions and changes that could be made to give a better impression of Kenya. When you arrive at Nairobi Airport, the first thing that strikes you is, of course, that there are many Africans, few Europeans, few Asians in uniforms.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): It depends upon who is arriving at the same time!

Mr. Mboya: I am talking of the inside building of the Airport, the people you come into contact with, I am not talking about spectators.

Now, Sir, from the Immigration Desk to the Customs Hall the Africans' position at Nairobi Airport is merely that of a porter. This is the first impression that you get. I think that this is an unfortunate impression. There are opportunities at the Airport, and especially at this important point of entering into the country, to show the world that this country is moving to a position where all its population are taking an effective part in its life. We want to see more Africans appointed to jobs in these places. At the Immigration Desk, I am sure that no one would suggest that there are no Africans who are educated enough or fit enough to stamp passports or examine an entry form. I am not sure it is suggested that there are not African and Asian ladies who are not good enough to man the Information Desk and act as stewards at the Airport. I am not sure that there are not Africans who are good enough to work in the Customs Hall. Why should the impression be given that the only jobs offered to Africans at that point are ones of carrying the luggage, driving the cranes and standing in a file before an aeroplane?

This is an unfortunate impression which persists when a tourist visits our banks and post offices. In the banks you see nothing but a sea

[Mr. Mboya] of white and brown faces and perhaps a sprinkling of one or two black faces. In the post office the same thing. What impression do we want to give these people? Someone would think he had suddenly gone into one of the offices in Britain, because even there there is a sprinkling of black faces these days in some places, if not in all places. And this is a country in Africa, an African country as a matter of fact, and I must seriously suggest—I am not sure who is the Minister for Tourism nowadays, there have been so many changes lately I cannot keep up to date.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Why not?

Mr. Mboya: There are too many. But I would like to suggest to the Minister for Tourism that the Africans do not want to play the role of exhibition pieces for tourists. We do not want to be presented to tourists as "Come and see the wild jungles of Africa with barbaric and primitive tribes", there is much more to be offered than just that and we have a bigger part to play than just being presented as a spectacle for other people to come and see.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Come and see the Legislature!

Mr. Mboya: Why should they come to the Legislative Council? Is this country so poor that they have got to come to the Legislative Council to see Africans?

Sir Charles Markham: There are enough of them here at the moment anyway.

Mr. Mboya: Is it so poor that if you wish to see African properly presented you have to come to the Legislative Council, if so, I say we are a very poor country indeed. So may I strongly suggest that some opportunities must now be provided for Africans to have proper jobs in all these places and that the Ministry of Commerce will also discuss this matter with the banks and other big employers to ensure that Africans are being given better jobs, executive jobs not office boys and people who just carry luggage. The post office—this is a public corporation and in the Estimates we are going to spend some money for the maintenance of the High Commission, we have a right to demand that the employment policy must be an enlightened policy. Consequently, again, it is my hope that there will be some change in the attitude to the employment policy in all these places.

The other point I want to make on the Budget Speech is about the increase in the price of diesel.

An hon. Member: Have you got a diesel car?

Mr. Mboya: Now this is not from any vested interest. I think car owners can afford to pay the extra few cents. They should be able to afford it if they want to own a car anyway. I do not think it has gone beyond their means. But one unfortunate consequence in the increase of the price of diesel is the announcement two days ago by the Kenya Bus Company that the price of tickets on African routes will be increased by five cents per ticket.

Now, Sir, this may appear to be a very small sum to Members of the Legislature and all these people owning cars, but may I suggest that this is quite a sizeable percentage of a wage packet of those thousands of people on the minimum wage. The total amount of money a person will be required to spend on transport after this increase in the prices will be three shillings or more per month. Now those who have been charged with the responsibility of reviewing the minimum wage know that the moment the minimum wage rises by two shillings then we are in for a review, and what this is likely to do is, in fact—if the cost of transport is likely to go up by three shillings—or rather the expenditure is likely to go up by three shillings per month, that the Unions and the workers will have every right to demand a review of the minimum wage. The Minister said in his Budget Speech that he did not think that his proposals would result in any increase in the cost of living. But the question I wish to ask is which cost of living he was talking about. You see there are two costs of living in this country, one for the European and Asian and the other one for the African. I always prefer to call the one for Europeans and Asians "the cost of high living" rather than the "high cost of living", but this is not the point I am trying to make at the moment.

If the Minister was referring to the cost of living in respect of Europeans and Asians he may be right, because indeed the Kenya Bus Services state that the increase in the price of tickets would only affect African routes. I do not understand the meaning of the discrimination as between the routes if the price of diesel has gone up, certainly it has gone up on European and Asian routes. But I do not understand why the African routes or the African consumer should be made to subsidize the European and Asian users of public transport. I strongly urge on the Minister to consider this matter and let us know whether our calculations are wrong in the first place or whether he will intervene with the Kenya Bus Services to ensure that there is not this unnecessary discrimination in the application of any increases that may arise from an increase in the price of diesel. What is even [Mr. Mboya] stranger still is that in so far as our income structure is concerned, the increase in the price of tickets as suggested by the Kenya Bus Company will only affect Africans and by virtue of this it will only affect the lower income groups in our society. Our income groups at this stage unfortunately are still based on race, they are still definable in terms of Europeans, Asians and Africans, and the Africans at the bottom of the income scale are the people who are to suffer the burden of this Budget. Therefore I must most emphatically—most emphatically—suggest to the Minister that this Budget of his should seriously be re-examined.

Now, Sir, in addition to the points included in the Budget Speech I was struck by a point that was completely omitted in the Budget Speech. That is what consideration the Government has given this year to a further reduction in the Personal Tax for people at the lower income groups. When the graduated Personal Tax was introduced three years ago it was suggested and in fact repeated by the then Minister for Finance that the Government policy would be gradually reducing the amount of the tax to be paid by the people at the lower income groups—say between £50 and £100 income per annum—until the time when it would be possible to remove some of them completely from paying any tax. We at that time suggested this process might be about three years. There has been a reduction in the meantime—I think from Sh. 25 to Sh. 20—but in the present Budget no reference is made to what further steps are being considered by the Government, either during this year or next year in reducing this lower tax once more and, possibly, removing it altogether. I want to suggest very strongly that it is necessary to remove this tax. It is a burden which some of our people cannot possibly take, although they are forced by circumstances to give up more important things like, perhaps, providing better food, better housing, education for their children, in fear of going to jail they have to pay this Sh. 20. In fact, in some cases there are Africans who have had to go to jail because they are unable to produce the Sh. 20. Not because they are unwilling to produce the Sh. 20 but because they are unable to produce the Sh. 20. I strongly suggest that a tax of that nature is unfair taxation on the population, it is punitive in the sense that it does not take into account ability to pay.

I would like to suggest, Sir, that this does not mean that a big body of Africans will not be paying any tax at all. In addition to paying the Personal Tax to the Central Government, this population is also paying an African district council rate and other forms of hidden taxation which continue all the time, in addition to the direct taxation which they pay as consumers of various types of goods and commodities. So that we are not really advocating that any part of our population is going to go completely free without paying any taxes, but we are saying that already what they pay in indirect tax and other forms of rates is big enough for them to be exempted from paying the Central Government Personal Tax, and I would like when the Minister replies to this debate for him to state what practical steps the Government is taking to fulfil what I would like to call a promise made when Graduated Tax was passed in this Council.

Now, Sir, both in the Budget Speech and also outside this House mention has been made of the flight of capital from this country. A number of statements have been made. People outside the House and, I am informed, people in the banking world, suggest that a lot of capital is leaving Kenya every month. To re-assure us, the Government has suggested at first that no capital was leaving Kenya and in the Budget Speech it was conceded that some capital was leaving Kenya but not to the extent that has been suggested outside this House. How much capital leaves Kenya and to what extent still remains almost a mystery to some of us. But that capital is leaving the country is already a fact—it is already obvious. It is not enough, Sir, to be given the assurance that what is leaving Kenya is not big, that it is not big money, the fact that some capital is leaving Kenya should, in fact, require urgent and immediate action on the part of Government. Investigate the causes, if they are only from political instability we should like to know, if they are for other reasons we should also like to know, and also for the Government after that enquiry to be able to tell us what measures, if any, they think are necessary to meet the situation. Their denials are not enough—especially when those denials are qualified, and I would like seriously to suggest that some of my friends on this side of the House ask the Government to go into this a little bit further than they have done and produce for this House and the country some practical answer to the question.

The Minister stated—I quote: "Hon. Members will wish to be informed of the effects of these proposals on the cost of living" this I have dealt with. "We must continue to eliminate waste, to put economic necessities before all else and to endeavour to increase our efficiency in all walks of life. If this is done, and only if this is done, we shall be able to provide all our people with more of the social and other benefits to which they naturally aspire."

Sir, I think the operative words are "if this is done, and only if this is done", and I thought

[Mr. Mboya]

The Minister was most emphatic when he uttered these words. I would like to agree with him that we should do what we can to eliminate waste and put economic necessities in terms of our priorities. But my question is whether in fact the words of the Minister are being followed firstly by the Government itself in practical terms and also by industry and the country at large. When I look at the Estimates I see a sum of £208,000 set aside for the Kenya Regiment. I see provision made for a lot of administrative officers, a lot of policemen, I see some money set aside to pay the annual rental for the Coastal Strip

Now, Sir, are these expenditures really necessary? Is it really necessary that we spend £208,000 on the Kenya Regiment? Is the Kenya Regiment really necessary? If it is I would like to know for whom and for what purpose. At the moment the Kenya Regiment is an entirely European organization, a racial body in a country where we are constantly talking about multi-racialism and moving away from race. There is not to date, and despite two and a half years of insistence on our part, any attempt by Government to move away from this racial organization to a form of organization that fits in with the policies that we have been told will dictate or determine the trade policies in these little areas, development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, in the Civil Service there are people employed who should be on pension. Whether this is a saving I do not know but I want to suggest that these people should be retired—I am not sure what the method and organization experts have said about continued employment of these persons in the administration. There are too many assistants to assistants and deputies to deputies in the field and one wonders whether these assistants are really necessary and whether whereas it might have been justified during the height of the Emergency, and the psychology of the time to think in terms of closer administration, whether this is still a necessary part of the employment policy in the Administration, and so on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to support the Minister in the statement he has made, but the Minister has got to convince us in practical terms that he himself will insist that the Government apply economies before he calls on everybody else to tighten their belts and some of the things he can do are pretty obvious. We must spend within our means and we must also choose in terms of economic necessity and in order of priorities and I seriously suggest that some of the things I have quoted constitute waste rather than reasonable expenditure on the part of the Government.

Now, Sir, since it is Budget time—the Budget Speech—we have the opportunity to wander about a bit and say some of the things we are not able to say in certain debates. I want to say a few things to some of my friends on the opposite side. The Minister for Local Government, when he speaks in this debate, I would like him to give an intimation as to how soon—how soon—he is going to overhaul the entire local government machinery in this country. This local government machinery needs overhauling and needs it urgently. It is undemocratic, it is unreasonable, it is illogical and in many cases it is terribly confused and confusing. Take the urban areas, representation is still by race with a small European community dominating these councils at the expense of everybody else. They determine the trade policies in these little areas, they determine how many Africans will even have aji licences, they determine whether or not the Africans are going to be confined to an African location, they determine so many things, that I think it is necessary that the administration of the local government must be in the hands of people responsible to the population or rate-payers in the particular local authority.

I do not need to repeat what we have said in this Council several times before, namely that conflicts that seem to exist between the Government, the Ministry and the local authorities on various issues, but I think those conflicts would be greatly minimized, and indeed would minimize the waste and delay that accompany these conflicts, once the local governments are overhauled and properly reconstituted.

The Secretary of State at Lancaster House promised there would be a review in the local government system and we want that review to be carried out—indeed I want to suggest that our whole constitutional development is so far in advance of the local government machinery that the old idea that people will learn by experience from the local government to the central government can no longer be true in Kenya. It appears that we have to learn from the Legislative Council in order to go and serve on the Nairobi City Council, and inject in the Nairobi City Council the positive, liberal ideas that they need. The Nairobi City Council is the worst offender of them all and yet they are the biggest one and the one from whom we expect the greatest sense of responsibility.

I would like to take issue with the Minister for Local Government when he told us of changes in the constitution of the Nairobi City Council—I hope he is listening—

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Oh, yes.

Mr. Mboya: He said at the time that there would be such changes as to raise African representation to four on the basis of direct election and he also made a statement to the House on which I wish to take him up today. He said there would be an increase in the number of aldermen in the Nairobi City Council and definitely stated that at least one would be an African. The elections for aldermen in Nairobi are now over and there is not one African alderman in Nairobi. I would like to know why these apparent promises are made public without due regard—I am not blaming the Minister, I think I know where the problem lies—

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): You do, I have told you!

Mr. Mboya: But the Minister is responsible for the statements he makes to this House and responsible to the public who are made to believe that certain things are going to happen. If in fact the Minister is going to say what I think he is going to say, that it was not his doing, that the whole thing was a City Council affair, then, Sir, I will have shown conclusively the sort of relations that exist between the Nairobi City Council and the Minister, how bad they are, even to the extent that perhaps the Government no longer has any influence on the City Council and the City Council is now a government within a government and that they are totally independent of the policies conceived by this Government. I am not going to ask at this stage that the Africans be given one alderman in the Nairobi City Council, because I think we deserve more and in our own dignity it would be detrimental to accept anything such as one alderman out of nine aldermen. In fact, how can anyone justify any proposal that Africans should have only one alderman out of nine aldermen in the Nairobi City Council? If, in fact, the population in Nairobi up to date is about 20,000 Europeans, to 150,000 Africans.

For us merely to exist on the whims and generosity of the so-called European city fathers is a shame. We insist on taking our rightful place in local government and we do not want to have our affairs dealt with by a council that does not consider itself responsible to our rate payers or responsive to their demands. One can see this very obviously in Nairobi. A new European estate is built and in that same month the roads are there, the sewers are there, they are all tar-maced and so on. But you build an estate for Africans and it takes three years to have the roads tar-maced. During the rainy season we have to wade through mud in order to get to our jobs; but for the Europeans everything is there. Why? Why? Because the City Council is a bankrupt body in terms of policy. It should be dissolved and I am sorry that when they reconstituted it once they did not see a little bit further and introduced a more positive constitution that would have put an end to the old ideas that existed and resulted in the chaos of some years ago. We have the problem of huse rents, arguments and counter arguments, houses built in 1917 and being put on the same economic rate as houses built in 1959. There is a demand for an increase in rents without any apparent improvement in the housing situation and so on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would also like to take issue with the Government on the question of the Kibera settlement. Some time ago I asked for a statement to be made and I hope that when the Ministers reply to this debate—I cannot remember which particular one deals with it, sometimes it is Local Government, sometimes it is Housing, sometimes it was African Affairs, and I have begun to lose track of which Minister I should really ask—but a statement should be made on the Kibera settlement. There has been conflict over this for many years. The origin of this settlement is that some ex-service men were allowed to settle on some piece of land, the size of which has dwindled over the years. It has been taken away without consultation, without discussion, even without any due regard for the promises made to them in those early days. Sir, if some settlers in this country have a right to say, "We have settled, we have made our homes, we cannot be removed", then I say the Kibera settlers have a right to be considered, as any other type of people. But this is not my argument, my argument is that a citizen living in Kibera like any other citizen should receive fair and due consideration before any Government action is taken. There has been no consultation. I have intervened on this question for the last two years. I have asked Government to call a meeting at Kibera to discuss this matter, properly, with the elders, and all in vain, until after they had promulgated all the legislation, all the regulations. Then they go there, not to call a meeting to consult them but to call a meeting to tell them what they will do. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think this is unfortunate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, there is the point about unemployment. I will not say much on this at this stage because I want to say something about it when we deal with the Ministry of Labour.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Webb) took the Chair]

(Mr. Mboya)

We are going to urge Government that the Ministry of Labour Estimates should be discussed in full Council this year because the question of unemployment is a serious and urgent problem, and we would like to know just what measures, practical measures, Government is going to take to meet this question of unemployment? We do not want the Estimates of the Ministry of Labour to be left behind so that the guillotine comes before they are debated because that would be denying us the opportunity in this Council of discussing fully the question of the problem of unemployment. This is my position on it.

My friend the Member for Ukamba when he spoke referred to trade unions and wildcat strikes, he made a number of points, very interesting points, but I want to make the following statement in the House. There have been suggestions or statement by both Government and employers that they accept trade unions, in fact the Member for Ukamba said so himself. But, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I want to suggest that it is not a question of accepting trade unions that we are concerned with here; it is the question of also accepting the implications of accepting trade unions. Trade unions do not exist in a vacuum. Once they are accepted, once they are established, they have to perform a certain duty. They have a responsibility to the workers and to their members. They are therefore obliged to fulfil a certain function. If you say by word of mouth that you accept trade unions and yet refuse them the opportunity of fulfilling their legitimate functions, your professions are invalid and they mean nothing at all. And the question that must be asked, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is whether in fact the employers when they say they accept trade unions have accepted all the implications that go with it. I want to submit that all employers have accepted the implications and that this is one of our main problems today. We have a situation, Mr. Deputy Speaker, where in the plantations we have already registered a number of unions but where the employers refuse union organizers access to the estates to talk to the workers to organize and enroll members. What kind of acceptance of trade unions is this? We have a situation in which employers say, "We accept trade unions", but they do not recognize trade unions in order to deal with their official leadership. I suggest strongly that the moment you do that you create a situation in which (a) you undermine the official leadership of the union so that it begins to lose influence and (b) you create the opportunity for unofficial, irresponsible leadership to grow up among the rank and file and the result is that you have your wildcat strikes. It is no use merely putting forward the argument of the suggestion that there are political influences causing these strikes. On the contrary, our record throughout the last ten years is proof indeed that we have avoided acting merely on political impulses. If we wanted to during the height of the Emergency we could have wrecked the economy. We could have called strikes, but I challenge the Government, or anyone else, to show one single political strike that we have called at any time. I humbly suggest that this is not a record that one can put forward as showing tendencies towards political influence in the trade union movement. I am suggesting, in fact I am saying positively, that the negative attitude of employers is causing these troubles and before people come and appeal to the workers to be reasonable and responsible they must go to the employers and tell them to play the game according to the rules. If they accept trade unionism, they must accept the implications. In the plantations we are not interested in creating troubles. We want to create in the plantations the normally recognized machinery for collective bargaining and joint consultation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, in 1958 the employers in plantations asked us to accept a certain structure of Trade Unionism which we had not accepted before. After lengthy discussions we conceded them this point. We agreed to a pattern and structure that they themselves wanted us to have in this country. But since 1958 until now and despite our efforts not one of these Unions has been recognized for the purposes of collective bargaining and joint consultation. Now, is that a record that shows that we are irresponsible? Is that a record that shows co-operation on the part of the plantation employer? It will be remembered that following the Carpenter Committee Report which suggested that there should be statutory means of regulating wages in the rural industries. It is these same employers who have until today resisted any proposal or idea to introduce statutory wage fixation machinery in the plantation industry. The record of these employers shows clearly—I do not want to say that there are no exceptions, there are exceptions, I have met them—but the record of these employers generally with their association shows very clearly their unwillingness to move with change. Some of them are still thinking in terms of family relationships instead of industrial relations. And industrial relations suggest that there must be a degree of industrial democracy and industrial democracy must mean that Trade Unions are accepted, that they will fulfil their proper function in the industries of this country. The Minister for Agriculture and the Minister for Labour, I think, and the Chief Secretary met these employers. I want to suggest that they also meet the Unions and the Kenya Federation of Labour and discuss the situation fully. Any unilateral action is not going to resolve the situation and I am prepared to state here and now publicly that the Kenya Federation of Labour is willing and eager to play its full part and use its influence to ensure that there are good relations created in this industry. But we insist that our legitimate functions must also be recognized and respected. It is no use talking to us about the prerogatives of the employers. Once you accept industrial relations on a modern basis, you must also agree to surrender a certain amount of these prerogatives. You cannot have your cake and eat it and so these employers must be told in no uncertain terms that the Trade Unions are here and they are here to stay. They may obstruct us for a short period of time but such obstruction is only going to lead to trouble and chaos.

Lastly, Mr. Deputy Speaker, points have been made about intimidation. Mr. Deputy Speaker, if you deny a group of people the right to operate as an organized group, you open yourself to irregular, irresponsible leadership and, therefore, intimidation. And it is no use coming to complain here. The question revolves around one point only, whether or not we are having a regulated means of industrial relations or we are going to have everybody going his own way. And if that is allowed on the part of the employers, the Government has no business to be called in to assist the employers if they are not going to adopt a policy that is consistent with the Government's declared policy of encouraging Trade Unionism in this country.

Now, Sir, every Budget time we talk about certain political trends that are closely related to the Budget or rather to the economic development of the country. And this year the Budget comes when we are anticipating certain political and constitutional changes. I want, when the Minister or the Chief Secretary speaks to the House in this debate, for him to tell us what steps are being taken to expedite the arrangements for elections under the Macleod Constitution.

(Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Webb) left the Chair)

(Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) took the Chair)

We consider it is absolutely essential that the interim period of the Caretaker Government should be as short as possible and we should stop all this, put an end to all this uncertainty, doubts and fears by bringing into effect immediately the real constitution. Let the people see it operated. Let their fears be answered by the constitution operating instead of everybody saying, "Well, when it comes next year we do not know what is going to happen". Why do we not bring this constitution into action now? Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am not quite convinced that it requires one year to prepare the voters' role and I would like seriously to suggest that the voters' role can be prepared in a much shorter period and the elections be held before the end of this year. If this is possible, it should be the aim of Government, to ensure that it is expedited rather than to sit on it and throw up their hands and say, "Well, it can never be done". I think it can be done. In other countries with a bigger population they have arranged for elections—general elections—in a matter of three months. We with a smaller population want nine to eleven months. I cannot understand it and so I suggest that to put an end to all this feeling of insecurity, feeling of uncertainty, which in itself is affecting the flow of capital in this country, that we go ahead and implement the constitution. And I am bound to say that already our people are beginning to think ahead of the next constitution because this country is not standing still, nor is Africa standing still. There are tremendous changes taking place right now on our doorsteps and our people are bound to re-adjust their thinking on the basis of these changes. If we delay the Macleod Constitution, what we will find is that by the time we introduce it next year everybody will be so much in advance that the Macleod Constitution will not be able to work at all and may I therefore suggest that we take into account the fact that Kenya's position is influenced by these things.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Member for Ukamba referred to the question of Jomo Kenyatta and I thought he said that the campaign for his release was strongest in the Central Province and especially in Nairobi. Let me state here and now and publicly that we intend to continue in the campaign for Kenyatta's release until he is released because we refuse to believe that the Government's present policy of his continued restriction is the right policy. We refuse to believe that this policy is in fact helping in terms of security, law and order. I want to suggest, in fact I want to state, that Kenyatta's continued restriction is a greater menace to security than his release and that these arguments about security, law and order are completely out of date. Kenyatta should be released to put an end to all this uncertainty, all this insecurity. He should be released. Anybody who suggests that he will never be released is dreaming because he will be released one day: the question is when. And we are saying to you that it should be now and not tomorrow because in view of the stability that is necessary for this country so long as Kenyatta remains in restriction it will continue to be an issue, a source of misunderstanding, a source of friction between the Government and the people of this country. Sir, if anybody doubts that the entire African community wants Kenyatta released, then I think he ought to have his head examined because I am positive that everything the Africans have said and shown today indicates their complete agreement, complete unanimity, for the need for Kenyatta to be released. At one time it was said, "The loyalists do not want him released," and so on. In fact, someone had the audacity to suggest that the African Elected Members had no mandate at all from the loyalists to demand Kenyatta's release. This man is not thinking; his memory must be short. During the last two elections, 1957 and 1958, the only Kikuyu, Meru and Embu people who voted for the election of my colleagues on this side of the House were all in possession of a loyalists certificate. Now, if those people made the wrong decision, Sir, we are not to blame. Blame the man who issued the certificate. But the fact is that if there are any loyalists in this country, the only men who can speak for them are the African Elected Members for Central Province whom they elected to come and speak on their behalf. All these self-appointed spokesmen outside the Legislative Council and even some within this Council, they are wasting their time. They are misleading the Government, they are giving us a false impression of the true situation that we all ought to deal with. And I say to the Government, release Kenyatta and remove a big burden from your conscience and from your minds and help this country at least to achieve stability. Whatever the Government may say, whatever the British public may think or say, ultimately and indeed even now the position and status of Kenyatta can only be determined by the African people and so long as the African people call him, refer to him, think of him, accept him and recognize him as their leader, no one can change that fact. Whether he is in Lodwar or back in Kiambu or Nairobi, he remains in that position and will continue to enjoy that position so long as the African people want him. And that is not tied down to what the Government here thinks or says.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, in Nyasaland this question of security was used when Dr. Banda was in restriction or detention. Dr. Banda has been released and so far I have not heard of a single incident of violence, a single incident of disorder. On the contrary, everybody agrees Nyasaland is much more peaceful, more stable than anyone ever hoped it would be, under control by the British Government or the local administration. I want to say now and publicly that I am convinced that if there is insecurity, if there is instability, if there is misunderstanding between the Government and the African people, the release of Kenyatta will bring about security, stability and understanding because it will have removed a source of friction, a source of conflict between us. I think we ought to state this very clearly to the Government so that our position is left in no doubt at all. It is no use coming here and referring to all the Mau Mau and so on. All these things—I do not know whether some Members want to go into the past? The Governor came here and said, "Forget about the past, we start a new life," and yet some people persist in coming here and talking about the past, the past, the past, the past. Well, the past is past. But we have still got to live here and live here tomorrow. That is what I am more interested in than history. As I said before, there age already these controversies about a Report which in my view is eight years too late, a Report which I cannot see what it is going to do anyway. But all these controversies about yesterday, they are not going to help anybody. The Government should ask itself honestly, sincerely, whether they are justified in the continued restriction of Jomo Kenyatta. If they can ask that question honestly and sincerely, the answer can only be one: they have no justifiable reason for Kenyatta's continued restriction and detention. And indeed, the other Africans that are still rotting in detention camps or under restriction orders, those people should all be released. They deserve freedom like any of us here. They have a contribution to make, however little. Whether it is in private life or in public life, they have that right to come and play their part in a society that is theirs by right of birth.

The hon. Member for Ukamba, I think, put it very well when he referred to rumour and counter-rumour. These rumours and counter-rumours will not be settled by the Government standing there and saying emphatically "Kenyatta will never be released—no". That will only create a new situation. The rumour and counter-rumour will only be resolved by Kenyatta walking out of Lodwar a free man and rejoining our society and community.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Member for Ukamba also mentioned the question of land and I think he was asking that Sessional Paper No. 10 be debated, if I understood him aright, or when it was going to be debated. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not want to discuss the Sessional Paper No. 10, but I want to say that in my considered opinion this present Government is not competent to take any final decision on the question

[Mr. Mboya]

I consider that the only Government which would be competent to take a final decision on the question of land will have to be a Government that is responsible to all our people, a Government that is elected by our people, a Government that is responsive to our people. The present Government is incompetent, and especially while anticipating political changes I consider it would be a gross misapplication of their position to try and resolve in any finality some of these questions.

In conclusion, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I want to say this. I know that anticipated political changes, some of the anticipated constitutional changes, and some of the political developments, do tend to frighten some people in this country. Some people continuously want to ask, "What is there going to be for us in the future?"—especially the immigrant community. I want to say that as far as I know the future for them and for us is the same, on the basis of what they themselves have accepted in their original countries as a basis for democracy, on the basis of human rights, on the basis of human dignity, on the basis of Mr. Smith being equal in dignity to Mr. Kamau, on the basis of Mr. Patel enjoying the same civic rights as Mr. Koinange, if he accepts the citizenship of this country. Double loyalties such as one loyalty to Bombay and another one to Nairobi, or one loyalty to Glasgow and another one to Nairobi, cannot work properly on the context of the Kenya that we have in mind. It is those people who want to entertain these double loyalties that have a lot to fear because they are really not Kenyans at heart; they just want to exploit that position but they are not truly committed. They are the sort of people who when things become really bad will say, "Look, I will pull out at any moment; I have to go home." They are the sort of people who are saying today, "Tell us whether we will be able to pull out in an independent Kenya if we should find it untenable." Mr. Deputy Speaker, that class of man has no place here. He should pull out now and not during independence. He should not ask us to guarantee that when he considers an independent Kenya is too bad he can seek refuge elsewhere. He is putting himself in a class that is different from mine or any other African because, Mr. Deputy Speaker, even if Kenya became too bad, stinking bad, I could not pull out to any other place. I have no alternative in this matter. If the other man considers that he should have an alternative door open then he has no reason to claim the same rights and position as myself. If he wants the same rights and the same status as myself then let him accept the same alternative and not a privileged and special alternative for himself, and, at the same time, claim to be equal to myself. If he wants to be an African, and there is room for Asians and Europeans to become Africans, then let him become African, without qualification.

Hon. Member: I do not.

Mr. Mboya: Now, Sir, some hon. Members at my back are giggling or saying, "I do not." Perhaps they mean that when they become Africans, or I mean, they must accept a lower standard of life; they must accept African culture; they must accept African dress; they are looking at the African in the context of the present African poverty, handicaps, and disadvantages. This is their concept of Africa and the African. These sort of people or ideas cannot work in the sort of society that we want to build. We must conceive of an African that is higher than poverty, that is higher than the present disadvantages and handicaps. This is the aim we must have and it is the African we want to create and those who wish to call themselves Africans, those who profess so glibly to have accepted this country, must live for that, not just look at Africa in the context of poverty, disease and ignorance. If that is their concept of their relations with us then it is an unfortunate concept and it cannot create a basis for harmonious friendly existence between us.

I say to those who wish to invest their capital in this country that there is room here for investment. We want to encourage it, not only because it will be so much good to have their capital here but even for self interest. The motive power behind our agitation is to develop this country, to advance our people, to give them a higher standard of life, and we are all aware of the need for capital, for skills, for investment. It is ridiculous for anyone to suggest that we are going to take action to victimize or penalize anybody, action to drive away capital or drive away anybody. We are not mad. Sometime, sooner or later, our people are bound to ask us to deliver the goods, but we can only do so if there is development; we can only do so if there is continuous investment and a continuous flow of capital. The only condition, the only qualification, is that such capital, such investment, must not come here with the intention of exploiting our natural and human resources in order to take away everything to other lands. They must be responsive to our needs. The other qualification in an independent Kenya, as I see it, is that such capital or investment must be without any political strings. We do not want to exchange one form of colonialism or imperialism with another form, economic or political. Those, to my mind, are the only qualifications and this is the one certain numbers of cases. The incidence of infectious diseases was very high and also infant and maternity mortality. That position has now changed. The death rate has gone down, also the infant and maternal mortality and the incidence of infectious diseases. I know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that figures are always boring, but I trust that the House will bear with me if I quote just a few.

To start with, the infant mortality in 1934—and there are no figures available before that period—was 439 per thousand. In 1939 they were 180 per thousand. In 1959 the number had gone down to 60 per thousand. The maternal mortality rates are: in 1934, 14 per thousand; in 1939, 3 per thousand; in 1959, 1 per thousand. The notification for malaria has also gone down considerably. In 1929, 789 cases were notified; in 1939, 674; and in 1959, 123, and this in spite of the vast increase in the numbers of the population.

These figures, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the House will agree are impressive and I will drop out other figures like death rates, etc., because they all tell the same tale.

If this good work that is being done by the City Council is to continue, then services will have to expand. The population, as I have said, has gone up, and I might give here the figure. In 1929 the population was 47,457; in 1939 it was 65,500, in 1959 the figures are 250,000. I believe the last figures are estimated figures. If the same level of public health is to be maintained then the services must expand. That would mean bigger buildings, better equipment and increase in staff. Now, all this will require money, and here, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is a rub. I believe that there is a ceiling on the expenditure, on the amount to be given in respect of public health to the Council. If this ceiling continues there is a possibility that services which have been improving might go down because there are inescapable liabilities for the Council to discharge. I would, therefore, very humbly request that this point might be considered and something done to relieve the situation. Some items are of great urgency, for example the African Maternity Hospital. That hospital under Dr. Gossan is doing really fine work. It has 72 beds and it is at the moment looking after 100 patients. I do not know how they are looking after 28 more but they are doing. There has been also, under Dr. Gossan, a great reduction in premature babies mortality. Now, if this mortality is to continue to be reduced it is necessary that the Premature Baby Unit be expanded and more staff provided. All this will need money and it is because of this that I am requesting the Government to do something in the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to say now one word only for the education, and here I would like to express my satisfaction that that Vote has the lion's share of the Budget. I believe with the goal now before Kenya that education in all its forms has come to be the greatest need of the country. I know Government is doing quite a lot, but the problem is so vast that I have my own doubts if Kenya will ever be able to meet the problem out of its own resources. I wonder, Sir, in view of the urgency of the problem, in view of the importance of the problem, it is not possible to receive some outside help. I would certainly request the Government to look into this matter because I do feel that if we lag behind in education, the country will lag behind in all the other respects.

With these remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Bompas (Kiambu): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am not claiming any extra time, and I would like to start by adding my congratulations to the Minister upon the presentation of his first Budget.

No one would be more surprised than he, Sir, if I commended the Budget as being highly imaginative, and he can rest assured that I have no intention of doing so. Nevertheless, the Budget is a thoroughly workmanlike effort, presented in a most workmanlike manner, and the menu which the Minister gave us last Wednesday included no tasty Continental dishes, no exotic and exciting dishes. We got meat and two veg. with a slab of Yorkshire pud., which I am told is essentially a Scottish dish contrived to fill the family and conserve the meat. It was a meal, Sir, of good plain cooking, that is, cooking in the culinary sense and not the accounting one.

Possible because I have spent the whole of my life in Africa I tend, like my colleagues on my left—I now find that there none of the colleagues I was referring to, Sir, present in the House at the moment—to tabulate or earmark events in some descriptive way. I do not go so far as to think of the year in which the spotted cow died, but I did file this Budget mentally as the year of the Railway Budget. It has been said that by his taxation of light diesel oil and increased consumption tax on petrol the Minister has made it impossible for any of us to run a large car. He has proceeded to double the licence on the small cars, making it quite impossible to run those, which left us no alternative but to walk. But, having increased the import duty on shoe leather we are left to crawl, or use the railway, which some unkind people suggest are quite synonymous terms. Sir, my label did arise originally from this completely frivolous reasoning, but that the tag was appropriate was confirmed by two quite serious matters upon which I shall touch a little later.

The Minister said that having met our commitments the credit is, and I quote "... that of the people of Kenya whose work, determination and energy have made this possible". In the year which has passed there was undeniably a considerable amount of voluntary belt tightening. This was reinforced by economies and conservation of public funds under the direct supervision of the Chief Secretary. It now looks as though these economies were ad hoc because I cannot sense, and I certainly cannot find, that they have been perpetuated in the current Budget. I hope I am wrong, and that the Government will be able to demonstrate that that is so, I am not, Mr. Deputy Speaker, advocating cuts in wise spending, particularly in the light of our unemployment problem.

What I do seek is satisfaction that the taxpayer is getting value for his money. In discussing building, the Minister took the 30 per cent increase in the value of building plans passed by the Nairobi City Council in first three months of 1960 as compared with the same period for the previous year. He qualified this with the realization that all plans do not necessarily become buildings, but no doubt many of the larger projects based upon imported capital will proceed. Yet, I feel that we are approaching, if only temporarily, saturation point in office, flat and shop accommodation, and that it is most unwise to expect injections of overseas capital for such projects to continue without some sort of a break. Welcome as such projects as multi-storey car parks are, one cannot but regard those as caviare, whereas it is to the bread and butter of home building and small building that we should look for our major stability. The prevailing uncertainty, coupled with a continued lack of any real tax encouragement is causing many owner-occupier projects to be abandoned or shelved whilst those with the confidence to proceed are being thwarted by lack of liquid funds in local markets. Sir, I welcome the Minister's strictures upon those irresponsible who talk of "liquidating large scale farming" although I could have wished he had been quite specific in that matter. I accept with him that what we need are measures to encourage any farmers who talk of putting their farms on a care and maintenance basis, so that they may proceed with development to their own and everybody else's benefit. What those farmers are looking for is the assurance that the sinking of more capital is not throwing good money after bad. Success in the many discussions which you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Minister for Finance and the Minister for Agriculture have had with the World Bank, and the hard work put in by the Kenya National Farmers' Union, and two of our political parties or groups, will do much to stabilize land values and restore confidence. But this unhappily is only half the solution. The rest lies in the hearts of men, and in their relationships each with the other. There is, I believe, an increasing awareness of this on the part of all races in this Colony. An awareness which is only prevented from budding to fruition by the machinations of those who are prepared to use intimidation for their own selfish, for their own evil, ends. The task of dealing with these people is primarily one for Government. My friend and colleague, the hon. Member for Ukamba, has already touched upon an instance of what I mean, and I must refer once again, Sir, to the series of wildcat strikes in the Mitubiri/Thika and Ruiru areas. Strikes which are calculated to move very, very shortly into Kiambu, and are designed, quite obviously, in the end to threaten the entire season's coffee crop. So far as can be seen, these strikes bear no possible semblance of any sort of legitimacy under any sort of trade union organization.

I was disappointed, Sir, in the speech of the hon. Member for Central Nairobi, when speaking of trade unions. Unfortunately, Sir, he is not here. He has a habit of making statements and then not remaining to hear any sort of answers. For the benefit of the hon. Member I was saying he has a habit of making statements and not remaining to hear any sort of reply. I want to repeat, Sir, what the hon. Member for Ukamba said. The coffee planters in the particular area which I have spoken of are fully prepared, and have said this on a number of occasions in my presence, to accept the trade union movement. The difficulty that they are faced with is not that they are not prepared to accept the implications. The difficulty is that the present plantation trade union is in such embryo form that its officials appear to have either no control or no desire to control their members. Sir, I was speaking of these strikes. They are fomented exclusively for political ends, and quite regardless of where they may lead the Colony in its economy. They are kept alive by the most blatant intimidation. From the interest which three senior Ministers have recently shown, I know that Government is now fully aware of the gravity and the extent of the situation. I shall not dwell upon any details because much has already been published in the Press quite recently. Incidents like men on the estates who refuse to attend meetings of strikers being forced to hold railway sleepers above their heads for a first offence, and [Mr. Bumpas] between their heads shaved for a second having half the type of thing, Sir, which is offence. That is the type of thing, Sir, which is going on in that particular area. I will do no more, Sir, than ask that Government will make as full a statement as the security aspects permit, and should undertake quite unequivocally to make fully known to the gullible tools in this matter the ways in which an engineered destruction, or the removal of Kenya's major earning source will recede economically, not merely upon the Colony's taxation, revenue but upon those individuals through the public services and the employment which they enjoy. At a time, Sir, when unemployment relief is being examined, the perpetuation of the present folly is quite beyond my comprehension.

Sir, on the subject of strikes, one very substantial reason why I tabulate this Budget as the "Railway Budget" is by way of monument or tribute to all those who kept the wheels turning during our recent Kenya Railway strike. I feel it is appropriate to register our great admiration of the men and women, employees who stood by the railway and the public, whom they served so well. Those who applied themselves to wholly unfamiliar tasks, and those technicians who redoubled their efforts, their own specialist efforts, are equally deserving of our thanks. Although, Sir, it is not fully in the context of this debate I feel sure that many, particularly those in the commercial community, would like me to put on record our appreciation and our good wishes to Mr. Urquhart on his retirement from the post of Deputy General Manager, after 24 years' service. We owe him our thanks, I believe, Sir, and again I speak for the commercial community, for a job well and faithfully done.

Sir, a few days ago the hon. Member for the Aberdares deplored exaggerated accounts of the flight of capital from this country—the danger of much talk about so sensitive a subject. This was wise counsel but silence is not always possible or desirable. There is a polite conception that if there is a nasty odour about one hopes that the visitors will not notice it, but when that unpleasance persists, the plumber must be called in, visitors or no visitors. Although the Minister was very guarded I think he indicated that he, as our plumber, was on the job, and he undertook to inform us of any important changes I would ask him to do something more than that, and to make quite frequent reports to us, even when they are of a negative nature, because we learned in the Army the value of negative information about the enemy. Sir, I welcome the Minister's reaffirmation that Government has no intention of legislating to impede the flow of capital between this country and the sterling area. It was a most unhappy coincidence, and most deplorable, that in the same broadcast, and in the same newspaper as that in which the Minister's statement appeared, there was published the opinion of a Mr. Aidsings Kodoek, who was described as a party leader, counselling immediate currency restrictions. I do not suppose any local investor was very greatly influenced by such an opinion, but if the news item was published abroad, and it may well have been, the consequences could be quite serious. I can almost hear people saying, "Ah, this is a bit of Government smokescreen—look what one of the leaders of opinion thinks about the matter", and one can only ask, Sir, that African spokesmen, indeed all spokesmen, should "look before they leap", and ask, Sir, that the Press should be vigilant in exercising a self-discipline. Finally, we can ask that the Minister should miss no opportunity of reaffirming his assurances.

We all ought to pay—coming more specifically to the Budget—we all ought to pay for our folly, and so it is right that the Minister should make a "big mug" pay more than just a "little mug". No one will quarrel with the thought of streamlining the welcome to our tourists. No one will quarrel with the idea of protecting our local industries by tariff, providing the matter is done with selection and restraint. I believe that the operations of all local industries which receive such protection should be very frequently under review, and I would ask the Minister, Sir, to tell us what arrangements exist for that review. The Minister has courageously tackled the problem of the diesel vehicle. In the days when there were very few such vehicles, it could have been ignored, but they have grown in proportion to petrol vehicles year by year, and it was quite obvious that sooner or later something had to be done to remove that anomaly. It is most unfortunate that either the established diesel transport operators or their customers—and I see, Sir, that it is now likely to be their customers—will suffer. Indeed, it is unfortunate that the hon. Member for Central Nairobi will suffer. But I see no ready solution, and I could not support a return to the present position which is discriminatory against the petrol vehicle. Again, this brings me to my Railway Budget, Mr. Deputy Speaker, these new proposals look just like "a bit of cake" for the Railway. The effect on the road/rail differential will be required to be looked at very, very closely. The Minister has commented on the severe effect of the duty and the tax on light diesel fuel, upon the agriculturists and upon loggers. This, too, Sir, was mentioned, by the hon. Member for Ukamba. The Member for Ukamba thought that the Minister did mean an [Mr. Bumpas] extension of his refund to all agricultural use, but specifically in the HANSARD record it is recorded only as applicable to agricultural tractor use. I feel, Sir, that this, the omission of stationary engines on farms, must be purely an oversight. I can quote that in respect of quite a modest coffee farm where they employ a 56-horse power engine coupled to a water pump, that engine is consuming approximately 40 gallons of light diesel oil a day. Now clearly there should not be any consumption of an engine which will not traverse the roads, but if you take that tax at 35 cents, plus customs at 75 cents, a total of Sh. 1/10 a gallon, which is equivalent to Sh. 44 a day and over £60 a month. Sir, once again, I feel this must be purely an oversight, and I believe that the Minister will be able to find a solution.

I find little comfort, Sir, in the thought that more capital is entering Kenya than is leaving it, if that is the case, for we need it all. There is no inducement for the wealthy to build up locally taxed income in excess of their personal needs, and before ever the outflow was aggravated by political uncertainty there was an outflow for purely tax reasons, which has been mentioned year after year in this House, and restoration of the confidence alone will not stop that, whereas the thought of currency restriction appals everybody. Now, having ventured rather cautiously forth last year by removing death duties, the Treasury seems to have shuddered and retreated once again into its shell of orthodoxy. Our conditions are unique, and I believe require a unique solution. It is not beyond our experts to devise some form of tax relief at the top and a system of bonus on capital reimported and the earnings on such capital. After all we have voted relief in this House to Bermuda companies, and why should we treat them any better than our own people? I believe this is not a negation of the axiom that the rich must pay for the poor. It is merely a recognition that you do not "kill the goose that lays the golden eggs". Let us cosset those geese and I believe they will breed.

Now, how are we to bridge any temporary gaps? I doubt very much whether in practice they would arise. The hon. Member for Central Electoral Area has rather taken the "wind out of my sails" with the Motion that he gave notice of when the House assembled this afternoon. I will not repeat my lengthy arguments in debate in October, 1958, when this side battled unavailingly for a say in efficiency audit and management. In rejecting my Motion, the Chief Secretary very politely—and he usually is extremely polite—invited us to discuss with Government, at any time, how the existing machine could be made to work a little more effectively. Unfortunately, that invitation was tantamount to inviting somebody to review a book which you do not allow him to read. Government has very wisely embarked upon giving experience to some African Ministers against that day when the Unofficials will have to take greater responsibility. That time, Sir, has surely come to implement my previous request, and that is that a Standing Committee of this House be put into direct liaison with the Controller and Auditor-General, such committee to be parallel with the Public Accounts Committee. At best its members may have a useful and fresh contribution to make, and at worst they will acquire knowledge and experience. Sir, I understand that in these past few weeks the Rt. Hon. Mr. Butler has advocated the setting up of just such a committee in the Commons. Unhappily, I have not been able to get hold of a copy of his speech. Possibly Government will be able to do so. Perhaps, Sir, in 1958, we on this side, were not so obturate and unrealistic as Government made out. Is it too much to ask that the possibility may be reviewed? Actually, Sir, now that the Motion I have mentioned has been moved, we may have an opportunity, unless the Minister has something to say on the subject in this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

No further Member rose.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): No other hon. Member wishing to speak I will call on the hon. Minister to reply.

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I entirely see that you are absolutely right and that you have taught the whole House a lesson in discipline. I believe, however, that it would be most unfortunate for the House and the country if this debate were cut short at this stage. With the leave of the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and in the interests, as I believe, of this Legislature and of the country, I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

QUESTION "THAT THE DEBATE BE NOW ADJOURNED".

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I am not sure that the proper question should not be "That the debate be now adjourned", and with the Mover's permission I will propose that question. It is possible to debate that question.

Question proposed.

Mr. Alexander: I just wanted to say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that from the way in which the Acting Chief Secretary uttered his remarks it appeared it was aimed at this side of the House. I suggest that that discipline also applies to the Government side and that it is usual, year by year, for there to be on any particular day as many Government speakers as there are speakers on this side, because this is one of the few opportunities that we do get a chance to hear Backbenchers in this House, and I hope that his structure is aimed equally at his side of the House.

Wednesday, 4th May, 1960

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, this debate is commonly an opportunity for the other side of the House to raise, I think the word is "grievances", in other words to raise grievances before they vote supply. Certainly it is open to hon. Members on this side of the House also to raise grievances if they so think fit, but certainly from the point of view of the Front Bench on this side of the House it is pointless for us to put in speakers before, at any rate, a reasonable number of speakers on the other side of the House have had their say, and we then have an opportunity to reply to grievances, criticisms and the points raised to us. I certainly would not agree with the hon. gentleman opposite if he were to imply that Backbenchers on this side of the House should get up and save the debate from dying because there were no speakers on the other side of the House. If the debate runs its full course, and if Members on this side of the House wish to participate, there will certainly be another opportunity to do so, but I personally take the view that what is needed, and what this incident exemplifies, is discipline on the part of the other side of the House primarily to make use of the opportunities which this debate is designed to give them to raise matters calling for a reply by the Government. I have today thought it right, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to intervene to save them from their own reluctance to prepare themselves to participate in this debate as opportunity offers. I shall not do so again.

The question was put and carried.

ADJOURNMENT

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): That brings us to the end of the business on the Order Paper, and I therefore adjourn Council until 2.15 p.m. tomorrow afternoon, 4th May.

The House rose at fifty-five minutes past Five O'clock.

The House met at fifteen minutes past Two o'clock.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) in the Chair]

PRAYERS

NOTICE OF MOTION

MACLEOD PLAN FOR KENYA

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to propose a Motion before this House:—

THAT this House perforce approves the Macleod Plan as a lasting contribution to the economics and prosperity of Kenya, and thereunder accepts full responsibility for the lives and property of her citizens of all races.

MOTION

EXTENDED SITTINGS OF COUNCIL

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to move:—

THAT in order to conclude the business of the Financial Statement and the Estimates in time to complete other outstanding business by the end of June, the Council should sit on the morning and afternoon of Thursday 5th May and thereafter on the morning and afternoon of Wednesday in each week until the business of the Estimates is concluded.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, this is a suggestion of the Sessional Committee but, of course, the matter is up to the House. The Sessional Committee feel that we should have one double sitting a week during the business of the Estimates. If we are going to have time, without protracting these sittings of the Council unduly, to deal with other business, there are some 14 Bills that will be ready for the Council's attention by early June and, of course, no Private Member's business is taken until the Estimates are concluded and there are other important items of business awaiting the attention of this House before we conclude the current series of sittings. If, therefore, we do not have one double sitting a week, these sittings are likely to run on well into July and it is considered by the Sessional Committee that we should have one double sitting each week while the business of the Estimates is before the House so that we can then move on to the other outstanding business and conclude it before the end of June; added to which, of course, by incorporating a double sitting a week it does reduce the expenditure to the country of the sittings of this Council.

[The Acting Chief Secretary]

Sir, the Sessional Committee understood from the various representatives on it of the various sections in the House that Wednesdays were the most convenient days in the week for most Members on which to sit in the morning as well as the afternoon. A double sitting could not be arranged for today because there is another body sitting—or was another body sitting—this morning before which a number of the Members of this House were appearing. Therefore, it was the view of the Sessional Committee that we should have a double sitting this week tomorrow, that is to say, sit morning and afternoon tomorrow. Since the Sessional Committee reached these conclusions, however, I have had a number of representations, I do not think any decision as to the times and days of sitting of this House are likely to pass without representations from some Members, but there have been a number of representations to me, firstly to the effect that to sit tomorrow morning at the relatively short notice which it has been possible to give the House would be very inconvenient for a number of Members, and secondly that Wednesday mornings as a general rule are not convenient mornings on which to have a morning sitting of the House. The matter is before the House. It is for the House to resolve. The Sessional Committee has done its best with the views represented to it by those Members on it which represent the various sections of the House or are supposed to and unless and until any Member decides to move an amendment to this Motion which finds favour with the majority of the House, I beg to move the Motion standing in my name. There will be a free vote.

Mr. Webb seconded.

Question proposed.

Mr. Slade (Specially Elected Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I sympathize with the Sessional Committee in their effort to proceed with despatch in this Session and to save the country money, but I must oppose this Motion. We have tried these morning sittings before and they have not worked, and I do not see how they can work without some detriment to the other interests of the country and the Members of this Council. We all have a great deal of work to do outside this Council on committees of this Council or Government committees, quite apart from our own private affairs where we have to earn the income that membership of the Legislative Council does not completely provide.

I am sure that the Ministers I see sitting here opposite have a lot of work to do in the mornings as well as sitting here. For these reasons, Sir, the fact is that a lot of us just cannot come in the mornings, particularly on notice as short as one month. I believe that most of us have our diaries completely full for the month ahead, having regard to sittings in the afternoons and what we have to fit in in the mornings.

So, Sir, I oppose this Motion, and as far as I am concerned I am not going to move an amendment, but I would rather suggest that the Sessional Committee think again; but I am quite prepared to sit longer in the evenings, when there is a choice between social enjoyment and getting on with the job here. If it gets too boring I can go outside. But one just cannot fit morning sittings with one's actual obligations. So, Sir, I suggest that we propose this Motion and ask the Sessional Committee to think again.

I am glad to hear that this will be a free vote.

Proposals of this kind by the Sessional Committee have been put before this Council and passed without real support of individual Members. If there is a case of any doubt at all, Sir, I suggest that we have a division.

Mr. ole Tipis (Central Rift): While sympathizing with the decision of the Sessional Committee, I would like to try and appeal to the House as a whole to change the minds of the Sessional Committee, in respect of the Motion before the House just now. I personally see no necessity for the introduction of such a Motion because I feel it is only fair and reasonable that hon. Members on both sides of the House should be given ample time and opportunity of scrutinizing the Financial Statement and the Estimates very, very thoroughly so as to enable them to air their misgivings and bring to light any grievances affecting the national income of our country. Since at the same time this is the only time we have the liberty of checking on the extravagances on the part of the Government with regard to the Estimates of Expenditure, I strongly feel that any move on the part of the Government to curtail that liberty is not justified and is quite unfair.

Now, having said that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think I would be excused if I may add that after all we on this side of the House, especially the African Elected Members, gave very serious consideration to four of our colleagues crossing the Floor of the House knowing full well that such a move would in a way reduce our strength on this side, but nevertheless we thought that in the interests of our country as a whole it was a move in the right direction and we gave them our wholehearted blessings and support up to this day, and as such I think the Government side has been strengthened so much that they should not try to weaken our side in this important Budget.

[Mr. ole Tipsis]

Now, I sincerely hope that the Government and all Members of this House will be very reasonable to see that we do not try in any way to rush the Budget Debate in any manner whatsoever. We are not afraid of hard work. We can work day and night. But surely, at the same time, when it comes to figures and all the implications of what is involved in the Budget then surely I think we should rather be slow and have time to go through the Estimates very, very carefully. It is only good and fair for the Government, as well as for the country as a whole.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think, in all fairness, we should ask the Mover to withdraw the Motion and refer it back to the Sessional Committee.

I beg to oppose.

The Minister for Information and Broadcasting (Mr. Harris): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I hope from the remarks of the last hon. Member that spoke that we do not have to assume in future that because four African Members have crossed the Floor every African Member on the other side would like to speak for four-fourteenths longer than he has done in the past.

Sir, the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, suggested that the Sessional Committee should have another look at this problem, and so has the last speaker.

We would like, Sir, in the Sessional Committee to get an indication of the wishes of the House instead of saying they do not like this particular Motion, and could we possibly have some way in which we could reconcile the expense of this Council sitting interminably and saying the same things year after year for hour and hour on end with the right that they have of expressing their views. That is the problem that the Sessional Committee have tried to solve, and might I, Sir, get the views of some of the Members on the other side to the possibility of sitting on Monday afternoons so that at least we get another day's sitting in a week.

Capt. Hamley (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would like to correct the hon. African Member on the other side when he keeps talking about hoping that the Government will not restrict discussion and so on and so on. There is no question of the Government at all restricting discussion. This is a decision of the Sessional Committee, and the Sessional Committee consists of representatives from all sides of the House.

Mr. ole Tipsis rose.

Capt. Hamley: All right, wait a minute. The other thing I think the Opposition should know is that we are already sitting half an hour longer each day, and they have got this matter in their hands if they want it, they have the right to ask for an extra five days. If they like to consider those five days as dealt with in instalments by the extra half hour, and they enter into a pact not to ask for those extra five days, we get just as long a debate on the Budget without any of the complications of double sittings.

Mrs. Shaw: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would like to support the last speaker's suggestion very much. I do agree with those who have spoken either for or against this Motion, that Government officers are required really in their offices in the morning, because I understand the Ministers are very overburdened, and in view of the fact that they are very shortly to lose their excellent private secretaries, with experience in organization they will need to be in their offices more often in the mornings, if the Government machine is to run efficiently. Also, I deplore any thought of Monday, I make a special plea here for up-country Members, because it is very difficult, and as it is once every month we are forced—the European Elected Members, that is—to come down on a Sunday and give up our Sunday afternoon so that we can meet E.E.M.O. on Monday morning, and I do think any further interference with our Sundays and week-ends would be rather deplorable.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): I do not really see why my hon. colleague, the Minister for Information should appeal to the other side only to express their point of view on this matter. I am not a Member of the Sessional Committee, and I would certainly like to express a point of view directly contrary to what the Sessional Committee has expressed in this Motion. I would like to say this, Sir, that in my own view there should not be any morning sittings. Everyone in this House has a considerable amount to do and Ministers as well as others. I believe that hurried legislation without thought and without contemplation is the worst thing this House could possibly try to pass, and even if it does mean more expense to the Government, I am sure in the long run the country would be better off if legislation was properly considered in proper time rather than hurried through in the way that has been suggested by the Sessional Committee.

However, Sir, if the majority of the House do consider that there should be a morning sitting in a week, then I would suggest the most convenient day would be Thursday for the morning sitting, not Monday afternoon for an extra afternoon sitting, nor Wednesday, and therefore I would appeal to the House because Wednesday is

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] traditionally and rightly and correctly the day on which the Council of Ministers sit, and it does upset a considerable number of departments if that day is altered, and I would therefore suggest Thursday morning if it is necessary to have one at all. Sir, I am in rather an awkward position because if we go to a vote on this particular Motion without an opportunity of an amendment being put I do not quite know what the result would be, as I would like to be able to put an amendment, but on the other hand I do not want to waste the time of the House if the hon. Acting Chief Secretary is prepared to withdraw the Motion, then there is no need for amendment, but if he is not prepared to withdraw the Motion, then I think there is a need for an amendment, so I am in rather an awkward position. But I have my colleague, the Minister for Agriculture, on my left, who feels almost the same as I do, and I have no doubt he will move an amendment if the Motion is not withdrawn.

Anyway, Sir, as the Motion stands, I oppose it.

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): On a point of explanation Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am not prepared to withdraw this Motion. This uncertainty and difference of opinion is a running sore which has got to be stemmed, and the Sessional Committee is entitled to have some guidance from this House.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, when the Acting Chief Secretary sat down the first time it was confirmed from the other side that there would be a free vote. When I heard that I felt well satisfied because what I found in the past, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is when this House is confronted with subjects and decisions as profound as this one, that we can always rely on the Backbenches to come to the—(Inaudible.)

That, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is what they are going to do today, and this Motion will be rejected and that means a clear reference back to the Sessional Committee. I do not think this House need do any more, but if I may make a constructive suggestion, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is this—and I take my lead from the debates we have had on the Adjournment Motion in this House, I believe they are some of the best and most profitable debates we have had. Sometimes on very weighty subjects that are dealt with in half an hour. In half an hour's debate, and what I would suggest is that the speakers in this particular Budget debate be limited to fifteen minutes, and if necessary, if there is to be one speaker with a longer time from this side of the House, I would suggest that an hour, one hour, is adequate for anybody who wishes to have that particular right from this side of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to oppose the Motion.

Mr. Khamisi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would oppose the Motion, but at the same time I would like to oppose the statement made by the last speaker when he took further steps to try and restrict the speakers by suggesting they should be only allowed to speak for fifteen minutes. We think that even the thirty minutes are much too short, particularly now as we, on this side, have already lost four of our Members to the other side. We would like to cover the time which the other Members would have taken. Therefore, Sir, I, for one, would like to oppose this Motion because I feel that Members of this House sitting here morning and afternoon are not in a position to make any contributions at all to the debate because by the time it is four o'clock everybody is so tired that all the people are outside in the lounge, and there are only half a dozen people in the House. Therefore, I think this Motion should be withdrawn, and therefore I oppose it.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, with your permission I would like to move an amendment, if I may. I would like to propose that the fourth line of the Motion be taken out in its entirety, and the word "Wednesday" in the fifth line be turned into "Thursday" and to be added at the end of the Motion, "except on the morning of Thursday, 5th May". The amendment would read as follows: "That in order to conclude the business of the Financial Statement and the Estimates in time to complete other outstanding business by the end of June, the Council should sit on the morning and afternoon of Thursday in each week until the business of the Estimates is concluded, except on the morning of Thursday, 5th May."

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I might take this opportunity to draw the attention of hon. Members to the fact that Standing Order 34 provides that the proposer of an amendment shall, before moving it, hand the amendment in writing signed by himself to the Clerk.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: On a point of information, Sir, am I in order to put that the Motion be now put?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): It is not possible. The first thing we have to do (when we have the amendment in writing) is to find a seconder, then the amendment has to be proposed, and then the amendment is open to debate. After it has been debated it is open to you to propose that the Mover be called on to reply. We have several preliminary steps to go through first.

Is there a seconder for this amendment?

The Minister for Housing, Common Services, Probation and Approved Schools (Mr. Amalemba) seconded.

Question proposed.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: I do not think my remarks applied to the original Motion, but to the amendment.

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would be content myself, and I think that it would probably be agreed by the Sessional Committee, if this amendment were acceptable to the House. It does mean that we would be losing one day's sitting this week, and that perhaps in itself is not vitally important unless the house were prepared to sit say on Tuesday morning of next week in order to make up for it. I do not think that the suggestion that we should have evening sittings to make up the time, which emanated from my hon. and learned friend, Mr. Slade, is a suitable one.

I entirely concede that there is the option—in fact perhaps that is the objection to it—to Members to attend to the debates in this House or to the social amusements elsewhere in the precincts. Experience has indicated that when that choice confronts Members, there are a number of them that choose, with a certain excessive enthusiasm, the amusement. In so far as the suggestion has been made of an intention in this Motion to weaken the other side or to deny them their legitimate opportunity to study the Budget and to speak on it in an informed manner, I very strongly deprecate that suggestion because there is no such intention at all. At the request of the other side we did not embark on this Budget debate immediately following the Budget Speech, which is the normal parliamentary procedure, and yesterday evening indicated fairly clearly that the purpose of the adjournment sought by the other side—namely to prepare their speeches for this debate—was a somewhat specious one, because apparently the bulk of Members took no advantage of the intervening period. I am prepared to accept the amendment.

Sir Alfred Vincent (Nominated (non-Government): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not like the original Motion and I do not like the amendment—not very much, for one reason. I think—I am not here to criticize the Sessional Committee or even the House—that knowing the Budget debate was coming on, surely we were entitled to have some notice of this procedure, then those of us for whom any day is as bad as any other as far as engagements are concerned, if we had a month's notice it would have been better. Wednesday is a bad day although I did not think Wednesday was entirely inappropriate because sometimes it does not really matter if the Council of Ministers is interfered with, does it. But as far as the "principle is concerned I think that Mr. Slade made a point that if he can have a little more notice it would help, I am the last one to deprecate the saving of money of the taxpayers by more frequent sittings or longer sittings in a day of this Council, but, Sir, under the circumstances I would like the Sessional Committee to note the objection made by the hon. Member and myself which will enable us to work in with Government plans for a debate of this nature, although in future we may not be here in a Budget debate.

Mr. Hassan: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Members of this House are responsible to appoint Members representing different groups in the Sessional Committee and their objection to something that we passed in the Sessional Committee was a matter they should have taken up with the Member for their group. It has been found that we barely have a quorum when we consider such matters in the Sessional Committee and quite a number of Members representing different groups never turn up, and with a view to shaping the work of the Budget and to see that we were not dragging on this Budget Session to the middle of July. We had to find a way out and if we could find another day a week to complete the work before the end of June, I personally have no objection whatsoever to the amendment if the day agreed is Thursday instead of Wednesday each week, it makes no difference except so far as it suits the convenience of the Members of this House, and so far as I am concerned as a member of the Sessional Committee I have no objection to accepting the amendment.

Mr. Rogers (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I oppose the Motion. I of course listened with great acclaim to the graceful compliments poured upon the heads of the Back-benchers by my hon. friend the Member for Nairobi West and I am glad to tell him that I agree with him. I do not think, myself, that there should be any increase in the hours we work in a day because I feel that there are few people who already have not, perhaps, even too much work to do as we are working at the present time, and this includes Ministers of course, and certainly includes the Back-benchers. We have many other interests to which we have to devote some attention. It might be said that we ought to abandon these interests. I would suggest that it would be a bad policy, first of all over other public interests I think, perhaps, assist the work—we can do on the Council and, furthermore, many of us are in fact running businesses and we just have to eat. Unless—despite views of the Minister for Information we still have to eat—and unless we can spend some time selling our cigarettes or our furniture or attending to our interests at the Bar it is very difficult to see how we can continue to do this delectable thing, eating, I feel that we should leave the sessions as they are at the present time and towards the end of this Budget Annual Session we can then review the matter.

Mr. Pandya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, as a country Member, I support the proposal that there should be one extra morning sitting during the week. I cannot, Sir, understand the objection of the Members from Nairobi, the only objection they seem to have is that they have got businesses and they have to eat. Well, Sir, we still do the same outside Nairobi! We have businesses in the Coast Province and many other provinces where the Members come from, and we do eat, and would like to have extra morning sittings so that the length of the Session is curtailed and we can get longer time at home. I wish some of the Nairobi Members would understand the problems of the Members from outside Nairobi and take into account our objections. I would like them to seriously consider our problems. I support the amendment which has been moved by my hon. friend the Minister for Agriculture.

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am not sure what we are speaking about because we appear to be raising the issue to what should come first. Members have a duty and a responsibility to the country that cannot be treated lightly. But it would appear to me that Members are putting the interests of this Council and the country in a secondary position to their own personal interests. Those who are thinking of their own businesses should not be here at all. In some countries Members of Legislature are required to sit for hours and sometimes throughout the night. But we come here and all we are required to do is to sit two hours a day and Members begin to complain they cannot have an extra sitting. The Sessional Committee, in considering this matter, was particularly interested, especially in regard to those Members running their own businesses, to give them more time for their businesses, to end the Session late in June instead of letting it go on into July. This was a very appropriate consideration for those Members who are very keen on business and other eating affairs. If this is rejected, the Session must go on much longer in the year and it is those with businesses which are going to suffer. I would like to suggest very seriously that we deal with this rather awkward situation more realistically, and in my view I do not see the difference between the original Motion and the Amendment, apart from the suggestion that perhaps tomorrow is too soon. So far as the objection to Wednesday is concerned, if it is a question of conflict with the Government business, the Chairman of the Sessional Committee must have taken into account the whole question of the Council of Ministers, and for a Minister of Government to raise this question because of the Council of Ministers' meeting suggests that the Chief Secretary was not taking seriously the meeting, a point I would find very difficult to accept. Thus, this debate is becoming a rather confusing affair, and I would like to support the original Motion and if the Government do not like it, then I support the amendment.

Major Roberts (Rift Valley): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, some of us are not so fortunate as the hon. Member for Nairobi Area. We have to attend to our businesses in order to be able to afford to come to Legislative Council at all! I would like to remind the House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that if the suggestion made by my hon. friend for Nairobi West was implemented we would now have completed three speeches on this debate and saved the country quite a lot of money.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to oppose the Amendment.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I will put the amendment, which is that the Motion be amended by deleting all the words after the words "this Council shall sit on the" and by substituting therefore the words "mornings and afternoons of Thursday of each week until the business of the Estimates is concluded, except that Council shall not sit on the morning of Thursday, 5th May".

The question was put and Council divided.

Muhoya, Nurmohamed, Major Roberts, Messrs. Rogers, Sagoo, Shatry, Mrs. Shaw, Messrs. Slade, Smith, Tipis, Travadi, Usher, Sir Alfred Vincent.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): The original Motion remains the subject for debate and I will propose the original Motion again in accordance with Standing Orders.

Question of the original Motion again proposed.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: According to Standing Order 64, Sir, I now propose that the proposer be asked to reply.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I do not consider that this Motion is an abuse of the proceedings of this House. Have we got a Second?

Major Roberts seconded.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is little for me to add to what has already been said. We will now vote on the main Motion and I do ask hon. Members to bear in mind that they are in effect voting on the issue of whether or not we shall have double sittings during the Budget sitting. If they vote against it, they bear the responsibility for the extra expenditure to the country which is involved. That is entirely a matter for them and their consciences.

Hon. Member rose.

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): I am not giving way. That is entirely a matter for their consciences. I personally endorse the view that has been expressed previously that the business of this House within reasonable limits—and I consider this to be a reasonable limit and in the interests of the country—should take precedence over personal convenience. I commend this Motion as it stands to the House and I would only conclude with the observation that had I foreseen the outcome of today's proceedings I would certainly not have intervened yesterday to prevent the debate on the Budget collapsing for lack of any Member on the other side being prepared to speak.

I beg to move.

DIVISION

The question was put.

Mrs. Shaw: On a point of order, is it in order for Mr. Deputy Speaker to grant a division unless six hon. Members rise in their places.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): No. That is one of the occasions on which I am bound to award a Division. The other occasion is when I consider that there is reasonable doubt as to the outcome of the Vote in question.

The question was negated by 43 votes to 17.

AYES: Messrs. Butter, Griffith-Jones, Harris, Harrison, Hassan, Dr. Kiano, Messrs. MacKenzie, Mangat, Mboya, Sheikh Muhashay, Messrs. Odigma, Pandya, Rubia, Tyson, Wainwright, Dr. Walker, Mr. Webb.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY.

MOTION

THAT MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

Resumption of Debate Adjourned on 3rd March, 1960

Lord Portsmouth (Nominated (non-Government)): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I should like to add my more personal need of congratulations to the Minister on his first Budget. Sir, I think he can be especially congratulated on a local uniqueness in that he has not budgeted for a deficit even if he has budgeted very close. I think also the Budget showed that it was preceded by the same spade-work and thoroughness which we have had in years past.

Sir, I would like to turn to one of the earlier things he mentioned which was the Fiscal and Economic Committee on the High Commission. I welcome this and I think it is of the very greatest importance. My own belief is that the High Commission in almost all of its ramifications is of immense value to all the three territories and Zanzibar and I would like at this moment to say a few words about the East African Research Organization. I think that this particular Organization is one of the most valuable things in the whole of the tropical world for the benefit of future mankind. I know a good deal about its work because I have been privileged to work on the Research Council in the last few years and have been connected with many things they have dealt with. Now, Sir, we cannot, in my view, afford to let that work run down. The work that has gone on so far has been the preliminary work from which great results are about to spring, and if we do away with the work that has been done already it will be an incalculable dis-service to the future; and, Sir, it is work which is essentially non-overlapping, as I know very well, with the other work which is done individually in the three territories. Kenya's Veterinary Laboratory at Kabete is of value to all three territories, as is the Grassland Research Station at Kitale, but that is not work that has been overlapping with the work that the High Commission is doing. Let me equally say, Sir, that the value of, say, the Timber Research Utilization Organization at Moshi, or the work that is being done in Uganda on trace elements, is of equal value to us in Kenya. There is nothing that we do in these three territories that does not impinge on something else, and therefore, Sir, I feel very strongly that it is the time to try and forget the interterritorial rivalries and the interterritorial doubts on these matters.

We have, I think, all been guilty from time to time of taking too parochial a view. I happen to know that on one particular bit of vital research where one job would do, in order to satisfy the three territories three similar research works have been put into operation; and so this increases the expense enormously. But Sir, it may very well be argued that because of the fact that the team at Magua is carrying out research Kenya is collecting the benefit. But there is one point I would like to put here, Sir, that if you do not collect a team in one centre or another preferably in a centre that is accessible to all, and keep them there, their work, the value of their work is halved by the fact that they have got to be carrying it out in every territory far apart. There is no question in all the research that I have been connected with in a very long farming life, that the research workers knock sparks, as it were, off each other, to produce the results. It is not the same with isolated spasmodic work done down in the bush here and there.

Now, Sir, the reason I have gone into some detail on this is because I hope that we may find the wisdom in this Fiscal and Economic Committee to put this story not only for research but also for many other things into true perspective in order to end interterritorial rivalries on these occasions. I think that so many schemes today must be carried out on an interterritorial basis. That, I think, even goes for a good many of the things we may search to do for unemployment. I shall return to that later but I would like, as an example, to say that on my own farm there are peoples working for me from at least four tribes in Uganda and also from another tribe which constantly crosses and recrosses the border.

Now, Sir, the problem here is the same for all of us. We cannot, I think, today, afford to have non-prosperous neighbours. It does not do any of us any good if our next door neighbour, Sir, is not prosperous and similarly it does not do the other territories any good were prosperity to be only ours. Now, Sir, this, I think, is the moment to stress this, because I think a good many of the doubts expressed in the other territories were due to the fear that the High Commission, because it was mainly based for one reason or another in Kenya, would be dominated by the settler complex, if I may call it so. But surely, Sir, whatever else may be said for or against that extraordinary farrago of affairs which has emerged in some fairly comprehensible form now from Lancaster House whatever else may be said for or against that at least it should have, I should say, done something to dispel the fact that there need no longer be this fear among the other territories, whether justified or unjustified in the past. Therefore this is the moment, I think to urge that we should review our whole line of progress and operation within the three territories in order to make—not politically, I am not arguing about that at all—a viable economic unit of the three territories.

Sir, I would enormously welcome the success of the Rufiji Valley Irrigation Scheme if and when this takes place, just as I would welcome a wood pulp industry in Nyanza. Naturally because it be close to my home the latter scheme would be closer to my heart.

So, Sir, the same thing would be true if in the interests both of business and unemployment, between all the territories, we had a main tarmac between Kenya and the Rhodesias. Letters to the newspapers in Tanganyika have alleged that they would merely be subsidizing Kenya. Well, in the past Kenya has subsidized, by amalgamation, the railway system between the two territories, which was very doubtful from the business point of view. Sir, we should not criticize one or another but we should combine to make each other's prosperity.

Now, Sir, if I may for a moment return to unemployment, and forestry—I know that everyone will smile here because forestry has always been one of my babies—and I am only talking about it now because I expect it will be extremely doubtful if it is discussed under the Vote headings.

Sir, I am delighted that my hon. friend the Minister for Finance has seen fit to take, at least two small items out of my previous schemes over the last two years on unemployment and put them into the practical Budget. The first one of those, Sir, is the scheme to absorb another 1,000 families in the forests in places where work has got behind owing to the Emergency.

But, Sir, I do suggest that he has fallen short in this matter in not having followed the previous suggestion for which schemes are already drawn up. This is that we should have a road scheme in the forest, plus a firebreak scheme, which would add to employment considerably, and which is the only possible insurance premium to pay for loss in the forest by fire. It is really because we have had now some four or five very wet years, that we have not had serious forest fires, and it is ridiculous to build up something worth millions of pounds unless you are going to have a form of practical insurance by having firebreaks and roads to fight the fires. And therefore, Sir, I do urge him to reconsider that at the earliest moment when money is available for further unemployment schemes.

Secondly, Sir, it is probably quite true that the Kikuyu tribe are by far the best tribe for practical afforestation, because they know the job, but work of this sort, roads and firebreaks, can give work to the other tribes as well, who are equally capable of undertaking that sort of job, and it is not only in the immediate areas of the Central Province that unemployment is bad. It is not only there that the problems are. It is throughout the tribes in many parts of Nyanza as well as the Coast.

Now, Sir, he made a comparison, the Minister, between the relative cheapness of employing a thousand families, at a cost of £100,000, in the forest as against the same cost of employing a thousand families on road work, which was, I think, £100,000 to £300,000—if I remember rightly, Sir, I do beg all of those who are looking at unemployment problems to remember that the hand came before the plough, and that the plough was pulled by oxen long before it was pulled by horses, and long before it was pulled by tractors after horses. The railways of this country were largely built as regards earthwork, not by bulldozers or dumpers, or big machinery, but they were built with kerais on the head, and I cannot believe that a little ingenuity could not, not retrogressively, but for the sake of giving better employment and just as economically, on many jobs on the road, jobs of that sort, building dams, etc., make a far greater use of hand labour. I know this from my own experience on the farm. I have to use big machinery because I have got from time to time to catch the weather and get the job done quickly, but my accounts show that the work done by ox teams is just about half the cost of the work done by big machinery with all the wear and tear and repair and waste in this country. Furthermore, what we do by our own hand and with the minimum of machinery does not require a large import for which we have got to pay afterwards. There is a point of view which has grown up, and it is almost impossible, even with one's own manager one finds that as soon as he has got a machine you must never do anything the other way. I have often noticed on other people's farms, and sometimes on my own, that the use of machinery was absolutely wasted because it was undertaken on places where hand labour was much quicker and did not involve heavy repair bills which the other did, and I do ask that in the whole contemplation of unemployment the economy of the hand and the very small minor tools will be taken into account and really will be gone into and not have the present modern view that you have a machine and you have to use it and the hand is of no use.

Sir, I will not say much more. I think it is no use my going on labouring what I have said in previous debates on unemployment on the means and methods we might use, but I do put out the suggestion once again, that if we can leave out the individual schemes which we have undertaken well within our own territories, if we can seriously think of our development which will be, as the Minister so wisely said in this debate, which will be schemes for employment, not merely to succour unemployment, but to plan employment which will make new employment, which I think is the right way to look at it. Then we should look at it, if possible, on an interterritorial basis, but it is not only thinking in terms of our three territories here. The hon. Member knows very well, that if you go and ask for a £700 overdraft to farm your land, you are cut down probably to £400, and looked at with great suspicion. If you go and ask for £100,000 overdraft you are probably likely to get the lot.

Mr. Alexander: Quite right.

Lord Portsmouth: And that applies on any scheme which we may have to finance. If we can present a bold, imaginative scheme, which takes account of the needs of all three territories and development simultaneously there, then probably, I think, we are going to catch the imagination of the world, and probably because we have asked for so much the finances will be much greater.

Sir, now what do we really need, outside all the froth of words and the doubts and difficulties of our constitutions and the manoeuvring for a position which it contains, we have got to deal with unemployment. We have got to deal with it part and parcel. Quite apart from that there is resettlement, there is the development of our land on a much bolder scale than we have done in the past, and that includes irrigation where we have not thought of it before. We have got to deal with education in such a practical way that it makes a whole body of people capable of dealing with the task in life from the very simple jobs to the very complex ones. Too often we have thought of education in terms of educating an army of generals and leaving out any privates whom they can command.

And, finally, Sir, we have got to agree amongst ourselves, and there is general agreement all round that these are the things that matter. These are the things which if you are going to have racial co-operation, we can agree on, and we can become closer. Sir, in these days of lightning strikes and so forth I remember a story that is now so old that it has probably been forgotten by Members of this House. Three people had rooms on the 30th floor of an hotel in New York and they arrived back at about three o'clock in the morning, having had rather a good party, to find that there had been a lightning strike of liftmen and there was no way, except by the good old foot, of getting up to their rooms, so they decided that they would while away the time—because, these being Americans, the use of the foot for 30 stories was quite unthinkable—they would while away the time by each one telling for ten floors the best stories that he knew. The first man got up rather briskly up the first ten floors and he did not run out of stories. The second man got up to about the 18th or 19th floor and was really flagging, and had to get up to the 20th. When they got to the 20th, the third man said: Well, folks, you have got me beat. I have run right out of stories, but there is only one thing I know, and that is going to amuse you. We left the keys down on the ground floor."

Mr. Deputy Speaker, that is not only to lighten the mood of the House, but it is to point the moral. That many maneno without a key does not lead you very far, and the keys are the things which I have been trying to enumerate above. Earlier today we had a debate and several divisions which made me think that if a man, according to the old saw, the man who could make two blades of grass grow where one grew before, then the greatest benefactor of mankind was he. The second greatest benefactor of mankind is the man who can make one word do where two did before. And, Sir, if I may paraphrase a very sound and characteristically modest peroration of the Minister for Finance in his Budget Speech, I would like to say that we do indeed need slow tongues. We need wise brains and warm hearts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Jones (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to add my congratulations to those of the previous speaker, and I particularly do so because I think, like everybody else, it was a nice, short and not too bitter a Budget, and when he has finished with it I am quite certain he will get the money he is looking for, with perhaps just a little bit to spare.

Sir, my job today really is to thank the absent Member for the Nairobi Area for the very charming remarks he made about the Transport Licensing Board yesterday. We do not get many of those, and on behalf of myself, personally, and of the other members individually, and the Board collectively, I thank him for them. But I do want to enlarge and clarify the picture which he drew of the Board's activities.

First, I would like to say that we are all of us very sympathetic to the African aspirations in the provision of transport, and we sympathize with them too because a great part of that field is still filled by those pioneers who originally provided the transport. Under the terms of the Transport Licensing Ordinance, however sympathetic we may feel towards these aspirations, we are not permitted to hand out licences, except with regard to the public interest. The public interest is defined in the Ordinance as being the interest not only of the people requiring transport, but of the people providing it, and those people who are already providing it have rights, entrenched rights, if you like. Now, the Board, as I say, in the public interest, has to consider the interests of those people, and I shall be producing figures shortly to show just how we have done that. But at the same time these figures will also show that wherever it has been possible to give licences to African applicants, those licences have been issued. I should like to have gone back in our figures for two years, but we do not keep our figures on a racial basis, and the Transport Licensing Board this morning put in some heavy work getting out figures for the year 1959, and I should like to give them to the House. They have been extracted on a racial basis, and I think the House will find them interesting.

During 1959 19 licences were issued to Europeans—19. And 11 of those were to tourist organizers to take people into the game parks and places of scenic beauty. Forty-five licences were given to Asians and two of those were for tourist firms. Twenty-two licences were given to Arabs, and 150 licences to Africans.

Mr. Odiga: Very few in proportion to population.

Mr. Jones: I heard what the hon. Member for Nyanza Central said, and I would like to take out the number of licences which were issued in Nyanza for his information. They were quite plentiful because they lack rail facilities there.

Now, the Member for Nairobi Area complained, or rather pointed out, I do not think he did complain, I think he is rather sympathetic to us really, but he pointed out that Africans were given licences for forest roads, reserve roads, back routes and so on, and they never got on to the main profitable routes, and so we analysed these figures down a bit further. The Europeans' licences were either for tourist routes or for forest and backwood roads. The Asian applicants were given three licences on the Fort Hall road. They were given none on the Limuru road into Nairobi, none on the Machakos road into Nairobi, none on the Nguro road into Nairobi. They were given three, as I say, on the Fort Hall road. The Arab licences were all for roads which you might call "P.W.D. roads", I suppose. But if you analyse the African ones, 25 licences were given on the Fort Hall road, 18 were given on the Limuru road, and one was given between Nakuru and Kisumu. No other licence was issued out of Nairobi on the Nakuru-Kisumu road, except for small taxis.

I think, Sir, you will agree that it is not fair now to say that if Europeans and Asians apply for licences they automatically get them and they stand in the way of Africans getting licences. I can say, Sir, quite categorically, that although it is true that Asians and Europeans file objections whenever an African applies for a licence over a route they are already operating themselves, that, Sir, is only natural. They have the right to do that, and they are only exercising their right. But I say without fear of contradiction that in order to help Africans get licences or anyhow get to work on a filled route they have many times shown their willingness to bring those Africans along with them by giving them the use of their workshops and as I hope that Members for the Coast will know, they have, the Europeans and the Asians and the Africans, they have got a joint organization for operating bus transport on the Mtarikani Mombasa road. It is in that way, I feel, Sir, that we can gradually get Africans occupying the most complete position in the bus passenger transport of this country.

Sir, these figures are available for anybody who wishes to see them, and I shall show them to the Member for the Nairobi Area.

Sir, before I sit down, and dealing more particularly with what the Member for Finance said, I have had experience in many parts of the world on the matter of taxing petroleum. Sir, taxing petroleum is a very great temptation for any Minister for Finance man or Chancellor, because it is easy to collect, it costs nothing, and like tobacco it is a commodity the consumption of which is increasing all the time, and the tendency, therefore, is to anticipate a surplus from the revenue which you anticipate on a petroleum tax. That usually goes a long way to being right, but there is no doubt that when you tax a source of energy, and especially in a country that has not got its own prime mover, unless you can call the Jinja Nairobi electricity supply one, if you tax the only prime mover that it has got on importation, then you restrict the economy. You may not notice it, but in fact people do economize on their energy forces, and eventually you "kill the goose that lays the egg". In this particular case, Sir, I think that the tax is legitimate, quite, quite legitimate so long as the people on whom it is imposed, and the people who pay it, are allowed to pass it on and collect it from the public. It is a legitimate tax, but it is a source of revenue on which we ought not to depend too much.

Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Pandya (Eastern Electoral Area): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think the Minister can look back with satisfaction on his maiden Budget, as it has been acclaimed by the man in the street with a great sense of relief, and indeed has won him many friends, although there are, Sir, one or two very strong reservations on the measures of revenue that have been proposed by him. This apparent relief has been more marked and noticeable because of the special and abnormal conditions of the last few years. We have had new taxes year after year and this has conditioned people to look on the Budget day with rather fear than favour. However, Sir, I would like to join the Minister in extending the thanks to the Permanent Secretary and the other people and officers who have produced such excellent figures for us to foresee the progress that has been made in the economic sphere, and the figures which have been given to us so clearly including the Development Estimates for the years 1960/63. I would, Sir, at this early stage, also like to express our gratitude to Her Majesty's Government for the very generous and liberal grants and loans that were given to this country during the dark days of the Emergency, and indeed the recent contribution towards the expenditure of the East African Land Forces.

Now, Sir, let us examine what are the highlights of the proposals that have been made by the Minister. Firstly, it has taken action to remove certain anomalies that have existed in the financial structure of this Colony, and which have been clearly stated in the Financial Statement.

Secondly, to my mind the most important, is that the infant industries are put in a privileged position by the imposition of protective tariffs. They will now be able to increase their production and thus contribute to a better economy in this country. It is also in my opinion an encouragement to those who wish to invest in this country, that Government is always willing to help those who help themselves, not only for the benefit of the individual, but for the greater benefit of the country as a whole.

Thirdly, Sir, the vital importance of tourism to this country has been recognized by the proposals, a point to which I will refer later. Fourthly, there has been the controversial diesel tax to which I shall also refer later.

Now, Sir, the economic survey is a most welcome addition among the many papers which are circulated to Members at Budget time, and I think it is very clearly emphasized that last year was a much better year than a few years before and that there was considerable improvement all round in the economic condition of this country. Indeed agricultural production was on the increase and while exports have increased, imports remained at a fairly stable level and there are already indications that the first months of this year were showing a tendency towards improvement which would immediately benefit the country. This should not make us complacent, on the contrary it should make us vigilant, for not only are we aware that we are repudiantly dependent on exports of agriculture and that again on a very few commodities, particularly coffee and tea, and these commodities are facing very strong competition from other countries in the world markets. Now coffee, of course, Sir, is our greatest earner, but the recent tendencies of the prices do not encourage us to depend on this commodity for future stable conditions. Indeed we have, by greater efforts and sacrifices, got to arrest the tendency towards an adverse balance of trade. More production under the present conditions will only mean that we will pay to a larger extent for our imports which we do require, firstly, Sir, for our manufacturing industries and indeed for the consumer goods whose demand is bound to rise as there is a tendency towards increased wages as well as the needs of the people are on the increase from time to time.

The Minister in his masterly review referred to the loss of confidence and the outflow of capital. Now his statement in London and his current references helped considerably to improve the situation and the mood in this country. He has given the facts boldly, he has admitted that there is a certain outflow of capital, but indeed if there had been any indication of fright and panic, the outflow would have been much greater than has been indicated by him. What is responsible for the outflow in my opinion, Sir, is the irresponsible statements of many of our leaders which have created these unsteady conditions. I wonder, Sir, if these leaders realize that these have created rather ill-effects, not only in this territory but also in other neighbouring territories? Instead of such shaky speeches which have tended to undermine confidence in this country, we need the confidence of the type that was given in the speech of the Minister for Commerce and Industry. I feel, Sir, that this should be displayed more prominently by newspapers than in some of the irresponsible statements which have been made in this country. The Minister, Sir, has done well to show the people that in a country of this nature, it would be futile to put currency restrictions which indeed would not only hinder the development but would cripple the economy of this country. I am sure, Sir, that such measures will not only destroy confidence in the economy of the country, but it will help to decrease the development which we need so much to meet our estimates of expenditure and this indeed, Sir, as we know, is a formidable challenge. Uganda is, I think, a very recent example, Sir, of how an economy can be shattered by unwise actions and irresponsible behaviour.

Now, Sir, I would like to refer to a matter so ably put by the noble Earl—referring to the Economic Commission which is to examine the arrangements for the common market in these territories. There has long been, Sir, mistrust and suspicion in the neighbouring territories with regard to the activities of the East African High Commission. We must accept this fact, Sir, for this was highlighted in a recent meeting of the Central Legislative Assembly when almost all the Members with one notable exception, particularly from Tanganyika seriously alleged that the benefits of the High Commission accrued mostly to Kenya, and indeed, Sir, I was personally told in other territories that they are not getting a fair share of the advantages of the common market. We in this territory, Sir, desired that things should be put on an equitable basis, and that the benefits should be shared by all the territories. I am sure that when the Commission comes to report on this matter it will prove beyond doubt that the High Commission has been rendering services of a sterling character for the benefit of all these territories.

[Mr. Pandya]

Now, Sir, I particularly welcome the proposal—to which other hon. Members have referred—those which refer to the tourist industry which is each year growing in importance and for which the Government is creating better facilities. But I would ask, Sir, that there is better support for and co-ordination with the East African Tourist Travel Association, which has still the feeling that it is being treated by the Government as a poor relation. Thorny and irritating feelings I think should be eradicated in the greater interests of the country. The easy facilities for clearance at the ports of entry and the very wise lifting of the customs duty on cameras, binoculars and films will not only please those residents who found it necessary to alight at Aden to make these purchases on their way to other destinations but will also be a great help to open up new markets from all those people from other countries, particularly from those highly taxed countries for they will thus be encouraged to make their purchases here.

I would, however, Sir, like to support the hon. Arab Elected Member, Sheikh Mackawi that the development of tourism must remove the remaining pockets of discrimination which, unfortunately, still exist in some of the areas, and the people who run public places should be quite definitely told that this derogatory treatment meted out to visitors of other races is highly objectionable. It is a sad fact that a little while ago such an incident occurred in the Coast Province which often prides itself on its very happy race relations. I understand the Government has been made aware of this fact and I hope that it will deal with this matter in a very forthright and confident manner in the interests of the tourist industry as a whole.

I now turn to the other proposals of revenue. There are certain misgivings about making the minimum annual licence fee of £8 for a small car user who in most cases has to have a car for necessity rather than pleasure, and indeed it has been strongly represented to me that instead of putting all this tax on the small car user, it would have been worthwhile to tax a little extra the large vehicle user. I am a large vehicle user myself, Sir—the steep rise in these licenses need not have been so sharp as had to be put on by the Minister. Of course, people are always willing to sacrifice something, particularly when part of these funds or the whole are to go to the Road Authority for making better roads in this country.

But, Sir, I think the greatest uproar has been against the increase of tax on light diesel fuel of a total of one shilling and ten cents, for there are already threats of increases which may be implemented, to put up passenger fares, which would affect essentially the poor man. This inevitably will lead to demands for increased wages which again will start the vicious spiral. There was, as many Members will remember, quite an uproar last year on the imposition of 15 per cent duty on the commercial vehicles and now, Sir, with this increase in tax it will create a crisis if it has not already done so. In view of the fact that the Minister said that that there will only be a fractional effect, and looking at the uproar, perhaps someone has missed in his calculations and probably the Minister would like to look at this again.

Sir Charles Markham: Have you got an interest to declare?

Mr. Pandya: I have no interest, Sir, in the business except to carry myself. Now, Sir, there is considerable transport of goods by road, and it is freely alleged that this tax has been put up to help the railways which have been in a very strong competition with other road operators who have indeed been providing a very valuable service to the people in this country and particularly to commercial people.

Now, Sir, I have always admired the value of the Swynnerton Plan which has been of immense benefit to African agriculture, for not only has it helped to increase production, but has shown new methods of production in tea and coffee, to accelerate this development I would like to congratulate the Minister and his namesake, the Minister for Agriculture, in their recent efforts in Washington to obtain the loan of £2,000,000 from the World Bank. Now we are anxiously awaiting for what I hope will be favourable results. But I would like to ask at this stage, Sir, of the Minister for Agriculture, who I do not see here, what consideration he has given since his assumption of the Portfolio, to the many repeated requests that have been made from this side of the House from time to time on the encouragement of another section of the Kenya community to take an important part in agricultural pursuits. I am sure, Sir, that he realizes that this is not only to boost the economy of the country, but will definitely encourage the welfare and prosperity of all the peoples in this country.

Now, Sir, one glance at the recurrent estimates is enough to show that there are no economies of any importance effected in the proposals. For one can see consistently the same pattern of expenditure over the last three years. It does not seem, Sir, that the Minister has undertaken this exercise and I do suggest to him that this really would have been worthwhile—and here I do support, Sir, some of the observations made by the hon. Member for Kiambu and support the terms of the Motion of which notice was given by my hon. friend the Member for Central Electoral Area—ban for the Minister to say that “the Estimates are designed to stabilize expenditure on administration, law and order, and other services at a level which will ensure future efficiency”. I do want to emphasize, Sir, that I do not intend to propose that efficiency should be sacrificed at all.

Now, Sir, I would like to refer briefly to the security position in the country. Many other speakers than myself have posed problems on the question of unemployment, which we know is particularly acute in the large towns where the supply of labour has exceeded demand, and it has unfortunately led to practices which indeed are a menace to society and although Government has appointed a Commissioner to look into this matter, we would like to know what immediate steps are being taken to meet this problem. For I feel, Sir, that more than protective measures, it is definitely better to meet such a situation by what I would call remedial measures. However, the fact remains that the situation is serious and tense as has been seen by the many incidents which have been reported and, indeed, we know that many incidents go unreported and unreported and while some police action recently has helped the situation, I think there is a strong case for more vigilance to minimize molestation and violence in areas of concentration where such incidence are very rife and frequent.

I would, Sir, like to support the observations made by the hon. Member for Nairobi Area and his observations yesterday on the structure and expenditure on the Kenya Regiment. Many times before, Sir, in this House we have raised this question, but we have never had a satisfactory answer from the Government. I would very strongly like the Government to give a clear answer and I would like it to consider that they give serious thought to opening the ranks of the Kenya Regiment to people of all races so that they can contribute their share to the maintenance of stable conditions in this country.

And now, Sir, I must refer in this debate to a most important matter, education, particularly on matters of principle. I would remind Members that last year in the Budget proposals there was a proposal for an increase in the fees of secondary schools. Now this proposal was very vehemently opposed by the Asian Elected Members at that time, but in spite of that, Sir, indeed in the very face of it the increase in fees came into force early this year. It was an increase of as much as over 60 per cent. It should be obvious, Sir, to anyone that such a heavy increase at one stroke was bound to be a great burden on the parents, although I do admit that there are facilities of remission. Indeed, Sir, this action was taken against the very strong and unanimous advice of the Advisory Council on Asian Education and I would seriously urge the Government to reconsider this matter and to relieve the parents of this terrible burden. Any drastic steps of such fantastic increase should only be taken after very serious consideration and consultation with the community to gain its approval before the fees are ever increased. Indeed, such measures should be taken after finding ways and means of meeting the costs of education in co-operation with the leaders of the community.

Now, Sir, some six weeks ago the Government announced its policy of the Board of Governors for the European Secondary Schools. Now since then, Sir, there has been some interest aroused in the Asian community about the financial and other implications of this scheme before they either accept or reject it. But I would like to say, that in the absence of such detail, the first reactions of the community have been against the system for it is felt that this will retard the development of common schools, the development of common educational standards and that control in the proposed Board of Governors will only mean that they will carry out and further racial education policies. The Minister, Sir, may feel inclined to comment later on this aspect of the matter.

Now, Sir, I feel that with the changes impending in the new spirit that is prevalent here, it is time that the Government examined the educational set-up in the light of bringing about more uniformity in administrative matters, syllabuses, examinations and equality of standards so that some form of common basis can be found. With this in view, Sir, I would suggest to the Government the appointment of the committee on integration of education as was appointed in Tanganyika in 1958, and which recently brought out a report which favours the development of a single system of education for all races in the country, and how this system can be implemented over a period of two or three years. I think, Sir, the Government would do well to think ahead on this matter because the time will come for a change, and I am sure it must come—make no mistake about it so the sooner the Government deals with this problem, the better it is in the interests of the country.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, the debate last week on a Motion moved by my hon. and gallant friend the Member for Nairobi North evidently did more good than harm and brought out clearly, Sir, that there was agreement at Lancaster House and that there were signs already [Mr. Pandya] that the parties to the agreement mean to implement the decisions that were taken at that time; although in the early stages it did seem and it was doubtful whether such a confidence would prevail in view of the indecisive character of some of the speeches that took place soon after the Conference. I think there now seem to be signs of balanced approach which is fast restoring goodwill and confidence, and has been practically demonstrated by the fact that our friends of yesterday on this side are now sitting on the other side and how well they look, happy and contented. However, Sir, it is a disturbing thought that a large section of the European community seem to make strenuous efforts of retaining their privileges, particularly in the matters of land and education, although at the same time they say that they do not oppose changes or the spirit of the Lancaster House agreement. All this talk of retaining what they have and in the manner they desire is not conducive to happy relations amongst peoples of this country. How much better would it be if all this effort and energy were devoted to supporting wholeheartedly the implementation of the Lancaster House agreement and thus generating goodwill which will eventually lead to building the people of Kenya into a single nation. Sir, efforts to put the brake on are doomed to failure and indeed will lead to chaos and confusion. So let us all join together in directing our endeavours to something that is more lasting and more worthwhile, and that is the happiness, better understanding, peace and prosperity for all the peoples of this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Rubia (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to support the Motion, but, before I start, I would like to congratulate the Minister for Finance and Development, not only for the very able way in which he presented this Budget, but also because the proposals contained in the Budget Speech must have required a very great deal of thought and imagination in view of what was then the existing political cloud in the country when these proposals were framed.

Now, Sir, I would like to start with the question of security in the country because I believe it is one of the problems which is worrying a lot of people today.

Sir, I believe all of us here must abhor all violent actions that are being done here and there whether the victim is a European, an Asian or an African.

Now, Sir, I think the Member for the Ukamba Area mentioned yesterday about this, particularly in his own constituency, and I think he referred to Kiambu. Now, Sir, in that connexion, if I heard him well, he seemed to attribute the violence to what we had a few years ago here as the Mau Mau pattern of violence. Now I am not trying to deny it but I think it is wrong to colour the picture as a whole, that the violence is influenced by Mau Mau because there are other factors which I think should be considered at the same time.

Now we all know what Mau Mau has been to this country and I also realized when I went to Europe last year how much that word Mau Mau is feared overseas. I think whenever we speak of our security situation here we should put the blame where it lies and perhaps put a qualification on it because if people in Europe hear of the possibility of a revival of Mau Mau activity in this country, I have a feeling that we shall not get their money which we so much desire. Now, as I said earlier, I am not denying that there may be some Mau Mau activities in certain areas, but I think that some of these actions can be attributed to the fact that we have a lot of unemployment in these districts. Now the Central Province generally, Sir, is, or was, a very crowded Province. Now during the early days of the Emergency we all remember the repatriation of the Kikuyu, Embu and Meru from various places and districts all over East Africa. We had some returning from parts of Tanganyika and Uganda, and all these people were sent to their original districts in the Central Province. Therefore it follows that we have a lot of overcrowding in that area. Now when the movement restrictions were lifted, those people could not get jobs, which goes to suggest, in my view, that most of the violent action that we hear and read of is to a very large extent due to the economic situation and I think that fact has to be appreciated. Now in that respect I would very much like to see several steps taken, if I may appeal to the Government, and one is perhaps the speeding up of the absorption of these people to various occupations and employment, such as resettlement. I know there is such a move, I know we have a Commission sitting, but I think what we want is the speeding up of that process. I would also suggest that this Government should also approach the other East African Governments because I believe there are still Emergency restrictions on entry into those territories of Africans from Kenya.

Now I realize it is outside the competence of this Government to lift these restrictions, but I think we have something in common with Tanganyika and Uganda. These territories ought to combine to put that trouble right and it strikes me as rather unfair that we should have our country for people from Tanganyika to come and seek work here, yet our people cannot go [Mr. Rubia] to Tanganyika and seek work there. And I think by mutual understanding that point can receive those Governments' sympathetic consideration. That, I believe, is one way of trying to solve unemployment.

Now, the other point that I would like to mention, Sir, is that it was very pleasing to hear in the Minister's speech that land consolidation has started bearing some fruit. Now, that is very encouraging because I believe it will give some incentive for land consolidation in those areas where land consolidation has not been started. That, Sir, is very encouraging too because I believe the local cess in those districts where land consolidation has taken place will contribute to the welfare of the citizens of those districts. Now, I am pleased too to see that it is the intention of the Kenya Government to borrow some money for African agriculture. There again, Sir, I do not want to appear to be praising the Government all the time, but I think it is a move towards the right direction. But I would like us to try and be a bit imaginative because we should not, I think, pay all the attention to our agricultural population because a very large proportion of our population are actually town dwellers today. There are, in fact, very few who can be called farmers in the true sense, in the African sense, shall we say. It follows therefore that we have also to consider that African who might have consciously or otherwise become urbanized.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgard) took the Chair]

I have in mind, Sir, the African who lives in, say, Nakuru or Mombasa or any other place who would like to establish himself in business. I do not want to take up very much time on this because it has been raised before, but I sincerely hope that the Government will see the wisdom of assisting those people so that we shall not have an exodus from our towns and cities and townships back to the land because that is likely to happen, if the land appears to be too attractive and perhaps the towns appear to have no future at all. In that respect I am appealing to the Government to try and see if anything in the form of assistance can be arranged for African businessmen and women who are likely to benefit from such things as loans or even assistance in the form of advice, how to run businesses efficiently, how to look at business as one entire profession rather than depending on one or two acres of land in the country. The time, I believe, is ripe, for I know of very many Africans who are determined not to forget their land—I believe very few of us would like to do that—but unconsciously many people do not pay so much attention to one or two acres now if they think they can make a decent living from business. This, Sir, is only an appeal to the Government to see what can be done in the way of assistance for African businessmen.

Now, Sir, that will not only provide income and a living for those people because I believe it will also do one very major thing and that is it will narrow the economic gap that we have between our races in this country because I believe one of our difficulties in this country is the economic difference that we have between races. If Africans are, shall we say, encouraged and assisted to become businessmen and women, to say, the extent of Asians today, I believe we shall have a lot of problems solved because every time we talk of employers many people straight away come to the conclusion that it refers to the Europeans. Now, in practice today it is true. Now, there the situation must change because we must have a common problem and a common interest in commerce and industry in this country. In that respect I would also like to appeal to the Government to see that while we encourage foreign capital in this country we should at the same time make sure that we do not encourage capital which may restrict African money participating in such projects. Sir, today I know there are some business organizations which will not admit Africans as shareholders. Now, that sort of situation might have been reasonable in the old days when the Ordinance was enacted but I, Sir, believe that that has to change because if we are to have common interests on a certain project we are likely to see the other man's point of view better than we do today. We may like to have racial understanding. Yes, we all wish it; but it is no good saying this until we can sit together on an equal basis as, say, directors of such and such a company. That, Sir, I believe will not only solve the question of livelihood for the African people but I believe it can bring racial understanding.

Now, the other point I would like to raise or comment on is the question of local government finances. Now, I am informed, Sir, that at present there is only one local authority in Kenya which has a team of Organization and Methods and that is the City Council of Nairobi and no other local authority has such services, an Organization and Methods team. Now, I think here, when we seem to be in need of money everywhere I think we should also make sure that the money that is voted by this hon. House is well spent. Not that I am suggesting it is not always well spent; perhaps it is spent to the best knowledge of those who administer the money. However, what I am suggesting is this: there should be a central organization of Organization and Methods controlled by the Central Government so that any local authority which requires any guidance on a matter could request that such a team should go to their aid. Now, this will be particularly useful as far as the African district councils are concerned because I believe we are moving forward to where local authorities will get more and more responsibilities, more responsibilities in the way of education, in the way of health services, and such like. And as we go on, as indeed I hope we shall, and make progress we shall find ourselves with quite a lot of money to be controlled as local authorities and I think here we should have the benefit of the experts in such matters as how best we can spend our money as local councils. That, Sir, I think is a thing that is overdue in view of our financial difficulties.

Sir, I realize it is not going to be cheap to have such an organization in the Central Government, but I think it is a question of trying to reason which is wiser, to go on as we are or to have the services of these experts, and perhaps save in the long run, if not to educate the local authorities on such matters as finances.

Now, Sir, my last point is the question of—I do not want to labour this one very much—the question of the outflow of capital from Kenya. Now, I want to be very brief on this because I believe that the less we talk of the fear of investors the better for this country. But let me say this, perhaps make an appeal, that every hon. Member of this House and every man or woman in Kenya should weigh his or her utterances in public with this in view, because while Mr. A will talk of nationalizing the industries or something that may be very frightful to an investor overseas, in Kenya may regard it as just one of those things, but the investor in Europe, in America, takes it very, very seriously and I think we shall move towards the right direction if we make it a habit to speak as little as possible in threatening terms which in many cases are either false allegations or exaggerated facts.

Sir, I beg to support.

Mrs. Shaw: I should like to join other Members. Mr. Deputy Speaker, in congratulating the Minister on the very able way in which he presented his first Budget, I agree with the hon. Member for Kiambu, it was plain fare, well cooked and well served. But even plain meals, if eaten too quickly, can cause indigestion, and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister, realizing this, allowed us five days in which to appreciate the Budget and possibly discuss it with our people. And here I should like to join issue with the hon. Acting Chief Secretary, who saw fit to rap the Members of the Opposition over the knuckles yesterday for not doing their homework over the weekend. I would like to point out to him that some of us consider ourselves in duty-bound to go back to our constituents and discuss these weighty matters with them and some of us have 500 miles to travel in order to do that. I also, Mr. Deputy Speaker, could not agree with the Acting Chief Secretary when he said that the Budget Session gave us an opportunity for airing our grievances. Rather would I say that this Budget Session gives the representatives of the people an opportunity for bringing before Government the views of the taxpayer and by helping Government with constructive criticism, which if the Members opposite are truly democratic they will welcome, always remembering that no taxation without representation is one of the fundamental principles of democracy.

To my mind, Sir, this is the use to which speakers on this side of Council should put the Budget debate. For the Minister in his Budget Speech has reviewed Government policy and this opening policy debate gives Members on this side of Council and the elected representatives of the various communities the chance to comment on that policy and to bring to Government any matters of public concern. Unfortunately, Mr. Deputy Speaker, too often hon. Members use this debate to do just what the Attorney-General said, to air their grievances, both real and imaginary.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) took the Chair]

Might I instance a speech made yesterday by the hon. African Elected Member for Nairobi which was a perfect example of what I mean, a dreary diatribe of wrongs, ill use and hardship. Might I suggest to the hon. Member who, as usual, is absent, that if he wants restoration of confidence which he says he does, he would do more good to take the advice of the last hon. Member who spoke by making, with other Members of this Council, constructive speeches rather than those charged with bitterness such as the speech he recently made outside this Parliament. Also, Mr. Deputy Speaker, his "Stand and Deliver" attitude, as he knows only too well, will not encourage the smooth running of the trade unions in the development of what should be their legitimate and essential functions. His approach was typified by what he said yesterday when he stressed that employers "must be told in no uncertain terms", "Workers must demand", etc., which can hardly be calculated to lead employers to the belief that trade unions are being encouraged by their office bearers to use union machinery set up under the law for the legitimate functions of negotiation. The hon. Member, in my opinion, must already.—Mr. Deputy Speaker, bear a large proportion of the blame for the general feeling of unrest which is so prevalent in Kenya today; and his present attitude can only lead to a further set-back in our economic progress, if nothing worse. Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, you have only to listen to the sorry tale of numerous acts of violence committed against our police force yesterday, in this capital city of Nairobi, as recounted by the Kenya Broadcasting Service broadcast last night to realize that the campaign of civil disobedience with which the hon. Member has threatened Government is well under way. It is right that this deplorable state of affairs should be publicized in this Council, for I would stress again, as the last hon. Member said from the other side, that Members of this House have a grave responsibility as the leaders of the country not to misrepresent facts in such a way as to incite their communities to stir up industrial strife or cause a breach of the Queen's Peace. I, on behalf of the law-abiding citizens of Kenya, should like to remind Government of their responsibility to protect the life and property of the taxpayer and his family. We shall hope to see these law-breakers punished in the severest possible manner.

Is it also too much to ask, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in the interests of the Colony that the leaders of the Luo and Kikuyu tribes should follow the example of the Kalenjin? One hon. Luo Member of this Council has had the courage to do so, as well as some representatives of the Kisii tribes. More honour to them! There was so much good sense talked at that two-day meeting at Kapkatet of which I have had a verbatim report—more good sense than it has been my fortune to hear for a long time.

Turning now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to matters which I have been asked to bring up in this House by some of my constituents in this Budget debate. First of all, I should like to join the hon. Member for Ukamba in asking the Minister for clarification as to Government's intention regarding the scope of the rebate on the tax on light diesel oils. Surely, it cannot be Government's intention to do anything at this present time to put up the cost of production in the major industry of the Colony, namely, agriculture. If this is so, Sir—and I am sure it is—then the Minister must have meant to extend the rebate to power units employed in agriculture such as stationary tractors, light engines, etc. Otherwise the effect of the tax will penalize the small farmer particularly and after all it is generally admitted that it is the small farmer who is most vulnerable in periods of depression.

Another result of this tax, which in a high rainfall area such as Nyanza may well have disastrous effects on our communications, is that I am informed that the cost of maintaining our road services will go up in our province alone as a direct result of this tax, by as much as £4,500. As the Minister for Local Government is bound to admit, this is a serious matter at a time when road grants have been out to a minimum and any lowering of the present standards of maintenance, certainly in high rainfall areas and with the rainfall we have experienced this year, might put many of our roads out of action; this would seriously affect production. This naturally is causing great concern to the executive officer and members of the Nyanza County Council and, I imagine, this applies to other county councils in the Colony.

As to the increased licence fees for the small car I have been asked to suggest that, as one of the considerations, Sir, which forced the poor man to shudder the discomfort of a small car was the cheaper licensing fee the Minister must in all equity rule that the tax should only be applied to cars bought after 27th April, 1960. Then if the poorer citizen does not feel that, even with the withdrawing of the licence benefit he can afford to glide over our roads enjoying the super-springing of the modern luxury car, he at least buys a small car with his eyes wide open and is not caught unawares by Governmental wiles. Being part-owner of a fleet of Volkswagen, Sir, I have to declare an interest, but I am thinking very seriously of turning over to a three-wheel car, either a bubble car or a tricycle before 1961. Truly as my hon. friend—

Mr. Travadi: (Inaudible).

Mrs. Shaw: I did all my farming on a bicycle during the war, nevertheless. Truly as my hon. friend has said, this is a Railway Budget. As a staunch supporter of the Railways, I should be the last to object to that especially as it will mean an increase in the already large profits enjoyed by East African Railways and Harbours. Profits must be invested in development and expansion must surely be the policy of any flourishing concern. So there can be no possible justification if the Railways are benefiting or going to benefit so much from these taxes on road transport for refusing an extension of rail-road transport. The General Manager has already admitted that this would not be an economic branch line but merely the extension of railhead from the middle of the hunda to a flourishing centre, for everyone must admit that Kericho is at the centre of the wealthy tea industry and is one of the richest agricultural districts in the Colony with a very big future potential development. Furthermore, I am certain, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, that it is not Government's intention to penalize any particular area of this Colony but this in fact is what they are doing if this tax on light diesel is brought into force for the increased burden on the people of all races in the Sotik/Kisii Highlands will be out of all proportion to that suffered by the other people in Kenya. These people living in the Sotik/Kisii Highlands area sixty years ago, as indeed were all peoples of Kenya, were without the benefit of a railroad. But, Sir, I must point out that in this modern era they are still in that unhappy position. Government has, by the granting of a transport subsidy, already acknowledged that they labour under a disability. Now, Sir, that subsidy, which was discriminatory—only applying to one race—has quite rightly been withdrawn. But I would remind Government that when it was granted it was on the distinct understanding that it should remain in force until some form of reasonable transport was provided for the farmers of those districts. Never doubting Government's good faith in this matter, many farms were brought on this promise. The districts increase in size and prosperity, a prosperity which was largely due to the help afforded by this transport subsidy which allowed them to produce in their farming efforts on the same basis as other districts served by a branch line of the railway.

This subsidy has now been withdrawn although the conditions which governed its production and granting for so many years still exists. As I said before, Sir, we are in some cases over 150 miles from the railhead, so that I am not asking for the introduction of a transport subsidy on a non-racial basis, for it would be too difficult to operate and would be open to abuse. But I am asking most seriously, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Government should bring to an end the disabilities under which farmers and traders of all races in the Sotik/Kisii Highlands labour by the extension of the railhead to Kericho and the introduction of road-rail services beyond.

In confidence, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Government will give its sympathetic consideration to the points I have raised, I beg to support.

Mr. Muhoya (Temporary Member for Nyeri and Embu): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I am not good at figures—statistics always bore me, although I am a teacher of mathematics.

I will refer to the question of security first, but in the course of my speech I will come back to the Budget.

Sir, yesterday the hon. Member for Ukamba, if I remember well, made a sweeping generalization about security in Kenya. Generalizations are all right where one has to deal with trifles, but they are all wrong where one has to deal with important matters. I hesitate to accuse the hon. Member for Ukamba of intimidating the intimidators, if I may use a phrase recently used in connexion with the disturbances in South Africa. The hon. Member tried, I hope unsuccessfully, to strike terror clearer to the House. I live in the Reserve, so called, and I have observed that cases of intimidation are very few indeed and I dare say negligible. Ruffians do exist. They always will do. We should take it at that. But are we going to put brakes on our progress just because of a few irresponsible citizens? The hon. Member for Ukamba made a submission that cases of violence are very few. In fact, they are negligible. Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, excitement is a human characteristic. It may be a virtue, it may be a vice. The Lancaster House Constitution gave Kenya a measure of uhuru and if people are naturally excited then they should be given time to cool down. Mau Mau as an organization is as dead as the proverbial dodo. We may have a few cases of intimidation, in fact a few cases of the administration of oaths of K.K.M. and Mau Mau, but one swallow does not make a summer. Uhuru is coming and it is coming to stay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I wish to apologize if I have made too much digression from the Budget, but I will be at it immediately.

The Minister for Finance need not be perturbed because, as I have said before, I am hopeless at figures, but I would refer to the African teachers' salaries. It being known very well that there are no Europeans in the grades of T.4, T.3 and T.2, also in K.T.1, the salaries of these teachers are kept deliberately low. Makerere teachers and graduate teachers get nominally reasonable pay, equal in theory to that of his European counterpart or Asian counterpart. Mr. Deputy Speaker, in order to make my contention clear I will refer to the pay of the African K.T.1 teacher. The Asian K.T.1 of the same qualification gets almost twice as much as his African counterpart. Could the Minister for Education explain this anomaly? We want harmony, we want equal pay for equal work; we want equal pay for equal merit. How does this come about? How was the Libby Report applied in this particular respect? I hope the Minister concerned will answer that.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I come to a very delicate point, and a very controversial one. I think this one concerns the Minister for Security—the release of Jomo Kenyatta. I refer to the Governor's speech some time last year when he took a bold step to end the Emergency in spite of the diehards who wanted to prolong it. I have not got his actual words, but he said something to this effect: "Let us forget the past; let us turn over a new leaf; let us look to the future"—in short, Mr. Deputy Speaker, "Let bygones be bygones". It is beyond my understanding why we should be afraid of Kenyatta. He has served his term of imprisonment and, in his late sixties, I consider him a harmless old man. If he is dangerous, as some Members allege, is there no law to deal with him? Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Government cannot be run by timid people, so let us take the risk and release Jomo Kenyatta. The voice of the people is the voice of God.

Commander Goord (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, my pleasant task is to congratulate the speaker who has just sat down on a very confidently delivered maiden speech. Much of which, unfortunately, I could not agree with.

May I next, Mr. Deputy Speaker, say how much I and many other Members on this side appreciated the great clarity of the Financial Statement. The Budget has been described as unimaginative; but I think, Sir, that this must be regarded as a caretaker Budget, a Budget of a caretaker Government, and I think it is wrong to accuse any Minister who has the magnificent sense of pathos to descend from the sublimity of his economic review to the ridiculousness of tomato purée of being unimaginative.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not propose to discuss this Budget at length. I think that it is rather a waste of time. I propose instead to turn to the next one. But before I do so there is one minor point on which I wish to touch. This year there has been introduced a tax on dieseline with a rebate to farmers. Only last year the rebate for farmers on kerosene used in tractors was withdrawn—in spite of my strong objections! I do ask Government to reconsider this because there are a lot of poorer farmers like myself who are still compelled to use these kerosene tractors and quite a lot of power kerosene on farms. I hope that this anomaly will once again be removed, and this time in the opposite direction.

Turning now, Sir, to the question of the next Budget, I feel it is possible that there will be quite a number of revolutionary changes. One that I would like to suggest is in respect of direct taxation on the people of the lower income group. I believe today, Sir, that the concept of a direct tax on the very poor people is out-dated. In the early days of this country it was undoubtedly necessary. It is today necessary for in fact it produces something like £1,500,000 of revenue. But last year a step was made in reducing the lowest rate of personal tax, and I would hope that that process would be continued in future years. I know from personal experience that the reduction of Sh. 20 (it always comes off in one month), on the salary or earnings of a person earning perhaps Sh. 50 or Sh. 60 per month is very hard indeed. Nevertheless it must be recognized that the revenue has to come from somewhere and what I would like to see is the gradual turnover to a system of taxation, or a system of obtaining revenue, for services rendered. We all in this House, I am sure, detest paying income tax but we do not mind quite so much paying for a new car. In the same way the African, I am sure, hates paying his kodi but if he was paying for something concrete, something tangible, something that he could see, his attitude might well be very different. Now, a case in point, I think, is education. Government will be aware that in the settled areas there is a very strong movement indeed among the African peoples to raise money from their own resources for education. It is to my mind a very debatable matter as to whether this is in fact desirable, whether in fact the whole community should be taxed for a service which is still voluntary. It might be better to raise the money through increased fees. But I feel certain that it is this pattern which should be followed by Ministers for Finance in the future.

Turning to a place where I think money might well be saved, that is on travelling allowances. Once again I believe that the system of travelling allowances which we have at the present time is a relic of the past. Not so many years ago if one wanted to get from A to B in this country it was considered necessary to drive a car which weighed about two tons and rated 30 or 40 horsepower. Now, if there is one thing that the East African Safari has taught us, it is that the small car is just as capable, in fact it is more likely to reach its destination, than the heavier car. This being so I see very little justification for the variations which exist in travelling allowances, and I feel strongly that in all cases the rate of travelling allowance which should be paid and should be governed by the rate applicable to the smallest type of car which will do the job. I believe that is the first step which should be taken. (No doubt, Sir) I shall probably be unpopular in saying all this! Further, I believe in the future, with the growth of public road transport, we shall have to consider whether there should not be a further downgrading; but I think that probably the time has not yet come for that.

Now, Sir, returning to the tomato purée. I did refer to it as being ridiculous. But I did not really think it was ridiculous at all. If we walk into any grocer's shop in Nairobi we find it chock a block full of imported products which we all know could well be produced in this country. My wife told me today that she had seen bread sauce, imported bread sauce, in a packet all ready to mix with the water! Well, the hon. and gracious ladies in this House may well tell me that it is a very laborious matter making bread sauce but I still cannot see that it is a necessity for us to import items of that nature, and there are many many others. I would therefore like to see a steady expansion of the principle of protective duties. One realizes of course that a protective duty does not necessarily bring in an increasing revenue but at least the duty might be raised to the point, and I believe that there is some scope for manoeuvre, where the law of diminishing returns begins to operate.

Switching now, Sir, to local government. I think I owe the House a report on what has happened in regard to the Advisory Committee on Local Government which was set up as a result of the policy debate last year. The Committee met and agreed that a questionnaire should be sent out to all local authorities in order to get their views on the problems before the Committee. It has taken very much longer than I anticipated to get those replies, and to this day we have only got about half the views of the African district councils. The members of the Association of Local Authorities have given the matter a lot of thought and in fact they have done a lot of groundwork for the Committee in preparing a collation of the views of local authorities, and I very much hope that we shall have that before us within the next month or so, and that the Committee will then be able to start work. It has been very disappointing that we have not been able to get on before, but it was obviously quite futile to move unless we had the views of the authorities, which are, of course, the views which matter.

Turning, Sir, to yet another matter (I am sorry, Sir, to be wandering all over the place), it will be well known to Government that there has been for some time a considerable amount of unease in the matter of the salaries of some branches of the Civil Service, notably the police. I have only one constructive suggestion to offer. It is a very old one—it is not at all original; but I do think that the Government ought to reconsider the question of marriage allowances. It seems to be assumed that two people can live as cheaply as one. Actually of course it is just the other way round, and I hope that the Government will reconsider this matter, because what is a very handsome salary for a young and unmarried man really will not do to keep a man and his wife and the little ones that follow.

In the debate on the policy speech last year, Sir, I asked Government to give particular attention to the Estimates for the Information Services. I argued, Sir, that we were out here in this country, to build a democratic state and that one could only do so on the basis of an informed electorate. I am glad to see that there has been a very considerable increase in the amount allocated to broadcasting, which, of course, will help that very much indeed. But I do feel that the question of the broadening of the information services is very vital. After all, democracy is not merely a matter of electing one's representatives. The electorate should also be able to choose between alternative policies and to be able to choose with some judgment. I do not think that history shows any example of democracy succeeding where the electorate has been both poor and uninformed. We have very little time left in this country before independence comes, to produce both prosperity and an informed electorate. Government is, we know, doing all it can in every direction to promote prosperity; but I would like to see it making a very much greater effort in this task of educating, in the widest sense, the whole of our people.

Finally, Sir, on the matter of confidence, I believe that since our new colleagues on this side of the House joined us the outlook for this country is better than it has been for a very long time. There is one cloud on the horizon—and its name is Jomo Kenyatta. Sir, my sympathy lies very much with the African leaders in their desire to see the fulfilment of their people, the African people. Moreover, I appreciate very much the difficulties of being a political leader in the African political jungle, if I may call it that. I support fully the goal of nationhood which they are after, and will back them all the way towards it. But I do, Sir, appeal to them to maintain the highest ideals in seeking its attainment.

Compromise, to my mind, is the essence of politics. It is the compromise between your opinion and my opinion which, after all, is opinion, and that is the way we get the evolution of steady progress. One cannot compromise with evil, however, and I believe that we have not only got to try to build a prosperous nation here, but that we must also build (I cannot think of a better word) a Godly nation. I believe it will be fatal if our efforts to build our nation are besmirched by anything which future generations may be ashamed of.

'Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mrs. Hughes (Uasin Gishu): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like also to add my congratulations to the Minister for Finance and Development for his Budget Speech, and I think particularly for the presentation of an economic survey, because to me, as a layman knowing very little about economics, it certainly did put the picture into perspective so far as the economy of Kenya was concerned. Sir, he did speak of political stability in these words. He said, "We require political stability and economic climate which will encourage existing enterprises to continue their efforts and investors to develop new projects". Well, Sir, I am one of those who believe that the outcome of the Lancaster House Conference did put us on the right road and the proper road for the development of Kenya. Sir, the future now lies mainly in our hands to secure that stability and that development. It lies in our hands to guide and create a nation that can with confidence, knowing that it is on the right road, overcome the many problems both economic and political that beset us now. Sir, it is only within a climate of co-operation that we can build a community based on what we like to call fundamental democratic principles. Sir, we have problems, and very great problems; amongst others we have the problems of employment and resettlement to tackle, but unfortunately we have to tackle them in an atmosphere still not free from fear, insecurity and intimidation. Much money is required for this development, but we must ensure that available finance is spent on schemes that are not only productive in nature but also, I think, we have got to be careful that through a misguided effort to save a few pennies we create further problems of such a magnitude that we will find them almost impossible to solve.

Sir, with this in mind and the fact that we are very much limited to time, I would like to concentrate on one aspect, and that is prevention of some social ills that we might have to face. It is, I am sure, Government's intention, Sir, to provide employment and training for our people so that they can carry on this employment in an efficient manner; and yet, by a very small stroke of the pen the Government may well be jeopardizing the future of thousands of our young children. Sir, I was horrified to see that in the 1960/61 Estimates about £27,000 has been transferred from the Emergency Fund in respect of approved schools and remand homes. I can only presume that this applies to the recently gazetted Othaya and three juvenile reception centres. To me this appears to be a matter of principle of very great importance to the future of our country because we talk with great concern of the necessity to find employment and to train our people to work and produce and so to ensure economic development. Yet, Sir, by this act we are, I believe, starting thousands of our young people on the wrong road. It is a retrograde step and I warn this House that it will undoubtedly lead to a problem of juvenile delinquency of such magnitude that it will cost this country very dearly indeed. We have a big enough problem with us now; and I would suggest that 95 per cent, or more possibly, of the children can be put in the category of deprived children, deprived for many reasons such as the breakdown of parental control, those children forced to leave school at the age of 11-plus, while still too young to find employment, children handicapped as a result of the Mau Mau and many other reasons, not necessarily tied to race or even material standards of living, but deprived of a feeling of security. I could give many examples of this sort of thing, but I would just like to quote from Father Flannigan, who, I think, is known to all of us as starting Boys' Town. He said this: "I can still say that I have never known a really bad boy..."—I assume that this applied to girls, too—"only bad parents, bad environment, bad examples. It is wrong even to call it juvenile delinquency. Why not call it what it generally is—the delinquency of a callous and indifferent society".

Now, Sir, during the height of Emergency Wamumu was started for certain categories of children who had been contaminated by Mau Mau and indeed I think some of them were even juvenile terrorists. Those children were mostly between the ages of 16 and 21 years. Now, Sir, Wamumu for what it intended to do was a very grand place and I have in this House praised Wamumu for what it did. I still would like to say that it was very excellent indeed. But, Sir, at the end of 1956, I think due partly to the closing down of Ujana Park, they did take into Wamumu many children who needed care and protection, and these children ranged from the age of 5 years to 12 years, a very different category indeed, and I think I would be correct in saying that there was a breaking down of the particular system that they had employed at the beginning of Wamumu when this took place because it was applying a system that was not applicable or should not be applied to young children who only needed care and protection, and because of the serious harm of that method of approach that was undoubtedly being caused at Wamumu

[Mrs. Hughes]

Othaya was opened at a very great speed because I believe that Government was forced, and realized it was forced, to face the disastrous effects of combining these two categories.

Sir, at this stage I would like to ask what happened to a report that I understand that Miss Scorer was sent out to Kenya to advise on. Was this report ever published, and was her advice accepted. I would like the Minister, if possible, to reply to that question.

Now, Sir, Othaya has really proved its worth, and I do not think that anybody who has visited Othaya could deny that. They have built up a wonderful home with a wonderful atmosphere entirely, due to their own endeavours and their own enterprise because they were certainly given very little money indeed to do it with, and I would say it is right and proper that the children should have taken part in the development of their own home. But it was also built up by devoted officers who, I think, have learned in the right way, through experience, what is now internationally acknowledged as the right method of rehabilitating the bright children. That right method is not by putting them behind barred wire but by giving them security and parental love and assisting them to play an integral part in the life of the community.

Why, then having proved so successful, has Othaya been gazetted as an approved school, which I believe took place in February this year. I would like to ask three questions of the Minister. Has the approval of the "fit person" to whom these children have been committed under section 19 (b) of Ordinance No. 12, 1955, been sought for the transfer of these boys to an approved school, and, if so, did he agree? Then, Sir, I would like to ask whether the children at Othaya have been convicted of a criminal offence before a court as required by the Juvenile Ordinance, 1934, and sentenced to an approved school, and, if not, why has Othaya been gazetted as an approved school?

Lastly, I would ask the Minister, has approval been sought from the local council and the district council to the transfer of this land for use as an approved school, when it was, I understand, originally given for the assistance of deprived children? Now, Sir, these children are not criminals. They are children who are crippled and handicapped, physically handicapped. There are children that are orphans, and there are children there who are frightened, upset, because they have been through most frightful experiences, some of them having seen their parents murdered by terrorists. Can you say that these children at the tender age of five years old, and upwards, are criminals? They are children who must regain the confidence of society, or confidence in society, and they must be cherished and loved and not put behind barred wire.

Sir, I know that remand homes and approved schools are needed, but they are only needed by a very small percentage of children, and not for the many thousands of deprived children, who are our immediate concern, and to whom I say thousands, I mean this literally, To give you an idea of the size of the problem, not taking into account the cases that go through the courts in Nairobi alone, they have had over 10,000 cases dealt with outside the courts between 1956 and 1959. I would almost go so far as to say that probably it is one of the biggest problems of any city in the whole of Africa.

Perhaps I may be little bit more constructive, and may I suggest that delinquent children should be completely separated from deprived children, and that such places as the Othaya Orphanage, juvenile detention centres and the youth clubs—and here I would like to say that I think the youth clubs would be more properly named as "youth training centres", because in these days and in Kenya, where the need is so very great, I do not believe we can concern ourselves with such frivolous social activities as youth clubs as accepted in places like England undertake—I believe that we have got to deal with the essentials here now. Well, Sir, these services, I suggest, should come under the Commissioner for Social Services, and it is his department that should incorporate the Chief Inspector for Children. This office, I understand—this office of Chief Inspector for Children—is now combined with the office of the Principle Probation Officer.

Now, Sir, it has been said that the methods of these schools and approach to these children would not be changed if they were put under the heading of approved schools. But, Sir, although I recognize the good and essential work that is done by the probation services, I do believe that this is a matter of principle, and I am convinced that no help will be received from international bodies, nor indeed do I believe that it would receive the support of such societies as the Child Welfare Society of Kenya, or societies that deal with children, such as Dr. Barnardo's and many other societies in Great Britain and elsewhere that are dealing and have a great deal of knowledge—practical knowledge—of children. So Sir, I would very strongly urge Government to transfer this item of expenditure under the correct head. The correct head is "Social Services", and so put us on the right road when we are considering the future generation of Kenya.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Khamisi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I also would like to join the chorus of those who congratulated the new Minister for Finance on the way he presented his Budget this year in a very brief manner. But in doing so he has omitted very many important items on which we should have liked to hear the direction of Government. While I rise to support the Motion before the House, I must once more express my fears that this is yet another Budget which places the poor African at a very great disadvantage as compared to his neighbour, the European and the Asian. The increases that have been announced by the Minister for Finance on most items are going to hit the African most. Already the Kenya Bus Company in Nairobi has announced its intention to raise the fares for its African passengers. I have heard and read that the Kenya Bus Company at Mombasa have not yet taken that step, but no doubt they will follow suit, as it is almost the very same company. If that takes place, the owners of the country buses will also do the same, and therefore the lorries which carry charcoal and fuel into the towns will also increase the cost of carriage, and the result will be that the Africans who use these buses, the consumers who buy these commodities in the towns, charcoal and fuel, will undoubtedly be obliged to pay more than what they are paying at present. And it is for this reason I feel that the lower paid inhabitants of this country will bear the greatest burden in the increases announced by the Minister, particularly the increases on the cost of fuel such as petrol and diesel.

Now, if one looks very carefully at the items which have been mentioned by the Minister for Finance as having their customs duties increased, one will find that these items are those which are used mostly by Africans. You take, for instance, tomato purée. This is very much used by Africans. They will now be obliged to buy their tomato purée at a very high price. Although the Minister claims that he is doing that purely because he wants to protect the local industry, there is no indication whatsoever that the local purée is going to be any cheaper than the imported one. In fact, the prices are going to be the same, so I think it will be the consumer who will have to choose which one to buy, whether the local one or the imported one, but he will get it at the higher price.

Sir, it is always the excuse of the Government when they want to increase duties on imported articles to claim that they are doing so because they want to protect local industries, but in the long run we find that those things which are imported are by far much cheaper than those which are manufactured in this country. You take the example of cement. We have a lot of cement factories in this country, yet the local cement is much more expensive than the imported cement, and the people are obliged to subsidize these local industries to their disadvantage, which is absolutely wrong. We should be allowed, for instance, to have the cheaper cement from Europe, from India, Pakistan and Japan to help the poor people who want to build and use the cement, rather than force them to buy the local cement at a much higher price than what they used to get it for when they bought the imported one.

Sir, if we look at the other items whose duties have been increased, for instance, the footwear worn by adults, the increase on imported leather. Now are these measures intended to force Africans to walk barefooted, or are they intended to increase the Government funds, or to discourage Africans from wearing shoes. The increase of Sh. 5 per pair is on the high side—it is very high—if we consider the minimum wages the ordinary African gets today. Now I do not want to go from item to item. All that I would like to say is that all the items whose duties have been increased will affect the poor Africans more than the consumers of the other races, and therefore it is correct for me to state that this Budget was aimed at the Africans, the poorer classes of people in this country.

Now, let us compare these increases on those items with the proposals to ease the burden of tourists and the rich and wealthy persons who come into this country. We all know that the man who wants to come here as a tourist is one who has got plenty of money, and he wants to come and spend money. Now these people are having their burdens eased. They are now free to import into Kenya, free of duty, such items as binoculars, telescopes, cameras and films. I hope that the local shops in this country which used to import these articles will also be allowed to import them free of charge, although that has not been stated. If not, why not? Now, Sir, instead of discouraging new residents from bringing into this country personal and household effects, so that they could purchase these items locally here, and therefore assist the local industry, new residents will now be able to bring all these items of household furniture duty free, even motor vehicles. I think this is too much. It will mean that if anybody in England plans to come to Kenya after a year, he is at liberty to purchase a motor vehicle and use it for one year, because he knows there he will get it free from purchase tax and it will be brought into this country free from customs duty. Therefore he gets benefits from both sides, which is quite wrong, because the local person who is going to buy his motor-car here is going to pay duty, whereas the man coming to this country can import his motor-car free of duty. Another thing which surprised me very much was to hear that from now onwards arms and ammunition can be imported into this country duty-free. Members of this House know very well indeed that Africans in the Reserves are not allowed to keep even a bow and poison arrows for their own protection, yet immigrants can come here with arms and ammunition without paying any duty and when they arrive here the Government will have no alternative but to give licenses because they cannot tell them to return the arms and ammunition back to where they came from.

Now, Sir, let us turn to the question of direct taxation. Last year the Minister for Finance stated as follows in his Budget Speech. I now quote his words: "Two years ago when the graduated personal tax was introduced I expressed the hope that as time went on it would be possible to reduce and finally to eliminate the lower rates of personal tax so that the people at the very bottom of the scale would no longer be burdened with direct taxation. I still consider that that is an aim which the Government should pursue. It is not, of course, possible to go the whole way. I feel, however, that the time has now come when we should make a start. I propose, therefore, that the bottom level of personal tax should be reduced from Sh. 25 to Sh. 20."

Now, Sir, it is the policy of Government as stated by the last Minister for Finance to continue to reduce the personal tax applicable to the lower income group and I have been waiting to hear from the Minister in his speech that a further reduction in direct taxation would be made for the coming year. I feel that perhaps the present Minister overlooked this matter and completely forgot the promise which was made by his predecessor, because I am quite sure that what his predecessor stated was the policy of Government and no doubt if that policy has changed we in this House should be informed. It is only fair that one who earns should be able to pay his taxation, but it is equally fair that one who does not earn anything and a man who is unemployed should not be forced to pay taxation because he has not got the means from which he could get the money to pay taxation and at the present moment the Government knows very well that there is a very grave unemployment problem in this country. There are very many people who are day in and day out sitting and squatting outside the Labour Exchanges looking for jobs and they cannot be given jobs. The Government has failed to be able to provide employment for these people, and if that is the case it is only fair that such people should not be liable to pay any direct taxation. If they are not able to find money to feed their stomachs, where will they be able to find money to pay their taxes to the Government?

Now, the only alternative for these people who are unable to find work is either to steal or to rob or to go to jail, and I hope that it will not pay Government to feed these people in jail. It is much cheaper to exempt them from taxation rather than to take them into the Hoteli ya Kingi George and feed them there. I hope the Minister will reverse the situation and when answering he will be able to give us some indication as to the exact amount of reduction which he proposes to make during the coming year.

Now, Sir, there was one thing which delighted me very much in the speech of the Minister. This is what delighted me, he said that the present year is the last in which we shall receive assistance through Her Majesty's Government towards Emergency expenditure. That was a very delightful piece of news. To me I translated that to mean that every effort will be made this year to close all special detention camps, to release all the detainees and to release Mr. Jomo Kenyatta so that he may come back and live a peaceful life in this country. I hope therefore, Her Majesty's Government will not find it necessary any longer to send us any money so that the Government will be able to keep these people restricted in these places. We do not believe that any continued restriction or detention of these people is going to help this country at all, and the sooner this whole book is closed the better for all of us.

Now, Sir, coming to the question of education, and here I would like to be a bit parochial. I was very much surprised to note there has been no mention whatsoever in the speech of the Minister or in the Development Estimates or in the Development Programme of any plans to put up new African schools in the Mombasa district. The Government is very well aware that we this year have taxed ourselves a special taxation of eight shillings fifty cents each. We have done this although we are very poor, but nevertheless we have agreed to do it so that we can have increased education and increased number of schools in our district. We hope that the Government will subscribe pound for pound for the amount of money that we shall collect in this way. Last year in this very House I was given an assurance, I think, by the Director of Education that it was not the intention of Government to wait until this money has been collected for three long years before the schools are constructed, and I was told that the construction of these schools would be started as soon as the collecting of money began.

[Mr. Khamisi]

Now, Sir, we have already started collecting money at the beginning of this year and there is no mention in the Budget or anywhere that we are going to be provided with any new schools at all. I hope when replying the Minister for Education will give us some indication as to what the Government wants to do in this connection.

While I am on this subject of schools, I would like to draw the attention of the Government to the need of my people in Mombasa for a primary girls' school, run by the District Education Board.

In the Development Programme I see that our friends the Arabs have a girls' primary school and they have been allocated further funds for its extension. The Asians have also got a girls' school. It is shameful, therefore, that Government has so far made no plans for building an African girls' school for Mombasa and I must urge the Government to consider this matter very seriously, particularly in view of the fact that we are paying a special educational tax we can demand that we must have this school which we want, for which we are paying. The Government cannot tell us that they have no money, we are paying for it. We will also request the Government to make plans for a compulsory eight year education for our children in Mombasa.

Before leaving the question of education I can also find nothing in the Development programme to indicate to me that there are any plans for teacher training schools for the Coast Province. This is a very bad omission which must be put right, when other Provinces in Kenya are being provided with teacher training facilities, we are being neglected. I would urge the Government to make provision for this type of school for us. It is quite plain that the Coast Province has always been neglected in many ways, not only in the educational facilities. But a teacher training college for the whole of the Province is a very essential necessity.

In this Development Programme I see there is provision for fifteen new day secondary schools and I trust that one of these day secondary schools will be built in Mombasa.

Now, Sir, coming to another point, I feel, Sir, that there are some expenditures which have been included in the Estimates which are totally unnecessary. The Member for Nairobi Area mentioned the expenditure on the Kenya Regiment. I would also like to add the expenditure on the Council of State—£10,000. I think this is a complete waste of money. First of all, I do not understand why this provision has been included in these Estimates for the continuation of this Council next year. It was my understanding that no provision was made for the existence of the Council of State in the Lancaster House Agreement. I do hope that this provision is only for the remainder of 1960 and therefore it could easily be reduced by half and the rest of the money spent in educating our children.

Now coming to the question of the Civil Service Commission: this Commission has not done quite the good work it was expected to do. It has failed to Africanize the Civil Service. It may be because the composition of this Commission is still undemocratic. I feel that African representation in this Commission should be increased although I am not sure how many Africans are members of this body today. I do not know whether there are any Africans at all! I feel, I hope, there are no Africans in this Commission. I feel this Commission must feel the wind of change which is blowing across the Continent. I have been told by many chaps from Makerere and from other schools who are looking for employment that it is extremely difficult for them to get employment through the Civil Service Commission. This, however, must be put right.

The Member for Nairobi Area drew the attention of Government to bad publicity for tourists when they arrive in this country at the airport. I have raised this matter in the Central Legislative Assembly on many occasions with particular reference to the Customs Department which is almost entirely the monopoly of one or two races, three races. The Africans are completely excluded. The Immigration Department is completely the monopoly of two races—the Europeans and the Asians. The Africans are not there; the Arabs are not even there. The Income Tax Department is also another bad example.

Mr. Alexander: We don't want anything to do with it!

Mr. Khamisi: The Post Office and other public offices are all the monopoly of the two minority races. I believe, Sir, that the appointments to posts in these departments is the responsibility of the Civil Service Commission. I feel therefore that this Commission must be reconstituted if it is expected to be blown by the wind of change.

Now, Sir, let me turn to Vote No. 7—the Vote of the Chief Secretary.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I fear, Mr. Khamisi, that there is no time for you to turn to Vote No. 7 because your time has expired.

Mr. Khamisi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would put my other points—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): Order, order! I fear, Mr. Khamisi, you have had your 30 minutes and I must call upon the next speaker.

Mr. Butler: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I am very glad that the great majority of hon. Members who have so far spoken in this debate have found it possible to support the Motion and welcome the Budget and I was intending to devote most of my short speech today to dealing with the one speech which did not support the Motion, that of the hon. Member for Nairobi North, which was also made during the absence from the Chamber of my hon. friend, the Minister for Finance. In his absence I will, however, deal rather more briefly than I had intended with his speech and will also try to deal with some of the financial points raised by other hon. Members, particularly those which I find it fairly easy to answer, leaving the more difficult conundrums to my hon. friend when he replies to the debate.

The hon. Member for the East Electoral Area was worried about the effect of the diesel oil duty, particularly on bus fares but, as stated by the hon. Member for Mombasa Area just now, there was a statement in the newspapers this morning to the effect that the bus company in Mombasa was not intending at the moment to raise bus fares. The effect of the increased duty on the cost of running buses has to be calculated in two ways. The first is a simple calculation of the increase in the cost of diesel oil and the second is the extent to which that is off set by the reduction in the amount of licence fee which has to be paid. No exact figure can be worked out as it depends obviously on the total mileage run by each vehicle. We have, however, calculated that as far as buses are concerned the increase amounts to something between 7 cents and 8 cents per mile. Well, I think it is obvious that if an increase of that order is made the increase per passenger mile can only be a fraction of 1 cent. It depends whether the bus is full or half full or one-third full, but the increase is in fact only a fraction of 1 cent per passenger mile.

Mr. Alexander: How do you collect 1 cent from a passenger?

Mr. Butler: The hon. Member has just raised the point with which I am about to deal. The position in Nairobi where bus fares have, I believe, now been raised is that the bus company secured the agreement of the Nairobi City Council in February, 1959, that is, well over a year ago, to increase all their fares by about 5 cents, including the fares to the African locations. They did not at that time avail themselves of this permission to raise the duty to the African locations, although they did raise fares in other areas in the city, and that again answers the point made by the hon. Member for Nairobi Area who suggested that the action that had been taken was discriminatory. The increase that has been made is no doubt partly due to the increase in the cost of diesel to the bus companies, but it is only the last straw and I do not think it improbable that the bus company would have found it necessary to raise these fares in accordance with the permission that they had obtained from the City Council over a year ago, and the need for which they had established by facts and figures that had come under the rigorous scrutiny of the City Treasurer.

The hon. Member for the East Electoral Area was also worried about the cost of transporting goats and sheep to Mombasa, but if, as I have explained, the effect of the new duty is only to increase by a fraction, probably by only one-quarter of one cent, the cost of transporting per passenger-mile, then I hope he will agree that when a double-decker lorry is full of sheep or goats the cost per goat-mile or per sheep-mile is a very small fraction, indeed, of one cent.

The hon. Member also suggested that we should have raised the additional revenue which is required by increasing the duties on what I might call the old favourites. He mentioned, I think, beer, cigarettes and whisky. But I would like to draw his attention to the effect of the action taken by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the United Kingdom when over a year ago he reduced the duty on beer. The result was that he got more revenue in the following year. There is clearly a point beyond which you cannot increase duties on what I agree with him are luxury products without affecting the consumption to such an extent that the net result is less and not more revenue.

There was one other major point that was made by the hon. Member for Nairobi North, by the hon. Member for the East Electoral Area, and also by the hon. Member for Kiambu, and that was the general criticism of the Budget that the expenditure figure was too high. The hon. Member for Kiambu even revived his old idea that I thought had been very faithfully dealt with in debate about a year ago, that an Economy Committee should be appointed. I would like to assure him, and all hon. Members, that the Estimates for 1960/61 which were presented on 12th April were subjected to the usual very careful and rigorous scrutiny by the Treasury, and the hon. Members might be interested to know that when we called for the Estimates last November we included in our instructions to all Accounting Officers the following: "Accounting Officers should prepare their estimates on the basis of maintaining the existing standards of services, recognizing that it will be necessary to reduce expenditure below the level given in their forecast estimates." This instruction was faithfully carried out but in [Mr. Butler] in spite of that the estimates when they arrived in the Treasury in February, excluding the £1,100,000 for the East African Land Forces, totalled £33,740,000 and there was nothing in those Estimates that was not a perfectly reasonable bid from a responsible Ministry for the money that they thought they needed in the 1960-61 financial year. Between that time and the publication of the Estimates they were reduced in discussion with the Treasury by over £1,700,000, and I think that does support my point that every effort was made, in co-operation with the Ministries and departments concerned, to eliminate any waste from these estimates. A further illustration of this point is that in fact in 1960/61, if we ignore passages formerly in one Vote and now split up in several Votes, and if we ignore also Emergency expenditure, there was actually a reduction in the amount which we are asking Council to vote in case of nine Votes, the adjustment in a further 14 Votes which is marginal, and there are a further three Votes which provide for what are statutory commitments in effect, that is to say, Public Debt, Pensions, and Local Government Contributions. This means that out of 37 Votes 26 show practically no increase or increases related to statutory commitments. I would like to give one more illustration of the care with which the Treasury did examine these estimates in many long, laborious days and even nights, and I would just like to inform Council that on one particular Vote I received from the Treasury officer concerned a minute totalling 63 pages with ten pages of appendices on one Vote. I do not honestly feel that this task of subjecting the estimates to detailed scrutiny can really be carried out effectively by a committee of this House.

The hon. Member for Kiambu referred to proposals made by Mr. Butler in the House of Commons for possible amendments to the procedure there for dealing with the Estimates of Expenditure, and, like him, I fear that I have not been able to obtain details of these proposals, but, as he is no doubt well aware, the debates in the House of Commons on Supply are used for the purpose of airing matters of policy at the request of the Opposition and there is now under the present House of Commons procedure none of the detailed examination of the estimates that we carry through here in our Committee of Supply, both on the Annual Estimates and on any Supplementary Estimates that may be presented during the year. Hon. Members, Sir, do I think, have full opportunity of challenging both the policy and the detail of our Estimates.

I would also like to emphasize that Budget making is a continuous process and Members may be astonished to learn that next month, in June, I will have to issue a circular calling for forecast estimates for the 1961/62 and for the 1962/63 financial years. These forecast estimates will be examined in the Treasury in August and instead of sitting back for six months' holiday after presenting these Estimates I fear the unfortunate officers of the Treasury will be back at the same grind again in another two months.

It was mentioned by the hon. Member for Nairobi North that he thought we were living in a fool's paradise and he illustrated his remarks by comparing the increase in expenditure with variations in the Nairobi cost of living index. I did not really see how the two things were in any way comparable because if he wished to relate expenditure to any particular item in our Statistical Bulletin he should surely have related it to the national income and we have published in the Sessional Paper No. 4 figures which show that in recent years the percentage of the national income that has been taken in taxation has remained very steady at about 14 per cent, and I see no reason why this percentage should rise as a result of the proposals that are now before the Council.

The growth in the services of the Government have rightly kept pace with the growth in the national income and have of course contributed to that growth.

Several hon. Members have mentioned education and I do not want to trespass on the field of the hon. Minister for Education but as one illustration of how far we have come I was reading the other day the document recently laid, the Education Annual Report for 1959, and I must confess that I was surprised to read that already the total number of African boys going to primary school had risen to about 96 per cent of the school-going population, which is a remarkable achievement.

The hon. Member for Nairobi North stated that in his four years on the Street in London—I am afraid that I could not quite follow that—he made only one trivial mistake. He did quote some figures—he did not quote many figures in this speech—from the cost of living index and I am afraid that he got one of them wrong although he would say, no doubt, that it was only a trivial mistake. It is merely that the figures he gave in this table for 1950 as 193 was, according to the table that appears in the Statistical Abstract, 203. I entirely accept that this was a trivial mistake, that it has been suggested to me by one of my legal friends that one of the reasons why the hon. Member was able to be so successful [Mr. Butler] in his four years on the Street in London may possibly have been that at that time there was no Street Offences Act.

To revert to more serious subjects, I would like finally in the few minutes left to mention briefly the general issues of confidence which has been touched on by a large number of Members, including the hon. Member for Ukamba, the hon. Member for Nairobi Area and the hon. Member for Kiambu. I stated myself in the speech on the adjournment Motion in March that it was obvious that political uncertainty does not provide the best possible climate for rapid economic development. We hear a lot of gloomy rumours these days of the terrible state to which we are about to descend, and as stated by my hon. friend the Minister, some capital has undoubtedly left the country and some investors may have been deterred. Some hon. Members may have noticed only the other day in the papers that a Canadian firm has decided to go ahead with their investment in an aluminium factory at the Coast, and it was not very many days before that when it was announced that the Cow and Gate Company are establishing a factory at Eldoret. Well there are two straws in the wind that show that the flow of capital is at least not all one way.

In another capacity I also sit on the Land Bank, and I have been astonished at the way in which the volume of applications to the Land Bank has increased over the last three months. The hon. Member—some hon. Members may not be astonished, and they may say, "Well, this is money merely which farmers wish to borrow from the Land Bank in order to send other money possibly out of the country." Some of the applications may be made with that object, but such applications are not approved by the Board of the Bank, and we have been able to approve genuine applications which we think will lead to development in this country to a larger extent than we were at the same time last year.

And a further strange fact which I think is worth mentioning at a time when people talk of possible trade recessions, is that in March this year the collection of import duty for Kenya was an all-time record in the history of the country. Well, you may say that traders were frightened of what my hon. friend the Minister for Finance would do to them, but anyway it is a fact that in that month, for the first time in our history, there was one million, one hundred-thousand pounds collected in import duty, mainly at Mombasa, and I think it is not a discouraging thing to know, and we are reasonably confident that our rather ambitious estimates of customs revenue this year will be achieved. It is also correct that for the first time for several years now, as hon. Members will see when the Exchequer accounts for the period up to the end of April are published, we have a surplus in the Exchequer of over a million pounds. We have gone through many years with deficits far exceeding that sum. So although some of the signs may not be favourable, I thought it right to mention one or two that were not unfavourable.

Of the hon. Members who spoke today, or later on yesterday, there is one small point I might deal with, made by the hon. Nominated Member, Dr. Adjala. He implied that we had completely frozen the public health grants to local authorities, but he will, no doubt, in due course refer to his copy of the Estimates, from which he will see that there has been an increase in the provision this year of, I think, fifty-one thousand pounds in the money provided for public health grants to local authorities. This is not as much as any local authorities would have liked us to provide; but it does represent, anyway, some increase on the present year's figure.

The hon. Member for Kiambu and the hon. Member for Uasin Gishu both termed this Budget as the "Railway Budget". I do not think I would agree with either of them on that. If it does anything, and it does a number of things, I think it is a Road Budget, because it will correct quite clearly an error in the way in which the arrangements approved in 1950 for providing the road authority with statutory revenue proportionate to the needs of the roads for maintenance, correct the way in which that method has gone wrong, owing to the great increase of small cars and the lower consumption of petrol. It will place the Road Authority in a position to finance the necessary maintenance expenditure very largely from their statutory revenue, and will also ensure that in future years that their statutory revenue will rise in proportion to the increasing use being made of our roads, and that, I think, is something which we should all welcome.

With those few words I support the Motion.

Capt. Hamley: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I find myself in my usual role of night-watchman, and I do not really know what to talk about, but that is a disability in this House to which I do not have the exclusive right, as far as I can see.

I would like to refer to the speech so ably read yesterday by the Member for Nairobi North. He is a fellow countryman of mine from Cornwall, and therefore he will perhaps forgive me if I ask him, "What was the point of it?" What did it do? Where did it get us? Did it make two blades of grass grow where only one grew before?

PRAYERS

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

SOUTH AFRICAN OFFICE IN NAIROBI

Mr. Mhoya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to give notice of the following Motions:—

THAT this Council draws the attention of the Government to a statement appearing in the East African Standard issue of 5th May, and to a radio broadcast by the Kenya Broadcasting Service of the previous evening, to the effect that an office to attract and encourage European farmers and businessmen to leave Kenya with a view to settling in South Africa, is to be opened in Nairobi on 1st June.

The Council draws the attention of the Government to the recent brutal murders in South Africa arising from the racial policies of the Union Government and therefore to the fears, suspicion and friction that such an office and its activities may cause among the peoples of Kenya.

The Council also draws attention to the possible adverse effect that propaganda from that office may have on the economy of this country and therefore calls on the Government to take appropriate action to stop the opening of such an office.

DISBANDING OF KENYA REGIMENT

THAT this Council notes that a sum of £208,000 is set aside in the 1960/61 Budget for the Kenya Regiment.

The Council being aware that this Regiment is a racial body, the existence of which is inconsistent with the declared policy and aims of the Government and people of this country, and constitutes therefore a constant point of fear, suspicion and friction, calls upon the Government to take necessary steps to disband the Regiment and to replace it with a system of military training consistent with needs of this country and open to all its people.

Sir Charles Markham: Mr. Deputy Speaker, on a point of order, it has been in our Standing Orders, Sir, that when a subject is being discussed by this Council—in this case, Sir, the Annual Estimates—that no other matter may be raised because of the notice of Motion has been given,

[Capt. Hamley]

I really cannot understand, Sir, why these election speeches are made in this House. They do not do any good. They achieve nothing, and I must say they bore a lot of us exceedingly.

One other point I would like to cover in the last three minutes of this day, and that is to ask in a very friendly way indeed if our African Elected Members cannot, in their public speeches, reduce this emotionalism which generates, and be more constructive. And I would like to say from my viewpoint—

Mr. Hassan: (Inaudible).

Capt. Hamley: I beg your pardon? I would like to say that from my viewpoint, what this country needs now is a campaign to make quite sure that the people who are going to represent all the races in this House in the next Parliament are good, sound, common-sense people, and not people who are so emotional, or who are so unlit to be in this House that they can be carried away by slogans. It does seem to me that the cult of slogans is growing in this country, and it must be evident to everybody that what we need is a good common-sense working party here. I often think that we should have here a Minister for Common Sense. I put it to you, Sir, that this is a thing which is very much needed. I should like him to be able to share your responsibilities to a certain extent, Sir, and jump up when some of these speeches are being made and say, "Is this really common sense?"

Mr. Mhoya: To all races?

Capt. Hamley: To all races, yes. I am multi-racial—I am not talking to any one race here. There is a lack of common sense, not only in this House at times but in the whole of the country, and some of the things I hear in this House I must say are far from holding any basis of common sense, and they certainly, as I said before, are not getting us anywhere at all. And now, Sir, I think I have played out time, and I support the Motion.

ADJOURNMENT

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I adjourn the Council until 2.15 p.m. tomorrow afternoon, Thursday, 5th May.

The House rose at thirty minutes past Six o'clock.

[Sir Charles Markham] in this case by the Minister for Finance. In order, to avoid this particular Motion—the second one suggested by my hon. friend the Member for Nairobi Area remaining for an indefinite period on the Order Paper, would you tomorrow rule whether such an order be in order? I am not expressing any views on the Motion, Sir, but it does create a most dangerous principle when in the middle of a Budget debate we can have a Motion concerning Estimates we are at present debating.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I shall rule on the matter tomorrow.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

MOTION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

Resumption of debate interrupted on 4th May, 1960

Major Roberts: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I feel that the hon. Member, the Minister for Finance, must be getting quite embarrassed by the congratulations which have poured out on him from both sides of this House. I am sorry he is not here at the moment to receive my congratulations on the clarity with which he produced his Budget. But, Sir, that does not imply that I do not intend to criticize him or to deal with some of the matters raised by him.

Sir, I realize that with any new form of taxation, whether it be increased taxation or new taxation, it does provoke criticism and I realize too that to ask for some particular taxation to be removed must imply that one accepts some other form of taxation as naturally the budget has to be met. But, Sir, I do contend that taxation measures which will increase the cost of road transport are wrong in this country under the prevailing conditions. Sir, the cost of road transport in Kenya is exceptionally heavy due to the poor state and conditions of our roads which do cause excessive wear and tear on vehicles. Sir, I agree with the Minister that our roads have improved considerably and that those responsible should receive our thanks for doing what they have been able to do within the limited finance available. However, Sir, there is still a long way to go and no one could dispute the fact that due to poor roads the cost of road transport is out of all proportion to other overheads and the cost of road transport in other countries. I contend, therefore, that the Minister is wrong in introducing increased taxation which will put those costs even higher than they are today.

Now, Sir, business people, whether they be in agriculture or whether they be in commerce have all been trying to bring down their overheads with regard to road transport and they have done so thanks to the increased efficiency of the diesel engine. Now, Sir, they find that those efforts have been in vain. The private individual to whom a car in this country is an essential is also trying to bring down his cost of living by going in for the smaller car and indeed for the diesel car. The new measures proposed will negate all these efforts and as a result, we have already seen in Nairobi that the bus fares have been increased. I understand that bakers will have to put up the cost of a loaf in order to meet the new costs they have got to shoulder in regard to road transport. Sir, it is perfectly true, however, that the Minister has made concessions in the case of agriculture and saw milling, but, Sir, I feel that that rebate is not really practicable. Perhaps he does not quite understand the methods of accounting on farms, or, may I say, the lack of accounting: the farmer may own a diesel tractor, a diesel lorry, and stationary diesel engines, but he does not keep accurate costing as regard the amount of fuel used by each of those machines, and it will be extremely difficult for him to be able to say exactly how much of his dieselene is used by the tractor, and it will open up the way, Sir, for abuse. I am not asking him to remove that—far from it—but I am trying to point out, Sir, that there are difficulties in the whole of this measure of taxation which will make it a very difficult thing to administer. Indeed, it may be costly to administer because of the staff required to add up all the forms which are returned by the farmers claiming their rebate on the amount used in a tractor. Sir, the Minister may say that that system worked with kerosene. It is perfectly true that it did work, but kerosene is a fuel which is only used in tractors and in few stationary engines and therefore it was a perfectly simple matter for a farmer to make a return of the amount of kerosene that he had in fact used in his tractors. Sir, I would therefore ask the Minister to consider very carefully this new measure of taxation which, I think, is going to cause the cost of road transport to go up very considerably.

Now, Sir, I want to turn to the question of housing, and I would like Government to consider whether it is not possible to find a less expensive means of financing the building of African houses through the medium of local authorities. Local authorities are finding it increasingly difficult to lease houses to Africans to be built through loans made by the local government authority and the Central Housing Board. The rate of interest charged by these authorities is so high that the local authorities are finding it extremely difficult to be able to lease their houses to Africans through the purchase scheme at a rent which the average African can afford. This is serious as the need and demand for African houses is increasing, it is indeed very great. Now, Sir, I understand that the current rates of interest charged by the Local Loans Authority are 6 per cent but that the Central Housing Board charges 6½ per cent. I cannot see why there should be any difference between the two rates, but I would like an explanation from the Government on that. I wonder if it would not be better and more economic if these loans were all made through the medium of one Authority. I am told that the rent necessary for a house costing £300 to build over a repurchase scheme of 40 years is, at 6½ per cent, 35/6d. per month, but that at 6 per cent it would be 33/3d., at 5 per cent 29/3d. and at 4 per cent 25/3d. Now, Sir, one can see that if the rate of interest could be brought down it would mean a saving of Sh. 10 per month in the Africans' rent, and Sh. 10 per month is a very great deal.

Sir, it can be argued that £300 is too high for the cost of building a house, but it must be remembered that that house has got to last for 40 years, because that is the time it would take the tenant to complete the purchase. It would not be of much value to him, if at the end of 40 years it is not worth living in, and therefore a substantial house must be built, and I gather that £300 is the very least for which that can be done.

Sir, I gather that Government claim that they cannot lend money at a lower rate of interest than 6½ per cent and that to do so would be creating a subsidy, or it would mean that some other service will have to be curtailed. Now that may be necessary because it is a question of priorities, and I consider that African housing should be a very high priority, as it is the way and means of creating a higher standard of living. An alternative course is increased taxation, which would mean that the cost will fall in the main on the European and Asian communities, though the purpose will be for Africans. However, unless something is done, the development of African housing schemes in some areas may cease, or there will have to be an increase in wages to enable Africans to afford the rates. And that again, Sir, would fall on the employers who, in the main, are the Europeans and Asians and, of course, it would fall on Government expenditure because both Central Government and local government do have to provide housing for their employees. Sir, it is really, therefore, a vicious circle, and the problem is very great and so important that I do ask Government to realize the urgency of it and endeavour to take some action about it. I understand that Government are able to make loans to local authorities for other works, such as sewerage, at a lower rate of interest. I wonder, therefore, why it should be more costly to loan money for these housing schemes.

When the Central Housing Board came into being it was given a quarter of a million interest free loan, so I understand, and I gather this loan was used by the Central Housing Board to make loans to local authorities for African Housing, and the rate of interest charge has gone up from about 4½ per cent to 6½ per cent. But this was to have been a revolving fund. I would like to know if it is still revolving. In fact, if it is still in existence, it should, in fact, have been expanded by the amortization rates which have been paid by tenants, and there should indeed today be something of it left, but perhaps those balances have been used up in overheads of the Central Housing Board. It is, therefore, to my mind, open to consideration as to whether the Central Housing Board should not be abolished, and its work carried out by the Local Government Loans Authority. Local authorities are not permitted to borrow money themselves, and in the instance of one in my constituency, I know they are anxious to do so. They are not permitted to make short-term loans to each other, and so I gather, once again, they wish to do so and see benefit in it. I notice that the Minister for Local Government is wagging his head.

Now, Sir, I want to turn to the question of pay for civil servants. Some alarm and despondency is felt in the ranks of junior civil servants in regard to the statement that there will be no increase in their salaries. I do not think that for one moment the Minister meant to imply that no consideration whatsoever would be given in certain cases, but that is the way it was being interpreted. Some of these civil servants today have considerable fear as to their future, and some are apprehensive about their position. It is most important, Sir, that the best type of man and woman is recruited for our Civil Service, and more important that those who are with us are encouraged to remain here and will not look for the opportunity of getting better pay by going into commerce and industry. Therefore, it is essential that conditions are made attractive enough to encourage people not only to join our Civil Service, but for those who are here to remain with us.

Now, Sir, the field of education is one illustration of this point. Here I feel there is a definite need for the increase of salaries, particularly in relation to teachers at primary schools. I understand that there is a shortage of such teachers, and at these schools I am told that the low salaries paid to the teachers is the reason that there is a shortage. A master or a mistress of a secondary school, who has the requisite qualifications, can earn up to £1,863 a year, whereas at the primary school the top rates are £1,245 for a master and £1,161 for a mistress, and these figures are not very attractive in Kenya today with the very high cost of living. It may be argued that the primary school teacher need not be so highly qualified as one at a secondary school. But I contend that it is absolutely essential that those primary school teachers are efficient. It is the grounding received at a primary school that brings out the brightest pupils at the secondary school, and efficiency is often more important than mere academic qualifications. In considering the salary required to attract persons into the Civil Service comparisons must be made with what those people could earn if they entered ordinary civil, commercial life. I am told that a junior assistant in a bank starts at a salary of £1,500 a year, whereas his counterpart, the primary school teacher, only after a period of time can reach the maximum of £1,245. Now I think that there we have a case where Government should consider an increase in salary.

Whilst mentioning education I find that parents of children at European schools are complaining that the increase in school fees is due to the amount of remission that has to be paid to those people who cannot afford to pay the whole thing. The complaint is not that the remission should not be given, but it is a fact that the burden falls on those parents who by necessity have to send their children to boarding schools, for it is only the boarding fees that go up and not the tuition fees, and I feel that the burden of the cost of remission of fees should fall on the community as a whole. It is difficult to do this without a separate education tax, which to my mind has great merit, and I would ask the Minister to consider this very seriously. Still dealing with the remission of fees, apparently there is a desire too for a community to stand the cost of its own education, shared by some Africans. At any rate in my constituency. And, Sir, with your permission, I would like to read a very short extract from a letter that I have received on that subject, because I think it illustrates my point:—

"At a meeting of the C.C.E.A. Nakuru District Schools Committee held on 22nd March, 1960, the following resolution was passed unanimously. It was resolved that letters should be sent to all Rift Valley Members of Legislative Council drawing attention to the request that an educational rate be levied and asking for their help in legislating for such a rate.

This resolution was a result of a meeting of 100 African Chairmen and Secretaries of Local School Committees held on 12th March, at which the following resolution was passed unanimously.

This meeting, representing 62 local school committees of schools with over 10,000 African children on roll, requests that urgent action be taken for an educational rate to be levied on all adult Africans paying poll tax in Nakuru County. The money so raised should be used to improve African educational facilities in Nakuru County.

The Chairmen have since called parents' meetings at their respective schools, and the total votes to date in support of such an educational rate are 3,386 for, with only 348 against."

I think, therefore, Sir, there is some demand for this community education tax. Now, Sir, although I welcome the introduction of Boards of Governors I am apprehensive as to their introduction in regard to overheads. It is a custom in Kenya for some people to make a small income out of attendance allowances and traveling allowances, and I hope, therefore, that these Boards of Governors will be comprised of public-spirited people who will not expect any remuneration or allowances for their services, and I hope too, Sir, that Parkinson's first law will not be introduced, and that it will not mean the setting up of large secretariats to handle the administration of the Boards of Governors. I feel that their secretarial work could be undertaken by existing facilities.

Now, Sir, finally, I want to make reference to the criticism which has been levelled at me in this House regarding a statement I am supposed to have made about £900,000 of capital leaving the country a week. Sir, I have never answered these criticisms until today for the very simple reason that a number of people, in fact 99 per cent of the people who have spoken to me about it, have said, "Of course, you are really right, but Government will not admit it". Sir, I would like to be quite clear as to what, in fact, I actually said at Nakuru. I did not claim that I knew £900,000 was leaving the country a week. I said, "I have heard that £900,000 is leaving the country a week", and if that is true, then all I can say is that it is disastrous for the economy of this country, and I continued to make a plea for people not to put their money out of the country.

Mr. Alexander: There is not £900,000 a week that can leave Kenya.

Major Roberts: Perhaps you know, I feel that there could be more than £900,000 available in the country somehow, otherwise it would be rather difficult to produce a Budget for £32,000,000. But, Sir, instead of receiving some thanks for asking people not to put their money out of the country I received abuse, and was told that I had created a rumour.

Now, Sir, in a debate on the adjournment of this House, Government denied that any money was leaving this country and said that there was absolutely no evidence to support such a rumour. They further implied that the £900,000 might be mixed up with this question of the sum of about £1,000,000 a week which is normal outflow in the way of business from this country. But now the Minister for Finance since his return from London said that there had been some outflow but that the figure that had been mentioned was highly exaggerated. Therefore, Sir, he admits that there was some truth in the rumour I referred to and it therefore must have had some foundation.

Now, Sir, he also states that whilst capital had flowed into the country, there has been some falling off of it due to a time of change and uncertainty. Now here I would like to refer to another rumour which is just starting to circulate to give the Minister the opportunity to correct it now if it is wrong. Now that rumour is this, that after his predecessor removed the death duties last year, there was some considerable inflow of capital from people wishing to remit money into the country to avoid death duties. It took some months for it to filter round the United Kingdom, around the bank managers and lawyers to know what was happening in Kenya and to advise people who had money to leave to invest it in Kenya in order that little Willy should get the full benefit of his inheritance and the rumour states that just before Lancaster House this inflow into the country had reached its peak but since Lancaster House it had fallen right off. I merely tell the Minister that in order that he can deny it.

Sir, it is useless to deny that there is not a lack of confidence in Kenya today, but that confidence must be restored. It can first be done if an adequate financial scheme to stabilize land was introduced. It can also be done by accepting certain modifications to the Lancaster House proposals but it can easily be done by a categorical assurance that premature independence will not be given to Kenya. Government and Government alone can do these things and I appeal to them to do so and that they should do so quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support.

The Minister for Housing, Common Services, Probation and Approved Schools (Mr. Amalemba): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to congratulate the Minister for Finance, as many of the people in the House have done, but for a different reason. I would like to congratulate him for setting the tone of the debate in this House, such a moderate and friendly tone that everyone who has spoken so far has been very reasonable and very friendly. That is as it should be in this House, we are not here to quarrel but to voice or air our views and comments. Except for my friend from Nairobi North who was a little extravagant in the use of his mother tongue, everybody else tried to use the opportunity given to speak to the point and to make the House realize some of the things that we really come here to do.

When my hon. friend Captain Hamley spoke, he referred to all of us trying to carry our commonsense with us and make use of the commonsense, he even went as far as suggesting that a ministry for commonsense should be created. Well, I would like to tell him that commonsense is not very common, and therefore there is no need to create a ministry to deal with it. When we find commonsense as common as we see other things, then it may be the time to create a ministry to deal with it. However, the point is that we should carry as much of our commonsense as possible and make use of it.

The Member for Nairobi Area referred to Kibera in his speech and said that the settlers in Kibera—settlers, mind you—must be given the right to live as any other settlers in this country. I hope he did not refer to the word "settler" in the same sense that many of us know. However, I am sure that the Sudanese in Kibera have the right to live as any other residents in this country and I say they have the right to live like their neighbours next door, the residents in the Woodley Estate. Woodley Estate has got roads, light, water and all these other social services, which Kibera has not got, and it is Government's view that they should live like any other residents and that they should be provided with all those services which are available to other residents just next door. They have no roads in Kibera, there are no lights, there is no water and that is a very serious problem to a residential area. The local authorities who are interested in seeing that Kibera is looked after properly have refused to consider taking over the care of Kibera until Government brings it to the standard acceptable to the Local Authority's health requirements. Now Government is trying to introduce a scheme that will bring Kibera to a standard acceptable to the health requirements of modern times and yet some friends of ours have gone round and told some wrong stories to Kibera residents. They have given the wrong story and said that Government intended to evict them and take over Kibera and drive away these ex-askaris who have worked very faithfully and loyally for our Government both in the then, "His Majesty's Forces", and even during this time as loyal citizens in the country.

Government is trying to get over this problem by starting a scheme—a housing scheme—which will provide to Kibera residents the same social facilities and amenities that are available to the other and neighbouring areas, residential areas.

I quite agree with the Member for Nairobi Area that these people should be allowed to live like any other residents and that means giving them the necessities of life that are available to other residential areas. This scheme which is proposed is not final, it has been put forward so that the residents in Kibera can give us their views, both on design and layout or if they have any alternative suggestions to make before we embark on the scheme. Therefore, consultation is there and we are still waiting for them. There is something very distressing which I will refer to later on.

Some people may think that Kibera is an isolated, small place where people from Sudan are living. Kibera was designated a military reserve in 1904—Mr. Deputy Speaker I was not born then. Between 1912 and 1928 various Sudanese ex-askaris were given permission to live in the King's African Rifles shamba and to build houses—well in modern times we would call them huts. In 1938 Government made it clear to the Sudanese that every old soldier was to be allowed to live in Kibera until he died. If a widow survived him the widow would be allowed to live there until she died; when both have died the hut must be pulled down and the heir given compensation. But Government have not done this, we do not intend to treat the Sudanese in this way at all. We are not so inhuman. Mr. Mboya said that the present proposal for replanning and rebuilding Kibera was done without consultation with the Sudanese. Well, Sir, the first time this matter was tackled was in 1945, I was in the Army then. In 1949 a survey was carried out and various factual information compiled on which to base a resettlement scheme. It was decided that the Sudanese should receive very, very generous treatment in any plan of their settlement. Compulsory eviction, therefore, did not arise and if it did full compensation plus disturbance would be taken into account. In 1948 a scheme was proposed to the Executive Council but the Sudanese did not like the scheme and they asked for repatriation to Sudan, but the Sudan Government would not accept them on the grounds that they were so detribalized and used to the easy climate of Kenya, that to fit them into either North or South Sudan would be impossible. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I take it that when they were not accepted into their own country they became citizens of Kenya and they should regard themselves as part and parcel of this Colony—Kenya.

I think it would be wrong for us to consider the Sudanese in Kibera as foreigners in this country. They have been integrated into our society and they have taken very responsible places and positions in this country, both in the military and in various firms, particularly the transport firms. They do a very useful service in this country as ex-askaris they make good watchmen, bus conductors and bus inspectors. You find everywhere a Sudanese is holding a responsible position, which to me, infers that they are citizens and part and parcel of the communities in this country.

The present scheme which Government proposes to introduce and which is very, very much overdue has not been finalized and my Ministry is waiting for the Sudanese to comment on the scheme and to make alternative suggestions, in fact the proposals are being treated by the Government as the basis on which more and meaningful consultations must be entered into with the Sudanese. We intend to build one or several types of houses for them to look at in Kibera to see whether they can give us any comments in the way of design and alteration, so that we take it into account when the scheme is embarked upon. We would like them to feel that they are entering and going to live in houses that they like and which are in keeping with the traditional Sudanese customs.

The Member for Nairobi Area said that he had intervened, well I hope that his intervention was in favour of the good cause for which this scheme is intended.

But, Sir, while I am still waiting for the Sudanese to come and air their views on this matter I read in a Sunday paper the following: "Kibera.—It is not surprising that Government has produced the plan to redevelop Kibera, the sprawling village which lies beyond Woodley Estate on the outskirts of Nairobi and is occupied primarily by Sudanese ex-soldiers and their families. . . . The residents intended to seek an interview with the Governor and if the negotiations failed it was the intention of the Kibera people to send a delegation to explain their case to the Government and the people of the Republic of Sudan." (Remember what I said happened in 1948. . . . they are trying to do that.) "The delegation will also call upon President Nasser in Cairo because his Government was responsible about 70 years ago in handing over their grandfathers of the present Kibera residents to the Government with a view to helping in the opening up of this country." That is strange,

[The Minister for Housing]

Mr. Deputy Speaker! I always hear about the Europeans and the Asians taking part in the opening of this country. This is a new one to me, that the Sudan Government sent Sudanese to come and help in the opening of this country. Why did they not send a sufficient number?

I have no quarrel, Sir, with the Sudanese who wish to go back to their country of origin, but I must point out that Kenya is not under Colonel Nasser, and in this case he has no business to intervene or interfere with our domestic and internal running of our Kenya. All we are concerned with is that the Sudanese in Kibera cannot be left to live in such appalling conditions while my Ministry is busy building and improving housing conditions all over the country. I am quite prepared to discuss with the elders and representatives of Kibera on the differences or any fears that they may have, but I will not let them live in those appalling conditions, thereby discriminating against them when they are citizens and part and parcel of the community in this country. But if there are any who are anxious to go back to Nasser I urge them to go quickly.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Uasin Gishu made her speech, a very constructive speech, and made some comments on one of my new Portfolios in the Ministry, that is the approved schools. My friend, the Minister for Education, prefers to call them "disapproved schools". She asked some very definite questions, but I will try my best to meet her points and if she is not satisfied we can then expect perhaps to have a private session in my Ministry with all my experts to deal with her technicalities. She has mentioned, in particular, the Othaya Approved School. I think Kikuyu call it "Odhaya" and not Othaya. Kikuyu will excuse our pronunciation; it is not our own word. It is Othaya anyway. Mrs. Hughes, like many of us who have children, is worried about the future of the coming generation, that is, the children. The children that we are looking after now are going to be the future generation and naturally as a parent—as I hope most of us are here—we would like to see our children grow up into a good and respectable nation. But her worries, I think, can be met. I will just give her briefly the explanation of what Othaya Approved School is.

Under the present law of Kenya, children can only be sent to an approved school as a result of being found guilty of an offence by the court. Othaya, which was originally a work camp, was designated by Legal Notice No. 93 of 1959 made under the Emergency (Welfare of Children) Regulations, 1954, as an "approved institution" for children in need of care, under the name Othaya Youth Camp. When the Emergency came to an end its legal status had to be redefined in order to keep it in existence, and it was therefore declared an approved school by a legal notice (Legal Notice No. 90 of 6th February, 1960) which the hon. and gracious lady referred to in her speech. There was no other place to which the children housed at Othaya could be sent and it would have been very wrong merely to send them away to fend for themselves as best they could. The children at present at Othaya are either cases left over from the Emergency or cases who have been committed to the school by the courts as in need of care and under the Prevention of Cruelty and Neglect of Children Ordinance No. 2 of 1955, to the personal care of the officer in charge as a fit person to take care of those children. There are no children at Othaya who have been convicted of offences in the courts. When Othaya was declared an approved school it was arranged administratively that no children convicted in the courts should be sent there, and so no such cases have been, in fact, sent there. None of the children at Othaya have been sent there on conviction of any offence.

She asked me whether Government got approval from experts in child welfare when Othaya became an approved school. Othaya was gazetted as an approved school.

Mrs. Hughes: I thank the hon. Minister for giving way. I think I asked whether approval had been sought from the "fit person" into whose charge they had been put, not from voluntary societies.

The Minister for Housing, Common Services, Probation and Approved Schools (Mr. Amalemba): Thank you, I misunderstood. That was done. So I do not need to go into the other question. I think she also referred in her speech to the methods of discipline at Othaya, whether they were the same as for an ordinary approved school. The methods of discipline at an approved school are very largely a matter for the individual officer in charge. It should be borne in mind that the discipline at an approved school is not very different from that in an ordinary school. She was also worried about mixing children who have committed offences and those who have not committed any offences. In the United Kingdom the law provides that children who are in need of care and who have not committed an offence can be sent to an approved school since it is considered that many children who appear before the court either on a charge or because they are considered to be in need of care have behaviour problems which can suitably be dealt with at an approved school.

[The Minister for Housing]

There is, after all, a very thin dividing line between a hungry child who has been caught stealing a chicken and the child who for the same reason has stolen but has not been fortunate enough to be caught, or shall I say unfortunate. The over-riding consideration is the need of the individual child. I think she touched upon a point which might perhaps be more conveniently tackled when we deal with my Ministry's Vote. She was trying to transfer the £27,000 from Approved Schools and Remand Homes to Community Development. The gross increase in expenditure on probation services, approved schools and remand homes in 1960/61 as compared with 1959/60 is £42,521. Of this sum about £27,000 is due to the absorption into the Colony Estimates of expenditure previously charged to the Emergency Fund. No transfer of any part of this provision to Community Development could be contemplated. Remand homes have got to exist so that children may be kept there while they are waiting to appear before the court. The approved schools are performing a most valuable service in the training and educating of young people who are in great need of help.

I think she also asked whether the local authority, in this case the Nyeri African District Council, were consulted about the land on which the school is. The answer is no. The area concerned is 10 acres which were set aside under Government Notice No. 605 of 1955 as Ohaya Works Camp. When it was no longer needed for this purpose it was gazetted by Legal Notice No. 91 of 1959 in exercise of powers under the Emergency Welfare of Children's Regulations as an approved institution under the title of Ohaya Youth Camp. Eventually, under another Notice, No. 90 of 1960, it was declared an approved school under the Juveniles Ordinance of 1954. Ohaya opened as an approved institution on 1st April, 1959. When the land was set aside in 1955 compensation was paid and the area is now part of the area of the Ohaya administrative substation. There was therefore no reason why the African District Council should be consulted. (Do I sound very cruel, my hon. friend? No, I don't.)

The other point that she raised was on the Scorer Report. How do you pronounce it? Briefly, Miss Scorer, the chief inspector of the Home Office was invited to come to Kenya to make recommendations with regard to juveniles arrested or detained during the Emergency. The principle reason for the Government inviting her to come out was the series of allegations made by Miss Fletcher, of whom I think everyone knows, in connexion with juveniles at the Kamiti Prison Camp and other places. The main centre for juveniles at the time of Miss Fletcher was the Wamumu Camp which, in the absence of other suitable camps, was used to house the following classes of juveniles: detainees; approved schoolboys; boys held under the Governor's Pleasure Order; waifs and strays picked up for the most part in Nairobi. Miss Scorer actually recommended that juveniles in need of care and protection, that is, those in category four above, should not be housed in the same camp as delinquents falling under categories one, two and three. Government agreed with this recommendation and took over the Ohaya Camp in Nyeri District and turned it into a children's home, naming it the Ohaya Approved Institution. Wamumu continued to be used for the other three categories, but in the course of time the detainees and those held under the Governor's Pleasure Orders were all released, leaving only the approved schoolboys. Wamumu is, therefore, simply an approved school. During the latter half of 1959 it was decided that Emergency funds would not be available after 1st July, 1960, to finance the Ohaya Approved Institution. At the same time, with the repeal of our Emergency legislation, it could no longer be used as a place to commit juveniles as hitherto. It was therefore decided to gazette it as an approved school but administratively it was agreed that boys committed to an approved school would not be admitted and the waifs and strays should not be prematurely removed. Those are the conditions, so far as I know them, and we would be very interested to give a further explanation if the hon. Member requires it.

Now, to deal briefly with the hon. Member for the Rift Valley, he is as worried as myself on the question of cheap housing for Africans. The provision of cheap housing is our main objective in the Ministry of Housing. We have in mind the knowledge that the tenant to occupy these houses will be people whose pockets, I will say again as I have said before, have got many holes. They put money in and the money passes through, and therefore they cannot really save enough money to afford the more expensive houses. Therefore our objective and our main emphasis is to build cheap and best houses. The combination of those two in many commercial firms is very difficult—to combine articles being cheap and yet the best. But that is our aim.

The money that the Local Government Loans Authority got was received at a time when money was cheap. They got this money in 1957 and they got it very cheap. They could afford to stay at that rate of interest of 6 per cent. They had also a very large proportion of that money given free as a grant. The Central Housing Board got its money very recently and unfortunately this money was a little expensive and we have had a very little amount of it given free as a grant. The people that I think have seen the hon. Member I suspect must be the Nakuru County Council whom I have already had discussions with. They are very reluctant to take up any housing scheme and their only excuse is that my money is more expensive than that of the Local Government Loans Authority. I do not know whether they have attempted to go to the Local Government Loans Authority for that cheap money at a very little or small difference of 1 per cent. But the point is this. It is practice of the Board to lend money at a rate which is 1 per cent higher than the rate at which it gets its money from the Development Fund. Accordingly the current rate of interest for the Board's loans is 6½ per cent. The additional half is to cover the expenses of the Board, that is, salaries, travelling allowances, passages, gratuities, etc., and the Board has its own staff, an architect, an engineer, a secretary and a stenographer. The whole of the salaries, etc., are paid by the Board. In addition the Board reimburse to the Government part of the salaries—but I am being warned to continue, Sir—of certain members of the Ministry's staff, an accountant; a clerk, and an architectural draughtsman. If the Nakuru County Council whom I suspect must be having this trouble would like to have a further discussion I would very, very much welcome it and ask my staff to have a talk with them. But it would be very nice to be able to borrow at lower rates for housing, if we could. But we cannot. If we subsidize the rate for housing we should have to find money for the subsidy, and I think the hon. Member would be the last to support that Government or this House should vote money to subsidize any housing scheme, particularly in a racial and discriminative way. The only way to find the money could be either by reducing services or increasing taxation, which I am sure many of us would not like. I hope that those explanations have cleared his doubts and offer to meet the hon. Member in order to allay his fears, and if it is the Nakuru County Council, to see whether we cannot satisfy them.

Thank you.

Mr. Travadi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I join hands with my other hon. colleagues in congratulating the Financial Secretary on his maiden Financial Statement, though no doubt I have my own observations and there are many points I will be differing from, but there are also certain paragraphs with which I will probably start my proposed Motion on the examinations of the various departmental organizations. So I am justified in congratulating him.

The first thing after reading through the Statement which I found was more particularly as something always goes into my mind about education, I found out to my surprise that within the last year or the current year, I should say, 1959/60, the Minister for Finance expected a sort of a surplus of something like over four-hundred and thirty-thousand pounds. Well, the first thing that struck me straight away, Sir, was that how is it that this whole statement does not contain a word of the abolition of that notorious increase in the tuition fees in the secondary schools when all the Unofficial Members on this side of the House were unanimous in condemning it, and even so far only two days before the Mombasa Indian Association passed a vote of No Confidence in the Mombasa Members who are sitting on the Advisory Council on Asian Education and asked them to resign straight away. Things are no doubt coming to a head and I was expecting that something ought to have been included in here. These increases, Sir, the major portions of them, something like in the neighbourhood of about £60,000, such a big amount as that, according to my working was to come from the non-European side, and the provision in the development scheme of about six secondary schools for the Asian community, I should say for the Asian, yes, coming costing to the average of about £52,000 to £53,000 each, meaning that by doing that, during the next four, five or six years, the cost of these various schools will be met only by the tuition fees. This appears, Sir, that whatever the money is provided for the development scheme is practically from 1960, January, onwards, to be recovered from the tuition fees. I am not talking about the recurrent costs at all, Sir.

There is another thing, Sir, which has been touched upon by the hon. and gallant Member, Major Roberts, about the Boards of Governors and the handing over of the Secondary Government schools to the various communities concerned. I do remember, Sir, without disclosing the confidential contents of the Lancaster House deliberations, the very proposal did come forward and was circulated practically to every delegate, and we on our side, the Asian Members, decided to oppose it tooth and nail, and even if it came to a climax we thought we would side with the Africans instead of siding with the Europeans; we hated, and hated from the very bottom of our hearts, to maintain any mono-racial schools in this part of Africa.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, we have always been opposed to this type of mono-racial schools, and on the contrary, we are ready, provided accommodation and sufficient staff is available, to throw open our own schools to Africans and anybody

[Mr. Travadi] wishing to come in. As the Members are aware, the education of the Asian children has hardly attained the required standard. It has not got sufficient trained staff. In one of the answers that was given to my question I found out to my greatest surprise that out of about 60, I should say, aided schools, 44 schools have hardly any trained teachers at all, and that was the tragedy of the whole show, and to perpetuate such a thing I think nobody would come forward to do that; and the double sessions are still on. Our Minister has promised to abolish it very soon and I questioned the words "very quickly" and I said, "What do you mean by that word 'quickly' because it is very pregnant," in reply he defined in real English what that physical pregnancy was. There are no playing fields in sufficient numbers and it is having a very great bearing on the health of the children. There are no assembly halls attached to certain schools, and everybody is aware that the money approved by this very House has not been spent in the past; and I am still waiting for the details of the £410,000—the balance of the current capital expenditure—which are likely to be spent by the end of June. I would like to have the full details as to what part of the educational items it is being spent on. Only the day before yesterday I had a complaint from Kajado Indian Association that they have been trying and trying from 1955 onwards for a capital grant and those Indian Association people have been to our hon. Minister for Works too. He too has been trying his level best, and the only thing that has been promised, from what I can gather, is that only £500 has been given. Yesterday one man came running into my office and said "There is another letter coming in. Probably there is something interesting in that—there is some increase in that £500 amount." This is the position, Sir. The money is there. The money was there. But there is somebody sitting on that money like a snake, a cobra, who does not part with the money at all; I am sorry to say so. Mr. Deputy Speaker, there are school buildings in small villages, aided school buildings, and if anybody looks at them they are merely rotten and dilapidated buildings and if these buildings are to be handed over to the Boards of Governors it would be, I should say, a sort of tragedy.

Sir, since last year I have been trying here to press for an extension of compulsory education for the Asian children and a few facts have come out which definitely say that there are not a few children without education but that they run into thousands—3,400 Asian children are at the moment going without education. It has been told to us that about 2,400 do not go to school at all, and the remaining 1,000 cannot be catered for.

It is not necessary they say to force them to go to school because they do not want to extend those compulsory provisions to them, and I am sorry, Sir, but I have no other alternative but to bring these facts to the notice of this House again, as the more you shout the possibility is that the more you probably may be heard, because the House should always be led to know—and there are certain gentlemen who hardly know what is going on with the Indian and Asian education so that the Minister may be justified in asking for money, more money, from the Treasury or the Minister for Finance, so that all our small grievances may be remedied.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the time has come that now with the changing times we want Swahili to be introduced into schools, in our Asian schools, and I would just throw that out as a suggestion so that the Minister may know what is running in the minds of the Asian people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would not like to go into the imposition of tax in detail as many hon. Members have gone very carefully into it; and it appears that passengers in the buses particularly will have to pay more, and I am not worried about those who go to the hospitals—it is probable that there are very few poor people who can afford to go to the hospitals because they have their treatment at home, but those who use the buses—I think the majority of the population are Africans—I think that tax falls more on Africans than on anybody else. Well, I am not worried about that. But there is one item of footwear. This item I would like to go into in more detail because Members have talked about it, but I would like to analyse it a bit further. It was in the year 1956, Sir, that the imposition of 20 per cent ad valorem import duty was imposed on all kinds of footwear, and in 1957, 60 cents per pair on all kinds of footwear, or 22 per cent ad valorem, whichever was the greater. Then in 1958, Sh. 1/50 per pair on canvas shoes with rubber soles, or 22 per cent ad valorem on all kinds of footwear, whichever was the greater. Now in the last year, 1959, Sir, Sh. 1/50 per pair on all kinds of footwear or 22 per cent ad valorem duty, whichever was the greater, was imposed.

Now today, 1960, Sh. 5 per pair for boots and shoes, excluding footwear without uppers—we Asians call them champals, slippers or mojalis, etc., and excluding footwear with uppers of cotton and soles of rubber or rope, which is of course, canvas shoes, and excluding children's footwear. Now, Sir, commenting on it, the minimum of Sh. 5 mainly affects the cheap footwear which is being imported from India, Hongkong and Japan. Now here in Kenya, no licence is issued to importers to import Japanese footwear from there because it is intended to give protection to the

[Mr. Travadi] local industries. Now this footwear which is being imported, is all handmade. They have to pay to bring them to Kenya, freight—they have to pack them and pay the packing charges—they have to insure them—and also to pay rail charges if they are being brought to Nairobi and upwards. Now Japan's footwear is only brought into Tanganyika, if my information is right, so that the present protection of Sh. 1/50 per pair of footwear, and the prohibition of Japan's footwear in Kenya, should, I think—I humbly say—is sufficient protection for the local industries. I think it is mainly Bata, which is the firm who manufactures here. And, the only people who would have to pay more of this tax would be mostly, and I underline the word "mostly", the Africans. The price of the imported cheap footwear at the moment in Kenya is about Sh. 8 to Sh. 12, and after having imported it into Kenya and including all the costs, the retail price here is something in the nature of Sh. 12 to Sh. 14 per pair, and the local cheap products—say Bata—are sold, the very local cheap ones, are sold at about Sh. 20 or so approximately. Now I do not know whether this protection is unasked for by the Bata Company or anybody, or whether it is just to suit Tanganyika, or are we following the footsteps of Tanganyika or Uganda, whichever may be the case—I do not know—I am not in the know. But, Sir Ernest Vasey's speech, which he made in Tanganyika, at Dar es Salaam, is very interesting, and it appeared in the East African Standard of 28th April, and it says:—"Last year the duty on boots and shoes was altered to a specific duty of Sh. 1/50 a pair, or 22 per cent ad valorem. This was to help the establishment of a factory in Tanganyika, and in so far as the canvas and rubber side of the industry was concerned it had achieved that objective. The Company concerned was prepared to start production of leather shoes at its Dar es Salaam factory if it could be helped to meet the competition of cheap shoes from abroad." Then in inverted commas it says, "I propose, therefore to increase the rate of specific duty on leather or plastic shoes to Sh. 5 a pair, the ad valorem rate of 22 per cent remaining unchanged." Well, I do not know whether there was a similar demand from here, nor do I know what dividend the shareholders of this Bata Company get, whether they are running at a loss, or whether they really require any protection in Kenya, and whether the protection already given to them for the last so many years was found insufficient, or whether it is sufficient. That is a point I would like to be enlightened upon. It has been suggested that a slight loss is also expected out of these changes in the practical abolition of imports and in the case of imposition duty, etc. Then, I have a very sound suggestion. I do not know whether it is sound, but from my viewpoint it is. Instead of putting a duty of Sh. 5 per pair, why not reduce it by one and make it four? But then on the other side increase, or have an excise duty of Sh. 1 per pair, which would bring in about £100,000 to the Treasury. Sh. 1 only per pair of locally produced footwear, i.e. manufactured in Kenya. I do not want to say "produced", because these are handmade, and I do not want to tax the shoemakers and cobblers for nothing. But if only Sh. 1 is charged as excise duty I think in Kenya the sale of manufactured shoes is more than 2,000,000 pairs or so, if I am told rightly. And that will bring a very good amount, and I should say this is a suggestion which I think is worth consideration.

Another question is the production costs. If the Bata Company have asked for more protection, is it real or false? How is it that goods from the other side come here cheaply, and yet, here it is too costly to compete with them? I hope this will have due consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Financial Secretary in his statement talks about Kenya's prosperity, and he says it depends on world conditions. He says we must export raw materials and, particularly, he underlines every kind of agricultural produce. And he further says, and it is a very significant sentence: "Industrialized countries of the world are having a boom period. It may be that their export prices may increase, in which case our trade terms will get worse, and consequently we shall have to export more in order to get the same amount of imports." In other words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, this is all colonialism. The evils of economic and political control by one country over another for the exploitation of its raw materials, cheap labour and markets of its raw materials, and colonialism nowadays finds few apologists in the world these days. The colonial system is still, however, practised in its essence by countries who are trying to effect a quick entry into the modern era vis-à-vis their own rural population, when industry imposes manufactured goods on the villages in quantity, and at the price it desired, and makes them produce the raw materials in the quantity and at a price the industrialists want, but nobody has thinks anything of it. On the contrary, it has been said to us, and it is justified and even glorified in the name of progress, national prosperity, and now here in Kenya we call it prosperity. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I detest, and I detest under democracy, I do not want any sort of monopoly, either for production or even for distribution in the name of controls and things like that. Even in the Africanization of the service or the trade of Asians, or anything of the sort, [Mr. Travadi] I do not want that. What I say is that under democracy there should be no monopolies of any type whatsoever.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the pressure is, and it has been pressed and emphasized again and again, that the political stability is the main thing, and if it is not maintained it will affect the higher standard of living. Now it is a very funny thing to define the higher standard of living. From my own point of view those who have not enough, and when I look at them I do feel that my standard is very, very high, but when I look at the others over me, and who draw not hundreds but thousands and thousands of pounds, then I say that my standard of living is comparatively very low indeed. But, I would suggest that some way or other this country now is to be ruled, and we will have a majority and definitely of Africans, and that has been promised at the Lancaster House. We have already reached the saturation point of the standard of living and the cost of the running of the Administration has gone up very high. We now know that some adjustment has got to be made, and made sooner, and I should underline the word "sooner", the sooner the better, and I would like to cut down.

Political stability, confidence and many things have been told in this House, and I remember, because I was there at the Lancaster House Conference, even before the Conference was over people were flying to Kenya agitating and agitating—even now. They were thinking in anticipation that these were going to be first a deadlock—a sort of a breakdown—but then eventually they found out there was a sort of large amount of agreement between the Members over the Lancaster House proposals, and only the isolated few—who might even be counted on the tips of our fingers—but here when they come back to Kenya they make a big noise, they ring a big bell, because there are reasons for that. The country has only one or two newspapers owned, by the very community, and we Asians only follow suit because we have not sufficiently effective newspapers of our own, and so that we only have second-class information and follow suit what others dish out. These people and papers say we are doomed—send money away. The newspapers further say, "The farms are going, the Highlands have gone and now what shall we do?" Asians have nothing to fear. Their property is not going away. By going to the Round Table Conference the Asians have got two more seats in the Council of 65 Members in this House. What have they lost? They have not lost their own buildings and shops and property. Have they robbed anybody's land to build this property? No. Then why is my community so panicky? There is no reason, at least as far as the Asian community Members are concerned, to be frightened at all. There is no reason whatsoever. We are safe and safer. We are here ad came here to this country even before any other foreign nation was here. We have helped the Africans better their lot and why should we be afraid. And I would give a word of advice to my African friends as well. I have been to my Province, my electoral area, and to Meru and Embu, to Nyeri and Nanyuki and all around, and I found that the security thing which is very much talked about here and disturbing—but everything was quiet—it was "all quiet on the western front". But when I come to Nairobi I find pankawallas busy robbing and looting. I do not understand why? Either there is something wrong with the police or with the security people themselves or there is something wrong somewhere. When we talk to Africans they say, "These are the home guards—the 'loyalists'". When we talk to the loyalists they say, "These are the Mau Mau". Now whom to believe and whom not to believe? We Asians only see no difference in them. We only see that the Africans are using the pankas on everybody.

I think it is a duty of the leaders of the African community not only to talk in the papers and only talk to the Press men in their day-to-day newspaper conferences, but to physically go among the Asian community in the disturbed areas, the rural areas and any other disturbed areas and take a few—one or two responsible members of the Asian community—and try to pacify them—try to tell them that this is the work of gangsters and that everything possible is being done to control them. Thieves and robbers who always take advantage of the troubled times, are the people who are responsible; and do not let us attack any political significance whatsoever, and this is the way to tackle the security measure.

Now only yesterday the Member for Nairobi Area, the hon. Mr. Tom Mboya, in his speech, he said: "I cannot tolerate this double nationality". Now he must know that since 1955 the Indian Parliament passed a citizenship act, and from that day onwards this double nationality so far as the Indians go, has been abolished entirely. Either a man is an Indian subject, or he is a British subject, and as such there is no question of one man having double nationality whatsoever.

Now much has been made of the release of Jomo Kenyatta. I and my other colleagues, Asians, members of the Kenya National Party, Sir, sent a deputation to the then Governor, and tried to persuade or to prevail upon him to release that man forthwith, so that the political things can be adjusted and can adjust itself. We went to England up there, too, our Asian Group Members did approach the Secretary of State and made a similar request. They also never forgot Mr. Makhan Singh. About his name very little appears in the Press, but I should urge upon the Minister for Security and Defence to consider sympathetically his case as well; I know that he has been professing communist-teaching ideas, but now we are having Summit Conferences. We are shaking hands with Khrushchev and Bulganin, and I think, it is not now fair that this man should be allowed a little time to breathe freely. Even if he is a staunch trade unionist, I think here in Kenya after his detention trade unionism has sufficiently come up to an extent that he can very well be released, and he can be allowed to mix. I think his views may be far behind now, looking to the present day-to-day development in the trade unions, and I think he will not be in any way considered as a danger to the country as a whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, from the Asian side up to now nobody has spoken more than half an hour, and it was my original idea to consult Mr. Nazareth, and to tell him that I will take more time, although I do not want to swallow the two hours, but more than half an hour, no doubt, but as he is not here, and I do not know that he may even speak, but I cannot say that, for he may speak, but then I propose to take, with the permission of my friend, as Mr. Nazareth is not here, that I may be allowed to speak beyond the time allotted of half an hour, but up to two hours.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): That is in the hon. and learned Member's own hands. The practice that I have adopted so far in this debate is that the first member of any group is entitled to take more than the prescribed time, but if he does so and gets that extra time he shuts out his colleagues. It is up to the hon. and learned Member to decide whether he stops now or goes on.

Mr. Travadi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to take advantage of the two hours.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): Order, order. It is not provided in the Motion passed by this Council that anyone with more than half an hour should take two hours.

Mr. Travadi: I prefer to go beyond half an hour. Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, talking about Jomo Kenyatta, I have certain views which I would like to ventilate, and I would say, Sir, that traditional democracy really recognizes the inherent right of the people even to violent rebellion against authority when the democratic machinery is abused. But, Sir, the advance of technology has put in the hands of small groups and bodies of men a greater concentration of power, and those who control the machinery of the state are consequently today armed with far more effective instruments of coercion with which to put down popular resistance than their predecessors ever had before. They also control all the means of mass communication, the Press, the radio, the cinema, by which to propagate and hypnotize even, the masses and condition their thinking. The people have nothing comparable at their disposal with which to counter these things and such sanctions have been rendered obsolete nowadays and even proved ineffective by the march of technology. Nobody would favour violence in this country. Even Hitler and Kaiser Wilhelm failed miserably and I do not think if Jomo Kenyatta is released he will ever dream of using violence against a state which has vast resources to extend in a way undreamed of in the past. I would, therefore, Sir, only request the Government that his release be considered sympathetically.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, only yesterday the hon. and gracious lady, Mrs. Hughes, the Member for Uasin Gishu said that Lancaster House did put us on the right road to democracy, and I told her that I am going to quote her here today I endorse it and add my own humble opinion. Democracy is a plant of slow growth (and these things are to be noted more by my African friends than by others). It needs patience, peace, stability and even staying power. Translated in terms of millions its essentials are food, clothing, shelter, health and individual freedom. Mere political democracy without economic independence, and I underline these two words, "economic independence", and equal distribution, and also I underline this too, can only prove a snare and an illusion. Democracy has been defined as a system of Government in which every adult citizen is equally free to express and desire and to influence his fellow citizens to decide according to those views and to implement those desires. Freedom is not a mere "catalogue of abstract rights". I again repeat that freedom, however is not a mere catalogue of abstract rights. It must also include the ability to take advantage of and freely exercise these rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, one other subject that strikes me is the Africanization of the Civil Service. I only yesterday bought a newspaper circulated by the Government Information Office, and it is an extract from the paper named Nyanza Citizen, issued in April, 1960, the second issue, and it is an editorial under the caption of "Confidence", and it says: "Recently a senior official of the Bank of England, Maurice Parsons, spoke in Kampala of the importance for countries such as Kenya to have a sound and efficient administration. He said: "I am certain that if that asset is lightly thrown away, it will react unfavourably on the economic prospects of these countries." What he meant was that the countries would suffer if the Civil Service were Africanized too quickly at the expense of efficiency. We certainly want more Africans in the Civil Service, but this is no good unless they have been trained to do the work, and to do it well. It takes a long time to build up an efficient administration and it should only be replaced by something as good. I would draw the attention of the Government that hurried things will eventually do no good.

When the Secretary of State spoke about this Africanization I welcomed it, but I also said it should not be confined to one race only. The Asians have had their civil servants in Government administration since its inception, but up to now not a single one has become the head of the department. No administrative or executive post has been given. Why not?

Sir Charles Markham: I do not know.

Mr. Travadi: Why not? I put the question. If this country is going to be on a non-racial basis on merits and ability, capacity and capability then there should be no discrimination at all. I do not want to come in the way of Africans at all. Let that point be absolutely clear. I wish them the best of luck and let them occupy practically all those posts lower and higher. I have no objection. But there are Asians capable enough. They are not promoted. Is it that they are being ground down between the two millstones? I would therefore humbly request the Government to give sympathetic consideration to this question of the non-racial side of the Civil Service.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to cut down, and I will only take about 10 to 15 minutes. It might not be that much, but I have just one subject, which is about the Royal Technical College, and it is only the educational side that the Minister for Education is concerned with it, but perhaps the hon. Mr. Rogers, who is the head or the chairman of the governing body, he might take a note of it.

Now, as at present, Sir, the title of the Royal Technical College which is depicted on the building itself reads like this "The Royal Technical College of East Africa incorporating the Gandhi Memorial Academy." Now according to the Working Party on Higher Education's report which has recently been published, the present Royal Technical College is by 1966 to be transferred into the Interterritorial University College for East Africa. The other title of the College would be something like the Royal College, Nairobi, thus definitely deleting the words "incorporating the Gandhi Memorial Academy". In this new interterritorial college both academic and professional courses of equal standing will have their place within Faculties of Arts, Science, Engineering and special professional studies. In paragraph 120 of the report it says "that the proposals though modest will be inexpensive to execute. The members look to generous grants from the Colonial Development and Welfare Funds and express their gratification to the munificent contribution drawn from any liberal donors, which the Gandhi Memorial Academy Society has made to the College".

Now, Sir, by section 14 of the High Commission Act of the Royal Technical College No. 2 of 1954, there has been established an advisory board known as the Gandhi Memorial Academy Board to advise the Governing Council of the College, the Principal of the College and the Board of Studies in all matters except academic and administrative routine relating to the Faculties of Arts, Science and Commerce and also in relation to the erection and management of any buildings erected as a memorial to Mahatma Gandhi. This Board in all consists of seven members including four recommended by the Gandhi Memorial Academy Society, the remaining three to be appointed by the Governing Council. This Board has power to co-opt three additional members but they have no right of voting.

Now, Sir, it is rumoured and there is a lot of truth in it, that this Board on the coming into existence of the Royal College will cease to exist and all connexion with the Gandhi Memorial Academy Society and its donors would be severed.

I would, Sir, also draw the attention of the hon. Members of this House to the salient few points in the Agreement solemnly entered into between the Governing Council of the Royal Technical College and the Gandhi Memorial Academy Society. This document is signed and sealed by the Principal and Secretary of the College on behalf of the Governing Council and by Messrs. A. B. Patel, our hon. Mr. J. M. Nazareth, Q.C., and Dr. R. K. Yajnik, representing the Society, President, Secretary and Joint Secretary thereof respectively.

Now, Sir, the two articles to which I would like to draw attention are in the Agreement and are very interesting. I quote them although I have them in extenso I will shorten them. "Whereas the Society wishes to place its resources as a permanent memorial to Mahatma Gandhi at the disposal of the Royal Technical College of East Africa, a non-sectarian and inter-racial institution of higher education, and whereas the Council has agreed to further the aims" and I underline the words "further the aims" "of the Society by accepting the proposed endowment primarily for devotion to the establishment and subsequent maintenance of the Faculties of Arts, Science and Commerce."

[Mr. Travadi]

Now, Sir, this Agreement is dated the 12th day of November, 1954 and the first Article thereof lays down that the Governing Council "will designate those parts of the main tuition block"—the main tuition block—"of the college which have been designed for the use of the Faculties of Arts, Science and Commerce and also the library as parts of the Memorial to Mahatma Gandhi. It has been further provided that certain of the college buildings such as hostels and staff housing to be parts of the Memorial.

The Gandhi Memorial Academy Society undertook to make every endeavour to collect more than £400,000 in those days and hand over in the prescribed manner. The Society has also further agreed and handed over a sum of £97,893 18s. donated by the Gandhi Samarak Nidhi of India to be utilized as set forth in a separate Trust Fund and there are three Trustees as well.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to retain these same words and I therefore after reading them over to the House, in all humility request the Government to see that the wording—I also repeated it last year when I was talking at the opportunity of the Governor's Speech, if I remember rightly—that wording "incorporating Gandhi Memorial Academy" should not disappear from the heading.

There is a thing I would like humbly to suggest that this Agreement which has been solemnly entered into between the Governing Body of the Royal Technical College and the Gandhi Memorial Academy Society should form part and parcel of the new legislation which will replace the present High Commission Royal Technical Act, which will transform the present Royal Technical College into the new Royal College. It should form part and parcel or a sort of schedule or something that everybody would permanently remember what commitments the Gandhi Memorial Academy Society and the Governing Body of the present Royal Technical College has entered into. I have one more request—and this is a thought I always have in a matter like this—that sufficient and effective representation of the Governing Body or whatever it may become in the new legislation which will come into existence, sufficient, effective representation should be given to the Gandhi Memorial Academy Society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support the Motion.

The Minister for Internal Security and Defence (Mr. Swann): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I feel very like one of the characters in Nevil Shute's book "On the Beach".

I would like to refer briefly to some of the points which have been raised by hon. Members concerning my Ministry. The first point, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, was raised by hon. Arab Member Sheikh Mahfood Mackawi about his visit to Shimo-la-Tewa Prison. I am afraid, Sir, the hon. Member was under some misapprehension about his right to visit the Prison. I must point out, Sir, that Members, other than the Members of the Council of Ministers, are not authorized visitors by virtue of their office and I think this often gives rise to a certain amount of misunderstanding. Naturally, Members can visit prisons but they should make application to the Commissioner of Prisons and approval is at his discretion, but I can assure hon. Members that the Commissioner does welcome constructive visits.

With regard to the question of diets, which the hon. Member raised, the prisoners are, as far as possible, treated as regards food according to their way of life and regardless of race; thus if an African prisoner is accustomed to eat European food, he can continue to receive a European diet while in prison.

Now with regard to Shimo-la-Tewa, I would point out to the hon. Member that there have been no complaints concerning the quality of the food from the prisoners of any race, either to the prison authorities, the official visitors or the visiting justices. The hon. Member also stated that the Arab Official Visitor is a Government official. In point of fact, Sir, he is not, he is Sheikh Mohamed Timani who was formerly the Liwali of Malindi and is now a member of the Mombasa Municipal Council. So, far, Sir, this year, the prison has been visited 13 times on nine occasions by official visitors, four occasions by visiting justices and one of whom was a Judge of the Supreme Court.

Now there has been raised, Sir, by a number of Members the question of military service. I would like to state, Sir, that the Government has under consideration the question of military service for all races. Now it must be appreciated that this is a very big question and it has extremely large financial implications, and my hon. friend the Minister for Finance who is happily having his tea, I think might wince rather

[The Minister for Internal Security and Defence] sharply. There is also, of course, the question of the manpower implications and the question of staff but I can assure hon. Members that this question is under active consideration by the Government but, is a somewhat knotty problem.

I would now like to come, Sir, to what I think is really the nub of my speech and that is the point of the general security situation which was raised by the hon. Member for Ukamba and the hon. Member for Kiambu.

Now I have, in a written reply to the hon. Member for Ukamba made a large number of these points, which I see were published in the HANSHARD on Friday, but at the risk of vain repetition I think it is an important subject and I would like to deal with the matter now.

First of all, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would state quite openly that the Government is by no means happy about the overall security situation. The particular areas about which we are unhappy are the City of Nairobi and the Central Province up as far as Nyeri. In particular, I have to say with regret, the closer the areas are to Nairobi, namely Kiambu and Thika, the worse the security situation is. To a lesser extent we have the same problems in the large towns such as Nakuru and Mombasa, but I think there is some improvement in the two last-named towns.

Now, I would like to deal with the two major aspects, one is the aspect of crime, and the other is what I am afraid I must refer to as the general atmosphere of lawlessness in certain areas. Since the lifting of the Emergency regulations there has been a large influx of unemployed into the settled areas and this has undoubtedly led to increased crime, particularly in Nairobi where the crime figures, I say with regret, are very much higher than they were during the same months last year.

I think we can divide this increase in crime into two categories—one is petty crime, which is caused by hunger and carried out by what you might refer to as the genuine unemployed, and secondly there is the serious crime, which is caused by professional criminal elements.

Now I have to say with regret that a large number of the vagrants who are repatriated, when we go into their records after taking their finger prints, many of those men have six or seven previous convictions, not for vagrancy but for theft, burglary and crimes of that nature and I would point out to hon. Members, who often have said that the Vagrancy Ordinance is somewhat brutal, undoubtedly in Nairobi there are voluntary unemployed and include a large number of professional criminals who have come into the city to make an easy living.

The crimes of violence we have gone into in great detail and we have been unable to find any political significance in them. They have been carried out against people of all races and in all areas of the Colony. There have been signs of personal spite on particular occasions, but in general terms I think we can say that these are opportunist crimes for gain, carried out by thugs, who use violence all too readily.

With regard to the situation of the unemployed there has been a drift back from the Rift Valley in particular to the Central Province and there are also signs of a slight movement out of Nairobi City. I was very gratified to hear from the Member, who has just sat down, that he is very satisfied about the security situation and I shall remind him of this when he makes his weekly visit to my office.

I would now like to refer to what I might call a very worrying trait, and that is a general spirit of lawlessness and a feeling that it is no longer necessary to observe the law with the coming of freedom, which I say with regret is all too prevalent in Nairobi and in a large number of the areas of Central Province.

Now this has manifested itself in wild-cat strikes, a large number of assaults on police officers and a general disrespect for authority and a disrespect for the rights of property of others.

Now, recently there has been an improvement in the situation, but I have to say with regret that this week has seen a large increase in the numbers of assaults on police officers when they carry out arrests in Nairobi City. On all too many occasions they are attacked by a large mob, who endeavour to release the prisoner and on many occasions have inflicted serious wounds on police officers. I am glad to say they have always been dealt with remarkably quickly by the police and we have made a large number of arrests of these hoodlums, cases have been taken to court and sentences have been obtained.

Now, Sir, I would appeal in particular to hon. African Elected Members. I am very grateful for what a large number have already said on the public platform and I would be very grateful if they would continue to make this point that lawlessness is of no value to anybody and that the need to observe the respect for law and order and to respect the property of other people will not vanish with the coming of freedom.

I would now like to refer, Sir, to the question of Mau Mau because I know that this is very much in the hearts of a large number of hon. Members of this House. There has, I say with regret, since the lifting of the Emergency Restrictions, and the return to large open-air public

[The Minister for Internal Security and Defence] meetings, been a revival of the Mau Mau spirit. Now that spirit has usually been whipped up, not so much by speakers on the platform but by thugs, trained agitators, who circulate among the crowd spreading propaganda, leading the shouting of slogans and even the introduction of trained choirs, who sing Mau Mau songs. Now that spirit has all too often manifested itself in the crowds, when they are returning home from the meeting. There have been stoning of Government officers, assaults on the persons and property of Government chiefs and headmen, and the singing of offensive songs outside substations and even around camps in which detainees are held.

I think at the moment I can say that that atmosphere is slightly better; it reached its peak, as one would expect, directly after the lifting of the Emergency Regulations. It is still manifest but not quite so much in the same degree as formerly.

Now we are looking to see if there is a revival of the Mau Mau organization, as opposed to the Mau Mau spirit, and we shall continue to look. We have had a number of reports of oath-taking ceremonies but they have only been corroborated in the case of Meru District. These oath-taking ceremonies in that district are of two sorts. The first is the oath administered by force by General Achole, when he has come out of the forest and taken food from villagers, they are then forcibly given an oath to keep quiet about his presence. I am only too delighted to say that the villagers promptly broke that oath and reported the presence of Achole to the police and the security forces.

The other form of oath-taking in Meru has been in the Nyambeni area, and this, I think we can say, is a straight financial proposition. The oath-takers make a good business out of it, they charge Sh. 10 to Sh. 15 a time to become a member of the club, and I think, as I say, you can look upon this as a "get rich quick" programme, rather than as a severe threat to law and order.

However, we are continuing to investigate further reports of oath-taking in other districts.

I would now like to refer, Sir, to the question of the wild-cat strikes in the Ruiru and Thika areas. Now I will leave the analysis of the individual strikes to my hon. friend the Acting Minister for Labour, for I think it is more fitting that he should give you the causes of the various strikes on the various estates. I do not think there is an overall cause and I do not think there is an overall pattern, but my hon. friend will be dealing with this matter tomorrow. What interests myself and my Ministry in particular are the cases of intimidation. Now yesterday morning in the Thika and Ruiru areas a special investigation team consisting of a mixture of C.I.D. and Special Branch officers was visiting every estate in the area to try and find the pattern of intimidation, whether it is trivial and has been exaggerated, what form it has taken and whether there is any overall pattern behind it. So far three cases of intimidation have gone to court and convictions have been obtained. Three further cases are under investigation and I trust will be able to go before the courts.

I am sure all hon. Members will join with the Government in deploring intimidation, particularly when it is done to the wives and families of workers, as one of the most contemptible actions in which a man can indulge.

The hon. Member for Nairobi Area asked the rhetorical question, "Are the Police Force necessary"; I think if the hon. Member was present he would agree from what I have said that there is a very real need for the Police Force. Also is the fact that the hon. Member in question has twice publicly declared—once in an article in the Daily Express and once recently in Monrovia—that he intends to take "positive action" if he cannot obtain his own way. I think he has answered his own question. And should the hon. Member and his misguided followers indulge in action, I would point out to the House that this might well necessitate an increase rather than a decrease, in the security forces.

I would like to state quite categorically that the Government has no intention of being intimidated or handing over to mob rule. We shall continue to uphold law and order and the rights and the property rights of self-respecting citizens of all races.

Now the hon. Member also made great play that we should forget the past in terms of the Emergency. I would like to ask the hon. Member how can we forget the past when at public meetings choirs are trained in the singing of Mau Mau songs, which keep alive these feelings? How can we forget the past when members of Mau Mau are defiled from the public platform? If this is the hon. Member's idea of forgetting the past and making a new start, I must confess that it is not mine.

I would call upon all hon. Members that when there is a public meeting they should speak with restraint and do nothing to arouse racial animosity, because in our somewhat delicate situation at the moment, racial animosity can only lead to tragedy. I can again assure the House that the situation is not out of control, the police and the security forces are, I think, acting extremely well, in some cases under great difficulties under attacks

[The Minister for Internal Security and Defence] from the mob, but I would ask all hon. Members in addition to exercising restraint on the platform to ask themselves one thing: "Would a return to the conditions from which Kenya has just emerged be of any benefit to any race in this country, and would a return to these conditions make any contribution to the peaceful, economic and political evolution of Kenya, of which I am convinced every Member of this House desires?"

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. ole Tipsi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to make my few observations to the Budget debate before the House.

Firstly, I would join my other hon. friends in congratulating the hon. Minister for Finance in the way he has presented the Financial Statement and the Estimates Expenditure in such clarity that it gives a lot of ease in going through them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, a lot has been said about the security position in this country. I am glad that I am just speaking after the hon. Minister for Security and Defence has spoken, but I would have liked to have spoken before him. Nevertheless I think people should really understand the position clearly as it stands. It is no good trying to blame us on this side, it is no good trying to blame anybody else. It is a thing which concerns us all here in Kenya and there are things which we can do together to get rid of it. We on our side, Mr. Deputy Speaker, have condemned and abhor any acts of violence and lawlessness from whatever source it may come because we know that it is not going to do our country any good, it is not going to do the people of this country any good and, in fact, it will become an obstacle or a stumbling block in our political advancement.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I take it that it is no good trying to exaggerate the position in order to cause unnecessary alarm in the minds of the people. We know that there has been of late disrespect for law and order and as such I think the entire population should be trained and shown the way in which they could help. Now, we on this side, especially the African Elected Members, have done and will continue to do everything in our power to instill into the minds of our people that it is not only the duty of every decent citizen to uphold the law but to help maintain it. I would likewise ask my friends, the leaders of the European and Asian communities, to do likewise, especially when there are rumours circulating about concerning some black sheep in these two communities who might be out to entice idle Africans of bad character to commit some crimes. It is not a one-way traffic, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it concerns us all. There are black sheep in every community and the leaders of other communities have got as much duty as we, the African Elected Members, to try and help in any way possible.

Now, much play has been brought into this debate about intimidation. I would be the last, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to intimidate anybody and I would be the last to want to be intimidated by anybody. As such, I was glad that the hon. Member for Ukamba mentioned this question of intimidation. We do not want it and we must do everything we can to stop it. But the intimidation is not only prevalent amongst the Africans as such. For one have heard of quite a lot of intimidation going on in some districts of my own constituency where you find some bad employers intimidating their workers to do all sorts of things.—

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard) took the Chair]

Such an act should be deplored as much as we deplore any intimidation among the so called "wildcat" strikers. Of course, when I say this sort of intimidation, you find that in some areas African workers who dare join a trade union movement for that matter are victimized and are discharged. In some cases recently when I was touring my own constituency some people went round—some Europeans, for that matter, if I may say so—to try and tell the workers in their areas not to attend any of my political meetings. What do you call that if it is not intimidation? So we must look at both sides. It is bad whether it is done by an African or by a European or an Asian.

Now the other thing I would like to touch on, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the question of labour, the labour situation. I am sorry to see that the Temporary Minister for Labour is not in but I hope that he will read from the HANSARD and that his colleagues on the Front Bench will keep him informed. Personally, I think on the whole we owe a great debt of gratitude to the present Temporary Minister for Labour for all his services in the Colony. I do not want it to be taken at all that any criticism I might have has anything to do with personalities, but rather is a general criticism of the Government policy with regard to labour matters. I strongly feel, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Government must accept full responsibility for its negative attitude in labour matters—and I would underline this especially in rural areas. We all know that in the past, since I entered this House, I have brought introduced two Motions, or three for that matter, asking the Government to do something to dispel the fear amongst the African farm workers that they are being left at the mercy of the employers. I am glad that I was given to understand that something will be done when I moved my last Motion, but I would like the Minister to tell me specifically what steps have been taken so far to introduce the minimum wage fixation scheme in rural areas. We are now in a very serious situation. Mr. Deputy Speaker, where the supply of labour exceeds the demand, and it is only natural that this will tend to lower the wages. Now, I have had so many cases in my own constituency where, of course, you find people being discharged here and there; so many cases of non-payment of monthly wages for longer periods. I have brought these cases before the authorities concerned and I was rather perturbed to be answered by one of them, "Well, of course, these employees do not complain and we cannot do anything about it." I mean, these things are happening and they are happening on a very large scale. It is the duty of the Government to protect the weaker members of any society, and if they fail in this duty then, of course, they share in the present uneasiness which is going on in this country.

Now, of course, we all know that we must create good human and industrial relations which are of absolute necessity for economic progress in any country and I would appeal as well both to the bad employers and the bad employees to change their malpractices because, in fact, they are sharpening a sword to cut their own throats. Now, of course, I need not repeat that we need all sorts of things to improve the situation. When you go to some areas and find that the wages are very, very low, starting from Sh. 20 to Sh. 30 a month; you go to some villages and find their housing is almost non-existent—I do not know whether the Department or the Ministry has any minimum standards of housing for farm employees or not, but some are appalling and I know that if anybody came out in the open they would say that this is true. There are some bad black spots and I think they should be put right. Now, of course, in some places also you will find that the husband, the wife and the grown-up children are all in employment. In some villages—I have seen them: I could tell you what farms they are—you find a whole crowd of small, tiny, little children left to look after themselves the whole day long. This is quite intolerable. Now, I do not want to labour too much over this point but I think it is only fair to ask the Government that the Vote for the Ministry of Labour should be scheduled as one which we can be allowed to debate in full. Also I would only say that the Minister will continue, as he has always continued to do, to try and use his best brains to find a way out and I hope the new Minister, when he joins him, they will, of course, have additional brains and they will try and do something about it.

Now, the other thing is this question of unemployment. Surely the only solution is to try and devise ways and means of creating more avenues of employment. Now, how to create this is difficult unless we have capital at our disposal to invest in various development projects which ultimately will raise the national income of the country for the expansion of various other services which are required. Now, what we must really try and aim at as a matter of urgency is how we can relieve the suffering of landless and workless people by whatever means and resources are at our disposal. I should have thought that loans, especially to African farmers, and also making available all unused lands in the Highlands to Africans would at least help as an interim measure until we are in a position to create more industries and more light industries spread throughout conveniently in suitable areas in some of the districts. Now, the Minister, I think, said—if I may quote—from his speech—that the answer to the unemployment problem is to increase the opportunities of our people to earn a decent living, whether through self-employment or through wage earning. "That is, of course, one of the major objectives of the Government's development plans and policies."

Now, we all endorse his words but I would like him and the Government to go again into the question of trying to help the petty African trader; help him out and try to get rid of any obstacle or anything which is done by more established businessmen to squeeze him out. I know of cases as near as Naivasha here where the local authority passed a by-law—I do not know what law it was—to the effect that those poor African tailors who are allowed to patch up trousers, shirts and jumpers on the verandas of Asian shops will no longer be allowed to do so. Surely this is very bad. I mean, such people have no money at all, even to maintain themselves and their families. Where are you throwing them out? Of course, they will be forced to enter and rent somewhere inside the shop. They have no money even to maintain themselves. And these are the sort of practices which create ill feeling among various sections of this country. I hope that something will be done.

Now, the other thing is—I have asked it before and I am going to ask it again here, especially to the Minister for Commerce and Industry—that I strongly feel that there is a need, an urgent of appointing at least one officer to every provincial administration charged with the specific duty of guiding and advising the African businessmen in the proper ways of business transactions and I am sure such a measure will bring good dividends to the whole country. They could also try and see if the loan facilities which are available to other races cannot be made available to African businessmen of standing.

Also I have always wondered because I think the Government should also go into the provision of water in some of the best ranching areas such as the Masai land unit in order to enable this pastoral tribe to settle down and adapt the modern methods of animal husbandry and reap the benefits accruing therefrom. Thus, I think, they will contribute their share to the economic welfare of the country as a whole. There is quite a lot of land lying idle. We cannot possibly remove their cattle and put them there because there is no water. The grazing is plentiful, full of salt licks and the rest. I think also that it is a great pity that with well over a million head of cattle in Masai area very little, if any, contribution is derived from this source for the beef and the dairy industry of this country. One cannot help wondering as to what this Government is doing in helping these people; and, of course, in trying to uplift the economic standard of the country as a whole in this respect, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is no good telling us here that the reason for this deplorable state of affairs is the fact that the Masai cattle are infected with measles and other livestock diseases. We would like to know what preventive measures, if any, this Government is taking to eradicate or at least to check the spread of these diseases among the Masai cattle. It is a great waste and must be stopped at all costs.

Now, I was pleased to hear from the Minister for Finance that a fiscal and economic Commission which is to examine the East African common market arrangements is to be appointed. I hope that this Commission will give us valuable information which will help in the proper expansion and organization for the marketing of our livestock and produce. Of course, the Minister rightly said during his Budget speech that he was convinced that "the Government is right in the emphasis which has been placed on the programme of development in agriculture. This will make the most immediate impact on the national income by encouraging the growing of an increasing average of cash crops for which markets can be found at profitable prices". Now, in quoting from the Minister's speech, I can only add that I sincerely hope that the same encouragement will be accorded to African livestock owners with special emphasis on the improvement of the quality of livestock in African land units.

I want to be very, very brief and short if I can, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I could have expanded on it but I will leave it at that.

Now, the other question is this imposition of duty on light fuel. I know a lot of people on this side with a lot of experience have spoken about it. The only exemption is that of allowing for rebate on the duty on fuel oil consumed by tractors used for agricultural and logging purposes. Well, the imposition of this duty, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think, if I may add it, is that apart from being unfair it is discriminatory in practice. Just imagine! Why only a rebate on diesel fuel consumed by tractors engaged in agricultural purposes? Why not a rebate on power kerosene consumed by tractors engaged on the same job? Apart from that, what is there to prevent a farmer from getting a rebate on light fuel purchased for a tractor used for agricultural purposes and instead taking this advantage in using some of this oil for his own private car, or instead, taking the same advantage of using some oil purchased for logging machinery to fill his own diesel lorry used for transport of timber to the station? This is what we want to get rid of—it is very discriminatory. The most equitable way of removing this anomaly would have been to impose a flat rate of, say, 50 cents per gallon to all users of this fuel. Otherwise you will have loopholes which you cannot avoid or be able to check. How is the Minister going to check up on all these loopholes? It is impossible.

Mr. Alexander: Hear, hear! Quite right!

Mr. ole Tips: Now, the other thing is the question of the Civil Service. We are all proud of our civil servants. They are a credit to us all. But what I want to say is that you must try to localize, recruit from the local manpower we have here; afford training facilities to qualified men, young men and women in this country, so that we can cut the expenses of these overseas leave periods, leave pay and passages and recruiting expenses and the rest of it.

Mr. Alexander: Quite right!

Mr. ole Tips: Now, going back to what I am glad to say the other day that we were all happy—we are still happy—to have four of the African Elected Members cross the Floor, three of them taking ministerial posts. But if we are to prepare this country for self-government or for any independence with a Government in the hands of the African people, what have we got at the bottom? How many district commissioners have we got here? We have raised this question, Mr.

[Mr. ole Tips]

so often. We are told, "Oh, there are no trained and qualified personnel." Does it take 60 years to train a man to become a district commissioner, because the British Administration has been administering this Colony for the last 60 years? No, I cannot believe it! We want something at the bottom. It is no good just taking three ministerial posts, whereas we have nothing at the bottom and these people at least—some of these district commissioners, I would suggest—ought to be posted to the settled areas as district commissioners, as inspectors of police and superintendents, and let them show the few die-hards who are still doubting whether we are capable that they are as safe in our hands, if not better off, than in anybody else's hands.

Mr. Alexander: Put the Luos into the Masai land then.

Mr. ole Tips: Well, that is another irrelevant question.

Mr. Alexander: Oh, that's another question!

Mr. ole Tips: Now, the other thing, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if I may touch upon it, is my usual subject, the game. On Sunday I nearly had it from this "game". I spent the night in the bush, Mr. Deputy Speaker, with lions, buffaloes, giraffes and what not, you see, but I enjoyed it. I enjoyed the night staying in the cab of my car. Now, it is the question of preserving the wild game. We have debated at length on the Government's policy of game preservation which I think is very, very unsatisfactory. Now, why I say it is unsatisfactory is because we must win the co-operation and the confidence of those who are looking after the game or where the so-called wild game is held. In most parts of the Masai country the Masai people depend entirely on rain water. All of this is consumed by big herds of game. The game also devastate the pasture. They also spread diseases to cattle and yet nothing or very little is done to make good the loss and damage to those whose land is holding the game, out of the revenue received from tourists. This is where the contention comes in and I hope that the Minister and also Col. Cowie whose interests I know are very deeply in the preservation of game will do something. We are all concerned but at least help these people out. Show them the value of having the game in their areas, because if you simply have the game there it helps spread the diseases and thousands of Masai cattle die. Nothing is done; all the rain water is consumed in two months and then the cattle die on account of dust and that sort of thing. Surely you are making these people hostile towards the wild game which will not help in the preservation of wild game.

Now, the other thing; Mr. Deputy Speaker—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): Mr. ole Tips, you have already exceeded your half hour.

Mr. ole Tips: Oh, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I won't be two minutes, Sir, if the House would agree—I will bear your ruling, Sir, but—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): The difficulty of allowing you two minutes is that everybody else may say that they would like two minutes. It was the decision of the Council that 30 minutes was the limit and I have already given you two minutes over the 30 minutes.

Mr. ole Tips: I obey your ruling, Sir.

Major Day: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to support this Budget but I would express the hope that we will have a better one next year. I feel that the essence of a good Budget is relief in the actual taxation, in Income Tax, and that in itself is perhaps one of the best measures of the prosperity of a country and of a return of confidence.

Now, it has been said by a number of speakers in this House that we are in a period of change and that we are in a period of difficulty. Of course, it is true; we all know that it is true. And I consider that the work of a Minister for Finance in a period such as this becomes an even greater burden than it would normally be and I would therefore without in any way attempting to flatter him say that I consider that in these particular circumstances with all the rumours which may be true—and indeed are true—which he may have had to contend with, that he has done an extremely good job.

Now, Sir, we are going through this period of political gestation: nobody is quite certain who is going to father the child. We have been told that the father may be a multi-racialist, or a non-racialist, but there is a fear that the father might even be a dictator, and what his child will be when it finally is born is perhaps the main reason why we are I think not only Europeans, but reasonable people of all the races in this country, apprehensive and uncertain today.

I have always found it necessary and indeed I have done it quite without reluctance to admire and indeed look upon with a certain degree of awe, anybody who has been connected with the intricacy of figures, and I would even go so far as to say, Sir, that at times I have attributed to them a certain degree of necromancy, not I would say necrophilia, because as you know one of the greatest assets we have had in this country in my opinion in the last two years was the abolition of the death duties. So it does not apply here.

We are, nevertheless, as everybody realizes, a poor country with a very small revenue, in world terms, and there are constantly increasing demands for money to be spent on this, that, and the other for money to be spent, for instance, on education. Not only for one section of the community but from all of them—money to be spent on hospitals, money to be spent on roads, and so I think one lesson emerges from all this. It is an obvious one but I would beg to be allowed to repeat it, and perhaps extend on it and it is this: that if you have a country which is as poor as this country, with such a little revenue, you must, perforce, obtain money from elsewhere. Now last year in this debate, as a mere novice, I advocated that the then Chancellor of the Exchequer should go abroad and try and get an interest-free loan. Not something petty or small—something really large, something substantial, something, Sir, which could put into effect all the promises and all the carrots which are held in front of all the people in under-developed countries. The Minister has indeed gone abroad but I would say this, Sir, that he has come back with a mere pittance.

Now, in the particular circumstances that we find ourselves in today, it would be quite fair to describe the minorities as the guinea pigs in an experiment, and I say this in no offensive manner whatsoever. It is indeed a fact because this is an experimental country politically. Now, if you are going to have your guinea pigs, Sir, you must be quite certain that they must be fed on a specially vigorous economic diet, and I would suggest to the Minister that he continues to try and find this money which is so evidently necessary for all the demands in all sections of this community which they are, quite rightly, making, because in these days of quick progress, we are apt to be impatient: we are apt to forget that the slow, leisureed, development of what has been suitable in time past is no longer appetizing or indeed digestible today. People are inclined to say, rightly or wrongly, that every thing must be done quickly. You have got to travel quickly—when you get there you very often do not know why precisely you have arrived there, but nevertheless that is the philosophy of the times. Now, if this is accepted—and I think it is accepted—then the theories of a Utopia, through democracy or through this that and the other method of Government wheels which are constantly being dished out by politicians—and it is indeed becoming increasingly popular for them to do so—can in fact really mean nothing. They are purely platitudinous statements, and the disappointment which may result from the failure of these well meant theories to be put into effect may well cause far more harm than if they had never been uttered. You see, it all boils down to this, Sir: you can theorize and you can talk the hind legs off a donkey and you can tell people that they are going to advance and you can tell people that the millennium has arrived, but the one thing that has not altered today, and we all know it, is the fact that perhaps money is more important today in the minds of men than it ever has been in the past.

So I would put in a plea that we should not be overwhelmed by these statements, well meaning perhaps and sincere, that we should have a little of the substance and that substance, Sir, is money, capital to oil the wheels. We are constantly being told that this that and the other is in the best interests of this country: we are being told by a benevolent but nevertheless doctrinaire world opinion which is something that is always being quoted today, that this that and the other should happen, that something marvellous and miraculous should emerge in this country by merely saying we are going to be multi-racial, we are going to have a multi-racial experiment. It will never happen, Sir, unless you have the money to work that experiment out, and to raise the standard of living of the people visibly, not by merely telling them they are going to have votes and are going to have more in the way of franchise.

Now we have, recently, many of us, returned from London, and the Macleod Plan has been spoken of and about a good deal in this country, and I do not wish to go into any detail on this. This Plan has been very well dressed up, Sir, in this House, particularly, recently. It is sometimes, perhaps facetiously, called the "MacBlundell Plan"—that is, perhaps, irrelevant. But, nevertheless, it did reflect the agreement of the two major parties at this Lancaster House Conference—or the three perhaps I should say. Nevertheless, it has been well dressed up and fine feathers do not, I repeat, make fine birds, and I would again perhaps at the risk of reiterating, say that the political wand waving such as occurred recently is in effect sterile. We are told we must march forward together; presumably we must march forward in a band together. Well, Sir, if you march forward in any respect to any goal you must first of all have an objective and the band must know exactly what they are doing and the band must feel they have been reasonably treated, all and every one of them, and their morale must be high. Otherwise, they will never achieve that objective.

Now I would like just briefly to go into a little more detail on one specific point, and I will not be very much longer. I would like to say this, that we have been told in the speech which the Minister opened this debate with, that the European community is essential to this country. It is indisputable that it is producing a great deal towards the economy of this country. Now, that particular part and parcel of a community which is providing that service for a country such as this, irrespective of any racial characteristics, irrespective of any question as to what race that community may have been, must deserve to have its confidence restored. I must tell this House, with all the sincerity that I can muster, that that confidence which should be there today among the European farming community is, I regret to say, not totally there. I am not saying that they lack confidence entirely, but I am saying this, that they are most concerned and they are in grave doubt and, indeed, can it be wondered at. We hear statements that originally the Government of this country had never the right to give the European farmer title to his land. It is further said that if we do not readily agree with a particular thesis 100 per cent, we are people who are here to try and disrupt the economy of this country. We are told that if this is our attitude—only by some people; I must be fair and say this—we had best get out. It is repeatedly claimed, and has been said recently in this House, that we should be stripped of our privileges. I should like to ask you what our privileges exactly are. Are our privileges that we pay a very large percentage in taxation? Is that a privilege? Are our privileges that the advantages that we enjoy in so far as our standard of living is concerned—are those privileges? Is it not indeed a fact that these standards which we have achieved have been built up by us from very small beginnings in the past years? The fact that we enjoy a high standard of living on the whole as a community, and that we wish to preserve this standard of living and that we wish to preserve our way of life and that we wish to preserve our way of education, does not mean, Sir, that we do not realize and hope that the other communities in this country will also raise their standard of living and preserve their way of life. On the contrary: it is the desire of any reasonable European that this should be so.

I say this in the vain hope, perhaps, it may contribute towards dispelling this misunderstanding. Now, in order to achieve this raising of their standards, they will certainly never achieve this if they declaim against ours. I sometimes wonder whether the politics of this country are not a little old-fashioned: when the rest of the world is trying to build up higher and raise the standards everywhere and raise the lot of the ordinary man in their countries, there is a tendency sometimes here, in order perhaps to achieve that, to pull down the standards that are in fact in effect and exist today. I have heard it said here recently, I think it was in the course of this debate, that there were pockets of privilege or discrimination. I think "pockets" was used. Now, does that mean that a pocket full of shillings is worse than a pocket full of cents? If we are to stay, and I include the minorities in Kenya, as I think we all wish to stay and play our part, we must have practical concrete reassurance that our position will be respected. We do not want platitudinous assurances of a political nature which are meaningless and which can so easily be given and so far as the farmer is concerned make no doubt about this, Sir, what we want is an assurance that we, if we stay here and contribute to the economy of this country, will always be able to get the full value for our farms to get what we have put into our land. Then, indeed, the uncertainty will disappear.

It was said yesterday that Europeans should come in—I cannot remember which hon. speaker said it—and participate fully in the spirit of Lancaster House. If this is some new sort of brew I do not suppose it will be long before the Minister attempts to tax it, but what I would say to you is this. This is no new brew. This is something that people have been thinking of for many years in this country. What has happened is that the brew has not been mixed up properly: it is not entirely palatable. It has left the vital problems unresolved as far as the minorities are concerned, and I would say this finally. To those people here today, who may think that I am a right wing reactionary—and by all means you are privileged to think so—I would say this to you finally. In the interests of this country, which I believe you all have at heart and I think we all have at heart in this Council and in the interests of the human relations which we so often hear spoken about also, see that these grievances, see that these suspicions, are speedily resolved, and I will call on all those people who are suspicious of our attitude to consider what I have said today and to see that we have got a very strong and sincere point of view on this matter.

I believe that we have recognized the grievances and the aspirations of the Africans and of the other races. They in turn should do that for us because I feel that the day of political manoeuvring which appears to be one of the perennial sports in this country has really come to a standstill. If this is ended, if we can get an understanding which I sincerely hope we will, then only and then alone will the true interest of all the people in Kenya be best served.

Mr. Luseno: Mr. Deputy Speaker, before I say what I want to say I would like to join my other hon. friends in congratulating the hon. Minister [Mr. Luseno] for Finance on the way he introduced his speech dealing with the Budget to this Council. I would like to deal with the Government Sessional Paper No. 4 which deals mostly with the development programme for 1960 and 1961.

I am very much interested by this Paper, which shows clearly what the Government is doing in planning ahead towards the development of the country, economically and socially. I would only like to deal with two of the Ministries dealt with in this Sessional Paper, and that is the Ministry of Education and that of Agriculture.

Referring to Head D (9), subhead A, Table 22 that deals with the African education, I would like to express my appreciation to the Government for having accepted to provide Higher School Certificate classes for the African students. This is going to cost the Government quite a large sum of money, £181,600. This is quite a lot of money but I am quite pleased to see the Government has accepted to allocate this to the Africans for school certificate education, which I know very many people have been demanding. Also, Sir, I see that Government has accepted to start 15 new day secondary schools for the country. This is going to cost the country £155,500. I regard the 15 new secondary schools to be fewer compared with the demand for the secondary education, in the country. Many people would feel that the Government ought to have provided for more than 15. But I know due to lack of funds, the Government could not have provided for more than 15, and I therefore support the 15 new day secondary schools proposed.

Now, Sir, in addition to many other secondary educational expansions, proposed under this Table 22, I would like to hear from the Minister for Education when he speaks on this Motion whether he has any plans to promote Kaimosi Girls' Intermediate School to secondary status in 1961. The people there are very eager to hear that the Government has accepted promoting this school to secondary status.

Now, Sir, I go to the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources. I was very pleased when I read the Sessional Paper to learn that Government were encouraging the tea growth in the African areas. I know that the Africans have suffered quite a lot from lack of cash crops, and when we see the Government taking great interest in encouraging cash crops in African areas we feel very proud. I understand that the Government in connection with this growing of tea would establish about seven factory units in the African areas, and Government has proposed that each one of such factories would be supported by 1,200 acres of tea and that the Colonial Development Corporation would finance such factories. I would request the Minister concerned that if such factories are to be established, that it might be possible for one or two of them to be established in Nyanza.

The second thing, Sir, connected with agriculture is this. I am also pleased to note that the Government, knowing that the economy of Kenya depends mainly on agriculture, have proposed to allocate £315,500 for agricultural education. I understand that part of this money will enable the Siriba Training Centre to run courses up to diploma level in agriculture. Most of our students have been going to Makerere for this diploma. Now it is a pleasure to learn that the Kenya Government is planning for such diplomas to be taken in Kenya. I think we should congratulate the Government on this.

It is also remarkable, Sir, to see that the number of African farmers, including staff, who attend agricultural courses in Kenya each year will be 11,000. This is an increase of 7,000, compared with that of 1959 and 1960. Kenya is now going to produce more experienced and qualified farmers in agriculture by 7,000 over last year.

Now, Sir, before I sit down I would like to support the view expressed by my hon. friend, Commander Goord, when he said yesterday in this House that we had a duty to do and that duty was to educate our electorate. I quite agreed with him and would like to add that there is a second duty, and that is the duty of educating our African masses. Very many Africans now speak about Uhuru: if you go to the towns up-country you will hear them shouting "Uhuru!" I wonder whether they understand what that means. The word uhuru, I believe, in English means freedom, and freedom would mean, I think, being freed from what—slavery? I think the opposite of freedom would be slavery. Have the Africans been enslaved by anybody? Instead of being enslaved, I know, we have been supported financially by the Colonial Office. We have received quite large sums of money from Britain to support our education, agriculture, and so on. So when many people shout "Uhuru!" I ask myself as to what we were freeing ourselves from, slavery or what. Hon. Mr. Mboya, don't I know that you would like to say something.

I would like our African Elected Members to explain to our people what we mean by uhuru. I think what we mean by uhuru is, or, I should say, what we should say instead of saying "Uhuru!" is "Serikali ya kujitawala (inaudible) wenyewe!"—i.e. self-government, independence.

[Mr. Luseno] I think that is what we should say instead of saying "Uhuru!" Uhuru means freedom, being freed from slavery, and we have not been enslaved by anybody. So, Sir, those people who shout "Uhuru!" think that when uhuru or self-government or independence comes they will do no work, but that if they do any work at all the salaries will be very high. They also say this—that they will pay no taxes, and if they pay any at all they will be very small indeed. I do not say that the hon. Mr. Mboya says that; and the African Elected Members know it—but our people do not understand the meaning of it. Those people who have a very low understanding do not understand it in the way that the hon. Mr. Mboya or the hon. Mr. Khamisi would understand it. They also say that there will be no school fees, no hospital fees to be paid. They also add that there will be no police force to arrest criminals. This is the general feeling of the people in the country, people who have little understanding. They also say this, Sir, that the immigrant races, as soon as uhuru comes, will quit the country immediately. They believe that as soon as the independence comes each tribe will have a Minister in the Government, a tribal Minister to represent his or her own tribe.

I would, Sir, like to take this opportunity to congratulate the African Elected Members on what they have done since their return from Lancaster House, in explaining to the people that when independence comes the people would work harder than they are doing today; the taxes would be higher than they are today. Even school fees, hospital fees, would be increased. The police force would be doubled. If the truth is to be told to our people it should be told, and I feel, Sir, that we, as the leaders of Kenya today, should tell our people nothing but the truth of what is going to happen in the future Government of this country. If we told them that they would be free to do no work, that there would be no police, that taxes would be very low if any at all, the people would wait to see this happen; but when that future Government takes over and the people see taxes being increased, school fees being increased, police arresting more people than today, they will say, "What sort of a Government is this? We must jump upon this Government." Therefore, Sir, I feel that we, as the leaders of this country, have got to be sincere, beginning from this year onwards; we must tell the people nothing but the truth. We should share this duty, whether we become popular or unpopular we should do it.

I know the Colonial Government has done quite a lot for this country. Educationally, whether we like it or not, English, which I speak, is not my language, it is not my mother tongue. I have been taught by the British educationists in this country. They have done it educationally, economically, and so on, and they are still doing it. We have got to teach our people to appreciate it so that when the future Government comes in, whatever they will do will also be appreciated. But if we try to teach our people to be disloyal today, tomorrow they will do it for you.

So, Sir, I would like to conclude my speech by referring to what the hon. Member, Sir Charles Markham, from Ukamba, said, that the Government should give a statement with regard to the position of Jomo Kenyatta. To be sincere, wherever I have been in Kenya very many people do ask for the release of Jomo Kenyatta. But I ask myself, if he came back would he be received with both hands by all the people of Kenya? I would like him to come back, but would the hon. Member, Mr. ole Tipsi, like him to come back, and would the hon. Member, Mr. Ngome, like him to come back? There are friends of a man; there are enemies of a man. The Government is not foolish when they say that the situation, or the position of each and every man detained and restricted is being reviewed from time to time. If and when he is returned to his people it will mean there is no danger to the security of the country. I do fully agree with the Government. If any man was returned and it meant danger to the security of the country then why should we continue to advocate for his coming back? Here I am not referring to Jomo Kenyatta, but I am referring to any man who is still in detention or restricted up to this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support the Motion.

Mr. Usher: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I wonder if I might take up the theme of the hon. Member who has just sat down, the theme of uhuru. There were many delights to be savoured in the halcyon days which would come with uhuru when the happy day comes. Among those matters which I think they believe will be there to be enjoyed there is this—that they can get money without strings. Well, I do not want to argue about that, but I think the time of disillusion will come. But it does bring me really to what I was going to open with, and that is that the Minister for Finance has just got money without strings. I refer in particular to the sum of £1,128,000, and I should like to congratulate him on the way he has disposed it, and particularly the fact that he has been able to allocate a sum of over £500,000 to education. That must bring joy to us all. I do not want to go into this matter at any length, but it is perfectly obvious that we must improve our educational facilities here first of all because it is of the utmost importance to have an educated electorate, and secondly because we must educate people to take their proper place in the Civil Service.

Now, there is only one other thing at the moment I want to say on education, that is to say that I should have preferred to see rather more of the windfall put to technical education than to academic education, because I think even now it is rather difficult to place people with moderate academic attainments. I think that many of us, certainly many of my friends outside this House, have helped to educate people in our employ and in our immediate surroundings. It has not always been possible to give them much academic education but some of us have helped them by means of night classes and so on to qualify themselves for such things as book-keeping but when they have got that qualification it is rather difficult to place them, to get them employed. In fact it is most impossible in some instances, and that brings me to the point that I should rather like to get some statement from the education authorities about the liaison they have with those who are concerned with employment.

I now might pass to one other general matter—and we are at some disadvantage here Sir—and not knowing what Heads will be debated—and that is of Labour. We have been confronted in recent months with what is not perhaps a paradox but it is a strange thing to contemplate. We have a demand for employment on a scale which we have not known hitherto and we have at the same time repeated demands, particularly from the public services, for higher wages. We have had in this House an extraordinarily interesting debate in last December, I think, on the employment question, or rather on the unemployment question, and I hope the Minister for Labour will be able to bring the subject a little bit more up to date either in this main debate or if he is given a chance when he moves his Vote, the Labour Vote, because many of us are wondering whether with such a lot of unemployment we should not be thinking on the lines which have been adopted for so very long in India, which suffers from a rather poor economy. Everybody who has been there is familiar with the picture of the road workers where you have one man with a shovel, another with a rope to pull the shovel, and a third man to call out Shabash when he has got a shovel full. There may be very much virtue in employing as many people as you can at a wage which will just keep their bodies stitched to their souls. I would like that point to be considered.

I should like, Sir, to welcome the various aids to tourism which we have been given and at the same time to enquire whether the Minister might not have been a little more generous in his grant to the National Parks. I see, the Vote is £65,200, but in the year 1958/59 I see that we did spend actually £64,000, and I am wondering whether with the increased cost of transport and with increments the provision for this year is sufficient. Perhaps the Minister could be a little more liberal there.

There is one other matter which is allied rather to tourism. Some of the hotels will be very much affected by the increased duty on light amber mineral fuel oil, that is, diesel oil. A great many of them are working their electric light on this fuel and it does reinforce the argument used by my hon. friend the Member for Ukamba in regard to machinery other than vehicles used on the roads.

Now, Sir, I come to certain matters concerning the tariff, the import tariff, in particular. Last year hon. Members will remember that the duty was taken off lime—I am talking about lime for building purposes. Agricultural lime was always duty free. Now, soon after that duty was taken off, the import of lime greatly increased. I have the figures here. The 1938 figures show that there were 2,366 centrals imported into this country. I know that the Trade Report has not yet been published but I have the figures for 1959, and they are 9,245 central into Kenya. That is a very extraordinary thing. I drew attention to the increase last year and asked that the matter should be taken up by the interterritorial body which deals with tariffs, and I was assured that I had a very good argument for restoring protection and I have stated it without contradiction here, and I have stated it without contradiction here, that in Kenya we can produce enough lime to satisfy the needs of all three territories. So that I would ask the Minister and the Minister for Commerce and Industry to take this matter up once more.

I think that I should now say a word in regard to cement imports. I am very glad to see the decrease in those imports. As far as Kenya is concerned it is from about 417,000 centrals in 1958 to 69,000 centrals in 1959; and that is satisfactory so far as it goes.

But, Sir, there is a great deal of cement coming into this country, cheap cement, not only into this country but into these territories, which is subsidized, and I believe that there is a case for the protection of our local industry against this sort of dumping, and I would ask for that to be considered. In 1958 the imports into Tanganyika which does most of the importing of cement were

[Mr. Usher]

In 1959 they were 542,250. Well now 1,384,608. In 1959 they were 542,250. Well now that is a welcome decrease. Nevertheless a great deal is coming from sources of the kind that I have indicated, particularly from West Germany, Israel, and this is a new one, Japan.

Mr. Alexander: Yugoslavia.

Mr. Usher: The Yugoslav influx has ceased. We were told yesterday, Sir, by the hon. Member for Mombasa Area that he would welcome more cheap cement himself. Well, of course, there is no reason why he should not get it, but I do deplore it for the reasons that I have already given, and when he says that it is much cheaper than the cement we manufacture locally he is not comparing like with like. And I must also correct him upon the point that there were numerous cement factories in this country. There are, in fact, two.

Now, if I may pass rapidly to the subject of wine. In his Budget speech, the Minister told us that he was going to put an excise duty on the wine that is not manufactured in this country, and quite right too. What he said about it in his Budget speech was that this was to a large extent a tidying up measure. Now this interested me very much for another reason which I shall be stating later. But when I looked at this paper he tabled the other day and the comments on the new taxation proposals I read these words: "This measure is intended primarily to protect the customs and excise revenue at present derived from spirituous liquors." Sir, what an immoral proposition. Six years ago in this House, I had to raise my voice in protest when the duty on wine was so increased that we now pay more for wine in this country than we pay in England.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Usher: I hear an hon. Member say, "Hear, hear." But it is a very disgraceful matter because as we all know, Sir, wine, and particularly red wine, still wine in bottles, still wine in casks, is good for our souls. It is good for our bodies. It contains the grape—

"The Grape that can with Logic absolute, and that is the best reason of all why we should have as much wine and as cheaply as possible here. Talking about those jarring sects, I know perfectly well when I go down to Mombasa at the week-end I shall find that there is a new political party or body formed there. Well I know it gives employment. Somebody gets money out of it. Some "mugs" pay for it, and I suppose it gives a certain amount of amusement, Sir, but are we not all getting very tired of it? I do not know whether nowadays people are rather delightful extravaganza in doggerel, which was produced round about the beginning of the 19th century. It is called Bombastes Furioso, and it has got these lines in it, which come very close to my heart. Bombastes is having a colloquy with the King, and he says these words:—

The two-and-seventy Jarring Sects confute". . . .

"So I have heard on Afric's burning shore
A hungry lion give a grievous roar:
The grievous roar echoed along the shore."

And the King replies:—

"So I have heard on Afric's burning shore
Another lion give a grievous roar
And the first lion thought the last a bore."

Sir, I beg to support.

The Minister for Works (Mr. Nathoo): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to deal with the matter of the contractor-finance, which the hon. Member for Ukamba raised in the opening speech of this debate. He referred to the work which we are doing by contractor-finance on the Nyeri road, and said that not many people know about what the actual position is, or what the priorities are and how the work has been going. He also enquired, Sir, whether there are any snags in this work.

Now, Sir, I would like to say that when this work was started, or just before it was started, we found that if two contractors were going to set up independent organizations the cost to us would be much greater, and I am very glad to say, Sir, that in spite of them being competitors they came to an arrangement whereby all the work is done by them on a joint basis, with a saving to this country of very nearly a quarter of a million pounds.

Now, Sir, the contractors wanted to get over some of the most difficult work in the first some of the most difficult work that they would tackle instance, and they decided that they would tackle the section between Karatina and Nyeri. Now in that section, Sir, most of the road had to be redesigned, and quite a lot of earth work had to be done.

As is often the case, Sir, when the work starts there are quite a lot of teething troubles, and it was found in the first two months that the contractors were not able to make any profits at all and that at one time we were beginning to think that they were not going to be able to complete the work in the given time. I am glad, however, Sir, that after about two or three months they had their experts from overseas, who came and advised the people on the site both regarding the machinery and the method of working, and the result has been, Sir, that over the period of the last eight months there have been now able to achieve the progress which we hoped they would be able to achieve—that is to say—they would spend about a million pounds a year on these roads. The section between Karatina and Nyeri will be completely open to traffic by the end of June. It would have been opened up about the middle of May, but owing to the very heavy rain quite a lot of their work has been held up. It is, Sir, perhaps not within the knowledge of many Members of this House that when it is raining it is not advisable to continue the tarmacing of roads because the rain gets under the base and later on the roads deteriorate.

The second section, Sir, which we are proposing to tackle is the road between the Pole Pole Hill and Sagana. I am quite confident, that by about the end of September the entire road between Nairobi and Nyeri will be completed and the contractors will move on to the site at Mau Summit. In the original instance, Sir, we had hoped that when they go on to the Mau Summit site the first section they would tackle would be the Mau Summit/Eldoret road, but the contractors feel that in view of the fact that the road between Kedowa and Kericho has been recently completed with first-class earthwork, it would be better from the point of view of economy and the point of view of convenience that that would be the next section they would like to tackle—

Mrs. Shaw: Hear, hear.

The Minister for Works (Mr. Nathoo): Thank you. And to us that is a more convenient piece to be done because we are already noticing that once these new roads open up with the fast surface a lot of fast motoring is done, with the result that the roads deteriorate much quicker than the ordinary bad roads.

Now, Sir, after the completion of the Kedowa/Kericho road, there are two teams which will be working—one towards Eldoret and the other towards Kisumu from Kericho. Quite a lot of these works, Sir, are in the nature of bituminization, as most of the earthworks on these roads have been done, and we are hoping that the progress will be much faster and that the cost of these roads, now that the difficult sections have been got over, would be much less than it is at present.

*One road, Sir, which is causing us a great deal of worry is the road between Kakamega and Kisumu, and although it has been partly bituminized we feel, Sir, that at the very first opportunity that particular road should be brought to a bituminized standard, because apart from the heavy traffic that is on that road, quite a few accidents happen there which are due to the fact that the surface is very loose in that part of the country.

Talking about dangerous roads, Sir, quite a lot of people, each time an accident happens on the Mombasa/Nairobi road, tell us that this is the most dangerous road in the country, and that something ought to be done immediately about it. Now when they talk about these dangerous roads, Sir, I think, if we are looking at it purely from that point of view, the road which should be done in the first instance is the Nairobi/Thika road, because that is the road which carries, I think, about five times the traffic which is on any other road in this country. But that is a matter which in all probability has been carefully considered by the Road Authority, and they find that within the programme of their money they will not be able to do the Nairobi/Thika road, and we are at the moment, Sir, going into the question to see whether there is any possibility of obtaining any extra finance to attend to this road. As far as the Mombasa road is concerned, Sir, I consider that taking everything into consideration, apart from two sectors on that road, the road is as good as we can ever hope to have with the limited finances at our disposal.

The one portion which requires to be bettered and realigned is the portion between Mito Andei and Kibwezi, and where all motorists know there are a fair number of dangerous riffs and turnings, and once they are improved a certain amount of danger will disappear.

But the section which requires the greatest attention, Sir, is the road between Mariakani and Mackinnon Road. Time and again, Sir, during the last six or eight weeks, more than one accident has happened on that road. But, Sir, we cannot possibly prevent people from killing themselves if they so desire. They know, that on that particular portion of the road the surface is loose, and there are lots of stones which we cannot do anything about until it is properly bituminized, and in spite of all the warnings which are given by Press communiques, by other means at our disposal, and also by signs on the road for motorists to take care, there are many young people who go at a fast speed, they go into a dry skid and loose their heads and put on the brakes, and well, they are no more with us. Well, Sir, to the Coast people the only thing I can say is this, that we have made representations to the contractors, and they have said that once they go to Mau Summit they will see whether they can produce an extra team which will do this road between Mariakani and Mackinnon Road, because comparatively, it is the smallest portion of the road, and they wish to attend to that in the manner that they think is most economical. But I am hoping, Sir, that by representations we may be able in the next 12 or 15 months to do something to that road.

Apart from that, Sir, I would like to say that there are a number of other priorities, which I think the Road Authority have communicated to the public from time to time, and I understand at the moment that no deviation from those priorities will be made.

There is another question I wish to touch upon. Time and again, Sir, I am asked by people who say that in the original instance we envisaged an expenditure of £7,000,000 over a period of seven years, but that we decided to go on to the £4,000,000 scheme in the first instance. Now, Sir, much will depend on how our economy stands up to the strains which have naturally been put upon it when once the work is done within the next three years, and we hope to start repaying at the rate of about £1,000,000 a year. The Treasury is most reluctant to take on extra commitments. I think they are right in saying so, but until they are quite clear as to the position of our revenues as compared with our essential expenditure we are not prepared, at the moment, to enter into any further commitment for further contractor-finance.

Another question, Sir, which has been asked, is whether we are having any labour troubles. I am glad to say, Sir, that apart from not having any labour troubles, wherever we have done work by the scheme a large amount of employment has been found for the local people, and we have noticed that people in the area are extremely willing to come and do the work there.

We have had, Sir, a little bit of trouble, not so much in that particular area, of acquiring land from the various owners. Now, as you know a great deal of land consolidation has gone into an area between Karatina and Nairobi and Nyeri on certain of these sectors, and there, Sir, the land is much more expensive to acquire than it is in the areas where no land consolidation has been done. But we found also, Sir, and I think I must pay a very great tribute to the Administration in that they have been to a lot of trouble to explain to these land owners that by having a tarmaced road going near to their property their value will be greatly increase, and we found, Sir, that with the help of the Administration we have been able to acquire land at a much cheaper rate than we would have done otherwise.

Sir, another question which has been giving us a great deal of worry is the situation of the railway crossings. Now, Sir, each case has to be decided on its merits to see whether we can either put on an overhead bridge or an under the road bridge for the railways, or, in some cases, Sir, we find that the cost of such improvements is so heavy that we have to continue the crossing we have at the moment. There also, Sir, I must say that a great amount of negligence is shown by the motoring public, that in spite of the fact that with most of these crossings there is a decided bend, and there are prominent notices on the road, in the evening particularly when motorists are travelling at a rather fast speed they are apt to overlook the signs.

Another point on which the Ministry have been criticized is the fact that whilst these roads are being made, the motorists have to undergo a great deal of hardship by having to go via the diversions. Now, Sir, the point is that it is quite simple, that whilst we are constructing these roads we do not have the finance to build the diversions and divergences to a standard comparable to the road beside which they are and a good deal of money could be spent in that direction. I think, Sir, in view of the fact that our finances are very tight, that the motorist ought to show a little more tolerance and patience when travelling on these sections, sometimes when some inconveniences happen they ought to appreciate our difficulties too.

I have, Sir, made it an absolute rule for my people to see that on these diversions the least possible delay happens to the motorist, but if there happens to occur sometimes the nuisance of dust or slush, I am afraid, Sir, that unless I spend a lot of money I cannot provide them with the standard of diversion which they require.

In that respect, Sir, apart from the isolated complaints in the Press and the direct complaints we have received, I must pay a tribute to the Kenya public that they have been very considerate throughout and I would be failing in my duty if I did not show my appreciation for the great patience they have shown, particularly in some sectors where the delay has been up to two or three hours.

I also must give a note of warning, Sir, that when the contractors are working the Thika/Sagana section, that part of the road will be completely closed and people will have to use a deviation which will not take them so easily from one point to the other. But adequate notice will be given and the road will probably be signposted and I hope, Sir, that the contractors will be able to complete the work in as short a period of time as possible so that the inconvenience to the public is minimized.

[The Minister for Works]

The other fact, Sir, I would like to mention, is that when we started this work, the project made it necessary that we should have the advice and assistance of some consultants whom we obtained from the Federation. They have designed certain roads and our engineers have designed the others. In the initial stages, Sir, a great many problems generally arise in this sort of work which is not straightforward tender work and we must say that in spite of all the difficulties that we have had, with the assistance of these overseas advisers we have been able to overcome all these and I now can assure the House, Sir, that the programme that we originally set is going as satisfactorily as can be imagined.

The only other point, Sir, I would like to mention is this, that as the work goes on from time to time a certain amount of re-negotiation of our rates and our work has to be undertaken, but our engineers, with the assistance of our advisers are equal to the task and I must also, Sir, at this stage pay a very great tribute to the Road Authority that without increasing any staff they are coping with all this work and supply a large number of supervisory staff for this work and thus reducing the cost to the minimum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Ngome: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I wish to join the previous speakers in congratulating the hon. Minister for Finance in presenting his Budget. I will confine myself, Sir, to African education.

The African education, Sir, at the Coast, I think, requires some improvement. Mombasa, especially, Sir, Mombasa is a big island; we have got a Government House in Mombasa; we have got a European Hospital in Mombasa. We have got a Coast General Hospital in Mombasa, but we have not got a secondary school for Africans in Mombasa.

I would remind this House that in 1911 there was a high school in Mombasa next to the National Bank of India where I attended myself with some European boys, Arabs, Indians. I would like to suggest to the Government today, to start by having two nursery mixed schools, one in Nairobi, one in Mombasa. If we mean to achieve the proposal that the future of this country should be non-racial I believe, Mr. Deputy Speaker, this is the way we should make a start.

Another difficulty, Sir, I can see—I am sorry the Minister for Education is not here—but I would remind the Government that the best teachers the Education Department has, are sooner or later not going to carry on because of the terms of service, especially their salaries. I am going to remind the House that the next election will bring an African majority in this House; the candidates will be the teachers unless the Government or the Education Department is prepared to make better terms of service for them. I am afraid they are going to lose a lot of teachers by next year.

It has been pointed out from time to time that the best of service for teachers are not attracting the terms of service in this country, not only Africans but even Europeans and Asians and for the best interests of the Government I think it would be a good idea to revise their terms of service, so as to make it attractive for the good candidates to come to the schools, not only Africans but all races.

I would also remind Government, Sir, that the Ribe Teachers' Training Centre at the Coast is only confined to T.1. I would like some improvement in that training centre so as to allow T.2 and K.T.1 teachers to be trained there. I saw only a fortnight ago a young man walking. He told me he was going up-country for T.2 training because there is no T.2 training at the Coast for teachers. This is the position where I would appeal to the Government to see that the teacher-training centre at Ribe should be improved so that T.2 and K.T.1 teachers can be trained at the Coast and do not have to go miles away. Those who cannot afford to travel from the Coast to up-country just give up. We shall be losing very important candidates from becoming good teachers if the conditions of service are not improved.

My third and final point is that I would appeal to the Government for a secondary school for Africans in Mombasa. Mombasa is the gateway to Kenya, we all know that, and we should have a secondary school for Africans there. We have a high school in Kikuyu; we have a secondary school Shimo-la-Tewa, but no secondary school in an important place like Mombasa. There are leading European and Arab Schools, but no African secondary school in the island, and I am appealing to Government to have this matter attended to as quickly as possible, so as to reduce the number of Africans who have to go up-country from Mombasa just to get further education. At the same time I would pay a tribute to the Minister for Education and his staff in the Mombasa Education Department, for the way he has helped in my request on behalf of boys who are intending to go out for further training and study. The staff in the Mombasa Education Office have been very kind and very reasonable to attend to my request, and I would like to have that on record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Nurmohamed: Mr. Deputy Speaker, the hon. Minister for Finance in his very lucid and excellent speech has given a review of the past and present financial position and the economic position of the Colony. Except for the extra duty on the diesel oil, I think this Budget has been well received by the merchants and others all over the Colony. I do not think there has been any special criticism of this Budget except by those who have got small cars, who will have to pay double the annual licence fee and more on diesel oil. I think every year there is something which ought to be criticized in a Budget.

Sir, I think that business at present is not so bad in this country as people think or talk about. Of course, business is generally dull, but that does not stop people importing goods from outside the country for the next season after these rainy days. The only hitch which has come to business in Kenya is from Uganda due to boycott and other incidents which have made merchants hesitant to import more goods from Kenya for their own requirements.

Sir, I wanted to touch on the Mombasa to Nairobi road and the Ramisi road, but the hon. Minister for Works has already dealt with those two roads so I do not think I should touch upon them again.

In his speech the hon. Minister for Finance mentioned a Commission which has been set up for fiscal and economic questions to enquire into the common market problems of this country and to bring about common co-ordination between the three East African territories. I think there have been very welcome signs of more co-ordination between these territories and I would especially at this juncture ask the Government if Zanzibar is included in it or not. Zanzibar is at present at a disadvantage because it is not in the Customs Union. If it comes into the Customs Union it will not only be better for Zanzibar, but also it will be advantageous to other territories by way of imports into the common market, particularly of coconuts and coconut products from Zanzibar. As we all know, the production of coconuts on the Coast falls far below its requirements. At the same time, if Zanzibar comes into the Customs Union I think Zanzibar—which is always weak financially and economically—will benefit greatly by becoming a member of the High Commission. Of course, in certain common services such as Income Tax and other services, Zanzibar is already in the High Commission and it is only in the Customs Union that Zanzibar did not agree to become a member some years ago.

The other point, Sir, is that last year the protective tariff was imposed on enamel hollow-ware, cheap enamel utensils, which were mainly imported from Japan and Hong Kong and which were sold in this country particularly to Africans. A heavy duty was imposed on imports but I find that some adjustment has been made to lower the duty on small size cooking utensils, and plates, mugs, cups, saucers, and so on. But what I want to suggest, Sir, is that last year when this duty was imposed as a protective measure it was said about the enamel hollow-ware factory in Uganda which is producing cheap enamelware such as mugs and plates and all that, and there is also a factory in Mombasa which has recently started to manufacture these articles. But now I understand that the Uganda, if I am wrong the Minister will correct me, factory has been closed. It is only the Mombasa enamel factory which is working but it has only recently started, and I would like the Government to be sure that the production of this one enamel factory is sufficient to meet the demands of the country. Otherwise what will happen is that after the depletion of the stocks of imported enamelware which are held by merchants up until now there will be a rise in prices in cheap enamelware utensils, and if the local factory in Mombasa is not able to put up its production I think the Government should see that the market is not suffering from a shortage of these cheap enamelware utensils.

Those were the two main points, but, in addition, Sir, there have been many things said here in connexion with the acceptance of Ministers by our African Elected Members, and I would also join those Members who have congratulated our three Ministers and Assistant Minister who have crossed the Floor and taken sides with the Government. What I request these Ministers and also the African Elected Members is to take every opportunity now and in the future when they speak in public or in the Council or anywhere, that they should speak in such a way that confidence is again restored in the minds of those people of the minority communities who think, "What will happen to us after freedom comes to this country?" Several people, mainly merchants, have approached me in the last two months, and I have told them, "Look here, you carry on your business as usual. Nobody is going to take away your money; neither is anybody going to take away your property. You will be going to take away your property. You used to do staying here quite happily as you used to do under the British flag, and you still stay in the same way with all the protection you need when you have the uhuru in this country." Sir, as far as I know in the last month, except for one or two middle class people who wanted to transfer their money to India or Pakistan, I do not think merchants, generally, are so eager or keen to transfer their money. I know a couple of merchants who transferred their money to London instead of sending their money to India because they say that whenever they want their money back they can get it at once, whereas if they send money to India it will be very difficult to get it back from India. I think if we make speeches, even our Asian Elected Members, if they go round the bazaaris and see people, the middle class people, civil servants, and others, they should say, "Look here, you have got nothing to worry about in this country. We have got the 14 Elected Members, the African Elected Members, they are very good fellows;" they should go around the country and tell their people, "Look here, when uhuru comes you will have to behave in a way just as responsible men behave."

Sir, with those few words I beg to support.

ADJOURNMENT

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): The clock has just struck and I therefore adjourn Council until 9 o'clock, tomorrow, Friday, 6th May.

The House rose at thirty minutes past Six o'clock.

Friday, 6th May, 1960

The House met at Nine o'clock.

PRAYERS

BUSINESS OF COUNCIL

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, before we proceed with the continuation of the debate on the financial statement, I think I should inform the House that the Sessional Committee, meeting last night after the rising of the Council considered the various wishes put by the groups as to the order in which the Heads of the Estimates should be debated by the Council and decided as result of their consideration, on the following order:—

1. Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources.
2. Ministry of Labour, Social Security and Adult Education.
3. Ministry of Education.
4. Ministry of Commerce and Industry.
5. Ministry of Local Government and Lands.
6. Ministry of Internal Security and Defence.
7. Ministry of Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries.
8. Office of the Chief Secretary.
9. Ministry of Health and Welfare.
10. Contributions to the Cost of the High Commission.
11. Civil Service Commission.
12. Supplies and Transport Department.
13. Ministry of Housing, Common Services, Probation and Approved Schools.
14. Ministry of Information and Broadcasting.
15. Legislative Council.

Hon. Members will observe that most of these Heads are expressed in terms of Ministries rather than in terms of particular subjects within the Portfolios concerned.

The reason behind this arrangement is that as time is short and as there is a good deal of competition for Heads to be separately debated, it was thought that the Heads to be debated should for the most part comprise the Ministry concerned in the debate and then concern itself with any part or the whole of the Portfolio of the Minister.

I need not, perhaps, remind the House that the progress which we make, and the stage which we depends entirely on the House and on the extent of the debates on the earlier Heads. If debate ranges too long and too widely on any one or more Heads then, of course, the greater the number of Heads which will be excluded from separate debate and which will, therefore, come with the rest of the Heads, under the guillotine at the end of our Supply procedure.

The Sessional Committee considered, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in the light of the debate the other day, whether any and if so what measures should be recommended to the House to expedite the despatch of business so as to conclude all outstanding business, if possible, by the end of June and, having taken into account the views and wishes of the House as expressed in the debate the other day, the Sessional Committee recommends that there should be double sittings on Thursday, 6th June, Thursday, 23rd June and, if the business of the House then outstanding has not been concluded by 30th June, that there should be a double sitting on that day also. I announce this recommendation now for the information of Members, and I should be grateful if all Members through their groups and representatives on the Sessional Committee would express their views on this recommendation, their assent or acceptance of the idea that we should have a double sitting on each Thursday pending the completion of the Supply procedure on the Annual Estimates until the outstanding business of the House is concluded.

I have not giving formal notice of a Motion to that effect, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but, of course, a Motion will have to be moved in due course, if and when a decision to pursue this recommendation is taken by the Sessional Committee in the light of any views which may be represented to it by representatives of groups serving on that committee.

MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

ROYAL WEDDING

The Acting Chief Secretary (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Finally, Mr. Deputy Speaker, today is the wedding day of Her Royal Highness the Princess Margaret and Mr. Armstrong-Jones. His Excellency the Acting Governor has, on behalf of the Government and the people of Kenya, sent a telegram of good wishes to Her Royal Highness and Mr. Armstrong-Jones. I feel sure I express the sentiment of the House when I say that this day should not go unremarked by this Council and that it would be the wish of us all that we should be associated with the expression of good wishes.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

MOTION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR (Resumption of debate interrupted on 5th May, 1960.)

The Temporary Minister for Labour, Social Security and Adult Education (Mr. Luyt): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I welcome the information that we have just had from the leader of the House, that the Labour Head in the Estimates has been given a really high place in the order of Heads which this Council is to debate starting next week. I think, certainly to my recollection, it is an all time record that the labour horse should be running so well as to come in second. For each of the last four years it was left completely at the post. It also means that if I overtook in my speech today, any point that has been made by hon. Members over these last two or three days, and which may yet be made before this present debate ends, I will have an opportunity of dealing with such points within, I hope, the next week. I therefore, Sir, today propose to confine myself largely to the two labour subjects which have, I think, stood out head and shoulders above any others during the debate of the last three days. Those are, of course, the Thika District labour troubles and unemployment.

A number of Members have spoken on both these issues. Both greatly affect the health of this country, and notably in the context of the present debate, the economic health of the country. The hon. Member for Ukamba in opening the debate on the Minister for Finance's speech made the Thika District troubles the keynote of his remarks. He described the unhappy position, and he drew attention to both the labour and the security implications of the present troubles, and the potential disaster to our economy if a remedy was not quickly found. The hon. Member for Kiambu underlined the issue similarly, and the hon. Member for Nairobi Area, at a later stage, added his comments and his point of view. The Minister for Defence yesterday most eloquently and firmly gave us his understanding of the security position in that area as well as in the rest of the country, and I will deal more with the straight labour aspects of the problem rather than with the security, although, unfortunately the two in this case are to such an extent inter-related that it is not possible for them to be clean cut apart.

Now, Sir, how do I see the Thika troubles? I fully share the apprehensions of other speakers. The matter is already serious, and it is potentially much more so. I think we want to get this quite clear, and I think we also want to keep clearly in our minds what could be the effect on this country if the situation in the Thika District were to deteriorate substantially. Fortunately, I do not think there is need to assume that it will deteriorate. We need not take quite that gloomy view, but we must be taking steps and preparing ourselves, in fact, already be doing things to prevent such deterioration. I am quite satisfied that if everybody concerned does play a part and play it fully and contribute to finding a remedy, contribute to the fullest extent of their opportunities, then the position need not only not deteriorate, but can fairly rapidly get better.

It is my intention today, Sir, to speak mainly therefore into looking into the immediate future to see what can be done by all those who have an opportunity to contribute to finding this remedy, rather than to look back over the last few months recriminating and casting blame. However, in looking into the future, and I am stressing now the immediate future, we must know what are the facts, and I would like to give a few simple statistics to put the thing in perspective. Over the four months, January to April, 1960, the position was as follows. (These figures are inevitably to some extent approximate, but the picture is, I think, accurate.) During the month of January there were six strikes in the Thika District involving 880 employees. These strikes were not all over these months on plantation estates, but the great majority were so. During February we had three strikes involving 670 men. During March there were nine strikes involving just on 3,000 men. During April we had 19 strikes involving 6,690 men. That means, Sir, that over the four months we had a total of 37 strikes involving at one time or another some 11,200 men, and that, Sir, is in one district alone. At the end of April ten of these strikes were still continuing, involving some 5,000 men. Fortunately the position by yesterday afternoon was slightly better, and although we still had eight strikes running, there were only 2,300 men concerned.

Now, what, Sir, are the causes of these strikes? These unfortunately are not always been clear cut, and not always strangely even been readily ascertainable, and the following information is again, therefore, to some extent approximate, but again I would claim that the picture is clear. In a number of these strikes more than one reason has been given, and therefore, the following figures which I am about to give do not total up to the 37, which was the total number of strikes over the first four months of the year. In 23 strikes, conditions of service in some form or another, usually pay or rations, were given by strikers for the reason for their being on strike. In 11 cases the strikers stated that their demand was for the dismissal of a headman. Normally it was a headman who had been there for many years and had shown his loyalty during the worst days of the Emergency. In many of these 11 cases also the demand for the dismissal of the headman was not associated with any other strike reason. In six cases there were demands for reinstatement of dismissed men, and in four cases no clear reasons have even now been ascertainable.

Now, Sir, these causes are not in accord with normal strike statistics. That is, they do not tally with the normal pattern of strike causes. The Thika pattern is distorted by the exceptionally and unhealthy large number of strikes against headmen, in favour of the reinstatement of dismissed men, and in respect of reasons which we have been unable to ascertain. We always have a few strikes that fall into these categories, but it is quite abnormal—and this is the important point—it is quite abnormal to have them in this quantity in this short period of time in one area, and this means that there is something other than an industrial cause affecting the situation.

Another unhealthy feature, Sir, pointing to the same conclusion is that a large number, in fact, the majority of these strikes have occurred without any significant discussions or consultations or negotiations with the employers. Now the fact, Sir, that many of these strikes have been unusually difficult for the officers of my Ministry to resolve and to settle by the normal processes of conciliation, also again reinforces the view that there are underlying causes which are not purely industrial.

Now it is a significant fact, Sir, that nearly everybody concerned, the employers and the workers, certainly those who have spoken to me, accept the fact that trade unions have a part to play in the functioning of industrial relations in this country, and that includes the sisal and coffee industries. Trade unionism has only recently become organized or active in the Thika District, and there are, I think, in fairness to all concerned, two factors which we must bear in mind which do have an effect upon the achievement of orderly trade unionism into that area. These are firstly, the political background of these last four months. There is unquestionably an unsettling excitement, to put it at its mildest which affects the attitude of the workers, and this area does fall in that area which the Minister for Defence yesterday mentioned as being near to Nairobi and one of the less satisfactory security areas. Secondly, Sir, there are the difficulties of achieving effective trade union organization, and discipline in any industry in which undertakings are scattered, and particularly in an agricultural industry. This is universally notoriously so, and it applies equally in the Thika District, and is a fact, Sir, which must be taken into account.

Now, Sir, against the acceptance of trade unionism by employers, and I repeat that the great majority of employers who have spoken to me do not quarrel about their acceptance, what can everybody do? I would suggest that first and foremost the leaders of the employer organizations and the unions should meet round a table, should continue to meet, and to meet regularly, to discuss the problems afflicting this area, and potentially afflicting coffee and sisal as a whole, and should attempt to get right into each other's understanding and knowledge and genuinely endeavour to get together in the interests of the industry. In the ultimate, Sir, although my Ministry can help in any industry it is always the persons who are in that industry that are best fitted to sort out the troubles of that industry. In saying this, Sir, I welcome the latest move of the Coffee Growers' Association to meet the Coffee Plantation Workers' Union, and I understand that that meeting takes place tomorrow. I am sure that we would all wish it every success in this matter. I understand, Sir, that there is also no reluctance on the part of the sisal growers to meet their opposite number. Unfortunately it is a fact that the Sisal Plantation Workers' Union did, for various reasons that I need not go into now, disintegrate somewhat as to its leadership over the last month or two, and it is only in recent days that new leadership has been got into the post. However, as that is now so I do hope that meetings there will also take place in the very near future.

Now, Sir, perhaps to employers specifically, and in speaking to either employers or workers, as I said earlier on, I am not recriminating or casting blame. What I am doing is casting round to try and find every possible solution, every possible step that might be of any assistance in our present trouble. I would say that where an employer, or an organization of which an employer is a member accepts the entry of a trade union into his industry, I would ask that his labour should be put in knowledge of that acceptance, in order to avoid any misunderstanding. In saying that I am thinking not only of the labour as a whole, so thinking not only of the labour as a whole, so that they should know the employers attitude in this matter, and should not when a trade unionist talks to them, be left with any impression that this is a matter of which the employer will inevitably disapprove. I am thinking/also that there are many headmen, who against the background of their experience over the last eight or ten years might understandably, when they see organization in the labour line, be extremely suspicious of what it is all about. They might, in fact, have a first reaction of hostility towards it. Therefore, simply as good personnel management, if an employer accepts trade unionism, I suggest that he makes sure that both his headmen and his labour know of his views on the matter. And then I would also suggest, Sir, that in addition to this machinery of consultation and negotiation which has now been set up at the top of the coffee industry (and I hope soon the sisal industry), that there will, at the level of the individual undertaking—and I am thinking particularly of the bigger undertaking, because there are undertakings which employ many hundreds and thousands of men—that they too should set up consultative committees or machinery of some sort at the level of the individual undertaking. Here again, there should be the full opportunity for removing misunderstanding, for frank discussion on the criticisms and grievances of each side.

Then, Sir, turning to the worker force. It would be idle for me to stand here and address the workers of the Thika District at large and expect my words to reach them. I would, of course, appeal for a much more steady approach, for abandoning the strike, the step of taking a strike the minute there is any grievance, but rather than address myself to workers as a whole I will, Sir, today, address myself to those who are in the best position to have influence on the workers, and that is the trade union movement. And in saying that, Sir, I am bearing in mind the fact that the trade unions have assured me, and that a large number of instances—have confirmed that these strikes have not been trade union called in the first place. Nevertheless, trade unionism has an impact upon the situation, and it is certainly in a position to help in this matter. I would call upon it, upon the Kenya Federation of Labour and to each of the unions directly affected, now to take the opportunity which is uniquely theirs more than anybody else's to assist in restoring order into the plantations in the Thika District. It was only yesterday, Sir—or perhaps two days ago—that the hon. Member for Nairobi Area drew attention to the good record of the trade union movement over the Emergency years, and to the fact that when they had the opportunity they did not disrupt the industries of this country during that Emergency period. Now it is only fair that I should, in respect of the period in which I had direct experience in my position then as Labour Commissioner, 1954-1957, when I had direct experience of dealing with the hon. Member in his trade union capacity, confirm that there were indeed a number of occasions when it appeared [Temporary Minister for Labour, etc.] to me that one industry or another, very important to this country, was heading for serious trouble, and the hon. Member and his colleagues, in consultation with me and my officers did contribute to keeping those industries at work and to settling issues that might otherwise have ended in strikes.

And it is against that background knowledge and experience that he and his colleagues have, on occasions, been helpful, that I now again appeal to them in this matter, where the opportunity is clearly again in their hands, that they should take this opportunity to the full; and I am therefore, in that spirit, Sir, appealing to them, and not in one of casting blame for the last four months or of recriminating.

I would ask, Sir, that the top trade unionists should ensure that all their office bearers and all their representatives, no matter how lowly and if possible all their members, but particularly their representatives and those scattered about on the individual undertakings in the plantation industry, that all these men should be fully versed, either by being brought together for perhaps a week-end school, or by some other means, but nevertheless fully versed in certain fundamental principles regarding trade unionism, and that it should be instilled into them that it is their duty as good trade unionists to remain utterly loyal to these principles in practice. Among these principles, Sir, I would include the fact that the rights and privileges—and there are many of the trade unions—are accompanied by obligations and responsibilities. I would put across, Sir, that trade unionism does not exist as an anti-employer movement. It is primarily a pro-workers movement, and a "pro-prosperity for all movement"; and that should be the object of every trade unionist, and we should endeavour to get that across. Another principle is that the united strength that the trade union has acquired is primarily for use in consultation and negotiation and not for disruption. There are procedures for dealing with grievances. It is essential, Sir, that the trade union movement should put across to all their office bearers and to those whom they seek to enrol into their ranks, the fact that procedures must be used. In the first place consultation, against the background of organized strength, certainly, but consultation and negotiation with employers. When those break down then there are procedures provided by the State for assisting further in the settlement of a dispute, and that the strike weapon is the absolutely last resort. It is not one that is denied to people, but it is a last step. This is a most important principle to be put across. Strikes should also never take place and should certainly never be called in the name of the union unless they have the full permission, authority, of the central controlling body of that Union. The trade union movement is primarily for an employment purpose and for a political purpose.

Finally, Sir, there is a point that perhaps at the present moment needs more stressing than any other. Intimidation for any purpose whatsoever in connexion with Trade Unions, or for that matter anything else, is evil and must be outlawed. Now, Sir, it is true and very happily true that we have been hearing in public speeches from African leaders over recent months more and more frequent and firmly worded appeals to their people to abhor lawlessness. I welcome those appeals. We had a repeat of one which I welcomed yesterday from the hon. Member for Central Rift when he spoke against lawlessness. I welcomed that greatly. At the same time, I was however, Sir, disappointed that when my friend the hon. Member for Nairobi Area two days ago had an opportunity in this House of commenting upon the allegations of intimidation that had been made by earlier speakers he did not, Sir, in his remarks include an outright condemnation of intimidation from the Floor of this House but instead, Sir, suggested that intimidation was natural if men were faced with frustrations.

Mr. Oginga Odinga: Hear, hear!

The Temporary Minister for Labour, Social Security and Adult Education (Mr. Luyt): If men are faced with frustrations there are ways of meeting those frustrations but I would say that any responsible leader should without any qualification at all condemn intimidation. I would ask, Sir, that the hon. Member for Nairobi Area, when he speaks, next week as I hope he will, on the Labour Estimates, that he should then take this further opportunity on behalf of the Trade Union movement of condemning intimidation and saying that he attaches no qualification to that condemnation.

Now, Sir, the same hon. Member, thinking, I believe, of the rather much publicized meeting at the beginning of this week when three Ministers met District Association representatives at Ruiru, suggested that it was unreasonable for the Government to consult only with employers and that there ought to be consultations with the Trade Unions concerned and the Kenya Federation of Labour. It may be, Sir, because the hon. Member has been out of this country rather a lot lately that he is not aware of the consultations with a Kenya Federation of Labour representative that have been going on in my Ministry and of the consultations with the unions concerned.

[Temporary Minister for Labour, etc.]

Now, Sir, next week I hope to be able to come here and report even more progress and a better picture in respect of the Thika problem. I do not want, however, to leave it at the moment by suggesting that the steps that can be taken to help are solely those of the employers and the workers and the Trade Union movement. My Ministry can play a part and we accept a responsibility and a duty to be as active and as vigorous as we can in trying to help in this matter. Basically, however, our part is to try and analyse what is going wrong and then to try to assist and advise in putting it right; to help by putting in a little bit of oil to make the wheels turn more easily; I think, also, to try and keep tempers down, to try and encourage and lead people into more sound ways of dealing with their grievances. I have not suggested at any stage in my speech today, Sir, that there may not be genuine worker grievances in the Thika area. My attack and my criticism is on the manner in which those grievances have been ventilated, if there be grievances. I also know unfortunately that there are other reasons that are affecting this outbreak of strikes. My appeal today, Sir, is that where there be grievances, let them be brought forward in the only manner which will keep peace and order in our industries and may the Trade Union movement lend their weight fully to that and may the employers also let labour know what their policy is and co-operate with organized labour when it comes forward as such.

Now, Sir, in the few minutes that I have left I think it is right that I must touch upon unemployment. Next week I hope to deal more fully with this subject. We recognize the problem, Sir, and the need for an all out endeavour to deal with it. But where—dealing shortly with it now—lie the main answers? Pre-eminent, I would suggest, Sir, is economic development in order to provide more employment opportunities. That need is obvious but it remains the biggest need of all. This in turn, Sir, needs for fulfilment, capital investment and confidence in Kenya. The Government certainly has a part to play in both these respects and I would suggest that one of the most confidence-creating acts which has occurred over recent weeks is the new co-operation of African Members in the Government of this country. It is, Sir, to be remembered that Government capital projects amount on average yearly to about one-third of those of the country as a whole. Therefore, expansion in the private sector of development is not only of first importance but is, of course, of greater importance than the Government share. We would like to see the Government share expressed not in a smaller amount of money, but as a smaller fraction of the total. Now, Sir, if we are to have expansion in the private sector, then frankly we cannot do it against a background of calls for civil disobedience. We also cannot do it without some encouragement for local industries and I was somewhat bemused by the logic of the hon. Member for Mombasa Area who yesterday called for the Government to do something more about stimulating employment opportunities and yet at an earlier stage in his speech suggested that we should take off protective measures for local industries.

There are, Sir, as I have said, things that Government must do. The Government's development programme for the next year shows, I believe, our full awareness that our own capital spending must have due regard to the employment needs of this country. First of all, this development programme for the next year is an all-time record, being some £1,100,000 odd. Secondly, some 65 per cent of the projects appearing therein have an economic bias; more than that, they are economic projects. It would have been quite easy—frankly it might have been a step which might have attracted much political kudos to the Government, might even have made the reputation of the Temporary Minister for Labour—to have taken from that £10,100,000 odd of our balanced development-plan £100,000 or £200,000 leaving still an extremely reputable and creditable development plan, and to have put £100,000 or £200,000 to some special project and called it "Unemployment Relief". I do not believe, Sir, that it would have been responsible or right for us to have done that. Those projects which are genuine employment generators have found a place in that development programme, when being drawn up was studied and looked at from the point of view of its impact upon employment and if a project really was on its merits worth including, both from its employment aspect and from the part that it could play in a balanced development plan, it got a place. As I say, we could have taken one or two of those projects which in any case would have got a place and put them aside and labelled them "Special Unemployment Relief". That, however, would have set a pattern perhaps, and suggested that it was a good and proper thing to depart from a balanced development programme and use our very scarce money on what might almost be termed "gimmicks". I do not believe that would have been right. However, it is true that my friend, the Minister for Finance, has devised a plan which has had full regard for employment needs.

Now, Sir, another problem in connexion with our unemployment is our present maldistribution of labour. Registered unemployment figures might appear, over these last four months, to [Temporary Minister for Labour, etc.] have rocketed. In actual fact that does not really mean that there is significantly more unemployment now than there was four months ago. What it means primarily is that it is in different places, and it is in places where by its very presence we have had to take more note of it than we did before, and where the work seekers have of their own initiative found it more necessary than before to register with the offices of my Ministry. As I have already said elsewhere, Sir, the registered unemployed at the end of December was some 5,000 men. By the end of January that figure had rocketed in round figures to around the 11,000 mark and that was, of course, entirely because movement restrictions had been taken off and because men had simply flocked in out of the reserves into the towns. By February it had reached its peak—the 12,000 mark. By the end of March it had dropped by 1,000 and all the indications that I have had from round the country for April—I have not yet got the firm figures but I hope I will have them by the time we debate Labour next week—are that the drop is continuing. That does not necessarily mean, Sir, that the drop is a real drop in unemployment. It merely means that, perhaps, the distribution is improving, meaning that men will have gone, perhaps, to some extent, back home or into those areas where there are better employment opportunities. I have not got the opportunity now to go into this whole subject except to emphasize that we are doing everything possible towards it at the moment short of what I earlier called “gimmicks”. These may yet be necessary. I hope they will not be. I will attempt to present a more full and balanced picture next week, and all I will say in the meanwhile is that the committee which I have set up to review our analysis, our Government analysis, of the problem, to review what we are doing, to criticize it and to advise on what we might be doing and are not yet doing, has now been set up. I have asked various organizations round the country to send representatives to this committee and they have answered readily; and this committee, Sir, if I may say so, is meeting for the first time this afternoon and will, I hope, help us all in dealing with this major problem.

I beg to support.

Mr. Maxwell (Trans Nzoia). Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I firstly would like to congratulate the hon. Minister for Finance on the clear and concise manner in which he introduced his Budget. His Budget proposals on the whole, I feel, are not unreasonable.

Sir, I deplore at times the endless repetition that goes on in this House when certain matters are being debated, but on this occasion I crave the indulgence of the hon. Members if I, too, put in a plea on behalf of the farming community. I feel sure that the hon. Minister intended that the tax on light diesel oil would apply only to motor-propelled vehicles. I therefore seek an assurance from him that there was no intention that the tax on light diesel oil used for all agricultural purposes would apply other than for cars or lorries. I believe that this exemption should also apply to light fuel oil used for all industrial purposes. The hon. Minister knows, of course, that a tractor can also be used as a stationary engine, but obviously where it is more economical and sensible to install a small power unit for such purposes as, say, operating milking machines, water pumps, etc., then invariably you will find that a farmer will install a number of small units.

The other point I wish to raise, Sir, is with regard to the Colony's Public Debt, Vote 12, page 51, which, I note, excluding Railway loans amounting to approximately £6,750,000, the Colony has raised loans totalling, if my arithmetic is correct, £41,819,509. Now, in view of the fact that Kenya will ultimately become independent there is an obligation on the part of Her Majesty's Government fully to guarantee repayment to all investors as and when such loans become repayable. These remarks, although I know this does not come within the purview of the Minister for Finance, also apply to loans raised by the High Commission. I should be glad therefore to have an assurance from the hon. Minister that such guarantees, if not already in existence, will be forthcoming.

Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Tyson: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to deal with a few of the points which were raised by the hon. Member for the Nairobi Area yesterday. He made a complaint about the attitude of the Transport Licensing Board in regard to the issue of licences to Africans. What frequently happens is that these applications are made by applicants who have had no previous experience of this highly competitive business and usually the application relates to a route which is already overloaded. It would in my opinion be quite wrong for the Board to grant licences to such applicants, encouraging them to sink probably their life savings in buying a bus, knowing full well, as the Board do, that it can only mean that they will get nowhere and that they will be out of business probably within 12 months and will have lost their life savings.

Now, another point that the hon. Member raised related to the difficulty of Africans getting into trade and getting into business generally. I

[Mr. Tyson] do think that the African Members should realize that we do not just want to aim at providing jobs as karanis or shopkeepers. The prospects are much better for them over the next few years in technical jobs, and it is along those lines that I would prefer to see Africans develop. Loans to farmers or to prospective shopkeepers are not going to get them anywhere and I would much prefer to see the Africans concentrating on technical jobs rather than on these other blind alley occupations. Now, that brings with it the need for more attention to be paid by the Africans in learning English in order that they can take advantage of the many textbooks which are available in English that are not available in any other language and certainly are unlikely to be available in languages like Kikuyu or Swahili within any measurable time. We have facilities here for Africans to learn English in the evening classes which are carried on in their own locations in order to facilitate their being able to attend, and I think the same situation applies in Mombasa and, I think, in Nakuru. By using those facilities the Africans will be able to fit themselves for many technical jobs, and I am thinking particularly of jobs in the Railways Administration and in the Posts and Telecommunications Administration, where there are good well-paid jobs available to Africans provided—and this is a point which has been emphasized on several occasions both by the General Manager and by the leaders of big industrial concerns—that the Africans should have a good working knowledge of English. This is imperative. In addition to the evening classes we shall shortly have a technical institute or polytechnic in Whitehouse Road which again will provide opportunities for the African to learn not only English but technical subjects as well. But what I do want to emphasize, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that the future for the Africans, particularly over the next developing years, is not going to lie in the direction of being karanis or office workers but it lies in the technical field, and I would ask the African Elected Members particularly to do their best to encourage their constituents from the very earliest stage to go in for English so that, as I say, they can take advantage of the many valuable textbooks which are available to us Europeans and which would be equally available to the Africans themselves.

Sir, I beg to support.

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I believe and hope that I shall have a full opportunity of telling hon. Members what Government is doing in respect of forest development, game and fisheries and tourism when Vote No. 34 is debated. Now, Sir, I shall confine myself, in the interests of brevity, to answering specific questions which have been put to me.

The first was by the hon. Arab Elected Member, Sheikh Mahfood, who asked what tourist publicity there was in India and Pakistan and in the Middle East generally. In reply I would like to tell him that of course this is in the hands of the East African Tourist Travel Association and that they do send out large numbers of brochures to India and Pakistan and in particular they are in close contact with tourist agents in Colombo, Bombay, Delhi, Calcutta, and other Indian cities. They actually have four agents with whom they are in contact in Bombay. They have been asked to call for more brochures should they require them. There is also tourist literature supplied by the East African Tourist Travel Association carried by East African Airways, Air India International, and by the shipping lines of British India and Lloyd Triestino. The Tourist Association is also in touch with automobile associations in India and with the Tourist Association in Delhi. The General Manager of the East African Tourist Travel Association has recently had discussions with the Press Attaché of the Indian Commissioner in Nairobi and as a result of this the General Manager hopes to go to India and Pakistan towards the end of this year with a view to broadening the scope of the publicity for tourist travel in East Africa. In addition he has sent films which have been displayed in India. The East African Tourist Travel Association has an associate member in the Lebanon but we are up against difficulties in that part of the Middle East in that most people go to Europe for their leaves and holidays because it is nearer than to come here. In addition to this, private enterprise has displayed very considerable initiative in various areas in the Middle East and recently the hotels at the coast sent a representative to the Middle East, to various parts of Arabia in particular, with a view to expanding their trade with those countries; and expanding their trade with those countries; and in addition another firm in Nairobi has twice sent a representative to Arabia and has visited Bahrain and other areas and is now endeavouring to get a visa to go to Dharan and will shortly, if he obtains that visa, be going there.

The next question was from the hon. Member for Nairobi Area who said he hoped that we would ensure that tourists would see more than game. We are particularly anxious that tourists should do that, and that they should see the special achievements by all races in Kenya in the last half century of which we are all extremely proud. Although game is perhaps the primary attraction the people of Africa are also an increasing attraction to tourists from all parts of the world, as well as the climate and the scenery. Although the garb worn in Legislative Council in the form of bead hats and sporrans is picturesque it is really the Chuka drummers, the Akamba dancers and the Suk who provide the greatest attraction to our visitors and we are arranging facilities whereby visitors can see them. I have shown to the hon. Member for Nairobi North a brochure which we have recently published on the tribes of Kenya, and I think he finds it very satisfactory.

Mr. Alexander: What about the Tigoni Tigers?

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): That comes under the National Parks.

An interesting point in this brochure which I have read only yesterday indicates that the Luo tribe fight very well by day but not by night. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am not certain, therefore, if we were right in discarding the idea of night sessions in Legislative Council.

I would also like to draw the attention of the hon. Member for Nairobi North to a brochure issued by Treetops in which visits are arranged and encouraged to the Reserves in order that our visitors from all countries may see the achievements and development, particularly in agriculture, by the Kikuyu people, and we shall endeavour to extend those tours to other areas.

I would like to inform him also of the very considerable and important role being played by Africans as driver-couriers in taking parties of visitors around the country. Now, some of these are becoming personalities in the same way as white hunters and are being specifically asked for by name on repeat visits by people from America and other countries. I am watching with interest the development of this line and I hear that some of these driver-couriers are under a certain disability which I am removing. They require every encouragement; they are doing us a very great deal of good.

Now, the next question came from the hon. Member for Nairobi North. He made an extremely interesting and of course provocative speech, but since I am responsible for Fisheries as well I propose to rise to the bait and reply to his questions because we in Kenya simply cannot neglect the "untold millions" which he said were dangling before our eyes and easily accessible to us. He did at a recent meeting more specifically state the number of those untold millions but I think he has been frightened rather perhaps by the hon. Member for Nairobi West and is a little more general in his estimates when he is in Legislative Council. But he did say the other day that he thought these untold millions were round about 50. At the present time, of course, the tourist industry is bringing into Kenya about £5,000,000 annually and I have told hon. Members that I believe firmly that we can in the foreseeable future, in a few years, double that to perhaps £10,000,000. That is my target. But there are difficulties in the way of this and these millions are not just accessible by advertising, and I would just like to explain to him why.

We have got to co-ordinate supply and demand in the form of accommodation and facilities available with the flow of visitors to this country. We are limited to a smaller extent than most tourist countries in the world by seasons but we are limited. I would like him to know that only about six weeks ago when I endeavoured to find accommodation for some visitors from Canada I found that I could only get a room for one night in one hotel, one of the five major hotels in Nairobi, because all the others were completely full. We are going forward now with two new hotels in Nairobi and we hope shortly to start a third. But it is a gradual process.

Now, another factor is this, which I would like him to follow. There are two types of tourists. Those who go to a resort such as the Coast, and those who wish to tour round and see the game and the scenery and the people of Africa. The majority fall into the latter category. Now, in order to see how many visitors we could take we did an academic exercise which we are translating into practice by working out four circular tours from Nairobi: roughly, one east, one north, one south, and one west, each taking a week. Therefore we require seven stopping places in the form of either hotels or lodges in each one of those circuits, which makes 28 in all. Now, assuming that we could have 40 beds in each one of those stopping places each night available it will be seen that we could accommodate 1,120 visitors per night. If each of those were to stay in this country for a fortnight, if your arithmetic coincides with mine you will find that the total number of visitors in the year are 29,120.

Now, that is presupposing that we can co-ordinate the arrival of aircraft or ships with the day when the accommodation is available, and of course it is not wholly practicable that we could get those 29,000 people in a year in Kenya. But you will therefore see the limitations, because at the present time we have 45,000 visitors to Kenya in a year. That was the 1959 figure. The extra are, of course, accommodated by visits to parts of Kenya other than those which I am describing in these circuits: to West Kenya, the people who go through to Uganda, the people who go down to Tanganyika, and the people who stay at the Coast. But you will see that we are very near the limits of the capacity of our present accommodation in certain respects, and therefore if we are to increase by ten times, as the hon. Member suggests, we might have to have ten times the accommodation. It is a gradual process which we must build up. But, as I say, I can foresee the possibility in the next few years of doubling this revenue but certainly not increasing it ten times, and I would like him to appreciate the limitations and the work that has to be put in before we can increase the revenue for the country. Other limitations of course are political and economic stability. I have spoken about this before and I have told hon. Members of the tragic withdrawal of £750,000 which was promised when I was visiting London last September for the construction of a hotel on account of a report in the paper that there had been riots in Nairobi. Of course if there is an imminence or a threat of railway strikes, bus strikes and so forth, Sir, that again will be to the disadvantage of this tourist industry. But when I say that I cannot see the achievement of the figure given by the hon. Member for Nairobi North please do not interpret that as meaning that it has not a tremendous future—I mean the tourist industry—because it has, but it does require careful co-ordination and building up; it requires us to inspire confidence in investors so that they will put money into hotels, but with that I see no reason why we cannot in the near future double the present revenue to the country.

He then went on to the question of shop windows and said that it was tragic that the East African Tourist Travel Association had changed its policy and was closing down its own shop windows. Now, that is not tragic, it is common sense in my opinion, because there are thousands of shop windows at our disposal. I would like to show the hon. Member a picture of a window display in London by the Union-Castle Line. It is simply splendid and that is only one of many. The British India Line have promised us a window any time we like in London. The Airways also will provide us with shop windows because it is to those kind of offices that people go when they wish to come to Kenya. They go to an airways office or they go to a shipping office. That is where we must have the shop window and the information at the travel agents of which there are literally thousands in the United States, in Europe and in Britain. The changed policy of the East African Tourist Travel Association is not dictated by the lack of funds but by the revised idea based on experience of other people in the tourist industry that it is better to devote the money to having informed couriers going round to these, literally thousands of tourist agents seeing that they are equipped with brochures and information, to sell East Africa, rather than have somebody sitting on his chair in an office in London or elsewhere.

He also criticized the amount of money which was devoted by Government to subventions to the East African Tourist Travel Association. But there again he must consider the question of co-ordination of supply and demand, the relation of publicity, and the flow that it induces, to the facilities that we have here. But I would like him to study the figures and compare what the British Government subvention to the British Travel and Holidays Association is as compared with the Kenya Government subvention to the East African Tourist Travel Association. Her Majesty's Government's subvention to the British Travel and Holidays Association is £1,050,000, and the Kenya Government subvention to tourism in the form of a subvention to the East African Tourist Travel Association of, we hope, £12,700 for the coming year, plus £6,250 which is available to my Ministry for the promotion of tourism matters, a total of £18,950. This is a greater proportion of the country's revenue than the £1,050,000 is to the revenue of Britain. Since he is so keen on statistics I would like him to consider briefly that one.

Then, in a crescendo of provocation, the hon. Member for Nairobi North said that with the present Government policy on game there would shortly be no game left. Now, Sir, I cannot rise so far as to deal with that one at the present juncture, but I will give a full picture when, as I hope, I shall be able to deal with the Vote in I hope, but I would like him to consider the words of Dr. Fairfield Osborn which I think he recently expressed in New York or, at least, in the United States, when he said that he was not pessimistic about the game situation in Kenya. I should add, to complete the quotation, that he also said that he was not optimistic, but at least he felt that there was some hope, as there is of course, and I shall have great pleasure in painting a full picture of what Government and what the National Parks organizations and other new developments are doing for the protection of game in Kenya when I deal with the Head. I would also like him to consider before that the expansion of the Game Department by that the Kenya Government has resulted in it being doubled since 1950; not only is the expenditure more than doubled but the personnel have also been doubled, and he will see by reference to the Estimates that in 1950 we spent £40,000 on the Game Department whereas we propose to spend in the coming financial year £111,000. I will not go any further into that question at the present time, but I do welcome the hon. Member's speech —as I say, it was provocative and interesting. It did evoke criticism from one hon. Member, who said, "Was it worthwhile? Did he thereby make said, "Was it worthwhile? Did he thereby make two blades of grass grow where one grew before?" Well, maybe not, but I think he certainly did make two lemons grow where one grew before.

The next question, Sir, was from the hon. and noble Corporate Member Lord Portsmouth. Now, we owe him—and I particularly owe him—much gratitude for the work that he has put in in the last seven years as Chairman of the Forest Advisory Committee and into the interests of Kenya in this respect. Happily my predecessor is still here but were he away the hon. and noble Member would provide the continuity that is so necessary in such an important industry as that of the forests of Kenya. He asked me specifically whether it would be possible to devote some of the money which Government proposes to invest in further forest development in order that unemployed may be occupied in making firebreaks in the forests. I have consulted with the Chief Conservator and he tells me that he willingly accepts that idea and will devote a large part of that money to this very necessary work. Happily we have had a few years when there have been abnormal rains, larger than usual, and we are very conscious of the fact that that will not go on for ever and therefore he has welcomed the idea of making good work which has perhaps been neglected through necessity of other work, of planting and maintenance, and plantation development. He has accepted that idea and will devote a considerable proportion of the money which will be available, amounting we hope to £100,000 over three years, to catching up with the backlog of work in that respect in regard to firebreaks.

The next question came from the hon. Member for the Eastern Electoral Area, and a similar question was asked by the hon. Member for Mombasa Area, with regard to the East African Tourist Travel Association as a poor relation. I think I have covered that one but I think the epithet "poor relation" is wrong, because if that Association were a poor relation it would get subventions whereas if it were a rich relation it would not.

But the main question raised by both hon. Members was with regard to racial discrimination in hotels. Now, I am fully aware that the situation is still not wholly satisfactory. We are continuing to have great help and assistance from the East African Hotelkeepers' Association in our drive for a greater realization of the position today. We are getting that and the situation is changing very rapidly, though, as I say, it is not wholly satisfactory. But I can assure them that almost all the best hotels in Kenya now practice no discrimination whatsoever. There is one outstandingly difficult problem of which the hon. Member for Mombasa Area is aware, and I know he was referring to that specific hotel. I can assure him that in spite of the difficulties in the covenant the people concerned are showing willing to remove that, and we are making progress. I cannot say more at the present time. But all, I think, all hotel-keepers, especially members of the Association who have been circulated with a paper, are aware of their responsibilities, and obligations as innkeepers under the common law, and I feel that the situation, although not wholly satisfactory, is improving monthly.

I welcome the speech by my colleague; the Minister for Housing, in reference to Kibera. He spoke of the inhabitants there as well as being loyal British subjects, but there is something perhaps more important that he may not realize, that not only are they loyal subjects, but very good golf caddies, and they provide most of the caddies for the Royal Nairobi Golf Club. The reason they are so good is because in Kibera they have their own golf course, and I do hope that the few holes on which they practice will be retained in the new planning scheme for Kibera.

The hon. Member for Central Rift said that game was a nuisance because it spread disease, and also because it drank the rainwater. Well, I fear there are not sufficient funds to lay on water other than rainwater for the game to drink. I do not know quite what kind of water he expected they would drink, but I hope to comfort him with regard to disease, depredations of game and control generally when I deal with the subject more fully.

The hon. Member for Mombasa asked that we should consider the increase of the subvention for recurrent expenditure by the Royal National Parks. I think he may know by now that Government has been able to reimburse the National Parks recently, and very justifiably for the excellent work that the Trustees have carried out with regard to anti-poaching measures in the past, and the finance of this organization is a matter which is having very deep consideration by us. It is somewhat complex, and I hope to be able to give a fuller picture when dealing with the Vote.

I think that answers all the questions, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I beg to support.

Mr. Zafrud Deen (West Electoral Area): Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is most uninspiring to see so many empty seats on the Government Front Benches, which are now being filled but I hope that the points raised by Members on this side of the House will be conveyed to the Ministers concerned.

Sir, I think I would also like to join the chorus in paying my compliments to the Minister for Finance for presenting a Budget which has been received with a sigh of relief. Sir, the lucidity with which the Minister made his points deserved praise, but it is not easy to comprehend that after the lifting of the Emergency, how the expenditure remains the same as it was two or three years ago. I believe that at least part of the huge organization which was required to manage the Emergency has been disbanded by now.

Sir, one can understand that the revenue had to be found to meet the deficit, but as the Minister himself said, he had borne in mind that in no way would it have any effect on the cost of living. But it seems that there are signs that the cost of living is already being affected as we see that the charges on the transport, particularly in Nairobi, have risen, and I believe this will also happen in the case of other articles which are transported by trucks which use light diesel oil. This is a very important aspect which I hope will be very carefully considered by the Minister, and it might also call for, although personally I detest any kind of controls in the country, for some kind of control over the road transport charges, and also on the profits made by the oil companies.

Sir, I have only a few points to make, but I would take the opportunity here to say a word or two in defence of the residents of Kibera. Sir, I am afraid the Minister for Housing, while reading out extracts from a newspaper report, has not done full justice to the residents of Kibera, who, as we all know, are very loyal residents and ex-soldiers who have given their loyal support in time of difficulties in the past. Sir, some of the things which I am going to say now are probably not recorded in the annals of the official history of Kibera, but I can say this, and I am sure this is also within the knowledge of many others who know the history of Kibera, that the covetous eyes of the City Council have been cast across the little river dividing the Woodley Estate and Kibera. This was the fear which exercised the minds of the residents of Kibera for a very long time, and the words which they have used in their Press report, really are the result of the frustration which they felt when they found with their backs to the wall that they had no sympathizers in this country.

I wish to assure him that the residents of Kibera did not actually mean what the paper reported. They had fought their case for over a period of 30 years or more, and ultimately they found that the authorities were not prepared to consider sympathetically their difficulties. They always had the fear of eviction, which I am very glad to see the Minister has assured us is not going to happen. But I will request him most earnestly to consult the elders of Kibera before he makes any decisions, as to whether Kibera should become part of Nairobi City Council. That would mean, perhaps, that the residents of Kibera would have to pay the exorbitant rates which the other plottolders in the Nairobi township have to pay.

Sir, I also would like to pay a compliment to the hon. and noble Lord, for the right note which he struck in laying emphasis on the question of unemployment. Sir, I believe that unemployment has assumed alarming proportions, in spite of what the Acting Minister for Labour has said. It is within my knowledge, and I am sure that all the Elected Members on this side of the House will also endorse my views, that unemployment in the country is growing, and growing fast. Sir, the scheme which was mentioned in the speech by the hon. Minister is most welcome. It is a relief to see that at least 1,000 families will be settled in the forest areas. I think it is a step in the right direction, but it is far short of the problems facing the country at the moment, and I entirely agree with the noble Lord that where manpower can replace machinery, as it does profitably in many cases, every consideration should be given to using manpower in preference to machinery. I am aware that the Government alone is not able to tackle the problem of growing unemployment, but the Government can set an example and give the lead. We will be told that this is not a welfare state, and Government resources are insufficient, but let us turn our thoughts to the consequences of widespread unemployment. We have already seen the results of this unemployment in strikes which have just started, and from my personal knowledge I would say that in a very short time we will see a very difficult problem which will face the country.

I would like to comment on the speech made by the hon. Minister for Defence yesterday, which I believe has restored the confidence of a lot of people, particularly on the point which he mentioned, that he could not trace any motive in the crime wave, any political motive in the present crime wave of the country, and here I must also say that I am surprised to see in the Press that it is said that recrudescence of Mau Mau is now taking place beyond the Central Province;

[Mr. Zafud Deen] the names of Mombasa and Nakuru have been mentioned.

The Minister for Internal Security and Defence (Mr. Swann): I am most grateful to the hon. Member for giving way. Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, on a point of information, I would like to make it quite clear here that my references to Nakuru and Mombasa only referred to the increase of crime due to the presence of large numbers of unemployed. There is absolutely no sign of a recrudescence of Mau Mau in Mombasa or Nakuru, and already this morning, Sir, I have had some telephone calls from some very indignant inhabitants of the seaside on this matter, and I am most grateful to the hon. Member for giving me this opportunity of putting matters right.

Mr. Zafud Deen: There is a very serious incidence of unemployment in the country, and I think it is the concern of this House, as the poverty of one man is the poverty of all, and immediate steps are needed to put right the situation, and I believe that the Government should not wait until we have the report of the Commissioner on the situation in the country.

Sir, we have heard many angry speeches by some of the Asian Elected Members on the question of school fees, which affect the secondary classes. I am afraid, Sir, I will have to join with them in saying that these school fees are having a very serious effect on the section of the lower income group of the Asian community, and if I may say so, in spite of the efforts made by the Minister for Education to improve the educational standards of the Asian schools, which were deplorably neglected in the past, I cannot help remarking that certain promises which were made to the Asian parents, particularly in regard to modern education are not being kept. I believe that Members of this House will remember that the Wood/Harper Report recommended amongst its many other recommendations that boys, after finishing modern schools, should have an opportunity of joining technical education, so as to give them an opportunity to become first-class artisans and technicians, and this was one of the main objects and aims of the Institute. Whereas I am glad that this Institute is going up very fast, this was what was promised to us, but now we understand that the level of entry or admission to the Technical Institute has been raised, so that the boys coming from the modern schools will not have an opportunity of going to the Technical Institute. If that is the case, then again a very large number of teenagers will be thrown on the streets, and they will have no occupation to keep them busy, and that will again become a very serious social situation, and we already know that delinquency is on the increase, particularly in the cities of Nairobi and Mombasa, and it is the concern of the parents as well as responsible people in the country to see that this problem is properly controlled. Sir, I appeal to the Minister to go into this matter very carefully, and in view of what I have tried to explain I hope that he will take steps so that boys who finish their modern courses will have an opportunity of joining the Technical Institute.

Sir, there is one point I would like to raise in connexion with the reduction of school fees for the secondary classes, and that is a suggestion which was made when the Asian Elected Members met His Excellency, which was that in case more than one student from the same family at a school, some reduction should be given to that family. That would partly meet with the difficulties which these families are facing.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Webb) took the Chair]

Now, Sir, turning to the affairs of local government, I feel it is my duty to point out that it is not only the question of rates under which the public is groaning, but there are several other factors which are adding to the misery of the impoverished townspeople. An important point which was raised by the Member for Nairobi Area. Unfortunately, he brought the question of racial discrimination into it, I am afraid he was misinformed on some of the aspects of the behaviour of local government. Sir, I have a feeling that his association with that section of the Asian community which is noted for its affluence and wealth was probably the reason for his not understanding the position of the poorer section of the Asian community. Sir, if I may say so, we have seen that it is a misfortune of the Asian people to be always on the defensive. They are the easiest targets to attack. They have always been. But may I say that a very large section of the Asians suffer from the same disabilities which he described in regard to the Africans. I can assure him that the same standards of buildings are required from many of the Asians in the trading centres and townships as from the Africans, and I also know that these people are unable to comply with these requirements with the meagre funds at their disposal. I know of a score of cases where their businesses are threatened with closure because it is beyond their means to construct shops and dwelling-houses of stone and mortar of the type we see in the big towns and cities like Nairobi. Sir, imagine how impossible it is for those who scrape a living by selling a few shillings worth of cheap articles a day to construct buildings of stone and mortar. And I also know there are several Members who have had very close connexions with the City and for sentimental reasons alone they will rise to oppose this criticism of the City Council, but I would not hesitate to say that the fictitious valuation of land, particularly in the City of Nairobi, which is increasing year after year, without any regard to the capacity of the people who were encouraged to build their own homes. The greed and avarice of these authorities knows no bounds, and they are disregarding the well-being of the public, and their arrogance, if I may say so, in some respects, is becoming phenomenal. If this goes on much longer this may result in abandoning of the un-built pieces of land. This has happened in the past in Eastleigh and other areas, and I do not exaggerate when I say that this may happen again. The authorities should think again and cut their expenses to what they can obtain conveniently from the public. In the case of the lower income group, if some have shelter of a roof it must be understood they also want something to be left to feed themselves over the subsistence level.

Sir, not long ago the Minister for Local Government promised to look into the question of rates levied on portions of land where mosques, churches and temples were built. Sir, nothing came of this as the Nairobi City Council was adamant on taking "its pound of flesh". All reasonable people agree that the law pertaining to this never intended that quarters built in the compounds of these places of worship for priests should be treated as separate portions for the purposes of rates. The Government itself has set an example by freeing these places from land taxes, and the same principle must apply in the case of municipal rates. Sir, I am voicing the feelings of all the religious bodies that the Minister should intervene and stop this outrage.

Sir, finally I would like to remind the Members of this House that since our return from London we all thought that we had brought that new spirit which we had found in London. Sir, there is no doubt that we discovered a common ground of understanding and goodwill and when we left London we thought the same thoughts and the same spirit would prevail all over this country. Unfortunately since our return we have found that this is not the case, and I would urge the Members of this House that they should exert all their energies towards this end, because here lies the future and prosperity and happiness of this country.

Sir, I hope these few matters which I have raised, and which must be raised from time to time no matter what Government we have in this country, will be gone into, and when the Ministers reply they will take these views into consideration.

Sir, I beg to support.

The Minister for Education (Mr. Mathieson). Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, it is natural that in a Budget which reflects an increase of over half a million pounds in the recurrent expenditure on education we should have had quite a number of observations on certain features of it during the course of this general debate. An increase of over half a million in our annual recurrent expenditure on education this year, of which almost three-quarters is devoted to the expansion of African education, is, indeed, a formidable step forward, and increases in expenditure on education at such a rate, which are likely to be called for annually for as far ahead as I can see, will place a very heavy strain upon the expansion of our economy.

There are two aspects of the situation which cause me a little anxiety. First of all, this additional expenditure has been found this year only by absorbing a very large proportion of the relief which has been afforded to us through the generous assumption of financial responsibility by Her Majesty's Government for the cost of the East African Land Forces. My hon. friend, the Minister for Finance, and I appreciate very much the references made by the hon. Member for Mombasa and my hon. friend, Dr. Adalja, on the apportionment of such a large element of this "windfall". If I can call it that, to the expansion of our educational facilities. But this will not be a regular recurrent easement of our position, and it is clear that, if we are to maintain the momentum of educational expansion, we must hope that our economy will expand and we can rely on increased yields from taxation.

There is another aspect of the position which causes me some anxiety, and that is that by far the greater proportion of this increased expenditure arises from the inevitably increasing claims of our existing systems. For example, our existing teachers in a young service naturally expect, and do, earn more every year, and this increases our bill very substantially. Existing schools, as they grow from year to year to their full scope, employ more staff and require more equipment, and there again we have rising financial commitments without any really significant new development in the structure. The natural and unavoidable expansion of this existing system absorbs a formidable amount of money annually, and it is disappointing that this feature of the problem is precluding at this time much new development which is clearly desirable, which is manifestly urgent, and which indeed is widely demanded. We have had to take some fairly hard decisions on the priorities to be observed, and I cannot therefore expect hon. Members to find in every aspect of our proposals for financing education

[The Minister for Education]

This year a source of complete satisfaction. But I was pleased to hear from my hon. friend, Mr. Luseno, that the decision reflected in these Estimates to put the emphasis on secondary education, and notably on higher secondary education, was one which would command wide support.

It is not for me, at this stage of this debate Sir, to prolong it by reviewing at length the various decisions which are reflected in the Estimates, and the interlocking plans on which they are based, since I know that education will be amongst those Votes selected from more detailed discussion later. But at this point I would like to deal with the various matters of importance which have been raised by hon. Members in the course of our general discussions.

The hon. Deputy Member for Nyeri and Embu, in a well contrived maiden speech, referred to teachers' salaries, and notably to the disparity of remuneration between African and Asian teachers with comparable qualifications. The particular anomaly to which he referred derives, of course, directly from the recommendations of the Lidbury Commission, and was based on the assessment of the difficulties of that time in respective fields of recruitment. It is perhaps easier now than it was then to attract Asian candidates to this grade of teaching, and we may well perhaps be paying too much. On the other hand I hesitate to suggest that anyone engaged in the arduous and important profession of teaching is being over-rewarded for his services. The African K.T.1 teacher is now assuming growing responsibilities and has indeed a very vital place in the development of our educational system, and I should, myself, like to see the possibility of making the terms of service for this grade of teacher more attractive since we very much need to get the right candidates for this training, and we are expanding our training facilities for this level of teacher.

It is, of course, always difficult to balance the claims for expansion against the claims of the existing service and there is also another dilemma in that we are working hard on the great and complex and difficult problem of putting forward proposals for a unified teachers' service which is based on a Burnham-type structure with special responsibility allowances and involving overall a very substantial revision of the general terms of service of teachers of all races. It is not particularly easy at the same time as we are approaching this more general problem to make ad hoc changes in some features in the existing pattern of terms of service, but I have great sympathy for the position of certain grades of teachers; for example, the married women who are in temporary service, those in particular with high qualifications, who are vitally important in some of our schools and also the position of the head-masters of African intermediate schools who have a very considerable responsibility in an expanding system. I hope that in our general examination of this problem of teachers' pay and conditions we will be able to do something for the head-masters of those schools.

The hon. Member for Rift Valley also remarked that he had some apprehension regarding the staffing of our primary schools. I can say that we are not too badly off at the moment. The situation is always fairly critical but never desperate.

The hon. Member for the Eastern Electoral Area and also the hon. Member for the Central Electoral Area referred to the raising of school fees in Asian secondary schools. They said it was surprising that Government had proceeded in this matter when the entire Advisory Council on Asian education had been solidly against it. Well, Sir, I was frankly not surprised that the Advisory Council was against an increase in fees. Any advisory council would be and anyone you ask, "Do you want an increase in fees?" would say, "No". But we explained to the Advisory Council the reasons which had led the Government to conclude, as indeed was explained when we had this debate last year, that additional revenue from fees was essential. His Excellency the Governor also received a deputation from the Asian Elected Members when this matter was again fully discussed and it was then pointed out that if the objection was that this would bring hardship to individuals, then the answer was in the field of remission in necessitous cases. It is a fact that in relation to these increased fees the remissions have gone up and I am satisfied that no case of real hardship is not being dealt with in this way. The hon. Member for the Eastern Electoral Area may be interested to know, for example, that in the Coast Girls' High School in Mombasa the percentage of remissions has gone up this year as compared with last year from 4 per cent to 12 per cent. Similarly in the Technical High School in Mombasa the level of remissions has gone up from 11 per cent to 17 per cent. I think that that reflects a proper attitude on the part of the Remissions Committee, that where there is real hardship due to an increase in fees, this is met either by complete or partial remission.

The hon. Member for the Eastern Electoral Area also referred to the proposal to establish boards of governors for some of our secondary schools. I think he said that he would reserve his judgment on the general merits of this proposition until further detail on the financial arrangements were forthcoming and we are at present at work on producing detail on the proposed financial arrangements and will discuss this with the relevant advisory councils. I personally believe quite firmly that education is best conducted when the greatest freedom is given to individual schools to develop their own personality and special qualities. We can best achieve this by giving as large a degree of self-government as possible to individual schools and maintaining cohesion in the educational structure by, for example, central advice on syllabuses, centrally controlled examinations and an effective inspectorate. I cannot see that in any way such a development would inhibit or retard the evident growth of a liberal approach to the problem of making our education national rather than racial.

The hon. Member referred to an interesting Report which has recently been published by a committee set up in Tanganyika. I have also seen the Report and have read it. I understand that the Tanganyika Government will shortly be publishing its own views on the Report of this Committee. It would be the intention of the Government in the light of this and other factors to continue to devote its attention to the elaboration of a policy in this field which requires a thorough review of all the very complex factors involved and a search for a policy which is suited to the local circumstances of Kenya.

The hon. Member for the Mombasa Area, whom I am sorry to see is not at the moment in his place, raised a number of matters of local interest. He asked why there was no sign of any development in the provision of elementary education in Mombasa since the decision locally to arrange for the collection of a special rate. Well, procedure for the collection and expenditure of this rate has been agreed at a meeting of all those concerned in Mombasa. The funds are to be collected locally by the administration and will be handed over to the district education board to be added to funds provided in the Colony development plan for the expansion of elementary education in Mombasa. The objective is to provide universal eight-years' education for all Africans of school age in the Mombasa municipality and we have every hope that before too long we will have achieved this objective.

I would also like to inform him that of the development expenditure contemplated in the period 1960-63 £30,000 will be devoted to the expansion of education at this level in Mombasa. He also said—I think the word he used was "shameful"—that there was not a primary school for girls for Africans in Mombasa whereas Arabs and Asians had separate primary schools for girls. Well, in the case of African education it has been the normal pattern to follow the European system where we have co-education at primary level in all schools. There is in fact in Mombasa one aided school which is restricted to African girls and it is quite possible to attach a separate girls' stream to any particular school. The two reasons which do militate somewhat against a separate development for girls education at the primary level in Mombasa are the shortage of teachers specially trained for this task and also the travelling problem, that if there is only one school, or there is one school particularly set aside for African girls to go to in Mombasa a large number of them would have considerable problems in reaching it and returning from it every day. But it is a matter which I am sure is within their own resources. The district education board in Mombasa could arrange it if this is the desire of the majority.

The other point which the hon. Member for Mombasa Area raised was related to secondary education. He asked whether a day secondary school was contemplated in Mombasa. The answer is that one day secondary school is planned for the Fort Tudor area during the forthcoming period of development. Also in that area higher school certificate classes are being developed at Shimo-la-Tewa and there is to be development assisted from Government funds at the Murray Girls' Secondary School in Teita District and St. George's Giriama Boys' Secondary School which may be of interest to other Members from that area.

The hon. Member for the West Electoral Area referred to the development of the Technical Institute in Nairobi. He suggested that promises, to Asian parents were not being honoured in that the level of entry to the Technical Institute was to be raised. I can assure him that there is no intention of raising the level of entry or making entry to be at only one level. The objective of the Technical Institute is fundamentally to provide opportunities for the acquisition of further skills, training and knowledge to those who are already in employment in order that they can improve their performance, their position and their pay. Therefore, in the main we would aim at providing part-time courses, either on a six month basis or six months in industry or on an evening with six months in industry or on a evening class basis. The whole question of the nature of courses to be offered at the Technical Institute has recently been reviewed by the advisory council on technical education and we are now looking at it again in the light of that advice. I feel that the Technical Institute must particularly be geared to meet the needs and requirements of industry and therefore we are establishing a consultative

[The Minister for Education] committee with industry in order to ensure that the courses which we offer are those which are likely to be useful in our industrial economy. I can assure the hon. Member that there is no intention in any way of depriving the product of secondary modern streams in Asian schools of opportunities of advancing themselves by study at the Technical Institute.

I think, Sir, that I have dealt with the majority of the points that have been raised during the debate. I will, of course, be happy to deal with any further points of detail at greater length when we come to discuss the Vote.

I therefore beg to support.

Mr. Muchura (Specially Elected Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think most other speakers have congratulated the Minister on his first Budget speech to the House. I will join them too. Now, I know also that most speakers have felt much, very much, concerned about the security position in Kenya today. Of course I am equally concerned, because, in the area where I live at the moment there has been that ghastly fight. Knives and the like were used for apparently no reason. I think this is really a deplorable state of affairs. One would imagine—or this is what I would think—that we should try where it is possible physically, economically and otherwise, to try and create a good neighbourly attitude towards our neighbours, towards our friends and even towards our enemies. I am sure that our Government—in fact any Government in any part of the world—will not tolerate such lawlessness. The greatest enemy, as far as I am concerned, are the words we use. Words, as I have been told sometimes, depend very much on who says what, where and to whom. If they are not weighed they can be a great danger.

My next point is that from now on we should—and should have been in the past—working towards a healthy, stable Government; and, of course, lawlessness will not give us that stable Government. Anything which is good when properly done can be turned into a bad thing. I know also that power is likely to corrupt and when left to become absolute it corrupts absolutely. I here draw the attention of the Members of the House to a speech by Sir Ernest Vasey which he very rightly directed to the African leaders today. "Since the Lancaster House Conference the Africans should now be thinking in terms of responsibility." That, I think, stands good today and will stand good tomorrow until all the changes are effected.

I must here join Mrs. Hughes in her plea for the reclamation of children, those children who are likely to go adrift; the future generation who are likely to be a bigger menace without our giving them assistance now when it is possible to change them into good citizens. In that respect I do not think I need to say much more except to say that I join hands with her and I plead with the Government where they can, to try and see what they can do to help these youngsters. I welcome youth clubs and all the rest of it and anything that can be done ought to be done.

Now, my main speech today will be centered on one or two points. The first one is what I would like to call agricultural development and settlement schemes and the second is the support that we should give to our local industries vis-à-vis the worker and the local industries. Now, before I get into the first part of it there is a danger, as has been said by the Minister for Labour, of strikes and various other things happening now, especially the organized strikes by the Union for more wages usually and other things. There again I am sure the Unions will not be blamed as being completely and wholly out of place in their demands, because this House, several years ago did agree in the Carpenter Report that within a certain time the minimum wage—at least in the urban areas—would be £10. That was so in the circumstances of the day, 1953-54, and right up to this time that minimum has more or less never been reached. Therefore, naturally (a) there is pressure because the workers are not able to meet their commitments and (b) some of the problems have come because this was something that was agreed to, but it has so happened, because of our weakness we have not achieved what was thought right five or six years ago.

Kenya is known primarily to be an agricultural country. We lack minerals; we lack a lot of other things which some other countries have. Then, of course, the next point is that now there will be and there are landless Africans. In the past most Africans had something they called a piece of land that belonged to them, but now that is not so. What I find missing is that it is obvious that the Minister did not mention anything in this line of agricultural development other than the land consolidation, and what is being done and how this surplus population goes running into towns while some are left without very much land to eke some sort of living from. At the same time he did not tell us what his ideas were, as to how, he is going to spend the £2,000,000, if he gets it. Is it going to be added on to the Swynnerton Plan to further the land consolidation or is it going to be used to break into new fields, using a different approach completely, adding on to whatever is being done under the Swynnerton

[Mr. Muchura] Plan? I also feel that I would rather have a different approach than the Swynnerton Plan, because I believe, for example, that there is a great deal of room for expansion of such schemes like the Hola scheme, which primarily was meant to cater for the ex-terrorist, but which could be used and expanded tremendously to cater for some other people who will probably find themselves without land or find themselves with a much smaller piece of land, but would like to do something better in a bigger area. This, I believe, could be done. I am trying to say that the whole of the Tana River can be harnessed completely to enrich the whole valley and the surrounding areas right up to Kipini. There are several falls on the Tana River and if these falls could be perhaps channelled to form an irrigation scheme, we could use a great deal of the Tana River, and possibly through this the lower reaches in the Northern Frontier Province. And, of course, I do know that another method of approach would probably be to find water, and where it is possible, to furrow it or channel it and, where it can be done, to dig bore holes, so that one is creating or making more land, new land, for use by the people who will be in great need of it.

Now, on that very same thing I would like to quote here. In 1948 a pamphlet was published called "The Agrarian Problem in Kenya" by the then Governor, Sir Philip Mitchell. The opening paragraph reads: "The present agrarian situation in Kenya is the product of historical events of social economic forces which must be studied in detail for a full understanding." It finishes by saying: "There have certainly been mistakes both of policy and of practice and things which, looking back today over nearly two generations, we all agree ought to have happened, for such is human experience." We know only too well in this House that there is definitely a group of people amongst Africans—quite a large number now—who are definitely landless. There some with just enough. There are some who can possibly manage. We know the problem there; we know some of the things that have been happening, and in 1948 it was realized that some of these problems were there. This is 1960, 12 years since and therefore I suggest now that this new money—if they get the money or even if they do not get it, something should be done—should be put into a scheme to try and bring more land into use and cultivation. I suggest schemes like irrigation or harnessing the Tana River to do all the irrigation along the lower reaches of the River as far as Kipini. I am sure it can be done; I am sure it is not beyond human ingenuity to do this. They have done it in the Tennessee Valley and made a good job of work of it. I am just saying this because of what I saw and what it looked like and what happened after it had been done.

My other point is the question of schemes, that I have in mind, which could be utilized, and I agree entirely with the noble Lord that we should try and put more men to work out in the fields. We do not have to get machinery for these things when it can be done manually; the clearing can be done manually; the furrows could possibly be done manually, even if it means taking a longer time. In the meantime there would be people fully employed. Not only that, but if a scheme is planned offers could be made to Africans, or those who are wanting them, letting them know that there is a new scheme being developed and that it will be ten acres, or 15 or 20 acres, depending on the area, depending also on the agricultural advice as to what that particular area could be.

Then some of these fellows who are probably genuinely looking for work could be told, "There is a job going" at such and such a place. "and it is bush clearing, irrigation" and all the rest of it. I know that some of them will probably say, "No, we do not like working out in the fields." But then it will not be the fault of anybody except themselves, their refusing to go to work, because the work is available. There will also be available for them a piece of land which they can have a decent respectable living off and probably become very prosperous.

My next point on agriculture is—I would like a definite reply on this later—is to quote again, further from the pamphlet previously mentioned by the then Governor, Sir Philip Mitchell. In the second paragraph it says, "For a review of the present agrarian situation in greater detail I must refer to my Despatch No. 44 of 17th April, 1946, in which I made an attempt to describe it. Here I must content myself with saying that for practical purposes we have to work today on the basis of settlement made in consequence of the Carter Commission Report, and the facts as they are at the present time." Those facts are summarized in subparagraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d). In those summaries he gave the population figures and conditions with which the problem must be faced. It was suggested in that agrarian report that settlement schemes must be undertaken and this was put in, referring to a Despatch problem for quite a long time, since 1946 right up to this date, and I am sure I will be told that it has been done, but I am going to suggest something has been done, should be done. A deliberate effort should be made to absorb some of the unemployed in some projects to try to produce more food, so that we can feed our people

[Mr. Mochura] grown; if only we could try to provide water for some of these places, and I am not only saying this because I come from that particular area, but I have visited the Cotton Research Station at Kibos where they do research on all sorts of other things, besides cotton, that could be grown in all sorts of given areas and given pieces of ground, and I am sure that a lot of the Tana River land—from their research at Kibos—could be used by the people to earn a living.

Now, the next emphasis on that same theme, is the urgency of the situation and then here I am going to quote again, paragraph 55, the last sentence, which reads: "That Report will, no doubt, continue to be a matter of controversy;" —that is referring to the Carter Commission Report—"and in due course it may not be found to have provided a final solution and modification of its recommendations or of the allocation of land made by it may be agreed to from time to time, but for practical purposes of tackling the agrarian problem now it must be accepted." He was emphasizing the point that although there are these controversies over the Report for the purposes of tackling the agrarian problem as has been referred to it must be accepted and put into operation—that is, in spite of the fact that whatever progress is made, and in spite of the fact that in Sessional Paper No. 10 is coming before this House this particular problem of finding means now whereby our people can be fed will be a greater asset.

Now, I was saying that this problem has been with us since 1948 and probably before, and now in 1960, probably 20 years later, I will not be surprised if somebody does not mention in the Corfield Report that this was one of the grounds exploited and was made the cause of Mau Mau. I must, once again say that I agree with Lord Portsmouth in that venture of opening up the forests. More labourers will be used and that will detract from the numbers of unemployed people and it will keep them doing something and that is in accordance with my idea of having new land brought under cultivation to provide employment for a start while doing it and later to provide the means of living for our people. I know we have not got enough land, land is not elastic, but the situation can be improved by bringing under cultivation certain pieces of land which are not used but which could be used.

I hope the Minister will tell me when he gets up to reply, what he thinks about this, also I was disappointed that in his speech there was no mention whatsoever of a scheme such as I have suggested to try and take care of the unemployed and surplus population; I do not know whether it is in the Development Report, but it does not seem to be there either. I would suggest, if we leave these particular schemes and better. If we leave these particular schemes and do nothing about them, I think that will be a tragedy. At this point I will again quote Sir Philip Mitchell on what can be done about it. He refers to Despatch No. 44, and I will read that quotation from the Despatch. "... is not acquiescence in the destruction of still more land by effective economic agricultural conditions and practices. But first to understand the problem which faces us and then with courage and energy, and it is the great iniquity, almost the whole of the African population, which is at present effectively equipped for the circumstances in which it has to live. To remedy those defects and to start up the hill, the steep and difficult hill which leads from uncivilized subsistence farming, carried out with hand tools, to a form of agriculture which, by increasing the production of primary wealth, by each unit engaged in it, will enable the standard of living of all to be raised. It is an idle dream to suppose that a liberal modern civilization and a high standard of living can be erected on a basis of production and a system of agriculture and which have been evolved to enable primitive tribes to subsist in a primitive way." It is an idle dream to think of anything else other than to go and face this problem with energy, determination, and an all-out drive to solve it as it was seen by Sir Philip Mitchell in 1946. I am trying to emphasize this need in this particular respect, and I will give examples of what I think could be done, as I have done with Tana River. He goes further, and in page 21, paragraph 54, he says how bad the need was: "Apart from the general long-range aspects of the problem which I have already discussed, in the native lands there are two urgent needs, (1) Protection and rehabilitation of land now in use (which is being done by the Soil Conservation Unit by the Swynnerton Plan and some others. That is being done). (2) "The provision of additional land to alleviate congestion." Well, I am not suggesting that somebody should grab land from someone else, but I am saying that some of this land which is not being used, that is not producing anything, should be used, and my suggestion is dam construction, channelling up rivers like the Tana River, places like the Thomson's Falls Swamp and places of that kind, which are not being used. Anything that is not being used should be used. I could quote more of this pamphlet, and I could give more of more of this reading, if you like, but I do not want to read all the irrelevant points. All I will say is that by using the additional pieces of land, reclaiming the Tana River Valley, for example, irrigation in the Kano Plains where any amount of rice and a lot of cotton and sugar could be [Mr. Mochura] and very strongly, that the £2,000,000 should go straight, if we get it, into a scheme like this, and not to those elaborate schemes with Land-Rovers, graders and all these other things; just a plain simple scheme, with somebody marking out the areas of the road, the water engineers, finding water and digging the furrows, and all the work to be done by hand by the landless and the unemployed people in our country today.

Now, the next thing I wanted to talk about was the question of helping our local industry. I know I may be challenged but I look at it from this aspect. First, I have been a civil servant, and I have been one of the agitators for increased cost of living, and I know also all the rest of the things that have been happening. One of the things that I would disagree with, rightly or wrongly, is, as a wage-earner, I would not like to subsidize any local industry, because whatever I get I get it to keep myself and my family living, and if it costs me more to buy what is local, and the Government does not stop me from importing, I will buy my food elsewhere. I know it only too well, and this is, I believe, true in that our market here when it suits them is geared to the world market price, and when it does not it is geared to its own internal market price. Then of course there is a duty to stop the importation of a particular article of foodstuff. In this respect it may be said that the producer or the firm has got to be protected from competition. In other words, the working people, including the minimum wage-earner, is cushioning him against the difficulties and the problems of the competing market, and therefore what happens in Kenya is that most of these industries are, shall we say, run in a monopolistic manner. Take, for example, textiles, which I will deal with a little later, and sugar. Sugar is a monopoly in the sense that distributors for the Government to whom the Government pays so much in handling and who in turn also passes on somebody else, and by the time it comes to the consumer the cost will have gone up so high due to all this. The small man is subsidizing the big industry so that the industry can keep alive at the expense of the working man. A typical example would be this, that it would be much cheaper, for example, if we imported butter, wheat flour, even maize flour, from outside, Australia and other places. It would be much cheaper and the working man's wage would go a long way because it costs him less to buy his daily food. Another example of this monopolistic attitude of (a) the local industry and (b) I do not know which authority, but this does concern the East African Industrial Licensing Board and I think the Registrar or the Board refuse to allow competition. It is almost impossible for anybody, and I think this was mentioned here too, to get a licence in the textile trade because we have got to subsidize the Jinja Textile Factory. I know for a fact that if this was allowed and somebody else was allowed to put up a factory, and I know of a famous British firm in this line which has applied for a licence and was turned down because it was going to create unfair competition, but if this firm was allowed to establish itself here it would have meant that I would have got my cloth cheaper—for example, khaki would have cost me Sh. 2/50 instead of Sh. 4/50 per yard; secondly, they were bringing in capital from outside Kenya; thirdly, some people would have been employed, and by turning it down and refusing to licence it we lost (a) cheaper living for the low wage-earner, and (b) we have denied these unemployed chaps the chance of getting employment.

Mr. Alexander: (Interjection.)

Mr. Mochura: Yes, you are quite right.

Now, I think, with due respect to everything else, the chances are that there should be a healthy competition in everything and the low wage-earners should not be penalized in these transactions and activities.

Well, we know roughly where some of our difficulties come from in respect of the low wage-earners because the weight of some of these restrictions, good as they may be, falls heavily on the man without any cushion, in that he pays more for what he could get for a little bit less. I cannot understand, for example, why sugar should continue to be controlled. I cannot understand why if that was the case there should not be a subsidy to subsidize the enormous staple like food like flour, probably sugar, and things of that kind, if this subsidy must be continued in order that the producers may be protected against outside competition. If there cannot be any subsidy then there should be no restriction in the importation of cheap foodstuffs and clothing, because then the increases in wages might be of some value, but otherwise I cannot see how we can expect to get our labour to be contented under these conditions because (1) lack of subsidy and care for minimum wage-earners in our price structure, (2) cushioning the local industries, and (3) we have not tried to create employment in the way that I have suggested by claiming new land and getting those people to work under better conditions.

Sir, I beg to support.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I understand that my Ministry has been put down for discussion separately and incidentally I presume that hon. Members opposite have done that in order to give me an opportunity to discuss the

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] new departments that have been added to my Ministry lately. It would therefore be my intention to discuss Lands and Surveys unless I am warned by Members opposite that they want me to put forward a policy statement of all the Ministry. I have not been told why they want me to discuss this Ministry at all, but that is my intention unless hon. Members let me know that they want something else. I thought I would give this warning, Sir, before replying to the points raised in this debate.

I would like first of all to reply to the points made by the hon. Member for the West Electoral Area though it might seem like going backwards, but those are the notes in front of me at the moment. Sir, my hon. friend the Minister for Housing has asked me to state that in regard to Kibera the Government has not yet stated what local authority might administer Kibera, whether it should be the Nairobi City Council or the Nairobi County Council. That question will not be decided until Kibera is put into such shape that any local authority might be interested in taking it over. Of course, the wishes of the residents of Kibera will be taken into account when the area is allocated to one local authority or to another.

The points that the hon. Members raised with regard to my Portfolio were mostly to do with rating and he made a plea that the Asians on the lower wage scales or income scales were finding it very difficult to pay the rates that are now levied by the Nairobi City Council. That certainly has not come to my notice before and there has not, so far as I know, been a large number of people who were unable to pay the rates. As regards the valuations, the fact that certain land has been valued higher this year than it was two or three years ago does not necessarily mean that the person concerned will pay any more rates. I do hope that hon. Members will remember that, in fact, it is happening all the time. Local authorities, although the valuations have gone up, have reduced the percentage of rates to be paid on the increased valuation and the actual amount of money is not so much or is about the same level of the money which has had before to be found from the pockets of the ratepayers. That of course does not apply always and there is no doubt, I know, that a general increase has been paid but of course there is also a general increase in services supplied, and I think that hon. Members and the ratepayers themselves must make their minds up as to whether they wish to be in a fairly modern progressive State, with services going on and increasing, and paying a bit more, or to go back into slums and dirt and pay less.

Sir, if I may now turn to other hon. Members, the hon. Member for Ukamba asked when Sessional Paper No. 10 was to be debated. Well, the situation is this, Sir. There has been a Working Party set up of the Council of Ministers on Sessional Paper No. 10 and it has sat now for a number of weeks and, indeed, months, and has taken evidence from parties who are specially interested, such as the Agricultural Board, the European Settlement Board, the Kenya National Farmers' Union, and so on, and that Working Party has just completed its deliberations and its report, which will be submitted to Government within the next few days. It is my intention to lay another Sessional Paper giving the recommendations of the Government on Sessional Paper No. 10, after they had heard the evidence, submitted to give an opportunity for this House to debate both Sessional Paper No. 10 and the amending Sessional Paper at this Sitting. It depends, of course, I presume, how loquacious hon. Members are as to when this Paper can be debated, but I hope it will be debated next month. After the debate the next step will be for the Government to draw up draft legislation which, I hope, will be placed before this House later in this year. So hon. Members will see that there will be a considerable amount of opportunity for all hon. Members to express their opinions on this Paper and on the Government intentions.

The hon. Member for Ukamba also requested an explanation of the policy in regard to the current land rent revision. Sir, this is rather a detailed matter but it is very important and I know that it has created a certain amount of interest in the country, and, Sir, I wish to take a certain amount of time on it. The Crown Lands Ordinance, sections 32 and 34, provides that in the case of agricultural leases granted for a term of 999 years, for the purpose of rents the terms is to be divided into periods, the first period to expire on 31st December, 1960, the second period on 31st December, 1975. For the first period the rent to be as paid today and for the second period, that is, January, 1961, at the rate of 1 per cent of the unimproved value of the land in 1960. The third period commences on 1st January, 1976, at the rate of 2 per cent of the unimproved value of the land in the year 1975, and for each subsequent period of 30 years at the rate of 3 per cent of the unimproved value of the land assessed every 30 years. The Commissioner of Lands is required during 1960 to cause the land to be valued for the purpose of determining the rent payable for the second period. In ascertaining the value of the land there shall not be taken into consideration in augmentation of such value the value of the improvements made or done on the land. It is the unimproved value. It is the Government's intention to carry out this Ordinance subject to the proposals for freeholding

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] of agricultural land which were mentioned in Sessional Paper No. 10 which will be considered by this House.

With regard to the methods of valuation, information on the methods employed were sent to the Board of Agriculture as long ago as 1954. Here I must say that I am rather disappointed that there do not seem to be any agricultural Members in the House. I understand that this was circulated to all chairmen of agricultural committees, production committees, production sub-committees as they then were, and since then the methods employed have been discussed and explained to agricultural committees by the valuers in most parts of Kenya. Briefly, each farm is inspected and acreages of varying qualities of land estimated and values of land applied thereto which take into account such factors as soil type, topography, water supply, climate and situation. Regard is to be had to the potential earning capacity of the land and these estimates are checked where possible with actual transactions which have taken place. Now that leads to a certain complication at the moment on this valuation because not very many transactions have taken place in the last few months and therefore that check is rather difficult to ascertain. So far as the timetable is concerned, I assume that this refers to consultation with local advisory panels. It is intended that a start should be made on consultation with these local advisory panels in July as we wanted to have as much evidence of current sales available as possible. A notice setting forth the value of the land determined and the annual rate payable in consequence will be served on every farmer-lessee affected before the end of 1960. If a lessee objects to the valuation he has the right under section 35 of the Crown Lands Ordinance within one month, and here I would like to say that it is the Government's intention to amend the Ordinance to extend this period to three months, from the date of the notice of the valuation to notify the Commissioner of Lands in writing that he objects to such valuation, and the question of the value of land shall be determined by arbitration.

Section 33 originally provided for the first revision of rentals to take place in 1945. But this was amended in 1950 by an amending Ordinance and in 1960 by another amending Ordinance. Sir, therefore, in fact, it is 15 years, as I work it out, that the actual first period of this nominal rent of 20 cents per acre has been extended. Now, Sir, I want that to be particularly noted because some people have said to me that it is most unfair or, shall we say, bad luck that this revaluation is taking place this year when there is a certain feeling—I do not agree that there should be any—of instability in that context. Well, the answer to that is that in fact the farmers have been helped by the Government for 15 years, when their rents should have been revised 15 years ago, and it will be very difficult indeed for the Government to extend the period any further.

Hon. Members may be interested in the composition of the advisory panels which were set up by the Board of Agriculture. They are members of agricultural committees and local representatives of the Land Board. The chairmen of committees will also have the power at their discretion to co-opt two additional members. There have been strong requests made by local authorities that they should be represented on these committees. It is not my intention that local authorities should be so represented. I do not think they have got a very strong case. They tried to tie the valuation of agricultural land to rating, and I look upon this as two distinct subjects. But there could be members of local authorities co-opted in these two places for their knowledge rather than as representatives of the local authorities concerned. The advice of the panels will be of a general nature confined to valuations of broad categories of land in their areas and not to individual farmers. The final decision on values of farms will be taken by the Commissioner of Lands on the advice of the valuer.

I think those are the only points the hon. Member for Ukamba brought up but they were important ones and I hope I have answered them to his satisfaction.

The next hon. Member, Sir, the hon. Member for the Nairobi Area, asked why African traders in markets and trading centres had to put up permanent buildings whereas Asians in trading centres were permitted to use temporary buildings. He also raised again the question of leases for Africans in markets and trading centres. Well, Sir, this matter was raised some time ago, in fact in December, when the hon. Mr. Ngala put forward a Motion which was accepted by the Government, and during that debate it was explained in detail the Government's plans for dealing with the problem. The Working Party was set up to consider the staff and finance required to implement the policy and it has not produced its report and £25,000 has been made available in the Estimates for the African Lands Branch of the Office of the Chief Secretary, at page 33 of the printed Estimates. This indeed represents money to enable the partial implementation of the recommendations of the Working Party and will enable Government to start recruiting staff, amongst other things for the issue of proper leases

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] in markets and trading centres. The issue and registration of these leases, which we expect will be for 33 years, to all plot-holders in market places and unsurveyed trading centres will be a very large task and I am afraid it will have to be gradual. Some people will therefore have to await the completion and indeed wait for some time for the completion, and indeed some of these trading centres and areas have still got to be set apart. It is proposed that initially all conveyancing will be done by the Central Government's Land Office and at district headquarters. It may be possible for African district councils to assume responsibility for their own conveyancing in respect of markets. I hope that will be possible and we are going into the practicability of it. The registration provisions of the Native Lands Registration Ordinance will not for the present be applied to townships and surveyed trading centres, but the proposed pilot scheme for Embu will be carried through. We will also undertake a general survey to be made of trading centres with a view to regrading the large ones as townships and either abandoning the smaller ones or regarding them as markets.

And the general survey of markets should be carried out also on the lines of the survey already made in Kiambu and Machakos Districts with a view to introducing economic control over layout and allocation of the plots. The planned development of townships, trading centres and the larger urban settlements will receive separate and very urgent consideration in connexion with the Draft Town and Country Planning Bill, and its suitability for application to African areas. I hope that it will be able to be applied to African areas, and again bringing similarity of legislation throughout the country.

Among other recommendations of the working party is that of establishing separate land offices and assistants at Kiambu, Fort Hall, Nyeri, Embu, Bungoma, Kakamega, Kisii, Machakos and boundary! The fact, Sir, and I am referring again to the remarks by the hon. Member for Nairobi Area is not true really, or rather it is misleading the way he put it. Any African, of course, has the right to apply for a plot in a trading centre. At the moment he will receive a temporary occupation licence, and in doing so he then does not need to put up a permanent building. That is where the comparison lies. It is not racial at all. Some trading centres have occupants on the ground on temporary occupation licence, and they are not forced, therefore, to put up a permanent building, and that applies to any race who wishes to trade in that area, so there is no discrimination that on the one hand Asians are allowed to put up temporary buildings, and on the other Africans are not. That is not so. In fact, the hon. Member for Nairobi Area made special reference to the Dagoretti market trading centre. Well there exists, in fact, in that area, two shopping centres, of which the hon. Corporate Member opposite me knows too well. The Dagoretti trading centre is gazetted under the Trading Centres' Ordinance, and the Dagoretti market, which was originally set aside under the Native Lands Trust Ordinance and is now set apart for a market during land consolidation. Building rules are applied under the African District Council of Kiambu to that market. I do not think I need go into any great detail in answering the hon. Member's question, especially as he is not here, but if he is interested I can give him more details if he wishes.

Sir, the hon. Member complained about the Kenya Bus Service and increased fares, and I think that has been dealt with, but I do want to re-emphasize that there is no discrimination in the raising of these fares against Africans. It is just the other way round, that the bus company had permission to raise their fares a year ago, and only did so on the generally European and Asian routes, leaving the African estates alone, so in fact the African estates have been favoured and not discriminated against.

The hon. Member also asked for an intimation as to how soon the local government system was to be overhauled, as promised by the Secretary of State at the Lancaster House. Well, Sir, I and my Ministry have not been idle on this at all. In fact, we have been working on it in the last few weeks, and indeed have come to quite a number of conclusions. It is my intention that the whole local government system should be enquired into and reviewed in view of the changes of the Central Government system proposed in the new constitution. It is appreciated indeed that the general principles contained in the Report of the Kenya Constitutional Conference should be, to some extent, and a great extent where practicable, applied to local government. On the other hand, I do want to emphasize that, local authorities, as their name implies, must have regard to individual local circumstances and cannot therefore be exactly standardized. Further, it is only right that the present local authorities should be consulted. They should be entitled to make representations on their development. I therefore intend at a very early stage to consult such local authorities, and seek their opinion on their evolution, although, of course, I will indicate from the Ministry the lines on which the Government thinks. I would here say that I think it will certainly be necessary to consider most closely the factors of franchise, which of course is a very important and very difficult one, and the adaptation of the new

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] franchise adopted at Lancaster House for local authorities and their conditions, the area of local authorities, the number of councillors, the number of aldermen, the terms of office, the preparation of rolls, and so on. It is a very large task, but it is one we are well on the way of having launched. I think that it may well be that in municipal areas and indeed other areas, the principle of reserved seats, which has been adopted for this House, might well be applied to local authorities. I do want to make one thing clear, however, and that is in my view in rural districts—and there I mean all areas in rural districts—the predominant interest of the farmers in those districts must be maintained in any local authority which has power over such a district.

With regard to trying to bring all the different types of local authorities under one Ordinance and under the same principles, there are, of course, as hon. Members will recognize, certain fundamental differences. For instance, until the orthodox method of rating in African district council areas is practicable, it will be very difficult to adopt exactly similar methods of representation in African district council areas as compared with county councils and municipalities. After all rating is to some extent a basis of representation, and it must be a basis of representation on local authorities and therefore our very differences in method of rating in one area to another must have some reaction on the type of franchise.

Now, I would like especially to mention the matter of aldermen which was brought up by the hon. Member in regard to the Nairobi City in his speech, and I would point out that I think the time may well have arrived when we will have to apply the Specially Elected Member system to the aldermen to make certain a minimum number are allocated to each race, with a number of voters of any race. This system has already been applied to Mombasa. It is not one I welcome very greatly, but as a first stage I think probably that is what will have to be done.

Now, if I may turn to the hon. Member's specific criticism of the Nairobi City Council and the election of the Nairobi City Council and the election of the aldermen, I do admit that speaking in a previous debate I did say that I considered that one alderman would be elected by the Nairobi City Council under their new present constitution, and one African alderman would be elected. And indeed there is no doubt at all that one would have been elected, and indeed possibly two would have been elected if the African councillors had not walked out. I have made specific enquiries into this matter, and indeed calculated the number of votes cast for all the different people, and there is no doubt at all that at least one would have been elected and probably two. I am informed that the action of the African councillors in walking out indeed deprived them of a number of votes they would otherwise have got by councillors of other races. They walked out on the grounds that they were going to insist, that they insisted, that the two vacancies should be filled by Africans. Well, Sir, there is no provision for insistence by anybody to that effect. The election of aldermen is at the discretion of the individual members of the local authority concerned. There can be no such insistence, and their attitude, as I say, deprived them of the sympathy of a number of councillors in the first place, and the four votes they deprived an African of by walking out, would have put an African in, if they had not walked out. So, Sir, I do not think that I need worry much more about that.

The other matters which have been raised by the hon. Member were, I think, the matter of tarmac roads in the estates, and he said that all European areas were tarmaced and Africans all European areas were tarmaced and Africans were not, or at any rate, words to that effect. He was, of course, referring to the new estates. I will admit that Ofafa Maringo has not had tarmac roads, but it is the policy of the City Council now to tarmac the roads of all new housing estates before they are occupied, and that has been carried out already in some instances, and I would also point out that the Woodley Estate, which is mostly occupied by Europeans, has no tarmac roads, so there is no racial discrimination, as I see it, in this matter.

Sir, the hon. Member, Dr. Adalja, has mentioned the City Council maternity home. I think there was also mentioned somewhere, either by him or someone else, that this maternity home might be handed over to Government. Well, it is against our policy to do this. It is indeed the policy that maternity matters should be the responsibility of local authorities, and indeed if we departed from that policy in one instance, we would have to do it in all, and it would completely upset our line of policy, which I am sure is right. For the information of hon. Members I would say that although there are only 75 beds in the maternity home at Pumwani, they are now very often accommodating 100 people, 100 expectant mothers, and also that they are estimating for a loss, which will be borne by the general ratepayer in 1960 of £20,000, so I do not really think I can force much more on to the City Council. I believe that they have done very well with this service. There is one thing they are going to do, and that is try to screen out-patients, and to make quite

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] certain that women who do not really need hospital attention, or maternity home attention, do not take up beds which are otherwise needed for urgent cases, and I am afraid a lot of people feel that they must go into maternity homes to have a baby, when a simple delivery can more cheaply and easily and quite safely be done by a midwife at home, as long as she is qualified and inspected, and that, of course, the City Council will do.

I do not think, Sir, that there are many other important points. I would just touch on a point that the hon. Member for the Rift Valley—I can never quite remember—Mr. ole Tipis mentioned, and that was the tailors being removed from the verandahs—African tailors being removed from the verandahs of shops. This has been done, I am afraid, in Naivasha, because they were obstructing pedestrians. They were taking up most of the pavement, and people could not pass by, and they were then told, therefore, to go inside the shops. Some have, and I do not know if others have not, but it is not a matter of by-laws, it was a matter of police action.

I think most of the points mentioned by the hon. Member for Rift Valley have been covered, except that I would say to him that it is quite possible, if he really does require, or if any sections of the community in the Nakuru County Council area require, to put on a special rate for an education scheme, they can do so, and indeed the County Council has gone into a lot of detail in regard to a special rate on Africans in the County Council area to do this, and I am awaiting their recommendations.

The sands of time, I see, are running out, and I think I have covered all the important points, and there will be another opportunity anyway to cover these matters, and I therefore beg to support.

The Minister for Health and Welfare (Mr. Muimi): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, may I first of all join the hon. Members who have spoken before me in congratulating the Minister for Finance and Development for the healthy Budget he has presented to this House this year. Sir, I consider it a great honour that I should be allowed to speak as the first African Minister constituency in this debate. It has been the feeling in this Council and in the country in the past that while Kenya was heading towards independence like other African countries, it was of the utmost importance that the Africans should participate in the formation of the Government of Kenya, and it has for many days been difficult for the Africans to decide one way or the other until after the Lancaster House Conference, the African Elected Members, with the support of their constituents, found it necessary, and it is important at this stage of development of our political advancement in Kenya, to take part in the caretaker Government before the next constitutional changes.

In this maiden speech, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think it is appropriate for me to speak merely in general terms on the situation in Kenya, as I see it today, but before doing so, Sir, I would like to give notice of my intention, at some appropriate stage, to deal with one or two points which have been raised by Members in the course of the debate, and more particularly the point raised by the hon. and gracious lady, Mrs. Hughes, in regard to the welfare of children who are picked up in towns, especially, and put in approved schools. I thought that matter more concerned the Minister for Approved Schools and not my Ministry. My information is that the gracious lady is not satisfied with certain aspects of the answer given by the Minister for Housing in this regard, and it is because of this I would like to take the opportunity of trying to expand on what the Minister for Housing has said in this subject.

Sir, Kenya's ultimate objective has for many years remained unknown, but today, Sir, the ultimate objective for Kenya is in no uncertain terms known to all of us. Today, Sir, we know that the ultimate objective for Kenya is complete independence, as declared and re-affirmed in a statement by the Secretary of State in his speech on 1st February, 1960, at the Lancaster House Conference. With this knowledge, Sir, it is common knowledge that having declared our ultimate objective, we should now set to work to achieve this objective. What is our aim in Kenya? Our aim in Kenya is to build a nation in which mutual tolerance and general acceptance by all of the right of each individual citizen to play a part in the development of our country exist. It is on the platform of these principles, Sir, that I stand and speak as an African Constituency Elected Minister.

Now, Sir, a great deal has been said in this House and on platforms outside this House about the need for co-operation, and the necessity for creating an atmosphere of confidence and goodwill in our country. We would be paying lip service to our country, Sir, if during the transitional period before independence, we did not ventilate to the world our moral obligations as responsible people. It is my considered opinion, Sir, that it would be folly for us to think only in terms of politics during this transitional period. There are other forms of advance, economic, social and educational, which are of great importance to our country. But, Sir, a sound and assured political foundation is always required before a country with the immense potentialities

[The Minister for Health and Welfare] of the calibre of Kenya can reach its strength. It is important, therefore, Sir, and I feel it is so, that every true citizen of Kenya, makes it his or her duty to discourage and denounce publicly all irresponsible acts of violence, intimidation or terrorism which may come in the way of our country's advance. Having said this, Sir, let me conclude on this theme by saying that with the Lancaster House agreement Kenya's psychological battle has been won. It now remains for all the true lovers of Kenya to lay down the armour of strife, hatred and mistrust and work in earnestness towards our goal.

Sir, I now turn to the points raised by hon. Members in the course of the debate affecting my Ministry. I am sorry that the Arab Member for the Coast is not here—I am sorry, Sir—the hon. Member for Ukamba, Sir Charles Markham, is not here. But in the course of his speech the Member raised the question of the effect on hospital services as a result of the increase of duty or tax on diesel oil. In his speech the Member stated that the tax will operate unfairly on those people who are using boilers that were requiring light diesel oil, in hospitals as well as certain industries and schools—schools using diesel engines which cannot be converted to heavy diesel, and that they would have to bear the extra cost involved. Well, Sir, my information is, that while we realize that the cost for the use of diesel oil will slightly affect the cost in hospital services where diesel oils are used, we hope in my Ministry that we can probably overcome the extra expenditure by using heavy diesel oil for the machinery and such things. It may be found necessary, however, in the first instance to spend a little more money in converting the machinery to the use of heavy diesel oil, and the cost can, roughly be estimated to be about £1 per boiler, to convert them, in other words. But a saving we hope can eventually be made by this factor. Well, Sir, I do not think there is anything more we can do at this particular stage.

Now, Sir, I may explain that the European hospital in Nairobi has steam generators installed, and these cannot be converted to any other fuel. It is understood, however, Sir, that an estimate of some £5,000 for additional costs of heating for the European hospital, as printed in the East African Standard of Tuesday, 3rd May, this year, is a preliminary estimate. Members may be aware that the European hospital is building a new laundry with a view to achieving savings on their monthly bills, amounting approximately to some £7,000 per annum. The new boilers are to supply steam for the laundry. If they have to pay more for their fuel they will not achieve as great savings as they probably expected, but I do not think the new tax will involve them in any immediate expense. I am sure because of this that the European Hospital Association in these circumstances will not be probably prepared to wait until the Minister for Finance has been able to fully examine the situation again.

Finally, on this point, Sir, Members may be interested to hear that my personal researches indicate that there are only six boilers of this particular kind, or type, which cannot be converted to heavy diesel in the country. I hope, Sir, that the Member for Ukamba, who is not here, who indicated that he would vote for me in the next General Election, if I can persuade the Minister for Finance to "wear a new hat" will no doubt do so without hesitation, not because of my ability to persuade the Minister for Finance to change his policy but because of the policies for which I stand.

Now, Sir, I am sorry that the Arab Member for the Coast is not here, but he raised two points in the course of his speech affecting my Ministry. The hon. Member for the Coast raised the question of discrimination in diets for mental patients at the Mathari Hospital, and the prison convicts at Shimo-la-Tewa in the Coast Province. Sir, I should like to explain to the House that there are certain standards of diet laid down for various communities in the country, and as far as possible the patients at Mathari Hospital, and I believe at the prison in question, are given the appropriate type of such food as they are used to in their homes without any differentiation at all. The concern of my Ministry is to ensure that the food is good and adequate and that the patients all gain weight on the diet they get. In other words, to ensure that the patient is properly fed with the food he or she is used to. I may add, Sir, that there is a statutory visiting committee in Mathari Hospital, which I believe the Member for the Coast knows about, the function of which, Sir, is to ensure that the hospital is run on high standards. This committee is at liberty to report any matters on which they wish to comment after their visits, and any matters which they raise, I am sure, will be dealt with accordingly. Sir, I would like to add that relatives or visitors to the patients who wish to provide extra food at Mathari are permitted to do so. I should like to stress the point that the Arab Member for the Coast has, in the past, intimated that he would ask an Arab welfare association to visit Mathari Hospital frequently to ensure that every comfort possible is given to the Arab patients there. It is therefore, Sir, I believe, his duty to encourage these visits, and to encourage visitors to make such regular calls and to supply any welfare needs that the Arab patients require at Mathari Hospital. Now, Sir, as far as my

[The Minister for Health and Welfare] Ministry is concerned, there is no discrimination whatsoever, because every patient is given the type of food he or she consumes at home.

Now, Sir, I would like to add another point in regard to the intention of my Ministry on mental patients. My Ministry intends to establish provincial mental wards, one of which is now in operation at Nakuru. We are still to improve on this one, and when the other four, according to the provinces, are completed and in operation, I hope, Sir, it will not be necessary to accommodate mental patients in prison for care, when the full system is in operation. I can assure the House and the Member for the Coast that I shall be quite prepared to accompany him to Mathari Hospital at an appropriate and convenient time. But, Sir, I would like to sound a word of warning to the Member that the matter of convicts at the Shimo-la-Tewa Prison, who are not necessarily mental cases, is a matter of general principle, and not a matter for my Ministry, but any mental cases housed at Shimo-la-Tewa and elsewhere will be dealt with in the same way as any other mental case at Mathari or in any other hospital.

I understand the Minister for Internal Security and Defence has dealt with this point in as far as convicts are concerned but here, Sir, I must stress the point that the concern of my Ministry is entirely the health side of the patients and of the convicts and not the crimes.

With these points, Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Uhura! Have you heard, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that when we get independence we are all going up into the trees so that we can become branch managers?

I am, Mr. Deputy Speaker, following straight after the maiden speech by the Minister for Health on the Government side of the House and I am sure that I am voicing the opinions of all of us on this side when I saw how delighted we were with, and how refreshing it was to hear such statesmanship coming from him. I am sure this is an indication of the future that lies ahead of us in Kenya when we have got people like the new Minister looking after our affairs in the way that he does and speaking about them and about this country in the way he has just done, Sir.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, may I complain again about the treatment—the delay in treatment—of Questions from this side of the House. If you look at the Order Paper at the beginning of any week you will see a list again with dates to them, many of them outstanding for several weeks. Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, these Questions are put down by many of us, particularly before this Budget debate, particularly weeks before this Budget debate, in order that we may be reliably informed from the Government side with information that we can use in the Budget debate. It is a serious inhibition for us to have this great delay and these dilatory tactics imposed upon us. The whole procedure for Questions is heavily weighted in favour of the Government side and why there should be this need for delay is difficult to understand. There is one exception, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I see that he is not in the House at the moment, and that is the Minister for Education. I can only suggest that his exception is because he has had the training and the experience of dealing as a civil servant with Questions in the Colonial Office. And, of course, the practice in Britain, the practice in the House of Commons, is that Questions have to be answered within 48 or 72 hours. I do beg of the Government once again—we had a debate on the Adjournment on this particular issue, I think over a year ago—and I do beg of the Government once again to look at this and to see whether it is not possible to hasten the procedure. I believe what is happening on the Government side or on the civil servants' side of Government is that they sit down and try and think of every conceivable supplementary that might go into the Question. As a result of this, of course, they spend weeks and weeks puzzling as to what might be asked. That is not the intention of asking these Questions. What we want is quick replies so that we can come back again and ask another Question if necessary. But please, I beg, help us on this side of the House.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): I make no comment.

Mr. Alexander: Would you like me to sit down? No, I don't want you to speak now! May I ask you to speak a bit louder? At least, when I interrupt from this side—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): Order, order! Please address the Chair, Mr. Alexander.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, may I carry on the theme that was started by the noble Lord sitting on my left when he referred to the interdependence of the East African territories. I believe that it is more than timely that we should now concentrate more of our thinking and more of our time on this whole question of the interdependence, particularly the economic interdependence of the East African territories. What has gone wrong in the past, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that there has been a rather natural and understandable suspicion on the part, particularly, of Uganda and Tanganyika of the particular part played in this interterritorial scheme by Kenya. That suspicion has arisen mainly as the result of the particular type of heterogenous population in Kenya. But, may I suggest, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that both Tanganyika and Uganda now have an

PRAYERS

ORAL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

QUESTION No. 73

Mr. Slade asked the Minister for Legal Affairs:—

(a) Is it a fact that a certain woman was, on 19th July, 1959, forcibly and illegally taken by police officers to Mathari Hospital and thereafter illegally detained at that hospital for a period of four days?

(b) If so, what disciplinary action has been taken against the persons concerned?

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): The facts of the incident to which this Question refers are so complex that it has not been possible to give a full and accurate oral reply to either part of this Question. I have, therefore, given a full written reply.

Written reply as follows

1. At about 10.50 a.m. on Sunday 19th July, 1959, the woman in question rushed into Parklands Police Station shouting that she had been hit over the head and robbed of £100. The inspector on duty at the station took the report and tried to obtain details of the robbery from the complainant, but she refused to give any further information.

2. She had been brought to the station by a motorist who informed the inspector that he had found the complainant in the bushes at the side of Salisbury Road, Nairobi, in a very hysterical of state. She told him she had been robbed, so he had brought her straight to the police station. On the way to the station she had three times tried to jump out of the car and had had to be restrained by the motorist's wife.

3. The inspector then asked the complainant to show him where the offence had taken place. In reply she abused the inspector, telling him he did not know his job and that the police were useless. Eventually, he persuaded her to enter a police 999 car and she took the police to a spot near the Italian church.

4. On arrival the complainant continued to refuse to assist the police and refused to show where the offence was committed. At this stage

[Mr. Alexander] opportunity to look at Kenya in a completely different light. They know, as we know, that Kenya is heading for a situation where the majority of the people in this Council will be Kenyans and ultimately the majority of the people in the Government, in the Council of Ministers, will also be Kenyans. Therefore, Uganda and Tanganyika ought to be able to look at us now and in the future as fellow countrymen in Africa. I believe that if they adopt that attitude to us as we, I believe, have adopted to them always, if they will do it to us we will them always, all three territories, be able to make considerable progress along the road of economic integration that is so vital to all of us. The problem, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is a problem not of just six million people in Kenya. It is a problem of 20 or 25 million people in the whole of East Africa. And if any of the territories try to tackle their own problems in isolation they will find that they will not have the necessary economic weight in order to find the right answers to those particular problems. I would urge that we in Kenya should reassess our whole attitude to this bigger issue, this bigger horizon of East Africa, and that we should in this House, I believe, have an early debate specifically on this so that we may tell and show Uganda and Tanganyika precisely how we are thinking and how our minds are growing bigger as the result of that objective thinking. This does turn me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on to the whole question of the monetary and the currency question in these three territories, a matter which I have raised and discussed several times in this House and which I intend to discuss in this particular debate. Of course, there is no more effective way of people being economically interdependent than through a common currency system and we will find, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that it is this, perhaps, more than anything else that will influence our move together and towards one another in these three territories.

Perhaps, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that is maybe a convenient point for me, if you agree, to stop and continue. I think I have given reasonable notice to the Minister for Finance to prepare himself for this particular complex problem and I will be asking him what has happened to the proposed movement of the Currency Board from London to East Africa.

ADJOURNMENT

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): The time has come for the adjournment, so I accordingly adjourn Council until 2.15 p.m. of the afternoon of Tuesday next, 10th May.

The House rose at thirty minutes past Twelve o'clock.

[The Minister for Legal Affairs]

she became very distraught and started running up and down the road screaming, making abusive remarks about the police and shouting at members of the public passing by. A service was in progress in the nearby church, and her behaviour was by this time causing a public disturbance. The police therefore took her, by car, to the European Hospital as she was plainly in need of medical care. In the car she continued to scream and shout abuse. She also tried to jump out of the moving car.

5. At the European Hospital she was examined by a medical officer, who certified her to be of unsound mind, stating in his certificate:—

She is maniacal and unable to listen to reason. She is irrational in behaviour and speech. She exhibits a degree of paranoia; she is persecuted by everyone, especially police. She is unwilling to give any particulars about herself because, she believes the information will be used for ulterior purposes. She has at times been completely uncontrollable, except by force.

6. At the hospital she was invited by the police to contact her own doctor and was given the use of a telephone, but did not try to contact him.

7. On receipt of the doctor's certificate referred to in paragraph 5 above, the Assistant Superintendent of Police who was in charge of the police party, decided to communicate with a First Class Magistrate, in order to take the complainant before him under section 17 of the Mental Treatment Ordinance, 1949. He, therefore, telephoned the magistrate at his house (the day being a Sunday), reported the circumstances to him and offered to send the complainant and the medical certificate, by car, to the magistrate's house so that he could interview her. The magistrate thought it undesirable that he should see her personally, as this might have an adverse effect on her health, but he asked for the certificate to be sent to him. This was done.

8. After considering the certificate, the magistrate wrote out and signed a manuscript authorisation for the complainant's detention for a period of 14 days in Mathari Mental Hospital, to enable the officer in charge of the hospital to form an opinion as to her true mental state. This authorisation was not in the prescribed form, as the magistrate did not have access, on a Sunday morning, to the appropriate printed forms.

9. She was then taken to Mathari Hospital, where she remained four days under observation. On admission, she was diagnosed as suffering from hypomania. The psychiatrist in charge reported that she had "for no apparent reason belated one of the European staff's children". She refused to comply with his suggestion that she make a statement to the police to describe her larceny which had been stolen, so that they might recover it. Although he found her overwrought, overtalkative and upset, she refused his offer of treatment. He described her as having a paranoid and litigious attitude. On 23rd July the psychiatrist, in consultation with another medical practitioner, decided that while she was certainly beyond the limits of normal talk and behaviour, she was not actually certifiable and she was, therefore, discharged.

10. It was subsequently discovered that the magistrate's order was invalid as it had not been made in compliance with the provisions of the Mental Treatment Ordinance, 1949. The action of the police in taking the complainant to the hospital for medical examination before referring the matter to the magistrate was not in strict compliance with the provisions of that Ordinance.

11. An enquiry into this affair was held by the Director of Establishments in consultation with the Director of Medical Services, the Acting Deputy Commissioner of Police and the Registrar of the Supreme Court. This enquiry established that all the officers concerned in the incident acted in what they considered to be the best interests of the woman who was clearly ill and in need of medical care and attention. The police and the authorities at Mathari acted on a certificate from a medical practitioner that she was of unsound mind, and on a written authority from a magistrate for her detention in Mathari. The magistrate's error was largely procedural and technical. The Government, therefore, decided that no disciplinary proceedings should be brought against the Government officers concerned. The Chief Justice decided that no disciplinary proceedings should be taken against the magistrate who had obviously acted in good faith and in what he considered to be the complainant's best interests. The position of magistrates would become intolerable if disciplinary proceedings were taken against them whenever they made an error in the application of the law.

12. A full and written apology was made to the complainant by the Government. The complainant also asked for and was offered substantial compensation. This she accepted without prejudice to the question of disciplinary action. When she was told on 16th January, 1960, that the Government had decided, for the reasons set out above, not to institute disciplinary proceedings, she refused to sign the normal receipt for her compensation and it has not, therefore, been paid.

QUESTION NO. 74

Mr. Slade asked the Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources:—

(a) Is Government aware of the need to amend the Animals (Prevention of Cruelty) Ordinance?

(b) If so, what steps are being taken to that end?

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) Since the receipt in May, 1947, of the Report of Subcommittee of the Legislative Council appointed to enquire into the incidence of cruelty to animals in Kenya, delays have occurred in the preparation of amending legislation owing to pressure of other urgent legislation and to the Emergency. It has now been decided, in consultation with the official and unofficial interests concerned, that the present Ordinance should be completely repealed and replaced by legislation more suited to present conditions. A new Bill is now in rough draft but detailed examination is not yet complete. I greatly regret this long delay and hope that, despite the pressure of other legislation, it will be possible to publish this Bill soon.

Mr. Slade: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, arising out of that reply, could the Minister be a little more specific as to the time which we may expect to elapse before we see further developments?

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Yes, Sir, I could. I have prepared a paper which will go in front of the Council of Ministers at their next meeting and then should go to the drafting committee, so I sincerely hope that it will be very soon that we will be able to lay this new Ordinance in front of this House.

Mr. Bompas: Mr. Deputy Speaker, arising out of the first question, Sir, can we ask the Minister whether it is the intention of Government to include in that legislation the prohibition of the hawking of live animals?

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, yes, I gather it is.

QUESTION NO. 85

Mr. Alexander asked the Chief Secretary does collective responsibility mean that Ministers are bound to support Government policy both in public and private and if so how and where do Ministers criticize Government policy if they wish to do so?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Collective responsibility means that Ministers are bound to support Government policy in public and in private. This is always made clear to Ministers when they take office. Ministers have ample opportunity to criticize Government policy in Council of Ministers and that is the proper forum for such criticism.

QUESTION NO. 95

Mr. Alexander asked the Chief Secretary what is the need for the regulation which compels civil servants who go abroad for leave to spend a minimum of 90 days overseas?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Officers who are eligible for vacation leave on completion of a tour of service are also eligible for free return passages up to a maximum cost of three adult fares in the grade or class to which they are entitled. Such officers are required to spend a minimum period of three months of their leave outside East Africa in order to justify the expenditure on their passages. A similar proviso is enforced in the case of civil servants in Tanganyika and Uganda.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, in attempting to justify the expenditure on leave passages, is the Minister aware that this requirement of an absence of a minimum of 90 days is a great embarrassment to many officers?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): I believe it may be embarrassing to some officers, particularly those with small children being educated; but I would like to point out to the hon. gentleman that the Government grants leave for recuperative purposes, not for a "jolly" outside East Africa in order to return to that officer both the mental and physical capacity which he requires to carry out his job.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, does the Minister recollect that his answer is at complete variance with statements made at other times in this House, namely that the purpose of leave is mainly for officers to refresh their knowledge and acquaint themselves with new methods?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): That, I would suggest, is only for professional officers: all officers must go for recuperative purposes.

Major Roberts: Would the Chief Secretary agree that this was introduced originally when Kenya was not a very healthy place? Because today Kenya is considered a health resort and people should not go for longer than is necessary.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): If the person goes at all, Mr. Deputy Speaker, then he should go for 90 days in order to justify the expenditure, which was what I replied in the first instance.

Mr. Slade: Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the Chief Secretary suggesting that acute financial or other embarrassment is likely to produce recuperation?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coult): No, Sir.

QUESTION No. 89

Mr. ole Tips (on behalf of Mr. Mate) asked the Minister for Health and Welfare what further financial assistance does Government propose to give to mission hospitals so as to help improve their service to the community?

The Minister for Health and Welfare (Mr. Mumbi): There is provision for £60,000 in the recurrent Estimates of expenditure for 1960/61 entitled "Medical and Maintenance Grants to Missions and Private Hospitals". This represents a rise of £11,000 over the provision in 1959/60. A significant sum for capital grants to mission hospitals on a £ for £ basis has been reserved in the Ministry of Health's Development Plan for 1960-63. This compares with no formal provision made in the Development Plan, 1957-60.

QUESTION No. 76

Mr. Odlinga (on behalf of Mr. arap Moi) asked the Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources:—

(a) Does the Maize Marketing Board operate in Baringo?

(b) Under what circumstances?

(c) And if not, what is the Government policy with regard to Baringo District?

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie):

(a) Yes, the provisions of the Maize Marketing Ordinance, No. 6 of 1959, and the Regulations published thereunder apply to all areas of the Colony and Protectorate of Kenya.

(b) Most of the maize grown in Baringo District is grown for the domestic use of the grower and his family or for sale or barter to other Africans for their domestic use, and is therefore exempted from the provisions of the Ordinance under section 15 (6). Trading in maize is, however, subject to control and a special price structure has been fixed for Baringo District.

(c) Paragraph (c) of the question is not applicable.

QUESTION No. 77

Mr. Odlinga (on behalf of Mr. arap Moi) asked the Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources how many Asian and African Millers in Baringo District are registered with the Maize Controller?

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): No millers in Baringo District are registered with the Maize Controller who ceased to exist on 31st July, 1959. However, the hon. Member may wish to know the present position under the Maize Marketing Ordinance, 1959:—

(a) No millers in Baringo District have been registered with the Maize Marketing Board in 1960 to mill maize for sale. Two Asian mills have been so registered in previous years.

(b) A miller who restricts his operations exclusively to milling maize for a charge on behalf of producers within the district is not required to register his mill and there is therefore no record of the numbers of such conversion millers in Baringo District.

Mr. Odlinga: Arising out of the reply, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have not been able to get quite clearly why African millers have not been registered.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): The answer to that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is very simple. They have not applied.

QUESTION No. 78

Mr. Odlinga (on behalf of Mr. arap Moi) asked the Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources how many districts in the Colony are outside the operation of the Maize Controller?

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): The Maize Controller appointed under the Defence (Control of Maize) Regulations, 1944, ceased to exist with effect from the close of business on 31st July, 1959, when the Regulations were revoked. He was replaced by the Maize Marketing Board which exercises its jurisdiction under the Maize Marketing Ordinance in all districts of the Colony.

QUESTION No. 79

Mr. Odlinga (on behalf of Mr. arap Moi) asked the Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources how many

(a) Africans (b) Asians in Baringo District

have been prosecuted under the Defence (Control of Maize) Regulations, 1944, from the time they came into force, and under what specific section?

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): No detailed statistics are available of the number of people prosecuted for offences committed in Baringo District against the Defence (Control of Maize) Regulations since such offences were classified by the Police as "Petty Crimes". I am, however, advised, that some 60 such cases were recorded in the records of the Eldama Ravine Police Station of which a high proportion concerned offenders from the Baringo District. It has not however proved possible to give the breakdown of offenders by race.

DEPUTY SPEAKER'S RULING

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): On 5th May, Mr. Mboya gave notice of the following Motion:—That this Council notes that a sum of £208,000 is set aside in the 1960/61 Budget for the Kenya Regiment. The Council being aware that this Regiment is a racial body, the existence of which is inconsistent with the declared policy and aims of the Government and people of this country, and constitutes therefore a constant point of fear, suspicion and friction, calls upon the Government to take necessary steps to disband the Regiment and to replace it with a system of military training consistent with the needs of the country and open to all its people.

I was then asked to give a considered ruling whether such notice of Motion and such Motion were in order.

There is nothing in our Standing Orders or procedure which prevents the giving of such notice of Motion. Whether such Motion can be debated is, however, a different question, and depends upon the facts prevailing at the time when it would be debated.

We are now debating the Financial Statement on the Annual Estimates. Thereafter we shall debate the Annual Estimates. Both these debates have precedence over Private Members' Motions. One of the specific questions on which the Council will have to take a decision in the debate on the Annual Estimates is whether the sum of £208,000 or any, and if so, what sum shall be provided for the Kenya Regiment in the financial year 1960/61.

Standing Order 29 provides that no Motion may be moved which is the same in substance as any question which has been resolved in the affirmative or negative during the preceding six months, provided that a Motion to rescind the previous decision may be moved with the permission of the Speaker.

If, therefore, the Council has decided, when dealing with the Financial Estimates, either to provide money or not to provide money for the Kenya Regiment, Standing Order 29 will preclude the moving of the Motion of which notice has been given.

Even if this were not so, Standing Order 58, paragraph (2) would be a bar to the moving of the Motion. That Standing Order inhibits discussion of any specific question upon which Council has taken a decision during the current session.

It is my practice, when in doubt, to rule in such a way as to allow a matter to be debated. Here I am in no doubt. It is not irrelevant, however, that the matter will be capable of full ventilation in the debate on the Financial Estimates.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENT—E.A. CURRENCY BOARD

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, with your permission, I beg to make the following statement, which is in the same terms as the announcement which is being made in London at this time.

The Secretary of State for the Colonies has decided to transfer the East African Currency Board from London to East Africa, with effect from 1st July or as soon as possible thereafter this year, and has directed that the office of the Board should be sited in Nairobi. To give effect to this move he has appointed the following members to comprise the new Board when the transfer takes place:—

Mr. E. B. David, C.M.G., Chairman.

The Permanent Secretary to the Treasury in Kenya.

The Permanent Secretary to the Treasury in Tanganyika.

The Secretary to the Treasury in Uganda.

The Permanent Secretary to the Ministry of Finance, Somaliland.

The Financial Secretary, Zanzibar.

A representative of the Government of Aden, and

Mr. J. B. Loynes of the Bank of England.

The Secretary will be H. R. Hurst, C.B.E. The Currency Board will remain, as now, solely responsible to the Secretary of State.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

MOTION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

(Resumption of debate interrupted on 6th May, 1960)

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, before we adjourn on Friday, I criticized, somewhat severely, the Government for delay in the answering of Questions. Today, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we have had nine Questions answered, and I must, with all humility, unreservedly withdraw the remarks I made last Friday, and congratulate the Government for the speed with which they have attended to this particular matter.

Precisely when we adjourn on Friday, I was, Mr. Deputy Speaker, talking about the interdependence of the East African territories. This particular debate, which is now on its fifth day before the Minister replies tomorrow, has dealt very largely with the domestic affairs of Kenya. That, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is understandable. We are moving to and in a period of very great readjustment and reassessment, and it is natural that we in this Colony should be concentrating our thoughts on our own problems. But I did attempt to focus attention on the need, as Kenya moves towards self-government and independence, to use some of our efforts and some of our wisdom on the greater problems and the even greater challenge of territorial interdependence.

This, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is surely timely now as our new constitutional plan must help Tanganyika and Uganda to abandon their suspicions of Kenya and their doubts about the location of the High Commission in Nairobi. It is proper, nevertheless, that we, in Kenya, as we look towards wider horizons, should have our own house in order, and the orderly government and stability of our own country is our first concern, if we are to gain the respect and the confidence and a hearing from others in these parts of the world.

I was just finishing on Friday to say how I thought that economic interdependence did rely mainly on a common currency system. In fact, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is not that the influence that drives the whole of the British Commonwealth together? Not only that influence, but I would rate it with a common language as the highest or the greatest influences in moving together the people of the Commonwealth. That is why, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I welcome the announcement a few moments ago by the Minister for Finance concerning the transfer of the Currency Board to East Africa. And here I do want to pause for a moment to congratulate our new Minister for Finance on this particular negotiation—a negotiation that must have been delicate in the circumstances, as we know—that is, the suspicions of the territories one to another, which I hope are blowing away—and it is to the very great credit of our Minister that so soon after taking office he has been able to bring this particular outstanding matter to a successful conclusion. Nevertheless, Mr. Deputy Speaker, this transfer of the Currency Board must be regarded as a first step into what must become a wider development, because, of course, as has been pointed out in this House before, the Currency Board system has many deficiencies and many disadvantages to these three territories.

To support this, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may I quote what I have said several times, I think, in this House, about this system, and I quote: "The Currency Board system, and also the banking system has a fundamental deflationary effect. The deflationary effect, which is merely disturbing in times of inflation, is deadening, deadening in times of depression." This means, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that any time we move into a recession the present currency and monetary system will have a cumulatively adverse influence on the economic conditions of these territories.

There are therefore, Mr. Deputy Speaker, two further moves that now become of urgent necessity. Firstly, I do stress the need that a chairman be appointed with great experience of monetary and financial matters to be adviser to the territorial governments and the High Commission. He will have to be an official of high calibre and of very wide banking and economic experience. There is precedent for this Mr. Deputy Speaker. There is nothing new about it, and it is the process that Southern Rhodesia went through as long ago as 1949 when they realized the wisdom of having somebody on the spot with this very great monetary and financial experience to advise them on the whole of their fiscal policy.

The second move that is necessary is an enquiry into the banking system and the sterling exchange system operating under the East African Currency Board. Here again, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is nothing new about this type of an enquiry. It is perfectly normal in the circumstances where a country is moving forward to self-government and subsequently to independence. It happened in Southern Rhodesia in 1948, in Ghana in 1951 and Malaya and Jamaica in 1956. And an interesting comparison is that in the case of Nigeria in 1952, when Mr. J. L. Fisher, an adviser to the Bank of England, was asked to advise on the banking system of the West African Currency Board, the liability of that Board at that time was £65,400,000, and today, or at least the very latest figures that

[Mr. Alexander]

I can obtain from the Gazette, that is 30th June, 1959, the Currency Reserve Fund of the East African Currency Board stands at £63,800,000, and therefore, what I am trying to suggest, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, is that when a currency reaches that magnitude then there is a clear indication that the time is arriving for there to be an enquiry into the whole of the currency and banking system. And I would urge upon our Government to move to this position at the very earliest opportunity. I notice amongst the names that were read out just now, I think I recognized the name of Mr. Loynes, a member of the Bank of England, and it is interesting to note that it was he who finally went to Nigeria and advised them concerning the establishment of a central bank. It is fortunate that we will have him on this East African Currency Board, and I imagine that he will fly out from London from time to time when his services are required, and I urge upon the Government to make full use of the opportunity of his presence here to move forward along the lines that I have suggested.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, whilst talking about economic interdependence I am prompted to ask when we are to have the full results, full results, of the enquiry into road/rail transport which is under the chairmanship of the Minister without Portfolio whom I am pleased to see is in the House. He may be able to spend just a few seconds on his feet in this debate to tell us how he is getting on. For, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the situation on this immense question is becoming almost farcical and I imagine that that is what they are finding in their particular committee and that is why they are finding it so difficult to come to wise conclusions and report the matter to the Minister for Commerce and Industry.

Road transporters in Kenya are not allowed to operate on trunk roads running parallel with the railway for more than 30 miles, other than for the transport of perishables and soft drinks and beer. The railway concede that they are unable to compete with the door-to-door service provided by road transport over short distances, that is, up to 100 miles. However, it is unfortunately popularly supposed on the experience of local deliveries that road transport is more costly than rail; whereas, in fact, the figures are on runs of 100/1,000 miles, as follows. The railway average costs are 18 cents to 20 cents per ton-mile. For a long time this has been quoted at 20 cents, but I understand that recently the Railways have made it known that this is now regarded as amounting to approximately 18 cents per ton-mile of average costs. The railway operating costs total are approximately 7 cents per ton-mile. The cost for road transport, with maximum capacity vehicles, works out at approximately 8.8 cents per ton-mile. The difference, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in the railway figures of 11 cents to 13 cents per ton-mile between the average and the operating costs is for, firstly administrative expenses, and secondly for capital charges. In the case of the Railways these are very heavy capital charges. The answer, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is surely for the Railway to be stabilized at its present size and any additional traffic offered to road transporters. The result would be, as has happened in other countries, that the road transporters would offer lower rates resulting in turn in lower rail rates, with the Railways searching for economies—bound to search for economies—with a consequent abandonment of short-distance traffic on which the Railways are already losing heavily. With the good sense on both sides, that is, on the side of the Railways and the road transporters, which there must be, Mr. Deputy Speaker, with big minds at work, the outcome must surely be, as in Rhodesia, for long-distance road transporters and the Railways to agree not to compete wastefully with each other. They would do this by serching the same rates and competing by sercharging to the public. This is the rational way in which to sort this out. Other big industries and organizations that service the public have had to sort their competition out in this way: insurance companies and the banks are good examples. It is wise that road and rail transport should, Mr. Deputy Speaker, do the same. There is practically no railway in the world today which is paying its way and it is generally accepted that dieselization is not the answer. The railways in Britain are showing a deficit of £350,000,000 after spending vast sums on modernization. There have been efforts in Britain in the past to favour the railways through the taxation system by taxing a road transport. I am not suggesting for a moment, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that that is what the Minister for Finance had in mind when he imposed his diesel tax—his tax on diesel—but the effect is certainly that. In Britain the fuel tax was 9d. a gallon before 1950. Sir Stafford Cripps increased it in 1950 by a further 9d. Gaiskell, in 1951, increased it by a further 4½d. per gallon. There was, as the result of this, bitter complaint by the Conservative Party and particularly by Mr. Butler, who immediately on the return of the Conservative Party in 1952, himself increased the fuel tax by a further 7½d. per gallon.

The Minister for Information and Broadcasting (Mr. Harris): Interjection.

Mr. Alexander: The Minister for Information has put the words into my mouth, but he has been kinder, because I thought, of course, of the typical sort of tricks that the Conservatives were playing in 1952, which we learned about, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in 1960. They were at it then and they are still at it today. But this attempt to protect the Railways or to favour the Railways was never the answer, and what it did was to leave a permanent inflationary factor in the economy of Britain. The increase in fuel tax and the increase in fares as has happened here in Kenya at this very moment in turn led to wage increases and the result of this and other influences at work in Britain has meant that Britain today is saddled apparently with a permanent 5 per cent per annum inflationary factor. There is no one in Britain yet who has discovered how on earth they are going to end it. I mention this here, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because I think that we can draw upon what has happened in Britain and I would urge that we go with care on this particular type of taxation.

Mr. Tyson: Have they got a differential tariff?

Mr. Alexander: If the Member opposite who sits on the Railway Advisory Board, Mr. Deputy Speaker, would like a dissertation on the whole question of differential tariffs, I would like him to speak in this debate now and we will deal with it because he knows as well as I do the fallacies that have been revealed recently regarding the differential tariff. I know that I can appeal to his great wisdom to remain silent at this particular moment. But if he wishes to deal with this we will certainly cope with him on it.

Before I alight from the Railways, may I, Mr. Deputy Speaker, congratulate them on their efficiency and their work and their effort for this Colony and these territories since the beginning of civilized history in these parts. They have been efficient; they have done a good job of work. It has been acknowledged frequently in this House. Nevertheless, we are at a time now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, when it is no use looking back on history; and when we look back on the history of our Railways we always do so with a certain amount of nostalgia, understandably. Now is the time to examine this complex question realistically and without any sentiment whatsoever. We cannot any longer, Mr. Deputy Speaker, afford in this Colony and in these territories to have any sentiment whatsoever about our Railways. Having acknowledged the great work that they have done, having acknowledged the work of the Transport Advisory Council—I believe that that is the title of it—and the fine work that has been done on that Council by the Member who interjected just now and others like him; having acknowledged all that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, now is the time to look realistically at the economics of this whole question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I turn now to the economic survey for 1960 and may I first congratulate the Minister for Finance for having presented this to us for the first time before the Budget and also the Estimates of expenditure. Here it is appropriate that I should congratulate the Minister on the workmanlike and shortened Budget Speech which he made. I commend him for having cut down very considerably the time spent on the Budget Speech, but I would suggest to him that he could, help us still more by next year cutting it down still further. He can do this by including his financial review, by tabling his financial review, as he has done, his economic survey, before the main Budget Speech. We would then be left only with the need to hear his proper Budget proposals and for him to bring up to date and highlight—merely highlight—any points in the economic survey or the financial review. I believe in this way, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we could have a considerably shortened Budget Speech and we could save this House and this country some money because we could then, I believe, go straight on with the business of this Council immediately after the Budget Speech; not necessarily to deal with this five days' debate but to go on with the routine business of the House. Sometimes we get summoned here for a mere half hour to have some Bills tabled. Well, that is the sort of business that could be disposed of in those circumstances and save some money.

The economic survey for 1960 estimates the gross domestic product for 1959 as £215,000,000. In last year's Budget Statement the domestic income for 1958 was estimated at £175,000,000, a difference of some £40,000,000 which is, I understand, Mr. Deputy Speaker, accounted for in 1959 by the inclusion of production by subsidiaries and branches directed from abroad and by residents temporarily abroad plus a normal annual increase in production of 3½ per cent at current prices. I see, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Minister frowning with some doubts perhaps as to what I have said and I look forward to his explanation when he replies tomorrow. This concept of gross domestic product at factor cost, is new to us in the economic survey. I welcome, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the additional information that we are now being supplied with both in the Economic Survey and in the Description of Sources and Methods. Here again, we owe our congratulations to those who search for these elusive figures and present them to us methodically. Particular thanks go mainly to the East African Statistical Department and its director, who over many years now has done so much to bring the economic facts and statistical records of this Colony up to date and present them in an understandable manner. But having come this far with detailed economic information it would be useful to know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the net result of the main factors in the Gross Domestic Product; for example, using the 1958 figures, it would be interesting and significant to know the net result arising from the gross figures of £63,000,000 for agriculture, £20,000,000 for livestock and £21,000,000 for manufacturing with a further breakdown, if that is possible, between the main sections of each factor, as for example, between the different types of agriculture. Only then will we have a real appreciation of which economic factors, which economic activities, really matter to our country. It is right that we should have a proper assessment in this way now because there is a great deal of woolly talk and inaccurate talk in this country at the moment regarding the importance or otherwise of certain of the economic factors upon which our lives are generated. In addition, I trust, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the Minister will in the reasonably near future be able to gather the information on which at least he might give us an estimate of the invisible exports from each of the territories or rather in his case—from Kenya. But it will mean, of course, segregating each of the territories in respect of their invisible exports. There are many of us that believe that the services of Nairobi and Mombasa, for example, are today contributing far more to the economic well of our country, than is perhaps imagined from a casual glance at overall figures.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is much I have to say about the Civil Service, about the future of the Civil Service, and here before I embark on that perhaps it is appropriate to deal with just one point that concerns this Council. In the last few days we have had three Members from this side of the House who have gone to the other side of the House. We have congratulated them for having done so, although it depletes our numbers here. But in depleting our numbers on this side by three, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in theory at least it should be possible to reduce the numbers in this Legislative Council by six and still retain a Government majority. Perhaps we may be told when there is a reply from the Government Benches of whether the Opposition side is as big as it was before or bigger than it was before these three Members went over or whether they have in fact done anything to compensate for these three Members that we handed them from this side of the House and thereby save the country some money. The estimate of the price—not the price, the cost—of a Member—

Sir Charles Markham: I am not certain.

Mr. Alexander: The price is far more than the figure I am going to quote in certain respects. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have heard a figure of £5,000 that it cost some Members to get here. However, the cost to the country per Member may be taken at approximately £1,000 a year and if we can save the services of six Members in this House, then the country will be saving at the rate of £6,000 a year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, when talking about the Civil Service, it is easy to refer to it by voicing the fears, the anxieties, the suspicions and the doubts, imagined or real, of civil servants in the present circumstances of constitutional change in Kenya. Two previous speakers have already done so without providing us with any constructive ideas upon which to answer the Civil Service. However, the New Kenya Group is more imaginative and positive and will, within a few days, be issuing a policy statement on the future of the Civil Service. Meanwhile, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is fundamental, quite fundamental, that we acknowledge now that in the best and vital that we acknowledge now that in the best and vital interests of Kenya there must be positive incentives for efficient public servants to remain; just the same as we want efficient farmers to remain and industrialists and businessmen and others. How best can we do this, Mr. Deputy Speaker? How can we induce efficient public servants to remain? Firstly, we must show them they are wanted in convince them by word that they are wanted in Kenya. Secondly, our standards of public administration and integrity must be such that the best of civil servants will want us. We must realize now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that no worthwhile civil servant is going to remain here if we allow our standards to fall below what they have created and what they are used to. Thirdly, our terms and conditions must be attractive and take account of market value for similar work in other parts of the world. Fourthly, I believe that none of them will wish to leave if they know for certain that in the unhappy event of their services being prematurely terminated, they will be suitably employed elsewhere by Her Majesty's Government. We have an opportunity here, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to press upon Great Britain the need to establish now a Commonwealth Service or an Overseas Service directly employed by Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom. The direct employment of all ex-patriate officers by Her Majesty's Government and their secondment to various territories both before and after independence would preserve the rights of members of the existing overseas Civil Service without any change of employer or of obligations on the employer's part.

Fifthly, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in these measures to induce efficient civil servants to remain, fifthly

[Mr. Alexander]

Because I am sure that there are many hopes at this moment being created in the minds of land-owners as a result of this kind of talk, hopes which may be utterly misleading, and hopes which in the end may lead to greater disillusionment. It would seem to me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that if the worry is that an evil Government in Kenya in the future might dispossess lawful landowners then surely the knowledge of a big fund of money available, a fairly godmother round the corner, would be the greatest encouragement to that Government, if it is prepared to be so evil, to push the landowners out and take the money that is set aside for it, or the money that would circulate in Kenya as a result of it.

I have just two more questions for the Minister for Agriculture. We people who live in the towns are often fascinated with the workings of his Ministry and the various boards that work under him, and I am wondering if he can tell us just what the functions are of the Board of Agriculture. Are they, Mr. Deputy Speaker, intended to deal with politics, because I have recently heard that the Board of Agriculture has been dealing with this whole question of citizenship. Now, perhaps he could tell us what on earth that is to do with the Board of Agriculture. I thought their job was to deal with agriculture and keep away from politics. Would he tell us, also, when he replies, what is happening to the MacGillivray Committee.

An hon. Member: It has gone to Rhodesia.

Mr. Alexander: Do I understand that the MacGillivray Committee has gone to Rhodesia and that their needs are greater than ours? We have the brains of Africa in Kenya and they are allowed to go back to Rhodesia to sort out their problems.

I turn now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to the Ministry of Information. May I welcome the new Minister for Information who is not unfamiliar on the Front Bench, but I am sure now freer to interject to us on this side of the House, because it is only when we have his type of interjection that the debates are made more friendly and more interesting. He has a particular flair, a reputation, for public relations, and I am sure that we will find this particular quality taking shape in the months ahead. Already an example, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the handling of His Excellency's statement published today, which we read and heard in Kenya before being told about it from Britain. So often our local Press and broadcasting suffer the indignity of having news about Kenya and news in Kenya about Kenya told to the world from overseas, and I can see that the Minister has already started to put this one right, and he has started with an excellent example, and we congratulate him on it, because he will realize, I am sure, in any case, that the news that we hear from overseas about Kenya usually on the B.B.C. invariably has misleading headlines. Perhaps he would take the chance to tell the B.B.C. this from time to time, and be ahead of them in Kenya so that we need not listen to the B.B.C. headlines about Kenya.

As I noticed that his particular heading comes very low down on the list we are unlikely to debate it in the Committee of Supply, and I would like to take this opportunity to ask the Minister to tell us today what, briefly, his plans are regarding his new Ministry, and particularly regarding our overseas public relations, and, most particularly of all, of course, the future of the Kenya Office in London.

Turning now to diesel tax, may I, Mr. Deputy Speaker, just quote from the Minister for Finance's statement. In three or four places he said this, and I quote: "I have also been considering the taxation of motor fuel. The proceeds of the consumption tax, like those of the vehicle licence fees, go to the Road Authority. No duty or tax is paid on light diesel oil used in motor vehicles." Then he goes on, and I quote: "Not only, therefore, is the present system weighted in favour of the heavier diesel vehicles, but the revenue is not receiving the contribution towards the wear and tear on the roads in proportion to the annual mileage run." Lastly, and I quote: "The consumption tax, including the small increase in the petrol consumption tax, should bring in an estimated £260,000. This, together with the £40,000 to be derived from licences on the small vehicles during the next financial year will go to the Road Authority."

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, gas oil, or light diesel as it is otherwise called, is used for many industrial purposes, in stationary boilers, for steam raising, water heating in hotels, laundries, hospitals and industrial processing and in respect of the engines of the high-speed type which are used all over the country for generating electric power on farms and in up-country factories, pumps, cotton ginneries, tea, coffee and sisal factories. The result of this diesel oil tax, and here, perhaps, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I ought to declare an interest as being connected in some measure with this type of product, and the examples are that we have already heard of hospitals, or one hospital, and there I am told that it concerns some 9,000 gallons per month, and the additional is likely to be £5,000 a year. In the two leading hotels in Kenya, that are burning this fuel in boilers, there is another £5,000 a year. It also affects the Veterinary Department at their new research institute, where they use two boilers on gas oil, and it is likely to cost them £2,000 a year. The Kenya Police and the East African Posts and Telecommunications Administration use a small number of diesel generating sets, and lastly, and this, I think, is the worst one of all, because it directly concerns the farmer, is that this will adversely affect the Kenya Co-operative Creameries. Now, what on earth, Mr. Deputy Speaker, all these examples have got to do with roads I do not know, and I do not think it was ever the intention of the Minister that stationary engines and boilers and the like that never go near the roads should have an imposition upon them to pay for the roads. It does not happen in the United Kingdom. Gas oil for industrial uses is exempted from this type of tax in the United Kingdom, and I hope when the Minister replies he will be able to tell us that that is the intention here.

The Secretary to the Treasury, when answering the hon. Member for Kiambu, did I believe enter into a complete misunderstanding. What he said, and I quote, was, "The hon. Member for Kiambu even renewed his old idea that I thought had been very faithfully dealt with in a debate about a year ago, that an Economy Committee should be appointed. Hon. Members do have the full opportunity of challenging both the policy and details of our Estimates." Mr. Deputy Speaker, he has completely missed the point, and I fear that Government are continually missing the point of this question that was so ably raised by the Member for Kiambu nearly two years ago in a Motion that he proposed. What it is that we are wanting is not to be told how much money has been saved, although we welcome that, but what we want under this particular heading is to know that we have got money's worth, that for every Sh. 20 spent we have £1 of value, and the only way to do that is by a management or an efficiency audit to check on human effort and labour time. It is interesting that the wisdom of the Member for Kiambu some two years ago has now been confirmed by no less a person than the Deputy Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Mr. Butler, and the Economist of 16th April, page 233, says this, if I may quote, with your permission Mr. Deputy Speaker, two short extracts. "It now seems likely that the Government is ready to risk quite an important constitutional innovation in its attempt to meet Tory complaints about the lack of parliamentary control over expenditure. The Government is now thinking of exposing both its Ministers and their senior advisers to an ordeal before either a new Committee on National Expenditure or an expanded and reinforced Select Committee on Estimates. This apparently is what Mr. Butler had in mind when he made his curious reference to 'administrative policy as a legitimate new field for M.P.s' enquiries'. Ministers are theoretically supposed to decide policy and civil servants to conduct administration." That is what the hon. Member for Kiambu was trying to drive into the heads of Government some two years ago.

On this theme, it is in this particular respect that I believe that the glaring example before this House went wrong, and I refer to the Supplies and Transport Department, and the administrative policy in connexion therewith which was considered by a Committee under the Chairmanship of the Minister for Finance who recommended that it should be amalgamated with the Ministry of Works, and that particular recommendation never really got to the Council of Ministers. We in this House should have had an opportunity, and there should be an automatic system, for dealing with that type of shortcoming in the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am disappointed that the Minister has not been able to meet us with some concession to owner-occupiers of their own houses. Perhaps he could explain when he replies why there are concessions in favour of those who invest in life assurance, why there are concessions to those who invest in tax-free bonds; those concessions have no financial policy, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but they are purely a political device, and very wise, we have no objection whatsoever, but why should the owner-occupier be penalized against these types of investors. Owner-occupiers are, I believe, the greatest stability to any country, certainly greater than those who invest in life insurance or tax-free bonds, and I would commend to the Minister that he gives this very serious consideration.

Finally, Mr. Deputy Speaker, some ten days ago there were two very excellent speeches in this House that established quite clearly the nature of the agreement in the recent constitutional talks. The first move from that agreement has happened, namely that three African Constituency Elected Members have now joined the Government. I believe, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that it is now for all Kenyans to move wisely and carefully to our independence, and I say our independence deliberately, because what we are seeking is not the independence of any particular section or race in Kenya. It is not African independence, or Asian, or European independence, it is our independence. Mr. Deputy Speaker, as Kenyans, and the sooner we realize that, the sooner we will come to it wisely and surely. Meantime we need to reject all the false prophets in our midst. There are leaders in each community at this moment creating false hopes and creating false expectations. We must reject them, because if we do not, and if we do not answer them soon, the last state will be worse than the first in that the disillusionment will be embittered. I do pray that the leaders of all communities will cease preaching this gospel of false hope in Kenya and get down to the reality that faces us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the focus is on Kenya; the world focus is on Kenya and it has been so for a long time, and we are inclined to regard it as an irritation, whereas in fact I believe we should regard it with pride because what is happening is that Kenya is supplying the answer in human relationships to the whole world and that is why the world is looking at us. When we have sorted this one, and when we are finally free, we have got the bigger task of freeing Britain because Britain today suffers from the inhibitions of pressures; principles have really ceased to matter in their thinking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

The Minister for Commerce and Industry (Dr. Kiatio): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I shall be very brief. I shall be brief because very soon in this House there will be a debate on my Ministry's Estimates and today I just want to make one or two observations regarding the question of economic confidence in Kenya as well as one or two points that were raised by my hon. friend the Member for the Nairobi Area.

The Minister for Finance in his speech referred to certain allegations of lack of confidence and outflow of capital from Kenya. He did reassure us that on the overall position there was not so much lack of confidence in Kenya as that the outflow of capital was more or less comparatively negligible. I think that it is important for me to stress that in the short time during which I have been Minister for Commerce and Industry I have been particularly impressed by the somewhat optimistic attitude that I find among the many representatives of the industry who visit my office quite often. Confidence is not something that can be taken for granted but it is something we must work continually for, and this means that the various statements we make in this House or on political platforms will have a direct effect on whether or not the intending investors will come to this country. I would like to say, for example, that some people who seem to be more interested in creating doubts about Kenya rather than creating confidence in Kenya are the people who have mistaken the words uttered by my colleague the Minister for Defence recently when he talked about the signs of the resurrection of the Mau Mau spirit, and some people have taken that as another way of creating doubt as to what is going to happen in Kenya and to a certain extent seeking to increase fears about this country and raising doubt as to whether there will be stability in this country. I am glad to say that the area referred to by my colleague, the Minister for Defence, was largely confined to the Central Province area and I can tell this House, not by guesswork but from clear observations as I have been spending quite a lot of time in the Central Province recently, that the majority of the people in those areas are just as much against anything that could endanger the security of this country, or any thing that could bring instability to this country, as the Members in this House, and the various signs that my colleagues referred to, the signs of perhaps somebody seeking to be rich in a hurry by giving some oaths to the people, the people of that type, or the behaviour that was described, must not be used either by Members of this House or by the politicians elsewhere as a way of saying that Kenya is now about to enter another crisis. Kenya is not about to face another crisis in regard to security. What was said was that these things were happening and that the Government was aware of them and that the Government was determined to see that security and stability continue. I have to say that because some of the visitors to my Ministry recently have brought this question to me, wondering whether they should change their attitude, wondering whether the stability and confidence we have promised them are being endangered by what was described in this House, but this actually means that somebody did misunderstand the intentions of the Minister for Defence by seeking to magnify what he simply gave us as a factual record. Those who think these things might have seen a motion which was passed unanimously by thousands of people in the Fort Hall District, and referred to elsewhere, which was, "That this meeting condemns all crimes of violence and oath-taking and categorically dissociates itself from anyone who might do anything that might lead to an outbreak of violence." This motion was fully accepted, Sir, by some thousands of people in the district, and it is this kind of positive attitude of trying to do something positive that will still the country instead of the negative ways otherwise. I will also say that the African Elected Members, with whom I have been associated and am still associated with, have repeatedly said that the changes they will bring about in this country will be brought about using constitutional and peaceful methods. They, being the leaders of their communities, as we all are—

Sir Charles Markham: Civil disobedience?

The Minister for Commerce and Industry (Dr. Kiatio): Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, a question is being raised about civil disobedience. I do hope

[The Minister for Commerce and Industry] that the Member for Ukamba will raise that question with the proper person, who unfortunately is not in the House today.

Sir Charles Markham: Who is that?

The Minister for Commerce and Industry (Dr. Kiatio): I will say that we have nothing to fear, that we will achieve what we aim at through the legal and peaceful methods. In my short time as Minister for Commerce and Industry I have actually seen much desire on the part of investors, both foreign and local, to participate in the building up of the economy and to have the Africans taking an increasing part in that process. It is therefore up to us to demonstrate by our attitude and action that we will make this process possible and indeed that we shall give encouragement to those who are willing to help us increase the prosperity of the country and raise the standard of living of the people. In so doing, I must point out one thing, that my Ministry is particularly concerned with the efforts of reducing and obliterating commercial malpractices that go on, particularly in the urban areas. As long as a large number of traders participate in such methods, the not really legal and honest methods, then we shall have a difficult time trying to improve the economy of this country. I do ask all the people in this House who are associated with various businessmen and various groups, to put it to them very clearly that with malpractice in this country we cannot do our job of economic development as quickly and as well as we ought to do otherwise.

I also agree with the viewpoints raised by my hon. friend the Member for Nairobi Area. I am sorry he is not in the House. The question he raised was about the growth of local industry and how it is being facilitated. I would agree with him entirely and actually my Ministry is very much interested in increasing local industries and in helping them to expand. He referred to a certain textile industry that seems to have been denied a licence, or something to that effect. In the case of textiles, which the hon. Member for Nairobi Area mentioned, this is scheduled under the Industrial Licensing Ordinance. The East African Industrial Council is an East African body and it is this Council in which all the territories are represented and it is this Council which decides who to grant the licences to, and also it has defined the various procedures for issuing licences.

The Council's decisions are subject to an appeal to the Industrial Licensing Appeal Tribunal, and these bodies take into account all the relevant factors collected over the scheduled industries. I hope that will clarify the point he raised in regard to the textile company he has in mind.

Reference was also made to the need for insuring in the economic life of the country that the Africans participate fully. He was concerned about what my Ministry particularly is doing to help the African business class, and particularly from the point of view of facilities for loans. I can confirm that we are doing everything possible to encourage the development of the African commercial class, and when I introduce my Ministry's Estimates later this week, or early next week—I think it will be later this week—I shall give to the hon. Members details of schemes now in operation, and others which are being proposed and designed to assist the Africans to take a fuller share in the economic and industrial life of this country. These schemes contain provisions, not only for loans suitable for individuals, but also for the essential training in commercial matters, and may I say that up to now the I.C.A. loan schemes for African artisans and businessmen and industrialists have been operating mainly in the rural areas, and I am pleased to say that action is now being taken to extend the facilities of these loan schemes to all the African people in the urban areas as well.

Now, my hon. friend also referred to the impression he had gained about the staff of the Nairobi Airport. He felt that Africans were being barred from the more functional and responsible positions in the Airport, and were being made to do the job of carrying the baggage. I can say that there is no question of a person of any race being barred from any particular job, provided that he has the necessary ability and qualifications and experience, and as hon. Members are aware, the Civil Service Commission is responsible for making appointments in the Civil Service, and it is open to anyone who feels that he is qualified to apply, to apply for the particular job that may be advertised.

On the general question of the increase of employment of Africans in the Civil Service in commerce and in industry, there are, in fact, very welcome indications that the African is going to be taking an increasingly more and more important part as his experience and qualifications improve, and I know that everybody wishes to continue in this process of putting Africans into more and more responsible positions, not only in the Civil Service, but also in business. My Ministry is definitely interested in seeing this developed, but I must continue to point out that the Civil Service Commission is the one that actually does the handling of the Civil Service employment.

[The Minister for Commerce and Industry]

Now, my hon. friend, the Member for Mombasa Area, had a question about restrictions on cement, and I will give him the details about this when I introduce my Ministry's Estimates, and all I can say now, is that these restrictions have proved to be essential to protect valuable local industry. Prices of locally manufactured cement are truly competitive with any normal supplies from overseas. Further details will be available to him, and I would therefore end by saying that although many questions are still flying in the political atmosphere of Kenya, and although many statements have been uttered and printed by various people who do not seem to want to help us give confidence in this country, my Ministry states that in the Kenya of next year and the Kenya of later this year, we shall be prosperous, as I have observed through increasing investment of capital both by local industries and by prospective investors, and those already making investigations, and that unless anything drastic and unforeseen happens the future is happy.

Mr. Farah (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, my first points are as follows. It needs constant repetition that the Northern Province is different in many ways from Kenya. The Northern Province suffers from a lack of publicity and understanding. Perhaps the Northern Province is not facing in the same way as Kenya. This still remains true, but as the Northern Province is not a properly integrated part of Kenya, it differs in climate, tribes, economy, religion and has much in common with adjacent territories. So, it is wise to ascertain what the majority would favour. We want to avoid the real danger of violence by finding out the wishes of people, which should be respected when the time comes to end the Colonial period in the Northern Province. Why not have a Commission of Enquiry to consider its future? It would be better now than in circumstances of possible civil disturbance in future.

Sir, the feelings of the Somalis in Kenya should be found out so that they will appreciate their status. They are an important section of the people of Kenya, and they contribute a great deal towards its economic development.

Sir, my second point is the principal gap between the Northern Province and the rest of Kenya in its way of life—nomadic people—dependent on stock—only a small minority of town-dwellers—life precarious and hard, owing to the chronic shortage of water resources and good pasture, and allied problems are rotational grazing, stock health and breed improvement. It all costs money, and the people of the Northern Province feel that the rest of Kenya are more vociferous and they get more money for development. Northern Province development has been very considerable in the last five years, but it is still not enough.

At the present rate the country will not compare favourably with the rest of Kenya. It is vital to inject more development money at once. Of £5,000,000 promised by the United Kingdom for Kenya development, at least £1,000,000 should be the fair share for the Northern Province. Other needs are: (1) better roads to all-weather standards, since the whole of the Northern Province traffic comes to a standstill during the rains to the great loss in terms of trade. My failure to attend the House in recent weeks was partly due to the fact that it was impossible to get out of Moyale by road. (2) Improved facilities for the sale of stock. The African Livestock Marketing Organization is unpopular as a Government monopoly. It is appreciated that veterinary control of stock movement is necessary to prevent disease spreading, but why cannot people take their own stock from the Northern Province to the Central Province to sell there under veterinary supervision to any buyer that offers? Why is the African Livestock Marketing Organization the middle man? Why must Garissa sellers sell to the Kenya Meat Commission middle man and not to direct purchasers? (3) Education. There is no secondary school, only two intermediates, and education must be forced if the Northern Province is to compete in a changing world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker. I beg to support.

Mr. Odinga: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I was not present when the Minister delivered his speech and, therefore, unfortunately I will not be able to join the chorus of those who have thanked him for a clear speech. But I would say that I trust what they said might have been correct and, therefore, I will also not contend with it. Mr. Deputy Speaker, before, I have studied the previous HANSARDS and I have found that in all those Budget speeches made previously they only lightly touched on African affairs as a rule. As one of the African representatives of the African people in this Council I could not find myself one of the parties to support the present Budget speech. I do feel that it has touched the issue very, very lightly about African affairs and I think, in the course of my speech, I will enlarge on that.

But, before I do that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I will deal with one of the allegations which was made by one of the Ministers here about our repetition each time. You will remember that when we were talking about the extension of the sittings here many people felt very strongly that it was not necessary. Well, one of the Ministers mentioned that he does not see why the time should not be altered, because every year we repeat every now and then the same thing. But I do not understand what he would like us to do if he does not like us to repeat. If what we say this year, and then next year we find it is just still where it was, what else would he expect us to do—as representatives of the people, but to go on pressing for it. The people asked "What about this: did you put it before the Government", and you find you already talked about it last year and this year nothing has been done about it, or nothing has been mentioned. You must go on repeating and insisting on it until something is done.

For example, Mr. Deputy Speaker, here if I could just take a few examples. I have most emphatically in this Council here repeated many times that in my area the people have asked for a district hospital in Central Nyanza ever since 1925, and they keep on repeating it and repeating it. Why should I not go on repeating it each year? Probably the Minister has not been able to listen to me or understand me.

Now another thing—about the secondary schools in that part of the world, too. They have asked for all those years about the Government secondary schools in Central Nyanza, and each time they shout about it, it is built in another area and not in Central Nyanza. Why should I not go on repeating that until it is done.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there are so many. I could also say the fisheries in Lake Victoria. What about that? Recently, I heard that the restrictions are being lifted. The East Africa High Commission have decided to disband that and now I hear that Kenya is trying to strengthen their side of this at the controlling lake and if that goes on why should I get tired of repeating it each year and moving Motions if I can.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there are so many and I will not enumerate all of them, because I think my time is limited, and I have other very important matters to deal with.

Now I will again, Mr. Deputy Speaker, mention something which was raised by one of my colleagues on this side, the Member for Mombasa Area, about the protection of local industries. Well, the reason advanced by the Minister in the course of his speech is that he wanted to encourage the local industries to thrive. That was the main justification for the imposition of some of the higher rates on the imported goods. But I should say that exactly in the same manner, we have raised here many arguments about the African. What about the Africans themselves? If we protect the local industries we are protecting the local industries because they are young, and they cannot compete equally with those factories, or those industries, from overseas. Well, if that is the case, or that is the reason, when it comes to the side of the Africans, we always stress here that the Africans are all just springing up, either into the business world, or into industrial developments. Recently when the Transport Licensing Board was discussed, I think the chairman here said he would not consider the Africans differently from the other races. That all the applicants will be considered equally. Well, if the local industries, which are owned by those who claim to be efficient, those who claim to be able to carry on with it. If they actually still need to be protected from competition from overseas, why not the ordinary African here? Why not the Africans who are now coming up into the business world, who is coming to compete with those who are already established in the business world? Why should he not be protected? Why should he not be given special consideration when he requests it? And that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is why I said that the African case is taken very, very lightly in this House. I am sure that if the chairman of the Transport Licensing Board wanted really to help the African I am sure he will help the African. The African must be given special consideration because the other people have already been in that business for some years, and they are better able to defend themselves than the African.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I will again raise one or two questions which will illustrate to the Minister for Finance my reasons for taking very, very seriously that he does not bother to go deeply into the African problems, or into the African affairs, and try to get a solution for them. Here is one of them, where he has stated very clearly that, and I will just quote it in his own words. "The most remarkable expansion has been in the sphere of peasant farming, where the moneys so far spent on the Swynnerton Plan are now coming to fruition, and where we are really beginning to reap the benefits of land consolidation and farm rearing." Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, can I not planing." Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is it take that to be just a piece of propaganda. Is it not a fact that the policy the Government is trying to defend here is the policy which they have put into the field, and have tried to use a piece of propaganda to defend themselves in the eyes of the world? If we could say the land consolidation is not some years back—it is about a year or two old—and in only a few areas in the whole of the Colony, and even in those areas there are many, many complicated problems which go with land consolidation have not even been settled 25 per cent. How could one boast of having settled it and now reaping the benefit?

Now, again to give the African farmer another discriminating name which is different from the other farmers and that an African farmer is called the "peasant farmer". I think that is a word that is discriminating, and minimizes the importance of the African agriculture in the eyes of the country and even in the eyes of the world. To make it look something which does not really matter at all. It is worthless. It is something that can just be touched on lightly. And so to call it peasant planning and deputing the produce from the African farmers, and you take the aggregate of it compared with the farming products from the other areas, I am sure you will find it to be many, many times bigger than the produce from other areas, and as such why should it be given a different name from the other farming. By giving it a different name you clean it up a bit in the department and you create also some people to deal with it differently from the other farming areas.

And here is another one to quote Mr. Deputy Speaker again. It is said here, and I will quote it word for word: "Government invests very large sums in peasant agriculture. All this investment must be continued if the income per head is to grow at a satisfactory rate, and to result in a national income which will permit us to have those conventional necessities which do not mean cigarettes and beer, but schools, hospitals, roads and other assets to future growth and amenities for the wellbeing of the community." Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Government invests very large sums in peasant agriculture in this country, and I wonder whether that is true. I wonder whether there is an African in this House who will support the Government in saying that they invest large sums in African agriculture, and if there is, I am sure I will come back to the Minister to put it in black and white to us today and tell us exactly how much it is which is going to peasant agriculture which is much more than going to other kinds of agriculture.

Now without labouring so much on that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because I mean to make my speech really very short—I do not want to make it long unnecessarily—I will turn to the statement made here by the Minister for Internal Security and Defence. The Minister when replying to the debate last week made some statements which I thought were so strictly correct, and they need some comment. If I could just quote a passage of his speech; he said that:—"There has been a revival of the spirit of Mau Mau, not by speakers on the platforms of public meetings, but by thugs and trained choirs who sing Mau Mau songs." This, Mr. Deputy Speaker, really defeats me. If the Mau Mau spirit could be revived by the thugs and thieves, and I should say that the thugs and thieves in Kenya are not anything different from thugs and thieves in Europe, in Asia or even in America. I am sure that thugs and thieves are the same all over. They are thieves, they are stealing, all that they go in for is more or less the same. Why the thugs and thieves in Kenya should be so different, I should think, having the spirit of Mau Mau, that really defeats me. Again, it is said that there are some trained choirs who are singing the Mau Mau songs, I do not understand that. It has never been explained to me what are the Mau Mau songs.

An hon. Member: You ask the Kikuyu.

Mr. Odings: Ask who?

An hon. Member: The Kikuyu.

Mr. Odings: Well, ask, the Kikuyu. I think the man who has said it here is the one who should be answering. He is the one who knows it. The Kikuyu have never said what are the Mau Mau songs. It is the man who said it here, who knows them, who should explain them to us, and should put them in black and white for us to know.

An hon. Member: Yes, for you to sing!

Mr. Odings: Yes, if I find it is a sweet song for me to sing, why in singing, you can never control my mind.

An hon. Member: Hear! Hear!

Mr. Odings: You can never control it, and I would like these things to be clarified quite clearly, because these things when they go to the countries overseas then people there think they are big and important and they see substance behind them, whereas in actual fact they are just made up stories to justify the feelings of some people, which is very pitiful indeed, and I would repeat that it is something which should not come from the mouth of a very, very important and responsible man.

Again, if I go on, I shall put it again. "We have been unable to find any political significance in these crimes of violence. There are signs of personal strife in particular cases, and in general terms I think we can say that they are crimes carried out by thugs."

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard) took the Chair]

If they have not been able to find any political significance in these crimes of violence, then I do not know how it should be said that there is a revival of the Mau Mau spirit in the country.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I once said here that if the Africans who are now being detained need to be "rehabilitated" that it is time also we say that there are also among our Ministers some of them who need rehabilitation from Mau Mau thoughts and Mau Mau ideas, because so long as we keep ourselves all the time Mau Mau conscious—and even long after the cessation of Mau Mau ideas into the minds of the people, you still find some people trying to revive the idea. They try to revive the idea in the minds of the people. You will never actually get this thing out.

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Not on the Government side.

Mr. Odings: It is the Government side who are trying to make it, and I am coming to what you have in your mind. I am coming to it.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I will now come to the thorny question to some people which was made by His Excellency the Governor just yesterday. I have here the Governor's speech yesterday, and I will not deal with that speech, but I will only quote some very important parts, where he refers us to some warnings and advices. There is a place where he says, "I have been here long enough to know that without such co-operation Kenya will not become a modern and developing nation, but will split up into opposing tribes again and either stagnate with a threatened return to savagery or be subjected to the fears and intimidation of a dictatorship". There, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would definitely say that His Excellency the Governor and the Government in general should understand that we, as African people, we are adult and we are mature. We have been to so many parts of the world and those people you referred to have lived in Europe for the last 18 years, and it is for them to decide what type of civilization they are going to pursue. I do not think that it is the worry or the problem of anybody to come and tell them or decide for them, what type of lives they are going to lead in their own country. The lives which will be led by the Africans in Kenya will be decided by the Africans themselves. They have experienced life all over the world. They have seen all those, and if they like to accept those they will do so. If they do not like to accept it, if they feel that savagery is the most fitting thing for them they will decide on it.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Shame!

Mr. Odings: If they feel — Well, from what you tell me yourself, your savagery probably is not savagery to me and therefore you will stay the same and on my side our thinking is probably diametrically opposed. Such might well be so.

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): God willing it is.

Mr. Odings: And therefore it would not be for anybody, and I would like to say that it is not polite for somebody to call my own way of life, and how I look at life to be savagery, because if you call it savagery, I may also just think the same of you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would also like to quote a little bit. This word I am just quoting which His Excellency the Governor said to be the main reason for his not releasing Kenya: "In the decision—which was his own—not to release Kenya, politics was not his concern. His concern was security and a full stop to the use of violence and witchcraft, and intimidation for political or any other ends. The campaign for Kenya's release was inflaming old antagonisms and increasing the security reason for continued restriction." I think this is directly the opposite of what I think.

An hon. Member: So what!

Mr. Odings: What I am expressing is not my own personal opinion, and as a representative of the African people, and a man who has laboured and participated in so many public places and social gatherings of the African people, I will only say, only represent the considered opinion of the African people in this country. With the African people in this country if you allow me to say so, the arrest and detention and imprisonment of Jomo Kenyatta has caused a deep wound into the hearts of the African people which will never, never be healed until he is back among the African people. And that I will repeat many, many times, as I have already repeated it here many times, and no one seems to listen to me. Many times, and no one seems to listen to me. I know that the time will come when things will be frustrated and things will go to confusion and I shall be taken to be the guilty man and I shall also be charged as Jomo Kenyatta was charged, and I shall be taken to be the victim of it. The time is coming for it. Now I am warning people, and then later on when things become worse, I will be taken to be the victim. Jomo Kenyatta was also taken just exactly in the same manner. He kept on reminding people of all these problems in Kenya. He kept on year after year, year after year doing it, and when things came to the worst, then he was arrested and now he is taken to be the worst man that ever lived. I do not agree with His Excellency the Governor to think that this question is not political. It is real politics in Kenya, and I am sure that when we were in London after the discussions of the Lancaster House agreement we put it plainly before the Colonial Secretary and before the Governor that having accepted the constitution the next question to be urgently considered and decided upon immediately is the question of the release of Jomo Kenyatta and all those detained Africans. Without his release and the release of all those people this agreement is not complete. We made that not only once. Many times we made it, and I am sure that last year when I led the delegation where I had also some of my Asian friends with me, we had only two things to put before the Colonial Secretary. That was the round table conference and the release of Jomo Kenyatta, and in all these meetings with the Colonial Secretary each time he told us that the question of his release was for the Governor, and the people of Kenya, which means that the British Government there have nothing actually against Jomo Kenyatta or to stand in Jomo Kenyatta's place, but there is someone who holds strong grudges against Jomo Kenyatta in this country. And he is the one who is making it very, very difficult for himself to live in this country and that is the man I am warning and that is the man I am requesting to reconsider his position.

We have said many times that it is no use holding grudges; grudges will help nobody in this country. It is better that we forget the past and I am glad His Excellency the Governor also has said, "Let us forget the past; let us start all over again." We know that many people hold various grudges: I hold some very, very strongly and in my opinion I hold very, very strongly that Jomo Kenyatta is innocent. And there are so many people on that side who hold very, very strongly also that Jomo Kenyatta is guilty and evil and a very bad man. But I am asking these people that what will help us in this dilemma is that Jomo Kenyatta and all those people should be released and let us forget the past. Let us all leave those people. Even I, I should no longer hold any grudges against anybody. I should not actually keep that grudge within me. But these people also on their part should also forget the past and let Jomo Kenyatta and all those people come back. And I maintain—and I know that all Africans in this country, although some people say that there are many of them who will go against Jomo Kenyatta, who do not like Jomo Kenyatta, they do not want him to come back—well, I think that they are hiding behind all those reasons but they are very lame reasons. I know that the Africans and the large majority of Africans who are in this country all want Jomo Kenyatta back. They want him to come back to lead them to independence.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I will just quote one paragraph only of His Excellency's speech where there is actual advice to me of what I should do. "The door was not shut. There was one clear way for the people who led the release campaign—to work actively as many leaders were doing, to bring to an end the divisions and personal fears among the Kikuyu peoples and other people in Kenya and to produce an atmosphere of stable political achievement on the Lancaster House pattern." Well, Mr. Deputy Speaker, here again I am told that we should alleviate the fears of some other people among the Kikuyus and we have got here as Minister for Commerce and Industry Dr. Kiiano who has stood plainly outside here and said that those who voted him into the Legislative Council were all those loyalists.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) took the Chair]

They were all loyalists, people with loyalists' certificates in the Central Province, and I am sure that even next time many of those people who will come here will be voted by those people and he, Dr. Kiiano, was the man who was also advocating that Jomo Kenyatta and company should come back.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I fear, Mr. Odinga, that you have used up your 30 minutes and a little bit more; you are over-running your time.

Mr. Odinga: Oh, I see. All right, thank you very much, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think I have raised several points and I hope that the Government will reconsider their position.

The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Madan): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, there is just one point I would like to deal with which was raised by the hon. Member for Nairobi West. He referred to the appointment of the Committee to examine the Transport Licensing Ordinance and asked when the Committee was likely to present their final report. He also mentioned certain costs which are incurred in the transport of goods by road haulage and also certain railway costs and stated that the position was becoming farcical and perhaps this Committee was finding it difficult to come to decisions.

I should like to tell the House, Sir, that this Committee was appointed in November 1958 and after its appointment naturally a period of time was given to the public to submit their memoranda and also to notify the Committee whether they wished to give evidence before the Committee. In other words, Sir, the Committee did not start functioning until about the beginning of 1959. In addition to myself it had four distinguished members and I feel happy, Sir, and privileged to be associated with them in this task. They are important people, Sir; they are business executives of considerable standing and they are rendering their service on a voluntary basis in the interests of the country so that the problems of the transport industry may be resolved.

When I was appointed chairman of the Committee, Sir, might I say that I made it my business to try and acquaint myself with this problem, that is, the problem of road/rail competition as it exists in other countries. In so far as my researches into this field extended, I was unable to find any country in the world which has been able to solve or resolve this problem of road/rail competition. There have been commissions on this matter in several countries. They have taken—some of them—much longer than we have and it is no that the Committee finds it difficult to come to decisions. The main difficulty that I find is how to meet—. It is not due to unwillingness on the part of the Committee members or myself. It is not due to lack of co-operation. It is not due to lack of appreciation of the fact that our task is urgent and it requires a speedy a treatment as we can possibly give it. However, there have been intervening factors which have made it impossible for us to proceed more quickly than we have done, Sir. I should like to say that since our appointment we have—speaking from memory—had 23 meetings of this Committee. We have submitted an interim report during August 1959 and it was laid in this House in the form of Sessional Paper No. 2 of 1959/60. Hon. Members will bear in mind that towards the end of last year or the beginning of this year there was the London Constitutional Conference which meant that members were not available for the deliberations of this matter for nearly two months. In addition to that one of the distinguished members of the Committee is away in London, probably on business. Another member has been unable to attend our meetings, I understand, due to personal reasons. But even with this depleted condition the Committee continues to meet. The last meeting of the Committee was held only this morning and we have fixed three other meetings during the next fortnight.

Sir, it would be well to remind the House what are the tasks that have been the concern of this Committee, I think they can broadly be divided into four parts. The first, of course, is the detailed examination of the Ordinance; secondly, the mechanics of transport licensing; thirdly an examination of the general purposes of this legislation, that is, the Transport Licensing Ordinance; fourthly, a definition or consideration of the definition of the public interest. I think the hon. Member for Nairobi West will agree that that perhaps is the most important part of our task, how to define public interest in the context of road/rail competition so that neither is excluded from fruitful co-operation in this Colony.

The hon. Member, Sir, referred to the total cost of railway operation. He referred to charges of 7 cents per ton-mile and he said, if I understood him rightly, that the railway costs were higher because of administrative expenses and also because of administrative charges. Now, Sir, it is not a part of my capital charges. Now, Sir, it is not a part of my business to defend the Railways' position or the manner in which they operate their Railway system because I feel that I would be abdicating my position as an independent chairman of this Committee were I to do so. I think my duty is to remain impartial in this matter without taking sides, but I would like to say this, Sir, that I think the hon. Member overlooked a very important factor, i.e. the factor of the differential tariff which the Railway administration is expected to operate when fixing its charges. This is brought out in paragraph 9 of the interim report of the Committee which we submitted during the month of August last year. With your permission, I will read a portion of it which states: "The case for protection lies in the fact that the administration is obliged by clause 21 of the East African Railways and Harbours Act to be administered on business principles and so far as it is not inconsistent therewith or with the principles of prudent finance, cheap transport shall be provided by the administration to assist agricultural, mining and industrial development in the territories. It therefore seems to us that the provision of cheap transport for certain industries can only be at the expense of higher average rates for other goods and commodities, and that the Railways administration is particularly vulnerable to road competition in these higher sectors of the rating system." I merely quote that, Sir, to say that that is the case as far as the Railways are concerned.

It is not part of my business here to defend either road transport or the charges or rail transport charges. It may be, Sir, that our country so far has not been able to arrive at a policy decision which would ensure that there is no wasteful competition to which the hon. Member referred quite rightly, if I may say so. I think not only transport interests on both sides, that is the

[The Minister without Portfolio]

Railways and the roads interest, but the interests of the country and the general development of the transport industry which is another factor in the economy of this country, demand that if possible at all wasteful competition between these two sectors of the transport industry should be avoided. He has my whole-hearted support in that wish, but I would like to tell him, Sir, that perhaps he will not see his wish realized until such time as we have a developed system of road transport, until we have people who engage themselves in road transport working in co-operation with others preferably on a co-operative basis and preferably as joint ventures rather than as individual efforts which must, of necessity, introduce an element of wasteful operation as well as wasteful competition. It is up to the people themselves who are engaged in road transport to see that they create conditions in which they will be able to operate more fruitfully the road transport section of the transport industry. But it is, I fear, not likely to happen in the near future because my own feeling in this matter is, having, if I may say so, studied the problem with some close attention, that, I repeat, it is not likely to happen in the near future because we are in a state of emergency as far as the transport industry is concerned. We are at a stage where people are experimenting in the transport field. They are trying to see whether to establish themselves firmly would be a paying proposition in the long run. As against that, Sir, I—

Mr. Alexander (Interjection.)

The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Madan): Let me finish and then question me. As against that, Sir, I am aware of the existence of well organized large-scale transport companies who are providing an example to others of what should be achieved by people who are interested in this venture, Sir.

I hope the hon. Member is satisfied that the Committee which was appointed to examine the Transport Licencing Ordinance is doing everything possible that it can to expedite the report. But I must say, Sir, that I fear it may not happen for quite some time because although we arrange meetings as often as we can it is not possible to meet often than we do.

Mr. Muliro (Nyanza North): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am very pleased to be here at least to take part in these mental gymnastics which are very useful during the Budget debate. I find that the Minister for Finance managed to balance his Budget this year and I think that to a very high degree has been balanced at the cost of progress; that is, it has been balanced against the expense of progress. For I feel that since during the Emergency we were having more and more unbalanced Budgets we should continue with such Budgets because in a young country which goes in for development one normally suffers this disease of an unbalanced Budget. Now, we want more money to be spent on education because it is very clear that the Emergency is over. It is also very clear that Kenya is moving towards her independence and therefore more money should be spent on equipping Kenya citizens for their responsible roles which they have to play in the future. This is the reason why I say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that we would have rather liked an unbalanced Budget rather than the balanced one we got from the Minister for Finance.

One sore point is this question of direct taxation. I think the Minister would have done very well to raise a few taxes on some of these consumer goods and various commodities of indirect taxation, rather than continuing with this direct taxation. I feel we should try as much as possible to avoid direct taxation.

The Africans, especially in the lower income group, are suffering more and more as a result of direct taxation, and this year, in fact, nothing has been done to alleviate it. I find that the Africans in the lower income groups who are paying Sh. 20 still, many of them, go to prison because they are unable to pay the money. I have said time and time again at Budget speeches in this Council that it is no good putting people into prison who are unable to pay their taxes. The best thing is to leave them out, because when they go to prison what happens is that the money which is for the various developments is used to feed prisoners in gaol who actually have no money to pay the taxes. If these persons were not in prison they would have been able to feed themselves.

Another point that I would like to raise again, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is on this tax on diesel. I do not know how the Treasury is going to tax these people who own tractors or who use diesel oil, and I do not know how they are going to prove that the diesel was used for farming purposes. This is one of the most silly aspects of the whole case. I do not know how they are going to have inspectors to go round the various farms to find out whether that was used for farming purposes or whether it was used for purposes of running cars. I would have thought that to tax a person purely on a utility basis is one of the bad principles which would never have been applied.

Now, when I look at the Budget and the amounts which are going to be spent on education, I find that amount is most inadequate. I have said in this Council before that keeping the Northern Frontier Province of Kenya and the Masai areas, and the Samburu, and various areas like that, backward educationally is a serious menace to this country; to keep a portion of Kenya as a human zoo for the American tourists can never be the best solution for Kenya's problems and, therefore, I should urge the Government that education should be one of the priorities and particularly in those parts of Kenya which are more backward, more concentration should be placed on those areas. I would have thought that more money should be devoted to education, particularly for people in the Northern Frontier Province and people in the Masai districts and also some parts of the Samburu and various parts of the Coast Province where people do not think about going to school at all. This is raising a most serious issue indeed. We are all looking forward to the day when Kenya is going to be independent. But this lopsided development of Kenya by developing certain areas while others remain more backward is going to be a serious risk to the independent Kenya. Therefore, this is the time for the Kenya Government to re-think seriously and take more interest in these areas than they have done in the past. Well, the Minister for Education or the Director of Education will probably tell us that these people do not want to go to school. But I do not think that this is right and good. Build the schools and use whatever methods you can use in these areas to induce these people to go to school. After all, many of them want to go to school, but there are no schools for them. You have not got schools in the Masai areas or the Northern Frontier Province, which are empty, to show that these people do not want to go to school. Now, this, Sir, I regard as one of the most urgent problems for Kenya, and unless we work now very seriously we are going to find it very difficult in the future. I know the mind of the Government is much more backward than probably the minds of the ordinary politicians. We feel that Kenya is becoming independent more rapidly than the Government thinks. Therefore, the Government must move as fast as we are moving.

On higher education, Sir, more loans should be given to Kenya children to go overseas and be trained to get ready to take over this Government. I know countries which depend very much on expatriate civil servants are suffering a loss. They are paying a lot of money for these expatriate civil servants, and we do not want Kenya to face the same position. We have sufficient young people for this country, men and women, who could be useful citizens of Kenya and take over our Civil Service when some of these experienced expatriate staff go back to Britain or decide to remain in Kenya.

Another question I would like to raise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the administration of people in prison. We find it very difficult to detain anyone in prison. Mr. Odinga said today that some of the Ministers should be rehabilitated and I think that that should be carried out. I know that there are some of the Ministers in the Government there who could do with a little bit of mental adjustment. When we look at the Africans who are in detention camps; when we look at the African leaders who are now detained and at the pittance of an allowance that is given to them; when we see this, the African cannot help but say that whatever is given to these people probably is calculated to ruin their health. In Uganda they are given £60; in Kenya it is £6; this is ten times less. These people should be released. When I think of my own countrymen I think of Eliza Kasinde. This man was detained in 1948. He has been in detention ever since that time up to now. For 12 years he has been in detention. Why I ask the Kenya Government? They will tell me that this man is a lunatic. Why, if the man is a lunatic, should he be in a detention camp? I think the place for him should be Mathari. Why should he be thrown in the Northern Frontier Province, when actually he ought to be undergoing treatment at Mathari? That convinces me that this man is not a lunatic, and I am urging the Government of Kenya that they should let me take the complete responsibility of the future of this man. Let him be brought back to the district, and if he goes out of control, please blame me for it. Next time I will go to the detention camp in his place. But let him come back. Twelve years in the Northern Province is not a joke. The Ministers say that Kasinde is a lunatic. Bring him—either you bring him back to Mathari for medical treatment or allow him to come home, and then hold me responsible. I am saying that responsibility as the leader of my people. Hold me responsible, but let him come back, because it is most unfair for someone to be in detention, Sir, on flimsy excuses that he is a mental case, especially when he is not having any treatment at all.

On the issue of Jomo Kenyatta and the other detainees of Mau Mau the whole question has been made clear today by the Governor. I find that this has been a most unfortunate statement. The Government must be more realistic. Everybody in this country wants peace; everybody in this country wants security. You want economic stability but you will never have economic stability without political stability, and I cannot see how you can have political stability when Kenyatta is further detained. Let us have Ken-

[Mr. Muliro]—The Government people may argue jatta back. The Government people may argue that they are keeping Kenyatta away for his own safety—“If he comes back people will murder him.” They will say that. All right, you say that Kenyatta is a most brutal man. All right, if he comes back the people will finish him, if you are afraid. After all, you do not like him, and if you do not like him let the people finish him. But I am telling you this, that Kenyatta can never be murdered by his people, and the Government is doing more serious harm to the future of Kenya than good by detaining him further. I have known cases in history, and I have said in this House before, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Archbishop Makarios, the organizer of violence in Cyprus, a known terrorist, has been the key man in the solution of Cyprus. Why does the same Government, the same British mind, very ingenious as they are, who use Makarios and who now use Dr. Banda, why do they not use Mr. Kenyatta.

Now, I say that any further detention of Jomo Kenyatta is not going to bring the harmony and the prosperity in Kenya that everyone in Kenya looks for. On this I want to make my position very clear, as the leader of my party, that the African Elected Members have made it very clear that we will never go in for violence, and I will repeat it here, that we are not going in for violence, because what I know is that actually violence breeds violence. The British Government and the Kenya Government have been very violent in the last eight years during the Emergency. The Africans in this country are ready for independence, they are ready to govern this country and do not want to be delayed by violence. On this I am very convinced, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that we will do all that we can not to see any more violence in this country, because I believe that violence which will delay us will not be of any good for this country, and also I would like to say something about local government.

The Minister for Local Government has spoken about the achievements of African district councils but not at the rate we want. He passed a Motion in this Council that all or many African district councils are going to have African chairmen. But as yet up to now there are only two district councils with African chairmen. I do not know whether the rest of Kenya is so backward that actually there are no Africans in those areas to be chairmen of their district councils. I should urge him that all district councils should be real local organizations, and that the Africans should be allowed to occupy the chairs and here I want to put the Minister for Local Government to task. I have just received information from my constituents; an old man came here who was put in the cell for three days because he said Uhuru! to someone. And the President of the African Court is the practical man for the business. This man was put into a cell for three days and when he went before a magistrate he said that he would have nothing to do with it and there was nothing wrong. I think the Minister must give instructions to some of these civil servants of his to know that greeting someone with Uhuru is not bad. After all, why should someone be put into a cell for three days?

Then the African District Council of Elgon Nyanza just now, many people are screaming because the African District Council has said “You pay your poll tax up to some date in April and after that there will be penalties imposed. Now there are penalties imposed on the African District Council rates, but the Government rate is only getting penalties in June. This is worrying many people, yes, it is very serious. Well, we are not worried whether it is an African chairman or not, it is your responsibility, you are the Government. I am not worried whether the chairman started it off or not, the thing is that people should not be penalized on local rates at least in this discriminatory manner as these people are being discriminated against.

Now, let me come to the Ministry of Agriculture. Now, this Ministry of Agriculture is one of the chief industries of Kenya. The future well-being of the whole Government of Kenya depends very much on this Ministry and if therefore the Minister for Agriculture should make more experiments in cash crops everywhere in Kenya. I say this because a great proportion of those crops could be grown. In my own district—North Nyanza—there are areas where they have planted a certain type of coffee, agricultural officers have refused people who have after planting the coffee nurseries permission to have more than 50 trees and no more. But what we should bear in mind, Sir, is that unless we can intensify agricultural production this country is not going to have the money for the necessary development and therefore the Minister for Agriculture must crack his head, his marketing organizations must work hard and see that new markets are discovered. When I was in Israel I could see that we could send some of our goods there, and we could at least export Kenya pork to Ethiopia, the next station to here, why do we not do that? When I was in Ghana I found that they import food products from South Africa and yet the Minister says, “Oh, we have to find markets for our products.” If South Africa is finding markets in spite of the fact that they do not want South African goods because of their politics, why do not we, with our clean hands, tackle that market?

[Mr. Muliro]—So I would advise the Minister for Agriculture to work on these lines and see what he can do.

Another thing, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is for the Minister for Commerce and Industry who is not here. I think we should aim at opening up more industries to create work in Kenya. There are certain goods which are imported in a finished form from Britain and I think the Kenya Government should aim at inducing some of these industries from Britain to come and establish their industries in Kenya here, so that they get our labour employed. It would be much better if the goods could be manufactured in Kenya here. For instance, the cotton textile industries which are in Britain; cotton is from Uganda, why do we not have the industries in Kenya to take cotton from Uganda in order to get our people employed. If we can do this our solution of unemployment is not impossible. As long as our streets in Nairobi, Mombasa, Nakuru, Eldoret and Kisumu are crowded with unemployed, our social problems will never be solved because those who are running about the streets want something to eat and these people want employment, therefore the Kenya Government, the Minister for Commerce and Industry should rack his head, along with this Government, to create some industry in Kenya so that we can get our people employed here in this way.

With these few remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

The Minister for Information and Broadcasting (Mr. Harris): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, the Kenya Broadcasting Service requires a salesman to sell advertising time on their programmes. Having heard the last hon. Member suggest, I believe, that we should sell pork to Israel, I think he is just the man for the job!

I had intended only to deal with two hon. Members, but they have reduced themselves to one and the hon. Member for Nyanza Central, Sir, made the most provocative speech in the whole of this debate and I do not think sat back on his bench but disappeared out of the door. I had intended to put into context some of the things he quoted out of context, to correct him when he misquoted my hon. friend the hon. Nominated Member Mr. Jones, and deal generally with his speech. He said, Sir, that the Africans were now adult and mature. In most adult and mature legislatures it is a tradition that Members after making provocative speeches remain in their places for half an hour to let other people get their own back. Under the circumstances, Sir, I do not intend to deal with the hon. Member. Actually, Sir, had he not had that extra cup of tea I would have dealt with him.

The hon. Member for Nairobi West, Sir, raised the whole question of the new Ministry of Information and Broadcasting. I would like to say that I regret that we shall not very likely get to the Head when we take the votes as I would have preferred to have had a fairly extensive time to discuss the new Ministry. As it is, Sir, there is a considerable deal of thought going into the proper organization and structure of the services which the Ministry provides due to it having been severed from what was a larger Ministry in the past. I do appreciate that there is a tremendous job of work to be done and I hope very soon to be able to tell the House how I intend to do it. At the moment the Public Relations Officer from London is in Kenya and I want to take the opportunity of his presence to discuss the matter that the hon. Member mentioned, namely our future activities overseas.

He did ask me, Sir, to tell him today what I was going to do with this Ministry but there is not time as this debate is running out and he took up very nearly two hours of it. I am afraid he will have to wait for a later occasion but I shall try to initiate a debate or ask the hon. Member to, perhaps, move a Private Member's Motion, in a little while when I am ready to go into greater detail.

He only mentioned a few points which I think I can deal with now. One is that he appreciated that we are now getting Kenya news in Kenya before the British Broadcasting Corporation. I am conscious of the criticism of that in the past and we shall try to do as we did this morning, in the future. It must be appreciated, of course, that the House would not agree if I came to ask them for supplementary estimates in order to have a news service to Monrovia, and it is very difficult with some of the visits of our politicians to keep up with where they are going to make a speech next. It is only to the important centres of the world where we have news connections and can get in before we get the news back through British Broadcasting Corporation channels.

The other point which he made, Sir, was that British Broadcasting Corporation news had been biased, I think was the word he used in their headlines. I hope, Sir, that he will notice an improvement in that in the future and I would only say this, that I believe the British Broadcasting Corporation do try generally to be objective and I can only say that it is probably the fault of the service that we have provided to London in the past that sometimes they get hold of the wrong end of the stick, and that is a thing which I hope to put right in the very near future. In the meantime, Sir, I beg to support.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, fortunately the Estimates for my Ministry are coming up first which gives us the opportunity if we need to to continue for 15 days so although a number of questions were asked on agriculture, a certain number of them I will leave as they will be better dealt with under my Estimates when we get on to them tomorrow afternoon.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for North Nyanza mentioned that unless we intensify—and I see that he has gone out; Mr. Deputy Speaker—our cash crops in agriculture we may over the next few years feel the pinch economically. Now this is one of the aspects which I am going to cover very, very fully tomorrow afternoon, but I would like to emphasize, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that unless when we intensify cash crops, especially in African areas, we have the full co-operation of the producer and the farmer in that area, it makes our job very, very difficult indeed.

He mentioned that he had had a trip to Israel and to Ethiopia and that there were markets wide open and the Ethiopia was the next station down the way. I am sure that he appreciates, Sir, that there is no railway running from here to Ethiopia and the next station that he talks about is a very difficult station to get produce into. At the present time every available kilo of air freight that goes from Nairobi into Ethiopia is taken up with Kenya produce, no aircraft leaves with any space available which is going to Ethiopia. One of the difficulties with that market is that there are no refrigerated ships which call at the port used by the extended end of the railway line at Jibuti from Ethiopia.

He also mentioned Ghana. We have no air freight available direct from Nairobi to Ghana, and shipping is practically impossible to get from Mombasa to Ghana. South Africa is in a fortunate position that they have Government shipping lines, they have ships of their own and they are on the end of direct shipping routes which call at Ghana.

Those are a few obvious reasons, Sir, why we cannot get more stuff into both these countries, although we do get pork and bacon products and dairy products into Ethiopia.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Central Nyanza raised many interesting points which I am greatly looking forward to being able to put down in black and white when I move my Estimates tomorrow, and I sincerely hope that when they are down in black and white they may, for once and for all, convince him that the figures that my Ministry gives him are correct and not, as he says, incorrect.

Sir, the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Luseno, raised one or two points and I would like to take this opportunity of thanking him for his encouraging speech and the kind remarks he made about agriculture and the personnel of my Ministry who are doing their utmost to help the people mainly in his area and the other African areas.

Sir, we had planned to go a little faster in our plan of campaign for cash crops, and again this is a point which I would like to cover more fully under my Estimates. But I would like to tell him that we have not forgotten a tea factory in Nyanza—I will touch on this tomorrow. But I would like now to say that there are a number of schemes by commercial concerns who have agreed to the purchase of green leaf from African growers in the Kisii, Kericho, North Nyanza, Nandi and Kiambu areas. I would like to take this opportunity of thanking these commercial concerns for the tremendous amount of help that they have given us, not only in available space in their tea factories for our African growers' green leaf, but for the very great interest they are taking in the development of the tea industry. By this concession of theirs it means that we can put an approximate extra 3,000 acres under tea in those areas which I have mentioned.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Ukambani asked for a statement on the outcome of my trip to London, my discussions with Her Majesty's Government and in Washington, of my discussions with the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and other international finance houses. I am afraid this would take a lot of time to put across now. I am going to spend 40 minutes of my Estimates time in giving not only the discussions I had, but the outcome of the scheme which my Ministry is working on.

Sir, the hon. Member for Eastern Electoral Area raised the question on a settlement scheme for Asians. This, Sir, falls into the scheme which I have mentioned appropos of my visits to London and Washington, and I will be covering that in full tomorrow as well.

Sir, the hon. Member for Central Rift did—and I think he is another one of those not here—mentioned that he wanted to know why more water was not available in the better ranching areas of Masai. Now, Sir, I was going to give him a list of—I think I had better do so as I presume he will read HANSARD—what we have done in Masailand. We have put in an extension of the water canal running from Lake Amboseli, we have piped the Little Kedong, which is capable of further expansion, that is with the help of the local African district council; we have

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources] breeding will not go ahead as quickly as we would like to see it.

He also raised the point, Sir, of what were we doing about cattle diseases in Masailand. Now, Sir, the two main cattle diseases of Masailand are rinderpest and pleural pneumonia. For many years the Veterinary Department have provided a free inoculation service against rinderpest to Masai stockowners. Last year, Sir, we inoculated 331,000 cattle in Masai country and we know, Sir, that although this disease is still rife in game in that area, no serious losses were suffered by the Masai.

Sir, there is a dangerous increase in rinderpest in game in Masailand and especially in game coming through from Uganda because of the breakdown of inoculation in the Sudan and I sincerely hope that the hon. Member will use his influence in encouraging the Masai stockowners to bring their cattle to be inoculated for this disease.

Now, Sir, pleural pneumonia. The vaccines which we have had available over the last eighteen months to two years have not been as reliable as previously. Pleural pneumonia vaccine is a very touchy vaccine indeed and Dr. Binns of E.A.V.R.O., who actually dealt with this inoculation—this vaccine—has been in Australia and has only just got back where he has been having a look at how they go about it in that country.

Now, Sir, I will admit that Masai stockowners usually co-operate with Government very well on these inoculation programmes but they must remember, Sir, that the Masai, once they start dodging quarantines and moving infected cattle illegally as they have been doing over this last year, then indeed disease will spread not only over Masailand but over the whole of this country and affect our exports very disadvantageously.

Sir, I have already mentioned beef measles but I think that, perhaps although the hon. Member did not mention it, he may have been meaning East Coast fever. Now, Sir, we can only control East Coast fever in Masailand—and I appreciate that they have had a great number of deaths this year—on condition that the cattle are controlled and controlled in grazing schemes. If they wander about in Masailand and dip irregularly, only three months, or so when they come near a dipping tank, or if there are rains up the hills and they decide to go up into the hills in those areas where there are no dipping tanks, then by spasmodic dipping they will only make their animals more likely, more susceptible to East Coast fever and until they are prepared to operate grazing schemes, or enclose part of their land themselves to individual ownership, combating of East Coast fever is going to be very, very difficult.

Now I would like to remind the hon. Member, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that many Masai livestock owners are wealthy men and they are a wealthy tribe. In fact, a number of them are wealthy by any standards, and they must learn, Sir, as other areas have learned, that they have to a certain extent to help themselves.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member also mentioned beef and dairy, those two industries, and wanted to know why we did not utilize more Masai stock and Masai produce. In the Kajiado area alone, Sir, in the last six months of 1959, nearly 18,000 head of cattle were exported to Tanganyika. At the beginning of this year, the Kenya Meat Commission raised the price for fourth grade beef and since then ALMO have bought well over a thousand head, and I hope that ALMO will be able to purchase over the next two or three months at the rate of 2,000 head a month from Masai. But, Sir, I must give a warning to the hon. Member which I have given to him before in this House, and I hope that this time by reading HANSARD he will be able to absorb it better than when I tell him. That is, Sir, that the Masai are known to have a high incidence of measles in their cattle, and until this problem is sorted out they are going to run into difficulties in getting the full price for their beef as other people do.

Now, Sir, he mentioned dairy products. I know of no surplus dairy products which are available in the Masai country, and even if there were, Sir, the Masai tribesmen must learn to have better and more hygienic methods of milking their cows and bringing their produce for sale into the cities and towns.

Sir, Government cannot move a wand and make these Masai cattle better and produce more milk and better calves overnight. It is up to the Masai themselves, they have got three training institutes in their area and they must take advantage of this and use them more. They have got the Veterinary Training Institute at Ngong and they have also got Institutes at Narok and Kajiado and unless they use those more fully, Sir, then I fear their advancement in cattle

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources]

On the marketing of their cattle, the hon. Member will have seen in my Estimates that we have provided for and extra senior officer to plan and co-ordinate the framework of A.M.O and I sincerely hope that he will be able to help the Masai in marketing the livestock through the Kenya Meat Commission more beneficially than they have up to now.

He also raised the question, Sir, of whether Masai stock could be raised by having better stock brought into the Masai, Sir, he knows one of the greatest difficulties of the Masai as well as I do, that they do not like the intention or the thought behind artificial insemination, over and above that they take great likings to bulls in their own herds and are not over-keen on having bulls of other breeds or sold by Government to be put into their herds. The only thing it is to educate the Masai and we in my Ministry are doing our utmost to do so, But, Sir, I do ask Members such as the hon. Member to see that they can do a tremendous amount to help on this, to go amongst these people and at the barazas and at the political meetings to put it across that my Ministry are prepared to help to the utmost but they must to a certain extent help themselves.

We have in the Veterinary Department, Mr. Deputy Speaker, fifteen breeding farms spread around the Colony where we have got an intensive plan of breeding to bulls. We have just imported fifteen bulls from India and Pakistan and we held a sale not so long ago in Nyanza and found that it was impossible for us to get any African in that area to consider buying these bulls. We then held an open sale—I ought to mention, Sir, I think the best price we got was something like £11—but in the open auction sale I think the top price bull which nobody had wanted before went for over £80, it was sold to a farmer in the settled area, which does show, Sir, that we have potential bulls available for the African areas of very good quality.

Sir, the hon. Member for Nairobi West raised three points. One was the land settlement scheme, compensation, stabilization, etc. That, Sir, tied to the point raised by the hon. Member for Ukambani is one which I would rather touch on in full tomorrow. He also asked me, Sir, about the MacGillivray Committee. The MacGillivray Committee Report, Sir, is at this moment being looked at by an officer in my Ministry, as a draft which has come back from the printers for technical errors. When it is checked—and I hope he will cease checking it within the next 48 hours—it will be returned to the Government Printer who hopes to have it available for it to be laid

Now, Sir, he raised a point on the functions of the Board of Agriculture. I am pleased he brought this to my notice, Sir, because it had already been mentioned to me by somebody else outside this House. With your permission, Sir, I would like to read what Section 54 of the Agricultural Ordinance says on the functions of this Board. "Functions of the Board in Scheduled Areas shall be to advise the Minister on all matters that relate to agriculture, Scheduled Areas, referred to it by the Minister to perform the duties proposed and use the powers conferred upon it by and generally to further within the Scheduled Areas the objects of this Ordinance."

Now, Sir, I think that what he was actually referring to was a Board of Agriculture meeting which was held on 28th April. Sir, certainly the agenda and I was actually at the meeting, ranged over certain matters which I agree were more political than agricultural, and I will, Sir, have a discussion with the chairman of the Board of Agriculture on this matter.

Sir, I, then come to points which were raised by my friend the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Muchura, and I see, Sir, that he is another one of these absent Members. Time is beginning to run short, Sir, so I will only answer two or three of the many, many points which he raised and I hope that my colleague and fellow clansman will answer some of the others.

Sir, the first point which he raised was that land consolidation was depriving many of land and living and driving them into the towns. Well, now, Sir, he has been a Member of this House now for some years and if he had listened into many of the agricultural debates he would know, Sir, that this was not correct. Nobody under land consolidation who possessed his land before consolidation has been deprived of any land whatsoever, except a very small percentage which may have been taken into roads of access and open spaces for a town or market space. But nobody who owned land before consolidation has been deprived of it, other than perhaps one or two terrorists but in the way he put it I am afraid, Sir, that he was completely incorrect.

He then went on to a second point in asking me how the £2,000,000 loan if obtained from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development would be spent, if it was being added to further land consolidation or in what ways it would be used.

Well, Sir, while I was away in Washington I gathered—and I have read the HANSARD—it was made perfectly clear in the debate on the Motion loan from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, but in case the hon. Member as today he is not here he may not have been here when this was debated, however I hope he is one of these Members who read HANSARD so I shall spend about two minutes explaining it to him in easy words. £1,000,000, Sir, of the £2,000,000 loan will be spent on roads of access in the high potential lands which is benefiting from the other £1,000,000 of this loan, that is land above 4,000 ft. and about 25 in. rainfall in the African land units following the Swynnerton Plan. Those roads of access will take the produce from those areas to railheads, coming right through the Highlands areas and in other instances they will run through African land units but they will all be coupled to the potential area as roads of access to railheads. The other million, Sir, is a loan programme which will accelerate development for the individual land holders after land consolidation.

Now, Sir, there has never been any mention at all that these loans will be used either for furthering land consolidation or, as the hon. Member mentioned, added to a new Swynnerton Plan.

Sir, the third point he raised he suggested a large irrigation scheme could be formed by using more money, if not all the money we borrowed on the Tana River. Well, Sir, the answer to that is simple. The international money that we are borrowing, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development money, cannot be used for an irrigation scheme on the Tana River. We already have numerous irrigation schemes operating, Sir, and the—(Inaudible.)—..... Scheme is actually operating in the higher reaches of the Tana River watershed. No, Sir, there is another aspect of this that while my Ministry is not interested at the moment in any large-scale irrigation scheme midway down on the lower Tana, irrigation schemes, Sir, are very expensive indeed and when they produce only bread and butter produce, such as rice of which we are going to have enough for ourselves, all they do is to put a surplus on to the market, which means that economically the scheme is very, very difficult to make ends meet. If we could find a cash crop—and a well paying cash crop which we produce on these irrigation schemes—then, Sir, the whole position might alter.

But over and above this is another reason why we cannot look at the Tana River at the moment, and that is the firm flow of water on the Tana with the information which we have available at the moment, is not enough to go ahead with a large-scale irrigation scheme. I am covering irrigation in general and will touch upon this point and other points which were raised by the hon. Member in my estimates tomorrow.

But, Sir, there is one point which he raised over which I would like to take a few moments in covering. Sir, the hon. Member did end up with—and I listened to his speech with great interest and I must admit it beat me. What he said was that the protection of local industries by controlling imports and issuing subsidies increases the cost of living to the man in the street and impedes free competition and he instanced sugar, butter, wheat and maize which could be imported and sold at cheaper prices than the local product. Sir, on one hand the hon. Member called for expanded production under the Tana River irrigation scheme for rice and other crops and also belaboured my Ministry for not developing other crops in other areas, they were bread and butter crops. Then, Sir, at the end of his speech he comes forward and asks us to expand imports to undercut that local produce he has asked us to put money into developing. Now, Sir, it is any good putting money into an irrigation scheme to remove the import tariff, to bring in cheap rice so that we cannot benefit from the irrigation scheme? I do ask him, Sir, how does he think we are going to meet the interest, let alone the repayment cost of this scheme?

Now, Sir, I believe that the hon. Member originated from Central Nyanza and I would like like to give him a further clue on why what he wants us to do will not work. One-half to three-fifths of the Colony's maize comes from Nyanza. Now, Sir, £1,500,000 is approximately what is put in the pockets of the people in Nyanza by the sale of this maize. Well, now, Sir, what would happen if we imported cheap maize? What would we do with the people who have this amount of money taken away from or even if £500,000 were taken away from them? Sir, there is no difference in sugar, butter, wheat, any of the bread and butter produce that we produce. What I would like to ask him, Sir, is to think before he speaks on this subject again and turn it over in his mind, and he will have the opportunity to read HANSARD and come back at me under my own Estimates. What would he do with the hundreds of thousands of farmers who would be going around unemployed if we did what he asked us to do?

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I feel rather like the understudy coming in just after the—

Hon. Members: (Interjection.)

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Thank you for all these suggestions! What I was going to

[The Chief Secretary]

I say was that I feel like the understudy coming in just as the curtain is going upon the first night, not having been here in Legislative Council this last week. However, I was able to read HANSARD and I must say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I was very pleased to discover that other people's speeches read just as badly in an uncorrected HANSARD as mine do!

First of all I would also like to add my compliments to the Minister for Finance, not only for the Budget which he presented before this House and which has obviously been met with great praise, but also for the way in which it was delivered. I feel that he gave it to us with great clarity and we could follow his arguments all the way through. I would also like to thank those people who are the devoted persons in the Treasury upon whom a great deal of the work must fall from year to year, particularly in preparing the Financial Statement which has already been praised in this House.

Now, Sir, I am taking one or two points on which I would like to speak this evening. The first I put down was the subject of questions which have been raised by my hon. friend the Member for Nairobi West, and rather like a Montague I was going to say "Do you suck your thumb at me, Sir?" and expecting to get the reply "No, Sir, but I suck my thumb." And I was somewhat taken aback by the fact that he almost immediately on rising to his feet today apologized most handsomely for having criticized the fact that Government has not recently been answering questions. However, as I have brought the information here I thought perhaps he would like to know that there are ten questions now outstanding—not answered by the Government—one of which I admit to the hon. Member is fairly old and asked by him in November of last year, but I think he understands the reason why it has not been possible to answer that question, the others are all fairly recent and I hope, Sir, that we will be able to give him and other Members of the House our answers as quickly as we possibly can.

Now I want to mention the subject of elections. The hon. Member for Nairobi Area did mention this in his speech. Our present programme, that is the working party which has been set up by the Governor consisting of the Attorney-General and myself is to hear as many of the political groups as we can and indeed we have heard now the views of all the political groups and we have also studied a number of very useful memoranda which have been received, but some of the groups still have not put forward their final views, particularly on the delimitation of constituencies and I would say that we do wish to get on with the submission of our report as quickly as possible as, indeed, this was the point which the hon. Member for Nairobi Area was making, and I would ask that political groups should submit to us, and indeed any other members of the public who wish to, their views and anything else that they wish to say to us as quickly as possible. Also I hope that after we have been able to submit our report within the next week or two, that the Attorney-General will be able to start drafting the necessary legislation which probably will be made in an Order in Council. The object of that is in order that we should be able to deal with the initial registration as soon as we possibly can. At the moment we are aiming at August as the first day of registration and thereafter, depending entirely on how quickly registration can be done and you have got to remember that we may have to register as many as 2,000,000 people, that we would aim at somewhere towards the end of the year or the beginning of next year for nomination day and thereafter the holding of elections. All of this, of course, is dependent on the speed that we can muster in this matter and also depends to a large extent on the close co-operation of all the Government officers in the field.

Now, Sir, I want to turn to matters concerning the Civil Service. Before I deal with what I conceive to be the main difficulty confronting the Civil Service at the moment, I want to get out of the way two points, one which was raised by the Member for Nairobi Area on the elimination of waste. He quoted an extract from the Minister for Finance's speech when he said we must continue to eliminate waste and put economic necessities before all else and the Member then went on to ask whether the Government itself was following the Minister's words in practical terms and he referred to provision for administrative officers and policemen and said that there were too many assistants to assistants and deputies to deputies in the field. Well, Sir, close administration is accepted Government policy and the size of the establishments of the provincial administration such as the police is dictated by this policy and as far as I am concerned there is not intention of altering this policy, in fact in present circumstances it would seem to me to be fatal to do so. I therefore see no justification for reducing establishments and going in for retrenchment in either of these services, or particularly in any of the field services, which after all are mainly responsible for uplifting the general standard of living of the people of this country and on whom so much depends. On the question of control of staff, I would remind him that we have since 1956 introduced a staff adviser whose main job is to look at the whole question of complements in all ministries and departments and I quite recently in consultation with my other colleagues in the Government formed a committee. Their main duty is to keep under constant review the administrative machinery of the Government, and this committee meets regularly and reports regularly to me.

Now the hon. Member for Mombasa Area raised the question of the Civil Service Commission. He said the Commission has not done the good work it was expected to do as it had failed to Africanize the Civil Service. In saying this in my view, he clearly misunderstood the purpose of the Civil Service Commission, which is to appoint the best and most suitable candidates from local sources to fill vacancies in the Civil Service when they occur and it is for them to choose the right man for the job regardless of race.

In regard to the composition of the Civil Service Commission there is an African member who is on an equal footing with other members of the Commission. Also the hon. Member raised the question of Makerere graduates and the difficulty they find in getting employment through the Civil Service Commission. The practice is, in Kenya, different from Tanganyika and Uganda. In the other East African services such appointments are dealt with by the Public Service Commission, but here candidates for such posts appear before the Secretary of State's Appointment Board in Kenya, which recommends successful candidates to the Colonial Office for appointment at the level of professional and administrative officers recruited from the United Kingdom. The Civil Service Commission, therefore advertises very few posts for which academic qualifications at degree level are required. Exceptions to this are the post of education officers engaged in administration—but these are not many and most African graduates are employed as teachers in secondary schools. They are not therefore civil servants as they are members of the African teaching service.

With regard to those posts which fall within the option of the Civil Service Commission, and for which students from Makerere are eligible to apply, no difficulty is found in placing them in Civil Service, and students with agricultural and veterinary diplomas are regularly found employment. In order to help Makerere students who wish to join the Government service arrangements are made towards the end of each year for such students to be interviewed in Nairobi by senior officers from Ministries and departments. If such students successfully complete their degree course, and if they are suitable in all other ways they will, though not necessarily through the Civil Service Commission, be employed in the Government service, and I hope that answers the point which he made.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Nairobi West, and, indeed, a large number of Members of the House referred to the present position of the Civil Service in Kenya. I think we have to divide the Civil Service in Kenya into two. First of all the Overseas Civil Service, and those people who are recruited locally. Incidentally, I want to repeat here what I have said before in this House, and that is that there is a standing rule with the Civil Service Commission that they must on no account try to employ anybody from overseas until they have failed to get a suitable candidate locally. The main difficulties which are besetting the Overseas Civil Service at the moment are those which are besetting a number of people in this country for approximately the same reasons. It is a question of insecurity. If you are a person with a young family, you look to the future, and you must look forward to the time when you have ever-increasing education bills for that family, and you wonder what is going to happen to you. I am going to deal with the Overseas Civil Service first, as it was touched upon to a very large extent, by the Member for Nairobi West this afternoon.

I think that the Overseas Civil Service at the present time do need some guarantees in the way in which the hon. Member mentioned this afternoon. I say this specifically because I believe this country, in common with farmers, in common with the industrial people, in common with the people in all walks of life, is going to require a Civil Service of high standard, and high morals, for a very long time to come. I say so advisedly, not only because I believe it, but also we know that in those countries which have reached rapid independence, and who have broken up their Civil Service and scattered it to the four ends of the world, they have bitterly regretted it and, indeed, in most cases they have very often had to take back those people whom they previously employed at higher salaries than they paid before. Now, Sir, I myself regard that sort of thing happening in Kenya as nothing less than a disaster. I am proud, as I have said in this House before now, to be a Member of the Kenya Civil Service, and I have always believed that the Kenya Civil Service, despite what has been said about it, not only inside this House, but outside it, is a good service. It has all the best traditions in it. And, if I may say so, I think it is because in this country we have had a virile population who have been prepared to criticize that service as often as they felt inclined to, and the service has felt because of that criticism it must live up to these standards and have endeavoured to do so.

Now, Sir, they have reached the cross-roads, and, indeed, a number of other people have met the same cross-roads in other parts of the world. But I feel very strongly, and what I say now is not to be regarded as Government policy, because in such matters the hon. Member will realize and, indeed, he himself said it, that Her Majesty's Government will naturally have to take a part if such guarantees are to be given. I feel very strongly that it is in the best interests of this country that this machine, and it is a machine, which has been built up so laboriously and with such effort over the years should be kept in being, and should not be smashed as other machines have been smashed and scattered to the four ends of the earth. Therefore, as the hon. Member has said, certain guarantees will have to be given.

One of the first of the guarantees is that I think that African leaders and politicians will have to say quite unequivocally that they realize that this machine is necessary to them if they are going to run the country properly in the future. Other guarantees are such as those which the hon. Member has mentioned, and I would agree with him that we should do our best to try and obtain something which will give these people a future and something for which they can work, irrespective of the political changes which are going to take place in this country.

Now, Sir, that is one part of the service. The other part of the service are the local people, and as I have already said, it has been our avowed aim to try and get as many local people into the service as we can, and have done for quite a long time. We have felt, for some time now, that Civil Service matters have been raised in this House so often that we felt that it was necessary for us to try and set up a working party, or a study group who could look at all the problems that we have at the present time, both as regards localization and as regards other matters affecting the Civil Service. With that end in view we set up quite recently a study group with the following terms of reference: "In addition to terms and conditions of service of local members of the service, the group shall consider policy and progress in regard to localization with particular reference to training, training programmes and also the position of expatriate service, and the question of reorientation of educational policies, with a view to meeting the requirements presented by a determined effort to localize the Civil Service." This study group is composed of representatives of the Elected Members' Organization, of the Central Whitley Council, the Director of Establishments, the Deputy Permanent Secretary to the Treasury, and the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission has been appointed chairman of the group. Since we agreed on that establishment we have also agreed to appoint a member of the Joint Industrial Council, which has quite recently been set up. The origin of this group, as I said, does go back a little way, because we ourselves felt that Civil Service matters were being heard too frequently in the House, partly, I suppose, because there were legitimate grievances which had to be aired, but also because we felt that other members of the public did not fully understand our aims and our objects. I have great hopes of this study group, and as everyone knows it was hastened on by the results of the Lancaster House agreement, and what happened in London during the Conference. I want to point out that this study group is entirely advisory. It will be advisory to me and will report to me, but I sincerely hope that by putting on it as many people as possible with varied and wide experience as well as varied and wide viewpoints, that we may be able, through this study group, to do something which is really positive for the future of the Civil Service in Kenya, and by that I really mean the Civil Service in Kenya.

Arising out of what the study group will have to do, of course, is the whole question of training, and I admit as freely as anyone that the lack of training in many respects has been a bar to people getting on in the service, particularly those who are recruited locally. We have had, for a long time now, departmental training schemes, all of which have brought on local people with some success, but I feel that now the time has come when we should produce an overall training scheme whereby we can give to our people in Kenya the best possible chance they can of getting into the Civil Service.

The hon. Member for North Nyanza today talked about giving young children bursaries to go overseas in order to get education, in order to come back to join the Civil Service. I hope he realizes that the Government must depend not only on the young entrants, but also people of mature experience, who will give of their best to the Government.

Sir, turning now to one point which I think has been fully covered in this debate by many speakers, that was the question of the intimidation of labour.

Hickory, dickory, dock.

The mouse ran up the clock.

The clock struck, and the mouse came out in sympathy.

[The Chief Secretary]

Far too often these days in labour relations we find that people for their own particular ends, or their own particular uses bring people out on strike who have no idea whatsoever about what they are striking, and having examined the situation for myself in the Thika and Ruiru areas recently, it appeared to me that many of the labour were being wantonly led astray. I am glad to be able to say today that I believe now, at this present time, there is only one strike left on an estate, and I hope that this will mean that the employers and representatives of the trade unions will now be able to get together and sort out a lot of their difficulties.

But one of the grave difficulties, I think, has been this whole question of intimidation, and it is a matter which must give us all a great deal of concern. So much so, for myself, in respect of this particular area, I have asked the Minister for Defence to mount a very special exercise to find out who are the intimidators and why they are intimidating labour, and indeed if we can find out, as I hope we will, we will not stop from giving them their just dues. But it is important, and it is important in connexion with a number of matters which are going on at the present time.

That brings me really to the speech of the hon. Member for Central Nyanza. He talked about the speech which my colleague, the Minister for Defence made in this House during last week and severely criticized it. I would like to say that having read that speech I consider that it was a bold and honest statement of the position as seen through a Minister of the Government's eyes. Too often, on this side of the House we are criticized for trying to cover up, for not giving the public the facts and not, in fact, saying what the actual position is. I would not minimize one word which the hon. Minister said on that occasion.

The hon. Member for Central Nyanza said that this question of the revival of Mau Mau defeats him. Indeed, it would defeat anyone with such a shut mind as he has got. He asked why thugs and thieves were different, and why Mau Mau is different from thugs and thieves. I assume, Sir, he did not live in the Central Province during the raging and ravages of Mau Mau, and therefore he does not understand the difference between the methods of Mau Mau as it then was, and of thugs and thieves which he has described are in other places in the world. He also talked about these being made-up stories. The Lord preserve us, Mr. Deputy Speaker, from giving from this side of the House the made-up stories of matters which are of such vital importance to this country. I sincerely hope that no one on the other side, least of all the hon. Member, thinks that we are going to make up stories about a security situation, and indeed, Sir, speaking for my own part I resent that statement very much indeed. He said that Ministers required rehabilitation from Mau Mau. I think what Ministers require is rehabilitation from having to listen to the sort of nonsense we had to listen to this afternoon. Then he went on to say that he had got a copy of His Excellency's statement which was published in today's paper, and he said he "will not deal with it". Well, why will he not deal with it? Is it because he shies away from a statement which was of extreme clarity, perfect honesty and simple expression? Something which, in fact, was not, as His Excellency said, a challenge to the African people, but a really strong feeling of his own people, of what the real issues were, and the sort of issues which everyone, whether he be of European origin, of Asian origin, of Arab origin or African origin has got to face up to in Kenya now and in the future. If we do not face these issues, we are going to get nowhere. The hon. Member said "what type of life do you think we are living? Are we going to live a life of savagery. Let us do that."

That, Sir, seems to me the complete epitomy of base. Here is a person who is a leader who says that we would rather live a life of savagery than in fact face up to the things which we must in fact face up to in Kenya at the present time. In a rather joking way he referred earlier to a statement which had been made by the Minister for Finance as being nothing more or less than a piece of propaganda. It seems to me that the statement he made this afternoon was nothing more or less than a piece of propaganda. He quoted from the speech—he quoted out of context—which is a bad thing to do. I would like to quote from the speech also out of context, but there are one or two things here which I think we ought to remember. His Excellency amongst other things said:—"He referred to the African struggle between light and darkness, life and death." He also said "there had been those who had not scrupled to use it (violence) for their own purposes and requirements. Men have been murdered for their political beliefs. Those who opposed the Government, except by constitutional and parliamentary means will be obstructing their own people and holding back their independence." I wonder if he has pondered on that one? "And also for all the damage of selfish subject." "And also for all the damage of selfish and idle words, the goodwill is there too in great and measure to help us all along the road." Is that not really, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the issue which is in front of us now. We need goodwill. We need goodwill on all sides. His Excellency has put it as clearly as I believe any man could have put it, that you can choose between light and darkness. You can choose between goodwill on one side, or intimidation and fear on the other. This is not a challenge, and it seems to me that you have got the choice between the easy destructive road where there is no responsibility or a constructive road which will do something for this country in the future.

I beg to support.

ADJOURNMENT MOTION—NOTICE OF WOMAN DETAINED ILLEGALLY AT MATHARI

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): If no other hon. Member wishes to speak, perhaps it would be the wish of the Council, that I should adjourn now in order to give the Minister for Finance a clear run tomorrow. Before I do adjourn the Council, I must inform hon. Members that, in accordance with Standing Order 10, Mr. Slade has asked whether he can raise the matter of Question No. 73 (which he asked this afternoon) and the written answer which he got to it, on an adjournment debate. In accordance with that Standing Order I have allotted Thursday, 12th May, as the day for the adjournment debate and I thought I would give hon. Members notice that the sitting of this Council will go on longer on that day, so that they could make personal arrangements to attend.

ADJOURNMENT

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR
(Resumption of debate interrupted on 10th May, 1960.)

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I should like to begin my reply by thanking all those hon. Members who have had such nice things to say about the presentation of the Speech. I was also happy to note that with, I think, about one or possibly two exceptions, all Members have felt able to support the proposals in general, even if they felt it necessary to criticize on points of detail. I particularly appreciated the hon. Member for Kiambu's reference to "roast beef, two veg. and Yorkshire pudding". In my humble opinion that is the sort of thing that our Budgets should normally be made of, good solid fare without too many fancy accompaniments. It may be that that is rather unexciting; but there again, however, I do not think that Budget time should too often be an occasion for great excitements. It should rather be an occasion for a sober assessment of our day-to-day needs during the year ahead and of our prospects of financing those needs. This is only likely to lead to exciting fare, either if we are going broke or if we have found some way to get rich quick. I hardly think that any of us would welcome the former kind of excitement. As regards the latter, I have little faith in financial wizardry or in magic wands.

This leads me, Sir to the Member for North Nyanza's point about having a deficit Budget. I said in my Speech, Sir, and I repeat it now, that little countries like Kenya cannot afford such luxuries. It would be easy enough to budget for a deficit, but this has not been our practice even at the

The danger is that it is too easy to acquire the habit: a little this year, and more services; a little next year, and still more services, and so on, until the creditors foreclose, and then there is retrenchment all round, tribulation and disillusion, and you find yourself far behind the solid plodding sort of chap who has been content to go along quietly paying his way. A deficit on the Budget, Sir, could only be financed by the use of reserves or by borrowing. Our Development Programme will absorb all the money we can borrow, and in any case the burden of surviving the additional debt that will result from carrying through our Development Programme will constitute an increasingly heavy charge on the recurrent Budget. We no longer have any reserves. These were used up in the Emergency, and the balance in the Colony's Exchequer at 30th June, 1960, will be less than two week's revenue. This, Sir, is a very small reserve to hold against the excess of expenditure over revenue which is normal during the early months of the year and to meet possible shortfalls in revenue or other unforeseen contingencies which may arise during the year. A further point, Sir, is that we are financing from our Development Budget services which we should really be financing from the recurrent Budget, and as is shown in the table on page 57 of the Development Programme Sessional Paper we shall, in the last year of the next Development period, that is in 1962/63, still be carrying on the Development Budget recurrent expenditure amounting to some £1,500,000. We have, however, been able to find an additional amount of over £530,000 for education next year. That compares with an increase of a little less than £250,000 between the approved Estimates for 1958/59 and the approved Estimates for 1959/60. The importance of further advance in the educational field is fully realized by the Government, but it must be related to an expansion in the economy and in our ability to meet the additional costs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, a short time ago I mentioned foreclosure, and that leads me to the Member for Trans Nzoia's request for an assurance that Her Majesty's Government would underwrite our loan charges. With one or two exceptions of a special nature this has never been done in respect of any Colonial loans. Her Majesty's Government believes that the credit should be that of the Colony. They help in other ways by grants and Exchequer loans; they do not think that any Colony or ex-Colony is going to be silly enough to default.

So far this view has been justified. As I said in my speech, no one owes us a living. A bankrupt country leads to bankrupt individuals. So far the world has treated Kenya well, putting in a very great deal of capital. So long as we meet our obligations that will go on. If we do not it will equally surely stop, and with it all development. For that reason, I think the charges will be met in the future as in the past. Budgets, Sir, are not concerned with expenditure as such, but with the financing of expenditure. We shall in the days ahead be dealing in some detail with the expenditure proposals for 1960/61. There have, however, quite rightly been reference during this debate to the general level of expenditure, which the Budget proposals are intended to finance. There have been one or two suggestions that some services might be expanded, or that matters should be taken in other ways to increase the calls on the taxpayer for individual services. For example, one hon. Member suggested that we might spend more on the National Parks. Another suggested that we might lower the fees for education, which from the taxpayers' point of view leads to exactly the same result as an expansion of the service. Yet another suggested that as a possible alternative to the present arrangement for the Kenya Regiment we should have compulsory military service for all. I do not propose to deal in this reply with individual Heads of expenditure. This has already been done to the extent necessary by my colleagues on this side of the House, and we are, of course, also going to have ample opportunities to discuss expenditure during the coming weeks.

I would like, however, to confirm what my hon. friend, the Minister for Defence, has had to say about military service for all races. This is truly a very big question, and I can only believe that the financial implications would well produce a wince, not only in me, but in all the taxpayers of the Colony. I do not think that I would be in any way prejudging the issue if I were to suggest that compulsory military training for all, for all the citizens of the Colony, would involve either severe cuts in services, or severe increases in expenditure. The Kenya Regiment was, of course, brought into the debate as a possible subject for economies, and most of the references to expenditure embodied suggestions that expenditure in certain directions was high and ought to be reduced. Unfortunately, as so often happens on these occasions, there was little agreement among hon. Members as to where economies could best be made. My colleagues have already pointed to the somewhat impracticable nature of most of the suggestions if Government policy is to be carried out, and if we are to maintain the basic standards of law and order without which we might just as well forget about economic progress or social welfare.

[The Minister for Finance and Development]

My hon. friend, the Secretary to the Treasury, dealt in his speech with the suggestion that there was a good deal of over-staffing in departments, and that we had too many people at work in the field. I can do little more than endorse what he said. The Treasury goes into these questions of increased staff extremely carefully, and so indeed do departments, who never seem to have enough money to do all the things they would like to do, and have therefore always to jettison everything that is not really necessary, and a good deal that would be desirable with it. There is, of course, always scope for further probing, and that is why we have our Organization and Methods Unit, our staff adviser, our Controller and Auditor-General, and our departmental internal audits. We have also the assistance of the Public Accounts Committee, of whose work nobody is more appreciative than I, and there is a continuous pressure from this House as a whole, though unfortunately it is on occasions offset by the request for expenditure on policies which would far outweigh any savings we are likely to achieve through our continuous attention to the candle ends.

I welcome, however, the support of this House, and in particular the Public Accounts Committee for pressing for economies in expenditure, but it would be disingenuous of me not to say that administrative economies, important as they are, are never likely to be more than marginal.

I come now to the reference that was made to discussions in the House of Commons on the parliamentary control of expenditure. I have been able, Sir, to trace the debate which took place on 16th March, 1960, on an amendment to the Consolidated Fund Bill, which suggested that the House, before consenting to the Second Reading of this Bill, desired to be satisfied that no improvements can be made in the machinery for the control and limitation of expenditure as well by the supervision of the Treasury as by the informed and effective exercise of the authority of this House. The debate is reported in columns 1315 to 1375 of the United Kingdom Hansard of 16th March. I found it fascinating reading, and I can well recommend it to all Members of this House who are interested in that kind of thing.

It would not be appropriate, Sir, for me to attempt to summarize the arguments which were made in the debate which tended, on the whole, to cut across party lines. It is sufficient for me to say that in his reply the Home Secretary and Leader of the House dealt first with Treasury control and pointed out that been appointed under Lord Plouden to enquire into methods of Treasury control and that this committee would report in the not to distant future. As regards what he called the "main question" the informed and effective exercise of the authority of the House of Commons, the Home Secretary reviewed the various suggestions which had been made and said that he thought that there should be discussions between the Government and the Opposition on three matters. First, and I quote: "Whether the House of Commons can have an opportunity, as a whole, of considering supply at an earlier period of the year. Secondly, whether any alternative methods can be found for supplementary estimates for consideration of supply under the general allotted scheme for an increased allotted scheme. Third, whether a more detailed examination could be made, preferably not by spilling the work of the Committee of Public Accounts, but either by considering the work of the committee on Estimates, and having it either larger, or having it given some delegated powers, or by an alternative Standing Committee on expenditure." Mr. Butler went on to point out that the House of Commons really preferred discussing policy and politics, but that if there were to be more detailed examination in a committee, there must be some method of giving a greater opportunity for discussion when reports were received. As he put it: "Then we should have a detailed consideration, and a grand jury of the Commons would examine them in detail."

I think, Sir, it is no less true here than in the House of Commons that most Members prefer discussing policy and politics to "roast beef, Yorkshire pudding and two veg.". As, however, the Secretary to the Treasury pointed out in his speech, we do, in fact, already devote more of our time to the detailed consideration of Estimates than does the House of Commons. Nevertheless, regarding, as I do hon. Members as my natural allies in the struggle for economy, I am always ready to examine anything which appears likely to make my allies more effective. I suggest, therefore, that we might take careful note of whatever comes out of the proposed discussions in the United Kingdom, and that if it looks as though they could be profitably adapted here, we should consider doing so. I also suggest that as a measure of self-help we might invite our own Estimates Committee to have a look at its procedure and see to what extent it could make itself more effective, either with or without enlargement in its terms of reference. I would, however, like to make two warnings here. The first is that like Mr. Butler, I think it would be unfortunate if we were to do anything that would detract

[The Minister for Finance and Development]

Auditor-General of the Public Accounts Committee. The second is that we should do nothing which would interfere with the direct responsibility of Ministers for the proper conduct of their departments. In short, let us criticize and let us point out where the machinery needs a drop of oil, but do not let us do anything which would merely amount to "throwing sand in the wheels". Nor—and this is important—let us end up with more staff and no greater degree of effectiveness.

Before leaving expenditure, Sir, there are one or two points which were made, with which I should also like to deal. The first is the suggestion that we might look at the whole system of travelling allowances, and see to what extent we are still justified in allowing people to draw mileage rates based on the cost of running large motor-cars when small ones are effective over so many of our roads. I can assure my hon. friend who raised this matter that expenditure on travelling expenses is continuously being examined and re-examined, both by the Treasury, the Establishments Division, in consultation also with the staff associations. I think, however, that his point was a very fair one, both as regards small cars, and as regards public transport, and I will certainly arrange for a further special re-examination of this aspect to be made.

While on the subject of transport and travelling, Sir, let me also say to the hon. Member for Nairobi West that the effect of the introduction of the new air fares and classes as from 1st October, 1960, is, and has been for some time, been given very careful consideration by the Government. It is, of course, also a point which will have to be taken into account in any future review of terms and conditions of service.

My hon. friend, Commander Goord, also mentioned Civil Service pay, and, in particular, he suggested that a system of marriage allowances might be introduced. This again is a subject which has been looked at from time to time. I am, however, advised that a system of pay based on the employee's marital status is not generally regarded as being in accordance with the best labour standards and practices. I would also suggest that the tendency for people to marry early is quite sufficiently marked without giving people financial incentives to do so. That is not, of course, to say that nothing is being done, or should be done for the married man at the present time, as everyone is aware there are income tax reductions and allowances which help a little. My own personal view is that we would not be very wise to go beyond that.

On Civil Service pay generally, Sir, I gather that there has been a misunderstanding what I said in my speech. Let me make it clear. I said that "in future it would be necessary to hold the majority of votes approximately to their present levels, and to cover the need for additional provisions, for increments and other adjustments by administrative economy". This applies to levels of pay as much as to anything else. I did not, however, say that there would be a complete ban on all adjustments. I said, and here I quote: "The Government has always recognized that selective salary adjustments may be needed to assist recruitment or to retain the services of experienced staff. This still holds good." In fact, Sir, I understand that discussions are at present taking place within the Central Whitley Council as to how best to give effect to this policy wherever adjustments may be necessary. I also went further than that, however, and I said, and here again I quote: "It is also probable that we may have to look in a more general way at the relationship between the remuneration of our civil servants and that of comparable employees in the field of recruitment. In my view this sort of more general review, which is really a matter of selecting comparative facts and assessing them, could well form the subject of a series of special studies in which both the staff side and the official side could co-operate. Alternatively, an overall review could be undertaken by an impartial outside assessor."

In this connexion, Sir, hon. Members will have seen the report of the statement by the Governor of Uganda that the Secretary of State is taking urgent action to appoint a Salary Commission in the Protectorate and to get it into operation as soon as possible. It now seems probable that all the East African territories and their administrations will be invited to participate. Holding the views expressed in my speech, the Kenya Government have given very serious consideration as to whether, if invited, it should participate. We decided that provided the terms of reference were not wholly inconsistent with our views, Kenya would be better in than out. Otherwise, we might find ourselves faced with a pattern in the shaping of which we had no hand. We have not yet received a formal invitation to participate, nor have we seen any suggested terms of reference, though we, ourselves, believe that they should be limited to what is needed to recruit and retain the staff we need, and that they should take into account, and indeed must take into account, the ability of the country to pay. The House will, of course, be informed of developments. I should add that as I said before, in view of the Government, any general upward movement of salaries would appear to be unjustified, and it would have the most serious economic and financial consequences.

[The Minister for Finance and Development]

One final point, Sir, on the Civil Service. One hon. Member said that we were employing people who should be retired. I am sure that all of us on this side would be grateful to the hon. Member if he would draw our attention to concrete instances of this.

I now turn, Sir, to another subject, regarding which many Members have shown a very proper concern. That was the subject of unemployment, or, as I prefer to call it, the problem of employment. Most of the points made here in debate have already been covered by my hon. friends, the Ministers for Tourism and Labour, and the Permanent Secretary to the Treasury. I was interested in the suggestions made by the noble lord, the Corporate Member for Agriculture, that we should approach the problem on an inter-territorial basis. I can assure him that his words will not be lost on this side of the House. We have indeed already machinery in being for inter-territorial discussions, and co-operation on economic matters, and the benefit to the common market will be one of the main objects of study for the Economic and Fiscal Commission which has been set up. There are two other points connected with employment to which I must refer. The first is that one hon. Member said that we should do more to bring Africans into the economy. I can assure the hon. gentleman that this is one of the basic aims of the Government's policy. I can also illustrate the success of this Policy by referring him to my speech where I pointed to the increase of £1,500,000 or 20 per cent in the cash income of our peasant farmers between 1958 and 1959. This, Sir, is not propaganda. It is a plain statement of fact. Until relatively recently, of course, most people in this part of Africa had little desire to be brought into the cash economy of the country, nor indeed was there any cash economy for them to be brought into until a very few decades ago. The movement is, however, now well under way, and I am sure we all regard it as vital to the future progress of Kenya. Incidentally, I hope this answers the points raised yesterday by the two hon. Members for Nyanza. I did not refer specifically to Africans in my speech. This was not, as they suggested, because I and the other members of the Government are not interested in the welfare and progress of our African member citizens.

It was first because I thought it unnecessary in this day and age to refer to Africans in some special way as if they were some rather strange class of being for whom differentiating treatment was needed because they were unlike other men. It was also, Sir, because I thought it was plain for all to see that the most important theme running through all our efforts was that we should bring our African fellow citizens along. In case anyone doubts that, let me once more emphasize that that is another plain unvarnished statement of fact. The other point, Sir, was the suggestion that the £2,000,000 about which we have been negotiating with the International Bank should be used to open up new land and for such purposes as irrigation. I must tell the hon. Member who raised this matter that there can be no question of using this money for any other purpose than that set out in the agreement with the Bank which will be for re-lending to farmers in the areas of high potential and for making roads in those same areas. I can assure the hon. Member too that having taken the best possible advice that is available to us that this is the most effective way of increasing the total wealth of the country and thus providing more opportunities for employment and a better life all round. We are, I think, Sir, all aware that the only way to solve the employment problem in the foreseeable future is to push ahead as quickly as possible with public and private development. This leads me straight away to the question of confidence. The Secretary to the Treasury has already referred to some of the reasons for maintaining confidence and some of the indications that major investors are not afraid of bringing more money into the Colony. There is no need for me to pursue this at the present stage, beyond noting some of the investments, such as that of the Aluminium Factory, are very substantial. Above all, there is, of course, also the really major investment of the Shell Company in the oil refinery.

Dealing with the other aspects of confidence, I am glad to learn that the hon. Member for Rift Valley did not claim that he knew that £900,000 a week was leaving the country and what he actually said was that he "had heard" that it was so. I am sure that the hon. Member is as aware as I am of the danger of quoting exact figures in matters of this kind. I am, however, glad to see that we are at one on the main issue which is to restore confidence and to ensure that there is in fact no further flight of capital. That is, of course, the aim of the Government in all its policies and I am sure that we would prefer to be judged by our works.

One hon. Member—I think it was the Member for Kiambu—suggested that instead of merely reporting to the Council if anything went seriously wrong, I should make frequent reports to this House on the question of capital movement. He will, I am sure, be glad to know that I am consulting with the appropriate authorities in the banking world and elsewhere to see to what extent I can comply with this request. I fully agree that the House should be given every information on this subject which can be made available without disclosing confidential matters and provided we have a reasonable degree of confidence in its accuracy. That is what I hope to be able to do in the light of my present consultations.

Before turning, Sir, to a matter more strictly related to the Budget, there are one or two economic questions raised by the hon. Member for Nairobi West to which I would like to refer. The first concerns the move of the Currency Board to East Africa. While thanking the hon. Member for his very generous references to my own small efforts, I must point out that this was a co-operative effort for which credit must be given to all the Governments involved. As regards the point he made in respect of future developments, leading up as they no doubt will in due course to the creation of our own central bank on, I hope, an East African basis, let me simply say that I agree that these are important points to which I am sure attention will be given, both by the Board itself and by the Government. I do not think the hon. gentleman will disagree with me if I also suggest that in view of the importance of sound foundations in these things this may well be a case in which haste should be made slowly.

On the economic survey, Sir, the hon. Member asked me what were the reasons for the increase to £215,000,000 this year as against £179,000,000 last year in the national income, in the figures mentioned in the speech. The answer, Sir, to this and to the other points raised about this document is given in the East African Statistical Department's publication—Domestic Income and Product in Kenya—which was issued last year. I think copies were distributed to all hon. Members, but extra copies are available for them from the Government Printer at a cost of Sh. 8. Briefly, the Estimates have now been recalculated on a new and better basis and the figure for 1958 comparable to the 1959 figure of £205,000,000 is £206,910,000. As regards invisible exports, I noted the hon. Member's point about the importance of Nairobi and Mombasa which is, I think, of considerable validity.

Turning now, Sir, to more strictly financial matters, one hon. Member suggested that the assistance being given by Her Majesty's Government towards the cost of the armed forces should be used either to build up an increased surplus which would help us if we ran into difficulties in the future or to help with development. To deal with the second point first, it is precisely for the development of our services that we have used this money. Without it, there could have been very little in the way of increased social or other services during the coming year. As regards the other point, the building up of a surplus, I said before that I do not believe in budgeting for large surpluses, since that would, as I see it, merely impose an extra and unnecessary burden on our taxpayers. There is, of course, also the fact of which the House can be quite sure that Her Majesty's Government would not have given us this assistance merely for the purpose of building up a surplus.

I said in the speech that none of this means that if we follow the dictates of self-financial administration we shall not have fortuitous surpluses thrown up at the end of some years. I would propose to use those first as working capital, second to meet unforeseen contingencies during the year and third to assist in our development position.

A number of hon. Members referred to the omission in my speech of any references to direct taxation. Some Members advocated that we should do something to encourage the well-to-do and to keep their surplus funds in the Colony by reducing the higher rates of income tax. I quite see their point of view and I can assure the hon. Members concerned that nothing would please me better than to be able to reduce all kinds of taxes. I am sure, however, that they will not be surprised if I say that I did not find this possible during the current year and that I would have been surprised if with the ever growing demand for services of one kind or another and particularly the need to take over the remnants of Emergency expenditure this had been possible. It is for this reason too that I was unable to contemplate this year any further reduction in Personal Tax. I can assure the hon. Members who showed interest in this point that the matter was not overlooked. I examined the possibilities most carefully and even produced one or two bright ideas of my own with which, since they have proved to be impracticable, I will not detain the House. The fact is, of course, that the Personal Tax, particularly at the lower levels, is not a very economic tax to collect and for that reason alone I will be glad to find myself in a position where I could dispense with it. Unfortunately, I could find no satisfactory alternative method of raising something of the order of £1,000,000 during the coming year. I can give every assurance that the matter will not be overlooked, but here again it would be disingenuous of me to suggest that I can at present foresee the timing.

Of course, hon. Members will realize that under section 18 of the Personal Tax Ordinance by district commissioner or a person authorized by him may remit the tax and any penalty on the grounds of poverty or any other good cause.

[The Minister for Finance and Development] There were three other points, Sir, made concerning direct taxation. The first was the suggestion that we should replace Personal Tax by fees for services rendered. I agree that the idea has its attractions. The hon. Member who raised it will, however, have noted that the imposition of fees or the increase of fees that already exist does not have a universal appeal in the House. There is, of course, also the important point that in many ways the tax is a fairer method of insuring that the burden is imposed where it can best be stood rather than as a system of fees. In this connection I should say in passing that in answer to a remark made by one of the Members opposite as I have just said section 18 authorizes rebates in proper cases and poverty is one of the instances in which this can be done. The second point on direct taxation was the reference to our old friend, the owner-occupier, by my hon. friend, the Member for Nairobi West. On this I am advised that it is incorrect to say that an owner-occupier is discriminated against for tax purposes as compared with, say, investors in insurance policies or treasury bonds. An owner-occupier who saves up to purchase his house by the usual medium of a building society mortgage is entitled to deduct the interest element of his instalment from his chargeable income.

Finally, Sir, on direct taxation, I was asked to express an opinion on whether the flow of death duty money which had not really started before the end of last year but which it was believed might have been coming forward now but for the events of January and February has in fact dried up. All I can say is that that is a very hypothetical question to which I do not propose to reply. In view, however, of what I said about the probable attitude of any conceivable future Government in this country towards outside investment, I can see no reason why if such money is in fact available it should not be profitably invested here today.

As was to be expected, Sir, a considerable number of points were made regarding indirect taxation, both for revenue and for protective purposes. The Secretary to the Treasury has already dealt with those who would have preferred us to go on with the old favourites. The short answer is that the object of taxation is to increase the revenue and that we are very doubtful whether an additional impost on either liquor or tobacco would have achieved that object at this stage. The criticism has also been made that my net has been too widely cast and that my measures will hit too many people. It cannot be said often enough that if an indirect tax is to be effective it must be very broadly based. Luxuries can, it is true, often be taxed to a certain extent and they are so taxed but from my point of view the trouble with luxuries is that people can so easily do without them. I must therefore look to the necessities and conventional necessities, to those things which people are not prepared to do without.

Sir Charles Markham: Whisky!

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): The argument I have just been using applied to protective measures just as much as to anything else. If we are to build up local industries we must be able to protect them from the competition of long established manufacturers in other countries. It is for that reason that we protect such articles as footwear, leather and even tomato purée, not to mention enamel hollow-ware. It is also for that reason that we protect our producers of agricultural produce. We must go on doing these things if we wish to make our people more prosperous and to avoid unemployment. I can assure hon. Members who have raised these points that if the measures of protection to which I have referred were to be withdrawn, it would not be a case of the poor man getting more at cheaper prices. The poor man would find himself unemployed and would not be able to buy even the cheapest imported goods. Some of the hon. Members who supported protection as a general instrument of policy asked me if it was a continuous process and what facilities there were for reviewing measures already taken. I entirely agree that the process must be continuous and that there must be regular opportunities for review. This is, of course, the fact. The Customs tariff is the constant theme of study both by the Treasury and by other interested Ministries in Kenya, by the Customs Department of the High Commission and interterritorially. These matters are gone into very carefully before any action is taken. We also keep an eye on what has already been done to see if it is successful or if it needs modifying. I need hardly mention too that there are plenty of interested parties in the Colony who are only too ready to offer unsolicited advice if they think that a protective measure could be dispensed with.

To deal with some of the specific points which were raised, the hon. Member for Mombasa asked me to have another look at this suggestion that a protective duty should be placed on lime. I can assure the hon. Member that his suggestion was not forgotten and that the matter was thoroughly investigated during the course of last year. The proposal was however rejected as the local industries already enjoyed a considerable price advantage over the imported product and consequently enjoyed the bulk of the market already. I am indeed advised that throughout 1959 Kenya only imported about 41 tons of imported lime at a cost of Sh. 218 per ton. The local product only cost about Sh. 170 to Sh. 180 at the quarries and Sh. 188 in Nairobi. I am informed that Mombasa building lime was available in Nairobi at a higher price than this but naturally its main market is Mombasa where the cost is not inflated by freight rates. Imports into Uganda and Tanganyika were higher than those into Kenya. It is not clear why this should be so, but I am sure in the light of the figures I have given there must have been some good reason. If the hon. Member would, however, like me to do so, I shall be happy to look into the matter further and to let him know the result.

The hon. Member for Mombasa also spoke about the entry of subsidized cement into Mombasa. Here again I shall be glad to have the matter investigated and to let him know the result of the investigation and anything that can be done to improve the matter. Before leaving his points I should also like to thank the hon. Member for Mombasa for drawing my attention to the error on page 7 of the Financial Statement under the heading "Excise Duty: Wine". He is, of course, quite right. The imposition of the duty is not intended primarily to protect the Customs and Excise revenue derived from spirituous liquors. It is not even seriously regarded at this stage as a revenue measure at all, since it is most unlikely that in the immediate future any large quantities of local wine are going to be produced, whether sparkling or otherwise. The measure is, as I said, in my speech, primarily a tidying up one designed to close a possible loophole which although of no consequence at present could become important in the future.

One or two hon. Members, Sir, referred to the increased specific duty on footwear and on leather. I can assure them that these changes in the tariff were not designed nor even proposed primarily to assist Tanganyika. The chief protagonists for an increase in these specific duties have been we ourselves in Kenya. It so happens, however, that Tanganyika will benefit equally presumably because their conditions are rather similar to ours. I think it might help if I were to give some background information. The Indian tan stock market is unaffected by the world market as its low grade leather production is wholly absorbed internally. Kenya, however, imports hides and skins and world prices have a rapid effect on leather prices. Thus, in the first quarter of 1959 costs of leather increased by some 90 per cent. The result was that the existing duties were insufficient to protect the position and we were faced with two major dangers: first, that local tanners would be put out of business by cheap leather imported from India—and I would point out that £500,000 has been invested in local tanneries and their export business depends to a very large extent on their being able to sell their lower price products on the local market for the production of a cheaper grade of shoe; secondly, the local tanners would have put out of business the local cottage industries which have grown up while the import of cheap shoes would also have ruined the local shoemakers. As regards shoes, I am informed that in 1958 the total estimated Kenya production was 1,250,000 pairs. The Bata Company production was 750,000 pairs while the remainder was produced by small cobblers. The Sh. 5 duty matches the 22 per cent ad valorem duty at about Sh. 23 a pair. In 1958 85 per cent of Bata's production would have been effected by the duty at that rate and 70 per cent of the shoemaker's production. These figures show how important is the market for cheaper footwear to local producers. There is also no doubt that the imported product has been of extremely poor quality and that the protection to the local producers will also assist the indiscriminating consumer by insuring that it gets better value for money. Finally on footwear, one hon. Member suggested that we should reduce the duty on imported footwear and impose an excise on locally produced footwear. That would, of course, be justified if what we were interested in was raising revenue. It would, however, completely defeat our economic and social objects, namely to encourage local production and thus provide more employment for people in Kenya.

Sir Charles Markham: Is that taxed?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Before leaving the subject of protective duties I must deal with two points made by my hon. friend, Mr. Nur Mohamed. The made by my hon. friend is that I am advised answer to his first point is that I am advised that if the factories at Mombasa and in Uganda were to expand to their full capacity on a three-shift system, they could probably meet all of the East African demand for enamel hollow-ware. They are not doing so at present. This is because the Uganda factory had to close, its hollow-ware production last July as a protection we granted last year had come a little too late. I understand, however, that they have now begun production again, and are building up their output. The Kenya factory has, of course, been in production throughout the period. The degree of protection now afforded in all three territories hon. Members will no doubt be glad to know that Tanganyika, although without a factory of her own is co-operating in this matter to assist her neighbours. It should be possible for the two factories gradually to build up their production and to capture an increasing proportion of the total East African market.

[The Minister for Finance and Development]

My hon. friend's other question was whether Zanzibar was in the East African Customs Union. The answer there is "No". I am sure that they will be welcome if they wish to join. That is, however, a matter which is fairly within the competence of the Government of Zanzibar, who must be left to decide these matters in the light of their own interests.

One or two Members spoke about the increased licence fees for vehicles weighing up to 2,500 lb. tare weight, and said that this would have serious effects so far as the small man was concerned. I am afraid that those hon. Members cannot have listened to my speech as carefully as I had hoped. If they had listened, they would have heard that the maximum effect would be Sh. 1/50 a week. I cannot believe that this is an intolerable imposition on anyone who can afford to run a motor-car, nor can I believe that motor-cycle or even motor-scooter owners will suffer hardship if they have to find an extra 58 cents a week or 77 cents if they use side-cars.

Nearly all the speakers in the debate, Sir, have mentioned the proposed taxation on what the Customs tariff called "light amber mineral fuel oil for high-speed internal combustion engines". This is what I called diesel oil in the Budget Speech, and I am told that the common term is gas oil. I am also told that all references to the rate of duty should be taken as referring to 75 cents for an imperial gallon and at 62½ F. Before dealing, Sir, with the various criticisms of detail which have been made I would like to clear up two general points. The first is in answer to my hon. friend, Mr. Jones, that I am conscious of the dangers of regarding the petroleum industry as an easy and ever-present milk cow. While I have said one cannot reasonably avoid taxing goods because everyone uses them, I am aware of the importance of transport to the economy of this country and I shall certainly bear what he had to say in mind whenever these matters have to be considered. The other point concerns the remarks which have been made about the Railways. Hon. Members may rest assured that these measures were not inspired by the Railways Administration. Members may also wish to know what will be the effect of the proposals on the Railways. It is true that their competitive position will have been improved as compared with heavy and long-distance road hauliers, and that is unavoidable unless we are to tax the oil used in railway engines. However, such a measure would involve a review of the whole position of the Administration under the Customs tariff and it would also involve interterritorial consultation. It might moreover have serious effects on the maintenance of the differential tariff which is of such great importance to our major industries. I personally believe that the balance of advantage may well be against depriving the Railways of their privileged position in so far as fuel for their locomotives is concerned.

In passing I would point out that they are by law a non-profit-making institution. I agree that the hon. Member for Nairobi West raised some important and fundamental questions about future policy on transport matters. It would not be appropriate to go into this subject at length now, even if I were able to do so, or competent to do so—which I am not. They will, however, have to be looked at both now and in the future and I am sure that this will be done. All this, of course, does not apply to Railway-owned vehicles. The view of the Kenya Government is that where Railway vehicles use the public roads, they should pay tax in just the same way as any other road using vehicles. This is particularly so where they are in competition with private enterprise, but I think it holds good generally. Here again the matter is not one which can be settled unilaterally. It is, however, being dealt with as a matter of urgency and I am sure that since we are dealing with people who are both reasonable and able, we shall come to a satisfactory conclusion.

Now, Sir, the criticisms of the taxation of light diesel oil fall mainly into three groups. There are those who suggest that the whole idea of imposing duty on gas oil is wrong because it increases production costs and hits the poor man hardest.

To these I can only say that the Government has no more desire than anyone else to increase transport costs for the sake of doing so. We are fully aware that the effect of this taxation will ultimately be felt by the consumer. As I said before, if one is going to obtain large amounts of revenue, and in this case the amount involved is some £675,000, one must spread the net pretty widely. As a number of hon. Members have recognized, it is not inequitable that gas oil should pay import duty and consumption tax at the same level as petrol. The measure is also equitable in that the payment made will be directly related to the mileage travelled. I can assure hon. Members that I gave great thought to the matter and considered various possible alternatives and alternative ways of raising the same amount of revenue. I and my advisers were just as conscious as any Member of this House of the objections which might be raised. We decided, however, that having considered all these matters the present measure was less objectionable and more equitable and less onerous than any of the alternatives. I am fully satisfied that that decision was right.

[The Minister for Finance and Development]

The second class of critics accepted the equity of taxing gas oil used in road vehicles but suggested that the refund system which I propose to apply to gas oil used in tractors employed in agricultural logging should be extended to all types of stationary engines used on farms or in forests or by industry or in such institutions as hospitals.

To deal first with the farmers and sawmillers, let me put them out of their misery by saying here and now that I propose the system of refunds should be extended to all light diesel oil used on farms except in road vehicles. The same will apply in respect of sawmilling. I am advised that the loss of revenue from this concession will not be very great. I am also satisfied that it will not increase the possibility of abuse. I believe that we can devise a refund system which will largely eliminate this particular risk. I feel sure in any case that all concerned will not have overlooked the fact that concessions can be withdrawn as well as granted and that privileges which are abused tend to be withdrawn. I have no doubt that the vast majority of those to whom the refund system is being applied will be much more interested in ensuring that the concession is maintained than in attempting to defraud the Exchequer.

As regards non-agricultural and non-forestry users, I have a good deal of sympathy with the pleas which have been put forward on behalf of hospitals and other non-profit making institutions. If eventually I am satisfied that there is no other way of protecting these institutions from the full effects of the new taxation I will be prepared to re-examine the possibility of extending the refund system to them. I am, however, advised that in most cases it is in fact possible for the owners of stationary engines or burning equipment to escape the worst effects of the new taxation without undue cost or great inconvenience. I should therefore be glad if the non-profit making institutions concerned would examine this matter carefully before pressing for action by the Exchequer. But what I have just said about alternative methods of escaping the full effects of the tax apply with equal force to industrial users. I suggest that before they shrug too loudly about what has been done to them they should see whether they cannot protect themselves in consultation with their technical advisers, including their suppliers. The advice which I have received, and it is the best available in the Colony, is that in most cases remedies other than a refund of revenue are available. Hon. Members may ask me why if this is so, and if industrialists can therefore avoid the main impact of the taxation, I should not extend the refund to them, particularly since I am told that the amount used is only some 7 per cent of the total consumption for the Colony, and that extensive increases are unlikely. The answer again is that, according to the best advice which I can obtain, any further extension of the refund system beyond agriculture, forestry and possibly non-profit making institutions, would indeed open too large and too widespread a loophole. Although therefore I am prepared to look at this matter again, to look at it yet again, I must make it clear that I do not at present consider it at all likely that my final decision will be any different from my original one, and I suggest that those likely to be affected will be best advised to seek other methods of helping themselves?

Sir Charles Markham: Who is going to pay for it?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): I now come to the question of abuse. I have said that provided the concession is confined to agriculture and forestry possibly to a few non-profit making institutions, I do not think that the risk of abuse of the refund system is unduly great. So far as other non-road users are concerned, I have suggested that there are alternative methods of helping themselves. If they do so I shall not be particularly perturbed. The fact is that this fact was primarily devised in order to put those people who use diesel vehicles in exactly the same position as regards taxation as those who use petrol-driven vehicles. It was also devised to ensure that this object was achieved in an equitable manner. Among the other alternatives which I considered was the possibility that the licence fees might be increased to such a level that they would bring in as much revenue as will the taxation on diesel oil. For a long time I myself have hoped that this might prove to be the simplest and least objectionable method of dealing with the problem. I was however convinced on the statistics that such action would have been thoroughly inequitable and would indeed have involved increasing the licence fees on diesel vehicles not by multiplying them by two, as was the case up to 30th April, but by multiplying them by seven or eight. Even then the really heavy user will get off lightly as compared with the owner of a petrol vehicle, while the medium or low mileage user such as the farmer, or the man who runs a diesel lorry in connexion with his business, would have been very hard hit. In the light of facts like these I was convinced and still am that the only equitable way to deal with the problem was to tax the motor-car itself.

I have dealt, Sir, with the possibility of abuse of a refund system to be applied to agriculture

[The Minister for Finance and Development] and forestry and have said that I am pretty certain that we can deal with that. There remains the danger that those whom this tax is designed to catch, those who run road vehicles for which gas oil is the motive power, may try to escape the effects of the tax by using some other type of fuel. I am advised that this problem has had to be faced in other countries where gas oil is subject to taxation. One way out of the difficulty will be to tax all alternative sources of fuel. I have considered that possibility which has, indeed, its attractions from a revenue point of view. It has, however, objections both economic and social, and in these circumstances I have not pursued it at this stage. It has, however, objections both economic and social and in these circumstances it is, of course, still available, that is, taxing other sources of fuel. It is still available as a bolt in the locker should it be necessary. I hope that all concerned will in the general interests of the Colony make it unnecessary for me to use it. The other alternative which I am advised is used in other countries is that we should outlaw the use in road vehicles of all types of fuel other than petrol and light diesel oil. This method is, as I say, used in other countries which have had the problem and it is effective provided the penalties are sufficiently realistic and sufficiently drastic. It is the course which the Government proposes to adopt. Arrangements are being made for the necessary legislation, for which I am advised that precedents exist, to be prepared and to be brought before the Council as a matter of urgency. Hon. Members will note that this measure would only affect people who are deliberately determined to improve their own position at the expense of the revenue, that is, at the expense of every taxpayer in this country, since if I did not get this revenue from this source I should have to find it from another. I am sure that no Member of this House has any sympathy with such people and that they will support me in the measures necessary to defeat such of them as may exist. I also hope, however, that anyone who may contemplate this type of self-help will also be deterred from doing so not only by such draconian penalties as may be introduced, but also by the thought that if they do so I have available other possibilities which I prefer to use at present because they would not in my opinion have the most desirable effects, but which are always there as an effective last line of defence.

I have referred on a number of occasions to the availability of advice and to my having taken the best advice available in the Colony. This expression, of course, refers to our good friends the oil companies. For obvious reasons it was not possible for me to consult them in advance of the Budget. I have, however, been in close touch with them ever since, and I should like here and now to pay tribute to the way in which they have co-operated with me and my advisers.

I would also like to let the House have information about one fact which may not be common knowledge. Gas oil or whatever we call it, was not dutiable on Budget Day. The oil companies were, therefore, under no obligation to have paid any duty on stocks in hand at that date. They would only have to pay on light diesel oil entering the Colony after Budget Day. At the same time in order to prevent the cheap hoarding of stocks by retailers and others it was necessary, as it is in these cases, to increase the price in accordance with the Budget proposals as from the day after Budget Day, 28th April. Hon. Members will note that depending on the amount of such oil in stock the companies could, quite legitimately, have made a handsome little profit. I am glad to be able to inform the House that they have quite voluntarily offered to pay the amount involved on their stocks in hand at the time that the duty came into effect. So far as Kenya is concerned, I am informed that the amount involved will be of the order of £150,000 of which nearly £50,000 will go to the Road Authority as part of the statutory grant payable in the financial year 1959/60. I am sure the House will agree with me when I express my thanks to those concerned for what is a most generous—though not, I believe, uncharacteristic—act of public spiritedness.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, when I began this speech I said that I had little faith in financial wizardry or magic wands. I believe that the essential aim of any Budget should be to meet the expenditure of the Government with the least disturbance to the economy and hardship to the taxpayer. I believe that in approaching the matter in this way we are likely to help our productive enterprises far more than if we seek special remedies. This does not mean that in certain circumstances special measures do not help. I have, indeed, referred to the value of protection to the industries of East Africa and to the employment of our people, but we should never in my opinion allow ourselves to be distracted from the main purpose which is to foot the bill in the way which will be least inconvenient for the general body of taxpayers. That, Sir, is what this Budget has attempted to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move.

The question was put and carried.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Order for Committee read.

VOTE 21—MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, ANIMAL HUSBANDRY AND WATER RESOURCES

MOTION

THAT MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to move that Mr. Deputy Speaker do now leave the Chair in order that the House may consider Draft Estimates of Expenditure for the year 1st July, 1960, to 30th June, 1961, for Vote 21—Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources.

As Agriculture, for the first time for many years, is the first Head to be debated I intend covering it in far greater scale than over previous years. I would like to take this opportunity of expressing how pleased I am that an Assistant Minister has been appointed to my Ministry to help me in my difficulties.

As you may already know, Sir, I am by profession a farmer, and farmers by general reputation are a slow-moving sort of people, so perhaps you will not be surprised when I tell you that in the midst of all this political tumult which has been going on and all the changes which have been going on round about us, the main objective of my Ministry remains unchanged, and by that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I mean the development of our land, the building up of agricultural production in all areas, and I stress all areas, the maintenance of stable prices for the main products, and the fostering of markets for these products. In this work on which the economy of the country very largely depends farmers of all races have a most important part to play and the aim of my Ministry is to strike a fair balance in the assistance which it gives to the various sections of the farming community. Now, for a number of years past I think I can rightly claim that we have been working on the right general line, which is why I do not propose to make any new major changes in the agricultural policy except with one important exception, about which I will speak at length later. While I am not proposing any new changes, Mr. Deputy Speaker, with that one exception, there are in fact many major advances which are taking place in agriculture. Now, agriculture in its broadest sense, and as agriculture in its broadest sense improves, so do many problems and so do many new problems often arise, although often these new problems have been small problems which have been lying dormant; and a very good example of this one is that as we have developed the Swynnerton Plan so we have brought about the problem of finance for loans for the farmers who have come out of the Swynnerton Plan. Over and above that we have developed a further problem which is the improvement of roads of access from those areas which have been consolidated and improved in getting their produce to the railhead and to market. These two I hope will be able to overcome by being able to borrow £2,000,000 from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and there are many other examples which I could give. Two particular reasons why I think we are on the right general lines are as follows: The committee which was set up under the chairmanship of Sir Donald MacGillivray has made its report which I hope to be able to Table very shortly in this House, and I am most grateful to Sir Donald and his two colleagues, Mr. Angus Lawrie and Mr. White, for their most painstaking and comprehensive survey of our agricultural industry. I am sure hon. Members will endorse my thanks when they see the report which runs to over 250 pages. Here I want only to say this, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the MacGillivray Committee Report reached conclusions which are generally favourable to the boards and committees which operated in the field of agriculture, and it may interest the House to know that a very knowledgeable authority on agriculture, who was recently in the Central African Federation, has compared our system more than favourably with the system operating in that country, and, secondly, while I am very far from complacent about it and recognize that an enormous job still remains to be done still I claim that the progress which has been achieved in agriculture in Kenya during the last five to ten years has been indeed remarkable. In saying this I cannot forbear mentioning the names of my two predecessors in office who did so much for agriculture, Mr. Michael Blundell and Sir Ferdinand Cavendish-Bentinck. It is to them and to the officers of my Ministry that the progress which has been made over the years is mainly due, and also to the work and skill of many, many individual farmers of all races.

We have in Kenya, Mr. Deputy Speaker, a varied form of agriculture based on sound agricultural practices and we produce produce of an excellent quality. We are, however, very dependent to a large extent on the uncertainties of the world market, especially as some 85 per cent of our agricultural exports go overseas. When I mean overseas, Sir, I mean outside the three East African territories. During 1958 we went through a difficult period mainly in the dairy and bacon industries, but prices in these two industries have recovered in 1959. The price of sisal has also recently risen and sales of Kenya pyrethrum continue to expand. We seem able to continue to sell

43) Committee of Surplus

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources]

Kenya coffee at a continued premium since even though lower grades from other countries have declined appreciably. Nevertheless, Mr. Deputy Speaker, our dependence on this market makes us vulnerable to world price movements in the intensive competition from other producing countries and to periodic economic surges, and, of course, to the subsidies in agriculture given by industrialized countries. This makes it difficult to maintain stable normal agricultural prices on which an expansion of production depends. Our main defects in this position in my opinion lie in the following areas:—

- (a) Ensuring that we continue to produce produce of high quality.
- (b) Research into lower production costs.
- (c) Improved marketing in storage, packing, methods of export.

All these three points receive the continuous attention of my Ministry. The real value of agricultural exports exported areas rose from £26,000,000 in 1958 to £20,000,000 last year. Exports to Uganda and Tanzania amounted to a little over £6,000,000 but no more. Mr. Deputy Speaker, can tell what the future holds. Therefore we must improve efficiency, lower the costs of output, and still maintain the standard of quality, and I do so on purpose. Mr. Deputy Speaker, to continually remind the Members that the theme must be quality.

The better part of our exports come from European farms but the economies made by African farmers once again show a substantial increase. I have no doubt that intelligent Government in the future it will go on because for I am sure there is a great deal of good land in African areas which is not cultivated. A large part of my Ministry's development programme for the next three years is directed at bringing this land into greater production. Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, since coffee is such an important crop for Kenya and indeed for the entire East African economy, I am sure that the Members will be interested to know that an International Coffee Group which was set up as a result of conversations last year has now started its work in Washington, largely on the impact of the Coffee Boards of Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania. An experienced officer of the Home Commission, Mr. London, has been posted to the British Embassy in Washington, and I would like to take this opportunity of thanking Her Majesty's Government for allowing us to rest his facilities and attach him to the Ambassador's staff in Washington. His job will be to assist the Staff Leader with particular regard to the interests of East African coffee producers. I was fortunate enough to arrive in Washington at the same time as Mr. London and had discussions with him both in London and in Washington, with the Colonial Office and with the United States Government people who are interested in the future price structure of coffee.

I have no doubt that a number of questions of detail will be raised in the discussion on my Ministry's Estimates and therefore I propose to leave these until a little later but will now set two main themes only. First, I will make some remarks on the general shape of my Ministry's Estimates. After that I would like to explain the new project for small farm settlement in the scheduled areas corresponding roughly with the area which up until now has been known as the Highlands. This project has been only recently formulated and so it is not reflected in the Estimates now before you but it is in my view of such major importance for the smooth transition from the old Kenya to the new Kenya that I feel I must take this early opportunity of telling the House about it.

First, some general remarks about the general shape of the Estimates of my Ministry. The net increase in our Estimates is approximately £116,000, the gross increase being £245,000, but this has been offset by an increase in the Appropriations-in-Aid by £129,000 much of which has come from increased revenue which is expected to accrue from productive stations and services. The net increase is 74 per cent of the previous year's Estimates, but excluding a number of items which have been transferred from other Votes, the true actual increase is about 3 per cent or one-third, and I would like hon. Members to note this, of 1 per cent of the Colony's Budget. It is a remarkably small increase in view of the fact that with the continued development of agriculture in the Colony there is a continued increasing demand for more agricultural services. With the completion of land consolidation in many areas a demand for rural credit has developed, and hon. Members may remember that towards the end of last year we had a visitor with the financial help of I.C.A., a Mr. Williams, who wrote a most excellent report on Rural Education and on Rural Credit. Now, Sir, if we are going to have the expansion which we hope to have under the Swynnerton Plan this demand for development money and money to help the farmers must be found. Funds have been provided in the Development Budget on a greatly increased scale, and if we obtain the £1,000,000, which we hope for, from I.B.R.D., that £1,000,000 will be the first of a block of money to help in this. It is also necessary. Mr. Deputy Speaker, to provide a sound organization to administer these loans. An extra provision has been made for the headquarters staff to look after that both on the administrative and on the accounts side, and extra funds will have to be sought to provide the technical staff in the field with assistance in order that their time might not be taken up too much with the administrative side of this loan programme. The principle behind these loans is that they will be largely for supervised credit in order to make sure that most productive use is made of the money which we obtain, but where possible security will be sought even in land or moveable assets belonging to the borrower.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the demand for agricultural services is now outstripping the resources of my Ministry and it is becoming necessary now to seek ways of ensuring additional services can be provided from other sources, that is, other sources than from Government revenue of loan funds. Contributions to research services have already been made by producers and the Coffee Board particularly are a very fine example. The coffee services are now being separated from the other services for the ease of accounting. It seems likely that increases in our other research services will have to depend on future industry and the contributions that we get. The greatest need, however, is for the advisory and expansion services in the African areas. To achieve the desirable ratio of staffing to farming units as more and more farms are becoming productive requires a considerable increase in staff. These increases can only be supported by the producers themselves. In other words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, self-help. Arrangements have already been made for transferring the accounting staff, who up to now have dealt with the land development loans granted by the Settlement Board to the Ministry. This, together with the Rural Credit Section which we will set up, will have the advantage of bringing into one place a strong loans section. Provision has had to be made for the staffing of two more livestock and an additional improvements centre at Homa Bay and Cheborogwa. It has been considered desirable that the grader at Uplands Bacon Factory should be an official grader and independent of the factory. He will therefore be employed by Government although the cost will be borne by the producers.

With the running down of Cotton Board funds it has been necessary to take over certain agricultural services in the Coast Province which has hitherto been financed by the Coast Province Cotton Production Committee. Provision is also made for the expense of winding up the Dam Construction Unit. I personally will be very sorry to see these units being wound-up. They were started at a time when contractors were rarely available and certainly not for operations in the more remote and difficult areas of the Colony. The continued need for them now, we maintain, has largely ceased. ALDEV operates two small dam construction units in the more remote parts of the African areas which will continue to operate and the soil conservation services will continue to construct small dams in the scheduled areas.

The Ministry's Market Research Section after some setbacks has begun to get into its stride. At the same time during the past financial year the K.C.F.A.I. and the A.P.E.A. came together to form a joint marketing committee with its own staff which I am pleased to say works in very close liaison with the Ministry's Market Research Section. The value of these efforts is already beginning to become apparent. It is hoped that they will bear fruit in the very near future. It is obvious that it is not a sound proposition for Kenya to depend on offloading any products that have been surplus to its internal requirements on the highly competitive and very vulnerable United Kingdom market and it is the Ministry's intention, with the help of this body which has been set up, to explore and to encourage others to explore what has to be called the local export market, that is the market in the surrounding East African territories and in what I like to call the Indian Ocean sphere and the Persian Gulf. One of the great problems of marketing Kenya's produce outside the territory is the maintenance of a standard, and to this end my Ministry is studying whether more effective grading and packing arrangements cannot be made. As a contributor to world markets it is essential for Kenya to export goods of high quality if she wishes to maintain a place for herself and obtain the prices for that produce which will enable the economy to be sustained in the difficult times which we may quite easily have ahead. There is also always a market in the world for goods of quality although it may be in some instances a small one. Special attention is being given to the problem of marketing potatoes and I hope very shortly to have available a report on this difficult item.

Now, Sir, if I could touch on agricultural staff, I am very concerned about our ability to recruit qualified agricultural officers for the Agricultural Department. There are at present 25 vacancies on the A scale and we have been advised by the Colonial Office that they can only fill three or five, or three to five, this year. I am also worried at the lack of interest of Africans in particular in taking degree courses in agriculture at Makerere College. Even if all those people who are at Makerere College now pass their examinations year by year over the next three years we can only obtain seven people. This is no way in which to achieve localization of the service by men, by our own people, and we will certainly need these people if we are going to continue to develop our agriculture as we would all like to see it, and I would like to take this opportunity of calling on all Members of this House, and especially the African Elected Members, to encourage people to take science in the schools and then go on and take agriculture at Makerere.

I am also very keen to get Africans into more responsible posts in the Ministry and for this purpose I hope with the assistance of the International Co-operation Administration who I saw when I was in Washington to give some of the existing agricultural staff higher training in the United States which, if they complete satisfactorily, will qualify them for advancement in the Service back here in Kenya.

Funds have been included in the 1960/63 Development Programme for putting in the necessary development at Siriba Agricultural College to start a course for the diploma standard in agriculture in 1961. With the assistance of the Rockefeller Foundation and the Hindocha Trust it has been possible to get the additional buildings started a year sooner than we expected. Once again, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we are up against an old problem and that is the problem of recruiting qualified lecturers. Although asked to do so a year ago the Colonial Office have failed to find anybody to fill the five vacancies for lecturers and does not expect to obtain them this year either. This is a very pressing problem and I attach great importance to the establishment of this College at Siriba. While the Agricultural Department may be able to second officers to fill some of these lecturing posts, and we have done this in previous instances, we have again turned to I.C.A. in Washington to see if the United States can find us lecturers in chemistry and biology and advisers on agricultural education so that we can set them up and start a course to tide us over for this important first two years. What this does show us is that people of this standard and of this calibre are difficult to obtain on the world market today.

Now, if I may touch on finance, Sir, so far as my Ministry is concerned, in his Budget Speech the Minister for Finance laid stress on the importance of fostering agriculture in support of the economy of the country. I am naturally worried about the cuts which it has been necessary to impose on the Estimates of my Ministry both last year and this year. In the interests of the country it is necessary to expand the agricultural economy as fast as it is humanly possible and in many ways this can be stimulated by services from Government if they can be provided. I have a number of things in mind. The value of the pyrethrum industry will I hope go up from approximately £1,000,000 in 1957 to £3,000,000 by the end of this year with the prospect of a continued expansion. Government in conjunction with the industry, or with that that industry, should be providing expanded research for his valuable crop now.

Agricultural education is the need of our senior experienced officers to guide our big programme of degree diploma instruction and farmer training, the training extension of officers in modern techniques and to provide a constant supply of teaching aids, and so on. The expansion in the national economy will come as much from understanding by farmers on how to improve their farming as from the growing of cash crops. As my colleague said, the modernization of peasant agriculture is a vital factor for the future and I make no apology for using the words "peasant agriculture" because the words "peasant" and "peasant agriculture" is used in many agricultural countries of the world, and as words I think they are delightful words.

A very big expansion, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is needed in the distribution of artificial insemination if appreciable improvement is to be made in providing productive dairy cattle and in some instances beef cattle for the rapidly increasing number of planned smallholdings of which there are approximately 14,000 today and which could quite easily be 100,000 within the next ten years. A much stronger organization is needed in the field to expand the development and management of co-operative societies, that is if the rapidly increasing production from the African areas is to be marketed in an orderly fashion to yield the best return to growers. Co-operative societies have since 1st May fallen under my Ministry and I intend in the next few weeks giving some thought to that organization. It can and must play a vital part in the increasing of production in African areas especially.

Now, on cash crop development, I would like to say that nowhere can money be better invested or the standard of living of the people more rapidly raised than by developing good farming. Water supplies and cash crops in the African lands of high potential where the denser population lies is the area which I consider falls into this most of all. Movements of vast populations to new lands is very costly and there are few alternative lands which have half the potential of the present populated areas which I have mentioned, and that area in which they live now is of a very great potential. My Ministry is actively engaged on accelerating programmes of cash crops development. This is in answer to a question which was asked of me during the Budget debate. Prior to consolidation the rate of such development was likely to be retarded since farmers had no secure title to their land and because the plots on which they could grow their coffee or tea were often some distance from the homes in which they lived. It is obvious that the provision of advice to farmers is far easier to give on a consolidated land scheme than on fragmented land with bits and pieces of land owned by that farmer in all directions. The efforts of limited agricultural staff are therefore obviously far more effective in these consolidated areas and in fact in those areas we can do more, far more, to achieve the aim which we all want, that is a better standard of life for the half million peasant farmers in this country. Nevertheless, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is an increasing need for more and yet more experienced officers to speed up the process and to put across to the farmers that the results of research must be used in their farming and to see that farmers make the best use of loan funds such as those which are available at the moment through the help we have had from I.C.A. and the future help I hope we will have from I.B.R.D.

Now, Sir, if I may touch on African coffee growing, the programme is well up to target and with the progress made with land consolidation we are now planning to expand the rate of planting where co-operative societies are able to handle bigger areas, and the nurseries required, and where the field culture can be adequately supervised. I would like to impress upon the hon. Members who represent the farming constituencies that it is up to the co-operative societies to play a far bigger part than a lot of them are playing at this stage. We are not losing sight, Mr. Deputy Speaker, of the quality aspect in our expansion plans in these areas.

Indeed we are concerned to keep the yield and the quality of Kenya coffee at its present high level, and to this end the small cess has been raised on the coffee crop to help provide the additional services which are needed. Its yield and quality are to be maintained from the greatly expanded areas which are now being planted with coffee. In fact the Estimates themselves show the Central Province Marketing Board, out of the coffee cess, is to pay for three extra coffee officers, 32 instructors and 197 assistant instructors in the coming year, and this is the type of self-help which we must see more of. There may be some, Mr. Deputy Speaker, who will grumble at this, but it must be remembered that the cash return per acre of arabica coffee to the African farmer in Kenya is approximately three times that of his Tanganyika counterpart, and very nearly four times that of his counterpart in Uganda. I do not suppose that any hon. Members will grumble at that. And the small cess levied to provide the services which are vital to maintain this level of cash return, is a small price to pay for so handsome extra money.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the development of tea as a cash crop is very much more difficult and is far greater in difficulty than the coffee one. Principally because of the much greater capital expenditure which is needed in producing tea at cost per acre. We have in the Nyeri District, in the Ragati area what we believe to be the only peasant tea scheme in the Commonwealth which produces tea of a quality comparable with the best estates in other parts, and this scheme is being used as a basis of future development. African grown tea has hitherto been developed by Government resources, but Government, Mr. Deputy Speaker, can no longer face alone the cost of developing a much larger acreage. There is therefore call for the assistance of the Colonial Development Corporation and interested companies to help provide the finance for development, and at a later stage development of the factories. The funds drawn from these sources will be controlled by the development authority which will co-ordinate and control the development of tea, and will co-ordinate and control any other cash crops which we may, at a later date, get put under the authority. The plan, if the parties concerned are able to participate, involves an additional 9,500 acres of tea in the next five years in addition to over and above the 1,500 acres which we have now, making a total of 11,000 acres of tea at the end of the next five years. This will come about at a cost of a little over £650,000. This acreage includes schemes for sale of green tea leaves to existing estate factories, which particularly benefit the Kisii, Kericho, North Nyanza, Nandi and Kiambu Districts. The factories which will be built will benefit the districts of Central Province, remote from existing factories. Also Kericho and the Kisii Highlands. Mr. Deputy Speaker, if these prices do not collapse this project alone will bring in an additional income of £500,000 a year into the pockets of these African tea growers. We hope that this will only be the forerunner of bigger development as there is estimated 700,000 acres of land, and I repeat this—700,000 acres of land in African areas, which is suitable for tea production.

It is envisaged that eventually the cash crop development authority may take under its wing, as I have mentioned, other cash crops in African areas.

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources]

Now, pyrethrum. There has been a big increase in the pyrethrum quota allocated, not only to European pyrethrum growers, but to African areas, and this increase is from 850 tons this past season to 1,500 tons next season. And for the benefit of hon. Members opposite I think I am right in saying that this figure of 850 tons was not obtained over the last season. In the plan for Pyrethrum Board to expand markets and go ahead as the Chairman and that Board anticipate, there will be an expanding opportunity for all growers to grow more pyrethrum in the high altitude zones.

Now, Sir, if I may just touch on a part of my Ministry which people are apt to forget, and that is the research side. The agricultural and veterinary research services are indeed doing an excellent job on behalf of Kenya in many varied fields. They are giving a guide to improved farming and to animal husbandry, to the better management of grass land, to the use of fertilizers, and to the control of pests and diseases, both of plants and of animals. At the same time better varieties of wheat, maize and other cereals are being produced, and a wide range of crop varieties, and a new crop are being tested. They also exhibit a fine principle of self-help for research. This is where a number of industries have been most helpful and are keen to improve on their performance, to prove to us on their own performance, that they have been willing to invest large sums of money in research, and I would particularly like to refer to the coffee, sisal, tea, pyrethrum industries, the Kenya Meat Commission and the pineapple industry, and last, but not least, the cereal producers.

Now, Sir, livestock has over the last year notably contributed towards the 14 per cent increase in the total agricultural exports recorded in 1959. 61 per cent more meat and meat preparations were exported, and very interesting one, 23 per cent more wool. Also, Mr. Deputy Speaker, no less than 7,250,000 lb. of butter was exported, an increase of more than 50 per cent over the year 1958. Encouraging new markets were found for poultry products, and the poultry industry also increased greatly in numbers. All these figures, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are encouraging, but progress must be maintained and increased, especially we must try for an improvement in the production of the individual animal. There is plenty of room for this, and the tools and the services are ready for those farmers who are prepared to use them. The Central Artificial Insemination Station at Kabete carries studs of pedigree bulls of most of the well known breeds, and the Veterinary Department also have available, which may not be known, courses of instruction in the technique of artificial insemination for peoples of all races. The price of semen in this country is very low indeed, especially when I compare them to what I found prices were in the United States of America.

Coupled with improved blood in our livestock we must strive for better management of these animals. However good your stock are from the breeding point of view, it is impossible for it to produce its potential without the best stockmanship, feeding and management, and this, unfortunately for a number of people, means personal supervision by the farmer himself, and a very great amount of hard work.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, we must never forget the disease factor in Kenya. I did touch on this point yesterday, but I would like to re-emphasize it again today because it is of such vital importance to us. And that is the disease rinderpest. Although the Veterinary Department itself inoculate free a very great number of animals each year, and I think last year we inoculated something like 1,400,000 head, the disease has been increasing lately. Now, Sir, if we get an outbreak of rinderpest in our main production areas it would be a tragedy. Therefore, I think that the farmers with unvaccinated cattle, especially those who are adjacent to forest reserves, and the areas are in a considerable number, are, I think, in considerable danger themselves, and should take immediate precautions and vaccinate their cattle. It is well known that over many years we have sold a great amount of vaccine to the Sudan. Over the last year we have hardly sold any at all, and from this it is obvious that a great block of land to the north of us has cattle which are now not being inoculated.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if I may turn to water. I feel that a great number of people do not appreciate how badly off we are in Kenya for water. People glibly talk about subdivision of land here, subdivision of land there—talk about putting villages here; talk about putting villages here; irrigation schemes here; barrages across this river and that river, without realizing just how little water we have, and how expensive water undertakings usually are. Now, before any work on water can be undertaken, whether in connexion with township, rural supplies, or for agricultural purposes, extensive surveys and technical investigations must be undertaken and, again, more especially in a country such as ours, where we are so short of this commodity. With the steadily increasing demand for water, both urban and agricultural use, including irrigation in the Scheduled and Non-scheduled areas, it is becoming very evident that in many cases it is necessary to plan water development on a regional basis rather than on a district basis. Mr. Deputy Speaker, failure to plan on a long-term programme, and on a regional basis will lead to piecemeal development, and will lead to waste and even extravagant waste of water, and I should like to refer to one or two investigations, and perhaps two of the most important investigations going on in Kenya at the moment.

One, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the surveys we are doing for water requirements in the heavily populated area of the Kiambu District. This has resulted from the policy of village organization, or the villagization on a lot of the ridges in that district where there are approximately 100 villages, and some of them in size are, or could be the description, very nearly of "small towns" rather than of "villages". Now all these 100 urgently need piped water and safe water supplies, but there are also the great agricultural requirements for water in the same area, and in many cases the same schemes can serve both villages and the agricultural districts. It has, therefore, been decided to start in this area with an investigation by the hydraulic branch to see just how much water will be necessary to be used.

The further one, Sir, is the investigation in the Lake Victoria drainage area. Two other important ones as far as water are concerned, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are the Njoro stream itself, and an investigation being carried out in the Uaso Nyiro drainage area.

Now, Sir, if I may turn to my one exception, which is a small farm plan programme, and, Sir, in all that I have got to say on the small farm programme, one must bear in mind that Sessional Paper No. 10 still has to be debated, and also legislation will have to be debated arising from Sessional Paper No. 10.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, arising out of discussions which the Minister for Finance and I had with representatives of the Colonial Office and with international finance houses, and with the I.B.R.D., plans have been drawn up by my Ministry with a view to purchasing suitable land offered for sale in the first instance in the Scheduled Areas and subdivide these into small farms on a non-racial basis of something round about 50 acres on the average. Our immediate target once the proposed legislation has been passed is to settle 400 to 50 small farmers on their farms early in 1961. I have had discussions with the European Agricultural Settlement Board, and the Board of Agriculture, on the ideas which my Ministry have put up. The present Agricultural Settlement Board, or it is envisaged that the Present Agricultural Settlement Board will be replaced by the Settlement Board (Scheduled Areas), which will be established in the October/November sitting by an amendment to the Agricultural Ordinance.

This Board, it is hoped, will consist of the following: A Chairman, nominated by the Minister. Four Government officials, six farmers from the Scheduled Areas and two farmers from the Non-scheduled Areas. It is also proposed that the six members from the Scheduled Areas, plus the Chairman, will be the trustees for the tenants and assisted owners who are at present taken care of by the European Agricultural Settlement Board. There are approximately 350 of these tenants and/or assisted owners, and I would like to draw the attention of the House that if, at any stage, these 350-odd people decide for one reason or another to stop their tenancy to the Settlement Board, Government would have to find £600,000 under the Landlord and Tenant Agreement they have with them to pay for the development which these people have done on those properties from their own money. The new Board, Mr. Deputy Speaker, will select from farms for sale those which appear, on expert valuation and report, to be suitable for subdivision into small farms, as I said, of an average of 50 acres. This land will be high potential land, capable of growing cash crops, such as coffee, pyrethrum, or a figure which we maintain is the level at the moment of producing 12 bags per acre of maize and/or its equivalent in other cereal crops. Land, and I want to be specific on this, land which is already fully developed will, as far as possible, be retained in large units for resale to those wishing to purchase larger farms. This is an activity which is carried on at the moment by the European Agricultural Settlement Board, and will be continued by the new Board, but on a non-racial basis. Land of average, or below average fertility under this scheme will not be suitable for breaking down into small farms if they are to be fully economic.

Now, Sir, this new settlement authority, or the new Settlement Board, to be known as the Settlement Board Scheduled Areas, will decide on the basis of valuation and other factors involved. It is at present envisaged that applications for land will be vetted by the Provincial Administration, and then trained by the Agricultural Department. Firstly, at the department's farm institute, then on the farm itself on which they are going to be settled. The settlers will be employed in the general development of the farm, for instance, on the roads and survey, water supplies, fencing, buildings, as well as to continue with their farm training. A settlement officer, experienced in agriculture, will be appointed by the Settlement Board to take charge of one or more groups of settlers. The settlement officer will be responsible to the

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources] to the District Agricultural Committee, which will be subordinate to the Settlement Board Scheduled Areas. Both the district agricultural officer, and the district commissioner are, and will be, members of the District Agricultural Committee. In this way technical supervision will be ensured, and both the district commissioner and local farmers will be able to keep in touch with the progress of the settlement.

Each settler who requires it will receive a loan for approved essential development, which will be strictly supervised by the settlement officer and will be repayable with interest in a set time.

Now, Sir, in the discussions which we initiated in London with the international sources of finance, it was made perfectly plain to the Minister for Finance and myself that money from those sources could and would not be allowed to be used for the straight purchase of land. The only kind of finance which they were interested in on an agricultural project was on the reconstruction and on the development side, and both the reconstruction and the development had to be economic, otherwise they were not interested in putting finance into that project. Therefore, it was left to us to find other sources of finance which would be used for actual purchase of the land, and it is on this aspect that our discussions took place with the Colonial Office. What is now envisaged and is hoped is that during the current Colonial Development and Welfare period Her Majesty's Government will give us a total of £3,150,000 for the project on condition that we can obtain the further amount of approximately £1,500,000 per year from international finance to do the development and reconstruction side of this. And I have in mind that we may be able to get this international finance from such people as the I.B.R.C., C.D.C. and others. This will mean, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the total amount which we hope will be available per year will be £2,400,000, £900,000 of which will be for the purchase of land, and the £1,500,000 for, as I have already explained, the development on an economic basis. On this basis some 50,000 acres per year could be bought on which 800-odd small farmers could be established with their families.

A project on these lines has been prepared for submission to those people who control international finance, and we sincerely hope that this will lead to a mission coming out to Kenya to discuss this problem with us later on, but not too late in this year. It is considered most desirable that the first settlers should be established on their land early in 1961, in time for the planting in March and April. To allow time for training these settlers and developing the farm suitable land should be earmarked, and, if possible, purchased just as soon as it is possible in this year, and that 40 to 50 future settlers on a non-racial basis should be chosen at the same time.

Hon. Members may like to know that a number of properties have already been offered for sale to the Government. As regards African settlers there is considerable interest among farm workers in the settled areas, including a number of farm headmen likely to make very suitable settlers, as well as farmers who are already established on 7- to 10-acre farms in African land units.

The Chief Commissioner has been consulted about methods of selecting Africans from the African areas, and has advised that selection should be in the hands of district commissioners, assisted by district agricultural officers, and where appropriate, District Agricultural Committees.

Now, Sir, one is sure to be asked what the basic principles of this project are, and I would say that they are four in number. (1) The aim is an economic project which will increase production from the land, and this is all, as I have already said, that international finance is interested in. (2) We must therefore rule out of the project one extreme low level of subsistence agriculture and at the other extreme, fully developed and fully productive land. This type of land should be retained in large, economic units for farming as large farms. (3) The project should concentrate on undeveloped and underdeveloped land, with the object of establishing fully economic intensive farming on such land. (4) There is no justification for any subsidy.

Now arising further out of our discussions which we had both in Washington and in London, it was put to us that the Land Bank should be removed from under Government's wing, and be set up as a statutory authority with an unofficial chairman of its own accord. It was felt that if the Land Bank was set up in this fashion, and was set off with the two million pounds which Government has got in it now being given to them free of interest, that international finance would be available for this Land Bank. It was felt then that whenever any settler under our project owned 30 per cent to 40 per cent of his land, he would then move away from under the wing of the Settlement Board Scheduled Areas, under the Land Bank. The money would then become available again to the authority, to the Settlement Board Scheduled Areas, so that they could turn the money over again if it was necessary and if the land was available.

In the discussions which we had with the international financial people, it was agreed that if they did come into such a project their money would not be tied to the development of land purchased in what is now known as the "Highlands". It would be available for high potential land and medium high potential land anywhere in the Colony.

I would like to re-emphasize that the whole of this scheme will operate through the machinery which will be thrown off by the discussions on Sessional Paper No. 10 and the legislation which will come from that.

Now, Sir, I might be asked whether this is the final move as far as this Settlement Board is concerned.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard) took the Chair]

What I would just like to spend a minute or two touching on is that Phase II will be the setting up of a Land Use Authority which will have two prongs to it. It is envisaged that the Land Use Authority will consist of a third coming up from the scheduled areas, a third from the non-scheduled areas, and a third from the Government services in the Ministry. That authority will have under it two prongs. One will be a combination of the Board of Agriculture, with the Settlement Board Scheduled Areas, and the second prong will be the, what is presently known as ALDEV, with the development and settlement authority for the non-scheduled areas.

The reason why we have changed our ideas and are going back to a third civil servants on these authorities and boards is that international finance is not interested in lending money to a project, where that project is not supervised by at least a third Government servants. They maintain that from the experience they have had from other countries, no matter how poor quality the civil service is, it is always the civil service element, and that if political rumpuses start, it will continue to operate such schemes and see that they are continuing to be run on a sound basis. So, whether we like it or not, if we are going to use international finance we shall have to have the third technicians—the Civil Service technicians—on those boards.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, during yesterday's debate the hon. Member for Nairobi West raised various points, most of which I have covered, except he was asking for Government's opinion on what was meant by compensation, line of credit, stabilization, and I cannot remember the fourth one he mentioned. What I would like to explain in answer to his questions—how I would like to answer it—and I think he mentioned that he had heard people talking about a stabilization fund of £30,000,000. The view of my Ministry is that if a fund of £30,000,000 were set up outside Kenya to be used by anybody who wished to leave Kenya and in some instances they said before independence, and in other instances they said after independence, what is felt by my Ministry is that if this fund was made available now, and there was rush to absorb this fund, we may find ourselves with £30,000,000 worth of land thrown at us to put farmers on to it. Now that task would be impossible for my Ministry, and the people who would suffer would be the people of Kenya. The national economy would take a knock because £30,000,000 is approximately 25 per cent of the Highlands of the European areas. Now, Sir, if £30,000,000 was available, what would happen, and there was a rush to it, what would happen to the people who were half way down the queue, or at the end of the queue? How would you decide who was to have it and who was not to have it? How would you block the great drain that there would be on the national economy? Therefore to me it seems that those who would win this race would be the ones who would benefit, and those who are determined to stay here to help Kenya and its future would be those who suffered. Now, Sir, I have heard talk and discussions that there should be a fund of £120,000,000 set up, which they maintain is the full value of the Highlands, so that anybody can sell his farm and leave Kenya at any time which he may please. Well, Sir, after my wanderings in the United Kingdom and the United States I am certain that it is impossible to get this amount of money, or any money for this type of project, from international finance. The answer is, "Why does not Her Majesty's Government give this £120,000,000?"

Mr. Alexander: Or £30,000,000.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Then, Sir, I come back to the same problem which is the £30,000,000 one. We, in my Ministry, would have this land thrown at us, and we would have to attempt to hold up the national economy of Kenya, which would be an impossibility. Now, Kenya, a lot of people may not appreciate that the value of the Highlands is round about £125,000,000, of which roughly £50,000,000 is in mixed farming, £50,000,000 in plantation, or potential plantation land, £20,000,000 in ranching, and a further £5,000,000 is made up by odds and ends.

Well, Sir, perhaps it would help in answering the question which was asked by the hon. Member for Nairobi West, if I could just paint a picture of what we believe would happen if this fund of £20,000,000 or other amount were available. I think I have covered the two main points on it, Sir, but there is one point which I have not covered, and that is that in all these schemes, to me and to my Ministry, there is a taint of compensation in them. The only scheme that we think that has not a taint of compensation in it, is the scheme which I have put forward to you today. I appreciate that that may not go as far as some people may like in what they call "stabilization of farm prices", but I am quite prepared, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to stand here and to prophesy that land which is worth £20 an acre today in the European areas in five years, and this is high potential and medium potential land, will be worth more than double that amount of money.

Mr. Alexander: Where is the £30,000,000 coming from?

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Sir, the question of the £30,000,000 where it is coming from, we, on this side of the House, have not the vaguest idea where it will come from.

Mr. Alexander: Exactly!

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): And it has been suggested in other places that this £30,000,000 was promised by somebody or other. We on this side of the House, know of no promise for £30,000,000, as has been suggested.

Mr. Alexander: I see.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Sir, I believe that European farmers in large numbers will continue to farm their land here, both with profit and enjoyment despite changes which may take place, and I do not believe that any responsible Government will plan to drive our European farmers. Although I do know there are some people who cherish these fears, I consider that they are much exaggerated, and my agricultural policy is to do nothing to encourage such fears. If any of the farming community want to leave now, that is their affair, and it is up to them to find buyers for their farms: I feel that they may find that there will come in the next few years greater interest from other races to purchase their farms if they do, in fact, wish to sell them at that stage.

I have already emphasized, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that it is not Government's intention under the schemes I have proposed to buy up all the land offered, but only that land which is likely to be resettled, which is liable to be resettled as a subdivision scheme, that is the settlement in small farms. I sincerely hope that hon. Members opposite will join in this debate on this subject, and I hope, too, that the African leaders will take this opportunity of reiterating what they have told me in conversations which we have had at various times, when they have said that they have no intention of upsetting the agricultural economy of Kenya just as long as the farming community continue with their normal development and continue to help towards the national economy. But if the worst should happen, and some many years hence the Government did go in for large-scale ex-appropriation, then at that time suitable action could be taken.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may we look at the other side of the picture to see what would be the result if we continue to farm as we have in previous years. I feel, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that with the value of Kenya's great cash crops which have developed so much over the last three or four years, that the continuation of European farming in Kenya will not only continue to help the national economy, but will continue in future years and make itself invaluable to the future of the country.

Now, Sir, the last point, which I cannot emphasize too strongly, is that agriculture, and agriculture more than anything else, is vital to the prosperity and future of this country. Let politicians, be they true politicians or pseudo, defeated, old, young, inexperienced, swollen-headed, ambitious, commercial, new, post-war, ex-Service, loud-mouthed, or just common decent politicians—

Mr. Alexander: He has left me out!

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Let them tamper with the agricultural structure which does so much for us all, or let them tamper with the genuine farmer of all races, and I emphasize, the genuine man of the soil of all races, who continues to produce and develop over and above the hue and cry of politics, who continues to develop and produce to the advantage of the national economy—tamper with him, and you will bring this country to its knees.

My last word of warning to the above gentleman, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that if ever you tamper with the genuine man of the soil you may find that he may become difficult in his roar.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move.

Mr. Webb seconded.

Question proposed.

Group Capt. Briggs (Mount Kenya): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I have listened to the exposition of policy by the Minister with very great interest: I do not propose to comment on matters of statistical and other interesting information which we have been given. I am very glad to hear that progress has been made in regard to developing new markets for agricultural produce, and I think that is very much of a move in the right direction. But I am concerned about one of the proposals to which he has referred, and that is the settlement proposals, and I really think he has been rather naughty in introducing these proposals prior to the debate on Sessional Paper No. 10, with which, quite clearly, it is very much tied up.

And another feature of these proposals, which is a fairly obvious one, is that if land of high potential only is going to be purchased, as I rather gathered from what he said—I may have been wrong, but that was the impression I gained—if land of high potential only is going to be purchased, this does place the bad farmer at a great advantage as compared with other farmers who may have fully developed their properties, and that seems to be a very wrong approach.

Now, the Minister in the course of his remarks made references for a few moments to the Land Stabilization Fund, and I would like to devote the greater part of what I am going to say to that matter, for yesterday we heard the Chief Secretary speaking in a very able speech on the need for maintaining confidence within the Civil Service, and warning the House of the dangers of allowing the Civil Service to disintegrate, as it has done in other countries. Now, I do suggest that the very common sense views he expressed then, are equally applicable to the farming community, and I am referring to the European farming community in Kenya today.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) resumed the Chair]

European agriculture, as the Minister is aware, is responsible, according to the last figures I had, for something of the order of four-fifths of the total exports of Kenya, and it must be obvious that any falling off in those exports due to lack of confidence on the part of the farmers, must affect that very major contribution to the economy. I think it must be accepted that no sensible farmer will invest in further development unless he has confidence as to the future. And I think it is quite useless to pretend today that farmers have such confidence following the Government's land proposals in the first instance, and later the results of the Lancaster House Conference.

Now, as long ago as 27th May last year I referred in this House to the need for Government to provide a financial cushion to stabilize farm prices. And I made those comments during the debate on the African Land Control Bill when Government's proposals in regard to the land in the Colony had been made clear. Therefore, when at Lancaster House the United Party delegation, which I may say represented four of the major farming constituencies in Kenya, found that the general pattern of the proposals, the constitutional proposals, was such as in their belief would be likely to lead to a considerable lack of confidence among the European farmers in Kenya, they considered it their duty to make representations to the Secretary of State and to the Minister of State on the question of setting up a land stabilization fund.

In the course of those representations we made it quite clear that we considered that the economic effects of any major exodus of European farmers as a result of the lack of confidence would be disastrous. We suggested that this could only be prevented by the provision of a considerable sum of money—in the form of finance—and we suggested a sum of approximately a third of the total capital assets of the European farming industry, which I understand is somewhere between £100,000,000 and £120,000,000, would be adequate; in other words somewhere in the order of £30,000,000, and I would like to refer here to some of the remarks made by the Minister. To be quite frank, when I listened to him, I felt quite sure that all the arguments before and I may say that all the arguments he advanced against setting up such a fund were the arguments which we had to deal with at the Colonial Office and I am bound to say that I would have thought that as a farmer himself, I would have thought that as a farmer himself, he would have seen the point of view of the European farmer and in this House today would have expressed their view rather than that of the Colonial Office.

To continue, I would say this, in the course of those discussions, we emphasized that inadequate finance would not tempt farmers to stay here and see how things work out in practice, for, should conditions become intolerable, as indeed they might, they would find themselves unable to dispose of their farms for the reason that the fund had been exhausted. In deed, such a plan might very well precipitate just the general exodus of farmers which we are anxious to prevent. I do not believe myself that if an adequate fund were provided that there would be any great danger of such an exodus taking place, because I think if any farmer felt that the conditions became intolerable and so difficult that they did not wish to remain, if they felt that there was an insurance scheme there in effect and that his farm assets were underwritten and that that he could go out within a given period if he opted to do so, then I think that the great majority would stay here and see how things work and try and make things go as well as possible, but I am quite certain that if that is not done, I am absolutely certain that a very considerable number of farmers will leave this country.

On the question of obtaining international finance for schemes of this sort, all I can say is that I do not consider that it is a question of obtaining international finance. The provision of this finance is clearly the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government, for Her Majesty's Government must accept the responsibility for having brought about the conditions which make it necessary.

Now, in the course of a great many very lengthy discussions with the Secretary of State and the Minister of State, we suggested that a Commission should be sent out to Kenya to examine this particular problem on the spot here in Kenya. This was not accepted, but before we left London, it was promised that a Working Party of the Kenya Government would be set up for the same general purpose. Therefore, shortly after my return to Kenya, I, not unnaturally, made enquiries in the highest quarter to ascertain what was being done and, much to my surprise, I found after this relatively short time, at least I was informed anyway, that the Working Party, had finished its deliberations and that the Minister for Agriculture was on his way to London to discuss the matter with Her Majesty's Government. Well naturally, I was somewhat surprised that the United Party delegation, which had initiated the whole matter, had not been consulted and, as far as I know, I do not know what other parties were consulted in this country before the Minister returned to England. In the light of what I have said, I would like to urge on the Minister, again to go into the whole of this matter with a fresh outlook and to ascertain the views of the farmers in this country on it. And furthermore, I would urge him most strongly to put forward a proposal for a Commission to come out here and to examine the matter properly on the spot, with a view to formulating proper proposals and finding out what the farmers in this country really do feel. In the light of the very unsatisfactory remarks of the Minister on this particular matter, which I must say I consider he has treated very lightly, I fear that I must make clear that, failing some reasonable explanation I shall have to oppose the Motion.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, in this general debate on the Estimates, I would like to begin by answering the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Luseno, who spoke last week on uhuru. Mr. Luseno complained that the African population in Kenya—

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): It is quite out of order to try to continue an earlier debate when another Motion is under discussion. We have completed the debate last week and now we are dealing with the Agricultural Vote.

Mr. Mate: Thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Touching on the matter of agriculture, I was gratified to hear the Minister for Agriculture mention the plans he has in mind for the development of agriculture in general and especially the promotion of those people already in service through further courses of studies. I feel, Sir, this kind of thing is one of the many things we have wanted the Department of Agriculture to do so that we could get better qualified staff. At the same time, he talked about certain cash crops like coffee, which he said were important to the economy of Kenya, but for the African farmers. For a long, long time, the acreage which he has been allowed by the Department of Agriculture to plant as an individual is still too low. The average in a district like Meru, which has been growing coffee for a long time, 25 years now, is only about 317 trees. We would like to see an African plant more coffee than he has today, so that he can compete with farmers in Kenya of other races, because not only should quality be stressed which I agree matters, but quantity too, and I feel he should give this matter far more attention especially when a situation arises like we have in Meru today where last year the farmers wanted to plant more coffee, they were told they had no nurseries. There was a drive towards bigger nurseries and then this year they were told that because of this shortage or the other shortage, they cannot plant, so that one year the farmers dig the holes the next year they are short of trees. I wish the Department of Agriculture would co-ordinate the two things, tie up the digging of holes with the number of trees in the nurseries, and at the same time ask the societies and the people concerned to get the land in order to get the nurseries that are required. And I hope that in future this kind of thing will not happen—people digging more holes than trees or having more trees and no holes.

At the same time the farmer should be given more direct responsibility in running his own farm. As the Minister said, the skill of the farmer is as important as the quality of the product. The African farmer has been very little trusted by Government to run his own affairs. Advice is required but for a long, long time the African farmer has been too much under the thumb of the Agricultural Department.

At the same time, talking about coffee, I would like to mention that in districts like Meru and Embu the farmers are feeling very happy about the suggestion that coffee might be grown further down below a certain line that has been there up to now so that they could not plant trees in the lower drier areas. They are waiting to see that Government implements this new idea as quickly as possible. I need not repeat their joy at this kind of news, but they also appreciate that quality and yield are important and they are not mad to go on planting trees right down even in areas where it cannot do well. They do appreciate that and I am sure with the help of the Agricultural Department staff there it is not going to be a kind of mad rush into mad plans or planting coffee just anyhow. They themselves are interested, in the money they get and the quality of the coffee they get and they are going to do it with discretion.

Sir, talking about more cash crops, it brings me to the big question of marketing which the Minister did not seem to give much light on, according to the arrangements today of the controls. We have, for instance, in Meru plenty of maize, plenty of other foods. In Kitui they are very short of foodstuffs. What happens? Across the River Tana there is a black market all the time. People in Ukamba need this food and they buy it. Some traders from Meru are arrested for this or some other reason or from Embu, yet Government are not taking all these foodstuffs into the depot at Meru but only control into the Provincial Marketing Board at Meru. I would like him again to think about the local market for the internal trade of this country and remove these controls. To my mind, I do not see the sense in it at all. For large schemes or for large so-called export markets and things like that it may be necessary to have a quota of production but of the extra, why does not Government allow people to sell where they can? Around the Meru District, for example, we have areas like Isiolo, Kitui and Nanyuki. We have other areas like Kitui; we have got the Northern Frontier. Why should people not be free to sell their native products there without having to go all through these arrangements about controls, for instance, and many other cumbersome arrangements. They are encouraged to plant and grow more produce but when it comes to marketing there are no proper arrangements. I agree Government get the quota they want but what of the remainder? I do not think this question has been tackled at all. Again, I say there is movement into other districts but moving foodstuffs from one part of the district to another becomes very difficult. I would like the Minister and the Department of Agriculture to give this side of things more attention. It discourages the farmers to be told to grow crops and when it comes to marketing Government does not go into detail. I do not think it is an impossible problem if Government really and seriously give their attention to it.

Sir, coming to the other difficulty in connexion with farming, African farmers are looking forward to getting bigger and better loans from the money that has been suggested for farming and they feel that with more money they will be able to do better than before. In Central Province, for example, where land consolidation has gone on and is still going on without bigger loans the farmers cannot go on very well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, when talking about agriculture it is very difficult to leave out grazing schemes for certain parts of the country that are not very good for agriculture and I would like to press on the Minister again on behalf of the Tharaka and Mberera in the lower areas of Mount Kenya, eastern side, like the areas next to Kitui that the schemes that have been planned there are very slow. The tsetse fly scheme is very slow, yet the Tharaka themselves have studied growing crops and have become more and more interested and we would like to see more money spent on that kind of scheme so that grazing can develop more than it is doing now.

At the district level we are told that there is no money for these schemes and therefore central Government must provide it. I would like the Minister to give this assurance, and I support this where the land is not good enough for agriculture but is suitable for grazing. I do not see why we should have to import sheep and goats from the Northern Frontier District all the time when we have got areas nearer which should be encouraged to produce goats and sheep and get money from it and develop that part of the country. We are grateful for the schemes which have been started in Meru, grazing farming schemes and all we want is more help.

On the question of education for farmers, the Minister said that education for farmers is an important part of the scheme. I do not know whether he proposes to expand the institute so that farmers can have short courses there, but I feel that while that sort of thing is all right, what you need more is to train the younger people who have farming as their career, not only to give refresher courses to farmers who are already farming but younger people should be [Mr. Mate] given full opportunity to learn farming so that they can improve their education. In the Meru District I should like to remind the Minister that we are still waiting for some of the buildings for our Agricultural School at Kaguru near Nkubbi, a large farming area, and we want this kind of education so that the future farmers can have a chance of farming with a knowledge of the economics of farming so as to contribute their fair share to the development of our country.

The Minister mentioned co-operative societies, and I am glad to hear that he is thinking of giving development courses for agricultural staff. Would he consider assisting those co-operative societies who would like to send their staff overseas perhaps with their own money, to learn more about co-operation and marketing under co-operative societies, because we have these co-operative societies growing but they do sometimes become out of date and I believe by going to such places as Britain, Israel or the United States where this kind of thing has been done before it would rejuvenate their thinking and give impetus to our societies. I feel that without this kind of thing we are very likely to become short of qualified staff. It has been mentioned that it will be difficult to get people from overseas for these jobs or enough of them for the service and I believe that if something were to be done to improve those who are already in the service, I think it would assist the farmers very, very much.

Sir, another problem is, is that when it comes to exotic cattle that Africans are adopting today for better agriculture, many farmers especially in Meru and in Embu have many complaints that it is very difficult to get these animals; they are supposed to fulfil so many rules about the animals that sometimes in doing what they are told they spend a lot of money. This is because of the backwardness of the Agricultural staff, and here I would like to refer the Minister to the staff in the Meru District and a question I raised in this House previously, particularly in the Nithi Division. I compared the work done by the Veterinary staff there and that being done by the Agricultural staff.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Please speak up so that I shall be able to answer your queries.

Mr. Mate: The Agricultural staff as compared with the Veterinary staff. The Veterinary staff, Sir, are doing a much better job than the agricultural side who are said to be more experienced. I believe that the agricultural people it is time that we got younger people who appreciate the new changes and appreciate farming in that area. I feel, Sir, that when we talk about educating farmers you cannot have the uneducated or untrained, but someone who is educated and experienced as an agricultural officer to go ahead with the people who are more intelligent to see that they get the education they are aiming at. So I would like to see a change of the head of the department in the Nithi Division as soon as Government can do it. If he is very good let us transfer him to another area, if he is very bad he is only taking advantage of what has been done up to date. I feel that it is keeping the farmers down and not helping them to improve.

When we talk about the training of agricultural staff, I would like to see the Embu Provincial School improved so that these schools can train officers for the Central Province. Embu has the building, it has all the facilities and I would like to see it improved to educate agricultural officers.

On the whole it is very heartening to hear what the Minister has said on the general question of improvement.

The other point I would like to raise with the Minister is the grazing in the Mukogodo area of the Nanyuki District there have been problems there connected with the grazing there and stock of the people. There is a feeling among the people there that the Government are treating them just very ordinarily. I would like to see a change there so that they understand the kind of treatment they get, why their cattle are auctioned and why the grazing is so poor today that they feel it is not benefiting them. I think in Kenya today no area should be regarded as so backward as that area, I would ask the Minister to look into the grazing and the complaints connected there so as to make them see and feel that what efforts Government are making are being done for their good instead of as it is now where they feel that the facilities are against their interests.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Comdr. Goord: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like to reply quite briefly to the speech made by the hon. Member for Mount Kenya. In his speech he mentioned the fact that the United Party was the first body to put forward proposals for land stabilization funds or stabilization of land values. With representatives of the British Government. Members of the United Party, Sir, were kind enough to let me, among others, to see their paper on this subject and unless my memory plays me false, that paper was entitled "Compensation" and not "Land Stabilization". In this House, Sir, I do not really need to stress there is a great difference in approach between these two concepts. On the one hand there is a concept of maintaining the value of land at a reasonable level through [Commander Goord] the infusion of capital, on the other is the conception of compensating people who wish to pull out.

Now, Sir, even supposing—which is highly unlikely—that the figure which has been suggested were available, would it in fact, if used as compensation, present the exodus as the hon. Member says he thinks it would? It is commonsense that, if a body such as the British Government offers a large sum of money, thereby implying that there is a risk in landownership in Kenya, that landowners on the whole could possibly resist that offer? I would suggest that the hon. Member is mistaken in what he thinks; that in fact many farmers feeling that perhaps this was their last chance to get this compensation would be induced to take it.

Now what, Sir, would be the effect on this country? The hon. Member himself has said that it would be disastrous on the economy of this country and on the standard of living of all those Africans mainly, who were left here.

Sir, I suggest that the scheme which the hon. Member put forward is quite impracticable. First, it would encourage and discourage farmers to leave. Secondly it would encourage those who desire them to leave; thirdly, Sir, for the reasons which the Minister has given, it would be quite unworkable, and fourthly it seems very doubtful that capital could in any case be made available.

I feel—very strongly, Sir, that the approach to the problem which was initiated in London by the New Kenya Group and which has been taken up by the Minister on behalf of the Government is the right one and the only possible one. The only criticism I have (it is not really a criticism at all), is that more capital is undoubtedly required.

To conclude, Sir, I have one small suggestion to make which may be constructive. We want more capital and we understand that the Land Bank will be set up as the repository of that capital. I would suggest that land bank stock might be issued to the public so that farmers could take up such stock, which presumably would bear a regular and reasonable rate of interest and thus be investing in their own future and, of course, there would be an additional attraction if the land bank were incorporated in London and that extra bit of security were involved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Khamisi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I have listened with great interest to the speech which has just been delivered by the Minister for Agriculture, I was very much surprised to see that in the very comprehensive exposition of the agricultural position of Kenya which he made, he completely omitted to make any mention of the Coastal Province or even any consideration of the needs of the coastal people. His speech was mainly concerned with areas of medium potential, high potential, and also concerned cash crops which none of them can be grown in the Coastal Province. He completely omitted to deal with the needs of the coastal people by telling us what progress or programmes the Government has got to improve the cashew nuts, the cotton, the coconut and fruit trees which are the only products which can be grown in the Coastal Province.

Sir, as a teacher I was taught that the best teachers pay greater attention to the students who are weaker in the class than to those who are geniuses, and therefore I submit that the Government ought to pay more attention to the needs of the coastal Africans to enable them to improve their knowledge of agriculture, and to improve their agricultural land in general so that they can be able at least, if not to contribute more to the prosperity of this country, but to make them be able to make a decent living. Everyone knows, and the Government knows it very well, that climatic conditions, lower standard of education, poor soil and poor rainfall, all these things militate against the soil in the Coastal Province and therefore do not help the coastal Africans to improve themselves.

The Government has up to now done very little research in trying to improve the conditions of the coastal people so far as agricultural potential of the Coastal Province is concerned. We know, we people from the coast, that there are in the coastal areas, areas of high potential as well as areas of medium potential. For instance, in the Taika Hills, I think that could rank as an area of high potential, but even in the other areas, for instance near the Shimba Hills in Kakoneni in the Kwale District and some parts of Malindi District, can also be considered to be areas of medium potential, but all that is required at present is that it should be done by Government, to see that conditions of these areas can be improved, so that the people can reap the full benefits of scientific agriculture in these areas.

I submit, Sir, that the coastal Africans have as much need of financial aid and assistance in improving their land as people of other areas. The population at present is somewhere around 500,000 people in the coastal areas and the Government must look at their interests as they are now doing for those people in other areas of the Colony.

Roads in most of these native reserves also need to be improved, and dam construction also requires the attention of Government in order that people may be able to get water, not only for their own consumption but also for irrigation if it is needed.

Co-operative farming of course, and co-operative societies, need also the attention of Government because as people of other areas do, the people in the Coastal Province need money to educate their children and also to put themselves in a good standard of living.

Now, Sir, during the talk in London, we were informed that the Government was considering giving us a grant of about £5,000,000 for the purposes of agriculture and education, to be utilized in Kenya. I was listening very carefully to hear whether the Minister for Agriculture can tell us how much of this sum he expects or intends to use for agriculture, and I hope that if any of these sums, or this amount of money, will be available some part of it at least will be allocated to the people at the coast, in the Coastal Province.

Sir, I understand also from his speech that there are training facilities for agriculture which are available and I hope that the coastal people will also be included and will be given their quota of trained people who would return and till their land and make good use of agriculture in the coastal regions.

With those few remarks, Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Luseno: Mr. Deputy Speaker, in rising to support this Motion before the House I would like to say that I am very much impressed by the very many interesting points which have been raised by the Minister during the course of his speech. I will only refer to one or two of them, the first one being on co-operative societies and co-operative unions. It is my feeling, Sir, and I think the feeling of many other people, that these societies must work for the benefit of their members, who are their primary producers, and if they are to do this successfully, Sir, I feel that they must not get involved in politics because if they do they will damage the co-operative organization. I feel, Sir, that it is high time, and very necessary too, for co-operative societies in this country to plan the development of cash crops, long in advance, in association with the Agricultural Department.

For coffee, Sir, I think it is necessary for the societies to order plenty of seed, to plant big enough nurseries, and develop factories on a big enough scale, in order to meet the needs of the growers. I also feel, Sir, that they should help the Agricultural Department in teaching the growers to look after their coffee well, and to control pests and diseases. I think that these are some of the right functions of co-operative societies, which if followed will benefit the growers by better yields, better quality, the best prices, and well running of their societies. I should say that these are some of the things our people should do to show other people that we can take and handle responsibilities.

My second point, Sir, is to welcome the Government Tea Development Programme, but I regret to say that I understand there is going to be a shortage of about 4,000,000 stumps for planting in 1961. I hope, Sir, that all those people responsible for tea development will plant more and bigger tea nurseries. I would also add that it would be a good idea to place contracts with the big tea companies to grow tea plants for Government to supply to the African farmers.

I would also like to say, Sir, that if Government will set up an authority to help develop tea growers in the African areas, Africans if possible should be represented on that authority to see that development is pushed ahead as fast as possible.

Now before I sit down, Sir, I have a third point to make, and that is about coffee again. In both Elgon and North Nyanza where I come from, coffee is suffering from pests and diseases such as beri-beri. I would beg the Government to establish a research station in that area for the coffee growers if there are any funds available for the purpose.

With these few remarks, Sir, I beg to support the Motion.

Mr. ole Tipsi: I would just like to make a few observations on the estimates presented by the Minister for Agriculture. First of all I would like to touch on a few points which were raised yesterday in relation to the general Budget debate on the points I raised earlier. The first of them concerns the improvement of livestock in the African land units. He did say that in some cases some people are rather reluctant to the application of artificial insemination to their cows. Now this might be quite true, Sir, but on the whole I think it is only fair and reasonable that the officers of his Ministry should try and help in educating the people that such a method is entirely done for their good.

Now, he went on to mention the difficulty which is there as to the ways and means of trying to control the livestock diseases and this is what he said: "The Masai are known to have a high incidence of measles in their cattle, and unless this problem is sorted out they are going to run into difficulties in getting the full price for their beef as other people do." Then he went on referring to the outbreaks of other stock diseases such as rinderpest and the rest. Now it is quite true, and I think the Masai people do not underrate the problem facing them as stock owners. But we should really ask ourselves whether it was not time at all for both the Veterinary and the Medical Departments to do all they can to eradicate these diseases. I am sure that the two departments, with all their research workers and experts, could help a great deal. It is no good just saying "Well, there it is", and at the same time doing absolutely nothing to help.

The Masai of course would only be delighted to co-operate in helping. He went on to mention the difficulties encountered by the Veterinary staff especially with regard to the spread of the diseases, and he said that some people avoid the quarantine areas as much as possible, and help in spreading the diseases. This is quite true, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Now I am as much concerned as he is in trying to find a way out, and I think it is only fair, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to mention that the problem really facing the Masai—as far as the stock diseases are concerned, is very, very serious. I know the Government is doing all it can especially in the way of inoculations and other methods to prevent the spread of the diseases, but I do not think that we can entirely put the whole blame on the Masai people for the spread of the disease, because even if some of the Masai avoid and run away from quarantine areas, surely with the large herds of game which are known to be carriers of these diseases, surely the herds do not respect the quarantine area boundaries, and it is difficult because how to control the game is quite impracticable. This of course will necessitate the expansion of the veterinary services throughout because unless we do so then we might as well have the whole Masai land unit under quarantine.

The other thing, I am delighted to know that the Government is trying all it can to expand the agricultural programme of the whole country, but I still feel that there is quite a lot to be done especially in the improvement of livestock, as I have mentioned earlier, because the improvement of livestock goes hand in hand with the provision of water supply. Surely you cannot become a rancher and expect to upgrade your livestock if you have no water? He did mention that the Government has spent quite a sum of money in providing water in some areas and in constructing the dams, it is all well and good to spend some money on dam construction, but is he really satisfied that all the dams constructed are now even holding any water at all? I think this should be gone into very, very carefully because you cannot really improve anything when you are moving from this place to another place all the year round. It is impossible.

There should be some sort of water supply and I think the Government has been very, very late; it only woke up a few years ago to try and help these people. It is the cause of the delay which is annoying me; and having woken up it is time that they accelerated the pace and did all they can to help so that these people can catch up with the rest of the country, because as far as beef and dairy produce are concerned, very little has been tapped from the Masai people. I know and admit that the milking methods in some areas are not as hygienic as we would like them to be, but all the same I do not see why we cannot at least try to improve them. Let these people produce ghee, which I am sure has a market all over, instead of fresh milk. The same thing also applies to establishing and training these people in forming societies to run a few ranches all over. It will help. In the same way in places like Mau which adjoins the Mau/Narok European farming area, there you can see very good flocks of merino sheep which produce excellent clips of wool and mutton as well. If such areas could do the same then why not try in the adjoining Masai area. I know there is a sheep ranch there. But I think such ranches should really be run on business lines, not as an experiment, by somebody who has no business clue, not only an expert or somebody who knows how to look after sheep or cattle for that matter.

Now, the other thing, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that I was glad to hear from the Minister that he has at last noticed the lack of African young men and women taking an interest in agriculture and in veterinary training, but I do not think that the hands of his Ministry are quite clean in this respect. There must be some causes and reasons for this, Sir, because I think everybody looks to a profession which has a bright future, because agriculture is one of those professions, but I would advise him or ask him to go very, very carefully into the conditions of, say, the Makerere veterinary graduates and the so-called livestock officers. There is a mistake somewhere, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if I can compare the two, the whole thing is this, that you have a chap who has passed his School Certificate. He then goes on to Makerere for a course in the veterinary science, which lasts for six years. He comes out with a diploma in veterinary science. Now, you find another chap who may be a son of a farmer in this country; he might be even a failure in School Certificate. He goes to the Egerton School at Njoro; he undergoes a training for three years; he comes out and he starts as a livestock officer or something of that sort. Now, when this African who has gone right up to Makerere and spent six years there comes out he is posted to a district under a livestock officer. It is really difficult to see the fairness in these two cases. I can see the Minister shaking his head, but he should not shake his head, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because these, I presume, are facts. It is all very well shaking heads; I can say that. These are facts, and I am sure he will enlighten me when he comes to reply, because surely there is something wrong somewhere. You have this chap who has spent six years at Makerere and you have his counterpart who went in for medicine; he turns out better off, and he is at least given responsibilities and recognized as a doctor. The scales of pay between the two have no comparison. What sort of qualifications are then required when you place a man who is more and highly qualified under a less qualified person? I remember cases when going to some of these livestock officers for a prescription: they are not entitled to issue one, but you will find that these Makerere graduates are recognized in East Africa; they can give you a prescription. Why place them under somebody less qualified? The veterinary graduates are professional. I do not really see why they should be so unfairly treated.

That brings me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to this Egerton School of Agriculture. What has the Minister done to let Africans who want to take up agriculture as a profession to have the training at Njoro. What has he done? I remember that if they can allow an African to go to Egerton School as a lecturer, which they did at one time, why not as a student. I was there at one time and saw this African as a lecturer there in animal husbandry. Why not let African students in?

Now, the other thing, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the expansion of our tea industry and other cash crops. It is all very well talking of some areas of high potential. We agree. I mean, we have got to follow the expert advice. I think it is only fair that we do really go right into the whole thing and send experts, the few we have, to see whether there are not any other suitable areas which have not been listed yet. I am not a tribalist, because when it comes to agriculture there are no tribal boundaries.

Now, I was surprised the other day when on my way I passed through Kericho on my way to a meeting at Nakpetet. I stopped at Kericho and talked to quite a number of my Kipsigis friends who are really keen and interested in having and planting tea on their farms. What most of them told me was that in the first year they are only allowed to plant, say, one-third of an acre; in the second year another third, and by the third year another one-third; and then they reach the limit of one acre, in order to allow others who are rather slow or who are not as keen as the first chap to catch up. What is all this catching up in the production of cash crops? I mean, if you, as a Minister for Agriculture, a good farmer, you are interested and you can develop your farm rapidly, why hold you up on account of me? A farmer who only walks round, smokes and puts hands in pockets, why should this lazy farmer be the cause of other people's hands being tied. The industrious farmer should be encouraged, not to be told, "All right, you have planted one acre during the last three years. Wait until we go to the other chaps and see if they are interested before we can allow you to increase the acreage of your tea crops." This is very bad, and I hope it will be removed.

Now, we talk at times about the loans to African farmers. I know some of them have benefited from the I.C.A. funds and if I may turn to the original subject I would like to know how much of this money has been lent to the African cattle owners for that matter. I know some of them are doing their best to improve their areas and I think the Minister knows it too, but he cannot only concentrate on one side of our agriculture; they must go both hand in hand. I would very much like to know how much of this money will be given to African farmers both agricultural and stockowners. Now, again it is no good trying to talk of having competent farmers. We know and we want them. But how could a man become a competent farmer if he has not got land to farm on. He must have land first and then you can be sure to farm, but to talk of a competent farmer, you can get the highest degrees in agriculture, but unless you come and practice on the land surely you cannot farm the air—it is impossible.

Now, well I see that coming to that, what I was getting at was this. We have some unused lands. I know that the Government is as keen as I am to see some of this unused land, especially in the Highlands, put to proper use.

An Hon. Member: European Highlands, or Masai Highlands?

Mr. ole Tipis: European Highlands, please.

Now, some of this land I should say should really be given to at least the landless Africans and these people helped out to develop them and to make the best use of them. You cannot tell me now that the only thing which is hindering it, is the fact that they are not competent farmers. I know they are, and I know that some of the European farmers who are on this land are bad farmers and you cannot really convince me that they are all good farmers. I know some of them who have no farming experience at all. They are just there as a matter of interest and that is all. This land should be made available immediately to African farmers.

[Mr. ole Tipis]

Now that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, should really be given priority. I see also in the Estimates of expenditure that there are about 54 officers, who are classified as technical staff on the scale CS—3. I would also like to know from the Minister when he comes to reply as to how many of these officers are assistant veterinary officers and livestock officers. I would also like to know the time of training taken to produce a livestock officer, and an assistant veterinary officer, because this is very important. I know he knows as well as I do that in the whole of the Colony, if my information is right, we have only about six African Makerere graduates with diplomas in veterinary science. Some of them have long service, some of them more than 15 years' service, and some of these officers have done quite a lot of good work, but since they feel they are unfairly treated not many Africans are now wanting to take up veterinary or agriculture as a profession on account of this. But those who go in for medicine come out as medical officers and the rest of it, and are given responsibility recognized as such. But then when a man has all the qualifications required and he is not given any responsibility but he is told, "All right, your post does not carry any responsibility", surely you are discouraging him, and others and they will not want to take up a profession whose future is not bright. That is the reason, and I hope the Minister will also help. It is no good him asking us to help from this side only. I think he has more to do than we by seeing that these officers receive equal and fair treatment with their other professionals in other fields.

With these few words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Slade: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I should like to congratulate the Minister on his very comprehensive survey of the work of his Ministry and department. It is an enormous department, and it is impossible, of course, to cover in one speech all its undertakings, but it was what I might say, a broad survey by a broad man. At the same time, Sir, I think that the tribute that he gave to those who have worked in the Agricultural Department, and in his Ministry for the past 20 years or so, was fully deserved. They can be very reasonably proud of what they have achieved. And, Sir, just as it is difficult for him to cover everything, so it is difficult for us to comment on all that he spoke on, or did not speak about, and I think it would be better if I confined myself to one point only—a very important point, I think, in the circumstances of today. That is his plan for resettlement and development of land. Sir, again I must congratulate him on what he has already achieved in obtaining finance for this scheme, even though I am going to say very soon that I do not think it is enough and give my reasons why. And I think we must also give credit, Sir, to all those others who have helped him in that, either officially or unofficially, and I should like to pay a particular tribute to the Kenya National Farmers' Union, whose officers went to England at their own expense to try and foster this very kind of project. I think we owe a lot to them. I am quite sure their unofficial pressure must have helped a good deal in getting the result that has now been achieved.

Sir, the importance of this business of resettlement and development of our land is, of course, obvious. It is very important and very urgent, because we cannot afford to bring this country into independence without first establishing peace and prosperity, and our prosperity is going to depend first and foremost on the fullest possible development of our agricultural resources. For that reason, Sir, I do suggest that the present scheme is inadequate both in range and in ambition, as to the amount involved, and I suggest also, that it fails to cater for another aspect which has importance, and that is the matter of land stabilization, to which other Members have referred.

Now, Sir, looking at the question of resettlement alone, without considering land stabilization, I do not quite understand why the proposal should be limited to areas of high potential and undeveloped areas of land, because I do believe that there is great scope for development and improvement in areas of low potential, and also in areas that have been developed but it could be used more extensively. In fact, Sir, I very much doubt whether there are so many large areas of undeveloped, high potential to be found in the country. You are very much limiting the scope of the scheme. Admittedly, if you are going to try and develop areas of lower potential, which we must do, you will have to allow a larger acreage for each holding, but there is no great difficulty about that. Likewise, if you are going to develop more intensively areas that have already been developed, you have got to do it in a way which will make use of the capital which has been put in there already, and you cannot afford to write off large sums of capital development. That I believe, can be done on a co-operative basis, using the central development as the communal centre for those who have independent holdings.

And again, Sir, I know the Minister has this in mind, but we must not look only at the scheduled areas, when it is a question of resettlement. We have got to look at whatever area is going to give us the best return for the money spent on its developments. I know the Minister has that in mind, and will confirm that when he replies. He has told us himself how there are 700,000 acres in African Land units suitable for tea, and it may well be that the money we have available for settlement and development will produce a bigger return spent in those areas than spent in the scheduled areas.

Sir, I would ask the Council now to look for a moment at the other aspect of the resettlement scheme. That is the question of land stabilization—market stabilization. Now there is a great deal of talk at present of lack of confidence. Lack of confidence among farmers, which is endangering the stability of values of land. Now, Sir, I am quite certain that that is over stated, and I know from my own evidence, in this case, just as in others, that what farmers are saying or appear to say, is not the same as what they are doing. One reason, of course, is that those who talk most are those who farm least. It is a fact in this case that there are buyers for farms. I have seen farms change hands—large farms at good prices. I know at least one case of a prospective settler in my own area who has been there now for two months trying to buy a farm of a thousand acres at a reasonable price, and quite unable to get one. Farms are for sale—yes—but at fancy prices. Just as we saw during the Emergency, when we were told that farmers wanted to sell out. As far as I can remember only two in my constituency sold out throughout the Emergency. Others were prepared to sell out at fancy prices which they could not get. But it is not only that which is the evidence on which I rely. There is also the evidence—the irrefutable evidence we heard the other day from the hon. Permanent Secretary to the Treasury, of the growing stream—not diminishing stream—the growing stream of applications to the Land Bank. For what purpose? For development of the land. Buying and developing land. That is the only thing, the only purpose for which you can get money from the Land Bank. When more farmers are asking for more money from the Land Bank, they are not packing up. They are not ceasing development. Look in other fields. Look in the field of commerce where farmers buy what they need for their farms? You will find the story is quite different from what you would expect in the trend of purchases. And facts, Sir, cannot lie. And there are these facts which show that there is much more confidence and determination in the farming community than many of us are led to believe.

All the same, Sir, in spite of that, we must make sure—we have got to ensure against any possible, even temporary, collapse of the land market in this country, and one has got to face that possibility. I say it is not there today. I will not pretend that it could not be there tomorrow, unless we ensure, and the way we have got to ensure is to give market support, to make sure that there is a substantial buyer in the field at all times during the next few years for farms, developed or undeveloped farms. There must be a buyer in the field. Now, Sir, I must make this absolutely clear, just as the hon. Nominated Member, Commander Goord, made it clear. I am not talking about compensation. I am talking about market support. In fact, to use two very expressive phrases—not my own, one of my colleagues—to distinguish between what I am talking about and what some others are talking of. I am asking for market support. I am not asking for an evacuation fund.

An Hon. Member: Nobody is asking for that!

Mr. Slade: I hear behind me that nobody is asking for that. I am very glad to hear it. I think some people must have stopped asking for what they were asking for previously. Just to make sure that nobody does ask for an evacuation fund in the future, I would like to support very strongly what the hon. Nominated Member said, and just add a few words. It is an utterly impracticable conception that you must have a fund to enable people to evacuate. It is an utterly wrong conception. It is impossible because, as he said, you cannot get the money for such an uneconomic project. If you provide a fund so that anybody who likes can sell his farm and expect some specified price, when the fund is unable to dispose of that farm, the fund will not last very long, even if you get any fools to put money into it.

It is an impractical project, but it is a very bad project too, even if you could get the money; not only because you are encouraging people to quit instead of staying, but you are creating an artificial market which has all the dangerous effects of destroying the natural market, and you are breaking the economy of the country. What we must have is a buyer in the market who can buy on a substantial scale at the proper price. But the buyer must be there, Sir, in order to have full market support, not only to develop land of high potential, but again I say he must be there to look at purchases of land of low potential and land that has been fully developed. Otherwise you will not get your full market support. That goes hand-in-hand with what I said about the full range of development we should be undertaking.

With regard to the price at which this fund should be used to buy farms, we must again be careful. I think, we have got to be careful in two ways. If it is to be true market support, it must be paying prices that are reasonably related to current market values, that is to say real market values if there was not a temporary panic or some other temporary emergency. It has got to be related to the value of the land and its productivity which, I know, the Kenya National Farmers' Union have emphasized. The real value of the land is what it can give you, what return it can give you in money. It has also got to be related to the actual market value to some extent, even if that is depressed. It has got to take a responsible line of balancing between the two. Really what you have got to make sure is that the fund does not play the market, does not cash in on temporary low values. I see the duty of the Settlement Board operating this fund as similar to that of a bank or building society which maintains rates of interest steady when elsewhere there are jumps up and down. They serve a very useful public purpose in that way, and the same purpose has got to be served by the Settlement Board with this fund.

Sir, I do urge more money than that which we are now promised must be available, not necessarily that we will need to use a lot more in any one year or that we will be able to use a lot more in any one year, it depends a good deal on what land becomes available, but the money must be available and available for quite a long period, say, ten years, to be used in case of the need and opportunity arising. We must know it is there. But the amount now proposed is disappointing. Sir, and even in London at Lancaster House we were promised a minimum of £5,000,000 for this purpose, which I understood to be separate from money for development; and at that time we did not think it was enough, and I would ask the Minister to go back and, without being ungrateful, point out that not only is it less than promised, but it will not be enough either to get us ahead with our development at the pace we must go now, or to provide full market support.

Sir, I know there is a difficulty about proceeding too fast in buying land for resettlement, that is the difficulty of handling the land that you have bought to resell, because you are going to have to develop it, and going to have to develop it under supervision. You must therefore not only have the corresponding amount of money for development. You must also have the officers to supervise the development. Even so, Sir, I would urge that if we can get available in case of need on call over a guaranteed period over the next ten years, something more like £2,500,000 a year or £3,000,000 a year, then it would be well worthwhile going for more development money on a purely economic footing and including money that we need for the supervision of the development, because that cost of supervision will pay for itself. It should, if the purchase and resale is properly handled.

Sir, I have nothing more to say on this, except to repeat that I congratulate the Minister, in spite of playing Oliver Twist. It is only a question of making it broader. Just as I congratulated him on a broad survey, I am asking him to be broader now in this scheme, broader both in scope and in the amount involved.

I beg to support, Sir.

Mr. Kiamba (Machakos): Mr. Deputy Speaker, the art of tilling the ground that you call agriculture is not a new thing to the African people in Kenya, but the school type-farming that the Europeans have brought into this country have brought more benefits to the Africans in this country. That is why we keep on pleading with the Government to supply the Africans with more means of obtaining more returns from their labour in these ventures. These loans will go a long way to help the Africans to produce more and by selling their products they will get more money and it is only at that time that we can call for more taxes to run the affairs of this country.

But there is one aspect and I am going to emphasize on, that we have in this something which will spoil the whole thing and this is the punitive laws or by-laws that we have, which are exercised by the agricultural officers in some areas, especially in a place called Yatta, there are grazing schemes going about there, people moved there a long time ago, probably some time before it became a Crown land, then they were told that it was Crown land and there came a time when the Government said, "Well, we are giving this part of the land to you people and to the Kamba people who live in that area for your enjoyment." Recently, the Government have taken the measure of moving families from one area to the other without even considering the possibility of paying the cost, because you know that once a person has put up a house it is a very difficult thing to have another house built, it costs a lot of money and these people are not rich. It is costing the people a lot of money, they have cattle there and they are allowed to keep about nine or ten head of cattle. But the fines that they pay in a year are too high and probably they are beginning to feel that there is no quiet way of living in that area. It is only in this respect that the Government is making these people lose their confidence in the Government, although I think that the best way will be to educate them, to make them feel as one hon. Member on this side of the House has said, to feel that the move is beneficial to them. It can be done by educating them or use propaganda so that whatever you do will be acknowledged by these people. I do not think that by fining them more than sometimes they can pay, and sometimes go to the prisons will help them feel that the Government is helping them. I can say the same to the people of Kitui and people of other parts of Machakos, they are being fined heavily and I think the Minister should look into this. I have raised the matter before and I hope it is occupying his attention.

I am not asking the Government to do this if they do not want to, I mean this present Government—because I know this thing has got a psychological effect in the minds of the people there. For example when you asked them to destock, reduce their cattle, they do sometimes throw their eyes across the border and see a country which is unoccupied, not being used, but they are not able to go there now but may be a future Government will make it possible for them to cross the border, but in a legal way.

With those few words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Kebaso (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I rise to support this Motion. Before I do that I must congratulate the agricultural officers as well as the officers who have been working in my highlands in recent years, especially co-operative officers. But there is one thing which I must raise in this particular Motion. Since the Government announcement that the £5,000,000 has come and that money is to be used in the Central Province land consolidated area. If that is the case, then it looks as though the money is being used to reward the people who fought against Mau Mau. The money should be shared between all areas like Kisii Highlands, Maragoli, Kipsigis and other places.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Will the hon. Member make it clear what £5,000,000 he is talking about?

Mr. Kebaso: The money which has come out from Lancaster House Constitution. Sir, I hope the Minister will consider ways of spending the money and distribute equally between the Kisii, Kikuyu, Maragoli and the Kipsigis. In some parts women have to go 15 miles in order to get water, such places as Gwasi, Kavungu, Karachirongo and other places. I would like the Minister to consider putting money aside to pipe water from Lake Victoria to help the people, as well as cattle. It is so wrong that a woman must carry a debe of water five or six miles or ten miles in order to get sufficient water for the household, and I hope the Minister will sympathize in this respect.

Now, Sir, another important question, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the question of movement of produce between the provinces. When the Maize Marketing Ordinance was brought into force last year, if I am not wrong, somewhere it stated that in the provinces an African could move five bags of maize. I remember the hon. Member for Central Nyanza raised this question last year before Legislative Council. Although the former Minister agreed to the Motion and allowed maize to be moved from one district to another within a province, it is difficult now for people who live out, especially those who live in Kericho to move more than 60 lb. of posho from their own granaries. They are having difficulties in feeding themselves. Before I came to Nairobi I visited the Brooke Bond shops to see whether they were getting sufficient posho but I found that they only had two bags of maize meal in stock and I found that most of the Africans there had to buy maize meal from dukas in Kericho township. I must ask the Minister to consider this particular case and the question of allowing some farmers who put their own food in granaries to be allowed to transport at least a bag of maize meal. This would reduce hardship in various shambas and also although the Government think that all the estates in Kericho are having dukas available to African workers, it has come to my notice that in some shambas there is not a single shop. I would mention one instance, the Kimasi estate. There is no shop and from there to Kericho it is nearly 30 miles. There is no means of them getting any posho. I know the labourers are given sufficient money in some shambas for workers to buy posho but at the same time I would like the Minister to consider giving some allowance to marketing officers to issue passes for movement at least for one or five bags, at least within the province.

Now, I come to the question of the Nyanza Marketing Board. Sir, each year the African traders who buy produce in this market do pay a certain amount of money to Nyanza Marketing Board. In the various places there are some traders who bought maize in January and owing to difficulties of transport that maize is still idling in the store. A week before I came to Nairobi, I approached the district commissioner to see if we could send the African district council grader or something of that sort to enable those traders to dispose of their maize. Now, if that maize is spoilt by weevils, why do the African district council or the Nyanza Marketing Board expect to collect three shillings for each bag? I would like the Minister to consider if it is within his Ministry—the Nyanza Marketing Board—the need of money to improve roads in the African areas where the African district council is concerned. I feel it so wrong for someone to pay each year a certain amount of money, through the produce, and then he does not get any service.

[Mr. Kebaso]

Now, there is another very important question which I would like to raise on this Budget and that is the Co-operative Ordinance, 1955. Now, in certain co-operative societies and unions in my Highlands certain amounts of money were lost and through that loss the co-operative officers and the agricultural officers had no power at all to deal with the people who were concerned in this dishonesty because the Ordinance allows the co-operative officers to allow the management committees to conduct their own affairs democratically, but, in the Ordinance, it should be amended and laid down that district officers or district commissioners or co-operative officers should be able to liquidate at once and deal with that loss of money. Several cases went to court last year, and it meant that few people who were managing the societies caused the money belonging to the very poor farmers to get astray and to get lost because of that very old Ordinance, 1925, which does not give any powers to somebody else, I do say this knowing full well some African Members may blame me that I am putting the clock back, but that is the case. What I want to protect are those women who are half naked in some ways and who work the whole day, and old men, and the few people who are interested in the societies. I would like the Minister to consider and approach the Legal Department to get that Ordinance amended at once, or if that is not the case then there is no protection given to coffee farmers, tea growers and others.

Now, Sir, another point which probably the Director of Agriculture knows about, is that tea growers have been engaged in tea growing for the last two or three years. Now, those which have already started harvesting are having to send their tea 14 miles round a long road instead of one and a half. Now, that one and a half mile road passes through a European farm and that farmer has been in touch with the District Commissioner and the Provincial Commissioner for more than four years now. He has refused to allow the Government to make a road to reach the Sotik Highlands, and as a result people have to transport tea 14 miles to get it to the factory. I would like the Minister to say whether that farmer, Mr. George, should be asked to allow us a road through, or sell that farm and go to England. It is very bad that so many farmers are now suffering. They cannot get through with their tea, and yet that bwana is there all the time and will not allow the people to go through. I do not know whether it is the Government that should do something or whether we should say, "Shut up—we are passing through this road here".

Another question, Sir, is that of veterinary experimental stations. Now, the station at Kisii has got nearly 500 acres. It was established before 1945. We expected to have studies at that station; we do not buy milk; we do not get any bull for the improvement of our cattle. Now, we would like the Minister to tell this House, when replying, of the benefit of that station, because if I go there and say, "Send me a young bull because I want to improve some cattle," he says, "This cannot be done; it is not time yet." Yet, every week young bulls are being slaughtered, for what purpose I do not know. I would like the Minister to get in touch, on this question, as he has done very good work in the Kipsigis areas. When I passed the Kipsigis area recently they told me that the agricultural officer has improved their cattle very considerably and I hope the same services will be applied to the Kisii Highlands.

Now, there was one question which was raised by the hon. Member for North Rift. This question of staff for the Veterinary and Agricultural Departments was touched on. I always think that provision for agriculture and veterinary services is one of the sacred provisions in the world, but it is, I am surprised, true that very few Africans are trained to become proper agricultural and veterinary officers, only very few. When I enquired from the Assistant Director of Agriculture in the Nyanza Province I was told that very few people, after passing Cambridge, do apply to go to Makerere for this particular course. I will not be surprised to see the Minister advertising in the newspapers calling for applications from qualified Africans to go overseas for training as agricultural and veterinary officers. That would be a very good service to us.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): Would the hon. Member prefer to continue tomorrow or finish his speech this evening?

Mr. Kebaso: I would rather finish this evening. I would like the Government to get us proper allocations of money for this particular purpose because it is of no use Africans crying daily "Uhuru, uhuru!" and "Freedom!" if there is no proper training for the people to hold responsible jobs. The first duty of the Government is to train the people and not to expect uhuru, to get people from the bush and make them Ministers and veterinary officers.

ADJOURNMENT

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I now adjourn Council until quarter past two, tomorrow afternoon, Thursday, 12th May.

The House rose at thirty-two minutes past six o'clock.

PRAYERS

ORAL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

QUESTION No. 91

Mr. Mate asked the Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries will Government undertake to investigate the claim of the Chuka people to the effect that the present forest reserve boundary unjustly deprives them of a portion of their land which could with advantage be used for the cultivation of tea?

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): Government does not accept the claim of the Chuka people to the ownership of any land included within Mount Kenya forest, which is a Crown forest reserve.

Paragraphs 577 to 581 of Part I, chapter XVI of the Kenya Land Commission Report (1933) deal with the claims put forward by the Embu people, among whom were included the Chuka, Muthambi and Mwingi, and I quote paragraph 580 of the Report—"We have no evidence that there was any considerable native cultivation above the forest line or that the Embu made use of the land to any extent, and we do not recommend any alteration to the boundary as it would be certain to lead to the destruction of some of the best forest in the Colony."

No representations from the Chuka people were received by the Forest Boundary Commission which, between the years 1948 and 1951 considered possible excisions from the forest estate for agricultural development, nor, as far as I am aware, have any specific complaints been made since.

The Government is already aware of the potential value of the lower contours of this part of the Mount Kenya forest reserve for the production of tea, but is not prepared to consider excisions until conclusions can be drawn from the water catchment research now taking place in the southern-western Mau forest reserve, with particular reference to the effect of converting indigenous forest to tea gardens.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, arising out of the reply, is the Government not aware that the Chuka people have through the African district councils and the district commissioners of Meru been complaining about this piece of land?

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): Government is not aware of that and that many representations have been made to the African District Council. They have not come up to Central Government.

Mr. Mate: Arising out of the original reply, since the Commission accepted that there was some but not considerable cultivation in that part of the country, would Government go into it further?

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): Government can take no further steps with regard to excisions, as I have said, until they are satisfied that it would not prejudice adversely the water supplies in that part of the mountain area.

Mr. Cooke (Coast): Mr. Deputy Speaker, the hon. gentleman has given two reasons but in view of the not too good economic position of this country, would it not be advisable for Government to revise its policy and go in for a short-term profit rather than for long-term forest planning in certain specific instances without necessarily acknowledging any right to that particular part of the land on the part of the Kiambu?

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): Mr. Deputy Speaker, the hon. Member has misunderstood the reply. It is not so much long-term forestry planning as water conservation. It is of vital importance that the sources of water which provide water for the Embu tribes shall be protected. That is the reason why the forest must at the present time remain.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, is the Minister aware that the rivers in that part of the country come through that particular bit of forest from the top and that the forest does not affect the water supply in that particular area, for example, Thuchi or Ruguti and Tunga River are there.

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do not think Dr. Pereira, who is an expert, would agree with the hon. Member on that point.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am not an expert either but I know that land pretty well and I do not see that any very great risk would be taken by allowing a few thousand acres to go under tea cultivation. I should think it would be a very wise thing to do and I would ask the hon. Member to reconsider it.

The Minister for Tourism, Game, Forests and Fisheries (Mr. Crosskill): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I will bear the hon. Member's words in mind but until we have a report on the possibility of developing tea in that part of the world without it having an adverse effect on the water supply we could not put his proposals into practice.

QUESTION No. 92

Mr. Mate asked the Chief Secretary:—

(a) How many Meru people are employed by the Government as district assistants or district officers at present?

(b) What steps is Government taking to increase this number?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): (a) There is one Meru officer employed as a district assistant. There are no Meru district officers.

(b) District assistants and district officers are not appointed on a tribal basis, and Government does not intend to introduce tribal qualifications for appointment to these posts. Members of the Meru tribe who are suitably qualified may apply to the Civil Service Commission for any vacancies which may be advertised and their applications will be considered in competition with those of other applicants.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the Chief Secretary aware that there have been discouragements to Meru people from joining the Service, and they are taxpayers of Kenya?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): It may be assumed, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that they have been discouraged by their own people, not by Government.

Mr. ole Tipsi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, can the Minister tell us as to when we can expect Africans to be promoted to the post of district commissioner in Kenya.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): At the present moment, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there are five African district officers. No doubt when one of these becomes qualified he will be promoted.

Mr. Mboya: Will the Minister state what is being done to qualify these people?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): By experience, Sir.

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, will the Minister define what he means by "experience"? Is it in terms of so many years, or being able to do a certain job?

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Both.

Mr. Cooke: I was an assistant district commissioner during my first tour in this country.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): The hon. gentleman took my reply right out of my own mouth.

MINISTERIAL STATEMENTS

SESSIONAL COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I wish to inform hon. Members of the Council that Mr. C. G. Usher has been appointed to be a member of the Sessional Committee in place of Sir Charles Markham who, recently resigned.

BUSINESS OF COUNCIL

I would also like to draw hon. Members' attention to the revised list of Heads which has been circulated as the result of a meeting of the Sessional Committee yesterday evening. Hon. Members will notice that there has been an alteration as between item 2 and item 4. Previously item 2 was the Ministry of Labour, Social Security and Adult Education. The Minister-designate is due to return to this country on Monday and we felt that it would be unfair on him to have to take this Head immediately on his return, and the Sessional Committee has therefore recommended that the Head of Education should be taken in the second place, and Commerce and Industry third, and thereafter Labour.

BILL

SECOND READING

The Specific Loan (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) Bill

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. Mackenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, on 24th March, Council agreed to the following Motion:—

That this Council notes that the Government is seeking to borrow £2,000,000 from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to finance loans to African farmers and co-operative societies and to construct and improve feeder roads in African areas of high potential.

My hon. friend the Secretary to the Treasury at that time gave the House as much background information about the loan as was possible and told the House how we at that stage came to be in the position that actual negotiations with the Bank on details of the loan were imminent.

Whilst the Minister for Agriculture and I were in London during March we met representatives of the World Bank who said that the loan would be processed by them to a sufficient extent to be formally negotiated round about the end of April. We had to explain that for fairly obvious reasons—the Budget and things like that—it would be rather inconvenient to be in Washington at the end of April and the Bank rather exceptionally agreed that we could go over and have our discussions at an earlier date. It was necessary, Sir, for us to have legal advice during these discussions—indeed, Sir, as you are aware that became

[The Minister for Finance and Development] very necessary—and it was one of the most important parts of the discussions and you, Sir, joined us in Washington three days after we had arrived. As a result of the various discussions which took place it was agreed that the Bill which is at present before the House should go forward, although there are certain amendments, which were again agreed with the Bank, and which will be moved at the appropriate stage.

During the talks which took place in Washington sufficient progress was made for the officials of the Bank to be able to put the papers to their executive directors. That, I understand, is to be done within the course of the next few days, and if all goes well, and assuming that this Bill is enacted, we have every hope that the loan arrangement will be signed by Her Majesty's Ambassador at Washington before the end of this month. I should say, Sir, that the loan will be fully guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, as it is one of the essential points in respect of all loans by the International Bank to dependent territories.

The House, Sir, is already aware of the reasons for the loan. That it is primarily intended—that it is intended for two purposes. The first being to make loans to African farmers in the areas of high potential, and also the provision is there for them to be made to co-operative societies; and also for making and improving feeder roads in the same areas. The areas in question are defined as areas in the native lands having more than 25 inches of average annual rainfall and an altitude of more than 4,000 ft. above sea level. Under the agreement which will be signed up to £1,100,000 of the £2,000,000 will be drawn for the agricultural loan programme, and up to £900,000 for the road programme.

Hon. Members will, I am sure, wish to know something about the terms of the loan. As my hon. friend, the Secretary to the Treasury said when the resolution was taken, these will not be easy. The International Bank is not a charitable institution, and does not behave as such. It insists that loans which are granted shall be fully economic and, of course, it goes into the question of repayment carefully and into the ability to repay carefully before the loan is granted, but, of course, during the period of the loan the Bank's officials have the right to come and see how things are going on and to make sure that everything is being done in accordance with the agreement.

The Government, Sir, will have to pay to the Bank a commitment charge at the rate of three-quarters of one per cent on the whole amount of the principal which is not withdrawn from time to time. The maximum, of course, would obviously be £15,000 a year, and that amount will be reduced as the loan is drawn.

As regards the terms, the loan will be repayable in 14 instalments beginning on 15th January, 1964, and ending on 15, July, 1970. From that, as I say, hon. Members will realize that the repayments will be pretty heavy. I am, however, advised by my colleagues that there is no reason why it should not be possible for these repayments to take place. The question, of course, will arise as to whether the fund that will be set up in this way will be a revolving one or not. The hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, I noticed, raised this point during the debate on the resolution. I think, Sir, that possibly at this stage it may be a little early for one to give a definite assurance one way or the other on that. I would hope that these loans, which are intended to do very much more than prime the pump in the areas of high potential would also increase our revenues, and would increase our national income to a sufficient extent to make it possible to bring into being something in the nature of a revolving fund, but I think it would be better for me not to commit myself on that particular point at this stage. After all, it is three and a half years from now before the first repayment will have to be made, and I think the decision on whether we regard this as a 10 year exercise or whether we regard it as a continuing one will have to depend on how the position runs and on the financial position at the end of that time. I merely say that I, myself would hope that we would in one way or another be able to provide something in the way of permanent capital for this kind of thing.

I am afraid I am not able to say what the actual terms will be because the rate of interest for these loans is only fixed on the day on which the loan is signed, and as hon. Members know, rates have a habit of fluctuating fairly rapidly. At the time I was in Washington a similar loan for a very similar purpose to this was signed on behalf of the Rhodesian Government, and at that time the rate of interest was 6 per cent. Incidentally, the amount involved was exactly the same as in our case, and so were the terms of repayment. And I think it is likely that the rate of interest will be of the order of 6 per cent. I am afraid it is unlikely to be much less than that, if any less, and it is more likely to be a little over than a little under 6 per cent.

The Government, Sir, is required to consult the Bank before making any changes in the general arrangements which have been agreed for providing and administering credit to African farmers which could materially affect the provision and administration of the loans under the

[The Minister for Finance and Development] project. The Government is also required to undertake that all the roads included in the project, and all the other roads connecting these roads to the marketing or processing areas will be adequately maintained in accordance with sound engineering practice.

Of course, Sir, as the House is aware, this loan is only part of the financing of our general agricultural programme, which is designed to increase the general wealth of the Colony. The total expenditure on agriculture, and indeed on African agriculture, will be very much more than this £2,000,000. The importance, however, of this particular transaction is first of all that it will be the first time that this Colony has had a loan from the World Bank, and I think hon. Members probably realize the importance from a general credit point of view of being one of the World Bank's clients. It does, so to speak, act as a hallmark in that they do not lend money without making sure that the loan is secure, and I think, Sir, that this may also prove to be a very useful introduction into fresh financial fields for our loan requirements. I certainly hope that that will prove to be the case because the more such new channels we can find the better. I think indeed that that is probably the most important point about the whole thing.

The other is that this will provide African farmers with means whereby to increase their productivity, and therefore increase their wealth much more quickly than has ever been possible before, and they will be able to do this on a considerably larger scale. I do not think, Sir, that anybody should overlook the importance of this from that point of view. It is, Sir, another earnest of the Government's intention to do everything possible to raise the standards of productivity and the wealth of the African people of this Colony as quickly as possible.

Sir, I beg to move.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): seconded.

Question proposed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think the most welcome news from the announcement of this Bill before us is that it is to be guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government. I say that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because in the past when there have been suggestions from this side of the House regarding the obtaining of capital from friendly governments with exportable capital, we have always been told that it was the policy of Her Majesty's Government not to guarantee such loans. This, of course, is foreign capital. The resources of the World Bank are, as we know, drawn from countries all over the world and I would like to ask the Minister when he replies whether he can tell us that there has been a departure in the policy of Her Majesty's Government. He himself did say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the more new channels we can find the better. But we do know—we do know—Mr. Deputy Speaker that there were governments in the past who would have been prepared to lend money to this Colony, provided it was guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government and I take it from the remark of the Minister that he will now go out in search of these new channels to supplement the £2,000,000 that are in this Bill and more millions that we are to learn about in other Bills later.

Sir, I would like information particularly, it refers to clause 3 where it talks about or it says the sum of £2,000,000 sterling, does that mean to say, Sir, that this loan will have to be repaid in sterling, and if so, and remembering that we have been told that it is repayable over 14 instalments, what would be the position if in that time we decided to move off or away from the Sterling Area? Or if we cease to base our currency on sterling?

May we be told also, Mr. Speaker, whether the security in clause 4 is the only security that is required for this loan, or whether this Bank has in mind reaching further out into the life of our Colony and the activities of our Colony in more specific forms?

May we be told also whether this loan has a prior charge over loans already made. We do know from paragraph 5 that future loans from other sources may rank pari passu, but whether in fact this loan has a prior charge is something we should be told.

Then, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may we know what is the security to be demanded by our Government from those to whom this capital is passed on? That is, of course, the areas in which the roads are constructed and the individual farmers and the co-operative societies. As I understand it, Mr. Deputy Speaker, most of these roads will be in district council areas, are we then to assume that the responsibility will be carried by the district councils through their own rating systems, or is this in fact to be a charge on the Colony Central Government revenues? If it is so, it would seem somewhat unfair and unreasonable, because of course local authorities do always expect to carry the responsibility for this type of borrowing, because these are roads, of course, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that will serve a particular area.

Then we should know what the individual is going to provide by way of security. Is it to be charged on his title deeds or is he to give some form of collateral, and how are the co-operatives to secure the money that is advanced to them?

We are not told here the exact terms and conditions of this loan. Will we have an opportunity, Mr. Deputy Speaker, of being informed of these? Will we have from time to time papers laid telling us what has been agreed to? We have been told that the interest rate cannot yet be fixed, it might be six per cent. Would it not be wise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for us at least to have a maximum and minimum in this so that at least we may know the worst and at the same time know the best? It is, I suppose, quite possible that we may have to pay eight per cent if somebody decides that conditions are moving that way.

Was it not possible, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to finance this through the sinking fund method, because as the Minister has told us, a straight repayment of 14 years means a very heavy burden and I would have thought from what he has told us of their confidence in this country, that the Bank would have been prepared, if pushed to it, to finance this on a sinking fund basis so that we could, in fact, refinance it, perhaps, after 14 or 15 years and make the annual instalment that the Colony has to pay a far lesser amount.

May we be told, Mr. Deputy Speaker, whether the Bank requires any particular skilled supervision in respect of the spending of this money. It seems strange that £2,000,000 should be placed in our hands in this way without any requirement as to what calibre of person will administer this in the field.

I said in another debate, and I intend to take the opportunity again in order to provoke the Minister for Agriculture to comment on this, as to why, whether the requirement is there or not by the Bank regarding supervision, we ourselves do not take advantage of this incidental money to encourage countries with the skill that we want to send it here under conditions that would be attractive to them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, mostly I am seeking guidance and seeking information. I must congratulate the Ministers for Finance and Agriculture on what they have done for us in these negotiations and I hope that in the information I have sought that it is not taken as criticism from this side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Khamisi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support this Motion before the House and also to congratulate the Minister for Finance and the Minister for Agriculture for the efforts they have made in negotiating and obtaining for us the sum of £2,000,000 which will be used mostly in African areas.

Although I very much endorse the necessity and the desirability of obtaining a loan such as this in order to improve the African areas, I take very great exception to the terms and conditions of this Bill in so far as this loan will only be used in such areas which would exclude the Coastal Province. Once more, Sir, I would like to drive home to the Government, as I have done in recent times, that the tendency on the part of Government is to make it extremely difficult for the Africans in the Coast Province to benefit from schemes of this nature. According to the Schedule attached to this Bill, the loan can only be used in areas whose rainfall is 25 inches per annum and whose height is more than 4,000 feet.

Now what I do not very much understand is from which source will the funds to pay the interest on this loan be got? Will it be taken from the taxes which are paid by people living in this area, or will it be paid from the general funds of the Colony, which include taxation from the people who live at the Coast? I feel it is absolutely wrong and shameful on the part of Government that the poorer the people are, they should be used to subsidize schemes of this nature for the benefit of people who are in areas which are better off.

I do not suggest for a moment that it is wrong to improve the agricultural potential of the high potential areas, but I maintain and stress that it is absolutely essential that the people at the Coast should be able to benefit from loans of this nature. I am completely distressed and sometimes completely fed up by Government putting up in this House Bills such as this which are only going to benefit people in one area at the expense of the others in the other areas.

Mr. Alexander: And only the Africans!

Mr. Khamisi: And the Africans too, yes. For that reason, Sir, I would, although I do support this Bill, like to ask Government whether they have any plans or programmes for spending a sum similar to this or anywhere near this for the regions which will not benefit by this particular loan. I urge the Minister for Finance and the Minister for Agriculture to tell us and to make whatever efforts they are able to make in order to obtain further funds for us in the Coastal Province.

With these few remarks I am not sure whether to support or to oppose this Bill.

Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Khamisi: However, I support the Motion.

An Hon. Member: Well done!

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I was most

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] interested in the remarks by the last hon. Member when he stated that he thought that the money being spent in one particular area should not be serviced and paid for by others in another particular area. It sounds to me very much like an old policy which I remember was published some 18 months to two years ago, I think under the Federal Independence Party. And that seems the answer to the remark by the hon. Member for Nairobi West with regard to money being spent on roads in African district council areas. This money will be dealt with, of course, like any other money is for grants for roads. If the African district councils were expected to service this money, pay interest rates, etc., then one would naturally have to be fair to everybody else and all the loan money granted for development to county councils, municipalities and so on, would also be so serviced. But that has not been the practice in the past and, surely, it is not right that it should be done now. Expenditure of money on roads of this sort is going to be for the benefit of everybody, not any particular area only. So—I can see the hon. Member there with a puzzled look on his face, I would explain once more the capital development money which is made available to local authorities to improve and construct their roads coming from the Development Committee or the Development Fund money is also loan money and the taxpayer services that money. The money is granted to local authorities without service charges and as a direct grant, this money should be regarded in the same way if it is to be spent by African district councils.

I beg to support, Sir.

Mr. Odinga: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I find it really very difficult to support this Bill.

An Hon. Minister: Shame!

Mr. Odinga: Shame perhaps, but most shame on you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, getting loans is a welcome proposition if the loan is to be applied for the general development of the country. But when loans are brought to come and create a rift between the people of the country it is really a pity. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I feel that until recently the Government's policy has been to concentrate more on the European agriculture in this country the Highlands.

Hon. Ministers: Question!

Mr. Odinga: Yes, a question which it will be up to you to answer.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Yes, I'm afraid so.

Mr. Odinga: Now, having seen the difficulties and the troubles which have come as a result of that, they are trying again with the Africans to extend the same privileges for the Africans, some Africans, in order to create some divisions and to create a class of Africans as landlords against the landless population. I must protest most strongly about this. If there is money to be spent on agriculture, agriculture is agriculture, everywhere. We cannot say that agriculture which is on lands above 4,000 feet will probably produce more than the lands which are in the lowlands. I am sure that in those areas, even in those areas in the lowlands, they have some cash crops which they also will produce which will be used usefully. For example, there is sisal. Sisal is grown in lower areas and as such it also needs encouragement and it also brings in money to the country, and I do not see why there should be a concentration on the lands which are at altitudes of over 4,000 feet and at the same time with a rainfall of over 25 inches per year. I think that by making this a sort of discriminatory fund I shall have to oppose, oppose it strongly, although I welcome any loan which comes— (Laughter.) May I say that you are confusing me by laughing so much. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I welcome any loan which does not come to create divisions and discrimination among the people and any such loans which will come to be used in sisal growing areas. As such, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to oppose.

Mr. ole Ndihamu (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, in the first place may I congratulate the hon. Ministers for Finance and Agriculture for their help, we believe, in getting this loan for this country. Personally, however, I find myself in a very difficult position at the moment because being on the Government side I particularly think that I must support the Government. There is one thing that I wish to point out, that agriculture in this country, I think, includes cattle and cattle management too. When this loan comes up—and the Government of Kenya says that it is going to high potential areas—we in a district like Masai land find that seven-eighths of it will be absolutely excluded. In that district there is no water. In that district the Government has done almost nothing to improve the cattle management. In that district the Government has not even done anything for agriculture. There is only one officer between Loitokitok and—(Inaudible)..... which is right up in—(Inaudible).....

who is supposed to look after the agriculture of the district. That is really why I do not understand whether Government has had that policy of the old, old Governors of this country who said that we should leave the country to die. I merely want to ask the Minister when he comes to reply if there are other developments suggested by Government to come out of the finances of the Colony. I wonder whether it is the policy of the Government to make a loan even up to now when an African Government will take their place soon. I really always get to wondering because historians have said, even some very high Government officials of the past: "Look here, don't loan to these chaps. Leave them alone and they will die a natural death." I am really perturbed and when these loans come up again we have no water. Nothing has been done about the agriculture of the Masai country. They say it will be for high potential areas. The Masai District is left alone, even now. I would like the Minister for Finance particularly in this one—I think I am going to speak on the Agriculture Head some time so I will not touch on many points now—but I would like the Minister for Finance to tell us clearly what he thinks about the water in the Masai area, in this particular land, and when the cattle are going to be developed into an economic asset. One and a quarter million animals in that country are just useless because these people have done nothing to improve it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, as I said before, I am in a very difficult position, but I will support the Motion.

The Minister for Information and Broadcasting (Mr. Harris): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I also find myself in a very difficult position. I thought, Sir, that three senior Members of the Government had gone to Washington and carried out some very excellent negotiations in order to assist African—and I repeat, African—agriculturalists in this country. When, Sir, they come back and this Bill is presented they find opposition from African Members on the grounds that it is discriminatory. I am astounded and, like the hon. Member for Mombasa Area, I, too, do not know whether I ought to support or reject this Bill. Being a Member of the Government, Sir, of course, I am going to accept and support the Bill. But the hon. Member for Central Nyanza, Sir, does not seem to realize that if he borrows money to help him build a house it makes more money available for him to buy more beads—I said beads—and, Sir, there is no question of discrimination in this matter. If this is assisting African agriculturalists in particular areas it merely means that there is more of our own money available to assist Africans, and that is the policy of this Government in other areas. And I suggest, Sir, that this Bill should be opposed by a representative of the African people I believe is fantastic.

I support.

Mr. Rubia: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, it was not my intention to participate in this matter, but I think I, too, feel that I should say something because it struck me as rather surprising that a loan that is intended to assist the class of community that we have here who actually have been in need of assistance in the way of loans should be opposed by, if I may say so, my colleague Africans in this House. It is a matter of fact that many people have aired views concerning the consolidated land but it will be a waste of, not only money, but also the time and energy that has been spent on land consolidation if these farmers will not receive financial assistance, let alone technical assistance. I would have expected therefore every hon. Member of this House to support the idea of these loans though not 100 per cent—that the whole loan should go to the Central Province, because I think that is what many people have in mind—but at least quite a big proportion of it because that is fair if the labour which has been spent on land consolidation is to bear any fruits. Financial assistance must be forthcoming and I think it is unfortunate that people should express doubts as to the intended way of using this loan. Personally, I am grateful because I think it will prove to those people who doubted about the benefits of land consolidation their mistake when this money goes to assist those farmers who have consolidated their land. But, Sir, I do not want to labour on that very much because I realize it can be very controversial and as originally from Central Province. I do not want to say much on it.

One other point which I would like to mention here: maybe the Minister for Finance did say this, but we on this side of the House do not hear very well when the Front Benches speak, and if he did, I am sorry: is the question of the allocation of these loans. I believe many people are aware that it is quite a difficult thing to do, to know to whom it is worth giving these loans to, who is likely to make the most use of the loans, and who is likely to honour the obligation of repaying the loan. But I believe, Sir, it is true to say that there are also dissatisfactions in the country where such loans which are being given to farmers now tend to go to people who are actually not in dire need of that loan. There are known cases of people who have as much, shall we say, as much as £1,000 in the bank and yet they take loans of, say, £200. I think, Sir, there should be better distribution of these loans. It is vitally important because the loans, I feel, should go to those who need it most.

I beg to support.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am very sorry to see that none of the hon. Members who represent the Central Province are here today when we are discussing this most important Bill which has such a lot to do with them. I would like to thank the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Rubia, for his kind remarks and to tell him that the Director of Agriculture will later in this debate be explaining just how the allocation of loans and the method is done.

Now, Sir, if I could move to the remarks made by my friend the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Ntimama. Sir, what he must realize is that although this is tied—and other hon. Members must—although this is tied to 25 in. and 4,000 ft. it is available for cattle as well as for agriculture. What they must also remember is that as this money becomes available in these areas of over 4,000 ft. and over 25 in. of rain, so it will release other finance to be made available for other areas. Therefore, all the other areas will benefit from it. I will give a specific case of how the Coast Province is going to benefit from this. I would like to thank the hon. Member for Mombasa Area whom I look upon as a townsman, for taking such very great interest in country matters.

Now, Sir, we have operating at the moment the I.C.A. money which is available to African farmers and the moment the I.B.R.D. money becomes available, I hope that, with permission from the I.C.A. we may be able to utilize the money which is left and is still quite considerable for other areas—and I have in mind, in particular, the Coast Area. Over and above that, Sir, I hope that we may be able to use a certain amount of ALDEV's rural development money in the coastal strip.

Now, Sir, I would like to inform the hon. Member for Mombasa Area that I personally, since becoming a Minister, have taken a very great personal interest in the difficulties of farming in the coastal area and Mtaita Hills, and had I known at the time, that he was so interested, I would have asked him to accompany me on my trips in that area. I shall certainly do so in future and hope that he will accept the challenge to come round with me, to see what has been done at the coast and the great difficulties that we run into in those areas. I would like to take this opportunity of telling him that Taita is going ahead extremely well, and also consolidation in the Taita Hills. Over and above that, we started over the last year, a new research station just outside Mombasa and I am sure he will be hearing more about that in the very near future.

Now, Sir, if I may come back to my friend in the Back Bench from Masai land. I would like to say to him that he and his people are perhaps sitting on the most highly potential land in Kenya today. Sir, they have high potential land which is excellent land for tea and for pyrethrum but, until the Masai tribe, as a tribe, come forward with some method which will allow us to get in and help them to cultivate that high potential land, our hands in Government are tied. He said that we had spent absolutely nothing on the ranching areas of the Masai land. But I do not want to go over all the figures I gave the hon. Member opposite who raised this very question yesterday, but when I answer in the Estimates debate I will attempt—if I do not have to answer him until tomorrow—to get out exactly what we have spent in Masai land over the last five to ten years, and I am sure that the hon. Member will find that it runs into very many thousands of pounds, and I think he must appreciate, as I think I have already said, that as this money is used in the high potential areas it will release money to be used in other areas.

Now, Sir, my old friend the hon. Member for Nyanza Central came back again with this question that less money was spent in African areas than in European areas. I have the figures available and I will answer that under my own Estimates. What he does not appreciate is that when one goes to international people to get a loan, they are the people who stipulate how the loan will be spent, not us, who are going to borrow it from them. All you have got to do is to keep arguing an uphill battle, and it may interest the hon. Member to know that in the first instance when we started negotiating, these figures were far less than official to the potential areas and the medium potential areas than they are today, and they are only there mainly because of the uphill battle which we carried on, in trying to allow the World Bank money to be used in a greater area, and I think he must appreciate that it is the World Bank in this instance, who must lay down, in the schedule and in the project, just how and where you can spend the money.

I think he must also appreciate, and this is also in answer to the question put forward by the hon. Member for Nairobi West, that World Bank money is true international money and it is not only world government money but it is commercial money, and I am sure that my hon. colleague the Minister for Finance and Development will be covering that point more fully.

Now, Sir, there was the point raised about the calibre of the person and the technical staff to be used in the field. I can heartily agree with what the hon. Member for Nairobi West said on this, and I appreciate that we are going to need in all this development further technical staff. The moment the finance is available, and we know that without any doubt we are going to get it, I can give him an assurance that I will move into the country he has in mind to see whether there is not the staff available in those places who can help. He may like to know that I have started on this and have had discussions with the consultants of those countries who can help us in this scheme, as to the availability of technical staff from them, and the result I have had so far is more than interesting.

I beg to support.

Mr. Muhoya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, one of the things which really matters is agriculture. I support the loan wholeheartedly without any reservations. Agriculture is our chief industry, and in fact I would like to give some gratitude to the Ministry for the encouragement of agriculture in the African areas, and for the land consolidation and the land demarcation. In my area it has been completed, and I know the results better than most people. I oppose anybody who opposes it.

I will refer to only a few specific cases. I will refer to the Mbogo Institute established very recently. In my area—

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, on a point of order, should this not come up under the Estimates debate rather than under this loan programme?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): The relevance of an argument is not always at once apparent, and I was waiting to see the relevancy of the hon. Member's arguments to this Bill. I understand that he is speaking for the areas of high potential in respect of this loan.

Mr. Muhoya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I was actually speaking on the loan and I just wanted to show the importance of the loan.

We have the Wambugu Institute where cattle are bred and where Africans are being trained to know the exact way of how to breed cattle. I think I should deviate a little and come to a very important matter in connection with this loan. Some of the hon. Members will remember that there was a factory at Karatina which was processing vegetables. I regret to say that it was closed on account of—if I may be excused—agitation of some amateur irresponsible politicians. I wish the Minister could try and get a part of this loan and open up a new factory at Karatina. Now, Karatina has a very easy climate, not only Karatina but most parts of Nyeri have a good climate, and I think this is what the Minister for Agriculture has called "areas of high potential" and I will refer to a case where this again concerns the loan.

I have seen some farmers in Nyeri—as I have said just now it has a very good and easy climate; you can grow almost anything you want—and I think they should be encouraged in all directions to grow cash crops, to grow vegetables, to grow fruit. I know of a farmer, I will not mention his name, who has more than 100 trees of plums. Now, plums are very marketable especially in December when the hon. Members are aware that plum pudding is eaten. But this farmer has to go on looking for markets. He has to go to the ordinary small markets in the reserves to try to sell his plums. I happen to be very near him and I know how much he grows. It is not less than 10 tons of plums. Now, I do not know whether it is the responsibility of the Minister for Commerce or the responsibility of the Minister for Agriculture, but I would like the Minister concerned to try and see the special farmer—I will be very willing to tell the name—at his request.

Now, I come back again to the farm planning. It is very, very much concerned with this loan. I appreciate it and I like it, and anybody who opposes it knows nothing about agriculture. But I do not like strings. You get this money with certain strings. There are farmers who through experience have learned to know their soil, they have studied it and know it, even, I dare say, better than the Department of Agriculture, and these farmers could and should be given loans without strings. In fact this has been discouraging some farmers who are very capable from taking the loans. They say, "If we take these loans these people will be here every day telling me to do this and to do that, and so we would rather not have it." Therefore I would say that these loans should not be given only to those people who accept farm planning. I like it, as I have just said before, and it is very good, but if a farmer does not want it—I mean, if he is a successful farmer, why come and force it down his throat?

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, once again I support this loan.

The Assistant Minister for Education (Mr. Waweru): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I do not want to keep the House in speaking on this Motion, but for the purpose of recording I thought that I would say a few words on the loan. It has been the wish of the Kikuyu, Embu and Meru people in the Central Province who have completed the land consolidation that loans should be made available to enable the new farmers to develop their land. This has never been accelerated by the Department of Agriculture in the Central Province which has always been wanting very to improve the African agriculture in the Province because they have been handicapped by the financial difficulties.

Latterly before the House we have got this Bill and to my very great surprise I was perturbed when the hon. Member for Central Nyanza opposed the Bill. It would be very convenient if he would let this Bill go through and let him go to Nyanza in his own constituency and use his influence to stop the African farmers there not to have the loans and let the money be used in other high potential areas, and I am certain that his remarks would not be welcomed by the people of the Central Province. There may be some areas in Nyanza Province where the land enclosure has been completed. But if he found it so fit to go and oppose the money being used in his own Province where I am sure he would be punishing the innocent farmers who would like to get on with the improvement of their farms then I am sure that the whole of this amount can be used by the people of the Central Province.

With these remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I support the Motion.

Mr. Kiamba: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I support the Motion, but in doing so I want to say that those Members who say that those who oppose the Motion know nothing about agriculture are not right. For I think they are opposing this because they think that it is a loan given to only one particular district or province. I am trying to say this because I know what kind of feelings people will have in other provinces. I cannot say that the loan is a bad thing, because I know it is a good thing. I would not like people in the Central Province to go without this loan, but I, at the same time, want the other people in the other provinces, to know when they will get a similar kind of loan, if not more, and I ask the Minister to say this when he comes to reply.

With these few remarks, Sir, I want to support the Motion.

Mr. Swynnerton (Director of Agriculture): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I want to speak on a few aspects of loans to African areas. There has been some assumption in this debate that Government has not got a co-ordinated agricultural development plan. I myself have been associated with co-ordinated agricultural development plans in this country for the last ten years. Those co-ordinated plans have covered all areas. They have covered the highland areas, they have covered the areas of high potential, they have covered the pastoral areas, they have covered the coastal areas, and they have covered rivers which have been used for irrigation. Government has allocated money to each of those different aspects of development. This loan that we are just debating today is related to one particular aspect of that development. We have had money for carrying out the Troup Report, for improving the farm planning, water, construction services, for improving research. We have had £5,500,000 from the United Kingdom Government for the specific development of African areas in addition to anything that the Colony itself has put into the development or has borrowed for development. We got £1,000,000 more assistance for development in the African areas from the International Co-operation Administration. The Rockefeller Foundation has assisted us with the development of agricultural education. This, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is just one facet of our total agricultural development plan. It is being put into one particular area and there are very good reasons for this. Many Members in this House were not Members when the Royal Commission on Land reported. The Royal Commission recommended very strongly that what funds Government had available for agricultural development should be put into the areas that could produce the quickest return. The Royal Commission stressed that we were a poor country and that if we were going to increase our wealth, first of all it must come from agriculture, and secondly it would only come from productive development. They went so far as to say that less work should be done in the semi-arid pastoral areas than in the productive areas. The Government did not entirely support that view. The Government felt that perhaps three-fifths or four-fifths of the cattle population and livestock population and perhaps one-fifth of the total population were in the dry lands and that if those areas were neglected the desert might encroach into the more productive land. For that reason the Government did not go all the way with the Royal Commission on Land, so Government in the last ten years has put several million pounds of development into this dry land, the land below 25 inches, which is not covered by this loan. I want to make that point very clear, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Water has been developed in the drier areas, grazing schemes have been developed, and something of the order of 2,500,000 acres of grazing schemes are now in operation. Tsetse clearing has been done. Livestock marketing has been introduced. Diseases have been controlled, creating more problems in those areas for Government to continue to tackle. I want to make that very clear, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that this loan is only one facet of the overall development plan, and I believe that we have a good development plan.

Now, in taking loans, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we have a very great responsibility to see that they are recovered. Loans can, therefore, only be [Mr. Swynnerton] carried by productive enterprises unless either the Government is going to subsidize the loans or unless there are going to be heavy losses on them. If a farmer is going to take a loan he must be able to service it and he will only be able to service that loan if he has a well-planned and well-run farm, if he has cash crops and if he has productive cattle on that holding, and only in that way can a loan be serviced. I have not got a table of repayment charges, but I would guess that if a person taking a loan for £500 has to repay it in five years he would have to find £130 a year in addition to any net profits he might wish to make. If he were going to repay it in ten years it might be something of the order of £80 a year. Those, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are heavy charges, and therefore only certain lands can carry those charges. In the drier lands the money which the Government has put in has been very substantially grant money for water supplies and that sort of thing, but those loans have either been on a £ for £ basis or even only 30 per cent of the total cost because the Government knows that those areas cannot carry the full loan charges.

Another matter is the question of security. The hon. Member for Nairobi West raised the matter of security. We recently had in this country Mr. Harold Williams, sent to us with the assistance of the International Co-operation Administration, who has 25 or 30 years' experience in the United States of operating the Farmers' Home Administration, which is a body which operates Government loans for farmers. It is called "supervised credit". "Hard credit" and that is the sort of credit that can be obtained from the Land Bank, which must be pretty fully covered by mortgages on land or chattels, and therefore people must have titles to land. But there are many worthy farmers who have not got titles to land or who may already have mortgaged their land and who can yet do with money to increase production and can repay those loans. Therefore, we have two types of loans, hard loans and supervised credit. In this country, with land consolidation, many farmers are getting titles to their land. In the Central Province very large numbers of farmers have had their land consolidated, but only a proportion of those so far have taken out freehold titles. In large areas of the country there is no title to land and, therefore, there is no land security in regard to loans. Therefore, security must be based on personal character, the ability of the farmer to farm, the ability of the Agricultural Department to help that farmer to farm and the knowledge of the members of the Agricultural Department of whether that farmer will, in effect make good with any loan he may get.

Now, the hon. Member for Nairobi West did suggest that we might get in people from outside. I think that in what I am going to say I will slightly contradict the Minister for Agriculture, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I would say this, that if we are going to have adequate supervision of loans, if we are going to find out the ability and integrity of the farmers, we need people who are working in the field day by day, who can speak the Swahili language and who are known by the farmers and who do know the farmers. Therefore in the main it has got to be our own people in this country, our agricultural instructors in the field, our assistant agricultural officers, our agricultural officers and they by living in the districts which the farmers will know who is credit-worthy and who is not credit-worthy, because they themselves will be helping the farmers with their farm layouts, their farm plans, their cash crop developments, and so on. When a farmer has taken a loan they will be able to say to him, "You will be able to carry this loan only if you plant out an acre, two acres, three acres of tea, of coffee, or pyrethrum, or if you get a couple of Guernsey cows. Therefore it has got to be a very intimate process as between the lending body, the Government, and the farmer himself. The chain of loans will be that farmers together with their agricultural instructors and agricultural officers will draw up plans to apply for such money as is needed for farm development. Right through that planning an eye will be given to the productivity of the development. Money can only be put into something that will produce and not into something that will not produce. From there the application will go to the district agricultural committees on which are represented the technical people together with representatives of the African farmers. The MacGillivray Report I think is going to recommend that the members on the district agricultural committees should be elected by farmers. Therefore those farmers, those African farmers, on the committees will represent the people who are in those zones and will have a knowledge of them. That recommendation will come right up to the African Land Development Board, or whatever its successor may be, and will then be approved and issued. The money will then be issued back again through that same chain of command, back to the individual farmer, and the farmer will just draw those moneys which he needs for development at that time, drawing extra money as each phase of the development takes place.

The hon. Member for Mombasa Area did raise a number of points in connexion with the coast and I think the Minister replied to most of them. I would say, however, that Government has put a tremendous amount of money into coastal [Mr. Swynnerton] development through loans, through the development of water supplies, the development of grazing schemes, and the development of cash crops, and I will speak on this in greater detail, Mr. Deputy Speaker, when we get back on to the Ministry of Agriculture's Estimates.

The hon. Member for Nyanza Central appears to be unaware of the level of Lake Victoria. Lake Victoria is 3,750 ft. above sea level, and it may be a few feet on either side of that, and you only have to climb 250 ft. to qualify for a loan. Now that means that practically every square mile of South Nyanza, Kericho, Central Nyanza, North Nyanza, Elgon-Nyanza will qualify for the loans. The exclusion of any areas would be purely technical.

The hon. Member therefore would qualify for loans if he and his constituents would get down to sound farming and develop sound farms, improve their livestock. It is merely his wish, I think, to camouflage the backwardness of his people and his unwillingness to try to urge them forward that makes him oppose a Motion like this. I am quite certain that within his own district and all the other constituencies of Nyanza Province good farmers will be just as much eligible for loans as those in the Central Province. In fact, we on our side will be very happy to see Nyanza get a bigger proportion of the loans, because Nyanza at present is further back than the Central Province and we would like to see an evening up in the development process.

The hon. Member for the Southern Province, Machakos, supported the Motion. Again, a substantial area of the Southern Province lies above 4,000 ft., substantial areas of Kitui, Machakos and Masailand, and if farmers will get down to good development there and provide security through their own ability they will be eligible for loans too.

I notice that the hon. Nominated Member on this side, Mr. Rubia, did suggest a means test. In hard credit it is normal to find out what are the assets of a farmer when he applies for a loan to see whether in fact he can finance the loan development himself or not in addition to his providing security, and his suggestion can obviously be looked into at the time that loans come up.

The hon. Member for Embu and Nyeri raised the question of the old Karatina factory. Well the old Karatina factory I am afraid is dead and gone, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We have two or three canning factories in other areas which are very readily accessible to Karatina and those other areas of the Central Province. There is a canning factory at Thika and there is a canning factory at Machakos. Before another canning factory was provided it would have to be gone into very carefully to see whether it would not in fact flounder in competition with those other factories.

On the development of factories, it is a function not of this loan, but to go to such bodies as the Colonial Development Corporation for assistance. It is hoped in the very near future to set up a Cash Crops Development Authority, at this moment mainly for the development of tea, but it may well be that authority will be able to secure funds for other cash crop developments. If we have success with the sugar developments in Nyanza and if we wanted to go in for the factory at Karatina. That would be a more appropriate authority, Mr. Deputy Speaker, than taking a loan out of this particular fund.

I beg to support.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think it is a great pity that the hon. Member for Central Nyanza is not here to have the answers to the points that he made. It is astonishing, Sir, how the hon. Member seems to get hold of the wrong end of the stick and get a firm grasp of it and wave it around. I do wish, Sir, that he had been here so that he could hear from my hon. friend the Director of Agriculture and from the Minister that the Government is doing this in the interests of all the African people of Kenya and that the only reason why this particular loan is restricted to the high potential lands is that the World Bank required a definite project; it also insists that its money shall be put into the sort of project which will bring in the largest returns most quickly, and that is going to be done by putting the money into the land of high potential rather than in putting it into the low potential areas where grant money and other types of much easier credit are far more appropriate. I do hope, Sir, that although the hon. Member is not present his colleagues in the House will try to impress on him that the Government does not spend its time thinking up means of creating rifts as between one part of the country and another or between one community in the country and another. The Government is equally anxious to see the welfare of all parts of the Colony looked after just as it is of all communities, and I do hope, Sir, that, as I say, the hon. gentleman's colleagues will do their best if they can to impress that on him and to try to get him to see that the Government is really trying to help him and his people and that this sort of criticism that he has put forward does not really help anybody.

Just one further word on the question of discrimination. As the House knows this Bill was taken before the Council of State and was fully

[The Minister for Finance and Development] discussed there and of course the point is, as I have said, that the World Bank must have a definite project and so what one did was to take a certain amount of the agricultural programme which could be turned into such a project and into one with a high return, take it out and finance it in this particular way. That means of course that the rest of the programme which is very considerable and indeed the rest of the Government's development programme which is going to require a total loan of £16,500,000, or £18,500,000, if this is included, it is so much easier to achieve the total of that programme.

Sir, my hon. friend the Member for Nairobi West spoke about Her Majesty's Government's guarantee in this case, and welcomed the fact that in this particular case they have broken with their normal rule and have agreed to guarantee this particular loan. The position there is, Sir, that the World Bank only lends to members such as, for instance, the United Kingdom, or alternatively it will lend to non-members such as Kenya if a member guarantees the repayments. At the time that these provisions were made the Parliament in the United Kingdom passed legislation in 1949 authorizing Her Majesty's Government to guarantee loans from the International Bank up to a maximum of £50,000,000. It is an exception to their general approach to this matter and I can assure the hon. gentleman that there have been discussions with Her Majesty's Government on the point which he put forward on the possibility of their guaranteeing colonial loans generally. There have been discussions on that from time to time. It is not a matter which is allowed to drop. But so far they have not felt able to agree to that proposal, I have no doubt that the matter will be mentioned again in the future. But they have done one thing to help in this picture. They have put up the Exchequer loan money which is really their answer to the situation in which the Colony—I say it is their answer and I do not say that the hon. Member agrees that it is the most satisfactory answer—has found itself of not being able to raise the money they needed on the London market in the way that they have been able to before. As I say, however, Sir, this, I hope will be the first of the loans in new fields, and I think that the very fact that we have been able to borrow from the International Bank, and the very fact that we can show ourselves loan worthy by their standards, which are very high ones, should certainly help us to get into other fields. I certainly hope it will.

Sir, the hon. Member for Nairobi West also referred to the statement in clause 3 of the Bill, that the sum to be borrowed would be £2,000,000 sterling. I would invite his attention to what followed—"or the equivalent sum in other currencies". I understand, Sir, that to a certain extent the currency in which an International Bank loan happens to be made available to quite a considerable extent depends on what funds are available to the Bank at the particular time. In our case, however, they would certainly be converted into sterling for our purposes here. I understand, Sir, that it is likely—I should imagine it is very likely—that in actual fact this particular loan will be made available, or at least will be originally raised at the other end, in dollars. And indeed in the agreement with the Bank the reference will be to the dollar equivalent of this, that is $5,600,000, but for our practical purposes we can take it that the sum we are dealing with is whatever is the equivalent to £2,000,000 sterling.

On the question of security, Sir, that is our security to the Bank, my hon. friend, the Director of Agriculture has dealt fully with the question of the security of people who borrow from us. But our security to the Bank, Sir—the position there is that this loan will not take priority over our other loans. What it does is to ensure equal priority with all other loans, and indeed, we shall, in the agreement, have to undertake that in the future, as the Bill says, we shall have to report any future borrowings so that they too will merely rank as equal with this particular loan. I think that is a very reasonable attitude to take. The same, position as it applies to us, will incidentally apply to all agencies of the Government as well as to the Government itself.

Now, Sir, on the question of security. As I say, my hon. friend, the Director of Agriculture, has dealt with that, and the Minister for Local Government has dealt with the question of the roads. There is not any intention of passing this charge on to the district councils concerned. This will be a case where the load will be borne by the taxpayer in the interests of general development, and as I say, it is our hope and belief that the results of this investment will make it possible, not only to repay the loan, but also to push ahead with further development.

As regards the terms, I would myself expect that the rate would be somewhere round about 6 per cent, unless something very curious happens between now and the end of the month. I have had some calculations done as to what the loan charges would be if the loan were at 6 per cent and had to be repaid in equated instalments—14 equated instalments during the period 1964 to 1970—and I am informed that according to Mr. Archer's tables the figure is £364,104 per annum. The repayment of the loan, which was a point which was raised by one hon. Member—I think it was the Member for Mombasa Area—

[The Minister for Finance and Development] the repayment of the loan that the Government makes, and the payment of the interest will be a responsibility in so far as the loan element is concerned, of the individual people of co-operative societies, or other institutions, whatever they may be who, in fact, are given the loans. It will be up to them to pay the interest, and as my hon. friend, the Director of Agriculture said, these loans will be put into the places where they bring in the best return, and we have no reason to believe that this is not going to be economically possible for the people concerned.

There is, of course, no question really of people in the other parts of the Colony subsidizing that part of the transaction, and indeed so far as the road side is concerned, these areas are becoming rich, and I think that they will, to quite a considerable extent, at any rate, through their own contributions to the revenue, indirectly and directly, they will themselves be contributing quite sufficient to cover any subsidy element that there may be on the road side. Certainly I would say that it would be quite incorrect to suggest that the coast was subsidizing the Central Province, or indeed any other part of Kenya in this matter.

The hon. Member for Nairobi West mentioned one other point, Sir, and that was, why could we not use the sinking fund method. We would, of course, very much have liked to be able to do so, just as we would very much have liked to be able to extend the loan over a longer period. It would have been very useful if we could have had the money for 25, 30 or 40 years, but in discussing this matter the Bank, Sir, made it quite clear that they regard this as an economic proposition for a shortish-term/medium-term credit and which should be able to pay for itself even on the terms it put forward. I think that is so. They certainly had a very careful look at our economy before entering into the agreement, and of course there is one advantage in this, that it ensures that because the matter is being dealt with as an economic one, in just the way that a commercial bank would deal with the matter, and as I said, the World Bank does not regard itself as a charitable institution, one important result of that is that the Government will have every incentive to ensure that the money is used in the ways which are likely to increase the wealth of the Colony most rapidly. I do not think, Sir, so far as I know, the International Bank does, in fact, issue loans under the sinking fund method. They expect to be repaid in full within whatever period is laid down. Of course, they do give one very great facility, and that is the period of grace at the beginning of the loan during which only the interest is payable on money that has been issued, and the commitment charges in respect of money which has not been issued.

Sir, my hon. friends, the Minister for Agriculture, and the Director have, I think, dealt with all the other points which have been raised during the debate, and I beg to move.

The question was put and carried.

The Bill was read a Second Time and committed to a Committee of the whole House tomorrow.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Order for Committee read.

VOTE 21—MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, ANIMAL HUSBANDRY AND WATER RESOURCES

MOTION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

(Resumption of Debate Interrupted on 11th May, 1960)

Major Day (Aberdare): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would first of all like to pay a tribute to the Minister on his first presentation of these Estimates for the wealth of detail—at times I must confess somewhat confusing—into which he went, and I must say here and now, Sir, that after that most of my speech must be taken up in what I hope will be constructive criticisms.

Now, the text which I should like to talk on today, and I almost feel like a parson in discussing this matter in this House, because I feel so strongly upon it, is, Sir, to quote, with your permission, the last two paragraphs of the pledges, now somewhat out of fashion, which were given to the Europeans when they were induced to come and settle as farmers in this country. I will not bore the House with a long reiteration of all the other 10, but I would like to put on record once again, because it has already been done in this House previously, the Royal Warrant in 1953 which contained this paragraph:—

"And that in their deliberations our Commission should take account of existing obligations incurred by treaty agreement or formal declaration of policy in relation to the security of land reserved for the different races and groups in the various parts of the territories concerned."

And the next one, Sir, in 1954, by the Conservative Government, when Mr. Lennox Boyd was the Colonial Secretary:—

"Her Majesty's Government are not likely to lend themselves to encouraging people to come if they intend to betray them or their (sic) predecessors."

[Major Day]

Now, Sir, I would like to start. It is, I know, a matter of humour, and humour is a most destructive weapon, but humour or no humour, I am going to drive my points home today. I would like to clear up first, Sir, what I consider is a most unfortunate complication in that part of the Minister's speech dealing with resettlement, in which confusion was apparently created between the terms "compensation" and "land stabilization". Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Mount Kenya last year in this House first mentioned the matter of a financial cushion. There was no question of compensation as such, and I would further like to clear up a point which was made yesterday by my friend, the hon. Nominated Member, Commander Goord, who talked, I thought, rather fruitlessly, as to who might perhaps claim the credit for having first discussed this matter of resettlement during the Lancaster House Conference. But I must, in fairness, put on record that we were always attempting, Sir, to obtain a stabilization fund, in order that the land values could be maintained, because unless you have that stabilization fund you will not get back the confidence which at the moment is hovering very precariously among the European farmers in their land units. I cannot emphasize this too strongly, it is not our intention to indulge in a rat race. It has always been our intention to remain here if we can under reasonable conditions, but to protect our people with some form of insurance scheme.

Now, Sir, this scheme must be two-pronged, and when people talk, and perhaps some people quite unwittingly confuse the issues of compensation and resettlement and stabilization, it is something which land stabilization perhaps can easily happen because—let us be quite honest about this issue—we do not hope that that unhappy time will ever come when it will be necessary to have compensation for our land values, but, Sir, it might come, and if it does come it is the duty of this Government now, and not later, to see that we have an insurance, and not merely platitudinous political assurance, but something definite and concrete. I say this, Sir, and I hate saying a thing like this, but I say it because if you look at the history of England's treatment of her minorities, it is not one we should be unjustifiably proud of. We want a definite assurance now.

Now the other day I listened to a most excellent speech by the hon. Chief Minister opposite, in which he quoted a little nursery rhyme, and it is not out of context to what I am going to say, nor to the subject matter of this debate. What he said was, I think I am right in saying:—

"Dickory, dickory, dock,
The mouse ran up the clock".

I would like to emulate this little rhyme of his, Sir, and say:—

"Dickory, dickory, dock,
The mouse is working well,

And when its usefulness is over
It can go to blazes."

And that is the sort of attitude which we are very worried about. It may not be true, but that is what we want an assurance on. It is all very well to be told to trust the cat. Now most mice do not trust cats. In fact, if you, in your childhood have read a most interesting little playlet, entitled, "The Tale of Gloster", and I am sure that many of you have, you will see that in that, in spite of all the inducements of the cats, who were very attractive cats, I may say, none of the mice thought that a cat's word was sufficient. We want something concrete on this issue. Is it an illiberal attitude on the part of mice? Do you think it is illiberal because we should ask for this, because nowadays we have all got to be little liberals if we are going to get anywhere. It is not illiberal. We are asking this in justice.

Now the world, and England particularly, in this day and age, prides itself on its benevolence, its fairmindedness and its justice. Resettlement is a case of justice awaiting fulfilment, and let it be served. Let it be served, not only in the interests of the European farmers, whose morale is at a very low ebb, and we all know it in our heart of hearts, but let it be served also in the interests of the Africans who have been told that our land unit, and indeed all land is to be opened. Now it is not much good waving a wand or a carrot in front of their noses if they are not going to be able to do this, or get this land which they want so badly reasonably quickly and get the money to get it. The attitude of the Africans, and I cannot say I blame them for it in the slightest degree, I would probably have the same attitude myself if I were one of them. The attitude of the ones I have heard speaking on it, and have spoken to on it, is that the land should never have been given to the Europeans for European settlement, and since it has happened the issue lies between the European British Government in England and we European farmers in this country. I venture to suggest, Sir, and I sincerely hope that it is so, that there would be no opposition from them to a reasonable, well thought out, and fairly, sympathetic and large resettlement with land stabilization scheme. And I would like to emphasize here that in my opinion, Sir, it is indeed the responsibility of the British Government to find this money. Now we have been told time and time again, and the Minister himself said yesterday that there is no money, or there is very little money, and it cannot be done for this, that and the other reason. This has gone beyond a question of mere economics. This is a much higher issue involved, and I find it very difficult to believe this, because when I was in England, at the Lancaster House Conference, during the course of that six weeks or so the doctors, I think I am right in saying, the English doctors, got £20,000,000 back money, and during the course of the railway strike, by striking the strikers got £50,000,000 increase in wages. You may say that these matters are of no concern, and that they are irrelevant, but it merely goes to show, Sir, that where the will is, and where the obligation is recognized, the money can and should be found. Of course, farmers cannot strike.

Now I would like to turn to his scheme, and ask him with the utmost deference, perhaps in the course of his reply, to explain some of the points in it. First of all, I gather he is earmarking only high potential farms, I think I am right in repeating what he said, and if I am wrong I am open to correction, farm at 12 bags to the acre or more. I see he is shaking his head. I am very glad to see I am wrong.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Bags of maize.

Major Day: Bags of maize, not coffee.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): You are not confident.

Major Day: We have got to have some confidence. Now he also spoke, Sir, about a sum—I think I am right in saying of £900,000—which was actually going to be spent on the purchase of these farms. Now I only hope and pray that no new Government Frankenstein is going to be raised in this matter with such limited funds available, and I hope that the money is actually going to be spent on the job of resettlement without undue emphasis being placed on training and selection and all the other bits and pieces which could, and I hope will not, come into it. A certain amount is, of course, necessary, I know.

Another thing, Sir, I would like him to clarify whether this resettlement scheme, which I understand him to say the idea behind it is that there should be 50-acre areas, whether it applies to Asians and Europeans, because my mathematics, worked very roughly out, show that this land is going to cost £18 per acre, Sir. That is £900,000 for what I think he said was approximately 50,000 acres in one year. I ask these questions in a spirit of enquiry and not in a spirit of criticism, but I would like him to come clean, and admit that this is not, in fact, resettlement, as the rank and file of people understand it among the Europeans in this country today. It is an excellent thing. Let it be proceeded with by all means, but apart from this, let us have a proper land stabilization scheme, which means something. More money. Not a pittance. I would also be very interested to know whether he informed Her Majesty's Government, or in his discussions in London, at the Colonial Office, whether he thought this was sufficient money.

If he did so, Sir, and if he and I are not thinking in two diametrically opposite lines on what we understand by resettlement, then I suggest he carries a very grave responsibility on his shoulders and I would beg him to consider that if the job, the overall job is to be done properly, a sum of something like between £35,000,000 and £40,000,000 is the amount required.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Over a period!

Major Day: Over a period, Sir, of ten years. But, perhaps I am very grateful to you, Sir, for interjecting because in view of what I said earlier about the unhappy possibility of the compensation element coming into it, it might be necessary, Sir, for this money to be used before that ten-year period is finished. I would like to warn this Government, Sir, as humbly as I can and beg them to have second thoughts on this matter, because they will undoubtedly have great influence if we can convince them that what we say is the right and proper method to proceed on. If their objective is to restore confidence among the farmers, Sir, I can tell them here and now that this scheme will do the precise opposite. We all want to restore confidence among farmers. This will do the precise opposite. It will create the very conditions which they are professing to wish to avoid. I conclude by saying that I have seldom experienced—and I say this with all deference—such a mass of platitudes designed to promote a policy of pure expediency. Does the Minister really consider that he has represented or taken into account the feelings of the European farmers? Or is it merely a deliberate attempt to brainwash not only the European farmers but those Africans who now have been promised they may have the opportunity of acquiring land in what is still today the European White Highlands?

Now, the Chief Secretary said that he agreed the other day, in an excellent speech to which I referred earlier, on that to scatter the Civil Service of this country to the four corners of the world and then rebuild it at considerably greater cost was stupid and he hoped it would not happen in this country of Kenya. This, Sir, was good, honest stuff, first class stuff. Sir, I would suggest, Sir, to the Government that we profit by the same type of thinking in this particular matter also, let us also, Sir, observe what is happening in other parts of the world today in so far as land is concerned. I will not mention specific countries but I think you all know what has and is happening in certain countries. What is in fact happening there is that agriculture is being destroyed and nothing is coming up in its place.

Now, Sir, do not destroy the farmers. Farmers want to stay here, they want to continue in this country, they wish to continue to stay in farming in this country, but you must give them the means to regain their confidence, you must give them a form of insurance, which, Sir, if you are generous over—if the British Government is generous over now, will probably never amount to anything like the sum of money which when I was asked I mentioned, because, Sir, if people know that money is available, then you will get your return of confidence and people will say "I will try this experiment out", and then, Sir, you will not have to use this money. But if you are pettifogging in the first instance, you will not get confidence—and I was not surprised to hear that some people had offered their farms already for this scheme. A sum sufficient to do the job, then you will get a true return of confidence.

Sir, I just wonder, and I tried to see both sides of this. I just wonder whether or not in their heart of hearts the Government do understand what the Europeans are feeling today, whether they know the truth. I would suggest, Sir, again that they think on this matter and they adopt a realistic attitude, because that is really what it boils down to, to be realistic over this issue. And I would add my request to that made yesterday by the hon. Member for Mount Kenya to the effect that some commission of enquiry should study this matter, Sir, and I am very much lost as to understand as to how this matter can, in fact, be gone into in any detail before we have even debated White Paper No. 10. The whole thing, Sir, seems to me to be just a little premature, just a little hasty. Second thoughts are often wise thoughts, with second thoughts, Sir, perhaps this matter can be resolved.

Now, having got that off my chest, I just want to make reference to one particular item which the Minister did not actually touch on yesterday and I would be most grateful if he would, perhaps, go into detail and elaborate on this. We hear today so much about this wind of change. I would suggest, Sir, that we really want if we are going to get changes—perhaps it is inevitable—rain in stead of wind of change. Rain is much more healing and beneficial and in all the discussions up to date nobody has yet had the opportunity to ask how much money is available for and how does he propose, Sir, to develop this very important agricultural aid in marginal areas which is known as rainmaking.

Now, Sir, it may be an easy solution, therefore perhaps most of us are a little dubious of doing this, but I know it can work as I have seen the results and it is possibly the cheapest way, Sir, in which to make things grow in a place where the rain is short and where they may not have grown before, so perhaps he will explain this as I do honestly think that there are great possibilities for development in this manner for the development of some of the marginal areas in this country.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, my intervention in this debate is to approach it with a strict business eye, because it does occur to me in the course of the last twenty-four hours on this subject that what matters in the end is whether the proposals being discussed are good business or whether they are not. I talked in the main Budget debate about the horror of false hopes and false expectations and I believe in this debate, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there have been introduced elements of false hopes and false expectations and I believe that we owe it to our community—at any rate the European community—to get our feet very firmly on the ground as to what are the issues and as to how they can be dealt with and when it comes to money—and sizeable money, that is what we are talking about, millions of pounds—we must very firmly face exactly what is at issue and how these sums are to be provided.

Before I develop that thought, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may I just clear what seems to have been a misfortune in this debate and it arises particularly from the words of the hon. Member for Mount Kenya when he said, and I quote: "I really think that he"—that is the Minister for Agriculture—"has been rather naughty in introducing the settlement proposals prior to the debate of Sessional Paper No. 10."

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in defence of the Minister for Agriculture, I think it is from this side of the House that he has been provoked into dealing with this particular problem. I remember that the Member for Ukamba right at the beginning of his speech in the policy debate challenged the Minister to tell us exactly what has happened about the negotiations in London and in America and the developments arising therefrom and I know that I myself asked the Minister to clarify for us the great amount of confusion in relation to such subjects as compensation and stabilization and underwriting, and

I am grateful that he used the opportunity of this debate to certainly clear my mind as to really what it is we are talking about.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) left the Chair]

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard) took the Chair]

I think it is somewhat unfair that the Minister should have been taken to task for having introduced this subject. I think he was right to do so, it is a burning question, a deep issue in the minds of very many people in this country and I believe it is timely that we should clear the air on it at this particular moment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, returning to the whole question of finance, may I quote again the Member for Mount Kenya when he said—and I quote—"The provision of a considerable sum of money in the form of finance in the order of £30,000,000". Now we do know that others in Kenya have demanded a fund of the whole estimated value of European farms amounting to approximately £120,000,000.

Mr. Maxwell: Who has?

Mr. Alexander: There have been references by leading farmers in this country to the provision, the establishment of a fund of £120,000,000.

Mr. Maxwell: Never heard of it.

Mr. Alexander: A few moments ago—as a matter of fact I am surprised that the hon. Member for Trans Nzoia has never heard of it and I will clear it right at this moment, Mr. Deputy Speaker, because his predecessor, the Member for Trans Nzoia, wrote a letter to the East African Standard a few days ago when he referred to the sum of £100,000,000.

Mr. Maxwell: Mr. Deputy Speaker, who is my predecessor?

Mr. Alexander: I understand that the Member for Trans Nzoia before the very able Member who is here at the moment was a Mr. Letcher. If the hon. Member for Trans Nzoia will refer to the East African Standard of a few days ago he will see a letter with a reference to this £100,000,000.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie):
—(Inaudible.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard):
—(Inaudible.)

Mr. Alexander: Sorry, Mr. Deputy Speaker, a few moments ago the Member for Aberdare upped this amount when he was speaking of the £30,000,000 which the Member for Mount Kenya had referred to. I think his words were "£35,000,000 or £40,000,000". Sir, one way or another we are speaking about figures for this particular fund of somewhere between £30,000,000 and £100,000,000.

The Member for Mount Kenya went on to say this and I quote: "The provision of this fund is clearly the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government, for Her Majesty's Government must accept the responsibility for having brought about the conditions which make it necessary." Those were his words, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Now those words have only any value if they are accepted by Her Majesty's Government and I believe the reality of the situation today, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that you would not find in Her Majesty's Government any great support for the idea behind those words. I am not arguing whether they are right or wrong, I am merely saying, Mr. Deputy Speaker, facing the realities of the situation, is that they only have any meaning, any meaning at all if Her Majesty's Government agree the validity of them. I believe that what has happened in Britain now in relation to our affairs in Kenya is to some extent the same as what has happened with the attitude of Britain towards socialism, they have taken a big jump in respect of Kenya and they are now taking a deep breath. But there is no suggestion whatsoever that there has been a fundamental change in the thinking of Her Majesty's Government in the last eight or ten weeks. I believe, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is in words like this that we are in danger of creating in the minds of our people false expectations, that will only make the last state worse than the first, because we will have on our hands a far more disillusioned people than we have at this precise moment. That is why I wish to approach this in a strictly businesslike way and with hard calculating business minds because that is the only way we will bring this thing into perspective. It is interesting, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the leading farmers themselves who were advising on this particular problem did seek advice of business in this country. Some very able commercial, hardheaded businessmen did gather round a table to advise in all humility, to advise the farmers who were looking at this problem just how they, as businessmen saw it. This was when there was talk some eight weeks ago of a figure of £25,000,000 and the advice that the farmers received from the businessmen was that they could not really see that there was any hope of going to London and producing a kitty, a fund, a line of credit, an underwriting scheme, whatever name it goes by, to the extent of £25,000,000, in the circumstances of Kenya at the [Mr. Alexander] moment and the circumstances of that particular problem. However, it is these millions that there are hopes about.

Now, this particular problem, unfortunately, Mr. Deputy Speaker, cannot be isolated from other problems analogous to it. It is impossible to look at this in isolation and in trying to face the realities I have to widen the problem somewhat—the financial problem—in order to show what really faces Kenya in terms of money and it is interesting that the Member for Mount Kenya himself linked this problem with that of the Civil Service and he used these words, and I quote—“The very commonsense views the Chief Secretary expressed about the Civil Service are equally applicable to the farming community. It is this overall problem that is facing many people in this country as the result of the constitutional and political changes.” And what is the figure when we add it, what is the total figure when we add to the farmers problems the problem of others? Let me just give you an example, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I take my figures based on what has happened in the last few days in British Somaliland.

Now the position in British Somaliland is that the civil servants on abolition will get 4.67 times salary at the time of retirement, subject to a maximum of £10,000, plus one third of salary as disturbance allowance, plus six months' paid leave earned or unearned. And this is all interesting to the Minister for Agriculture because he has got a lot of civil servants and they are worried about this sort of problem and we will come to that in the more detailed Estimates. I would like him to listen to these figures because his servants will be interested in these. Plus two months further paid leave if six or more months of paid leave have already been earned, plus four months' paid notice in addition to leave, plus all costs of repatriation including effects, plus the waiving of the regulation prohibition against re-employment during leave and plus, of course, the full earned pension.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie):—(Inaudible.)

Mr. Alexander: What does all this mean in terms of total commitment? I am talking about British Somaliland and the Minister with all his experience will find it difficult to go there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, taking an average £1,200 a year salary, this formula would mean in relation to Kenya, this sort of a size money problem, £1,200 per annum per public servant as the cash payment. It would mean for each person a cash payment of £7,000. Now if there were 15,000, the total bill is £105,000,000, if there were 20,000 the total bill is £140,000,000, if there are 30,000 the total bill is £210,000,000 and for a payment of £10,000 per person, that is if the amount went up, for 25,000 people it would be £250,000,000.

Then, of course, there are others who would be involved, like chartered accountants! Those of course will be very, very expensive. The point I am trying to make, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that it will cost £100,000,000 for farming £200,000,000 or £150,000,000 for civil servants and some more millions for other people, where precisely are we to find the fairy godmother? That is the reality that we have got to face. I ask particularly our community that they should face it now.

There is need, I believe, in this debate, Sir, to clarify between the previous Member for Aberdare, the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, was saying about a market support fund and the ideas put forward by the Minister for Agriculture. There may be some confusion that the two are the same, whereas in point of fact I believe that they are two different approaches to same problem. When the Government replies, I would be glad—and I think we would like clarification on this side of the House between a market support fund as opposed to an evacuating fund, and the particular resettlement and development scheme that the Minister has talked about.

The hon. Specially Elected Member had these words to say—and I will quote him briefly—“The Government scheme for resettlement and development fails to cater for another aspect which has importance, and that is the matter of land stabilization. We have got to insure against any possible, even temporary collapse of the land market in this country the one thing we have got to ensure is to give market support, to make sure there is a substantial buyer in the field, a buyer in the market who can buy on a substantial scale at the proper price. A fund that does not play the market, does not cash in on temporary low values.” When the Minister replies I would like him to elaborate on those words of the Specially Elected Member and to tell us just how far the Government are prepared to go or have already gone in their thinking, with the principles stated there by the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade.

Lastly, Mr. Deputy Speaker, may we clarify this word “compensation” because as I see it it surely only arises at the moment of expropriation and there is in our legislation at this very moment provision for expropriation of any land. There are laws about it and from experience of them they are always heavily weighted in favour of the owner. So far as I remember there is an added

[Mr. Alexander]

15 per cent to the owner of any land expropriated over and above the normal valuation on a commercial basis and I believe that the time to deal with this subject, surely, is when we come to deal with the details of the Bill of Rights, and here again I must refer again to the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, because he was at his brilliant best I remember on a Tuesday in Lancaster House when he made this position very, very clear indeed, and I believe that we would be wise to talk and think about this particular problem when we come to deal with the Bill of Rights.

May I, as I sit down, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as a man of the towns congratulate the Minister for the clarity with which he presented his estimates to people in such a way that people like myself could at last begin to understand the mysteries that go on in the minds of people who apply such skill to this country as the Minister for Agriculture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Smith (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, if I remember aright a year ago we had no Minister for Agriculture in this House and the Budget was put over very capably by my hon. friend, the Director of Agriculture and specifically on behalf of the agricultural Backbenchers I would like to congratulate the Minister on the way he has indeed put over his first Budget.

I would just like very briefly to mention three matters, one of which was an important part of his speech yesterday, two of which I am sorry to say he has not brought up and I hope I may. The first one, of course, is in connexion with his new settlement scheme. I did not quite understand one point made by the Member for Mount Kenya when referring to this scheme very briefly, he did say, if I remember aright, that an advantage would be gained by the bad farmer in the high potential area over the farmer who had developed his farm well. I wonder, Sir, if this is really so. As far as I understand it on the basis of a willing seller and a willing buyer and with no compulsion on either side I just cannot see what the hon. Member was getting at in that way. Presumably, the new Settlement Board when constituted for these areas will be valuing land, that is offered to them for purchase, and it will be valued on its condition plus improvements or without improvements. In the same way, surely, Sir, if you have improved your farm even if you do sell it the value of the farm will be such that you can get the value of the improvements, I would also like to know just why if you have got a well-improved developed farm in a high potential area in Kenya you would wish to sell it at all

Group Captain Briggs: On a point of explanation, may I, Sir, point out that the point that I was trying to get at, was that the Minister gave the impression that the intention was only to buy land of high potential, suitable for breaking up into small holdings of 50 acres or so, and it would be undeveloped land. Therefore, in effect the well-developed land which had been developed by a good farmer would not be considered. That was my point, Sir.

Mr. Smith: Thank you very much, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think probably the Minister can answer that in greater detail but if I am right—and I am sure the Minister will contradict me if I am not—they will buy not only undeveloped land but also underdeveloped land and possibly developed land too. But that is a point that I am sure the Minister can clear up when he comes to speak.

On this same new settlement scheme, Sir, there is one thing that I would like to clear with the Minister if he will do so and I would like him to make quite clear the position of large-scale farms in this country, not only those in the ranching areas of the Colony but particularly those large farms which are devoted to wheat and maize. These farms to my utmost current knowledge, Sir, are individual holdings, large holdings, perhaps 1,000 or 2,000 acres which have been developed as single holdings for that purpose and the whole development and planning of those particular farms has gone to that particular acreage, whatever it may be, and I do feel it would be quite uneconomical to split them up into anything at all like the areas that the Minister has suggested of 50 acres, although perhaps a future scheme might be able to divide them up into something a little smaller but nothing on the present idea of the new scheme. I hope the Minister will make it quite clear that nothing of that sort is contemplated because the income from such land would be nil as compared with the income and revenue derived at the moment.

The next point, Sir, getting away from the new settlement scheme, is that I would like to discuss for a moment is the question of agricultural seed. It has been very difficult in the past for farmers to obtain a reasonable supply at a reasonable price of good seed, particularly wheat seed and barley seed. I have not noticed any particular new Head in the expenditure Estimates under this Ministry but I was very interested to read in the paper two days ago that the senior plant breeder is at last putting forward another scheme for seed for wheat growing which I sincerely hope will be a success. We have had several schemes in the past which I personally would say had not been very successful; some of them have been rather costly to the farmer, inasmuch as the question of breeding seed, of course, Sir, and growing seed for bulking is bound up with this question of disease in wheat and particularly stem rust. We do know the difficulties there, but it has occurred and I know cases, my own cases, where you get two or three bags of a certain variety of good seed wheat released by the plant breeder to be bulked for cleaning and distribution for a larger number of people in the following year. This normally costs anything up to twice the value of a bag of ordinary milling wheat, a little less, a little more. Then, Sir, the farmer has to pay an extra Sh. 20 each year in order to be registered as a grower for certified wheat. During the growing season the wheat is inspected and just before the harvest it is inspected for certification. But it can happen and has indeed done so that a week before harvest one has been informed that the wheat will not be certified due to a breakdown to rust or other disease possibly in a different part of the country. This, of course, creates a loss for the farmer involved and this has gone on for some considerable number of years, Sir. Perhaps the Minister when he replies on this sort of thing would mention just how far we are progressing and particularly with the extra money that has been lent for this study of stem rust in wheat, how far we are getting and what the hopes are of getting some sort of wheat eventually which is likely to stay free from rust for a period of perhaps three or four years. This would be very useful for farmers.

Sir, I have one last point and I would like to advise the Minister how he can overcome the difficulties he mentioned in his speech yesterday on the subject of recruiting qualified agricultural staff. This is a very simple one, Sir. It may take a little time to fully appreciate it, but surely the simple answer is to start now and encourage the Young Farmers' Clubs of Kenya; the Young Farmers' Clubs of Kenya, Sir, of all races. As Members of this House must know, I have a particular interest in the matter of Young Farmers' Clubs as the movement has so far been sponsored and started entirely by the Royal Agricultural Society of Kenya. But these clubs, Sir, have grown in number. There are now eight in Nairobi alone and others elsewhere and I feel that it is quite imperative now, that a qualified organizer is obtained—with the suitable finance behind him to run these clubs, to instruct and organize the activities of these very keen young functions in our schools here. Now, Sir, this organizer may be necessary—I would like to put to the Minister is no longer or should be no longer a function of the Royal Agricultural Society. We have started this, Sir; the matter has grown to big proportions and it is terribly important to all the young people of Kenya and I feel that it is a very good background that at any school they can get an intimate knowledge right from the start of agriculture in this country, even if they are not going to be farmers themselves or even if they are not going to qualify for ministerial jobs I will mention later. They take a great interest in the subject of agriculture and I believe it is a very good thing that they should do so. I believe the Royal Agricultural Society will continue to sponsor the movement if necessary; will continue to provide an awful lot of voluntary free hours from its members who help so enormously from all over the country; but the financing of a qualified expert organizer, Sir, is I believe, now the duty of Government and I think it must be got down to, very urgently. I would also like to remind Members that my Society has also just recently gone into the question of African Young Farmers' Clubs as well as European Young Farmers' Clubs. This, Sir, is equally important and the recommendation of my committee was that it was impossible to start on that side of Young Farmers' Clubs unless they started with a full-time qualified organizer. The cost would be somewhere in the region of £3,000 a year. That is just one side of the picture, Sir.

I do recommend these to the Minister and I beg to support.

Sir Charles Markham: Mr. Deputy Speaker, in his speech a moment ago the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Smith, spoke about the young farmers. I would like to say, Sir, from this side of the Council how much I welcome his joining the club of Presidents of the Royal Agricultural Society of Kenya. And also, Sir, sitting as he does next to the President Elect, he is making quite certain he keeps the job in the family, if I may say so, for the next two years! But, Sir, we on this side have one of the trustees of the Society to make certain he keeps both those gentlemen in order.

Sir, this morning having had a most unsatisfactory breakfast I listened to the news and I was somewhat surprised to hear on the news at eight o'clock that the scheme announced yesterday by the Minister for Agriculture was a scheme to buy up the Highlands for Asian and African farmers. I was surprised because although I slept quite a lot yesterday afternoon I did think that the Minister had said the scheme was a non-racial scheme. Nevertheless, after what we were told by the Minister for Information and Broadcasting of how much the British Broadcasting Corporation had improved in recent months, perhaps, Sir, he must go back to them again and give them a lecture on temporary improvements not being sufficient.

The Minister for Information and Broadcasting (Mr. Harris): Hear, hear!

Sir Charles Markham: But, Sir, before the Minister says, "Hear, hear!" I wonder whether in this instance the British Broadcasting Corporation were at fault. A statement as important as that made by the Minister in the House yesterday should in my opinion have been the subject of a Press release in order that the facts could not be distorted and my information is that although some of the Press had a copy of what the Minister was going to say, no such copy was available to the Kenya Broadcasting Service and there was a certain amount of hurry to get a despatch home to the British Broadcasting Corporation. It is small wonder that distortion did take place.

The Minister for Information and Broadcasting (Mr. Harris): What has that got to do with the Kenya Broadcasting Service?

Sir Charles Markham: Sir, the Minister says, "What has it got to do with the Kenya Broadcasting Service?" but I understand there is a very close liaison—he should know this, he is meant to be the Minister in charge of it—there is a very close liaison between the Kenya Broadcasting Service and—Do you wish me to give way?

The Minister for Information and Broadcasting (Mr. Harris): I just wanted to put the Member right, Sir, that the Kenya Broadcasting Service has no responsibility whatsoever and does not supply news to the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Sir Charles Markham: I did not say it did, Sir. I said there is a close liaison and I do wish the Minister would be more accurate before he gets up. (I hope the timekeeper is taking time off for these interruptions.) The point is this, Sir, that if it was as important as that, then in my view the Minister should have made certain there was a Press release through the machinery of Government to make certain there was no possible misunderstanding, particularly, as I believe the word "non-racial" means absolutely nothing in England. The words they use are "multi-racial" or, the words I prefer, "for the benefit of all races".

I think, Sir, this word "non-racial" is often capable of misinterpretation because quite frankly if I were a listener in England or perhaps elsewhere in the world and heard that expression I would wonder what on earth it meant, because we have all got a race whether we like it or not, and therefore the scheme as I see it is of benefit to all races and therefore I suppose it could be called non-racial. I do suggest in future this is cleared out of the way.

Mr. Alexander: It is a very good word!

Sir Charles Markham: Sir, the hon. Member for Nairobi West said it is a very good word—I will deal with him in a minute.

The hon. Member for Nairobi West queried the fact that the Minister had been criticized for discussing details of the settlement scheme and mentioned that I had asked, I was one of the Members had asked for such detail. In my speech, Sir, which seems a long time ago now, when the Budget debate was started, I asked the Minister to give the House some indication of his negotiations in London and America, and I think, as the hon. Member said, it was quite right that the House should be aware of what was planned. However, having said that I was somewhat surprised that the Minister went into such detail, not of the money available but of the scheme itself which was, in my opinion, anticipating the decision of this House on Sessional Paper No. 10. Particularly I say that, Sir, because in that Sessional Paper there are paragraphs dealing with the composition of divisional boards and the Minister knows there has been a considerable amount of argument as to the functions and powers of those boards, and there have been representations made to him both by the Board of Agriculture, the Kenya National Farmers' Union, and others, about the powers of those boards to include powers of subdivision. As I understand it, the Minister has said that the power of subdivision will rest with the divisional boards concerned, and therefore I am surprised that he can announce to this House before that Paper has been discussed that he is thinking of any fixed acreages to be laid down in the high potential areas.

I would have thought that he could have said that he will recommend to the boards a certain consideration through the Agricultural Department. It is very unwise, in my opinion, to announce publicly what the size of the holding is to be when the principle has not yet been discussed or accepted in this House. I want to make that quite clear, Sir, because my criticism, which was also made by an hon. friend, the Member for Mount Kenya, is not because the Minister gave us details of what his thoughts in the matter were but virtually as it was put over by him yesterday it seems that as the matter has been decided, let us go ahead with it.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Question!

Sir Charles Markham: I am very glad he said "question"—I would be glad when he reads out this [Sir Charles Markham] next essay he gets his facts right and avoids any possible misunderstanding in the future.

Now, Sir, let me turn to the scheme mentioned by the Minister when he talked about a settlement scheme on a non-racial basis in the high potential area, the undeveloped land in particular. I do not think anybody on either side of this House will argue against the principle of trying to get far more out of the other areas on a non-racial basis, if I may use the word for the hon. Member's benefit behind me, in the highlands, because I have accepted that principle myself. What I am concerned about, Sir, is the fact that this scheme is going to be limited to just a sort of peasant economy settlement scheme in the high potential country, particularly on that land which is undeveloped. Now funds must be made available to a settlement authority to allow farms of much larger acreages to be sold on a willing buyer willing seller basis, and it is this scheme which seems to be small because of the acreages. This scheme must be limited because of the Minister's own remarks that the land must be land capable of development and that the conditions of the loan are not the purchase of farms but are for the development of the land.

I accept that, Sir, as a good principle but it does mean that a scheme will be very limited and I cannot see where the future is going to lie if it is on the basis of only buying undeveloped land for development in the future. Again, Sir, I cannot see why there is this hurry which has been mentioned, why we have to do this so quickly. It seems to me, Sir, the Minister is very like the position at the moment of which is going to come first—the marriage or the child. In fact, there is almost indecent haste to get the wedding ring in case something happens and there is a premature birth.

I would have thought, Sir, that this scheme required the very closest attention of his officials, of the staff of the Director of Agriculture, and the various provincial agricultural officers, to make quite certain a mistake is not made. It is only very recently after all since this money was made available to the Minister, after his work in London and Washington, and I cannot see how he can say as yet that all the various aspects have been considered.

Let me give him one example, Sir, in case he considers I am just quoting figures for the sake of being obstructive as opposed to being constructive. At the moment if a farm, an undeveloped farm, in a high potential area is not developed, under the Agricultural Ordinance the owner can be made to develop it although he has to be given funds to do so, but the fact remains that with a 1,000-acre farm, properly farmed as it should be with the control which is now possible by the Minister's own officials, that farm must automatically pay a certain percentage every year by way of profits for income tax purposes. Subdivide that unit down into, say, 1,000 acres into units of 50 acres, the resultant profit per 50-acre unit cannot result in that owner paying any tax at all, and therefore the economy of the country must suffer. If eventually all or a great proportion of your undeveloped and high potential land is going to return to a peasant economy, who, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is going to maintain the economy of the country?

I have got no feeling about the colour of the farmer who is farming it but I would much rather see funds being made available to loan to persons of any race who are suitable to be farmers, funds so we can set up a scheme, such as was originally done by the European Agricultural Settlement Board for the furtherance of European agricultural settlement. If that scheme was a good one—and I believe the Minister thinks it was—then surely a scheme could have been inaugurated for all races, not on a peasant economy but on a basis of what is a good economic unit regardless of race.

Now, I think the Minister himself will accept that this scheme is in the nature of an experiment, but I would like to ask him, Sir, now for a categorical assurance that the scheme will not go on continuing—if it is an experiment until we have a situation such as existed in Tanganyika with the about the necessity for consolidation taking place in the highlands. Having got over the problem of fragmentation in many parts of the native land units, the same will have to happen in the highlands unless we are very careful.

Now, Sir, I would also like to ask the Minister about the question of the fund for this particular purpose. As I see it, and the Minister, I know, will correct me if I am wrong, we are going to get £1,000,000 a year for three years from the British Government, and I think the figures he gave were £1,500,000 from the World Bank for three years—or is it £1,000,000? It may be £1,500,000 from the British Government and £1,000,000 from the World Bank.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, what I did say was that I hoped we would get £900,000 a year from Her Majesty's Government for the purchase of land, and £1,500,000 from international sources.

Sir Charles Markham: I thank the Minister for correcting me. The trouble is he told another [Sir Charles Markham] board something different the other day so I was a little confused. I do apologize to him for getting it wrong now.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Further information has been made available to me since I last spoke to the hon. Member when he was sitting on a board.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): On a point of order or information, this is not a Board.

Sir Charles Markham: I think that intervention by the Chief Secretary has nothing to do with this debate at all. The point is, when the Minister gave this information previously—and I hope the Chief Secretary is satisfied with that—he did give one very disturbing piece of information which I think I am going to mention, and ask the Minister to confirm whether it is still so. As there have been changes perhaps this also has changed in the last three or four days; perhaps since yesterday when the Minister spoke, this whole scheme has changed. We do not know. That is the question, of the international sources of money, involving the person who gives that money. Let us call it American money for the sake of argument, even though it may be commercial money, but the American or World Bank controls it, and would also have a complete say in the Colony's powers of raising money for other purposes, whilst that money is outstanding. If that is so it is a very sad position indeed, for it does appear to me that we may have prejudiced the whole of the future borrowing powers of the Kenya Government for what appears to me again to be £1,500,000 of American potage. I cannot believe, Sir, that that situation is true but if it is so, local authorities, who are in the position to go into the market, such as the Nairobi City Council, will be prejudiced by this particular operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Member for Nairobi West gave us an interesting lecture on what it would cost to buy out Somaliland: in fact for a moment I thought we might well have the answer for the settlement problem in Kenya with the amount of money they are going to get if they are bought out. But I would like to point out to the hon. Member that although his argument is perfectly sound I think he forgets one important point, and that is, as far as Kenya is concerned, farming is the sole backbone of the country's economy and if farming goes then the business will be the first to suffer. The civil servants, whose interests we must all protect and whose work we admire, will find it very difficult to claim a salary from the Kenya Government if there is no money to pay it, and that is why

Sir, I think we have got to treat the problem of Kenya and the farming economy very differently to those parts of the world which can manage either by industry or by secondary industry.

We are particularly vulnerable, as has been proved by the slump which took place two years ago, and that slump was reflected straight away in the commercial field as was proved by balance sheets and lack of profits. That is why I was sorry there has been this misunderstanding on the demand made by the public for some sort of stabilization fund, and I think it would be fatal in this House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, this afternoon to start going into details of how much is required, what it was required for, how it would be operated, because there is bound to be a difference of opinion throughout the country on it. But when responsible people such as the president of the Royal Agricultural Society of Kenya and the president and vice-president of the Kenya National Farmers' Union have supported the idea of some sort of stabilization fund, it is important, Sir, that the House is not under any false impression that because the Member for Nairobi West thinks it is not necessary or it is a false hope, that we should also oppose it. I do not think we can talk of any fixed sum: I think it is extremely dangerous; but I do believe we have got to press from both sides of this Council for the Government to initiate discussions with Her Majesty's Government for some sort of fund not to maintain prices as such but to be a cushion which we all want. Let us be quite blunt on this, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

If you ask the average young chap, the young farmer, today, particularly many of those who are tenants or assistant owners of the Agricultural Settlement Board, whether they would go if they got a price, most of them will tell you they are quite prepared—more than prepared—to stick it out. But they are not prepared to sacrifice the future of their children and for that matter their wives just because some politician from the Government Benches says that everything is going to be all right. That, Sir, is stark fact and very unpleasant sometimes indeed. But I should also tell the House this, that if you told a lot of these farmers that here is a price, will you go today, a great many of them would get out today because they have no confidence that in two or three years time assurances given by the Government of today will hold good for the Government of tomorrow. I should say straight away now, Sir, that the land in which I have an interest is not up for sale: but I may well be criticized by my children in the years to come for having been the person of false hopes and undue optimism by saying there is nothing to worry about. That is why the Kenya National Farmers' Union proposal, supported by other responsible people, are wanting some sort of stabilization fund—call it what you like, it means nothing—some sort of fund which can prevent land being exploited, can give the farmer confidence to continue essential development, and can as well allow him if conditions become quite intolerable to move away and try elsewhere. That, Sir, is not panic measures; it is not the rats leaving the sinking ship; it is what is commonly known as good business sense.

How can that be worked, Sir? Again, as I said a moment ago, I do not believe we should in this House talk about the sums of money, as I believe quite a small sum of money may be the only sum involved. My ideas which I have put to the Ministry on previous occasions would be that your settlement authority, if it had enough funds behind it, could buy up farms at its own expert valuation which the Minister mentioned yesterday, and lease them out or sell them, again to people of all races.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Interjection.

Sir Charles Markham: If the Minister wants to say something would he say it a bit louder because I could not catch what he was saying. This is not the scheme which is being mentioned today—it is only the scheme for high potential country. If I am wrong and the Minister proposes to buy in the future land say of the medium or even low potential, then, Sir, it has been changed since the Minister spoke yesterday. If he wishes to correct me perhaps I could ask him to substantiate.

Hon. Members: No! No!

Sir Charles Markham: They are saying "No! No!" because I think it was made very clear in today's paper, who seemed to have a very good factual report of the Minister's speech, makes it very clear in the first instance that this scheme was high potential land, and I think the figure was given at ten or 12 bags of maize as one basis of the figure. But there are other acres of Kenya which are areas which are not of high potential at all, and I want to know what is to happen to farms, say of 3,000 or 4,000 acres, which are not doing well today, many occupiers of whom are just doing the minimum amount of development to keep going and hoping a fairy godmother will turn up out of the sky to buy them. We do not want that—that would be disastrous. If they knew there was this cushion they would take heart and do some of the essential work.

Well, Sir, time is getting short and perhaps this debate, as far as many Members from this side of the Council are concerned, has been too much on this one aspect of the important speech of the Minister. I think it was bound to be that, Sir, and in many ways it was so because we have not had this debate on Sessional Paper No. 10 as yet. That will come. Many of the arguments that have been used in this debate will, I am sure, be repeated on that occasion.

There are other subjects, Sir, which because of the limitation of time and which to the relief of the House cannot be raised at this time. But in his speech a moment ago the hon. Member for Aberdare did say that the Minister bore a very great responsibility. He does, Sir. He bears what might well be called an intolerable burden because in these times of stress he knows, as I know, the agricultural future of this country must depend on good farming methods and a sound economy. But I would warn him of this much, Sir. Unless he can obtain the confidence of the European farmers, particularly those in the areas at the moment very much affected by the political stresses and strains, then, Sir, he will lose the confidence of the agricultural community and his life will then become quite intolerable. If, Sir, the Minister says that it cannot be worse then I want him to know that it could be because if he falls foul, Sir, of all his unofficial chairmen of the various statutory boards and the agricultural committees then, Sir, if he feels that way, it will be rather like some of those tool sets you buy for home—do it yourself. That, Sir, would be very unpleasant for Kenya, and I beg of him before making decisions such as this present one on the settlement of a 50-acre basis, for example, to consult with those people who will be affected to get their reaction. I know that he has done that with the Board of Agriculture but it came as a great surprise to many of us who had the privilege of being present but this matter was not known to any of the Unofficials in the country districts before it was announced as being the Minister's thoughts on the subject. The same applies, Sir, I believe to my African friends. If the Minister would take them into his confidence and give them some of the thoughts he has for developing the African areas so much of this suspicion would not arise.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Interjection.

Sir Charles Markham: I did not hear that either. I said the African people and I did not say the Members of Legislative Council. They are not always the mass of the people.

Finally, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if I have been correct this afternoon, I wish to make it quite clear that I bear no personal animosity towards my hon. friend opposite but in this issue I am speaking of a specific request of certain of my constituents who have very genuine fears that things have been pushed through so quickly without regard to economics and that the political background and the political necessity for these moves is having far too much importance compared with straightforward economics. I would, therefore, beg the Minister before going any further if he will ask his Director to go into it once more and find out whether there is a compromise solution between what he has suggested and what others feel, which achieves the same object but will not cause what many of us feel to be a disastrous economic adventure.

I beg to support.

Mr. Hunter (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, this whole question of agriculture is so fundamental to the economy of the country and the welfare of everybody in it that I make no excuse for talking about it in this debate in wide terms. In doing so, however, I would like to make it clear that I am trying to present the point of view of those engaged in what I might term commercial agriculture. In any event it is certainly a view most sincerely held by myself.

Despite the very understandable remarks of the hon. Member for Nairobi West concerning this question of the introduction of this debate before we have had a debate on Sessional Paper No. 10, I must maintain that I think it is a pity that it had to be so because a clear concept of future policy on land tenure in the country would perhaps go a very long way to restoring what I might describe as unambitious confidence in those whose main rôle is to play what to my mind is an essential and integral part in the economy of the country and it would therefore be a suitable background in which to discuss the Colony's most important undertaking and that perhaps particularly applies to resettlement schemes of the nature referred to by the last speaker.

Nevertheless, if we assume basically that there is to be a uniform policy over the whole country in which, subject only to certain initial safeguards and good husbandry, land anywhere can be freely bought and sold, then surely we can consider future agricultural plans in a sense of confidence common to all. I shall therefore confidently now turn to European agriculture. Confidently because in the context in which I have tried to lead up to what I am going to say there can be again nothing controversial about it.

In the first place then let us be quite clear that the African owes a great deal of his advancement and development to the enterprise and skill of European agriculture, and in my thinking if this were to disappear or be assailed in any way other than by enlarged economic and non-racial ways of thinking—I must apologize to the hon. Member for Ukamba for using the word "non-racial"—not only would the economy of the country be so seriously set back as to make it practically impossible to be independent but the rapidly developing African agriculture would receive a set-back from which I believe that it would never recover. That is why in another place I have publicly advocated a policy whereby individual or family owned estates should now seriously consider the real advantages in certain circumstances of turning themselves initially into larger economic units which can be happy and compatible. These units would, I think, need to be small enough to ensure that the management would have an understanding of and be sympathetic to the real purpose of the development of land, and in sympathy with the aims and objects of its present owners. They should also have a reasonably commensurate return from the capital employed in each individual estate.

I make no secret of my initial purpose in making this suggestion. It is primarily one of insurance against political assault, not because that is aimed at the just political aims of anybody of whatever shade of political opinion, or of whatever race, but because in the early days of independence political pressures might be brought to bear on the African leaders which it would be difficult for them to resist however much they might personally think them economically irresponsible. Personally, I think that with independence African leaders will show themselves economically responsible because they cannot afford not to be. Far richer countries than this which have recently received independence have tried to show economic responsibility because if money has to be obtained for development and indeed it will, it will not come from outside sources if the Government of the day shows economic irresponsibility. Nevertheless, turning to the longer term advantages of economic farming units, I believe only in this way and by taking the initiative locally will we be able to attract outside British capital. If agriculture, by the means I suggest, can insulate itself from political pressures and senseless greed then it has as a future and investment potentiality as any comparable undertaking anywhere in the world.

Having said this primarily in regard to European agriculture, Sir, I would add that by its retention and continued development it can and will operate in harmony with and to the advantage of the expanding African agriculture; particularly will this be so if geographical limitations are removed and the whole scheme envisages

[Mr. Hunter]

African agriculture wherever it wants or whenever the stage of its development allows for that happiness and compatibility which I so much stress to play its part in these economic units in full partnership and in a setting which is removed far above politics. Provided commercial agricultural interests can be assured that Kenya agriculture can be placed in this sort of perspective and in consequential security where European and African enterprise and development can progress in harmony and, eventually, complementary lines, then indeed it is my belief that we can consider agriculture to have been placed on the soundest possible lines. If at the same time it can be taken outside political manoeuvrings and even perhaps begin to govern political thinking, then it is my belief that interest can be aroused in commercial capital for its development.

Finally, if we were all to search our hearts and forget all politics I wonder if we would find that anyone of any shade of political opinion or of whatever colour is really thinking so very differently over the fundamental needs of land use and agriculture in the real economic interests of the country.

In conclusion, it may not be amiss to point out that the type of capital I am hopeful—and I stress the word hopeful—may be attracted by these suggestions if carried out, would in no way replace Government schemes to attract World Bank finance or the K.N.F.U. schemes for British Government finance. Indeed, it would be complementary to land values stabilization schemes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I confess to being somewhat unaccustomed to speaking on agriculture, but I thought I ought to underline a few points from the Government side for the benefit of the Board—I am sorry, Sir, for the benefit of the House.

The first thing I want to say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that the scheme which my hon. colleague outlined yesterday is a Government scheme. It is not a scheme which has been dreamed up by the Minister in the waking hours of the night, by himself, and although it naturally has got the full support of his Ministry this is a scheme which has been thought out by the Government and that is the reason why it has been mentioned in the course of this debate.

Now, Sir, we all know that money from outside of this country is very difficult to get. We also know that it is expensive. Furthermore, those people who have the money to lend are unlikely to lend it unless they are absolutely certain that whatever scheme they are going to put their money into is going to be economic. That means,

Sir, that it is highly unlikely that the Government is going to get either a large sum of money or even a small sum of money except over a considerable period, and it is going to take us time to get that money.

The hon. Minister when he was talking in terms of £900,000 a year and £1,500,000 a year from other sources was talking about the money which we hope to get and that, as a Government, I sincerely hope we will be able to raise. But in the meantime we are being told, particularly by the hon. Member for Aberdare, that we want assurances now. We must have assurances. Well, I must say the hon. Member for Aberdare began by saying that it appears that everyone is extremely confused in that compensation schemes had been confused with resettlement. He then went on to talk about getting on with schemes and, as far as I could make out, saying we should get on with schemes which concerned resettlement.

Major Day: Mr. Deputy Speaker, if the hon. Minister will allow me I would like to clear up the confusion, if there is any confusion in the minds of both himself and the Minister for Agriculture. I did refer originally to the fact that there was a difference between a resettlement scheme and land stabilization; if inadvertently I used the word "resettlement" too often I would say that I would now like to make it clear that I was referring to a land stabilization fund apart from this scheme which has been mentioned by the hon. Minister for Agriculture.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): I thank the hon. gentleman for explaining what he said.

Well, Sir, I was trying to develop the theme that it will take us time to get money. People have said that they want assurances now, and it seemed to us that one of the best ways of giving them an assurance was to produce some money now so that in fact land could be acquired. The hon. Member who has just sat down has said that he was perhaps confusing resettlement with stabilization. If we have a stabilization fund what are we going to do with it? If we have got the money, surely we must purchase land with it. If we purchase land with it what are we going to do with it but resettle people on it. Therefore we are all talking the same language.

I agree with those Members who have said that we do not want compensation schemes and I also agree with those who talked about it in the context of the Civil Service when we talked about compensation. I agree with Members when they say we want to encourage people to stay, and the very first thing that is going to chase people out of this country, whether they be civil servants or farmers, is to compensate them. What we want to do in this scheme is to show as soon as possible that by providing some money from our own resources we can in fact purchase farms in order to stabilize the prices—

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): And I do not consider—to the hon. Member who has just said, "Hear, hear!"—that this is indecent haste. We have been asked now for assurances and this is the type of assurance we think we can give people at this present time. We hope, as I have tried to indicate, that this will expand and we will eventually be able to get a very much greater scheme going which will have the desired effect so far as I can see that most hon. Members want. The hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, yesterday said that this should not be applied to high potential land only, and indeed this matter was touched upon this afternoon by the hon. Member for Ukamba, and I would like to assure them that it is not our intention to apply it only to high potential land all the way through. What I think my colleague said, and he will be able to fill in the details when he replies, was that in this initial sum of money that we are going to spend we consider that in order to make quite certain that it is an economic proposition it would be applied to high potential land. But that does not in fact rule out the possibility of applying further money that we get to other types of land.

Finally, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to underline the point which my hon. colleague made about the possible rearrangement of the Land Bank, that is, cutting it away from present Government control and making it a statutory body on its own which would, in our view, on its own attract from outside sources other forms of capital. Therefore we are really trying to do three things. The first is to release some money now in order to purchase farms and provide a certain amount of stabilization; secondly to get other money later on to do exactly the same thing; and whilst we require the land to resettle people. Of course we must do that because we cannot use the land to do anything else. And thirdly by trying to put the Land Bank on a different basis to attract other kinds of capital which we might not get for ourselves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Shaw: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I had not prepared anything to say in this debate as I did not mean to intervene and I do so only because of two telegrams which I received from Nyanza this morning. There was an announcement on the B.B.C. news last night about the Government scheme about which the Chief Secretary has just spoken. Certain alarm and despondency was felt because it was not mentioned over the English B.B.C. news, that this would happen only after Sessional Paper No. 10 had become law, and I think I would just like the Minister to reiterate in his reply, to make that statement once again, that naturally any such Government scheme cannot happen until after Sessional Paper No. 10 has been debated. I would also like the hon. Minister for Agriculture, if he can, to give us any idea as to when Sessional Paper No. 10 will be debated.

The other thing I would like an assurance on, and I am afraid here that I join with the hon. Member for Ukamba in saying that today I think we are all carrying a rather increased responsibility, certainly the European Elected Members are, and I think the Minister for Agriculture does too, because we in Kenya have many people to whom Lancaster House and its decision has come as a great shock. The speed with which things are going has frightened people, there is no doubt about that, and I think many of us have people coming to us all the time asking us for advice. Now, nobody can give advice on a matter of whether people should stay in this Colony or whether they should go lightly, and I do think it has increased the burden and responsibility certainly of all European Elected Members, because it is a daily occurrence daily for people to come now and say, "What do you advise? Shall I stay and try and make a go of it or do you think it is best to pull up stakes now when we can and go home to England?", especially young people; and I do think that although I have advised people and my advice in the majority of cases is to stay and make a go of it—that is what my family intends to do. But at the same time there are some cases where it is obviously wiser where people are out of jobs and they are not very well off and have, say, three or four daughters who need technical after-school training—those facilities are so much cheaper and better at home—there it is wiser to advise them to go. I do think that this has also put a very increased burden on the Minister for Agriculture. Therefore if he can clear up this misapprehension we shall be grateful.

The other point, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on which I would like some, really, news, is that at Lancaster House the European Elected Members' acceptance of the agreement was on certain conditions, one of those conditions being that there would be safeguards written into any new constitution, safeguards against expropriation of land. Now, it is no good people saying, "Oh, those are not worth anything; they are not worth the paper they are written on." If there was an [Mr. Shaw] independent judiciary then that judiciary after independence can still come under a Judicial Commission and still be appointed by such a Commission; if so then there is a certain value in such safeguards. It is now two and a half months since the Lancaster House Conference, and I got a letter from the Prime Minister yesterday in which he said the safeguards would undoubtedly be incorporated but still have to be drawn up. I would like to know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if it is possible to have some information as to when these safeguards are going to be drawn up, because there is no doubt, and I can quote, and the Minister well knows, one American firm that did intend to invest here and then doubted very much if they would be able to put capital into this Colony unless they got some such assurance that no assets would be expropriated by this or any future Kenya Government and have some safeguards in the matter.

Those are the points I wish to raise, and I congratulate the Minister on his speech.

I beg to support.

The Assistant Minister for Education (Mr. Wanyutu Waweru): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I listened to the speech of the Minister when he was moving the estimates of this Head, and I thought it was one of the best speeches I had listened to in the past few months in this Legislative Council, and for that, Sir, I do congratulate him in the way he presented his case as Minister.

The points I have to raise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, concerns the livestock follow up in the areas where farm planning and farm layout had been done by the Department of Agriculture. I think, Sir, that it has not been keeping pace with the speed of growing cash crops. I think it would be a very good thing if the Minister, when he replies, would tell the House what steps are being taken to make the two ends meet. I know, Sir, that there are some parts in the Central Province where the farm layout and farm planning have been completed by the field officers, but as far as animal husbandry in those areas is concerned, I think that the speed of keeping pace with the farm planning and the cash-crop growing is not equal, and it would be a pity, Sir, to see that these very fundamental agricultural projects are going to be left behind. When I say this, Sir, I do not lose sight of the good work that has been achieved by the field officers of the Veterinary Department, but I think that they are given too large an area to supervise, and there are very few officers in the field to do what the Veterinary Department has in mind. I think, Sir, if this can be pushed much faster it would assist the economy of Kenya in all parts of the Colony, especially in the African areas.

I now come, Sir, to the problem of administering the loans to the African farmers in Kenya. There have been a lot of complaints, Sir, that the farmers are not allowed the free use of the loans as they are using them. I would also equally be interested to hear from the Minister when he replies, or the Director of Agriculture when he speaks, to know if it would be possible to revise the method of releasing the loans to the farmers in the African areas.

With these remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I support the Motion.

Mr. Maxwell: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I support to a great extent the views expressed by the hon. Minister for Agriculture on farming matters generally, but I find myself in disagreement with him in regard to the land stabilization fund and the settlement schemes, because he does not, in my opinion, go nearly far enough. I believe that he acted most unwisely in proceeding to London to discuss this most important matter before he had full consultation with such important bodies as the Kenya National Farmers' Union and other groups of farmers who are vitally interested in this matter. He knows full well that a great deal of work has been done by the Kenya National Farmers' Union and other groups of farmers in regard to the preparation of detailed plans for farm purchase, etc., and discussions are still proceeding. At the end of the Lancaster House Conference it was decided jointly by Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Kenya to set up a working party to work out the details of a satisfactory land stabilization scheme. If such a committee was set up, then I would enquire when and where did it function? Obviously behind closed doors. Certainly the hon. Minister had no clear mandate from the majority of farmers to conduct the negotiations he undertook in London.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I wish to make it abundantly clear to the hon. Minister and all the hon. Members of this House that following the publication of Sessional Paper No. 10, and the outcome of the Lancaster House Conference, it has caused grave disquiet among European farmers of this country—at least to the majority of the farmers of this country, because they know that if and when—I hope personally not for many years to come—that this Colony finally attains its so-called independence, their position might become untenable as a result of probable discriminatory legislation brought about in regard to land matters. We all know that land is a human problem, and that when it is thrown into the political cauldron it can indeed become a high emotional issue. Arising from these genuine

[Mr. Maxwell] fears, the European farmers require Her Majesty's Government to inaugurate a mutually agreed finance scheme now for land purchase, resettlement, and I would add, personal rehabilitation, and this must be done without delay in order to restore confidence. A fund guaranteed by Her Majesty's Government—and this is where I disagree to some extent with the hon. Member for Ukamba, because I feel it is essential one should give some indication of the sum that is likely to be required—and the sum that we have in mind is in the region of £30,000,000 in order to make the scheme a reality, but obviously it would be unnecessary to provide this sum initially. It would operate as a revolving fund—purchasing and resale—and based on the Minister's estimate of increasing land values in the near future—I think he mentioned within the next two or three years—then the inauguration of such a scheme would be a business transaction. In my opinion, this House is not the proper place to discuss the precise details of a suitable land finance scheme, and I suggest that the hon. Minister should have early and frank discussions with all those concerned before his Ministry embarks on further representations to Her Majesty's Government.

I would like to refer to one point, or two points raised by the hon. Member for Nairobi West. He said before Her Majesty's Government—he can correct me if I am wrong—would embark on the financing of such a scheme it must take into account whether it is good business or otherwise. As I referred to earlier in this brief speech, I said that land values are likely to rise, so obviously it would be good business to invest in real estate, but not necessarily in the potential output of a chartered accountant.

He also said it was wrong to raise false hopes or expectations. Why are we making these demands?—because of the constitutional proposals that Her Majesty's Government has put before us. The Minister for Agriculture, the Kenya National Farmers' Union and other bodies are fighting for the inauguration of such a finance scheme because of the outcome of that Conference.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think the hon. Minister for Finance mentioned the other day—the cost of Mau Mau to this country—and I believe he said it was £57,000,000, of which this country contributed £26,000,000. I think he said the United Kingdom Government had given by way of free grant £25,000,000 and £6,000,000 by way of interest free loans.

Mr. Alexander: Interjection.

Mr. Maxwell: I did not suggest that we wanted £30,000,000 in one year, Sir, if the British Government can provide £33,000,000 to suppress the Mau Mau rebellion then surely it is not asking too much of Her Majesty's Government to put a similar sum of money into what might seem to be a really sound business enterprise.

Major Roberts: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, there has been a lot of talk in this House during the last two days about land in high potential areas. Sir, I gather the Minister for Agriculture believes that there is a considerable amount of land available, either as undeveloped land or underdeveloped land in these high potential areas. Sir, I would like to ask where this land is? He talks in terms of 50,000 acres. That is a very large area indeed, and I hope that when he replies he will give some indication as to where it is. I believe that there is land available by people who would be willing to sell, but such land would probably be fully developed, and the people would sell at a fair price. That I will grant. But, Sir, as my hon. friend, the Member for Ukamba, pointed out, to do so, and to divide such land into 50-acre holdings would not assist the economy of this country. Now it may well be that there are farms in this high potential area that would appear to be underdeveloped, but I can assure the Minister that there are farms of 2,000 acres with an average of 50 in. rainfall and at an altitude of 6,000 ft., but of these 2,000 acres probably only 300 are suitable for arable purposes and which could be considered as high potential land. The rest, Sir, is escarpments, murrum, gorges and rough stone. To break that sort of land down, although it is in a high potential area, to 50-acre plots would be quite ridiculous. All I can see the scheme doing, as outlined by the Minister, is to fragment land in penny patches throughout the scheduled areas to the detriment of farming generally. I thought, Sir, that one of the objects of Sessional Paper No. 10 was to produce a system of control which would prevent such a thing happening, and I regard the system as outlined by the Minister as one of fragmentation and infiltration. Sir, I would like to change the talking about high potential areas to that of the low potential land.

I would like to take the opportunity in this debate of asking the Minister to give me some information regarding a matter I raised last year. I think, in this same debate, and that was the question of that arid land in the Northern Frontier District and around Mackinnon Road. You will remember that at that time I asked if advantage would be taken of Mr. Horden's visit—Mr. Samuel Horden—I think his name was, who came to open last year's Royal Show—to get him to give his expert advice regarding how that land could be best utilized, and I would be very grateful if he would tell us what advice he received.

[Major Roberts]

Now, Sir, I would turn to the land stabilization scheme. It has become quite obvious to me that the money raised by the Minister for Agriculture and the Minister for Finance and this money which has been talked about in this debate bears no relation to any scheme put forward or land stabilization, either by the United Party, or by the Kenya National Farmers' Union, and I think many people are very confused over what these various schemes are. I think it needs to be made clear to the public that these are separate schemes. The position has further been aggravated by my hon. friend, the Member for Nairobi West, taking advantage to make capital out of one letter which was written in the paper referring to £100,000,000, thereby confusing the issue even further.

Sir, I am very grateful to my hon. friend, the Nominated Member, Commander Goord, who has cleared up something which has puzzled me ever since the days of Lancaster House. Sir, referring to the Lancaster House Conference, the United Party did put forward a scheme regarding land stabilization, and Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, we did receive very considerable support for this idea from both sides of the House of Commons, from the City of London, and even from the House of Lords, and Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Colonial Secretary himself did concede that there was considerable merit in what we were asking. So much so that he provided us with two experts, an economist and a legal adviser, to help us work out such a scheme. The outcome of the deliberations with these experts was that we came to the conclusion that a fund of some £30,000,000 would be required, and when we informed the Colonial Secretary of this decision, he said that he would first of all like to consult the Minister for Agriculture. Now I am going to apologize to the Minister for Agriculture because the other day in a meeting, not a Board, I did rather accuse him of being the person who "threw a spanner in the works" and prevented our scheme from receiving any further consideration. But I find I am wrong because Commander Goord has now made it perfectly clear it was the New Kenya Group, of the New Kenya Party—I do not know which is which—who, in fact, did bring out the very scheme which the Minister has now placed before this House, and so it is them, and not you, Sir, who "threw the spanner in the works", and I apologize to you.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Question.

Major Roberts: Now, Sir, after that no further mention was made of this £30,000,000 scheme, and all we heard was some mystic £5,000,000 which was referred to in the Conference Report.

And now, Sir, I would like to turn to the remarks made by my hon. friend, the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade. Sir, I found it rather difficult to follow his line of thinking on this question of the land stabilization scheme. First of all he seemed to fully support the scheme as outlined by the Minister, but he went on to say that he wished to pay tribute to the Kenya National Farmers' Union for the help they had given over the scheme. Sir, I did not follow that because the scheme advocated by the Kenya Farmers' Union is not related to the scheme as outlined by the Minister, and I therefore cannot understand how the Kenya National Farmers' Union could have assisted in this matter. Sir, he ended by advocating a scheme that would need finance to the tune of £35,000,000. I think it was £3,500,000 for ten years, which seems much more closely related to our ideas and that of the Kenya National Farmers' Union than it does to the Government scheme placed before us. Sir, he went on to indicate that in his opinion there was no lack of confidence amongst European farmers. In fact, he said that there was a growing stream of applicants to the Land Bank to borrow money for development. I wonder, Sir, if it could be that some people would prefer today to borrow money for development rather than utilize their own. He then went on to say, Sir, that there were buyers for farms in this country, but not at fancy prices. I am not quite certain what he means by "fancy prices". Is it the price asked by the seller or is it the price offered by the buyer. I rather fancy it might be the latter.

Sir, there has been a lot of talk about it being quite impossible to raise this £30,000,000. Sir, I agree it might be difficult to raise it from ordinary commercial sources or from ordinary investment money, but I feel in this case Her Majesty's Government has a moral obligation to undertake this task, and I feel it is up to it to underwrite the money necessary for this scheme. Sir, I would assure hon. Members that there are many persons in the House of Common who realize that they have this moral obligation, and I believe if it was pressed home and the true position put to them they would face up to this moral obligation.

It seems to me that the Government is not going to help us in any way to try and get the scheme that we want. Therefore, Sir, we shall have to be left to "go it" alone. But, Sir, you know Her Majesty's Government is very confident that the outcome of the future of this country will be such that the Europeans will be perfectly happy in this country and there will be no need for them to go at all. Sir, if Her Majesty's Government has got that confidence, then surely there is no risk in underwriting the sum of money which has been mentioned. Sir, it is not only Her Majesty's Government who has great confidence, but my hon. friend, the Minister for Agriculture, has tremendous confidence. He has told us only yesterday that land which is worth £20 per acre to-day he prophesies will be worth more than double in five years' time. Well, Sir, I am sure if he can only do something to show people his sincerity, then, Sir, I feel that that would go a long way to restore confidence in the farming community. I know, Sir, he is not a gambling man, but I want to put a suggestion to him. I want him, in consultation with the hon. Member on his right, to have a small gamble and say: "Look, I will only accept half my salary for the next five years whilst I am Minister for Agriculture"—that is if he is still Minister in five years' time—and provided at the end of that time land in this country is worth more than double what it is today, or worth double what it is today, he would then receive double his salary for the period.

Sir, people will say, why have we lost confidence? Why do we fear the future may not be too good and we may want to leave? Well, Sir, since the Lancaster House Conference our African friends have not done very much to give us any reason to cast those fears aside. With your permission, Sir, I would just like to quote one or two things which have been said by African leaders, which cause us to have those fears. According to the East African Standard, Mr. Ngala, speaking at Mombasa on 28th February, said this: "If a farm in the Highlands is over-sized, it is going to be cut down and taken over." He went on to say: "We refuse to acknowledge Arab rights on the Coastal strip." And again, Sir, according to the East African Standard of 25th February, the same gentleman gave a statement to this effect. What we want to clarify is the position of land in the so-called White Highlands—a claim that land ownership and property rights are indisputable. They have been in dispute since the establishment of the white settlement in the territory of Kenya. The Bill of Rights can only apply in the protection of rights and the dispute of ownership cannot be given legal recognition without the issues being thoroughly examined and permanently settled." Those sort of remarks, Sir, do not lead the European farmer to believe that after independence he is going to enjoy a very pleasant time in this country, and it is because of these things that the farmer wants to be assured that if he tries to see this experiment through and it fails, then he will know that he will be able to receive fair value for his land and the work he has put into it.

Sir, I and my hon. friend, the Member for Mount Kenya, would ask the Minister for Agriculture for a proper working party or Commission to be set up to really examine this whole position and go into it. It would have the great effect of restoring confidence in the Europeans of this country, and I do not think it is asking very much, and I would beg him to take action on that very quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I frankly confess I am a gambling man but I also confess that having listened to the somewhat complex proposition put to my two colleagues by the last speaker, I came to the conclusion that he was using the word with "ol" at the end of it rather than "le". This conjures up a rather pretty picture in my mind of two Pan-like figures tripping through the meadows crushing the daisies. Let us say one Pan-like figure because I hardly feel I should be in order with the E.A.S.P.C.A. if I tried to cram the figure of the hon. Minister for Agriculture into the size of Pan. Shall we say a Centaur and a Pan? I apologize for that digression.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the hon. (and gracious lady from Nyanza said as I understood her, that there was a certain, perhaps, doubt or unease in the country, or her part of the country, as to whether the Bill of Rights, as it has been called, and the general preparation of the Constitution were proceeding and whether or not the Bill of Rights was indeed to be included.

I think I should therefore explain, Sir, that as the House knows, in accordance with the Conference Report a working party consisting of the Chief Secretary and myself has been set up to examine and recommend within the principles embodied in the report the rules which would govern the qualifications and nomination of candidates and the election of Members to the Legislative Council including the delimitation of constituencies, that is to say, broadly speaking, the proposed new electoral system. Now we are engaged on that task and we are, in fact, being somewhat retarded in our progress by reason of the fact that having, I think, as it was generally understood that we would, consulted all the elected groups in this Council, and having at their request left certain outstanding matters for their further consideration and submission of their views to us, we have not yet received all those views. The receipt of those views and the completion of our task as a working party is the first step in the constitutional exercise, because that step must be completed before what is known as the pilot Order in Council is a constitutional device to anticipate the operation of the substantive Order in

[The Minister for Legal Affairs] Council in order to enable the necessary preparations for the implementation of the substantive Order in Council to be carried out in advance. In particular, of course, it is designed in our present context to enable us to proceed with the registration of voters, the delimitation of constituencies and the like.

Now, that pilot Order in Council will not include the Bill of Rights or make any reference to safeguards, it is, as I say, a preparatory and intermediate step.

In the report the hon. lady and gentlemen opposite who are laughing are barking up the wrong tree because I am not really batting out time!

If there is, as I understand the hon. and gracious lady to suggest a certain uneasiness or doubt as to whether the Bill of Rights incorporating constitutional safeguards is going to be proceeded with, I would like to put the matter quite straight by referring to the Conference Report itself in which, under the heading "Safeguards", there appears—and I propose to omit sentences which are not material to the present considerations—the following statement: "After discussions, both in the Committee and outside, in which full agreement was not reached, the Secretary of State made the following statement", and then there comes a paragraph which it is not necessary for me to read, he then went on, "I turn first to the question of embodying in the Constitution provisions to safeguard fundamental human rights. We have had circulated to us several papers suggesting the enactment of provisions in the Constitution which would give legally enforceable protection to the fundamental rights of the individual against the State.

"A legal code of this kind, if included in the Order in Council, would not of course either invalidate or enshrine laws which are now in force in Kenya, but it would ensure that any measure by which those laws were changed would conform to the fundamental principles required to safeguard individual rights. Such a code would also set the standard by which the Kenya Government would adjust existing law and practice.

"The two main papers which we have had put before us are the extracts from the Nigerian Constitution which is, I think, accepted as a very recent and detailed model for the enactment of such a code, and a very helpful paper by Dr. Thurgood Marshall outlining the kind of provisions which might help to meet the situation.

"It is the firm view of Her Majesty's Government that legal provisions are needed in the proposed Constitution, which will be made by Order in Council, to provide for the judicial protection of human rights, on the lines of the Nigeria (Constitution) Order in Council, taking into account the draft prepared by Dr. Thurgood Marshall and the special circumstances of Kenya. I have asked my own Legal Adviser, Sir Kenneth Roberts-Wray, to supervise the drafting of these provisions."

Now, that, I submit, Sir, is a clear expression of Her Majesty's Government's views and of the intention of incorporation in the Order in Council what we have come to know as the Bill of Rights, these judicial safeguards of individual rights for the individual against the State.

Sir, I believe the hon. and gracious lady wishes me to give way.

Mrs. Shaw: Sir, I thank the hon. Minister for giving way. I did not want to interrupt the flow before. All I wanted to know was had Sir Kenneth Roberts-Wray got on with the job?

An Hon. Member: (Inaudible.)

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Now, I am not going to be deterred by the hon. and gracious lady's over-simplification of the problem she put to me.

My hon. friends opposite will remember that when we were discussing safeguards both in plenary and, I think, in Committee, and in the course of the informal discussions between groups which took place outside the plenary and committee stages of the Conference, whatever disagreements there were and, as stated in the Report, full agreement was not reached, there was no disagreement on the fundamental principle which, I think from recollection, was indeed embodied in Dr. Thurgood Marshall's own statement which was adopted by the African Elected Members and submitted by them to the Conference, was embodied in that paper and generally agreed by all groups, the principle that the Bill of Rights should include a positive provision that there should be, would be and could be no expropriation of property without full and fair compensation and that the propriety of the expropriation and the adequacy or otherwise of the compensation would be open to judicial assessment as of right, and I can only tell the hon. lady that so far as I know, Her Majesty's Government's views, and certainly my own views, on this subject and on the importance of that particular matter, have not changed since Lancaster House.

The hon. lady asked if Sir Kenneth Roberts-Wray had got on with the drafting. May I remind her that Sir Kenneth Roberts-Wray is to supervise the drafting? Now, I have a shrewd suspicion, on which indeed as a gambling man I would be prepared to wager a considerable sum, that it will not be Sir Kenneth Roberts-Wray who produces the first draft. I would be prepared to wager a further considerable sum that it will be I who will have to produce the first draft!

All of which brings me back to the logical sequence of my answer to the hon. and gracious lady's query, that I cannot do everything at once, that I am on the working party with my hon. colleague the Chief Secretary, that we are carrying out the necessary preliminary work before we can start to draft, and that we are indeed being somewhat held up by the lack of final views on outstanding points which we have been promised by some of the groups; we have received some, we have not received others. When those have been received and we are in a position to conclude our task and make our recommendations, then and only then really will it be possible for me to embark on the drafting because it is by the drafting that I will be reflecting the decisions taken on the result of the labours of my friend the Chief Secretary and myself in the working party. When that has been done, and may I remind hon. Members that the first task is to draft the pilot Order in Council, then and only then shall I be able to get on with the draft of the substantive Order in Council which will incorporate, as I have said, the Bill of Rights and safeguards which were projected at the Lancaster House Conference and in the Report I now hold in my hand.

I beg to support.

ADJOURNMENT MOTION

WOMAN DETAINED ILLEGALLY AT MATHARI.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I would ask a Minister to move that Council do now adjourn.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that Council do now adjourn.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Seconded.

Mr. Slade: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, there is a particular matter of importance which I would like to raise before the Council adjourns and I am grateful for this opportunity of doing so, I am also grateful to those hon. Members who have the patience still to listen to me with their thirst unassuaged, if indeed it be unassuaged.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, this matter arises out of Question No. 23 which I asked the Minister for Legal Affairs and to which he gave a written reply two days ago.

Sir, the question was very short and, I should say, fairly simple: "(a) Is it a fact that a certain woman was on 19th July forcibly and illegally taken by police officers to Mathari Hospital and thereafter illegally detained at that hospital for a period of four days?" Now, that was capable of an answer "Yes" or "No". The written reply which the hon. Minister put in runs over a great many paragraphs and is really an account of what happened and a purported justification of what happened, but quite clearly contains in all those paragraphs the answer "Yes". A certain woman was forcibly and illegally taken by police officers to Mathari Hospital and thereafter illegally detained for four days. The second question was: "If so, what disciplinary action has been taken against the persons concerned?" The answer to that one, wrapped up in the written reply, is: "None and none intended." Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the written reply which I hope most hon. Members will have read in HANSARD purports to exonerate the various persons concerned on two general grounds. One is that they were acting in the best interests of this woman; and the second is that their errors—their admitted errors—were largely procedural and technical. Sir, I am not concerned here today with the merits of the case, in the sense of (the state of this particular woman, or with what excuses there are for the conduct of the officers concerned; nor yet is my concern with compensation of the woman in question, because indeed, as stated in the written reply, compensation has been offered. I do not admit that the statement contained in the written reply is a full and utterly impartial statement of all the relevant facts, or necessarily all the reasons and motives for what was done. I am not concerned with, that, Sir, I am not going to waste the time of the House on it. What I am concerned with and shall continue to be concerned with in any other case like this, is the attitude of the Government towards the law, and particularly the law affecting the freedom of the individual.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, forcible detention, forcible imprisonment, is a serious matter at any time. It is particularly serious, I suggest, when it is forcible detention in a mental hospital; not only because of the stigma that that particular detention involves, and which can stay in the mind of any who come to know of it for a very long time afterwards, but also because of the isolation of those who are detained in mental hospitals and the great difficulty that they have in communicating with the outside world and asking for help once they get there. You are taking a very great responsibility when you forcibly take and detain someone in a mental hospital. And it is in recognition of that great responsibility that the law is very precise as to measures for the protection of the individual, to ensure that they are not forcibly detained without good cause. The matter is governed by the Mental Treatment Ordinance of 1949 and that Ordinance provides very carefully as follows. No one can be forcibly detained against his or her will in a mental hospital without a magistrate's order. It requires the authority of the judiciary first. Police who find a case they think is a case for detention in a mental hospital must take that case to a magistrate forthwith, if they want to interfere with his or her liberty at all. That is covered by section 17 of the Ordinance: "Any person so taken into custody shall be taken forthwith before the nearest magistrate." When the police take such action, the magistrate's powers to make an order for reception into a mental hospital only arise after he has himself examined the person concerned (sections 20 and 21 of the Ordinance). And if there is to be a medical examination, so that he can make up his mind; he must direct that medical examination (section 20). The form of the order that he should make for reception into a hospital is prescribed by law and in that form are the words, So-and-So "has this day been brought before me" and on it goes. The mental hospital is prohibited by law (sections 3 and 26 of the Ordinance) from receiving anybody under compulsion except in pursuance of an order made by a magistrate in due form.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that law, I suggest, is very necessary, for the reasons that I have given earlier. But what happened in this case, you will see from the written reply if you look deeply enough. You will not quite see all of it. First of all, the police did not take this woman straight to a magistrate. They took her under compulsion to a hospital and there put a doctor to examine her. No magistrate ever saw her at all, but a magistrate made an illegal order for her to go to Mathari in no prescribed form at all without having seen her, without having ordered any medical examination, simply on the ipse dixit of the police by telephone, I believe. It was, incidentally, Sunday afternoon. The police acted on that illegal order and took the woman by compulsion to Mathari Mental Hospital. The officers of Mathari Mental Hospital received her on the strength of a clearly illegal order, illegal on the face of it, simply because the police asked them to do so. And last, but not least, the next day the magistrate—I regret to have to use the word—falsified a reception order. The next day the magistrate made out an order in the prescribed form purporting to be dated the day before which started with these words, signed by the magistrate: "So-and-So has this day been brought before me." And the end of it all was that within four days it was found that the lady was not certifiable. She was released; and, though it is nearly a year now since this event, she has never been certified since.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I do submit to this Council that no circumstances—none whatsoever—hard cases, good cases, none can justify such disregard by a series of officers including the judiciary, of basic law, not mere technicalities, basic law devised for the protection of the freedom of the subject. Otherwise, Sir, the police, the officers of Mathari Hospital, even, the judiciary can disregard the law if they like for reasons that they think good with the hope that Government will wink at it—and obviously a well-justified hope, that Government will wink at it. Now, did the people concerned in this case not know the law? Or did they deliberately ignore the law? It is equally bad either way. What protection is there for any of us here if this is the state of affairs, that no one worries if such vital law is known to the officers concerned or if they know if they disregard it? If no one worries if a magistrate falsifies an order? What point is there in having any law for the protection of the individual?

Now, just to emphasize the attitude of Government in this matter, Sir, I must refer to paragraph 11 of the reply: "The magistrate's error was largely procedural and technical." In another part of the same paragraph it says: "The position of magistrates would become intolerable if disciplinary proceedings were taken against them whenever they made an error in the application of the law." Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that a fair statement of the circumstances of this case? The magistrate is told quite clearly by the law and by the prescribed form what he has to do. He does not do it. Then, knowing that he has done wrong, he tries to put it right afterwards. And that is described as an error, "procedural and technical", or an "error in the application of the law". I can only describe that attitude of Government, Sir, as a shocking attitude to a law of this kind. And I say, Sir, that all such cases must call for disciplinary action, even if it is only for the future, that if ever a case like this arises again where any officer has been encouraged because of the Government's attitude in this matter to believe that he can disregard laws made for the safety of the individual, for the protection of personal freedom, I for one shall pursue it relentlessly; and I am asking this Council now to note the circumstances of this case, just as it will be recorded in HANSARD for the future, because we here must guard jealously the law, and particularly on the liberty of the subject. I hope we all intend to do so. The police and magistrates and other servants of the Crown must know and must observe those laws. But will they trouble to do so if there is no sanction of disciplinary action for any default?

The Minister for Legal Affairs (Mr. Griffith-Jones): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think the hon. gentleman is somewhat less than generous in his criticism of my reply to his question. I shall bear in mind his suggestion that in future parliamentary questions should be "answered monosyllabically but I shall not resort to that expedient when, as the hon. gentleman well knows, to do so as in this case would be to give this Council a half truth only; indeed, in this case not to have given it any information about the case concerned at all. The hon. gentleman has also fallen into the error—which I admit he does not often do in my experience—of grossly overstating his case. He has suggested in effect that where circumstances arise such as in this case there must be automatic punishment of the officers concerned. Now that, Sir, is a heretical principle to any lawyer. I would like to quote to the House the demolition of such heresy in regard to the criminal law by two of perhaps the most outstanding Attorneys-General of England of recent years. I quote from a speech by Sir Hartley Shawcross to the House of Commons, I think it was, 1950. "It was seriously suggested," he said, "that the operation of the law should be virtually automatic—which is what my hon. friend has suggested—where any breach of it was known or suspected to have occurred. The truth is, of course, that the exercise of discretion in a quasi-judicial way as to whether or when I must take steps to enforce the criminal law is exactly one of the duties of the office of the Attorney-General, as it is of the office of the Director of Public Prosecutions, who works under the direction of the Attorney-General.

"It has never been the rule in this country—I hope it never will be—that suspected criminal offences must automatically be made the subject of prosecution. Indeed, the very first regulations under which the Director of Public Prosecutions worked provided that he should intervene to prosecute, amongst other cases, 'whenever it appears that the offence or the circumstances of its commission is or are of such a character that a prosecution in respect thereof is required in the public interest'. That is the dominant consideration.

"So," he went on, 'under the tradition of our criminal law the position is that the Attorney-General and the Director of Public Prosecutions only intervene to direct a prosecution when they consider it in the public interest so to do. Lord Simon, who was once himself a most distinguished Attorney-General, put the position very clearly when he said in debate in this House, 'There is no greater nonsense talked about the Attorney-General's duty than the suggestion that in all cases the Attorney-General ought to decide to prosecute merely because he thinks there is what the lawyers call "a case". It is not true and no one who has held that office supposes it is.' That is the principle which, although discredited expressly by those authorities, the hon. and learned gentleman would have us adopt by analogy in the application of discipline within the Government service. We will not adopt it.

Officers in the service have the right to expect fair and equitable treatment and it would be wholly wrong, wholly inequitable, to make any presumption of guilt, or to make any automatic application of punishment, irrespective of the facts and circumstances of a case, including mitigating factors.

The hon. gentleman suggested that nobody worried about this case, other than presumably he himself. Again, he is less than generous. Quite apart from the fact that Government does not normally treat lightly matters of this importance, matters affecting the liberty of the subject, in the reply which I went to considerable pains to give him in this House I said: "An enquiry into this affair was held by the Director of Establishments in consultation with the Director of Medical Services, the Acting Deputy Commissioner of Police and the Registrar of the Supreme Court. This enquiry established that all the officers concerned in the incident acted in what they considered to be in the best interests of the woman, who was clearly ill and in need of medical care and attention. The police and the authorities at Mathari acted on the certificate from a medical practitioner that she was of unsound mind and on a written authority from a magistrate for her detention in Mathari." That, I think, is hardly consistent with the suggestion that Government has acted irresponsibly in this matter and dismissed it without worrying about it. Let us at any rate be as accurate as we can be in our facts and in our accusations against each other.

Now, hon. Members may not have read the full statement of the facts which have been disclosed by this Governmental enquiry, at very high level, as set out in the reply which I gave in this House.

But let us just consider the facts in summary. This woman was found in Salisbury Road by a European motorist and his wife, as they said, in a hysterical condition in the bushes, saying she had been robbed. They took her in their car to the police station. On the way she tried to jump out of the car three times, when it was moving, and had to be restrained by the motorist's wife. She arrived at the police station, presumably to report the robbery perpetrated on her. She refused to give any details. She refused to assist the police. She abused the police officers and the police generally. They tried to persuade her to accompany them to the scene of the incident. Only after a great deal of patient persuasion was she persuaded to do so. When they arrived at the scene, far from helping them, she abused them more, she screamed, she shouted, she ran up and down the road, and created a public disturbance. The police, who were of course entitled to take her into custody, retain her in custody until the next sitting of a magistrate, which would have been the following day, and have penal sanctions applied to her, did not do that. They decided that what she needed was not penal action, but help in the form of medical attention, and they took her, therefore, to the hospital.

At the hospital she was examined by a doctor—not a Government doctor, but a private doctor. She was asked if she wished to contact her own doctor and a telephone was made available to her and she was given an opportunity to do so, but she declined to do so. The doctor's certificate—this was not a Government doctor—let me read it. It was issued at that time, after examination. "She is maniacal and unable to listen to reason. She is irrational in behaviour and speech. She exhibits a degree of paranoia: she is persecuted by everyone, especially police. She is unwilling to give any particulars about herself because she believes the information will be used for ulterior purposes. She has at times been completely uncontrollable except by force." This doctor issued that certificate. What were the policemen to do in those circumstances? They could have taken her back and put her in the cells and left her there and kept her there until the following day and then taken her before a magistrate. They did not do that. They elected again to pursue the path of helping her. They got in touch, and this was a Sunday, with a first-class magistrate at his house, and they told him the position.

The magistrate asked to see the doctor's certificate, which was sent to him. He decided, rightly or wrongly, but in good faith, and I do not think objective considerations of this affair would lead me to think otherwise, he decided rightly or wrongly, but in good faith, that if he were to see her for the purpose of committing her, as it would be and as he would have had to explain to her, to a mental institution, then in view of the condition of the woman which had been described to him both by the police and in the doctor's certificate, that it might do greater harm than if he did not see her. He was wrong. I admit that. He did not see her. But that is the reason that he has given, that he felt it might upset her even more, and I accept that reason as an honest one. He therefore signed an order. Now this was a Sunday. He was at his house. He had none of the printed forms which are prescribed under the Ordinance. He had not his books to refer to. He had to take such action as he could, and he wrote out an order in his own hand. He did not even have a typist. He gave it to the police officer, ordering her detention in Mathari Hospital for up to 14 days for the purposes of observation. The police officer took her, having the doctor's certificate—not a Government doctor's, but a private doctor's—and having the magistrate's manuscript order written out in his own handwriting and signed in those circumstances—in incorrect form, I freely admit, and without having seen the woman, I freely admit. They took the woman to Mathari. They presented the doctor's certificate and the magistrate's order and the woman, whose condition I have already described to you. The mental nurse admitted the woman on that basis. Strictly speaking, the mental nurse should not have done so, because the order was, in fact, invalid, as we subsequently discovered, but the mental nurse did so in those circumstances, and I hardly think, again, that an impartial consideration of these facts would, in fact, condemn the mental nurse for doing so.

At Mathari the woman was kept under observation by the psychiatrist and his assistant psychiatrist in the hospital for four days, at the end of which she was discharged, but on admission she was diagnosed as suffering from hypomania, and the psychiatrist reported subsequently—the psychiatrist in charge of the hospital—that for no apparent reason she "belted one of the European staff's children". She refused to comply with his suggestion that she make a statement to the police to describe her handbag which had been stolen, so that they might recover it. Although he found her overwrought, over-talkative and upset, she refused his offer of treatment. He described her as having a paranoid and litigious attitude. However, after four days he and his assistant decided that while she was "certainly beyond the limits of normal talk and behaviour"—and I quote their words—she was not actually certifiable, and the reason they came to that conclusion, as they reported, was that she was not then suffering from any apparent delusions.

Those are the facts.

The magistrate did sign an order in the proper form next day. He did purport to date it as of the previous day. He obviously did not read through the printed form of the order because he undoubtedly signed it when it said he had seen the woman, and he had not, in fact, seen the Woman. He should not have signed that order, and of course it could not operate to validate ex post facto the order of the day before which was illegal and invalid. But is there, in this account of the facts, any offence committed by any of the officers which one would not regard as largely technical or procedural? And may I say this, and I think this is a fair thing, and I feel impelled to say it in view of the remarks of my hon. and learned friend opposite, that had every detail of the correct procedure been complied with, then there is no question on the facts but that the outcome would have been precisely the same. However, procedurally and technically there were errors, and they were fatal errors to the validity of the authority under which this woman was detained in Mathari. Accordingly Government admitted that and offer her compensation. She has not seen fit to accept it because she says she is determined that the officers concerned shall be punished disciplinarily. That is none of her business. The Government must retain control of the discipline in its own service. She has refused to sign the normal receipt and discharge, and therefore she refuses to accept the compensation. It is still available for her. It is still on offer to her at any time she chooses to accept it. It is a considerable sum of money. But she will not be paid it until she signs the normal receipt and discharge which one is entitled to expect in these circumstances.

[The Minister for Legal Affairs]

Now, steps have been taken to ensure that police officers are acquainted with Police Standing Orders which set out the correct procedure, though I do not accept that the police officers involved in this case acted in any sense really culpably.

Steps have also been taken by the Chief Justice to ensure that in future applications under the Mental Diseases Ordinance are dealt with only by legally qualified professional magistrates. The magistrate in this case was not a legally qualified officer.

The Government regrets very deeply the errors that occurred in this case. It has dealt as equitably in the circumstances as it considers possible with the woman by its offer of compensation. It not only reserves the right, but it demands the right and will exercise the right, to deal with its own officers no less equitably.

IN THE COMMITTEE

[D. W. Conroy, Esq., C.M.G., O.B.E., T.D., Q.C., in the Chair]

The Specific Loan (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) Bill
Clause 2 agreed to.

Clause 3

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Minister for Legal Affairs, I beg to move the amendments of which notice was given and published in the Orders of the Day for last Wednesday. The first amendment, Mr. Chairman, I have to propose is that clause 3 be omitted and that the following new clause be inserted in place thereof:—

Borrowing from Bank.
3. (1) The Governor is hereby authorized, in the name of the Government, to borrow from the Bank the sum of two million pounds sterling or the equivalent in pounds sterling and other currencies, or the equivalent in other currencies.

(2) The borrowing shall be deemed—

(a) to be made on the date that any agreement providing therefor is signed, notwithstanding any other date on which the Loan or any part thereof may be made available or may be drawn; and

(b) to be in such amount of pounds sterling as is the equivalent, at the rate of exchange in force at the date of such signature, to the amount of the Loan as expressed in the currency in which the Loan is denominated for the purpose of such agreement.

(3) The Governor may delegate, by instrument under his hand and the public seal, to any person by name, or to any person holding any office specified in such instrument, the power to execute and, if necessary, deliver any written agreement or any other document required by the Bank.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment expands what was clause 3 into three subsections. The first subsection repeats almost identically the existing clause, expanded merely to make it clear that the Loan may be made in pounds sterling, or in pounds sterling and other currencies, or wholly in other currencies. The new subsection (2) is merely designed to bring the clause into line with the Agreement particularly with regard to making the position clear with regard to commitment charges, and to clarify that the rate of exchange is that as at the date of the signature of the Agreement. The new subsection (3) is really inserted from an abundance of caution since we probably have powers both at common law and under the Government Contracts Ordinance, 1956, so as to enable the Governor to empower Her Majesty's Ambassador in Washington, Sir Harold Caccia, to sign the agreement on behalf of the Government of Kenya.

Question proposed.

Question that the clause to be left out be left out put and carried.

Question that the new clause to be inserted in place thereof be inserted put and carried.

Clause 3 agreed to.

Clause 4

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that clause 4 be amended by the addition at the end thereof of the words "which are hereby appropriated to that purpose".

Clause 4, Sir, charges the principal moneys and the interest on this Loan on the Consolidated Fund, but hon. Members will have seen that I shall be moving at a later stage that clause 10 of the Bill be deleted. There was a certain amount of duplication, Sir, between clauses 4 and 10, and provided the words which I have now moved be added to clause 4 so as specifically to appropriate these moneys, then clause 10 becomes redundant.

I beg to move.

Question proposed.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): I think, Sir, this may be a convenient opportunity for me to make quite clear one point which I did make yesterday, but which I gather may not have been fully understood, or alternatively, looking at this morning's newspaper, that the printer's devil may have been at work. What I would like to make quite clear is that I said yesterday that as regards terms, the loan will be repayable in 14 instalments, beginning on 15th January, 1964, and ending on 15th July, 1970—that is 14 half-yearly instalments, not over 14 years.

There is one further point, Sir, and that is, of course, that we have a period of grace from the date of signing the loan until 15th January, 1964, during which no repayments of capital are necessary, merely payments of interest.

Question that the words proposed to be inserted be inserted put and carried.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

Clause 6

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move:—

(1) THAT clause 6 be omitted;

[Mr. Webb]

(2) THAT the following clause be inserted in place thereof—

Appropriation of Loan.
6. The money raised under the authority of this Ordinance shall be appropriated to and applied for the reimbursement of expenditure incurred for the various purposes specified in the Schedule to this Ordinance:

— Provided that where in the opinion of the Governor it is not possible, in respect of any part of the money so raised, to apply it for the purposes so specified, such part may be applied to such other purposes as may be approved by him and agreed by the Secretary of State with the concurrence of the United Kingdom Treasury and the Bank.

Sir, the purpose of this amendment is primarily to delete the specific reference in the existing clause to African farmers and co-operative societies, which was both at once too wide and too narrow, and to substitute the reference to the purposes specified in the Schedule, which I will be proposing should be added to the Bill at a later stage. The purposes specified in the Schedule are word for word those set out in the Agreement itself, and it was therefore thought preferable to specify them too in this Bill.

I beg to move.

Question proposed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, Sir, yesterday I did raise the question of local authorities in the areas specifically concerned being required to carry the debt for these roads. I was grateful to the Minister for Agriculture for having explained that this money will be repaid from Central Revenue in accordance with Government policy in respect of grants for roads in local authority areas. Since then I tried to study a little bit more of this question, Mr. Chairman, and I refer to the White Paper No. 1 of 1957/58—the financial relationships between the Kenya Government and the African district councils—and in that there is very little reference, so far as I can see to roads, though what it does say at heading number 14 headed "Road Authority Grants" is that these grants which have been in operation since 1st January, 1954, will continue, I imagine, therefore, that the grants, or the policy to which the Minister was referring yesterday, is that particular policy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we learn from this amendment, which is more specific, that these roads are to serve "agricultural sections of the areas of high potential"—agricultural sections. And I still think, Mr. Chairman, that it would be wise, and would be fair and would be certainly better financial policy for the very local nature of these roads to be, the responsibility of them, to be passed on to the local authorities. As I see it, the policy in respect of grants through the road authority is for main district roads, or should be for main district roads, particularly roads connecting between one section and another. But these roads, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, are to serve very particular spots, agricultural sections, and I believe that it would be far wiser for the local authority itself to be responsible, and also for another reason, Mr. Chairman, we were told yesterday, although it does not include it in this amendment, that the maintenance also on these roads is to be of a standard and a kind approved, or specified, by the World Bank, and I believe that if the problem was brought right down to the people themselves, the people on the spot who are going to use these roads, then there is far more likelihood of them being used properly and being maintained properly, and it would bring right home to the people on the spot their particular responsibility for these assets. As I understand it, this money is not really appropriated by this Bill, and there will be, I imagine, an opportunity to discuss the appropriation of it in the development programme debate, and perhaps that will be the moment to come back again and challenge the wisdom of this particular policy relating to local authorities in this respect. But I did think it was a useful opportunity to try and get this out of the way today. I do believe, Mr. Chairman, that the people themselves would have a far more realistic appreciation of this spending, and of the complicated negotiations that have gone into producing this money if they themselves were more closely connected with the responsibility of repaying it.

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Mr. Chairman, I am glad to note that the hon. Member has said that he will not persist in this argument in this debate, but may bring it up again in the Development Estimates, and I would like to give him one or two ideas to chew over until that time arrives.

I cannot see why we should make any difference, and use this money in any different way in the areas concerned that we do today with the development money which indeed is Government loan money. When the hon. Member said that these roads are very specific, and are serving particular sections, that may be, but the same applies to roads today. In fact, in the county council areas it is the Road Authority's policy, but in not only the county council areas, but it is a main principle of the Road Authority to favour roads all over the country which help to bring produce to railhead and to

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] distribute it. That, I think, is a policy which is a fair one, and a right one, because it does indeed help the actual production of food-stuffs and the production of exports, etc., which benefit the whole Colony. There would certainly be no difference to my mind between the roads on which this money is spent, and may I give the example of the Embu/Meru road, which indeed requires a considerable amount of improvement and is serving an extremely important agricultural producing area in the Colony. What difference is there between that road and, say, the road to Kipkabus and even up to the Trans Nzoia, which again are other areas which are vitally important to the economy of the Colony due to the products which come from those areas?

Well, Sir, all I am saying is that if the policy advocated by the hon. Member for Nairobi West were adopted in this instance, then it would necessarily have to be applied in all areas of the Colony, and all loan money channelled through the Development Committee or not then should be serviced by the ratepayers of the areas to which that money was applied for roads. Otherwise we would be discriminating against one particular area of the Colony, and I personally feel that it would be most unfair at this time to saddle the ratepayers of any particular section or indeed the ratepayers of the whole of the agricultural areas of the Colony with this liability for the construction and maintenance of what are essential parts of the economy of the country as a whole, and are not necessarily only confined to one particular area.

Question that the clause to be inserted in place thereof be inserted put and carried.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clause 7

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that clause 7 be omitted, and that the following clause be inserted in place thereof—

7. The terms and conditions upon and subject to which the Loan shall be borrowed shall be such as may be agreed with the Bank consistently with the provisions of this Ordinance, and such agreement may, inter alia, provide for the creation and the issue of such instruments, including bonds, as may be required by the Bank.

Terms and conditions of the Loan.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that clause 7 be omitted, and that the following clause be inserted in place thereof—

7. The terms and conditions upon and subject to which the Loan shall be borrowed shall be such as may be agreed with the Bank consistently with the provisions of this Ordinance, and such agreement may, inter alia, provide for the creation and the issue of such instruments, including bonds, as may be required by the Bank.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that clause 7 be omitted, and that the following clause be inserted in place thereof—

7. The terms and conditions upon and subject to which the Loan shall be borrowed shall be such as may be agreed with the Bank consistently with the provisions of this Ordinance, and such agreement may, inter alia, provide for the creation and the issue of such instruments, including bonds, as may be required by the Bank.

Question proposed.

Question that the clause proposed to be inserted in place thereof be inserted put and carried.

Clause 7 as amended agreed to.

Clause 8

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that clause 8 be amended by the insertion, after the words "of the guarantee" in the second line, of the words "in respect".

This, Mr. Chairman, is a purely verbal amendment which will have the effect of making the first few words of that clause read: "Any sums issued out of the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom on account of the guarantee in respect of such loan by the United Kingdom Treasury. . ."

I beg to move.

Question proposed.

Question that the words proposed to be inserted be inserted put and carried.

Clause 8 agreed to.

Clause 9

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that clause 9 be omitted and that the following clause be inserted in place thereof:—

9. (1) The Governor, or the Crown Agents acting on his behalf, may issue such instruments, including bonds, as may be required by the Bank in accordance with the terms of the Loan.

(2) The Minister, or such other person as he may appoint in writing, shall sign such bonds in the name and on behalf of the Governor.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the first subsection which virtually repeats the existing clause 9, is to bring that clause into line with clause 7 in the way in which the Committee has just agreed that that clause should be amended.

The new subsection (2) is very largely formal and brings the Bill once more into line with the agreement with the Bank. It proposes to give the Minister for Finance power to delegate the signature of bonds, and since these may well be issued in London or New York that is obviously very necessary. The giving of this power to the Minister is simply for an abundance of caution, so that the validity of the bonds, when signed by somebody else, cannot possibly be questioned.

Question proposed.

Question that the clause to be left out be left out put and carried.

Question that the clause to be inserted in place thereof be inserted put and carried.

Clause 9 agreed to.

Clause 10

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that clause 10 be deleted from the Bill.

As I explained, Sir, in moving the amendment to clause 4 of this Bill, a certain amount of duplication exists between this clause-10, and clause 4 and with the amendment which the Committee has agreed to clause 4 a great deal of clause 10 becomes otiose. Certain other parts of clause 10 are really purely administrative and do not require legislative action.

I beg to move.

Question proposed.

Question that the words proposed to be left out be left out put and carried.

Clause 10 agreed to.

New Schedule

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that the following Schedule be added to the Bill:—

SCHEDULE

(Section 6)

1. The completion of the Government's current programmes for agricultural development, for the three-year period ending 30th June, 1963, under the plan to intensify the development of African agriculture, commonly called the Swynerton Plan, in those areas in the Native Lands with more than 25 in. of annual rainfall and an altitude of more than 4,000 ft. above sea level (hereinafter referred to as "the areas of high potential") including:—

- (a) land consolidation and the establishment of individual land rights on about five million acres;
- (b) the establishment and improvement of protective forests;
- (c) the improvement and expansion of agricultural services, including experimentation, demonstration, extension and education, soil conservation and farm planning, to enable African farmers to develop their farms into viable units and to improve their standard of living through increased production of food-crops, improved animal husbandry and production of cash-crops;
- (d) the improvement and expansion of supporting measures, including the provision of water supplies and the establishment of co-operatives for marketing and processing; and

(e) the provision of loans through the Ministry of Agriculture to African farmers and co-operatives for agricultural development.

2. The construction and reconstruction of 23 roads, of a total length of approximately 564 miles, serving agricultural sections of the areas of high potential. The general location of such roads and the designs and standards therefor to be as agreed with the Bank.

Mr. Chairman, as I mentioned in moving the amendment to clause 6 of the Bill, this is the Schedule which sets forth in considerable detail and yet with very considerable room for manoeuvre the purposes to which the loan may be applied and, as I said, it follows precisely the terms of the Agreement with the Bank.

I beg to move.

Question proposed.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I think it may be useful to hon. Members if I were to explain as regards clause 2 of the Schedule that the expression "serving agricultural sections of the areas of high potential" does not necessarily mean that these are relatively small by-roads of any kind. They include, Sir, some of the most important roads in the areas concerned and the expression "agricultural sections" is merely included in order to make it clear that the purpose of the roads is to move agricultural produce. I am sure, Sir, that although, as my hon. friend explained this wording has been used in order to give flexibility, I am quite sure if it would help hon. Members it will be quite possible to make available to them a list of the roads involved and if they would like me to do so I should certainly be only too glad either to do that myself or to ask my hon. friend the Minister for Works if he could have it done.

Sir, I beg to support.

New Schedule read a First Time.

The Question that the New Schedule be now read a Second Time put and carried.

Question that the New Schedule be added to the Bill was put and carried.

Title

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that the Title be amended by inserting after the words "TWO MILLION POUNDS STERLING" the words "OR THE EQUIVALENT IN POUNDS STERLING AND OTHER CURRENCIES".

This amendment, Sir, is consequential upon the amendment to clause 3, which the Committee has agreed to, so as to make it clear that the money

[Mr. Webb] can be raised in sterling or other currencies or in a mixture of both.

Question proposed.

Question that the words proposed to be inserted be inserted put and carried.

Title as amended agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I beg to move that the Committee doth report to the Council its consideration of the Specific Loan (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) Bill and that it has agreed the same with amendments.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

VOTE 21—MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, ANIMAL HUSBANDRY AND WATER RESOURCES

MOTION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR
(Resumption of debate interrupted on 12th May, 1960)

The Minister for Local Government and Lands (Mr. Havelock): Mr. Deputy Speaker, the hon. Member for Nyanza raised the question yesterday with regard to Sessional Paper No. 10. I indeed informed the House about three days ago in some detail of the programme with regard to Sessional Paper No. 10 but obviously it does not seem to have permeated to every Member and I had better repeat it. The Government will be laying a Paper on Sessional Paper No. 10, probably within the next week or ten days. This Paper arises from a re-examination of the suggestions put forward in that Sessional Paper by the Government in the light of representations made by individuals and associations particularly concerned with this problem. There are, of course, amongst others, the Board of Agriculture, the Kenya National Farmers' Union, the Settlement Board and so on. It is hoped, Sir, that there will be an opportunity to debate both Sessional Paper No. 10 and the consequential Paper or subsequent Paper in June, so that hon. Members will have every opportunity to discuss the points made in both Papers. Arising from that debate it will be necessary to draft legislation and present such legislation to this Council. There again there will be another opportunity for debate on that legislation which we hope will be before this Council in either October or November. It will be necessary for such legislation to be passed before the end of the year as hon. Members will have seen it is hoped that the provisions suggested in Sessional Paper No. 10, the main provisions there and other provisions which shall be put before this Council, should take effect as from the beginning of 1961. So, Sir, I do not think there is any real justification for criticism that the Government is trying to rush these things through. I would also like to say that the scheme put forward by the hon. Minister for Agriculture cannot be implemented without the legislation arising out of Sessional Paper No. 10 and indeed the Minister has put forward his ideas in this debate in order to give the House an opportunity to discuss his ideas, to put forward their suggestions, and indeed a considerable amount of time in which to do so. There is, of course, one way in which the scheme put forward by the Minister for Agriculture could be implemented before the legislation arising from Sessional Paper No. 10 and that would be by the Highlands Board agreeing to the purchase of land by the Government and the resale of that land in what is known as the Highlands at present to persons of other race. So that is one way in which it could be done before the land legislation is passed through this House. As hon. Members know, that particular aspect is entirely in the hands of hon. Members opposite. There can be no question of the Government bull-dozing that through.

Sir, it seems to me having listened to this debate that in spite of the fulminations on the other side of the House that there is a very narrow gap between the suggestions put forward from Members opposite and those put forward by my hon. friend. I think the differences are really a matter of degree. I think it has been made quite clear by Government speakers that the specific scheme described by the Minister for Agriculture is merely a pilot scheme; that these are ideas and indeed there is a determination on this side to proceed with a much

[The Minister for Local Government and Lands] wider and bigger scheme of development and indeed when figures like £30,000,000 are banded about I personally do not feel that there will be much difference between that figure and the ultimate figure that will be spent on this sort of scheme in the future. But it is not possible for a Government to tie all these things up in such large sums of money in a very short time and therefore it is not possible for a Government to commit itself in a few weeks or months to such enormous and important policies but they must go slowly and must tie up the loose ends which take time. It is all very well for hon. Members to say they will want guarantees of £30,000,000 but they are not easy to get. And who indeed wants guarantees of £30,000,000? What we really want is the money in proper practical quantities to be spent on practicable economic propositions over the years within the capacity of any administrative machine that we have to improve the development and productivity of this country and thereby and incidentally—or I shall not say incidentally—thereby maintain proper sound agricultural farm values. And that is the basis of the Government scheme which is very, very little apart from any suggestion that has been put forward by hon. Members opposite.

And indeed may I say my one disappointment in this debate is the fact that hon. Members opposite have got up and said: "Oh, this is not the place to talk detail." Surely this is just the place to talk detail. This sort of debate is just where the Government want to know the practical detailed ideas that hon. Members may have opposite so that they can consider them and see if they are practicable and economic and possible. But instead of that, hon. Members get up and say in wide terms that we must have this, we must have that, giving no real description of their ideas and merely making vague references to figures such as £30,000,000.

I do suggest to hon. Members that they have not been of very great help to the Government in this extremely important and urgent task, and I also suggest that what has been put forward by the Government has been constructive and practical, and I only hope that hon. Members will help the Government to work this out.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I would remind hon. Members that it is difficult for Back Benchers on both sides of this House, owing to the acoustic properties of this Chamber, to hear what is being said by the Members on the Front Benches on each side.

I have also noticed difficulty in the palantypists' box in hearing some hon. Members when they are not speaking near one of the microphones. I would ask hon. Members to keep their voices raised when they can remember to do so.

Mr. Muliro: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I also rise to speak on this Vote of Agriculture. I always regard the Ministry of Agriculture as the most important Ministry, probably, in Kenya, and I say so because agriculture is the basic thing and, in fact, the backbone of our economy.

Now, what I am going to say today is not very much to repeat what I have said before, but I would urge the Minister for Agriculture when looking at the development of Kenya to look at Kenya as a whole rather than go in and concentrate mainly in areas of high potential. For instance, I regard the development in the Northern Province as one of the most urgent issues before Kenya now. When one goes to the Northern Province there are people who are taking a lot of goods to ship by camels. Now these people require water more desperately than any other part of Kenya, and I was talking to the Minister for Agriculture yesterday, I listened to him, and I think this should be pursued again, that they should go, for instance, to a place like Israel where people have carried water from 200 miles in the north down to the south to water the desert so that they could utilize the desert because they have hardly any land. Now there are technical experts in water techniques who could be of great and tremendous value to Kenya. I think water in Kenya is going to be one of the great problems in the future, but we have—

Mr. Swynnerton: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Member could give us the figures of the cost of this project he talked about in Israel because it would help to give us a clearer idea of this.

Mr. Muliro: What I am suggesting, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that our Ministry of Agriculture should send our people there to do that, to go and receive advice and gain knowledge from these people. I never went there as a technical expert to supervise their expenses but I think very honestly that we could benefit by their sort of knowledge and not ask me to be a substitute for their specialist in Israel.

Now, another point I would like to raise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that if we want to stimulate agricultural produce we must get markets. I am pleased that the Minister for Agriculture is busy with market research, but in the African areas one of the biggest stumbling blocks is that they have got co-operative organizations. Now, those co-operative organizations are no more than mere agents of the Nyanza Marketing Board or whatever the Marketing Board is. Now, a co-operative organization should be a real co-operative so that it removes and wipes out the middleman. As long [Mr. Muliro] at the co-operative organization handles the goods and then gives it to a middleman to sell that is of no value at all. The African farmer, or whatever farmer is there, should feel the real benefit from this, but if he has to handle the goods and then give it to another middleman then it is a mere lie for the Government to try and tell the Africans in the areas that when you form co-operatives you are eliminating the Asian middleman. Actually the Asian middlemen might be eliminated but still there is another middleman in the form of statutory organizations that buy the African goods and handle them.

In this line also I would also ask the Minister for Agriculture and the Co-operative Department mainly to send out people to go and learn co-operation. There is true co-operation also in Israel, and in this line, as I have mentioned before, we have got a number of places for Kenya to go there and learn co-operation. Also in this line I would urge that the Government should take some people who are engaged in training Africans at the Jeanes School to go and learn true co-operation. Probably people might feel that I am very fascinated about the Israel economy but I regard Israel as one of the young countries from which we can learn, because their problems are much nearer to our own problems than any other countries in the world. If we send people to Britain, for instance, to learn co-operation, they will be going to learn the history of the co-operative movement but they will not see co-operation in the making. Here you will learn their problems, their failures and probably we will try to avoid their failures so that we will move forward in a much better way avoiding their mistakes.

Now, while many of us in Kenya welcome the announcement by the Minister for Agriculture that there are going to be lots of 40 to 50 acres in the Highlands to be given to members of various races for the development, I would urge this, that when we open up the Highlands these areas should be looked upon mainly as a means of eliminating social and economic problems, particularly in the African areas which are highly congested. I would have thought a scheme of this nature should provide that people in a given locality, whatever the locality is, should be given machinery, the loans for machinery, and machinery should be owned co-operatively, and the whole group so that the land is prepared co-operatively and then the individual farmers can plant their own crops, because if this is to be left to individuals the individual must never have the machinery but the machinery should be owned by the whole group and settle as many people as possible.

I think if we had some irrigation schemes to go in completely for intensive farming, what we want in Kenya is not half-hearted going into business but go in for completely intensive farming and also I think with the money which we are getting from loans many Africans in various areas should be given loans so that they can develop their farms much better than they have done in the past.

Now, on this, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would emphasize very much that there should be a new outlook on the part of the Minister for Agriculture. They must re-think and work very hard. Also the Minister for Agriculture said he would like to send Africans to the United States of America who are already employed in the Agricultural Department so that they get more knowledge to come back and be given higher posts and more responsibility. Now, here is where I think he and myself could co-operate very well in sending a number of these students to Israel where they will learn something. It is not that I am biased against America but I feel America is not the ideal place for a backward country. It is more highly mechanized and highly planted and cultivated, where people use machinery more than their hands, and I think what we require in Kenya here is to see some people working hard with their hands and not people using machinery, because if you want to depend completely on machinery with highly mechanized farming like Britain or America you must have the money to buy the machinery, and here is where I ask the Government of Kenya to look more to Israel rather than to any other country in the world. Probably I am more fascinated about this, but I am deeply interested in the development of this country and I regard agriculture as the basic economy of this country and unless we improve our agricultural economy the future is very bleak; because I suggest that we have no minerals in Kenya and whatever we might say we will be bluffing ourselves. The thing we have to do is to work very hard on the land and to do that we have to see and copy from the people who are working very hard on the land. Here is where I would welcome the Minister for Agriculture to take a trip to Israel. The Government can have money for trips to America and I do not see why they could not give him £190 to fly to Israel and learn from these people who are working very hard to come and improve our economy.

With that, Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Deputy Speaker, when the Chief Secretary was speaking yesterday it went through my mind that he possibly was not very well acquainted with the nature and extent of the problem of land values stabilization, and if that is so it is really a tragic position, and it might [Mr. Cooke] easily lead to the collapse or the partial collapse of farming in this country which, as we all know, is one of the biggest economic factors that we have. Now, he tried to please us with the suggestion that the £2,000,000 which the Minister for Agriculture had mentioned would be a contribution to this problem. As a matter of fact it is no contribution whatsoever or very little contribution. It is merely, as they say, chicken feed.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): I thank the hon. Member for giving way, but I would like to correct him because I never mentioned a figure of £2,000,000. The figure I mentioned was a figure of approximately £1,000,000 from Her Majesty's Government and £1,500,000 from other sources, in the first instance for three years, and then maybe the programme continued.

Mr. Cooke: It does not affect the argument really, but that amount will go no distance in solving the problem. Now, the farmers of this country were extremely shocked at the result of the Lancaster House agreement. I do not say that they are to be blamed for that because they have never been warned that such a revolutionary change in our constitution could so suddenly take place, and I must say that I criticize the New Kenya Party for having left London without having got a guarantee and indeed a pledge from the British Government that some form of land values stabilization would be assured. As I see this land stabilization value, the stabilization of land value, it is that an assurance should be given to the farmers here who may want to leave this country at any time, not now, but at any time in the future if they find that future impossible; they will regain the confidence which they have apparently lost, and it is very essential that they should have that confidence. A man might have to leave on account of family reasons or something of that sort, and find that the value of the land was so low that he could not possibly afford to leave, and it does not, as my friend the Member for Local Government seems to think mean that the British Government has now to put down any large sum of money, but all that is required is a guarantee from the British Government that money would be forthcoming, and it would be a revolving fund, and it would repay itself. I myself envisage a scheme such as that of the Wyndham Act in Ireland of 60 years ago when the British Government provided a large sum of money or put aside or pledged a large sum of money to purchase land from the landowners for sale to the tenants. As you, Sir, and probably others, know, there was a system in Ireland of very large landowners and a large number of tenants who had no real tenant rights, so it was agreed that a scheme should be put forward by which these tenant farmers could acquire the land in freehold; and a large sum of money was put aside with the result today—whether from the agricultural point of view or not, Sir, it is a good thing or not I would not say—that there are thousands, scores of thousands, of small landowners in Ireland—200-acre and 300-acre sort of holdings—and most of them are doing fairly well. Now, the point is this. They paid it back in instalments within roughly 50 years, and I think it was something over 50 years actually, both interest and capital. Now, as I foresee it, Sir, if the Government is really in earnest that the Africans of this country should acquire land in the Highlands, and I believe they are in earnest about it—we will see when Sessional Paper No. 10 is forthcoming whether they really are or not—they will really have to make provision for Africans to purchase land valued up to say £10,000. Now, where is an African going to get £10,000 today unless the land is first purchased by the Government and resold to that African over a term of years. So one of the reasons I advocate this land stabilization fund is because I think it is going to be of value not only to the Europeans but to all races in this country; and the absolute necessity of giving this guarantee to the farmers is that it should be given now. It may be too late in a few years. Farmers may lose faith and the others may decide to sell out at any price and get another job, and it would lead to an upsetting of the whole economy of this country. I do not see for one moment why the British Government should not give that pledge right away that the money will be found, not necessarily put into a fund now, but that it will be forthcoming and, as I say, it will be a revolving fund. Personally I do not believe that more than 10 per cent of the European farmers in this country will be wishful to leave. I believe that they get this guarantee they will be willing to continue in making the greatest success of this country; and it is up to the Government to give a lead in this matter.

With regard to this high potential land of 50 acres I think myself that it is a very good suggestion if the Agricultural Department and indeed the Forestry Department, give what aid they can. I myself am and have been an owner for ten years of a high potential farm but all I have done is to lose £500 a year over the last ten years, and I have had no aid from the Agricultural Department and even less aid from the Forest Department, and I think that if this scheme is going to be put through there must be some sort of a guarantee by which the owners will be able to get loans to improve their roads of access and water supplies and all that sort of thing which is a matter of great expense to the small farmer. It is not a matter of being a relatively big expense to the big farmer who has big overheads in any case. I have suggested to the Minister and to the Meat Commissioner that they should send round lorries once, a month to collect from the smaller farmer such things as sheep and so on where the smaller farmer could not afford to hire a truck for that purpose, but nothing has been done in that matter. It is only one of the instances which I might give of lack of help.

But I would congratulate the Minister on what I thought was an extremely fine and very constructive speech. In fact I thought it was the best speech I had heard from a Minister for Agriculture during the 22 years I have been in this Parliament. I do congratulate the hon. gentleman and I hope he will continue to show the energy he has shown so far and to bring this country to a happy and prosperous agricultural future.

Sir, I support the Motion.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to compliment the hon. Minister for Agriculture by opposing this Motion.

Under the peculiar circumstances which now apply in Kenya I accept his plan to give to Africans and Asians rich Europeans' farms that are for sale providing a fair price is paid for them and provided the recipients know a cow from a piece of cake.

I am now going to give the hon. Minister a first-class idea about which I do not expect him to do anything whatsoever, but one thing I am sure of, is that his successor will. My plan costs little money, appreciably helps employment, and develops the Colony's resources.

He spoke recently about his waterworks. Can we suppose that he can bring over an irrigation expert from the United States of America and ask him to report upon the prospect of using the Tana River which now carries the silt from Mount Kenya literally miles out to sea. What would the report say in effect? Would it recommend that some dozen or more small dams be built up in the foothills and that a vast irrigation system would be slowly, and the operative word is slowly, developed along the river bed and around its many sources. I agree there was once a report by the Colonial Office which was enough to damn it altogether because they thought only in terms of a single Aswan type of dam. The prospect calls for quite a different treatment. The crux of the problem, Sir, lies in pristine simplicity, calling for a steady effort rather than a vast undertaking all being applied at once. It makes it all the more simple and all the more capable of being absorbed. What is more, it also calls for the use of labour rather than machinery. Now, I have flown over the areas and taken an airman's eye view of the situation and happen to know what I am talking about because I once flew Dr. Hurst of the Egyptian Irrigation Department along the Nile on a protracted journey to study the Nile and its water resources from its sources right the way down to where it flows out into the sea. Now, what would such a scheme cost? What would it achieve? It need cost the Colony nothing in real money except in internal money which means nothing as long as no money leaves the Colony, there is the point. As long as the work is done by local labour from local labour camps, the money paid to build a small irrigation dam and to dig irrigation canals can, and should, all be local which was a point made by a former speaker. Machinery would defeat half the object although it might be somewhat quicker. That money would in truth be paper money. The product would be development in its truest sense and it is something which will appeal, I would suggest, to the World Bank who would be interested in lending money which will be seen to be spent, and which will in fact be spent, but being development money it will develop. All such sums, whether spent on rivers or roads—I add roads because they have the same significance—circulates money against which Government taxation can take its steady relentless toll at no real cost to the State, but to its own advantage.

I do not know whether I have made my point, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but it is there notwithstanding. My only problem is to get an orthodox Treasury to realize that it is in clover when they are convinced they are in desert, exactly as tourism could become our primary industry. As a matter of interest I am trying to take this scheme out of the hands of the Government by making suggestions direct to the United States of America, of all places, in the best interests of the next Government of Kenya because that is going to be the Government that will matter, not so much for the Tana River project, which I have of course included, as for the Rufiji, where a vast operation and opportunity unfolds to an African Government for the benefit of the Africans.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, believe it or not the Colonial Office saved £8,000,000 by 1952 and kept it in reserve for Kenya, a new Colony, mark well, while, it is to be noted, in Britain they would have to have a reserve of literally billions of pounds to emulate Kenya, which means about 100 per cent of her annual expenditure. Had they spent that £8,000,000 on dams and roads they would have created employment and they would not have had the Emergency and would have accumulated assets which it will now take them £24,000,000 to create. There is, I suggest, Sir, a measure of Treasury control.

I beg to oppose.

Mr. Hassan: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I rise first of all to congratulate our Minister of Agriculture who spoke extraordinarily well on the Estimates of his Department. At the same time new schemes and suggestions put up by him indicate that he means to bring about progress in the agriculture of this country.

Sir, I have heard the speeches in this House for the last two days on this Vote, and I would like to make my speech very clear in making statements that I have the greatest sympathy as regards the farmers in this country. I can claim to be one of the oldest residents of Kenya in this Council and I have seen this country grow from the bush to the present development stage. I have seen the farmers who went through the greatest hardship in this country and how they struck up as pioneers and went through those difficulties I observed personally. There was a time when the coffee went below £40 per ton and the sisal went below £14 per ton, and yet the pioneers stuck to their guns and they had full confidence in this country, I must say, Sir, that the help and assistance which they had to help them keep on in the agriculture of this country must be a matter for which the banks should be thanked. They did make a success from the last war and that was with the help and assistance of the Government and the self-assistance. There is no doubt that the Government when offering them the settlement in this country promised to help and assist them in every way to make a success, and so far I have observed during my 54 years' stay in this country the Government have kept their promise.

The Government is being told after the Lancaster House Conference that they have to sell out. I do not agree with that. I do not think the Government ever promised that when this country will be handed over as a self-government it will be handed over to the farmers alone and if they did give that promise no sensible person in the whole world will have any sympathy with the Government if they go back on their promise. But I am sure they did not promise that, Sir.

The farmers now demand stability and at the same time they demand compensation and certain other guarantees from the Government. I have every sympathy with them if they can succeed in persuading the Government to help them but I think it will be most undesirable if it is expected and the Government is forced to be reduced to the position of a land and estate agent. If those pioneers who are going through great hardship in this country might face all types of circumstances that befall them, they knew very well that the land prices entirely depended on the values of the agricultural produce overseas, and there have been fluctuations in prices, considerable fluctuations in prices, in land in this country, and now, for some time, for some of them to feel upset, I see the reasons for it. The country was touching the peak period in the prices of the farm produce overseas, and as far as I know for the last two years there have been very, very small numbers of land transactions in this country and I could see why the investors felt very shy to pay increased prices for the land for the last two years, because prices at their peak period were expected to fall down in the overseas markets and this was one of the dangers that transactions in land were absolutely stationary long before the Lancaster House Conference took place. To attribute this stationary condition of the land transactions to the Lancaster House Conference, I do not think it is correct. However, if the Government as they have helped and assisted in the past continue to give assistance to the farmers in this country I do not think there is any need for a fear and suspicion on the part of our farmer friends.

With regard to some of the speeches of some of the hon. Members here one of the Members from the coast, an African Member, said in a speech that nothing was done for Africans in the Coast Province. Well, we do not mind his asking that more should be done, but I would not agree that nothing was done. I was a member of their team for over 30 years at the Coast and we had our reasonable share of the Vote of the Department to spend on the Africans. I will leave this matter to the Director of Agriculture to give details in his reply, but the Gedi Settlement, the Shima Settlement, the Taita vegetable concerns and milk schemes, and the grazing improvements in the Kilifi and Kwale Districts, were some of those things that were carried out.

Another matter on which the Minister in his speech the other day said was with regard to the Masai country. He said that almost in this language that they must show some signs of self-help. I would like to point out to the Minister that this is not the right attitude towards this tribe. It will create a small serious disaster to Kenya if no improvement is effected among the Masai. They are holding almost 1,000,000 head of cattle, and I can see that no use is made of them. Such a beautiful country, a very large tract of country, is being ruined by that stock and most of them are probably useless into the bargain. No use is made of their stock products. I would like to point out to the Minister that this was considered in the past by the Government, and all those concerned with it before the Coastal Area had any cattle possibility at all, because it was in these fly-tidden areas that nothing could be done until the energetic Provincial Commissioner, Mr. Osborne, insisted that he wanted the assistance of the Veterinary Department to investigate the possibility of raising stock in this country. I remained for 30 years and I did find that it was a disease-ridden country, but Africans had succeeded in keeping certain stock alive in areas which were not very favourable to the fly throughout the years and with the help and assistance and co-operation of the Africans there I succeeded in drawing the attention of the Government to earmark some funds for improvement of grazing and putting up hundreds of dams there and creating milk schemes to help and assist these Africans who never thought that they could make any use of the milk.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) left the Chair]

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Bechgaard) took the Chair]

There were hides and skins improvements, water improvements, and so on, with the result that today any Member of this Council could go and see that area and see for himself that it is almost self-contained. The milk scheme alone is bringing them something like Sh. 300,000 or Sh. 400,000 per year. Now, when a place like this which was not supposed to be having any stock was given some attention and made a success of it then the Africans can be encouraged and persuaded to co-operate and why should not such a scheme be made use of in the Masai country where we have 1,000,000 head of cattle. Their stock products would not only have flooded this country but we could have had enough to export to the overseas markets. If the Government has not been able to find staff and has been unable to do anything in the Masai Reserves then why not follow the same system which I adopted in the Coast Province and by the co-operation of petty merchants and Swahilis and Asians, and Africans themselves, I made a success of that milk scheme. Why should this not be treated to the petty merchants to do it? It is treated as a closed district and nobody is allowed to go there. Africans need help and assistance and they need somebody to tell them how they can make money. It is easy to do it and it is only those people who can do it who consider it is not difficult to live among them. Those people who are living among the Masai, trading with them, and living like friends and comrades, can help them. Their help and assistance should have been sought.

Further, I would like to point out to the Minister that ever since I left the Veterinary Department Asian vets have almost disappeared from there. There is only one in the Veterinary Department. The Asians did show some capabilities to work with the Africans and help and assist them. It is no good blaming the Africans. Why have they not sent larger numbers of their people into Makerere College? The Asians have done some work in this country and they proved their ability. Why not at least replace the team of four or five who worked with me in the Coast Province? I believe it is the Asian vets in the Veterinary Department who could have been of immense use to work with the Masai and help and assist them on improving their stock products and also the stock.

The Minister talked about this new scheme and the new suggestion of his. Apparently it looked like one of the great bluffs and it looked as if it was merely a suggestion to cloud up the major scheme, but, as the Ministers have explained the details of that scheme he shall have the complete support from this side. Now that he has started doing something in this line we would give him help and co-operation and assistance from this side to do so, but I would like to point out to him that this suggestion of laying the foundation of 50-acre plots is not going to help and assist very much. The foundation should have been laid for no less than about 500 plots because it is well known to the Government that settlement schemes cannot possibly be run on one plan. There may be some people who may have the funds to develop that land for themselves and there are others who shall need the Government machinery and the Government funds to develop it. But smaller schemes of this nature can only be helpful if some system is introduced of self-help among those people, and self-help can never succeed unless the number is not 50 but 500. There have been self-help schemes in other parts of the world and why has the Government not introduced some of those self-help schemes in Kenya? Why for any development we can contemplate should we look with striken eyes to the World Bank and to America and to British taxpayers to give us the funds to develop it. Why have self-help schemes not been introduced?

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) took the Chair]

I know that self-help schemes were introduced in India and they are doing so very well. They introduced co-operatives with everybody being members.

[Mr. Hassan]

And the profits of that bank are distributed among the farmers every six months at the time of the planting season. It is their own fund, and is distributed among them at 10 per cent. After six months when the crops are collected they pay back the loan in the bank and a fresh loan is necessary, and if a farmer is not in a position to pay back that loan he is called on to pay 10 per cent of the profit. They do not call it interest, they call it profit, they can apply to the bank fund for the loan to be extended for another six months, so that no hardship is created.

The system of these banks does not mean the chartered accountants in the village have to do it. The headman who can read and write and the other secretaries and a few members of their own community administer those bank funds, and when they find there is a surplus on their hands and their own members are not taking advantage of that surplus, that surplus is transferred to a parent bank in the city, which is the head bank of all the village banks in the district. And that bank is using that surplus amount for buying the requirements of the village people at wholesale prices and supplying them at cost price. In this way self-supporting schemes through those village banks have been the cause of the success of many farmers in Pakistan.

That sort of scheme would be of immense use if introduced in the villages of Africa, and any new settlement schemes will never be a success unless they are on the basis of self-help and that self-help can never be possible to incorporate in a bank unless their number is at least 500.

With these few points, Sir, I beg to support.

Mr. Muchura: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I must join with the other Members in thanking the Minister for his speech when he was moving his Vote. He did go a long way in explaining all the problems that the Minister is dealing with in greater detail than we have had for some time. While agreeing with him on this one, I must also apologize that when he was replying to the main Budget speech I was not in, and in that speech he replied to some of the points I raised. Reading it from the HANSARD he said, "probably he did not understand what I was getting at". It is true, from what he said that he did not understand what I was getting at.

In the first instance he said that I said that some people had had their land taken away, or something to that effect. That was not true. What I said, or at least what I meant to say, was that there were people known as the ahoj, or those with no land of their own, but who are kept alive by neighbours and friends who allow them to till their land and earn a living from it, and it is not that they had their land taken away.

Secondly, and this also is true, although nobody has had their land taken away, there is a minimum acreage that a person is allowed to live on and to work. Somebody with below that minimum in a given area will not be allowed to live on and work on that land, and most of them therefore are going to live in these new townships which are cropping up in the reserves.

Mr. Swynnerton: Mr. Deputy Speaker, while I would thank the hon. Member for giving way, I would be glad if he would justify that. He said that the people were not going to be allowed to work on their land. I would like him to substantiate what he said, Sir.

Mr. Muchura: What I was saying, Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, was that in a certain area there may be a minimum holding of three acres of land, and if I had a three-acre plot, or an area of three acres I would be allowed to live on that land as well as work on it. If it was something less I would have to go to the village and work my small land which will have to be near the village.

Mr. Swynnerton: I thank the hon. Member that he does agree the people are allowed to work on that land.

Mr. Muchura: They will have to have their plot around the perimeter of the new township to be able to do it. Now, therefore, it is not a question of somebody's land being stolen.

And then the next one I want to emphasize again, Sir, is this problem of settlement schemes and the maintenance of the land that is not being used. I think it should not be delayed any further. The Minister said yesterday that with these £2,000,000 that he is likely to get he will use it primarily for areas where land has been consolidated and areas where the production is going up, and where they want more means for putting up roads and so on.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I thank the hon. Member for giving way, and I have risen on a point of order. Mr. Deputy Speaker, we have had two long days of this debate, and it does seem very odd to me that when we, on this side, have very few speakers left, in fact I think that with the few left to speak that we are not a quorum, and I would like, under Standing Order 40 to draw your attention to it, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): Mr. Hunter has just arrived.

Mr. Cooke: I think it has been ruled in this House before that the subject of a previous debate

[Mr. Cooke] should not be brought up again at a subsequent debate because of the time that would be taken up, and we should never reach any finality at all.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): That is perfectly correct. Mr. Cooke. It is the rule of this Council, and indeed it is the rule of the House of Commons in England that reference to debates in previous sessions is out of order, and even though the subject matter referred to in a previous debate is relevant to the present debate that practice is to be discouraged because as Mr. Cooke says, we should never reach any finality at all in our debates if we constantly go back to rehash what has been said in previous debates, and I would ask hon. Members to bear that in mind in speaking to the Motion before the House.

Mr. Muchuru: Now when the Minister gave us these ideas as to what he is going to do with the £2,000,000, he said that some of the money that will therefore be diverted from these areas will be used in low potential areas, and I was going to make a case for the low potential areas for things like cotton research which is being done in Kibos, and not only that but they do research in other crops like—

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, on a point of order, may I draw your attention to the fact that there is not a quorum in the House under Standing Orders No. 40.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): Mr. Blunt has arrived.

Mr. Muchuru:—cotton and where cotton can be grown, and where it should be grown, and how, but they do all sort of other things like citrus fruits and various other things, which are most suitable for low land and probably low potential areas.

And the next point, Sir, I want to say something about is the question of the vacancies in the Agricultural Department which cannot be filled, and the implication that at least Africans were not keenly interested in taking up agriculture. The answer to that one was probably the go-slow policy that was adopted in the past by the Government in that the terms offered to these people who took courses at Makerere was not really equitable in their way of thinking, and I think that if the Government had not had the policy of going slowly over it the problems that have arisen today would probably not have arisen. I know in Somaliland they are sending almost anybody who wants to go to Britain or other places to take a few years course on one thing or the other. That is a last-minute rush, and it appears to me that we are almost coming to a point of trying to do so. They are probably not as raw as they are in Somaliland, but if you were to have adopted this attitude before to encourage all lines of professions, it would have been better than it is at the moment, and because of this lack we will have to be held back, and our schemes and problems will have to be held back for a longer time than is necessary.

And then, of course, again there are the inequitable terms of service. Mr. Tipis was very generous when he was dealing with the question of livestock officers and assistants and veterinary officers, because it is not necessary either for a livestock officer to go to the Egerton College at Njoro.

Then the next point, Sir, is that I am very pleased to hear that we are at last going to develop, or it is the intention to develop if we have the staff, Siriba to be an agricultural college to issue diplomas for our local people who work in the fields. I think that would be a great step forward except that, as I said, we should have started off by providing and making provision for agriculturalists, trained agriculturalists in the past by encouraging them by offering them something that compared favourably with the other professions, such as teaching or something else.

And the next thing is—I do not know when it is going to happen—but I understand that Makerere is likely to be offering degree courses. I do not know what has happened to the degree courses at Makerere in agriculture. I would like to know what, if any, information is available on what has happened about those courses.

I must suggest to the Minister, and he has already suggested in this new settlement scheme in the farms that are going to be bought, that it would be better, if he goes in for settlement schemes in other places, that the same sort of boards should be set up where tenants, the authorities and others can think and consider the terms of tenancies and how it will be done, as opposed to handing over something to people who may, for lack of knowledge, and for lack of information, ignorantly refuse to accept the terms of the tenancy, and I think, Mr Deputy Speaker, as I said, this as far as I am concerned was a good speech, full of new ideas and suggestions.

I beg to support.

Mr. Pandya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would first like to congratulate the Minister on a very able exposition of agricultural policy which he put before the House and the manifold activities of his Ministry. Sir, many hon. Members

[Mr. Pandya] have referred to the plan of a very far-reaching nature which was announced by the Minister in his speech with regard to the land settlement scheme. I welcome his proposals, Sir, and I am very glad that these proposals are to be applied strictly on a non-racial basis. However, I think the Minister did say that the African applications would be vetted by the district commissioners, and then facilities given to those people selected for training to become good farmers. I am, Sir, obliged to ask him, because of his reference to the African applications, what does he propose to do in the case of the Asian settlers, and what criteria are to be applied before they are allowed to settle on land?

The other point, Sir, I wish to refer to, was the point made by the Member for Mombasa Area, that the Minister did not in his speech make much reference to agriculture in the Coast Province. The Government, Sir, is quite happily encouraging people in the Malindi area to grow cotton by giving them the necessary and desirable advances on their crops. I trust, Sir, this policy can be extended to other parts of the Coast Province, such as Lamu and the Tana River areas, where there is much fertile land, but it has transpired and it has been reported to me that no such fair treatment is given to cotton growers in these areas. Indeed, where there are prospects of further development in growing cotton, it is a very important cash crop in this Province. But it seems that the Government is doing nothing to accelerate this development. I hope, Sir, that the Minister, when he replies, will give some indication whether he proposes to pursue helping the farmers in the Tana River and Lamu areas.

One other matter, Sir, I would like to refer to is produce control. The Minister is aware of the attitude and objections of the commercial community to the unnecessary continuance of the system of this control. Sir, I do not wish to repeat here the arguments and objections that have been raised in the past, but I would like to ask him whether the Government is contemplating changing its policy with regard to the control of produce in the near future for the betterment of the economy as a whole in this country. And I would, Sir, also like to congratulate the Minister on a recent announcement that was made with regard to the change in the policy of storage of maize in this country, which we have been promised will bring about a reduction in the price of posho by Sh. 1/50 per bag. I am rather disappointed, Sir, that we will have to wait for this reduction until the end of the year. I hope, Sir, that the Minister will accelerate this development, and that further reductions will be possible in the price of maize. I am glad that the Government has at last acted in a businesslike manner, and that it has been able to reduce these costs, which are eventually bound to help the consumer.

With those few words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Colonel Jackman (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, when the Minister spoke, as he moved the Motion which is now before the House, he dealt with general agricultural progress in very wide terms, and I think this was unavoidable in view of the very large field which he had to cover, and it is largely at his request that I should like now to deal in rather more detail with one or two branches of agriculture in which I personally take a particular interest.

Sir, this debate started as a debate on the Agricultural Vote, and after what we have heard over the last few days on what I might call the political approach to agriculture, I hope a little bit about pure agriculture will not come as too grave a shock to hon. Members of this Council.

Sir, I would like first of all to deal with the dairy industry. I feel I have some slight qualification to speak about this industry as I am a member of the Board of the Kenya Co-operative Creameries, which today, as things stand in the scheduled areas, is, in fact, the dairy industry. To substantiate that claim I would inform Members that of our producers in the scheduled areas today over 85 per cent are members of the Kenya Co-operative Creameries, and the Kenya Co-operative Creameries handles over 90 per cent of the total production in those areas and had a turnover in its last financial year of something only just short of £4,000,000.

Hon. Members will remember that about two years ago statutory control for the dairy industry was introduced by the establishment of the Kenya Dairy Board. Now this was a new thing, and like all new things I think the Board has had its teething troubles, but I would like to say that throughout the time it has been in existence it has worked in very close co-operation with the Kenya Co-operative Creameries. I think it is rather early yet to say what the final shape of that Board will be, but I feel myself that some form of statutory control is necessary today in the industry, and as that industry expands, I think it will become even more necessary.

Sir, production in the dairy industry has gone steadily ahead, particularly in areas such as Western Kenya, owing there to the change over to a more balanced form of agriculture, and, of course, this increased production presents problems of reception of what is being produced, and of marketing. This is a matter, Sir, which the Kenya Co-operative Creameries always keeps very carefully under review, and I can say that it is their intention to remain in the position in which they are today, and that is a position to deal with all present and future production. This, of course, Sir, involves expansion of plant, and therefore capital expenditure to a very considerable extent, and I do not think I would be giving any secrets away if I said that the capital programme for the next year would be something in excess of a quarter of a million pounds. Also, Sir, with increasing production and rather limited local markets for the more perishable products, it is becoming increasingly necessary to swing over more and more to manufacturing, and this is being done the whole time. As an example of this, there is the recent agreement which we have reached with Cow and Gate under which a plant is being established at Eldoret for the manufacture of whole milk powder, which will be exported to England to Cow and Gate for use in their manufacture of baby foods. This project, Sir, will involve expenditure of some £50,000, of which roughly half will be borne by the Kenya Co-operative Creameries, and half by Cow and Gate. This, of course, will provide, we hope, a very considerable outlet for surplus milk in Western Kenya.

Again, Sir, not long ago a new local company was formed to manufacture ice-cream in Nairobi—Lyons—who of course are of international reputation, and in this company the Kenya Co-operative Creameries holds quite an appreciable amount of shares. This, again, is another outlet because the conditions under which the thing was set up involves the use of dairy produce in their ice-cream.

There are many other projects, Sir, which are either under way, or contemplated, and I do not want to go into them because we are up against competition in these matters, and we do not want to say things too soon.

Next, Sir, I will deal with marketing. This, of course, in the dairy industry is just the same big problem that it is in any agricultural industry. Markets for dairy produce can be divided into three really. First, we have the purely local market. Then secondly, what we call our local export market, which covers countries such as Rhodesia, Mauritius, Aden, the Persian Gulf, Ethiopia and others. And finally, there is the export market, which as far as the dairy industry out here is concerned, is almost entirely London.

To deal with the local market first, every effort is always being made to expand this market, and considerable success has been achieved. The trouble here is, of course, that owing to the difficulties and costs of getting high perishable products like milk off into areas away from the beaten track, it is very difficult to produce stuff into those markets at a price which many of the poorer inhabitants of this country can afford to pay. Therefore, Sir, we feel that anything which can be done to raise the standard of living of the people of this country will obviously be of benefit to the dairy industry eventually.

As regards the local export market, Sir, there we immediately run into the most severe competition from countries like Australia and New Zealand who are really large producers of these products, and they can put them into these markets which I have mentioned in very severe competition with our own stuff. We are therefore faced with the issue of when prices are dropped by a big supplier like Australia we have immediately got to come into line with that price, or we do not sell our produce. I am glad to say that we have been in communication with both Australia and New Zealand on this problem, and I think an attempt is now going to be made to try and rationalize this.

With regard to the London market, Sir, here again, as a very small contributor to that market, and we only send to that market butter and cheese, we have absolutely no control over price structure at all. Just to give you an idea of how things go in that market, early in 1958 butter reached an all low price of just over Sh. 200 a hundredweight. Not so long ago the price of butter in that market was over Sh. 400 a hundredweight—double.

As regards the London market, Sir, it is now somewhere round about Sh. 290. That shows you how difficult it is to plan ahead when you have fluctuations of your surplus produce of that nature. I would just say this about the market. Of course, we realize that we will never be able to compete in any of these markets unless we can maintain produce of the highest quality and this is something to which the greatest attention is given continuously and I am glad to say as regards our butter in the London market that we normally get a premium over all other Commonwealth countries who supply that market except New Zealand with whom we are usually on the same level. And I think that shows that our quality is not too bad.

While on this market, Sir, I would like to pay tribute to the assistance we did receive from the Government when we had this very low market two years ago in the nature of a guaranteed overdraft and I am glad to say that as the market improved we were able to return that money in a comparatively short time.

Now, Sir, as to future prospects, we feel that dairy products in all their very various forms are a very important and essential part in the diet of all people of this country; undoubtedly in some areas and among some communities there is, particularly in early life, a great deal of malnutrition and, of course, one of the best correctives for that among children is undoubtedly milk and allied products. We feel this so strongly, Sir, that the Kenya Co-operative Creameries have recently contributed a very considerable sum of money to the Child Welfare Society to assist them with the sociological survey which is being carried out in Kenya and which, of course, will include nutritional problems. We have done this, Sir, because we feel that it is essential to persuade people to use more protein for their better health and, of course, quite naturally being a commercial organization we hope to pick up a bit of benefit from it in the end.

As I say, Sir, I think that supplying as we do an essential article we can look with some confidence to the future. This stuff will always be wanted whatever the political situation in Kenya and we intend to do our very best to see that what we offer to the public is stuff which they want and of the best quality.

There is just one final thing on this, Sir, and that is that I believe it was the Member for Central Rift—he is not here at the moment—who said something about the inability to get surplus produce, and I think he was talking about ghee, out of Masai land. Well, the Kenya Co-operative Creameries can and do accept produce from non-members provided the quality of that produce is good. So that if anyone would tell the hon. Member that if he would let me have details of his problem I will certainly have it looked at and see if there is anything I can do to help.

I would next like to say just a little about the pyrethrum industry. It was not so very long ago, Sir, I think about 12 years; when as the result of over-production during the war-time period and the release after the war of stockpiles held in America chiefly that the industry came near to folding up and I can remember people in my district being actually paid to plough in pyrethrum. My name, I may say, did not come out of the hat. Since then, Sir, there has been very steady progress made in this industry and I believe that for 1960/61 licences for something rather in excess of 10,000 tons of flowers have been issued or will be issued to growers and this has come up from something just over 3,000 tons a few years ago. Hon. Members will know, I think, that just recently there have been difficulties in this industry into which I do not propose to go today. As a result of those difficulties two things happened; first, we had the introduction by Government in an attempt to straighten out these difficulties of Sessional Paper No. 9 and eventually the decision to have a Commission of Enquiry into the whole set-up. Sessional Paper No. 9 had suggestions in it for the reorganization of the industry which were not at all well received either by the Pyrethrum Board of Kenya or by the growers. We then had this enquiry and the report on that enquiry has been laid in this Council and Members will have seen it.

I will only say this, that as a result of that enquiry, I think, the Board's stand in this matter was justified, Sessional Paper No. 9 went into the waste-paper basket, and it has now been accepted. I think, I hope, by Government that one of the essentials in this industry today is to ensure that the body that controls production also controls marketing. I say this is an essential because it is a very tricky thing, this pyrethrum market. We have not got hordes of people clamouring on our doorstep to buy the stuff. We have got to get out and create markets for it. Well, now quite obviously it is no use creating a market for something you have not got and it is equally useless producing something which you cannot sell. Therefore, we have always felt—some of us, very strongly that this is the right way to handle a crop which is in fact a monopoly but which is not concerned with local markets at all. I am glad to say I think the Government have now accepted that. As regards demands for this stuff I think these are going up steadily and one of reasons for this increased demand is quite certainly the fact that not so many years ago pyrethrum was sold in the form of dried flowers to certain buyers mostly in America who had the necessary plant in which they could process these flowers into the form of extract and either use the extract themselves or sell it to other manufacturers of insecticides, sprays and things of that sort. Then, of course, the very fact that you had to have a rather elaborate and expensive plant to process these flowers limited the demand and rather left you in the air as regards possible users of extract in other parts of the world. Well, we have now moved away from that practically all the pyrethrines that go out of this country go out in the form of extract and, of course, the industry now has its own plant in Nakuru and is taking steps in this moment to double the capacity of that plant and even then I do not believe that will be the end. It will have to be stepped up still further, because I believe subject to steady control of production and available markets the crop might well reach in not a very long time something in the neighbourhood of 20,000 tons a year. If that happens you will see what a valuable contribution this particular industry will be making to the export revenue of this Colony.

Sir, I do not think there is anything more I can say on these two things and I hope that what I have said has been of some interest and presented a slightly different approach to agriculture than we have had before in this debate.

Sir, I beg to support:

Mr. Swynnerton (Director of Agriculture): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise to support this Motion and I also, as with the last speaker, propose to dwell on agricultural subjects and the agricultural problems dealt with by the Minister in introducing the Estimates for his Ministry. He dealt at some length with staff and training and agricultural education. Those are matters which have been raised also by other Members in this House during this debate. Taking staff and training first, this has been raised by the Member for Central Province North, the Member for Mombasa Area, the Member for Central Rift and my friends, Mr. Kebaso and Mr. Muchura. I think I should first of all say what categories of staff are required for agricultural development in this country. The first category is the qualified agricultural officer and the qualified research officer, the man who has to have a degree in his subject and who has to have two years' postgraduate training on top of that to fit him for the researches that are needed in this country, for the planning and technical development that is needed in this country. Up to very recently we have had to seek these men from overseas. The Colonial Office has undertaken our recruiting for us. The Colonial Office has arranged the post-graduate training.

Two years ago the Makerere College commenced a degree course in agriculture and the first people will come out of that course in 1961. As the Minister said in his opening speech, the lamentable fact is that only one person from Kenya will be coming out in 1961. That is the amount of interest that the Africans take in science courses at higher level schools and at Makerere, that they take in agriculture, to get into the service in order to develop and foster the agriculture of their country. In the year after, that is 1962, three people may come out if they pass their examinations and in the year after that another three.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we will have vacancies for 25 men on the "A" scale. That represents approximately 25 per cent of the establishment of men on that scale and probably 50 per cent of the field officers on that scale. Members will ask: "Well, why can't the Colonial Office get the men?" In recent years, with the rapid move to self-government in various territories, people at home in Britain taking agricultural degrees have found that the prospects of going to the Colonies, the ones that still exist, are not particularly attractive. Various factors have contributed to that, Mr. Deputy Speaker, other than political factors. Other territories and the United Kingdom Government have moved ahead of this country in their salary revisions and the salaries they offer. Whereas a few years ago a person coming to a Colonial territory might expect to get a salary perhaps 25 per cent up on the equivalent salaries in the United Kingdom, today the agricultural advisory officer in the National Agriculture Advisory Service on the "A" scale can rise £250 a year above what he can in Kenya. What is the incentive to come to Kenya? The Federation of Nyasaland and the Rhodesias offers £100 a year more on its "A" scale. The attraction to the Federation is more attractive than the attraction to Kenya. Our neighbouring territories, Uganda and Tanganyika, offer education allowances. Mr. Deputy Speaker, for children educated outside those territories. In Tanganyika the man with three sons being educated in Britain will be able to get £525 a year for that very purpose. That, Sir, is a great attraction. One officer in my department had the opportunity of promotion within Kenya had he stayed on three months or of promotion to an equivalent post in Tanganyika. In Tanganyika he had the opportunity of getting £525 a year more in assistance towards the education of his children. He had three children.

Mr. Alexander: Where is the hon. Minister for Finance?

Mr. Swynnerton: Perhaps the hon. Member who has interjected would like to go and look for him.

I want to make these points, Sir, because we need these technical men. We should very much welcome that they should go through the Makerere course, but, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we cannot get them. I would like to say that another point on the Makerere course is that we should go on seeking people and encouraging people to go through that course. When they have completed their degree at Makerere they will then be required to take two years' post-graduate training, either in general agriculture or in specialist subjects such as plant breeding, pasture research, entomology or soil chemistry. They will be assisted in that under a training scheme by the Government just as the Colonial Office probationers are assisted.

Now, Sir, in order to get people within the service up quicker, as the Minister said, we are planning to send a number of our local assistant agricultural officers in the Department overseas for a year's training to qualify them for promotion within the service. Initially we hope to send eight of those assistant agricultural officers. If they go through their course satisfactorily and satisfy the Civil Service Commission they may then be eligible for promotion to Agricultural Officer (Kenya). At the moment we only have one African agricultural officer in Kenya. That agricultural officer is running the Embu Training Agricultural Centre. Now, I think the hon. Member for Central Province North asked that the quality of teaching at the Embu centre should be raised. That officer in charge of the Embu training centre, in addition to the eight whom I have mentioned, will also be going overseas for a training course in running such schools in agricultural education so that he, too, and the Embu training centre will benefit by that very fact.

I have dealt in some detail, Mr. Deputy Speaker, with men at the degree level because if we are going to plan in the years ahead, and I must think in terms of building up the staff in my Department with the people who will be planning 15, 20, 25 years ahead, we must have people with wide experience, with wide contacts of all these facets of agriculture overseas, as well as people with a purely parochial outlook—or, I should say, rather than people with a purely parochial outlook in this country.

I now move on to the assistant agricultural officers at the diploma or C scale level. This House is well aware that we are developing the Siriba training centre up to diploma level. We have received financial assistance from the Rockefeller Foundation and from the Hindocha Trust and we are getting ahead with the building that will be required for that centre. But, Sir, we cannot teach in a centre if we cannot get the teachers and that is a big obstacle. Among the 25 people we presented to the Colonial Office are five specialist lecturers for the Siriba training centre. In 12 months not a single person has come forward. It will be possible for one or two of the posts, for us to second members of the Department—lecturers in crop husbandry, animal husbandry—but we shall still be short of a biologist and a chemist and one or two others. We are seeking from the I.C.A. assistance to see whether they cannot help us with two or three of those posts for two years to let us fill in the gap and perhaps get extra people. But again there is not the incentive at the moment for people to come and fill those posts either in the matter of stability or security of office.

Mr. Alexander: The Minister for Finance has gone out of the building.

Mr. Swynnerton: I thank the hon. Member for his information, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Now, the plans for the Siriba Training Centre are that we should take in 50 people a year at the school certificate level, give them a two-year training course, send them out into the field for a year, and take on the best 25 for a further year to get their diploma. The remaining 25 who have not the ambition to succeed will be taken on at the lower level of agricultural instructor. There will, therefore, be a very definite incentive for people to work and get on the C scale rather than on the E scale. A point I would like to make is that the Siriba Training Centre will not be confined to Africans. If Asians come forward who want to go through the same course and take the same risks of grading, there will be facilities for them at that centre as well.

I would just mention on Asian training that for a number of years in Tanganyika an inter-territorial school was set up for the agricultural training of Asians and it folded up for lack of support from Asian pupils. Therefore if there is any backwardness in training Africans and Arabs to come into the service or to take up agricultural opportunities the Governments of the East African territories are not to blame.

We need, as I have said in the past, large numbers of people at the diploma level to be assistant agricultural officers. With a staff of perhaps 250, or nearly 300, if you take in livestock officers as well, there may well be an annual wastage of 15 to 20 so that there will be many vacancies each year for people to come in at that level if they will take the courses, and I hope that Members of this House will encourage people to take the courses at Makerere and at Siriba.

It has been suggested by the hon. Member for Central Province North that we should upgrade the Embu Agricultural Training Centre. But, Sir, we must concentrate our resources. We cannot develop a number of centres up to the same level. It is much better to concentrate our staff on one centre, if we can get that staff, and give first-class courses than to dissipate our efforts all round the place. The Embu training centre will therefore be our second string for training agricultural instructors. The best people at school certificate level will go into Siriba and the next best, at school certificate level or just slightly lower, will go to Embu. Those two schools will cater for the needs of the whole of the Colony for Agricultural instructor training—that is, the men from the Coast, the men from the Southern Province, the men from Rift Valley Province, will be catered for there. They need have no fears that there will be no opportunities for training and there will be no opportunities at the three levels of for entering the Service as the three levels of agricultural instructor, assistant agricultural officer or agricultural officer, if they are qualified.

[Mr. Swynnerton]

I mentioned the uncertainties of people entering the service at the present time, but there is just one other uncertainty I would like to mention, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and that is a certain Committee which sits to review superscale posts to see whether those posts should be abolished or whether they should be downgraded. Now, Sir, that is another disintegrative both to the people within the Service and the people wishing to enter the Service. If a specialist entomologist feels that the post of senior entomologist is going to be abolished he, if he gets the chance, will go to another territory because he fears for his promotion outlet. A person who has taken a degree in zoology at a university, applies for a post and is interviewed, he will say, "Am I to remain an entomologist all my life, or will there be prospects of promotion for me?" I feel—in fact, I know—that we have lost two people to other territories because of such uncertainties, one to Tanganyika to take charge of their coffee research, and another to Mauritius, and we may well lose another.

On the question of localization of the Service, I think it was the hon. the Chief Secretary who mentioned that there was a study group working at the present time on localization. I think what I have said just now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, indicates that so far as the Agricultural Department is concerned we are probably a step ahead of that study group in that we are providing the facilities for agricultural training at all levels.

Now, Sir, in creating these incentives we need to get men of ambition, men with the ambition to achieve results. We all know the quotation "Fling away ambition; by that sin fell the angels".

We all know people of that sort who should follow that motto. But there is another sort of ambition and that is the ambition to get on with the job as well as to get on in the job. The officers of the Agricultural Department in the field have been doing a first-class job over many years. That is what they go in the Service for. Local people have joined it and people from overseas have joined it. They still want to get on with their job in the future and they want to feel that they can see a satisfactory end to the job on which they have started, and I hope that, as the Chief Secretary indicated the other day, both Her Majesty's Government and the African Elected Members will give assurances to those men that will enable them to get on with their job without looking over their shoulders.

Now, Sir, I would like to turn to agricultural education. A number of Members when they talk about agricultural education think about schools. Agricultural education is the job that the whole of the Agricultural Department is concentrated on. All the substantial staff out in the field assisting with farm planning, assisting with the development of cash crops, assisting with the improvement of livestock, and so on, are carrying out agricultural education in its truest sense, and the whole of the Ministry of Agriculture is devoted towards agricultural education. As supplements to agricultural education we are developing a number of farmers' training centres round the country. The number being developed is in fact 12. In the more heavily populated districts, the districts which are further advanced in agriculture, one is being developed in each district. In other areas where the population is more sparse or more backward the aim is to develop one in each province.

The hon. Member for Mombasa Area I think raised the question of training in the Coast Province. I would assure him that the Matuga Training School, which closed down for the training of instructors, will be developed as a farmers' training centre for the Coast Province, and that farmers who are selected for courses there will be taught modern agriculture there with particular relation to the needs of their Province.

Another thing I think the hon. Member overlooked was the Kwale Trade School. Now that may not appear to be an agricultural subject but in fact the total capital expenditure for that school came from the Coast Cotton Fund in order to build up the artisans and specialists in the Coast Province to help the African farmers, so that quite a bit in fact is being done from agricultural funds for the Coast Province, for agricultural education training and trade education.

The hon. Member for Central Province North, I think it was, suggested that farmers' courses should be much longer than the three to six weeks that we give them. We feel that it is much better for a farmer to learn his farming on his own farm when he has got his farm lay-out or a farm plan; it is good for him to go into a training centre to learn, say, for three weeks, how to run and manage a planned farm. When he goes back to his holding and gets it going into rotation, gets his fences in, gets his buildings up, gets his grass in, he will come along and say, "I want better cows." He will say, "I know nothing about better cows." Well, he can go back for another three weeks' course and help to mother a Guernsey or a Jersey or a Friesian cow as the case may be. He can then go back and practice what he has been taught. He will, as a result of more intensive farming, be able to produce a surplus of maize and a surplus of skim milk. He may want then to keep a pig and does not know anything about pig keeping. He can then go back for a course on that. We feel it is much better for the individual to learn as he develops his farm step by step on these courses; and because a man has been on one short course it does not mean he cannot go on another. We like, too, that the instructors working with those people shall go in with them on the course and themselves be refreshed and assist in the training on those courses. So, Mr. Deputy Speaker, with agricultural education we are covering a very wide field through our extension services and through our agricultural education services.

We are however possibly backward in modern aids to education and development—that is, the approach to the farmer, the use of visual aids, the use of pamphlets, and so on. We hope to get advice from an expert, also from America, but in the long run we shall need a senior officer in the Department to concentrate on agricultural education to see that the level of all courses is kept up and to see that the material for training is provided, as was mentioned by the Minister in introducing these Estimates, amongst several needs that the Ministry has for expansion. I think hon. Members will see in the 1960-63 Development Estimates that a substantial sum of money has been put in for agricultural education, for the purpose of extending and improving the farm institutes and I hope that we shall provide an efficient service.

Now, Sir, I see that the hon. Member for Central Province North is not here but for four years in succession he has fought a vendetta against a certain officer in the Chuka Division of Meru District in this House. I noticed that he referred in this particular debate to "that old man". Obviously he is four years older than when he first raised it four years ago. I would assure him, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that all our staff in the field are working for the good of the people and it may well be that this old man as he calls him, has been a little stricter than some other old men in seeing that standards of agriculture are maintained, but, Sir, I do not think that any farmer who maintains high standards of agriculture today or who is even encouraged to do so will regret it next year or the years after.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I understand that I am going to be allowed to speak for a little more than 30 minutes.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I have not got the power to grant you an extension of time but as I have been rather lenient possibly with one or two other hon. Members it may be the wish of the Council that I should grant additional time to the hon. Director of Agriculture.

Mr. Swynnerton: If I could be allowed this, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would be most grateful, and I would thank the House very much for its indulgence.

The reason I asked for extra time is that I have quite a number of subjects which I want to cover and I did want to cover the Coast Province in some detail. We have contradictions in the Coast Province because some people say we are doing nothing and some people say we are doing rather a lot, and I happen to belong to the latter school.

I think actually it was the hon. Member for Mombasa Area who I suppose feels that he is not getting sufficient food supplies flowing into the town or into the Municipality from these agricultural people. I would like to cover some of the points he raised. He did try to cut up the Coastal Province into areas of high, medium and low potential, and I would agree with him, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The high potential areas of the Coast Province we can take as being the Taita Hills, and quite a bit of the coastal strip where they grow good coconuts, cashew nuts, mangoes, good citrus, good cotton, good sugar cane, and so on. There are one or two irrigation areas, too, down at Vanga and up at Taveta. The minute you bring water to the land you create a high potential area and therefore there are such areas at the coast. We are doing a lot (of the development of the crops down in this area). Coffee is being developed in the Taita Hills even though there are some adverse factors in that area. We are doing a lot for the development of coconuts and cashew nuts in the coastal belt with the improvement scheme which has been assisted by the Coast Cotton Fund. There are large quantities of coconut plants or they have been made available in the Coast Province. But, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we do run up against coastal apathy in this. For instance, in the Lamu District there has not been any great interest in coconut improvement. We have rules for coconut improvement but it is still a fact that coconuts are not well tended and the rhinoceros beetle has been allowed to run riot in that area, and if people want to help improve their income they must at the same time look after the crops which will help to do so.

There is a strip of this land of medium potential—I think the hon. Member mentioned it—behind this coastal belt, which is quite good medium potential land; Kakoleni down to Kwale and the lower areas of the Taita Hills. In those areas good cotton can be grown, cattle can be kept at quite a productive level, chillies, cassava, and various annual crops if they are properly looked after.

Then there are the semi-arid pastoral areas which extend over very large parts of the Coast Province and those areas, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in spite of a reference by one hon. Member to

[Mr. Swynnerton]

Mr. Sam Horden, would be extremely expensive to develop on a more intensive basis than now. A lot of tsetse clearing has been done, attempts have been made to bring in grazing management schemes, but there has been some opposition to those grazing management schemes. But only in that way will the productivity of the land increase. In the driest areas, Mackinnon Road and so on, it is very fanciful to talk of the easy development of those areas. They are very short of rain and without rain you cannot get water supplies and, as one hon. Member said, in connection with Israel, it might be necessary to pipe water some 40 to 70 miles in order to open up that area. He was not able to answer me as to what sort of cost that might mean, but my guess is that it would be outside the economic capacity of that land to carry, or it might be, without some subsidy from the Government.

The Coast Province is served, just as are all other provinces, by the full services of the Ministry of Agriculture. All districts are covered by essential staff—there are the agricultural training centres which I mentioned—there is the veterinary staff for the cattle, devoted to the control of rinderpest, the eradication of trypanosomiasis, tsetse clearing, improving the stock routes from the north from which many coast traders enjoy income.

The farmers in that area are eligible for all the loans which are available everywhere else for developing their land; they are eligible for the subsidies which are available for water, for the construction of dams, for the putting in of boreholes, for the piping of streams. If there are any projects which are required to be put in at the coast all they have to do is to put up a proposal to the district agricultural committee of their district which will consider it, call in any experts to cost it, and will then push it out to ALDEV which will consider how it can be adopted.

The Veterinary Department has developed a Livestock Improvement Centre at Mariakani, and, as my hon. friend from the East Electoral Area said, the Mariakani milk scheme has been a major success in the Coast Province. Not only does it benefit the graziers in the hinterland but it also benefits the hon. Member for Mombasa's constituents in that they can get milk. I was going to say on the hoof, but it can be bought.

The hon. Member for the East Electoral Area also mentioned one or two other benefits which the Coast Province gets such as the Gedi Settlement and the Shimba Hills Settlement. In fact, other tribes have had to come and settle in the Shimba Hills because the people of the Coast Province, particularly from the Taita Hills, were not interested in resettling there. That is a reflection on the people of the Coast Province, or perhaps it just means that they have plenty of land and are not interested in resettlement.

This does bring out the problem of the use of the Arab lands, because on those Arab lands, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is a very large settlement of Giriama squatters, and when Arabs talk about the facilities they may have for loans, for tractors, and so on, the truth of the matter is that on most of the land the Arabs themselves are not farming but they are just getting a certain income from the squatters on their land and the land is not being particularly well used.

The hon. Member also raised the question of research. Now, last year the hon. Member for Coast Rural, who, I think, is out of the country at the present time, objected to the amount of research we were doing. He said that we were wasting our time on all this research. The hon. Member for the Mombasa Area, on the other hand, says that we are not doing enough research, and I would just like to tell him of a little that we are doing. We opened a research station at Matuga after the war, but because we found the soil in that area was not particularly good or representative of the Coast Area, we arranged to move it to Mtwaipa, and there we are setting up a tree crops experimental station where we will do full experimentation on coconuts, cashew nuts, mangoes, citrus and everything else. One of the biggest problems of the coast is that these tree crops flower abundantly but do not set a crop. There are many reasons for this, pests and diseases in the main, and we have had a full time entomologist at the coast and he will continue to work there on research into control of the pests of these crops to see whether the trees cannot be made to carry bigger crops if they are treated with certain insecticides.

Another experimental station has been established at Msabaha, near Gedi, mainly for the improvement of cotton, for determining the right methods of growing cotton and for the introduction of new varieties. The variety growing now was introduced as a result of trials with many varieties of cotton from Uganda, Tanganyika, as well as Kenya. That station has paid its way and it works on other crops, rotations, and so on. Maize resistant to polysora rust was produced there.

There are, of course, the specialist services of the department as well. Another factor is the Port of Mombasa. Mombasa is the Achilles' heel of this country so far as pests of storage are concerned. There is a pest called trogloderma, which is on our borders. It got into Zanzibar and it keeps coming into Mombasa harbour. It has established itself in Tanganyika and we are trying to keep it

[Mr. Swynnerton]

We have appointed a Port entomologist whose sole job it is to develop and devise methods of inspection and eradication of pests of storage. He was called in a year or two back when Tanganyika was pressing us and saying that we were too slack in this country in our methods of inspection at the coast and methods of fumigation. The boat is on the other foot now. In Tanganyika they have allowed this pest into a number of areas and have called in our entomologist's services. We, so far, with our methods have succeeded in keeping it out, and it may well be that we shall have to set up a chain of quarantine stations along our borders at places like Taveta and Namanga in order to see that produce coming from Tanganyika does not introduce this particular pest because it is a very serious one.

Those are the sort of things we are doing for the Coast, and I think the hon. Member can withdraw now if he wants to.

Sir, I would now like to come on to the question of highlands cash crops. We heard an awful lot in a previous debate on the fact that loan money is going into the lands of high potential. I do not repeat that debate, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I would like to discuss some of the cash crops in those areas, because this subject has been raised by a number of Members in this House, again by the hon. Member for Central Province North, the hon. Member for Central Rift, and my friends, Mr. Luseno and Mr. Kebaso.

Five years ago, or six years ago, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we set up a plan for cash crop expansion in the African areas and set certain targets at five-year intervals to be achieved in the growing of coffee, tea, pyrethrum and various crops like that. I am very happy to say that coffee is very well up to schedule, but Sir, with the land consolidation and the great interest that people are taking in the farming of individual holdings we feel that the time has now come to review that target and perhaps to step up our rate of planting. But, Sir, we are very dependent on the co-operative societies in every district, because the co-operative societies are the people who run the nurseries. We in the Agricultural Department are blamed very often for not producing sufficient coffee trees. We hope on this new extension programme that it will be worked out in close association with the individual co-operative societies to make sure that those societies place their orders for seed well in advance, assess their requirements for seedlings in good time, that they acquire enough land to put nurseries on—that has been one of the main obstacles because they have not looked far enough ahead and got enough land—or, if necessary, that they make contracts, shall we say, with other coffee growers to grow coffee seedlings on their behalf.

Further, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we have had experiments with all these coffee areas in order to see whether we can raise the limits above and below the present altitude zone, and I think we are in discussion with the Legal Department at the present time about gazetting new areas in order to extend the areas in which coffee may be grown. But, Mr. Deputy Speaker, this brings one danger. The lower areas do not produce coffee of good quality. The coffee is liable to be droughted, it is liable to be affected by Hemileia, and it will be necessary for us in order not to penalize the better growers, to encourage the formation of co-operative societies and the building of factories separately for the areas of lower quality in order to keep the higher qualities of coffee intact, because, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as we heard from the Trade Group which came out here a few months ago, high quality Kenya coffees are very much in world demand. We could dispose of a lot more than we can now, but if we produce low qualities we shall suffer the same fate as Uganda and a decline in the price of coffee of perhaps 35 per cent. I believe that that is the extent in the decline (if the value of coffee in Uganda in 12 months—whereas the decline in price of high quality Kenya coffee has been less than 1 per cent. That is to our credit. Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I think it would be quite wrong to go away from any policy of producing anything but high quality coffee if we can.

Similarly with tea, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we have a planting programme, as the Minister said in introducing the Estimates of another 9,500 acres in the next five or six years. Now, whereas there are only 500 plants in a coffee acre, there are over 3,000 plants in a tea acre, and therefore this is going to be an enormous programme for planting tea nurseries, developing them, and again possibly putting the development of tea stumps out to contract, but I hope, with the setting up of a tea authority for this specific development, that that will be pursued on a co-ordinated basis right across every province, and that it will not be dealt with piecemeal in one area and another.

We were attacked, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think by the Member for Central Province North and the Member for Central Rift, on restricting the acreage that a family might grow of tea or coffee. Those two hon. Members are quite misinformed. All that we ask of the growers is that they should grow the acreage which they can look after well. If a farmer grows half an acre and can look after it well, let him expand. If they can grow [Mr. Swynnerton] an acre well, let him expand. But, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think I have said in this House before, I have certainly said it outside this House, if you can produce 10 cwt. of coffee off one acre, why produce it on three acres? An African family can generally look after one acre quite well. Above that they have got to start employing labour. There are many cases, and we know this from Tanganyika and Uganda, where people are only producing two or three cwt. an acre, but they might be producing a ton of coffee an acre. Now, Sir, where we are short of land, is it not better that we should produce 10 cwt. of coffee from one acre and use the other two acres for keeping better cattle. Guernseys, Jerseys, or growing other crops or other cash crops. That is our point. I know an African tea grower in Kiambu, who has only been developing tea over the last three years, who has already got three acres of tea. That, I think, refutes the suggestion of the hon. Member for the Central Rift. There are many coffee growers who have got two, three, four and five acres of coffee. All that we do ask of them is that they should make productive use of their land.

I would just like to mention the various acreages of tea in various districts so that hon. Members will realize that there will be a very big spread of this tea production programme, and it will not be confined to one area or one province alone.

We hope to have them in the ground in 1966, in Kisi 1,500 acres of tea, in Kericho 1,555, in North Nyanza 430, in Nandi 500, and in five districts of the Central Province just under 7,000, about 1,200 acres per district. I just want to give those figures, so that hon. Members will know that we are exploring all the possible tea areas in this country, and that we are not just confining development to limited areas.

I would like to deal with one or two other points before coming back to co-operative societies, if I am allowed the time, Mr. Deputy Speaker. My hon. friend, Mr. Smith, raised the question of young farmers' clubs. This is a matter, Mr. Deputy Speaker, which we have been asked to take over for several years, but we just have not had the funds to provide an officer in competition with many other claims. I think the Ministry is very appreciative of the work which the Royal Agricultural Society of Kenya has done for the development of young farmers' clubs, and I would say, I think, that the Agricultural Department has not been backward in assisting the Royal Agricultural Society of Kenya in this development. We had an officer in Nairobi who was very helpful and the recent young farmers' week which was run at Eldoret was entirely run by the Agricultural Department. There is an instruction out to all officers in charge of districts that wherever they can they should detail one officer to specialize in the encouragement of young farmers' clubs, so that within our capacity, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we are doing what we can. We would very much like to provide a young farmers' organizer, but that is a matter for the Government and even this House to say that it will vote extra money for such an undertaking.

My hon. friend from Nyanza North has asked us to look at that very new country, Israel. Now, Sir, as far as some of us in this House are concerned, in our school days we were rather taught that it happened to be the cradle of civilization, or it might be the cradle of modern recorded history, I am not sure. You are more erudite in these matters than I am. But I do not believe you can classify Israel as a country which is particularly new in agricultural development, or in any other matter. That country, admittedly, had fertile land which, over the years, it allowed to revert to desert for many reasons. One of the many reasons being the goat. But, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there are other factors, I think, which make Israel not comparable with Kenya. The tremendous surge forward in Israel in recent years has been due to dollar finance from their fellow compatriots in the United States. They have had access to sums of money which I would say, were quite outside the credibility of this country, or accessibility to this country. This resettlement of Jews in Palestine has been a big undertaking, but the money has been available. I do not think that Palestine would have been a viable unit unaided in so far as its imports and exports and its payment balances are concerned. It is dependent on the import of very large sums of money. Certainly, we would be very happy to look at developments taking place there, and to learn of their water utilization and settlement activities, but we have got to cut our coat according to our cloth. If we had £500,000,000 we could undoubtedly develop the Northern Frontier District. We could put in enormous water catchments. We could carry water 200 miles and put in flood irrigation and so on, but, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if we had £500,000,000 there are other places we might use them more productively.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I am afraid time is controlled by a resolution of the Council in regard to the length of speeches. When you come to deal with the Heads you will be entitled to speak as many times as you like, but only for ten minutes on any one occasion, and that will allow you to deal with the other items you have to speak on.

Mr. Swynnerton: You could not allow me to have another five minutes?

Sir Charles Markham: On this side of the House we would welcome an extension of Mr. Swynnerton's time.

Mr. Swynnerton: Thank you very much. I was interested to hear too, in rather a similar connexion the comments of the hon. Member for Nairobi North. I liked his idea of printing paper money and employing labour and not machinery for developing the catchment of the Tana River, but I would say this, that I agree with him entirely that in the long run this country will have to develop very substantial irrigation resources for its population, but, Sir, that development will not be economic. It will have to be heavily subsidized. In the United States, in their big irrigation development schemes, the farmer has to carry only about 30 per cent of the capital development costs of flood control, and control of their rivers, because they have taken the wise precaution of putting their main cities down those rivers, so that when there are major floods those cities get flooded. Therefore, it is desirable to control the rivers and not flood the cities or the valuable agricultural land, and they have therefore spent millions and millions of dollars on the control of rivers. In putting in irrigation schemes they also put in power projects, so that power carries a proportion of the cost. They also develop tremendous recreational facilities in order that this may help to carry the cost, and when it comes down to the farmer he is required to carry 30 per cent of the capital cost and pay no interest on it. Now, on that basis, in the long run, we shall have to develop a tremendous amount of irrigation in this country, so that from that point of view I do support the hon. Member. I was not quite happy about his finances.

I would just like now to get off agriculture and get on to the more controversial agricultural subjects which we have been debating, because I only want to make two or three points on the economic side of any resettlement scheme. I think the Minister has been very highly misrepresented in the Press and over the news on what he introduced the other day. He did say that where economic units were acquired they would be sold off as economic units if that was possible. Where economic units could not be sold off, then it would be necessary to consider subdivision. The figure of 50 acres has crept in—the Minister gave 50 acres as an example. I think if hon. Members would approach this from a different point of view, that they would appreciate the project very much better. As somebody in this House has said—I think it was the Chief Secretary—there is such a little gap between Members on this side and the other side that it could be very easily bridged.

In the African areas, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we are aiming to uplift farming so that the farmer will get his subsistence plus a minimum income of £100 a year. Now let us look at this from the other point of view on subdivision. This is a minimum economic unit, one which will feed the farmer and his family and carry the cost of any development loans, that is the annual repayment of any development loan he may have to make, and which, shall we say, would bring him in a minimum income of £200 a year. Let us base this on economics, not on acreages, and then I think we shall have a meeting of minds of Members inside this House, and with the Divisional Land Boards, because obviously the Divisional Land Boards are going to have a very big part to play in this. I think if we deal with it on that basis too, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we shall find the reason why the Minister has referred to land of high potential. The minute we go into the drier areas we have to go into units that may run into hundreds or thousands of acres. In those cases individuals may not be able to take up the land and get a living. It may be necessary if the land is bought and reutilized to introduce communal schemes—that is groups of families or companies coming in to manage that land on a block basis, because, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the water on those lands is not available economically for subdivision. On a limited area the grass may be grazed out so rapidly that the land will be denuded and the cattle will have to move off the smallholdings, and we shall get back to nomadic pastoralism. But I think, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if we look at this from an economic point of view, and work from there that we shall probably reach a form of agreement which will be acceptable to everybody. I just wanted to make that point because I think that people have taken up the Minister in regard to his speech, and they have picked out bits and pieces instead of looking at the whole overall economy of the project.

I just want to say a brief word on the training of settlers on this scheme. Learning on the job is the best way of training anybody, and the Mau Narok settlers learned their job just that way. Our present proposals for training are, therefore, that selected farmers should go through farmers' training centres just for one month to get basic instruction and to be sorted out to see whether they are likely to make suitable settlers. Then we feel they should go on to the farm—on which they may eventually settle and work on the development of that farm.

They will actually have a personal interest in the development of roads, of fences, of buildings

[Mr. Swynnerton] and water supplies, and so on, and on that farm, will receive instruction in how to farm, how to sow grass, how to manage cattle and everything else. If they are paid as labourers developing that farm that money can be recovered from the development cost of the subdivision on which they settle. Were they to spend a year in a training centre, all that would happen would be that Government would spend £100, £150 or £200 to train the settler and that money would never be recoverable. It will be a much better investment, both for finance, to train the people on the holdings, and for building up the morale of the settlers if they feel that they are working for their own development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Blunt (Nominated Member): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I propose to introduce a new note into this discussion and to say just a little about the locust position. It is a thing which has not arisen during the course of this debate. So far as the country is concerned we have not been seriously troubled for some years, and I think there is a tendency to forget what might happen to us if the locust control were not to be efficient.

Now, Sir, I am not going to say anything about the two international organizations which control the red locust and the migratory locust, except to say that both those organizations are working effectively, and I think I must tell the House of the difficulties which the latter organization met with last year. We had a very serious disaster in that the Director of Research, the entomologist and two field officers and a number of members of families of the staff of that organization were all killed in the air disaster at Bordeaux last August. The organization has experienced the utmost difficulty in keeping its services going under these circumstances, but with the help of other organizations has succeeded in doing so.

But I would like to refer, Sir, to the position in regard to the desert locust. The position there is that so far from any run down of the plague, it appears that there are more locusts in existence in the desert locust area at the moment than there have been this time for several years past. There are large quantities of locusts in North and West Africa. There are quite a number in the Arabian Peninsula, and they are now present in Iran seriously, and in India and Pakistan. The latter two countries have not been affected now for the last two or three years. It is true that the various countries concerned have their organizations to try and deal with the locust plague, and that those organizations do work more and more effectively as the years go on. The Desert Locust Organization has, over the past years, been able to prevent any serious incursion of locusts into these East African territories, and I am confident that if that organization continues to be financially supported, as it must be, that it is quite capable of continuing to afford that protection to Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika. And I would like to take this opportunity, Sir, of paying a very sincere and I believe very well deserved tribute to the organization itself, and particularly to the Director thereof, Mr. Stevenson. The organization, which, as Members will know, is one of the High Commission organizations, has been cut down financially over the last few years. We have had to reduce our staff, but we have, I believe, succeeded in maintaining a very high standard of efficiency, and to a very large extent that high standard of efficiency is due to the personal efforts of the Director.

And I should also inform the House—I think perhaps I have done so previously—but there is a great deal of support for locust control work in the countries to the immediate north of us, and particularly in Ethiopia, who have spent very considerable sums of money on the control of the desert locust in recent years. Similarly, in the Arabian Peninsula, an organization led by the Food and Agricultural Organization takes part in the locust campaign each year, and some seven or eight countries contribute teams which go to Arabia and there attack the desert locust during its swarming period.

Now with all this work going on in the various areas affected by the desert locust, and with our own organization kept at its present level, I believe that we can guarantee that this country will not suffer seriously, although there is always a chance of a few swarms getting in, but will not suffer seriously from the desert locust. But, Sir, and this is an important "but", at the present moment, one has a certain amount of fear that our resources in years to come will not be sufficient to keep the organization up to the standard which we believe is necessary. The funds of the Desert Locust Control Organization have been provided in the past mainly by the three East African territories, of which Kenya has been, and still is, by far the largest contributor. But we have also had assistance from Her Majesty's Government in the way of funds for the survey side of the organization, and we have had contributions, and still have contributions, coming to us on behalf of Somalia and Somaliland.

Now, Sir, the political position, as one sees it at the moment, is certainly doubtful, and the financial position of some of these countries appears to be even more doubtful still. One of our contributors, namely Uganda, dropped out two years ago. They still contribute to the research side, but they have not contributed for [Mr. Blunt] the last two years, and do not propose to contribute in the future, to the control side on the grounds, as they say, that they are not affected by the desert locust. Well, Sir, it is perfectly true they have not been affected by the desert locust for many years, but, in my view, that is solely because the organization has been able to prevent the incursion of the desert locust on a large scale into these territories. Be that as it may, they do not contribute any more. We have a great fund of goodwill towards the Desert Locust Control Organization in the territories to the north of us, particularly Somalia and Somaliland, and Ethiopia, but with all the goodwill in the world it seems to me extremely doubtful if either Somalia or Somaliland, after their attainment of independence, will be financially in a position to contribute on a substantial scale to desert control.

Furthermore, the position in Tanganyika is not entirely clear. Tanganyika has found great difficulty in providing their contribution for the last year or two, but in spite of those difficulties they have done us. But one cannot escape the feeling that over the next year or so they may find the difficulty so great and the demands on their finances for other and more popular purposes so enormous that contributions to the Locust Control Organization may be cut down.

Now, Sir, if that should happen, it seems to us to leave Kenya very much in the air to carry the whole of the expenditure of this organization itself. I do not believe that it would be either fair or right that it should have to do so. It is perfectly clear that Kenya is the major beneficiary from the control of locusts and the prevention of their arriving in these territories, but the work that is done by the organization has a very important effect on control, not only in the East African territories, but in other territories to the north of us.

The Desert Locust Advisory Committee, over which I have the honour to be Chairman, have been giving very serious consideration over the last few months to this position. We see our way for the next twelve months. There is no particular difficulty there, but unless something can be done whereby we may be able to see our way more clearly to the necessary finance for the period beyond that, I feel that we may find ourselves in serious trouble. I am going to England, Sir, tomorrow, and I hope next week to have discussions with those members of the Survey Advisory Committee who are in England, and to have further discussions with the Colonial Office to see if some means cannot be found of guaranteeing, as it were, that the necessary funds will be available to continue this service. Also, in spite of the fact that we have been free of locusts for so long, I have not the slightest doubt that the risks we run now, if the desert locust were to get out of control, are very much greater than the risks that we ran in the past, and those Members who remember the early thirties and the troubles that we had at that time and the losses that we suffered will fully realize that the incursion of locusts if we cannot prevent them coming in here, could be a major disaster to the economy.

Sir, I beg to support the Motion.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie), Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to sincerely thank the two hon. Members opposite who have remained behind to hear the end of this debate, and I would like to especially thank the hon. Specially Elected Member because he has not participated in this debate, and of course, that being so, there was no real reason for him to remain behind as he has done, but I would like to thank those two hon. gentlemen most sincerely, and the third one who has just come in, Mr. Deputy Speaker,

I appreciate that there is only a matter of seventeen minutes to go this morning, so I do not intend getting on to the contentious subject of the land small farm settlement schemes (this morning, other than to talk on a matter which says in the newspaper today—a speech in Nakuru) by the President of the Kenya National Farmers' Union. Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we all know that it is easy to tout round the country laying down the law on what should be done, or what should not be done, but it is a completely "different kettle of fish" to get down to "brass tacks" and work these schemes out.

I would have thought, and quite rightly so, as the President says this scheme and the whole of the plan for land stabilization, is most important to the future of agriculture. This being so, I would have thought that members of his union, either his executive officer, or some of his other executive personnel, may have found it of interest had they come in and listened to the debate in this House, especially the reply, because ultimately, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is this House who formulate the legislation by which this Settlement Board Scheduled Areas will operate.

And I would have thought that the ideal place for them surely would have been to have listened to all the opinions which have been passed. I am very pleased to say that during this debate I have noticed interest being taken by the executive and by members of the Board of Agriculture and by the executive side of the European Agricultural Settlement Board. But I must say that I have been disappointed in seeing nobody today taking an interest in listening in from the Kenya National

 Farmers' Union. It seems to me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the unfortunate release that came over the British Broadcasting Corporation's early morning news yesterday may have led to a lot of the outcry from the President of the National Farmers' Union.

Now, in today's paper over and above his statement which he made in speaking at Nakuru yesterday he has printed an article by himself on the National Farmers' Union plan for land stability. Now, in reading that plan of his I find very little difference between his ideas and the ideas which Government have put forward after a certain amount of consultation with the chairman and other executives of the Board of Agriculture and a very short discussion which I have had with the European Settlement Board. Sir, I am afraid I will have to cover this point again a little later with your permission or perhaps when we next sit. One of the reasons why I brought this out in my Estimates debate was to allow both myself as Minister and my officers elbow room to go out and discuss it freely with the farming population and the various boards and committees which represent them. Now, in this article which appears today and with your permission I would like to read the second paragraph of that article. "A purchasing and development authority must be established under the direction of the Kenya Government—presumably the Ministry of Agriculture or Lands—with complete freedom of action subject only to an overriding obligation of the trustees to ensure that land transactions should take place at a fair and economic price. The object of the authority will be to purchase land that is offered to it for sale and then do one of four things: "Those I will come to later.

Now, that section of it which was part and parcel of the meat of this article falls very closely in line with our present view. He then goes on to give his four points which are as follows:—

"1. It may resell the land intact to a buyer of any race, whether individual, partnership or company." (That falls, Mr. Deputy Speaker, completely into line with our thoughts, completely so, and this new settlement authority will continue the normal day-to-day settlement business of the old Board along the identical lines of the old Board with whatever moneys are available except for the one difference that it will be a board which is open to members of all races to use.)

"2. It may subdivide the land and rent it, retaining to itself the obligations of a landlord." (That again falls completely in with our thoughts.)

"3. It may subdivide the land and operate an assisted ownership scheme for the benefit mainly, but not necessarily entirely, of Africans." (That again, I submit, falls into exactly what I said during my speech.)

"4. It may be required, in certain circumstances, to hold its purchase for a limited period, employing perhaps the ex-owner as manager, as a condition of contract."

Now, that fourth point I do admit I did mention in my speech but that is the normal function of any settlement authority and is a function which is being carried out at the present moment by the settlement authority which is operating. Therefore, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I maintain that had the National Farmers' Union, if they thought and really thought that, agriculture being debated in this House, and the Estimates were important enough to listen to, and had they been in here—and they had ample warning to know when the Estimates were coming up and even after my speech had been printed they could quite easily have been in and listened in to it in the House during the debate yesterday—they would have known that there was very little difference between the views which the Government have put forward and those views.

Then, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if I may move now to his last paragraph, this reads as follows: "I believe success is dependent on three factors. First the acceptance of the trustee obligation to buy fair." (That first one I covered in my speech, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I think we have no grounds of arguing with them on that one.) "Secondly, a very efficient purchasing and stabilization authority run by men with commercial and banking experience." (Now, I see no reason why now that we have got elbow room to discuss this frankly we cannot discuss and meet with them on this, excepting as I did mention international sources maintain that on any authority which they have lent money to one-third must be technical civil servants.) "Thirdly, finance in adequate quantity."

Now, that is the one and only one point which I think that we may have a certain amount of difference on at this moment but I think when I reply on that specific point when this House meets again I will be able to point out that perhaps we are not even so far apart on that point as well.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, if I may I will utilize the last nine minutes on answering one or two points which were raised by Members opposite during the debate. The hon. Member for Central Province North criticized the restrictions which were placed by my Ministry on the movement of produce from Central Province mainly. I think he mentioned, into the adjoining Kamba areas.

ADJOURNMENT OF DEBATE

Sir Charles Markham: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am wondering, Sir, as the House is very empty and a lot of people thought the Minister would not be replying until Tuesday whether it would help him, Sir, if I was allowed to move the House do now adjourn. I think I am not allowed to do so under Standing Orders. It has got to come from that side, I believe, Sir, the adjournment of the House, so that he can reply fully on Tuesday. This is such an important subject, Sir, that I do not think it is right—perhaps we are wrong on this side, Sir, I accept that but it might be of help to him to be given a completely clear chance again on Tuesday afternoon.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): Although a Minister has to move the adjournment of the House, it is open to you, Sir Charles, to move the adjournment of this debate.

Sir Charles Markham: Well, Sir, if that is the case, Sir, I beg to move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Mangat seconded.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): This means that the debate will go on from this point when we next meet.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

ADJOURNMENT

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): That concludes the business of the day and I accordingly adjourn Council until 2.15 p.m. on Tuesday afternoon, 17th May.

The House rose at twenty-two minutes past Twelve o'clock.

Tuesday, 17th May, 1960

The House met at fifteen minutes past Two o'clock.

ORAL ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

QUESTION NO. 75

Air Commodore Howard-Williams asked the Minister for Internal Security and Defence—

(a) To state if there is public alarm over the number of personal assaults, house-breakings and other forms of lawlessness occurring in this country?

(b) To give statistics for the Nairobi Area showing—

(i) the number of offences under the Penal Code reported to the police during 1959;

(ii) the number of such criminal cases brought in court;

(iii) the number of convictions obtained.

(c) Is the Minister satisfied that the police force is strong enough to bring about a reduction in the incidence of crime?

The Minister for Internal Security and Defence (Mr. Swann): (a) In a recent statement in this Council on the security position I did refer to public uneasiness caused by the increase in crimes of violence.

(b) (i) In Nairobi Area during 1959, 7,933 offences against the Penal Code were reported to the police. (ii) Of these, 3,108 have so far been brought to court, and (iii) 2,689 convictions have been obtained.

(c) I am satisfied that the resources of the Kenya Police are adequate for their task but, if the crime situation deteriorates, the ability of the police to deal with that situation will be reviewed.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, could I have a direct answer to the first part of the question? I did not get the Minister's reply to that.

The Minister for Internal Security and Defence (Mr. Swann): I did state, Sir, that in a recent statement in this Council on the security position I did refer to public uneasiness caused by the increase in crimes of violence.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the Minister aware that this question was first asked in a rather more precise form some four months ago and that he himself chose to stop the question being asked? May I ask you, Sir, whether that is a proper procedure or should questions be referred to the Speaker if they are not worded in a satisfactory form?

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Comroy): The question is originally asked was referred to me, and as the result of my advice it was redrafted into its existing form.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I hope you will forgive me for questioning your answer, but it was originally referred to the former Speaker of the House, or it was in his time rather, that the question was originally asked and it is that time I refer to.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Comroy): My attention was drawn to this question which was not in accordance with Standing Orders and I advised the hon. and gallant Member how to put it into an appropriate form.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, if I may proceed, I will accept your answer, but I would like to ask the Minister under his reply in section (c) whether the police find themselves unable to collect information about (notably) Asian deaths. It has been recorded in a Government statement that only one out of every four is in fact reported to the police. Is that because the police are not adequate to ascertain the causes of these deaths or for some other reason that has not been disclosed?

The Minister for Internal Security and Defence (Mr. Swann): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, that is another question.

QUESTION No. 90

Mr. Mate asked the Minister for Health and Welfare:—

(a) Is there a serious shortage of African hospital staff (hospital assistants, nurses and midwives) in the Meru District?

(b) If so, will the Minister give figures to show its extent and seriousness?

The Minister for Health and Welfare (Mr. Muiimi): The Meru District Hospital now has no student assistant nurses working there, as their training is being conducted at Nyeri. This accounts for a temporary shortage in the total number of nursing staff working in the hospital. The number of trained staff there, however, compares well with the standard Colony ratio of staff numbers to beds.

With regard to the second part of the question, more trained assistant nurses will be posted to Meru when they have completed their examinations at the provincial school. The present deficiency of ten or more will be rectified by this means and by the acceptance of recruits for preliminary training prior to formal tuition at the provincial centre.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, in the first part of the reply, does the Minister not include the other hospitals in the Meru District, the mission hospitals, and not only the Meru District Government hospital?

The Minister for Health and Welfare (Mr. Muiimi): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am satisfied that all the hospitals in the Meru District are adequately staffed.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, would Government like to give people in the mission hospitals more training than they are doing in their own hospitals?

The Minister for Health and Welfare (Mr. Muiimi): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I think that is a different question.

QUESTION No. 94

Mr. Alexander asked the Minister for Finance and Development is it not a fact that civil servants are seriously concerned about the security of their pension rights and is Government prepared to make a statement that will allay the present doubts?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to reply:—

Yes. The Government is aware that certain civil servants are concerned about the security of their pension rights. To allay their fears the Government has recently issued Establishment Circular No. 6 of 1960, which sets out the present position and the present action being taken by the Government. A copy of the Circular has been placed in the library.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the Minister aware that civil servants are not satisfied with Circular No. 6 of 1960, which does not allay their fears? In fact, all that it does is to confirm Colonial 306, paragraph 6, clause 6, whereby Her Majesty's Government undertakes to protect the pension rights. What the civil servants want to know, and what I want the Minister to answer today, is how will that be done?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): I suggest, Sir, that the hon. Member should first of all study the Circular and see what its terms are.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, does that include African civil servants?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Civil servants, Sir, are without race.

Mr. Mhoya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, would the Minister state which civil servants are concerned about protection?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): I suggest, Sir, that the hon. Member should enquire that from the hon. Member for Nairobi West.

Mr. Mhoya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, would the Minister state whether he understood the question since he wants me to consult the hon. Member for Nairobi West. Is it possible that the Minister did not understand the question?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I am rather confused now as to which question I was supposed to be understanding.

Mr. Mhoya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I asked the Minister which of the civil servants are concerned and need protection for the future, and his answer was that I should get this from the Member for Nairobi West. My question is, if I must ask the Member for Nairobi West, is it possible that the Minister himself does not understand the question asked by the Member for Nairobi West?

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): I should like to thank the hon. Member for his explanation, but the answer is, I fully understand the question asked by the hon. Member for Nairobi West, and as I said, certain civil servants, I understand, are concerned, and the Government is fully aware of that, but I am afraid I could not say exactly which individual civil servants those are.

BILL

REPORT AND THIRD READING

The Specific Loan (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) Bill

Mr. Webb: Mr. Deputy Speaker, last Friday a Committee of the whole Council considered the Specific Loan (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) Bill and reported the same with amendment. For the convenience of hon. Members the Bill, as amended, has been annexed to the Orders of the Day. The question

I now have to move, Sir, is that the Council doth agree with the Committee in the said report.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie) seconded.

The question was put and carried.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move the Specific Loan (International Bank for Reconstruction and Development) Bill be now read a Third Time.

Mr. Webb seconded.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

The Bill was accordingly read the Third Time and passed.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Order for Committee read:

VOTE 21—MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, ANIMAL HUSBANDRY AND WATER RESOURCES

MOTION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR
(Resumption of debate interrupted on 13th May, 1960)

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have always known that the hour 3.45 in the afternoon to 4.30 usually diminishes this Council, but when I started replying last Friday the Council was at a very low ebb indeed, with to begin with only two hon. Members opposite, and a third who came gallivanting in, so Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would now like to go back perhaps on a little of what I touched on on Friday morning for the benefit of those who had the opportunity to get back to their farms and perhaps were doing a little harder work than they would normally be doing in Nairobi.

Now I would like to start today, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in going into a little greater detail on the small farm settlement schemes which I put to this House last Wednesday, but before going into that I would like to clear a few important points which were raised by hon. Members opposite. Some of the points which were raised may quite easily have been raised because I had not covered them fully enough, or perhaps had not made them points clear, and I do apologize to hon. Members opposite for perhaps not having put my case as well as I thought I had, but on reading my HANSARD I find that perhaps it reads better than how I put it across.

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources]

Mr. Deputy Speaker, the first point is that the new Settlement Board, which will be set up under legislation will be—and I ran into a lot of difficulties here—will be non-racial, multi-racial, open to all races, available to people irrespective of colour, creed or religion. Be they Suk, Turkana, Scots, Gwan, Luo, or even people from the coastal strip. I hope that I have covered all the peoples of Kenya in that.

An Hon. Member: And English

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): And English. I beg your pardon. I did say "Scott".

Now my second point, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that the new Settlement Board will be responsible for operating the scheme under the Minister. They will be the people who actually administer and operate the scheme.

The third point is that the new Settlement Board will also continue to operate the normal functions of a Settlement Board, that is the buying and selling of economic units, and assisting tenants of those units, helping assisted owners, and I sincerely hope that not only my Ministry, but Government, will be able to continue to find more money—and we are having discussions at this moment for the normal functions of a Settlement Board. And again, this will be on a non-racial basis open to all the people of all the races.

Now, Sir, the fourth point is that any land bought, sold or subdivided by the Board will have to go through whatever machinery may arise out of the discussions of Sessional Paper No. 10 and any legislation that follows thereafter. Sir, as I see the programme at the moment (it will depend on a point which I will raise at the end of the small farm scheme which I am putting out now) it looks as though Sessional Paper No. 10 will be debated sometime around mid-June, and that debate on legislation arising out of the Sessional Paper, will be debated in the September/October Session.

Sir, the sixth point I would like to raise, and this is perhaps one of the points I did not cover as well as I should have done in my debate, was that the initial pilot scheme will be on high potential land. It is from that initial scheme of the settlement of 40 to 50 people that we want to gather information which we can use both with Her Majesty's Government and international sources later on next year for finance for a bigger and better programme.

Now I do also want to cover the economic angle of this settlement. What we hope is—what we aim for—and what I hope the Board will agree to aim for is that we will give each tenant subsistence and ability to repay loan charges, and if he is an assisted owner the ability to repay the yearly amount due towards the purchase of the land, and also to return to him a minimum of £250 per year net, so that is the criterion of the whole scheme. And, Sir, it is not only because of the lack of any experience we have had previously, but also because so many numerous and contradictory views have been given to us. Some people whom we have discussed this with on Boards who are interested in it have told us that we will not be able to find £250 net at the end of all this until we get to a figure of 200 to 300 acres. There are other people who maintain that we will get this on some high potential land as low as 20 acres, and that is why we, in the Ministry, have hit on the figure for the pilot scheme of round about 50 acres for experience, as we maintain we would easily be able to fulfil what I have already given, that is the three—subsistence—the ability to repay loan charges and the yearly purchase by the assisted owner, or rent if he is a tenant, plus at the end of it all a net return of £250.

Now, Sir, I appreciate that after our pilot and initial scheme we may find ourselves having to go up in some acres because of the type of land which will be available, up to 300 or 400 acres, and here again, we may have to look for a completely different type of tenant to the tenants that we will originally look at for our high potential farms. Now, if I can just give an example of where I think we may run into difficulties on this one, I think it is obvious to anyone that those who have great knowledge of livestock would be lost on a small 30- or 40-acre farm, and for their benefit we would have to look for farms which could be made economic units, but would have a certain bearing on the care of livestock, in other words animal husbandry.

Sir, I want to emphasize again, as my last point on this, that the scheme must be economic if we are going to use any international money whatsoever, and that money to actually purchase the land must be found elsewhere other than international finance.

Now, Sir, if I could spend a few minutes in giving a case of how I think it would operate, because since I put this out on Wednesday a number of hon. Members opposite have asked me how I envisage it will operate. In putting this across I want to emphasize again that it is up to the new Settlement Board to do this, and to find out the difficulties. What we maintain, Sir, is that if a property is made available to us, or comes on to the market, the valuer, who will be employed by the Settlement Board, will go and have a look at the property, and if he maintains that it is a property which is suitable, and is a property which could be subdivided down into economic units, and there is not a buyer available at that time to purchase it as a unit, and naturally if it is an underdeveloped farm or an underdeveloped farm all the better from the farm settlement scheme, he will then do a programme on how to subdivide it, in his opinion, work out the figures and put it up to the Settlement Board. But just prior to putting it up to the Settlement Board it is envisaged that he would take into consideration the view of the agricultural officer in the area, and at that stage would bring in the agricultural subcommittee. Once they had worked that out they will then go in front of the Board who would then decide to purchase the farm, having discussed it with the agricultural committee, and at that stage it would be put into the machinery which will come out of the debate on the Sessional Paper No. 10. Once it has gone through, and the subdivision has been agreed, that is the stage when the Agricultural Department, as the agents and the technicians on behalf of the Board, will go in and start doing the physical work. It will also be the job of the Agricultural Department, with the help of the Administration in picking tenants and training tenants. The Settlement Board Authority will have an agent whose job it will be to see that the tenants are being looked after, are on their property, that they are taking care of the property, that they are paying their rent, etc. But the agricultural side of it will be looked after by the Agricultural Department. It is hoped that once a tenant or an assisted owner, if he becomes one—and our aim is rather assisted owners than tenants, and that is why we hope that applications for these small farms will have a certain amount of ready finance themselves—we want to get them just as quickly as we can to own 30 per cent or 40 per cent of the property, so that we can remove them from this new Settlement Board across to the Land Bank, so that the Settlement Board can get the money back and turn it over.

Now, Sir, that is roughly what we envisage would happen now, but I must again re-emphasize that the whole of this will be operated by the Settlement Board, who will operate under the Agricultural Ordinance.

Now, I have been asked, both inside the House and outside the House, what is meant by underdeveloped and undeveloped land. Now, Sir, I think undeveloped land is quite obvious to anybody, but we have different interpretations on underdeveloped land, and I think the best interpretation I can give is the interpretation which is used by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. I would like to give an example of a 700-acre farm which has 100 acres of coffee on it and 100 acres of which are being used for mulch, a coffee factory and other land used tied to coffee on that property. In other words that the coffee unit is a 200-acre unit, with the other 500 acres either being a cereal unit or a dairy unit. Now, if that is in a coffee-growing area, the World Bank considers that the 500 acres is an underdeveloped coffee unit, that the 200 acres is completely developed as a coffee unit, but the other 500 acres is underdeveloped as a coffee unit, although it is fully developed, say, as a dairy unit. That, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is the interpretation of an underdeveloped property, as far as they are concerned in lending the money to us. Over and above that they are not prepared in any money they lend us to tie the finance to be used on an undeveloped property or an underdeveloped property in any one part of the Colony. They want it to be Colony wide, but here again, and for the benefit of my hon. friend the Member for Central Nyanza, I feel that when we go back to discuss the loans with them, if that time does arise, we may find they will say, "We are only prepared to lend you this money (or above a certain rainfall or above a certain altitude)," so we have got to be ready for that when we discuss it with them.

But they will be sending over a mission later this year and it will be up to us to show that mission that a scheme will work but again on a larger acreage in our lower rainfall and our lower altitude areas.

Now there have been many mentions during the debate, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on Her Majesty's Government's attitude in this matter. Some hon. Members stressed their views that Her Majesty's Government had a responsibility in this matter. Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Her Majesty's Government accepts a degree of responsibility and is ready to act accordingly is shown by the statements of the Secretary of State at the Lancaster House Conference, when he said, as recorded in the Report of the Conference and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read that portion of it out. He said as follows: "The International Bank is already considering a scheme related to African areas, and they will now be approached as to whether they would favour participation in a more comprehensive project. To show the belief of Her Majesty's Government in the value of such a scheme, I am glad to say here and now that Her Majesty's Government will undertake, in the light of the Kenya Government Review, that £5,000,000 in loan will be available from the above or other sources for re-lending."

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, again last Wednesday, as I told the House, Her Majesty's Government has now confirmed that they will provide Eschequer loans totalling 1.15 million in the period up to the end of the current Colonial Development and Welfare Act, and that is if a suitable project can be prepared which will attract International Bank assistance and in the meantime they have advanced to us £100,000 to enable us to get on with the pilot scheme. So I sincerely hope, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that all sides of the House will agree that this promise is more timely and welcome and that it affords clear evidence of Her Majesty's Government's intention to help us in a practical way.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, during the debate numerous words have been used on the compensation angle for one, and for the establishment of a fund, various words were used. But before getting on to this, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as I think it relates more closely perhaps to the land settlement scheme, I would like to make reference to certain statements which were made over the week-end by certain African Members of this House and certain African leaders and certain African politicians. Mr. Deputy Speaker, these statements were brought to my notice because it just so happens that over this week-end we have staying with us—visiting Kenya—the President of the World Bank, the President of the Bank who we hope are in the next day or two going to be prepared to sign a £2,000,000 loan with us, also the President of the Bank who we hope to go to for more development money.

Now, Sir, I think that with the statements that were said, and I sincerely hope that Members opposite will use some opportunity in the very near future in the House of coming out with clearly what they mean on this, because we are obviously going to run very grave risks of getting any development money whatsoever from international sources if these views are, in fact, the views of some hon. Members opposite, and I think I must warn them, now, Sir, that they might easily prejudice not only the case which we hope to put forward but any other future case which is tied either to agriculture or to land.

Now, Sir, I cannot conceive that the statements which I read in the paper are in fact correct, and we on this side of the House have asked for a meeting with the African Elected Members so that we can clear this point and also put the difficulties of Government in attempting to borrow money against such a background.

Now, Sir, just to show the House how and what effect it has had, I have had since the week-end come to see me the agent in this country of a very large agricultural investor, and they are the people who are helping us in a great tea project in the African areas. They are the people who are also helping us in the well-known Nyambei scheme, and they, Sir, are very much concerned with those statements.

Now, Sir, their finance is coming into the country to help nobody else other than the small African farmer and mainly in the tea project, and I do sincerely hope, Sir, so that we can get this settled one way or the other, that Members will take the first opportunity they have of clearing what I hope is a complete misunderstanding, or, Sir, if it cannot be cleared, then it must make my job as Minister for Agriculture most extremely difficult. In fact, Sir, I hate and shudder to think what would happen if we cannot continue to be able to turn to world sources and international sources to borrow money for our development. What it will mean, Sir, is that we would soon move into a chaotic position in agriculture.

Now, Sir, going back to the various words which were used during the debate, the feeling of Government is that there are only two lines that can be looked at and that the one line, the first on which I will refer to in a minute, can be discarded at a very early stage. Now, Sir, the word "compensation". On compensation—and I call line of credit the same, and I do not think that a land stabilization fund of £30,000,000 is much different—I will give the reason in a minute. But all those, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I feel are of no value unless the amount is the full amount of the European farming operations of this Colony.

Now, Sir, where would we get the money? And when we do get the money, where would we start in spending it without breaking the agricultural economy?

Now there is only one place where that money can be obtained because international finance and other countries are just not interested in it. Therefore I maintain, Sir, that what we have been told, both at Lancaster House and since Lancaster House by Her Majesty's Government, is that there is no hope of getting £120,000,000 or £130,000,000 from Her Majesty's Government.

I feel, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the scheme and mainly arising out of the pilot scheme which we have put up from this side of the House—could over the next two or three years grow into a very great scheme if we can make it work and to make it work we have to have the co-operation of all Members opposite as well as farmers of all races in Kenya.

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources]

Now, Sir, the other words which were used were "evacuation fund", "line of credit", "compensation", "land stabilization fund" which the hon. Member for Mount Kenya mentioned tied to a figure of £30,000,000 or £40,000,000. Another mentioned was "an insurance scheme" for farm assets to be underwritten. Well, Sir, if the farm assets are going to be underwritten, I maintain—the only amount that will underwrite them is the £120,000,000 for the reason which—and I do not want to go into it again—I put forward when I initially spoke.

Then, Sir, we come to the words "market support". Now perhaps out of all the words used by hon. Members opposite, it was the one which I felt perhaps is one which we ought to follow up. Now, Sir, market support can be obtained by having a big buyer in the field to buy at the proper price. Now, Sir, I feel that any big buyer in the field must be able to pay a price which will give that purchaser a good return on his capital, so I quite agree with the hon. Specially Elected Member who raised this that no fancy prices would be able to be paid. But, Sir, the Settlement Board in its previous operations, I am told both by the Settlement Board and by a number of farmers, have helped in keeping a market support price over the years, and there is no intention of Government to tamper with this whatsoever. And as I have already emphasized they will now be in the market buying for two projects, one for normal buying and selling of property and one for the small farm plan.

Well, Sir, I was also asked what would happen to ordinary settlement. I think I was asked that by the hon. Member for Nyanza, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think I have already covered that point, but I would like to emphasize that I intend as Minister to find further finance if it is possible for the normal operation of a Settlement Board, and I hope to have discussions along this line with the Settlement Board in the next week or so.

Now, Sir, on Friday I did make mention of statements which had been made by the Kenya National Farmers' Union and there are one or two further points which I would like to clear without going back on any of the points which I have mentioned on Friday.

Now, Sir, since I became Minister for Agriculture, I have set into being a monthly meeting which I have had with the President, Vice-President and Executive Officer of the Kenya National Farmers' Union and have agreed to have any extra meetings which they may like to have with me. These meetings went on regularly until we went to London to Lancaster House. On return from London I made a special point on my arrival back of contacting the President of the Kenya National Farmers' Union and putting him in the picture on exactly what I had learned on the views of Her Majesty's Government and of the various political groups and we had a very frank discussion, whereafter he then went and had discussions with my Director of Agriculture on how our views and thoughts in the Ministry were running. Just before I went back to London to have discussions with Her Majesty's Government and members of the World Bank who were in London, I had certain discussions with the Kenya National Farmers' Union. It is quite correct, Sir, to say that I had promised to consider letting them see a memorandum which had been put forward from the Ministry, but when that memorandum was available, and when I had gone through it, it was obvious to me that various matters which were in it, were matters which should not have been allowed outside the Ministry. It so happened that I arrived in London 48 hours before the Kenya National Farmers' Union President and Vice-President, to find much of what we had been led to believe, that international sources were not prepared to lend money for land purchase and it was unfortunate that I was unable to see the Kenya National Farmers' Union delegation before they made their statement on arrival, which did slightly embarrass them. But I did have the opportunity of having discussions with them in London and I would like to say here and now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that arising out of those discussions the Kenya National Farmers' Union were of help to me in my discussions with Her Majesty's Government. It so happened, Sir, that on my return from Washington I was on the same plane as the President of the Kenya National Farmers' Union and I did have discussions with him—admittedly not very long—coming back in the aeroplane. But since my return from Washington I have had numerous discussions with the executive of the Board of Agriculture, the executive of the Settlement Board, I have had a discussion with the Settlement Board and with the full Board of Agriculture on these matters and on the Board of Agriculture is the President of the Kenya National Farmers' Union and I feel, Sir, that I had a very frank discussion with the Board of Agriculture and had he been prepared, I would have thought that the Kenya National Farmers' Union at that stage could have come forward and had a discussion with me, seeing that I was always prepared to have any discussion with them at any time.

But I sincerely hope that we have managed now to clear the air on this one, Mr. Deputy

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources]

Speaker, and that I and my Ministry and the Kenya National Farmers' Union with the Board of Agriculture and the Settlement Board can get together to try and move this scheme so that we can show that it can run economically which will then give us the opportunity of having a bigger and better scheme.

Sir, I did make mention of the Land Bank but it was raised by two Members during the debate and all I should like to say is that if they would care to read the HASSARD report of my speech they will see the points I raised on it.

Now, Sir, if I may move to specific points which were raised by hon. Members opposite. The hon. Member for Central Province (North) criticized. I think I am right in saying, restrictions on produce movement from Central Province to Kamba country. Now, Sir, these restrictions are imposed in his area by the Central Province Marketing Board. Now, on that Marketing Board producers are in a majority and I would like him to appreciate that the membership of the Marketing Board is a majority of producers. Now, the purpose of that Marketing Board is to help stability in producer prices through the system of guaranteed prices. Up to now that system has been most successful and I am told enjoys the confidence of the majority of the producers.

Mr. Mate: No!

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): I hear one of the hon. Members saying "No". I wonder if he is a producer or a trader.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, it is impossible for producers and traders to have their bread buttered on both sides. Organized marketing and profits run hand in hand and I think what is causing a lot of the trouble in the area mentioned is the temporary food shortage in Kamba country more than a breakdown or organized marketing. But, Sir, do not let us get tied down to that. Let us look at the alternative and there is only one alternative to organized marketing and that is free market and free trade. Now, what that means—

Mr. Mate: Yes!

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): The hon. Member says "Yes," again, Sir. Now I know he is a trader and not a producer.

It is obvious that free trade leaves the producer at the mercy of the trader and what we have had before—and maybe some of the younger producers do not appreciate this—are violent fluctuations up and down of the prices of primary producers. Now, I, as Minister and as a personal ity, Mr. Deputy Speaker, am mainly and primarily interested in the producer.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member also raised a point on the training of co-operative staff. This was covered by my Director of Agriculture who spoke on Friday, but I think I can go a little further in saying that up to 10 per cent net surplus of the money coming out of a co-operative can be used in educating and giving further advanced tuition to officers of the co-operative concerned. We have at Kabete excellent facilities for teaching but over and above that members can be sent to a co-operative at Loughborough in the United Kingdom. However, I must warn hon. Members that the standard of intake to that co-operative is very high academically and my own opinion is that anybody wishing to go further ahead with co-operative training should go to Kabete first and then on overseas to the co-operative colleges which are available to us. I, Sir, would only be too pleased in giving whatever help, I can on this matter because the hon. Member has quite rightly said, as did the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Kebaso, that it is most important that we get our co-operatives running properly.

Now, Sir, the hon. nominated Member, Mr. Kebaso, raised a hardy annual on maize restriction. He mentioned my predecessor whom I am pleased to see back again after his wandering around the United Kingdom, as I am to see our new Minister for Labour who is back from his wandering in North America. Sir, the hon. Nominated Member mentioned that my predecessor said that he was going to allow them to move five bags of maize within a district without a permit. Well, I have looked into this and looked into his previous speeches in this House and I am afraid I cannot find any reference to it at all. But, Sir, the greater number of bags of maize that are moved outside the Control of the Maize Board means less money for the end product and less money for the producer. It means that greater charges have got to be borne by the marketing and the storage side. Now, Sir, the Maize Marketing Board did restrict maize to two bags without a permit within a district. I have appreciated this hardship and so have your Maize Marketing Board and you may now move five bags within a district without a permit. This will be gazetted shortly.

Now, Sir, whilst on maize I would like to say that the Maize Marketing Board is doing its utmost and I hope will succeed with next year's crop of getting the price of maize ex store down to a far lesser figure which will then enable us to see whether we cannot free the controlled price on maize meal or posho as it is more commonly known.

Now, Sir, Mr. Kebaso also touched on co-operatives and asked that the Registrar of Co-operatives could be given a greater degree of control for mismanagement. Mr. Deputy Speaker, we have under consideration in the Ministry an amendment to satisfy this point raised but I must say that in the short time that I have had co-operatives in the Ministry and the short time I have had, for looking at them, the misuse and embezzlement has not been as bad as I was originally led to believe and I think that it has been more ignorance and misunderstanding and I think that perhaps the remedy is by closer supervision, inspection and help by the co-operative officers. I appreciate we are very short of numbers on the ground and this I will be looking into. I do agree with the hon. Nominated Member and we have a nasty case on our hands at this very moment of mismanagement by a co-operative union.

Now, Sir, he also mentioned that there were tea estates in the Kericho area without, I think he said, a duka, without a store, I am told on investigation that every large estate has a store for every 500 acres and every estate in fact has a duka. But if he knows of one that has not I would be very grateful if he would give me the details. I am also told that all the tea estates who used to ration their people have now turned over to giving them extra money rather than rationing them and this may be causing them to use their money for other items rather than for food.

He made what I thought was a very good point about producer roads and I assure him that this will not be overlooked in our next development programme. He also mentioned difficulty which some tea producers were having in going through a short cut road which cuts their journey by something like eight miles. I have looked into this and hope to have discussions with my colleague, the Minister for Local Government, and the Nyanza County Council and the Nyanza Tea Board. He also raised a point on the Kisii Veterinary Farm. Now, Sir, I do not know if he appreciates that this farm is a livestock improvement farm mainly for selective breeding and is there to show the farmers in that area what good feeding and good management mean. Where we have been unfortunate is that we have not been able to use this improved feeding in South Nyanza for the reason that we have not been able to improve the standards of animal husbandry by the farmers in that area. For some reason they are not using sprays on their cattle and until they can raise the management of the animals I am afraid there is not much we can do other than to continue to try and educate them and help them along these lines. However, I am, Sir, hoping to do a trip to South Nyanza in July and I sincerely hope that the hon. Nominated Member will come round with me as I will hope the hon. Elected Member for that area will.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Central Province (North) and also the hon. Member for Machakos raised points on the Yatta and other grazing schemes. I think I am right in saying that they said the discipline and the grazing management and the stock reduction regulation in those areas were too severe and also that people required more explanations and training, less orders and less fines for disobedience. Now, Sir, both the areas mentioned by the hon. gentleman have at certain times over the last 40 years very nearly turned themselves into semi-desert because of over-stocking and misuse. Some day I sincerely hope that the two areas mentioned by them will in fact be taken care of by the people who graze those areas but until they appreciate the value of destocking and taking care of the land I am afraid that they will have to continue to have strict control and discipline. But I am pleased to say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that there has been a great improvement with the people in that area over the last two or three months and I am appreciative of a difficulty which was raised by my hon. friend, the Minister for Health, which I am looking into and I think perhaps it is the same case that both the other Members were referring to. I would like to remind the House that we have over the last four or five years spent a considerable amount of money in those areas. Something like £320,000 has been spent on the Yatta Furrow which has made such a great difference in the area. I think, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that it would be criminal at this stage if we abandoned our strict control in that area, especially as I feel that people who are grazing in that area are at long last beginning to appreciate what controlled grazing really means.

Now, the same hon. Member asked for improved water in the dry areas of his constituency and other areas as did the hon. Nominated Member. Mr. Kebaso, who asked for more water facilities to be available for people in South Nyanza who have got to walk a long way. Now, Sir, the right way—and I am not trying to get out of it here—to push for water supplies in an area is in the first instance to put the case forward to the district agricultural committee who then put it forward to the provincial agricultural committee and it is only then that it comes to the Ministry under the guise of ALDEV where we can look at it. If the points are raised in this House all that happens is that we push it down through the machinery back down to the district agricultural committee.

[The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources]

I am sure that if the hon. Members who raised these problems on water would in the first instance discuss it at their constituency level with the district agricultural committee they would find that things would move far quicker and then, if they get no movement or no assistance for what they want done, I think if they bring it to us in the Ministry we can then look into it with far greater activity. But in the first instance we have to push it back down to the district agricultural committee to have a look at it.

Now, Sir, both the hon. Member for Mombasa and the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Kebaso, mentioned the £5,000,000 grant from Her Majesty's Government. Now, obviously this was a misunderstanding and I think I have already covered this earlier in this debate but what I would ask them to do is to read the development programme for 1960-63 and I think they will find there a figure of £550,000 which is available for all areas from Nyanza to the Coast.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Mombasa raised numerous points on the Coast, most of which, I think, have been answered by the Director of Agriculture, so I do not think I need go into them any further.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Central Rift, who I see is not here this afternoon, spoke at length on agriculture both in the Budget debate and in the Estimates, and I appreciate the great interest which he is taking in agriculture. A number of the points which he raised were also raised by the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Ntimama, and I appreciate, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the worries they have on artificial insemination and measles, but measles is, in fact, a scourge right the way through the central belt of Africa and perhaps it is even more widespread in countries like South Sudan, Ethiopia, and the Congo, than it is even with us. All those countries are actively engaged on veterinary research on measles as we are in this country, and the Kenya Meat Commission themselves have granted us a large sum of money over the next financial period to go ahead with more intensified experimental work on measles. He also mentioned other stock diseases which I covered in my reply in the Budget debate, but I am afraid he was not here. Oh, he has just come in. He also raised the point about dams which ran out of water and dried up in the dry weather. I think he fully appreciates, as I do, that a lot of the trouble is the difficulty in the soil in the Masai land, and most of those dams hold water in the rains but quickly seep away during the dry weather. He also mentioned ghee, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and he again mentioned improved blood for the Masai stock. Now, we have available at Ngong Sahiwal blood but the demand from the Masai has been very disappointing. The only people who have responded to this are the Masai who have begun to settle in one place. Those Masai who move about nomadically from place to place do not seem to be over-interested in improving their blood. Also it would be most difficult to collect ghee from the Masai, or those of them who are still nomads, moving from place to place. Maybe the answer is a co-operative ranch, and this is a point which I would like to discuss with the hon. Member at a later stage. He also, as did another hon. Member, asked what amount of ALDEV money was spent on stockholdings over the past five years. The amount was £425,000 on water, veterinary services and agriculture over the last 10 years. Over and above that, as I said in my Budget reply, there are the normal facilities given by the Veterinary Department and the Agricultural Department.

He also asked about the qualifications and terms and differences between assistant veterinary officers and livestock officers. I am told, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as a result of representations made by two assistant veterinary officers the Director of Veterinary Services and the Director of Establishments held a discussion with them and the present position, I am told, has been fully explained to the assistant veterinary officers. But, Sir, I am, and have been, concerned about these assistant veterinary officers, and I am pleased to say that we have now been able to send one of them to a university in Australia where we hope he will return with a veterinary degree, and whilst in the States I had a discussion with I.C.A., and they have agreed to find two vacancies for us in an American university where two further assistant veterinary officers can go to complete their training for a degree. I also hope, arising out of the discussions I had both in Washington and in the United Kingdom, that we will be able to send two to three assistant veterinary officers, or officers of good enough calibre, to universities to train as veterinary officers.

He also raised the point that it was important that all unused land, whether occupied or unoccupied, should be developed to its utmost, and I entirely agree with him on this, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and I am in the very near future laying a Paper in this House on all the unused and under-used land in the Colony. If he is as interested as he said he was then perhaps he could initiate a debate on it. But I must bring it to the notice of the hon. Member, as I would like to bring it to the notice of many hon. Members opposite, that there is a lot of land lying unused and little used in what has up to now been known as the African Land Units. He fully knows, Sir, that I am going to tell him about one which is the Mau area of Masai land. This is excellent mixed farm land and it has only been used periodically by cattle and sheep until now. A lot of it is also excellent tea land. Now, Sir, there are hon. Members opposite who know the Luo land of South Nyanza. There is a lot of land we value which the Luo are not using but which they will not let other people use. Then, Sir, we move to the Meru District where there is more good land lying idle than the Meru can use, including here again perhaps some of the finest tea land in the world. Fourthly, Sir, we have the D areas which are also lying unused.

Now, Sir, I have been much impressed with the way in which the hon. Member has come into both the debates on the Budget and on the Estimates, and I sincerely hope that I read this as an awakening of the Masai people with that they are going to take a far greater interest in agriculture in the future, this being so—and I hope that I have interpreted the great interest of the hon. Member correctly—I intend, just as soon as I can, doing a trip right the way through the Masai areas to see just how we can help them in developing their part of the Colony, and I sincerely hope that both he and Mr. Ntimama will be prepared to join me on that safari to co-operate and see what we can do for the Masai, whom my Ministry would be only too pleased to help to the utmost.

The hon. Member for Aberdare—wait a bit, he is out at the moment. Perhaps I had better move on to—oh, he is not here, either. With your permission, Sir, I will go back to the hon. Member for Aberdare. He mentioned rain-making. Now, the East African Meteorological Department are going into the whole of the aspect of rain-making far more fully in this coming year. At this present moment there is an officer in Italy who is going into the workings not only of seeding clouds from aircraft but seeding them by rocket from the ground. While he is in Italy he is also going into ways and means, in which the Italians are very advanced, of hail protection by the same method. I am sorry, Sir, but some of my details in my opening speech were confusing, or so the hon. Member for Aberdare said, and I sincerely hope that when he reads HANSARD he will find them less confusing.

Now, Sir, he did raise numerous points on compensation, resettlement—and the financial cushion, and said how frightened people were, but the main point he raised was why I had been hasty in bringing forward this scheme prior to Sessional Paper No. 10. Well, Sir, the reason why I brought it forward was to give me elbow room and to give my Ministry elbow room in having discussions with all those who are interested in the scheme and who have ideas on the scheme. But I think it is only right that when one is setting in being or starting something which is completely new the first people who ought to hear about it once we have some ideas are the hon. Members of this House.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Nyanza Central maintained that the aggregate of production of African farming was many times greater than production from other areas. We have gone to a lot of trouble in getting out figures and the figures are as follows: Africans' subsistence farming amounted to about £51,000,000, of which the cash crop production was £9,000,000. Other areas provided £33,000,000 worth, of which £21,000,000 were exported. Now, Sir, it is true that greater production actually came out of the African areas but when you compare the amounts which were exportable and exported to help the national economy then, Sir, it is noticeable that other areas produced £21,000,000 as against £9,000,000 from African areas. The hon. Member well knows, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Government is planning to expand African agriculture just as fast as we can to help the national economy, even though we have opposition from such Members as himself when we are trying to get through a Bill for £2,000,000 to help African agriculture. So it is beyond me why he raised this question. With one breath he was saying that we did not spend enough on African agriculture and with the next breath he was busy opposing a Bill for borrowing £2,000,000 to help African production.

He also challenged the statement on Government's large investment in peasant agriculture. Now, under the Swynnerton Plan, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we have spent about £11,000,000 over the last six years, and if he would care to read the next Development Programme, 1960-63, he will see that the gross estimated expenditure is £7,300,000, of which over £5,000,000 will be spent on African agriculture.

Now, Sir, the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Ahmed Farah, raised a point and said that the Northern Province, in his opinion, had been neglected in the way of development. Well, Sir, when I went back to my Ministry one of the evenings after a debate in the House when he raised this, I was much upset about this because I know that we have in the Northern Province spent a great deal of money on development. So officers in my Ministry did an exercise very thoroughly to work out just what we have spent on the Northern Province, and I would like to ask hon. Members that before they quote and make these statements they go into it more carefully, and just to show the House the amount of money and how well treated the Northern Province has been I would like to give some of these figures. Dealing first of all with water, in the period 1950 to 1957 £392,000 was spent on the Dixey Scheme alone, and some 20 boreholes were drilled and equipped by consulting engineers; over and above that the Land Development Board spent £28,000 on water improvements in the Province from 1956 to 1959. Altogether, taking into account the Dixey Scheme and other works undertaken by the Ministry of Works and ALDEV, over the nine-year period 1950/1959, £425,000 was spent on rural water supplies in the Northern Province and another £55,000 was spent on public water supplies. Now, Sir, in roughly the corresponding period, in fact a period four years greater, in the other five provinces added together, only £563,000 was spent on rural water, and the Ministry of Works spent £650,000, which goes to show, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the Northern Province as a Province had far more money spent on water than any other province and in fact more than any other two provinces, and over and above that nearly all the money spent on water in the Northern Province was in the way of grant money whereas most of the money spent in the other provinces was on a repayment basis or on a £ for £ basis with the local district council. Now, Sir, in the development period 1960-63 a further amount of £90,900 has been scheduled for expenditure on rural and public water supplies in the Province.

Now, Sir, turning to livestock matters in the Northern Province, the hon. Member said that ALMO was considered as a Government monopoly, and perhaps it would be easier for me if I dealt with this in two parts, first of all the stock trade at Isiolo and, secondly, the stock route starting from Garissa to Mombasa. Now, at Isiolo, what happens is that the internal traders who buy cattle all over the Province bring them to Isiolo where they resell them to ALMO. They are not allowed to sell outside the Northern Province for a simple reason, and that reason is the disease factor of cattle from that area. We know that rinderpest is widespread in the Northern Province area which centres on Isiolo, and we also know that there are two types of foot-and-mouth disease, for one of which no inoculation is available, namely S.A.T., type 2, and it is because of those disease factors that we are not prepared to allow traders to bring their stock out of that part of the Northern Province into the main livestock industry areas of Central Province and the Rift. Now, Sir, despite all this and despite all the great difficulties we have had with disease in that area over the last year, some 19,600 odd head were sold in Isiolo in 1959, and it is my belief, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the Northern Province stockowners get far better prices for their cattle under this system than they would under any other.

Then, Sir, what happens at the Garissa end where the disease is not nearly so great? There is a large stock trade and movement of stock from Garissa by individual traders down the coast stock route into Mombasa where the cattle are sold by the stock trader to the Kenya Meat Commission, and over last year something like a little over 1,000 head per month were moved down that stock route, and ALMO does not enter into that business at all.

Now, Sir, a vast amount of money is spent by Government in maintaining and improving the stock route from Garissa down to Mombasa and the amount spent over the last year was £17,500 on that stock route. Now, Sir, also £19,200 were spent in the running costs of the Isiolo trade, and over and above that, neither for the Garissa-Mombasa stock route north or the Isiolo trade, were the salaries of the six European officers included.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for Machakos brought up the Yatta grazing scheme which I think I have covered, but he also raised the point with reference to people having to lose their homes and not being paid any of the expense towards it. This point was also raised when I was down in the Machakos area last week and I am looking into it.

The hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Smith, raised points on seed wheat and barley seed, but the Press has beaten me to it and answered the questions for him.

The hon. Member for Nyanza, Mrs. Shaw, asked for an assurance that no small farm scheme would be set in motion until Sessional Paper No. 10 had been debated, and I think that I have answered that point in saying that it will not and that in any case legislation will have to be debated in September or October. She also raised a point on sugar and I am happy to be able to tell her that one of the main stumbling blocks to an American concern's putting money into her area for sugar development has been removed and has been agreed upon by the Colonial Office, so now the next move is with that firm to come back and do a survey, I hope in the near future.

The hon. Member for Rift Valley raised a point on the D areas in connexion with Mr. Sam Horden's visit last year. I would like him to know that a committee was set up by me which went and took Mr. Horden round these areas and has since gathered a lot of detailed information on the area. I gather that they are meeting again in this coming week and I sincerely hope that the information which we have managed to collect will be given to the Settlement Board who will be able to take an interest now in the D areas.

The Member for Nyanza North raised a point on Northern Province water, which I have already covered, but I was very interested in what he had to say about Israel and especially on the co-operatives and the methods of running co-operatives in that area. I was also interested in what he had to say about mechanized communal farming and sincerely hope that he will take the opportunity of putting me more in the picture so that we can have a look at this method of helping group the farmers.

The hon. Member for the Coast, Mr. Deputy Speaker, said that he was the owner of a small high potential farm and all that happened was that he lost £500 a year. Well, Sir, I would say that that only goes to prove that farming is a profession, a hard profession, and needs the master's foot continually. He also went on to say that he had no aid from the Agricultural Department. Well, Sir, I wonder if he has ever asked for any aid from the Agricultural Department?

Mr. Cooke: Yes.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): I intend having a discussion with the officers concerned in his area and I sincerely hope when they do visit him they will find him at home. That will happen perhaps after we have risen.

Sir, the hon. Member for Nairobi North—I am afraid his speech was beyond me. Not only did I take great care in getting a copy of his HANSARD and reading it on Sunday to try to find out just what he was after, but I am afraid it was beyond me, because only a matter of five or six days ago in this House he was slanging the Americans and the United States for being the fathers of all evils that we had to contend with, and when he started his speech I thought perhaps that he was going to talk to us in the same strain. I could not make out whether he had in mind a seaplane base or perhaps a U.2 base but eventually he got on to the Tana and great irrigation schemes and a series of dams and then ended up by saying that he was only telling me this for my own interest because in any case he was going to take it to the United States Government to go into and to do because we had failed as a Government. Well, Sir, all I can do is to wish him all the very best in his trip to the States and I hope that they have read his second speech before they read his first speech.

Sir, the hon. Dr. Hassan raised many interesting points, but his most interesting point was on the Masai country, and I do congratulate him this time for not raising any matters on the Kenya Meat Commission—I think that the Kenya Meat Commission is serving the country exceptionally well. He raised an interesting point that we ought to open the Masai country to traders—amongst others, Asian traders and merchants; they would help the Masai and teach them how to make money. Well, unfortunately the hon. Member for Central Rift was not here at the time but I will take an opportunity of telling him of this idea and perhaps he can discuss it with his African district council. I shall also discuss it when I go to Masai country on my safari which I hope to do in the very future.

He raised a point about Asian vets, and I, too, Mr. Deputy Speaker, am sorry that we do not seem to have the Asian youth coming forward today and interesting himself in this profession, but I am pleased to say that we have two young Asians at Makerere at this moment doing agriculture, both of whom are keen to come back into service in Kenya, and I think that during the answering of a lot of hon. Members' points I have covered the other point which he raised in his most interesting speech.

Sir, another hon. Member—I cannot remember who it was—raised a point by asking how the Asians and Europeans for any settlement scheme were going to be vetted. This was after I had said that the Administration would vet the Africans coming forward from the Central Province. There is some machinery operating at the moment for both Asians and Europeans to be vetted by the Settlement Board and they will be vetted as normal settlers coming through the settlement machine.

I will look into the cotton matter which he raised; I am afraid that I cannot answer off the cuff. I was pleased to hear what he had to say about maize and maize control and I have already covered that point by saying that we will perhaps be able when this next crop comes in to see if we cannot have a set price—a controlled price, ex store—and look at the price of posho.

Now, Sir, perhaps the most interesting speech which we had in the whole of the three days' debate was from the hon. Nominated Member Col. Jackman. It was the only speech which was on pure agriculture, and I took a very great interest in it and would like to thank him very greatly for it, I hope every hon. Member will read it in HANSARD because there were hardly any people in the House when he spoke.

Sir, there were points raised by the hon. Member for Mount Kenya. I think I have covered most of the points he raised except the one point which he kept on referring to which was that a working part was promised at the Lancaster House Conference. Now, Sir, I have gone into this most carefully and I have read everything that I have been able to lay my hands on from Lancaster House, and I have had other hon. Members of the House helping me on this one. Nowhere can I find where an agreement was made as he said for any working party to be set up, and I wonder whom he actually saw, where he actually got his information from. I am led to believe that perhaps he got it from discussions which he may have had with officials of the Colonial Office or perhaps the Secretary of State himself, but nowhere in the White Paper or any of the reports coming out of Lancaster House are any references to a working party being set up.

There was a very interesting point raised by the hon. Nominated Member Commander Goord on the Land Bank, and I will bring this to the notice of, and have discussions with, the Minister for Finance and Development on it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, points were raised by the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade. I would first of all like to thank him for the kind words he said about personnel in my department because there were words which are well deserved by them. He asked me whether the Kenya National Farmers' Union discussions in England were of any help to me, and I think I have already answered that one by saying that they were.

He also put forward the idea that the new Settlement Board could eventually turn itself into a big buyer which could buy developed land as well as undeveloped land and resell it. Now, I was much interested and must taken with his speech, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and it is my intention to see and have discussions with the Board of Agriculture and the Settlement board and within my Ministry to see how we can move to broaden the whole of our scheme to try to fit into the views he put forward, in other words, increasing and broadening the scheme both in scope and in money; and with this in mind I had a discussion with Mr. Black, the President of the World Bank, when he was here and he said that he saw no reason at all why if our original scheme was economic and going to work well that we cannot at that stage approach international financial authorities again with a view to obtaining far greater amounts of money. But he did advise us in the first instance to get moving just as quick as we could on our pilot scheme because that part of the pilot scheme would be of great value and benefit to us in putting forward a much bigger and better scheme. He gave me instances of where I.B.R.D. have invested small sums in agriculture in other countries and then followed it up with ever-increasing and bigger and broader schemes; and that is what we in the Ministry in conjunction with orders, now that the scheme has been publicized, will do our utmost to do.

Sir, the hon. Member for Ukambani raised numerous points, of which I think I have covered most during my reply. I apologize again if in my original speech I was not quite clear in saying that the main project I was talking about was the pilot scheme of round about 50 acres, and I hope that this point has now been covered. But what did amuse me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, was that he did talk about what came first, the marriage or the child, and I could not quite make out who was going to marry who and what was going to marry what, and whether the child was going to be a non-racial one, but I do hope to have the opportunity of discussing this with him at a later stage.

He also said that the scheme was being hurried and needed the closest attention of my officers, the staff of the Agricultural Department, and mainly the provincial agricultural officers would have to deal with it on the ground. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I quite agree with him on this, and that is one of the reasons why we wanted this scheme mentioned, so that we could have discussions with agricultural subcommittees, agricultural committees and with various farmers who are only too pleased to be helpful in co-operating in such a scheme. But I can give him an assurance that we have the months ahead before the debate on the legislation which has come out of Sessional Paper No. 10 and we will use that time for the closest of co-operation and discussion with all those who will be interested in it, and I sincerely hope that it will not be a groundnut fiasco, I think that by raising it in this House it will not have the opportunity now of being a groundnut fiasco, not if I know some of the Members opposite.

One other point, Sir, Quite a lot of time was taken up by hon. Members opposite in cross debate, and I do not think I need enter into that just at the moment.

The hon. Member for Trans Nzoi—he is not here—how lucky he is to be able to farm. I see that he said I should not have gone to London, and he suggested I should have let the Kenya National Farmers' Union go and do it alone. Well, Sir, I do not know. Perhaps he is right, but perhaps he is not right. But all I can say is that we are making a start on it. We have been able to get some money. We have been told that if we can get on with the scheme and show it is an economic scheme, that within reason international money is wide open for us if we can make a success of it, and I would have thought that as a start we have done quite well.

He mentioned—a point which was beyond me—that the Kenya National Farmers' Union had done a great deal of work, and I think his exact words were "for the preparation of detailed plans for farm purchase, etc." Well, Sir, I do not know what he means by "etc." and I am afraid I know nothing of detailed plans which the Kenya National Farmers' Union have made in preparation for a scheme of actual farm purchase. Perhaps he would be able to let me have a copy of what he must, I presume, have available to him.

He also, Sir, touched on the Working Party, and said that I had had no mandate to have discussions myself, and that it is the Working Party that should have done it. I think I have covered the point on the Working Party, as I cannot find anything in the Lancaster House White Paper or on the Lancaster House papers on it.

Now, Sir, the hon. Member for the Rift Valley mentioned the tea areas. I think I touched on it earlier on to say that the Committee which was set up last year, and which had the opportunity of taking Mr. Holden and an interested New Zealand concern and a Pakistani concern around these areas, is shortly due to have its last meeting. I sincerely hope that what will come out of the meeting is that this matter will now be handed over to the new Settlement Authority to see what they can do about it.

Sir, he also mentioned in high potential areas gorges, murrum, rough stone, escarpments, and said it would be stupid of us to break up that kind of high potential land into 50 acre plots. Well, Sir, I would have thought that the hon. Member would have had plenty of opportunity to know how the Department of Agriculture operates, and even if the Department is stupid enough, as I very much doubt, to break that type of land up, I am certain that a Settlement Board made up of the personnel who I know are on it, would not be so stupid, so I do not think he need have any fear on that one.

Sir, I believe he accused me of having "thrown a spanner in the works somewhere or other". I am having my legal adviser look at the gambling bet which he said he would like to take on with me, and I hope that perhaps I will be able to take him on on it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to move.

The question was put and carried.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) left the Chair]

IN THE COMMITTEE

[D. W. Conroy, Esq., O.B.E., T.D., Q.C., in the Chair]

VOTE 21 MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, ANIMAL HUSBANDRY AND WATER RESOURCES

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I beg to move that a sum not exceeding £1,641,560 be granted to the Governor to defray the charge which will come in course of payment for the year ending 30th June, 1961, for Vote 21—Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources.

Question proposed.

PERSONAL EMOLUMENTS

Head A1—Office of the Minister

Mr. Blundell (Specially Elected Member): Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise on this item certain aspects which arise out of these Estimates. I wonder whether there is point in this House in discussing item by item the agricultural estimates unless we create the condition of stability which will ensure the expansion and development of agriculture, and I was disturbed over the weekend—and my hon. friend the Minister has already touched on it—at some of the statements which were made as a result of, or at the Kenya African National Union Conference. I have here a report, taken from the wireless news broadcast on the conference, which says that the conference also considers that the Kenya Government should do nothing further about land and the whole question should be left in abeyance until Kenya was fully independent. It further stated that the newly appointed General Secretary of the National Union, the hon. Member for Nairobi Area, explained later that this meant that any future Government would not be committed to anything done or entered into now by the present Government.

Now I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, from hon. Members in this House, whether that, in effect, means that the hon. Minister should arrest the plans which we have had put before us for the development or the settlement of African farmers in suitable areas, because if the actions of this Government are going to be questioned by successive Governments, we have to consider whether indeed it is worth our while to proceed at all in this matter. I am anxious because it might well be that African farmers settled under this scheme—it might be, if I interpreted this statement correctly—might well be dispossessed of their land titles should an independent Government with these ideas come into being [Mr. Blundell] in this country. And my fears in this respect were not allayed by some further remarks which were made by Mr. James Gichuru, who said, I quote from the wireless: "Nobody is going to interfere except on the question of land, of course, and we have passed a resolution on it. We have said before and we feel that the Government should not interfere with land at the moment until such time as the Africans are in power." Now, Sir, I think that the issue we really have to face is the issue of respect for private property, and we must assess in our minds, and we should seek enlightenment from those hon. Members of the Council who were present, whether the intention of these statements was, in effect, designed to lead towards the dispossession, or removal of rights in private property. I would submit to this House that statements of this nature must directly undermine the confidence of the agricultural industry, and the confidence of the investor in this country, and it is well for the Members of this House, if they are responsible Members, to do their utmost to clear out of the way any lack of confidence which may have been engendered—indeed, not may have been engendered, has been engendered—over the week-end by these statements.

Now, the hon. Minister referred to hesitancy in the attitude of some of the great tea companies in the investment of capital in this country. I know that, Sir, to be true myself, for a fact, as I too have been approached by some of them. On Friday last I met a man who asked my advice on whether he should invest in the agricultural industry of this country, closely associated with commerce and industry in this particular branch of agriculture the sum of £2,000,000, and I have promised to give him an answer sometime within a fortnight, and I do ask hon. Members, in the light of these statements, which have been made, what answer I am to give that man? The investment of £2,000,000 in the agricultural industry of this country must be tremendous projector of the economy of this country and the provider of employment at a time when we badly need it. What we have to decide is whether in the light of these statements—and hon. Members who were present when these statements were made must also decide—whether that man is wise to put into this country those £2,000,000. It is not only the overseas investor who is affected in this matter. If the actions of the present Government are to be questioned in the future by an ensuing Government, for emotional purposes, then, Sir, we must legitimately ask ourselves whether those Kipsigis, for instance, who have been induced by the present Government rightly in my view, to develop the Kimulot area for tea, whether they were wise to do so, and whether their land entitlement will be respected in the future if the actions of this Government are to be called in question. We not only need to cast our eyes at Kimulot, we should examine the resettlement expansion which was initiated during the time of my predecessor and myself in the Nandi area at Sorora where we have a number of African farmers now on individual holdings with 20 acres. And nearer home, but in a different area, we should also concern ourselves strongly with whether we are right to have embarked on the Makueni settlement scheme in an effort to help those many people in the Kamba country, who have given such loyal service to this country in the police and the King's African Rifles, because that is, in effect, the doubts and worries which these statements are creating in the minds of the people of this country. And I raise it here, Sir, because it makes me wonder, what purpose there is in debating these Estimates.

Finally, Sir, recently in London a number of us accepted substantial advances in the political development of this country, and we did so on two assumptions. The first assumption was that on our return to this country we should all of us do our utmost to generate the goodwill which would create or begin to create homogenous thought in a country of such divergent opinions. And secondly, Sir, the many people, at any rate with whom I associated, accepted this on the clear understanding that the rights of individual property in an evolutionary and political advance in this country would be clearly respected. Now these words which I have quoted may not have been meant, as I think they may well be interpreted, and I would like hon. Members who were associated with that meeting to clearly say what they have in mind by these words, and I would like finally, Sir, to ask the Chief Secretary whether the Government firmly supports the views which were expressed in London as to respect for private property, is wholeheartedly behind it, and will take no steps in the future in planning our advance and evolution, which will endanger the confidence of the individual property owner in this country.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I think I ought to intervene at this point in order to make Government's position quite clear on the points which have been raised by the hon. Member.

He first of all wanted to know whether the Minister was going to arrest the plans which he put forward in the earlier part of the debate on the agricultural estimates. I would like to state quite categorically that neither the Minister nor the Government has any intention of arresting the plans which he put forward. Nor have we any intention of holding up the debate on Sessional

[The Chief Secretary] Paper No. 10, which is the one dealing with Government's land policies, and which will have to be debated fully in this House before the end of this sitting, and from which legislation necessary to put into effect the plans which the hon. Minister has put before this House will flow.

Turning now to the Government's views on what the hon. Member has said, I would like to refer hon. Members to the report on the Lancaster House Conference, and the agreements which flowed from it, and I would draw hon. Members' attention to paragraph 20 of that report under the heading of "Safeguards", and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote this from the report as it is now in our hands. "In this section of the Constitution Her Majesty's Government considers it important to include the protection of property rights. Only by this means will it be possible to maintain confidence and to encourage development and investment, including the attraction of overseas capital, not only in the immediate future, but also in the long term. Accordingly, Her Majesty's Government think it right to include provisions founded on the principle that these should be no expropriation of property except to fulfil contractual or other legal obligations on the owner, or for purposes for the benefit of the country, due regard being paid to human need and individual hardship, confidence, stability and advantage to the country's economy. Full and fair compensation should be given to the owner of any property expropriated, together with the right of recourse to the courts, including the normal channels of appeal, for the judicial determination of his rights, and of the amount of compensation to be paid to him." Sir, I think that puts very clearly, certainly Her Majesty's Government's position in this matter, and I would like to say it is certainly entirely the view of this Government at this present time.

Also, I would like to point out in all fairness, that this was the Secretary of State's own personal opinion, and he says at the end of that particular statement, "I do not ask the various groups specifically to accept or approve what I have said," but nevertheless, this was, as we have all been told since the various delegates returned from the United Kingdom, an agreement which people have, in fact, agreed to, and within that agreement there is this particular statement.

I would also like to draw hon. Members' attention to a speech which was made in this House by the Minister for Commerce and Industry in the main debate on the Budget, when he said the following words, and again, I quote: "In my short time as Minister for Commerce and Industry, I have actually seen much desire on the part of investors, both foreign and local, to participate in the building up of the economy and to have the Africans taking an increasing part in that process. It is therefore up to us to demonstrate by our attitude and actions that we will make this process possible, and indeed that we shall give encouragement to those who are willing to help us increase the prosperity of the country and raise the standard of living of the people." That, Sir, is the Government's policy, and it also, you will note, came from the African Minister for Commerce and Industry.

I agree, Sir, with the hon. Member when he says that it is necessary to raise this question of sanctity of title, more particularly because if people are going to invest in this country, and the hon. Member has mentioned certain people who have talked to him about investments, then surely sanctity of title is paramount, otherwise people are not going to invest in this country. We also, on this side of the House, are concerned about statements which have been made. We also feel that we were right in going ahead with the particular schemes which the hon. Member has mentioned, such as Makueni and Kimulo.

We also think that we should go ahead with similar schemes in the belief that people would not ruin the economy of this country by making statements of this nature in such a way as to make investors believe that, in fact, there will be no sanctity of title, and I would hope that hon. Members on the other side of the House, will make it quite plain that they agree with these views.

Furthermore, the Government has considered this matter since the week-end, and we have decided that we should seek the views of the African Elected Members, particularly on this matter, and have asked that we should have an early meeting with them in order to discuss this particular point with them.

With these words, Mr. Chairman, I hope we have made the Government's position clear.

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to intervene in this debate at all until the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Blundell, raised these various points, and especially to the statements made by myself, the Kenya African National Union, and Mr. Gichuru.

First, I would like to say this. In part of his speech Mr. Blundell, the Specially Elected Member, referred to the rights of the Kipsigis, the Nandi and so on. My humble observation is that this is merely a statement made for political propaganda purposes. The Kipsigis, the Masai, the Nandi, or any other tribe he mentioned are not involved at all in the question of land as a bone of contention between the African and the [Mr. Mboya] European settlers. It has never been the case, and we regret that some people wish to create divisions, conflict and tribal feelings among the Africans by trying to use this cheap sort of propaganda, so that I would like to make this as a very definite statement from not only myself, but the African people, that the question of these other African tribes or areas has never been involved in the land issue between the peoples of this country, and our various African people must not fall victims to this sort of propaganda, that is entirely engineered for political motives.

Now, Sir, the point has been raised about goodwill as the basis of the agreement or the constitution at the Lancaster House Conference. We have never made a secret of the fact that we entirely agree that there should be goodwill, and that we intend to work for it, not only on our own but also with the other people in this country. But perhaps the various leaders of the various communities should appreciate that goodwill is not intended to be at the expense of any one particular community in this country. It should not be used merely to try and stifle African just and fair demands.

Now, Sir, the land issue is an old issue. It has been a bone of contention in this country for many years. It has been the subject of many debates in this House. It has been the subject of a lot of representation by the African communities. It has been the subject, in fact, of a Royal Commission, and lately a White Paper has been issued. We do not intend to scare away investment of capital. In fact we do not intend to persuade anyone from investing further in the development of this country. On the contrary, we have been keen to appreciate the need for increased and expanded industries, and we have been keen to try and create the conditions and circumstances that will permit that development.

The main issue, it would appear, on which the hon. Specially Elected Member bases his entire argument is as to whether or not this Government can commit future Governments in this country, and I would like to submit, Sir, that not only on the land question, but on practically every other issue discussed in this House, this Government cannot—and if anybody believes in democracy at all they must accept it—this Government cannot and could not commit a future Government permanently on any issue, and the mere fact that some of us reiterate this point to emphasize the fact that there will be freedom of action for a future Government to act, not only on the land question, but on every other issue, does not mean a departure from the normally accepted concepts of democratic Government. I do not know whether the Specially Elected Member or the Kenya Government expects the African community and their leaders to submit to any situation in which we were, as it were, to appear to commit our community, or anybody else permanently on any issue. Whether we were to pretend to commit them, to commit those future Governments, we could not possibly do it. Physically some of us may not be there to ensure that such commitments or guarantee is adhered to, but I would consider it the highest state of deception to give to the immigrant communities in this country, as it were, what they might interpret permanent guarantees for all time. Situations may change, and if they do we would be guided by certain principles that for the time being are universally accepted, not only by us, but also by people in other countries.

In the quotation which the Chief Secretary has referred to, I think the issue is made very clear by the Colonial Secretary's own notes in the Lancaster House discussions. He does not rule out the possibility of land reforms in this country, and land reforms in this country may be for certain specific purposes, and may be based on an attempt to meet various situations as they may arise from time to time. What is important is the principle that has been accepted, not only at Lancaster House, but essentially by us when we advocated the introduction of a Bill of Rights, namely that if there were to be a situation, and there may very well be, in which property rights, or in which property as such, is expropriated, or changes hands, that such change or expropriation will be based on a just a fair compensation, and that it will be based on what may be in the interests of the community or country. There is clearly room for some reforms to take place. I do not think this is the right time to go into the details as to what reforms may take place, but clearly that was understood. Now if the hon. Specially Elected Member understood it differently we are not to blame. The question of whether land should be discussed in London was a point which was discussed for over a week, and the African Members insisted, as indeed they still believe they were right to do, that the land question could not and would not be discussed at the Lancaster House Conference, and it was not discussed. There was a deadlock on this question for about a week, and therefore I cannot understand why anyone should misunderstand the African leaders position on this particular question.

We are not suggesting that anybody is going to be victimized, but we are saying clearly and emphasizing clearly the rights of any of our future Governments to ask, within what is just and fair and consistent with the interests, not only of one

[Mr. Mboya] community, but of all the people, if those interests should require that sudden steps should be taken which include changes or reforms in land, I do not think this Government is competent to make it impossible for future Governments to take that future position.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, it is encouraging to know that the Government has asked for a meeting with the African Elected Members in order to know their views on this question. May I suggest that as usual the Government has probably acted after things have blown up. It would, perhaps, have been wiser to have had those discussions before the announcement was made, because I am sure that Government could not have been unaware that any major statement on land would not only raise certain very urgent questions in the minds of the African community, but also in the minds of other communities. Perhaps what is missing here is enough consultation in advance on some of these things and foresight and a realistic approach on, after all, problems which everybody admits are of major interest and concern to all our communities.

I do not wish to refer to other points made about political stability and about assurances that the hon. Specially Elected Member referred to. But I do want to say this very emphatically. The African leaders are aware of the needs of this country. They are aware of the importance of encouraging development and investment. But the African leaders are also entitled to point out that their own community have certain interests and that those interests must at the same time be recognized and respected. If and when we meet the Government and they wish to know in more detail our views on the detailed aspects of the land problem, we will, of course, be only too glad to help them.

Mr. Slade: Mr. Chairman, Sir, in his long and eloquent speech, the hon. Member for Nairobi Area has completely and, I suppose, deliberately failed to answer the one clear question which was raised by my hon. colleague on my right. That is, how can he reconcile statements such as those quoted by my hon. colleague with a sincere desire for the peaceful development and prosperity of this country?

Let me just read again the passages that were quoted: "The Conference also considered that the Kenya Government should do nothing whatever about land and that the whole question should be left in abeyance until Kenya was fully independent. The newly appointed General Secretary of the National Union, Mr. Mboya, explained later that this meant that any future African Government would not be committed to anything, done or entered into now, by the present Government."

Mr. Chairman, we all want to move towards our independence. I believe all those who we represent want independence in a state of peace and prosperity. All we have to consider in this or any other matter in this Council, is how to achieve independence with peace and prosperity, and we must recognize all the time that, however much it may attract some political leaders, for those for whom we are responsible independence without peace and prosperity can be a nightmare. It is a very easy choice, Sir. We can, if we put our minds to it, with real goodwill, sincere goodwill, build up peace and prosperity in anticipation of independence, so that the job is easy for those who then have the great responsibility. I do not envy those who have the responsibility of governing an independent Kenya if peace and prosperity have been destroyed meanwhile. But, Sir, if we are going to say that until we have independence no promise made by this Government to anybody will be worth anything because it will be repudiated the moment we are independent, what hope have we of arriving at independence in any state of peace and prosperity?

Well, Sir, the hon. Member for Nairobi Area has professed several times during his speech the intense desire he and his colleagues have to build up the peace and prosperity of this country, and their clear appreciation of their need for that. Well, let him prove it by words. Let them all prove it by their words. If they really mean that, this is not the way to set about it. It is an easy choice. If you want the kind of independence that is really what the people of this country want, and you face the need to build up for it, you behave accordingly.

Or you want independence now, for what purpose other than sheer political ambition? Hon. Members cannot have it both ways. They cannot say in this Council or outside in speeches like this, on the one hand we realize our responsibility and we are going to act accordingly say to the people what is the truth as regards the future of this country and what will make a happy independence—and at the same time make utterances like this, which are calculated only to appeal to the extremists and irresponsible people of this country and ruin the rest.

Mr. Odinga: Mr. Chairman, Sir, I was hesitant to speak on this because I felt that the hon. Member who moved it should have just moved a Special Motion, because it is a very, very important subject which needs a little bit longer time to discuss, extensively and more in detail. But I think that people are just trying to beat about the bush. It is better to make it quite clear that the present Government, apart from being the agents

[Mr. Odunga] of imperialism, it is not a popular government, elected by the people and as such anything which it does at the present moment is subject to a lot of queries when the popular government comes into force. Again I should just say that one word again. The African people are not going to sacrifice what they consider to be their rights for the sake of or for trying to make room for the capital to come to this country. We have an old saying that: "It is he who has prepared his garden who longs for the rains that the rains should come quickly, but he who has not prepared his garden, he only wishes that the rains should delay a little bit longer."

Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

The Minister for Information and Broadcasting (Mr. Harris): Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that on two or three occasions recently I have crossed swords with the last hon. Member who has just spoken. I cannot believe, Sir, that a responsible leader of the African people can stand up and say that the Africans will make no sacrifice in order to make room for investment capital from overseas, which was the tenor of what he said. I cannot believe, Sir, that he is reflecting the opinion of the thinking members of his race, because, Sir, without investment capital overseas, the independence for which the hon. Member is so desirous is going not only to be a terrible thing but it will swallow him up with complete certainty.

Mr. Mundell: Mr. Chairman, I raise this matter at this juncture because these events took place over the week-end and they have disturbed the minds of the investing public very considerably and I thought it was well that hon. Members should indicate to the public how they stood in these matters.

Now, Sir, I should like to congratulate the hon. the Chief Secretary on his reply, in particular I would like to congratulate the Minister for Commerce and Industry, whom I now have the pleasure of seeing for the first time with his new responsibilities, and I would like to congratulate him on what he said when he was indicating the necessity for encouraging investment in this country the other day and I have no doubt that he made the same remarks to the Conference of KANU if he was present at it.

Secondly, Sir, I believe the Government is right to go ahead with its scheme for individual development for African farmers and I would only suggest that the Government would be wise when so doing to make sure that those farmers do understand the validity and compass of individual title.

Lastly, Sir, I would like to assure the hon. Member for Nairobi Area that I did not raise my remarks in regard to certain areas for propaganda purposes at all. I raised it because the Government of this country has a responsibility to those people whom it has set up as individual farmers, whom it has financed by loans which they have to repay. I merely remind the hon. Member that the appetite grows as it feedeth. And it seems to me that what is sauce for one goose today with regard to individual tenure may well feed the appetite for other people's gardens tomorrow. In other words, Sir, if the individual property which I have in this country is not respected by any future Government, merely because I am different to many of the people in this country, it cannot be long before the individual property of everybody in this country, regardless of his race, his tribe or his origin, is in danger, and I would refute the hon. Member strongly when he accuses me of raising this matter for propaganda. It is not, I raised it as a matter of principle and I wish to hear—and he would do the greatest thing for this country—I wish to hear the hon. Member get up and say—investing that within the general and overall terms of Government policy he supported the individual rights of property. Were he to do so the encouragement and confidence in this country would be enormous.

Lastly, Sir, I would say this, and I say it with the greatest intensity, I am not moved by people who tell me whether the Government of this country is a popular one or not, or whether the Government of this country can commit future Governments. I am not moved by that, because the Government of this country at the moment is the responsibility of the people of Great Britain and I do not believe, I trust not, and I am endorsed by the Chief Secretary's remarks, that the people of Great Britain are going to be so foolish as to hand over irrevocably power to a Government which is so irresponsible that it will not respect the individual rights and assets of individual citizens.

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Chairman, Sir, the three speakers immediately after me have raised questions on which I must take issue with them. The last speaker again, the Specially Elected Member, refers to an irresponsible Government in terms of the African leaders and in terms of our present attitude and views on questions such as land and so on. He has asked me to state my position and I believe that of my colleagues on the question of individual rights. Mr. Chairman, it is on record that the African Elected Members were responsible for the idea of the inclusion in our future Constitution of a Bill of Rights, which would guarantee individual rights. The question at issue

[Mr. Mboya] is not individual rights, the question is what the definition of individual rights is going to be. Whether we are being asked by the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Mundell, that in that definition we should include all the injustices and unfair policies and activities existing today as in the past as part of individual rights. It is the question of whether we have an entrenchment of these injustices within the scope of that definition, or whether we define it to mean individual rights in the normally accepted principles.

Sir Charles Markham: Skating round it!

Mr. Mboya: I am not skating around the issue, I think some people have been skating around it for the last 60 years!

The issue is very clear, if the European people or Members and their community in this country want the African Elected Members to give the right and just claims and demands of our people in order to compromise and pacify some Europeans that are scared and hesitant to see political changes take place in this country, they are asking us for something that we do not intend to do and will not do. Any person who wishes to stay in this country must accept the changes that are bound to come, the changes that are inevitable, in fact, and the only scope I can see myself for any such person is to accept the creation of a society and a Government that will respect individual rights in the context in which we have defined it of individual citizens and of individual rights without the entrenchment of past injustices and unfair policies of distribution and so on.

Mr. Chairman, as my colleague the Member for Nyanza Central has stated, perhaps this is an issue which would have been better dealt with in a full Motion in this House, then we would have talked about the meaning of land reform or the sort of changes that some of us have in mind. It is very easy to try and relate the statements we make merely in relation to the fears that some Europeans have at the moment. It is also very easy to over-generalize the situation and indeed the situation is being generalized that anything we do or say will scare away capital, when in fact the alleged scaring away of capital is not the scaring away of capital but consideration for the present fears of some of the local Europeans.

One of the Members has spoken about the remarks by my friend the Member for Nyanza Central when he said our people are not prepared to make sacrifices. I think it was the Minister for Information who took up this issue. Mr. Chairman, unless someone is completely mad, he cannot deny the fact that the Africans as it is have made lots and lots and lots of sacrifices for the last 60 years. We have been making a sacrifice.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense!

Mr. Mboya: Someone says "Nonsense". But if I may say so, we have been making the sacrifice of tolerating the indignities perpetuated on our people by some people in this country, some of whose representatives still believe in those things.

Sir Charles Markham: We are talking about agriculture.

Mr. Mboya: When you start talking about agriculture without the preface you gave we will talk about agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade referred to peaceful development and prosperity. Like him we believe there should be peaceful development and prosperity for this country but I am not sure that he implied by our statement there was not going to be peaceful development or whether he implied that by the reaction of the European community it would make it impossible to have peace in this country. We are committed to peaceful development and if the hon. Specially Elected Member is aware of any Europeans who want to start trouble or who are not as a result of our statement any more interested in peaceful development, he has a duty to say so in this House to the Government and to any other persons concerned. I cannot agree that our statement or rather that the interpretation of our statement would result in unpeaceful development and prosperity. I think, Mr. Chairman, that any attempt during this debate to have a debate on land as such or to have a debate on our political motives and intentions is not going to succeed. We have made statements on our position that is very clear and I only repeat what I have said myself and what I know our people believe and which has been restated by the Member for Nyanza Central, and that is that when changes come in Government or in other conditions in this country, they are bound to be changes either in land policies or in other policies and in so far as this Government especially is not a Government that could claim to be a Government that is truly representative of the feelings, the interests of our people, it is inevitable that when independence comes whichever Government is in power will perhaps introduce changes. The question that we have made, the point that we have made is not necessarily the question that someone will be victimized, but we are asserting the position that whatever future Government we have will have the right to review the policies that exist in this country, will have the right to bring about changes and reforms as they see fit at that particular time. Nobody can deny them, nobody can deny them that right and if this Government were to pretend to give anybody an assurance that there would be no changes or if we, the African Members, were to pretend to give that assurance, we would only be fooling ourselves and, in fact, be fooling those to whom that assurance was being given.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Chairman, Sir, I must say that some of the speeches that I have heard this afternoon have depressed me more than anything that I have heard since I moved that Mr. Deputy Speaker do now leave the Chair during the Budget debate.

Sir, the hon. Member for Nairobi Area who has just sat down says that it is not so much a question of the scaring away of capital, that he is not in favour of scaring away capital, but that the fears which have been expressed are merely the fears of European settlers in this country.

Sir, I speak not as a European settler but as a servant of Her Majesty's Government who has been posted to this country to do a job, who has every intention of doing that job to the best of his ability for the people of this country and all the people of this country and who will probably in the course of time—for all I know I may leave or I may not leave but I do not regard myself in any way as a permanent resident of Kenya. All I regard myself as is somebody who is doing his best to do a job here on behalf of all the people and not least on behalf of the African people of this country.

Now, Sir, when the hon. Member says that speeches such as have been made about the possibility of changes in such things as land do not scare away capital, he knows nothing about that. Sir, I can assure him that he is seriously mistaken. Nobody disagrees, Sir, nobody disagrees with the view that a future Government can make changes. Of course a future Government can make changes and of course we all accept the fact that in many ways no Government can commit its successor. But I do not think it is even a question of that. All I think is needed at this stage is that the hon. Member and his friends are being asked today that they personally in their own opinion would be opposed to anything that would interfere with the sanctity of private title and private property rights. If, Sir, the hon. Member was prepared to say that type of thing, if his hon. friends were prepared to say that kind of thing, I am quite sure that a great deal of the lack of confidence that there is in us—and this is not merely lack of confidence, Sir, I do ask the hon. Member to believe me, in this Colony, but elsewhere—a great deal of it would be dissipated immediately.

Sir, I have a considerable number of people who come to see me about the possibility of putting additional money into the Colony and I must say that in recent days I have discovered that it is not going to be nearly so easy to finance our future developments either public or private as I had hoped. Sir, there are various projects afoot which are designed to increase the wealth of the country, to increase employment in the country. Those projects we hoped until very recently would be easy to finance. I think, Sir, we are going to have a good deal more difficulty. I do not say that it will be impossible, but, Sir, it is going to be impossible if outside people with money feel that any future Government, that any possible members of future Governments of this country do not feel able to get up and to say quite firmly, quite quietly, that in their own opinion, not necessarily in the opinion of the future Government (they may not, as they say, be Members of it), but in their opinion it would be wrong to interfere with the rights of private property, which I would remind the hon. Member are among the most important of all individual rights.

I am most sincere about this, Sir, I want to see this country prosper. Like the other Civil Service Members of the Government, we did not merely come here, as the hon. Member for Central Nyanza would no doubt call us as tools of Imperialism—but if we were, in any case, we are rather proud of it. We came here as tools to do a job and the main job was to increase the prosperity, to increase the living standards of the people of this country.

The fact, Sir, that today the majority of the children of the country of all races have now got a chance to go to schools, the fact that normally a man can walk freely from one end of the country to another, the fact, Sir, that the health of the people is looked after, all these things, Sir, have been brought here by that imperialism of which the hon. Member for Central Nyanza speaks so glibly. Sir, we want, and I think the only thing we want to do when we hand over this trust, is to see that the country is able to go forward. The only way that can be done is through having a sound economy. Without that, as I said in the Budget speech, "Everyone's dreams of a better life, of more schools and an improving standard of living, will only be dreams." Sir, I appeal to the hon. Member for Nairobi Area and his friends to take note of these facts, not in the interests, Sir, of any minority in this country, but in the interests of the masses of the man in the street and the man in the field, who are the only ones who will suffer if this development fails to come about.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Chairman, Sir, I feel it is very important to underline certain facts in this debate as they affect land. I have maintained, and the African people in Kenya maintain, that the land question is in dispute. Others may not like to face it but they will have to face it. The land has been taken away from the Africans. Africans today in Kenya are called by a name that they cannot understand, that is "squatters".

If anybody can explain to me the meaning of a squatter, I would like to know it. Squatting—on whose land? Until changes come in Kenya so that the African living in the so-called White Highlands is no longer a squatter but somebody owning a piece of land which is his and which is his by right, the land question is in dispute. No African politician, I feel, would be justified in committing himself to this policy of postponing the whole issue when the African in the settled areas remains without security. It is a very important thing and every Englishman knows that they say an Englishman's home is his castle. An African's piece of land is his castle and the end of everything. So I feel, Sir, that when certain Members here want to say that the land question is not in dispute they do not understand the African side of things. I do not like to be called a squatter at any time or my brother or anybody else.

Mr. Chairman, am I being persuaded to believe that the 50-acre plots are going to solve the landlessness in Kenya? Am I being persuaded to understand that by giving so many individuals 50-acre plots the others who walk the streets are called mere squatters? They can be evicted any time: are they going to feel secure? The people must feel secure on their own soil before we can claim there is no land question in Kenya and personally I would support the remarks of Mr. Gichuru when he talked about this land question. The African Government cannot be committed on this particular issue because the Governments we have had to date do not pay very much attention to it. To me, the 50-acre plot is a good idea, but is it touching even on the fringe of the landlessness? Is it removing from the African, a so-called squatter, this feeling of insecurity of tenure, of even any right at all to that piece of land? I feel, Sir, that the Government of this country should take the psychological side of things into account, before they come all the time to talk about the economic effects. We have been told that the investments into this country are going to be scared by some politicians' statements. Do you mean to tell me that no other African country has ever become independent? We know many other African countries that have become independent, take Ghana, for example. If the foreigners there or the people who came to settle there became the only factor to be considered, we would find ourselves in a state here of confusion like South Africa where a minority have actually gone wrong and gone the wrong way. Therefore, in Kenya, Sir, we should give this psychological side of things—Africans' sense of insecurity—every consideration now and not trust so much to economic factors, economic there. Which African politician has said that he is going to destroy all the coffee? Which African politician has said he is going to destroy all the crops in Kenya? Which African politician has said he is going to destroy all the sisal in Kenya? We have not said so. But there must be reforms and adjustments and only a dishonest African or European would not face that. Who would say that before the Europeans came we never farmed, we never kept cattle, we never kept trees, we never looked after everything and anything? Sir, I would like to submit to this House that this is a marginal issue that what I call marginal politicians or extreme politicians of all races in Kenya are going to use and the Specially Elected Member for the Rift Valley very well knows that he is side-tracking the issue. He referred many times to the Meru people giving land to the Kikuyu. I can tell you that there are many Kikuyus in Meru today. How many Kikuyus are living with security on their own farms?

Sir, I do not want to dwell on this particular issue. All I would like to impress on our Government today is that the 50-acre plot scheme is no solution. The psychological difficulty of the African regarding being called a squatter is a problem and we African politicians are not going to be scared by this talk about scaring capital away when what we are talking about is readjustment to reach a certain position where everybody feels safe and for that matter I would like to assure those European Members who are going to use the economic aspect of it that it is a marginal issue and they should consider Africans whose labour comes into it. The land Africans whose labour today does contribute to economic well-being. If they are going to raise these marginal issues, that we must settle the so-called economic fears as criteria for judging whether Kenya is suitable for investment or not, we are prepared if so to stand by what is going to be a fair change and on that issue, Mr. Chair, I feel, Sir, that I support the President of the Kenya African National Union, Mr. Gichuru, when he made his statement. And when the Minister for Finance tells us about that simple question and makes the African who is living as a squatter on his own land feel that he is no longer a squatter. Give him a plot and a place where he can feel he can be buried without having to owe allegiance to anybody else. Otherwise,

[Mr. Mate]

Sir, I feel we shall be only running away from the problem.

As I said, it is a marginal issue. We are not trying to destroy the tea or the coffee or the ranches and all that sort of thing. Government has for the first time admitted that there is empty land for 20-acre pieces. Have they explored the possibility of finding many more people land in these particular empty areas? On the question of the private land titles, I do not see how an African could own anything in this country if a European could not own it, so on, that issue to me it is not an issue. The issue is that somebody or other owns 30,000 acres, half of which is not being farmed. The Africans living on that land are called squatters. They own nothing there according to the laws of this country. Is this equitable distribution of land? That is why we say you cannot go on saying in regard to private rights that you cannot even touch it. It should be acquired. Our own Government are going to acquire these pieces of land, but if the ownership of these 30,000 acres is going to be used as an excuse for not appropriating it to give it to the Africans, I would not so respect that kind of ownership. But for goodness sake, let us not use these marginal issues to blind us to the big issue. The Government themselves are going to acquire these pieces of land for somebody so the question of ownership as camouflage does not come into it and personally I stand by the statement that was made by the President, Mr. Gichuru, of the would be Kenya African National Union.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, we are in Committee to vote the supply of £1,641,000 for agriculture. The question immediately before us, Mr. Chairman, is a vote of £23,660 for the office of the Minister. It is, Mr. Chairman, the office of the Minister that lays down or promotes Government policy concerning agriculture. Part of that policy was contained in the Minister's main speech to this House and his reply, the rest of his reply, today and in it he stated the Government proposals were to buy land in the highlands of Kenya: land at present owned by Europeans will be resettled in 50-acre plots or thereabouts and I think it was clearly indicated that the main beneficiaries under the scheme would be African farmers. Now it has been said, Mr. Chairman, that this debate was initiated merely to raise the whole question of land policy in Kenya. It was nothing of the sort, Mr. Chairman. There had been a clear statement by our Minister of Agriculture as to how the Government proposed to move resettled Africans and others on 50 acres of land. Immediately following that, there was a contradiction of that policy by certain African leaders in this country. They said, and it has been quoted in this House, that there must be no further changes concerning land and therefore it was right for the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Blundell, to query the wisdom today in this House of going on with the spending of £1,600,000, part of which concerns, or I imagine much of it if we could allocate it all, concerns this particular scheme. We are told that the land with which this particular scheme is concerned is in dispute. The title to it, we are told, Mr. Chairman, is in dispute. If it is in dispute today, it will be in dispute when the new owners take possession of it after this scheme has been implemented. Therefore, it is right, Mr. Chairman, that the people who are putting their money into this land should be told these ideas by what might be the future leaders of this country. We are told that some £2,500,000 initially is to go into this scheme, £1,500,000 from international finance, £1,000,000 approximately from Her Majesty's Government, and I believe in all honesty, Mr. Chairman, we must go, particularly to the international finance, and tell them the words that have been uttered in this House today and were uttered this week-end by responsible leaders concerning what will be the spending of this £1,500,000 of international finance. I believe it is right and I think we will perhaps have to come back to this, Mr. Chairman, when we deal with the consolidated bill, to query whether these estimates should be entirely expunged from the Colony's spending for the next year until this particular point is clarified.

We owe it particularly to international finance. Her Majesty's Government, with its £1,000,000 that they are putting into it perhaps have reason to be closer to the problem and know what they are doing. But we in this House owe it to international lenders and I believe it was right, Mr. Chairman, for the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Blundell, to have introduced this subject specifically today and I congratulate him for having done so and having been sufficiently honest to those from whom we are trying to borrow money.

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Chairman, Sir, I just want to make one or two brief remarks. First, it is not a secret that ever since the Lancaster House Conference there have been people in this country who have never got used to the idea that certain changes should take place, and they are constantly, constantly, busy trying to prove how wrong these changes must be and how chaotic the situation would be with these political changes. I am not surprised that they are now trying to seek opportunities to exploit in order—or rather in an attempt—to prove their point. They will seek to use any legal straws to magnify them.

Before this land issue we have heard lots and lots of talk about the flow of capital out of this country, allegations made from the same sources who are now making similar speeches of fear and panic in this House.

Reference is made by the Member for Nairobi West about international finance. Now, Sir, I would have thought that if international finance is to be used in this country, and if we have any justification for calling upon it at all, it would be and should be in the interests of the country, not necessarily in terms of the fears and interests of the European community in this country, and my friend the Member for Central Province North has clearly stated that no African leader wishes to go round cutting down coffee trees or tea crops, and so on. Development if it comes through international finance will be development for Kenya, whatever it is, and I cannot see that any Member should be so simple-minded as to think that international finance would no longer be interested in development in this country under an African Government or with African enterprise.

The Minister for Finance has asked us to state whether we now would be prepared to respect individual rights. The answer is simple. The answer has been stated before and if he wants it re-stated again I will do so here and now. We have called for the inclusion of a Bill of Rights in our future Constitution. In that, it has been clearly stated, there would be reference to the question of property rights or property safeguards. Now if the European leaders who attended the Lancaster House Constitutional Conference were not particularly attentive I would draw their attention to the report of the Conference, what we have said. The only qualification we have made is that such Bill of Rights, including property safeguards, must not be used, must not be used as a vehicle or an opportunity to seek to trench past or present injustices, reforms passed on the needs of the country and its people must be permissible, and in his quotation—and I must repeat this—in the quotation by the Chief Secretary reference is made to the process that might be used or that would be used in such circumstances. Now I do not know that we are expected to go beyond the acceptance of the principles which we were being urged in fact to accept by the Government.

The Minister for Finance has made, as he usually does, a very exciting statement, but I think when he refers to such things as the development in education, health, welfare and so on, I think that perhaps one thing is overlooked. We have never said we do not appreciate the amount of educational help and other development work that has been done in this country. On the contrary, we have always appreciated this work although we have very often said it was not enough. I think it would be wrong for the Minister, this Government, or the Europeans to expect gratitude from the African people, and the African leaders, to the extent of expecting us not to continue to demand the right and just aspirations of our people, and I think the Minister for Finance would do well to remember that in his future speeches. We appreciate what has been done, we appreciate what some of them are continuing to do in the Civil Service and in other fields in this country, but this does not bar us from consistently and as staunchly as we can expressing what we know to be the genuine aspirations and the rightful demands of our people. This we will continue to do.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. McKenzie): Mr. Chairman, we seem to have gone on a long time this afternoon on this and what we really want is only a few words. If individual property owners are tampered with for any reason whatsoever, be it for land reform or other reason, will they and can they expect full compensation? That is all we want to know, if the hon. Member for Nairobi Area could say yes or no?

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the Government is listening or whether Members on this side are listening, but unless someone is out for trouble, we have said there will be a Bill of Rights. The quotation from the Chief Secretary is the result, the quotation from the Lancaster House Constitutional Conference. Perhaps the hon. Elected Members need to read that report again.

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Courts): In answer to the hon. Member who has just sat down, I would inform him that the Government was listening to what he said and he said in his first speech he agreed to expropriation based on just and fair compensation. But I would like to go a little further and just examine what has been said not only by the hon. Member but also by the hon. Member for Meru. No one on this side of the House is disputing the right of the African people to go ahead and to make such claims as they wish in respect of land, to talk about rights at any time, to talk indeed as the hon. Member for Meru said, that these people must feel secure and that they had no intention of destroying crops.

One point that the Government is concerned about—it is not concerned at this stage about the thorny and difficult problem of land rights, of what people want, of what they have done in the past; what the Government is mainly concerned about at the moment and grievously concerned about is the ability to attract the necessary capital which we must have in order to go on with the development of this country. Those people who are going to put their money into this country in order to develop it must feel equally as secure as those people about whom the hon. Member for Meru talked. We are not disputing in any way the hon. Member for Meru's feelings or what he wishes to do about land or the fact that we would even dream about destroying crops, but we know that his own people want to develop these very crops. We know that they want to plant tea. Planting tea costs money, a very great deal of money, which this Government has not got. And unless we can get that money that development and raising the standard of the people cannot possibly go on. We will not get that money with only what I would like to describe now as a half-statement of the facts.

I accept what the hon. Member for Nairobi Area has said when he talked about expropriation based on just and fair compensation, but who in his right senses would wish to invest money on a statement that he may be expropriated, even on just compensation? Surely anybody who wishes to spend money in this country wants to be assured that the title on which he is going to put that money is assured, for some considerable time at least, or at least until he can get his investment back, and it seems to me that although we have heard what the hon. Member for Nairobi Area has said he has not yet, nor has any other Member on the other side, made it quite categorical and clear that the title to land in the future will be respected, because until we do that I am quite convinced in my own mind that those people with money to invest in this country simply will not do it.

Mr. Odlinga: Mr. Chairman, there is only one thing which I think breeds misunderstanding: you have a way of thinking only of personal properties, and my mind probably is a little bit different. I say that property means that property which is undisputed. If it is the property which has not got dispute then it is your property, but if there is some dispute about it you must actually show that it is your property and that you will show it and be completely in the open to show that it is yours. The land is in dispute; the Africans agree that it is still in dispute. It is not settled—I do not mind whether it is all of it or only part of it, but the majority of it is still in dispute, and I feel until that is settled we cannot enter into its settlement. We cannot commit ourselves and say that we are going to respect those who hold pieces here and there. The land is still subject to a lot of changes and when people dispute or people put it to us that the capital will not come, what about other countries? I was just recently in Yugoslavia: there they have no difficulties. No one is allowed to hold more than 25 acres—

Hon. Members: Communism!

Mr. Odlinga: I do not care. They are still living their own lives. They are just people like Europeans in actual fact—and communist are the people who have reached the moon. Therefore I appreciate the land reforms which they have done because they said that the maximum land holding is only 25 acres, and the scheme of agriculture has developed wonderfully in that country. They are getting on with their land development by group farming and in that way they are trying to distribute evenly the wealth. If the Government in this country decided they wanted to redistribute land would you stop them simply because you are safeguarding someone's right of that land. Would you stop that because you want somebody to retain 760,000 acres?

We must face realities and face them squarely. It is no use talking of what or committing ourselves to something which is unrealistic, which later on will make people regard us as having been very foolish indeed and that we did not actually look into those things at all. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I could say, not even from an African point of view, not from even a European point of view that I would actually not support anybody who goes to expropriate property if it is legally held, and there is no dispute upon it. I want actually to be understood—Africans from time immemorial, respected people's property and will continue to do so if those people have legal rights over those properties.

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Chairman, there are only one or two points I would like to make, and one of them is that the hon. Member for Central Nyanza appears to have learnt other things in Yugoslavia besides having learnt about redistribution of land: he seems to have learnt a certain amount of double talk too.

Mr. Chairman, Sir, I would ask the hon. Member for Nairobi Area—I suggested it the other day to some friends of the hon. gentlemen from Central Nyanza—I suggested to them that it would be very nice if they would try to convince him just occasionally that—or at least to convince him just occasionally—the Government is doing its best to help the African people and is not going out of its way to stand in their way. I think that most of his colleagues are aware of that, Sir, and I wish they would try their best. I

[The Minister for Finance and Development] think they may possibly have some influence with him, to try and make him believe that.

Now, Sir, I would also ask the hon. Member for Nairobi Area—I would like to say that I, like the Chief Secretary, fully appreciated his reference to the fact that, if I understood him rightly, he believes that if anybody's property were expropriated for any reason at all he should get fair and proper compensation and as I understood it—the hon. Member for Nairobi Area would perhaps confirm this—he did not qualify his statement in the way that the Member for Central Nyanza did. I think it is very important that that should be confirmed, but, Sir, I would also like to add my voice to that of the Chief Secretary and point out that if one is going into a business one does not normally go into it on the grounds that if you happen to be expropriated you will get fair compensation. Most people, Sir, if they go in for an investment hope to be able to make a fair profit out of that investment and to be able to carry it on, not merely in their own interests but in that of all the people of the country, and I do ask the hon. gentleman to bear that in mind and to realize that it really is important.

There is, Sir, one other point that I would like to mention and that is the one he raised of gratitude. Sir, may I tell him quite frankly, on behalf I think of all the Civil Service Members of this Council, that we do not expect gratitude for our services. We do not expect gratitude at all. All we hope is that when eventually the time comes to retire, that we have done a rather good job, and once more I would beg hon. Members to try to help us to do that job.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, may I now turn to the really serious part of this matter. Under this heading A.1 comes the Office of the Permanent Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture. The Permanent Secretary is the accounting officer to the Ministry of Agriculture, and firstly I would like to draw the attention of the Minister to the Public Accounts Report, XIII. I thought it was rather a pleasant way of ending a rather pleasant debate.

If we may return to page (xiii) of the Public Accounts Committee Report, Sir, it deals with Dam Construction Units; and the Committee recommendations says this, and I quote. Mr. Chairman,

[Mr. Chairman (Mr. Conroy) left the Chair]

[Mr. Deputy Chairman (Mr. Bechgaard) took the Chair]

"The Committee noted that the assurances given to it in the past to the effect that the Units would break even overall have not been fulfilled. For the five years ending 30th June, 1959, an accumulated loss of £71,077 3s. 4d. has been sustained. Against this it is estimated that 4,707,000,000 gallons of water are conserved in various parts of the Colony. The Committee does not doubt that the Dam Construction Unit has served a useful purpose. The losses incurred, and the decision to bring the activities of the Unit to a close, are noted." I raise this particularly, Mr. Chairman, because in the Minister's main policy speech in these Estimates and in the Development Estimates that we are to approve there are many more activities like this. There is, for example, this very precise £2,500,000, approximately, that we have been speaking about for the resettlement scheme, and if there is any more recurrence of this type of laxity it certainly will not satisfy this House and it certainly will not satisfy the Public Accounts Committee to say that something has been achieved. What we want to see is that what is achieved is achieved at a reasonable cost and that the spending has been properly supervised.

The rest of the items that concern the Minister and the Permanent Secretary are in respect of jute control at page (x) of the Public Accounts Committee Report, the Wheat and Flour Account, the Kenya Meat Commission, and I would like the Chairman as he is in the House to take part in this particular piece of it, and the African Livestock Marketing Organization. In respect of the Jute Control there is criticism that has to be answered. In respect of the Kenya Meat Commission the matter outstanding is in respect of debentures that apparently should have been entered into by the Kenya Meat Commission with the Kenya Government, a matter that has now gone on for very many years, and the Public Accounts Committee are getting rather tired of raising this matter each year, and we would like to hear from the Minister or the Director of Agriculture that this particular matter of the debentures to the Kenya Meat Commission is being now brought to a speedy and final conclusion.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The Minister for Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Chairman, the matter of the debentures of the Kenya Meat Commission—I believe that they are being brought to a finality and I hope probably will be brought to a finality within the next week or two. The other point raised about the Jute Control, was brought to our notice, is under active discussion now, and I hope that we may be able perhaps to dispense with the Control altogether in the future. REPORT

VOTE 21—MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE, ANIMAL HUSBANDRY AND WATER RESOURCES

The Minister for Finance and Development (Mr. MacKenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to report that the Committee of Supply has considered that a sum not exceeding £1,641,560 be granted to the Governor to defray the charge which will come in course of payment for the year ending 30th June, 1961, for Vote 21—Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Water Resources, and has approved the same without amendment.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY

Order for Committee read.

VOTE 20—MINISTRY OF EDUCATION

MOTION

THAT MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

The Minister for Education (Mr. Mathieson): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move that Mr. Deputy Speaker do now leave the Chair in order that an opportunity may be provided for discussion on the policies reflected in the Estimates for Vote 20—Ministry of Education.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, within the last few weeks my personal responsibilities have been simplified to the point where I am concerned with nothing but education, and even here the range of my Ministry's activities exclude the important field of adult education. While the tasks of dealing with land and labour, and the brief flirtation, which I enjoyed, with the twin charmers of information and broadcasting, were fascinating and stimulating, I have consistently held the view that the combination of these highly controversial subjects in one Ministry could only serve as a challenge to the exhausted incumbent to demonstrate versatile agility in leaping from one political pinnacle to another, and never resting long enough in any one place, or with any one set of problems, to give them serious and effective attention. It is not, therefore, only my natural indolence, but also a satisfied advocacy which lead me to rejoice in the fact that the recent interim reconstruction of the Government has resulted in a Ministry concerned solely with education. This at last gives me an opportunity to concentrate on the many problems of educational policy, not the least of which is the fashioning of an effective instrument in the Ministry and its representatives in the field for the planning and execution of vigorous and purposeful measures for the education of all the people of Kenya. I hope that this debate will help to illuminate the way ahead.

Hon. Members may recall that on this occasion last year I said that we were examining the possibility of a large measure of decentralization to provinces, which would have involved the retention at headquarters of only a small nucleus of less senior staff and the devolution of responsibility for many acts and decisions to senior officers in the field. This thought, at that time, derived in part from the feeling that the impetus of educational development was checked by the other preoccupations of the Ministry, but now that we have a homogeneous Ministry, in which the post of chief professional adviser and permanent secretary are happily combined in one person, with his specialist assistants in all fields close at hand, it now seems to me that the existing structure will well serve the country with certainty and expedition. This, at any rate, is what we aim to do.

I have heard it suggested in certain quarters. Mr. Deputy Speaker, that we are working without an overall plan, that we do not know where we are going and that a full-blooded commission of enquiry should be appointed to advise the Government on educational policy and draw up a plan covering the next decade. Personally, I cannot accept any element in this suggestion. I do not believe in government by commission. In my experience resort to a commission generally only reflects the inadequacy or timidity, or both, of those servants of the Government appointed and paid to frame and execute policy in the field of activity concerned, and it is our job to address ourselves to putting our own house in order, and to convincing the country that we are well poised for advance along a road with a defined goal and a track clearly charted for as far ahead as it is prudent and sensible to claim to foresee. I hope to demonstrate that we are, in fact, in this position, that our plans are laid, or are being effectively evolved, and that the general pattern of progress, while clearly etched, has adequate flexibility and a reasonable certainty of achievement.

I think that I can best illustrate the nature and purpose of our educational planning by reference in the main to education for Africans. I know that a good deal of speculation is current on the steps which might be taken to develop an integrated system of education, tailored to certain political preconceptions, but I must frankly confess that my attention has been mainly directed in the preparation of these Estimates to the improvement of our existing structure and securing a maximum production from our present resources. A time of political uncertainty and shifting pattern of executive government is perhaps not the easiest period in which Ministers can collectively address themselves to the evolution of a pattern of educational policy adapted to the political and social environment of the future. I have therefore concentrated on the simpler proposition of getting more children better educated. No one, I think, would dispute the paramount importance of educating the great majority of the future electorate, and it is on our success in this area of endeavour that posterity will judge us, although I imagine the hon. Member for Central Nyanza, who is not in his place at the moment, would not applaud such a sentiment coming from a mere agent of imperialism. I would therefore like to place the emphasis in this speech on African education in the rural areas, and the further opportunities for improvement and advancement which open out from this sector.

Before I do that, there is one remark which I should like to make in this context. I see from the public prints that I am to be relentlessly pursued until I am forced to divulge the truth about the course of one of those highland hares which are so frequently let loose in Kenya. Perhaps I should call the hare a fox, or to save unnecessary journalistic effort, I could say here and now that the rumour referred to by the Master of Foxhounds in Nakuru cannot in any way be identified with Government policy. I return now to the question of planning.

The basic unit in educational administration and planning is the district education board, which finances elementary education for Africans in the African district council areas as to one-third from local tax yields and to two-thirds from Central Government funds, after the income from fees has been deducted from the gross recurrent costs. It therefore seemed to me that the most reliable basis for a secure development plan was to invite district education boards to ascertain individually their own resources, which vary naturally from district to district, in local provision, in expected fee yields and in the provision of trained teachers returning to those districts, and for Government then to make sure it could match these from its own resources, and to build up from these elements a three-year plan for the development of elementary education, with the policy objective of aiming at the maximum advance within that period to the provision of seven or eight years sound education for every child. I chose the period of three school years 1960-63 for the first plan as it coincides fairly closely with the period of our next capital development programme, and is the maximum period in elementary education for which experience shows one can plan ahead with any degree of certainty. However, it is my intention that these plans should be constructed, as it were, on the model of a rolling barrage, in that each year the plans for the next two years are re-assessed, and a plan for a further year added. Thus, at any one time we should have a valid up-to-date plan covering three years ahead.

One of the problems which confronts longer-term planning at this time is that we are without much of the statistical information essential for precise forecasting. For example, our information available centrally for basic planning would suggest that over a very large area of the country we have 110 per cent to 120 per cent of the school age population at school. Now this can only throw doubt on the validity of our statistics, since we are doing well, but not quite as well as that. A census is due in 1961, and my Ministry has taken pains to be in close consultation with those devising the census in order that we may ensure that it will yield the essential information needed for educational planning in the future. Much of this, as I say, is lacking at present, and is certainly not available centrally in a collated form. This reinforced my conviction that we should build from the ground up, and that the edifice of our planning should rest on bricks of local materials produced locally from local materials by those who have an intimate and direct knowledge of the facts of the educational situation in their own areas.

I should like to describe in some detail the processes followed in a single district education board area, to illustrate a typical situation and how we have dealt with it. But before I do so, as I have referred to the district education board as the basic unit in educational administration, I should perhaps say something about our re-shaped system of supervision and management and the place we see in it for the voluntary agencies. Hon. Members will recall that the recommendation of the Beecher Report was that the Government should continue to work with and through those voluntary agencies which have and through those voluntary agencies which have the teaching of Christian principles as part of their intention, and that facility for Christian instruction be provided in all schools. In making its views known on the Report in Sessional Paper No. 1 of 1950 the Government stated on this

[The Minister for Education] recommendation that it fully supported the Committee in its opinion that education must be based on sound moral and spiritual foundations. The Government still completely adheres to this proposition as the fundamental basis for any satisfactory system of education, and we very much welcome and value the continued co-operation of the voluntary agencies in the development and management of our schools. It has, however, become evident that many of the responsibilities previously assigned to the voluntary agencies have overtaken their resources in modern conditions, and in discussion and agreement with them the Government has decided that efficient direction and guidance of our schools requires the assumption of some of these functions directly by officers of the Ministry, accompanied by the concurrent running down of the supervisory teams through which the agencies previously discharged their duties. A programme has been evolved for the replacement of supervisory teams over the next four years, and assist education officers and office assistants are being progressively appointed to the districts to enable Government to take over their functions.

The managerial functions of the voluntary agencies will then be well within their capacity, and will consist of the following. First, the registration of new schools. Secondly, the construction and maintenance of school buildings and grounds. Thirdly, the engagement, transfer and dismissal of staff, that is, the normal statutory duty of employers apart from the payment of salaries. And fourthly, the pastoral care of teachers and pupils. To aid them in this task, now redefined, the Government will contribute to the cost of administration by supporting a number of educational secretaries in the regions as well as the education secretaries general at the centre. The functions to be assumed by officers of the Ministry will be the collection of fees, pension fund payments and the compilation and issue of salaries to teachers, except that in certain cases physical payment of teachers will rest with the management. The Government will also directly provide school equipment and Government officers will be responsible for the inspection and supervision of the academic work of the schools.

This redistribution of responsibilities fully safeguards the continuing interest and effective help of the voluntary agencies in educational administration, but at the same time it will bring greater uniformity and more effective academic direction and enable us to eliminate waste. The prime requirement of the country is an economical system, with existing schools fully used, and I believe that we shall secure full response from the voluntary agencies in ensuring that denominational rivalries will not lead to a dispersal of our resources. This, we cannot allow. Progressively we must develop a system which will lead towards the establishment of local education authorities, themselves employing adequate professional and administrative staff, but I sincerely trust that all concerned with such development will seek to ensure that the moral strength and dedicated purpose of the voluntary agencies will remain harnessed to our educational effort.

Let me now turn to the work of planning in a typical district.

Action is normally initiated by the Ministry with a request to district education officers to submit development plans for a given period. The Ministry outlines the broad policy to be followed and the districts are asked to submit with their development plans forecast estimates of revenue and expenditure to cover the period.

In 1952, following this custom, development plans for the period 1953/56 were requested, on the broad policy of increasing the numbers of primary schools by a fixed percentage and increasing the numbers of intermediate schools so as to maintain 25 per cent of the Standard IV leavers going forward to Standard V. Towards the close of that period, in 1956, for the period 1957/60, the policy, that is the broad policy guidance given to district education boards, was to try and provide a four-year primary course in an aided school for every child, and at the same time double the number of intermediate schools. During that period, hon. Members will see the emphasis was squarely put on the development of facilities for the first four years of education. We have now got somewhat out of balance in our relationship between the effort in the primary sector and the provision of intermediate facilities, and that is why in the current planning period we are shifting that emphasis, and our general approach to this period involves a partial freeze on primary expansion and a corresponding concentration on new intermediate schools. We also allow a variation of the general policy in the more progressive or the richer districts, in some of which increased fees have been charged in primary and intermediate schools, the resultant increased revenue being devoted to financing an increased number of intermediate schools.

In many districts there are planning committees of the district education board, but most of the preliminary work in preparing a development plan falls upon the district education officer. He arms himself with all the relevant statistics that are available, such as enrolments for the current year, population statistics for the district, a map showing the distribution of schools and so forth. In this connexion I think that our plans in the

[The Minister for Education] Central Province have been very much helped by the enumeration which was carried out there at the end of 1955 giving population by villages and sublocations.

The district education officer then estimates from the population figures available the number of Standards I, that is primary schools, required in each sublocation, location or division. From these he subtracts the numbers of existing streams in primary schools, and is left with the number of new Standards required to ensure universal education at the primary level for all children coming of school age. That, as I said, is the aim of these plans. The opening of these new schools is usually then distributed evenly over the years of the development plan, giving priority to those areas where the need is greatest. At the same time the district education officer usually has to make a recommendation as to the management of the proposed new schools with due regard to the management of surrounding schools and the needs of denominational minorities.

The planning of intermediate school development is usually done on a locational basis, though soon it will have to come down to a sublocational basis in the more developed areas. Bearing in mind the probable finances and senior teachers likely to be available in the next few years, the district education officer then makes a forecast of how many intermediate schools should be opened each year during the period of the development plan. Then, he must form a view on the siting of these new intermediate schools, trying to maintain equality of opportunity to enter Standard V, both from a geographical point of view, and he would usually nominate a number of primary schools to develop Standards V and grow to be full elementary schools.

On this basis, detailed estimates of revenue and expenditure are worked out over the planning period, and when the deficiency grant required has been calculated an approach is made to the African district council to ascertain whether the council can bear its share of the deficiency grant. Sometimes it is able to find a greater sum of money, in which case, if the district wishes to push ahead with educational development, additions can be made to the draft plan, or, in the opposite case, if the costs are too great for the African district council to should some downward adjustment has to be made.

The draft plan thus produced is circulated to the members of the planning committee of the district education board. The planning coming usually consists of about four or five members of the district education board, though occasionally locally prominent people are co-opted to give the benefit of their local knowledge. Once the plan has been circulated, it is discussed and reviewed by the planning committee, and tabled at the next meeting of the board. Since almost half of the members of the district education board are usually also members of the planning committee, it is normal that the plan is then accepted at this stage and sent forward to the Ministry for final approval.

As I have said, the policy objective which we set before the district educational boards when we asked them to carry out this process, the planning for the current period, was to secure the maximum advance over the next three years towards universal elementary education of eight years' duration without any drop in standards, but rather with a rising proportion of trained teachers, on a basis which will be financially tolerable for the local authority, and ensure that other essential local government services were not enfeebled to meet the voracious appetite for education. Once we have those plans produced on a district basis we group them by provinces, correlate them and check them against regional teacher training output. We also evolved similar plans on a slightly different basis for the settled areas and the more retarded areas with a greater emphasis on primary expansion in view of the leeway which these areas have to make up.

On the whole the pattern produced by this planning process was reasonably satisfactory in all areas except the Nyanza Province where the rate of expansion of intermediate education which these plans suggested seemed to me to fall far short in some districts of what was desirable. At the same time, we had a suspicion that the primary school provision was excessive for the estimated population. I doubted whether the available resources were correctly distributed to give the best results. I therefore arranged for a special interdepartmental enquiry for my own information, to be conducted by one of our Assistant Directors of Education, with the assistance of officers of local government and the Provincial Administration with the collaboration of the Treasury, into the state of elementary education in Nyanza.

The main general findings of this enquiry were that the existing aided primary schools were more than adequate to meet the needs of the area and that no new primary schools, aided or unaided, should be established unless a clear educational need could be proved. Every effort should be made to get more pupils, particularly girls, into existing primary schools where vacancies were found to exist for them in considerable numbers. Apart from a general desire to get the most out of existing capacity, these recommendations were designed to maximize the fee revenue for each

[The Minister for Education] progress towards the opportunity of eight years' education for every African child, accepting if necessary continued dilution with uncertificated teachers to maintain the rate of progress and secondly a concentration of resources on higher levels of training. Thirdly the halting of the expansion of 13 training and fourthly the consolidation of training into fewer and larger training colleges. This last point is of vital importance. The subjects of the intermediate curriculum have to be taught by teachers trained at a higher level and cannot be satisfactorily covered for students at teacher training colleges at K11 level by a staff of less than 14, of whom at least eight should be either graduates or specialists. The well-trained teacher with a K11 qualification is crucial to the quality of our education in the upper levels of the elementary system and the lower forms of the secondary schools. To produce them larger colleges have become a necessity. An additional advantage of the larger establishment is that it is much more flexible and can be called on for more work over and above the direct task of training, for example with refresher courses or academic help for the growing cadre of assistant education officers or more experimental work in teaching through the medium of English.

In the assessment of priorities, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am determined to lay heavy stress on the expansion of secondary education. It is all too easy to be carried away by the popular appeal of eight years' education for all. But there are lessons from all over the world of the price emergent nations are paying for neglect of post-elementary schooling in order to satisfy this clamour. Let me cite only briefly, if I may, from the experience of India. I quote from a publication of the Government of India of September, 1955, reviewing the educational programme in relation to economic and social development: "Secondary education, which has been criticized for its stereotyped character, literary bias and poor standards has till now remained the weakest link in the Indian educational chain. Its objectives have been narrowly conceived and for the majority of students it has been a dead end, for it has fitted them neither for higher education nor for a career. The stress on examinations and the methods of teaching generally practised have further darkened the outlook of the students at the secondary stage."

I think it has been fully recognized by the Government of India that early neglect of the development of the secondary system through an eager desire to provide elementary education for all children has proved a severe handicap in their development. We have avoided most of those drawbacks so far, and have been generally successful in our secondary schools in fitting the more gifted pupils for successful entry to higher education. In 1959, 746 boys and 53 girls a total of 799, presented themselves for the school certificate examination. This compares with a figure for 1949 of 61 boys and no girls. Of those who sat the examination in 1959, 605 boys and 49 girls gained certificates in the various grades, a total of 654 passes out of an entry of 799. The results in 1949 were 60 passes out of 61 candidates. It can be seen that as opportunity is opening more widely for the children to come forward into our secondary schools and as the methods of selection do not have to be so rigid, it is inevitable and I think natural that the very, very high percentage of successes of the past will drop. But our current plans aim at a production of 1,000 certificate holders a year.

At present about 13 per cent of those completing intermediate education go on to secondary schools and we shall be hard put to it to keep near this percentage as the heavy programme of expansion at intermediate level to which I have referred begins to take effect. But I am confident that the numbers in round terms will substantially and quickly rise.

The most important single development in immediate prospect is the addition of sixth forms in five schools, admitting their first pupils in 1961. There will be places for 160 of our best school certificate holders who will be given a two-year course leading to higher school certificate, with which they can enter directly on undergraduate studies. This development, while being desirable, is also essential in the light of a decision of Makerere College, which has been supported by the territorial government, to cease from next year accepting entry to a preliminary course, requiring therefore entry at higher certificate or G.C.E.(A.) level, thereby releasing their own staff and the capacity of their own institution for the proper work of a university college.

I believe, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that it is thoroughly sound that pre-university studies should be completed at school and I attach supreme importance to the effective provision of this new facility in our schools. It will be seen from the Development Programme 1960/63 that we intend to devote nearly £600,000 to the capital needs of secondary education, including provision for 15 day secondary schools. I am certain that we can achieve this substantial physical expansion, but I am not quite as sanguine about the effective staffing of these schools. We are operating in a very competitive market in seeking to attract United Kingdom graduates to teaching posts in Kenya, as we are up against precisely the same kind of problem as was referred to by my hon. friend the Director of Agriculture when he spoke on Friday on the recruitment of agricultural staff. There is therefore an insistent need for African graduates in Arts and Science to enter the teaching profession if we are to realize our ambitions for secondary expansion. I hope next year to offer some special inducement to such graduates to take a post-graduate teaching course at Makerere.

To meet the needs of the modern world, it is clear that we should pay particular attention to the facilities for science teaching in our secondary schools.

Some months ago I managed to interest the Ford Foundation in this problem and as a result we have had a visit from a specialist in science education at the American University at Beirut, who has considerable experience of this problem in some of the less developed areas of the Middle East. That specialist came to survey our facilities and plans and advise in what way the Ford Foundation might come in to fortify our efforts for improvement. This visit was most stimulating to those concerned with science teaching in our schools and I have high hopes that this expert's report to the Foundation will lay the basis for fruitful co-operation on this problem.

Here, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as I am about to embark on a further sector of this speech, you might regard this a convenient time for me to pause.

MOTION

VOTE 20—MINISTRY OF EDUCATION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR

(Resumption of Consideration of Motion Interrupted on 17th May, 1960).

The Minister for Education (Mr. Mathiesop): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, when the House rose yesterday evening I had just given an example of the way in which we were seeking the co-operation of the Ford Foundation in the development of our programme of secondary education. There is another area in which we have also enlisted the help of the foundation. I feel, myself, that the day is far distant, if indeed it will ever come, when every child goes on to some form of secondary education and we, therefore, must expect a considerable proportion of our school-leavers and schoolgirls to leave school after the completion of an elementary course of seven or eight years. The country, therefore, faces a problem of what should be done to provide further opportunities for training and self-improvement for the elementary school-leaver. We were concerned to try to analyse the aspirations and capacities of those who will leave school at this level in order to devise means whereby they can be best fitted into the economic and social life of the country. It is in this problem that I have also interested the Ford Foundation on a co-operative basis with the Ministers for Education in Tanganyika and Uganda and all three territories have been visited by a Ford Foundation expert in educational administration and educational statistics, who has been employed on similar problems in India, Dr. Woodman. He has draw up the outline of a research project which we hope will be considered over a number of years in East Africa with the support of the Ford Foundation and this gives us the relevant information to enable us to tackle the problem.

I have great hopes that we will end up by securing the positive support of the Foundation in the undertaking.

I would now like, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to turn to the subject of higher education. The House is already aware of the acceptance by the Kenya Government and by the other East African governments of the recommendation of the Working Party on Higher Education that we should aim to establish a university of East Africa consisting of three university colleges situated one in each of the territories, and pursuing a common and co-ordinated purpose and providing a common service. It is the intention that in each a science or the natural sciences of students could be done in the university colleges and the university colleges would drive centrally as a coordinating body of academic policy which might, in the course of time, award its own degrees. In the meantime internal links will be maintained with London University, and students will study for the degrees of that university, thereby maintaining reference to the highest standards.

The three East African governments are in agreement that early steps should be taken to set up the outline of the university structure, and it is my belief that it will be nothing to keep the offer of the Uganda Government to provide a home for the students in Entebbe, where it could have easy contact with the senior university college.

We are now well advanced in the planning for development of the Royal Technical College in Nairobi into the second university college serving East Africa. This university college will provide courses leading to degrees in arts and science and also a faculty of engineering to meet the requirements for degree and professional courses in this field for the whole East African area. These degree studies will be complemented by the Faculty of Higher Professional Studies in a continuation and development of some of the facilities provided now by the Technical College. An eminent professor of mathematics of wide university experience has, in the advice of the Inter-University Council and the Council for Overseas Colleges of Arts, Science and Technology in the United Kingdom, been appointed as principal of the college and principal designate of the new university college which will be known as the Royal College, Nairobi. I am sure that under his guidance we can look forward to the development in this city of a very fine institution of higher learning.

Much of the credit for this prospect must rest with the vice-principal of the college, Dr. Gale, who is vice-principal-designate of the new college, and who has carried the main burden over the last few years of administering the college and planning for its development. He has never lost faith in the possibility of raising the college to full university status, and he now sees his ideas on the threshold of realization. Even more important, perhaps, in a time when the future of the college was uncertain, he has maintained the morale of a loyal and hard-working staff and has promoted a true interterritorial and co-operative spirit amongst students of all races drawn from every corner of East Africa. This is a major achievement in leadership in conditions of bewildering difficulty.

The College also owes much to the energy and unstinting service of the Chairman of the Governing Council, my hon. friend, Mr. Rogers. He must, I think, be one of the busiest men in Kenya but he has given unbounded care and attention to the guidance of the College Council in this evolutionary period. The cause of higher education in East Africa owes much to his drive and resource.

I said that the overall pattern of university education in East Africa is now envisaged will be completed with the addition of a third University College. We have, I am sure, in this House a natural sympathy with the aspirations of Tanganyika to move as soon as possible towards the completion of this pattern with the establishment in that territory of a College offering complementary facilities for degree studies to which local loyalty and support can be given within the guiding concept of the interterritorial idea.

The scale and pace of financing of this pattern of university development over the five years beginning in 1961 is to be studied in July of this year by a body known rather ponderously as the Quinquennial Advisory Committee, composed of eminent persons from academic life in the United Kingdom with representation from East Africa. I feel sure that we must do everything possible to find the necessary resources for a programme of development sustaining the highest academic aspirations.

For the 1960-61 academic year, with the full financial support of the Kenya Government, Makerere has sent offers of admission to a record total of 111 Kenya students, of whom 100 are Africans. The Royal Technical College has sent offers to 55 Kenya students, of whom 55 are Africans. The record total therefore of 166 Kenya students have been offered admission to Higher Education in East Africa this year, and of these 158 are Africans. It is interesting to compare this total, that is the total of African candidates offered admission, with the results of the school certificate examinations in the secondary schools. 157 students obtained first division certificates and 155 places at school certificate level have been offered to Africans at Makerere and at the Royal Technical College. In some instances good second division certificate holders are amongst those to whom places have been offered, since their performance in the subjects relevant to the courses they intend to follow has proved acceptable to the admission authorities at the colleges. It can therefore be said with confidence that no first grade school certificate holder, acceptable to the colleges, has been denied an opportunity for higher education through the inability of the Kenya Government to produce the necessary finance.

[The Minister for Education]

In addition to this massive entry to our own colleges, which means that in the coming year there will be 405 Kenya students at Makerere and 220 at the Royal Technical College, we will be supporting 172 students overseas on Kenya Government bursaries, as well as 59 teachers on special teacher training scholarships. I am sure that the returning graduate will be a crucial factor in our development over the next few years, and for this reason I have paid particular attention to the promotion of opportunities for higher education.

I feel, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that no reference to higher education would be complete without some mention of Kenya students in North America. The prospect of education in the United States exercises a peculiar fascination at the present time, and the Kenya Government has enjoyed most satisfactory co-operation with the representatives of the agencies of the United States Government in Nairobi, who are concerned with the promotion of such programmes. Where scholarships and other facilities are offered through those agencies we can, I think, claim to see very satisfactory results. I have had some reports from their colleges on such students, from which I would like to quote an extract or two to the House.

From a report on a student who is studying education at the Columbia University Teachers College, New York: "He is the kind of person who immediately wins the respect and confidence of those with whom he associates. He is quiet, thoughtful, speaks frankly, but with tact, and is one of the most conscientious students that we have had this year." That is the sort of impression we, in Kenya, want to make in the United States. Let me quote from another example. A student of plant pathology at Cornell University, New York: "His attitude toward his studies is excellent. He appears to have thought about the welfare of his people and how his training could contribute to it. Very co-operative and desirous of taking part in activities of faculty and students. He is Vice-president of the International Organization at this University." Another example. A student of political science at the University of Arizona, and this is one of the few girls we have sent to the United States under these programmes: "Excellent adjustment and general attitude; a born student leader with initiative and executive ability. Was leading figure in the International Students' Club where she was in charge of educational activities, the most successful endeavour of the club." Yet another example, if I may detain the House on this. A student of civil engineering at the University of Colorado, who from his name comes from the Kalenjin group: "Has now and always has had a wonderfully healthy attitude toward all aspects of life. No problems of adjustment whatsoever. He is one of the most popular students on the campus. We feel that all in all he has had a very rich and meaningful experience in America, and that too, when he has completed his requirements for a degree here he will have a great deal to offer his own country when he returns to Kenya."

Now these, I think, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are very encouraging examples of the benefits which can arise from a well organized and co-ordinated programme of student exchange with the United States. I cannot, however, say that I am quite as happy about those students who have gone to the United States under less official auspices. I have every sympathy with the urge for more education wherever it can be obtained, but there is a real danger that the casual patronage of those who happen to have contacts in the United States may launch ill-equipped, in the academic sense, and inadequately financed students on a course of frustration and despair. I have had special enquiries made, which are not yet complete, through the British Embassy in Washington, to ascertain whether any Kenya student in the United States is suffering real deprivation and hardship, and the preliminary results indicate that the difficulties encountered by these students can sometimes be exaggerated. It is much more frequent to find cases where the real academic weaknesses of the candidates, who have been somewhat hurriedly selected for such opportunities, leads to unhappiness because they cannot really compete with the courses on which they have embarked. It is much rarer to find cases of students who are suffering acutely from lack of financial resources. There is no doubt that many of them find it impossible to do more than meet their bare needs, and are therefore deprived of much of the stimulus which the social life of a university can provide, but if they have the necessary determination and character they will, no doubt, like students all over the world, see their own way through to the end. However, with the growth in numbers of East African students in the United States I have, in agreement with my colleagues in Uganda and Tanganyika, decided to ask the Secretary of State to create a post of East African Students' Adviser attached to the British Embassy in Washington, and provision for our contribution to this post is in the Estimates now before the House.

I sincerely trust that anyone who may be involved in the provision of facilities for Kenya students in the United States who will do nothing which might starve our own colleges of the best student material. I am convinced that opportunities for study overseas are most fruitful when taken at the post-graduate level, and if we are to build up our own colleges on the lines which I have indicated to the House, we cannot do so without a steady intake of our most promising students to take their first degrees there. Unless our own colleges have the right student material they will never grow to full stature, and it is surely a cardinal interest of the leaders in the East African territories to ensure that our own local institutions of higher learning get every possible support. What I might call the "poaching" of such students for studies in America would be a grave disservice to our country.

The lure of trans-Atlantic education also appears to be having another unfortunate impact on our development. Once candidates have been selected for higher education in our East African colleges, it is the regular practice for the Ministry to try to arrange opportunities for other school certificate holders to enter a wide range of local courses of vocational training. I refer particularly to the training of the K.T.1 teacher, and the various courses offered by the Medical Department. Normally there is a strong response to these offers, but this year the pattern has been sadly changed. Of 25 school certificate holders offered places at a teacher-training college not one replied. Insufficient suitable candidates for a course for assistant health inspectors were forthcoming, and it was not possible to mount such a course this year. Other courses in pharmacy, physiotherapy and for laboratory assistants failed to evoke the usual response. I am told that this phenomenon is largely due to the feeling among school certificate holders that if they hang around long enough they will be air-lifted to the United States for higher education. In most cases I doubt very much whether their basic academic equipment is adequate for them profitably to follow such a course, but in the meantime the country is losing their services in what may be less adventurous, but still valuable and satisfying walks of life. I frankly do not see that we can do very much about this situation, but I feel that I should bring it to the attention of the House.

One aspect of higher education in East Africa to which increased importance has been given by the pace of recent events is the work of the Extra-Mural Department of Makerere College in Kenya. I had the privilege of addressing a rally of Extra-Mural students in Nairobi a few weeks ago, and I was very much struck by their enthusiasm and by what I learnt of the value of the work being done by the single resident tutor, Mr. Hughes, and his mainly voluntary helpers, whom we have hitherto been able to employ in Kenya. This work has been, given enormous impetus and inspiration by Mr. Hughes, and I am very sorry that he is due to leave Kenya shortly on promotion to similar activities in Hong Kong. I would like to congratulate him on his promotion, and I am sure the House will join me in thanking him for the work he has done and initiated in Kenya.

I do not think we have given sufficient emphasis to this work in the past. Hitherto it has been separately financed by the individual Governments in relation to the activities carried on within the territories, but it has been agreed that as from the beginning of the quinquennium, which starts in 1961, the financing of this work throughout East Africa will be covered within the general estimates of Makerere College. In the meantime I am giving further thought to the possibility of some expansion of this work in Kenya in the coming financial year.

At the conclusion of this speech, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should like to refer to some other activities and interests which at present come within the ambit of the Ministry of Education. The first of these is library development. In my consideration of this problem I have had very great assistance from the energetic and experienced Director of the East African Literature Bureau, Mr. Richards, whose activities as a High Commission Service find support from us under Vote 13 of these Estimates. Many aspects of educational work in Kenya derive assistance from this service which, although it is one of the smallest of such organizations, has a record of publications produced and sold that many larger organizations with similar objectives have envied. It is a tribute to the pioneering work done by Mr. Richards that he was invited by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization to produce for them an international work on the problems of publishing for literacy in the less developed countries.

For schools, the Bureau either publishes itself, or obtains the publication of books in English, Swahili and the many vernaculars of Kenya; these publications range from reading primers to books and diagrams for the teaching of history, civics and economics. It encourages the reading of English by the publication of a magazine of which over 20,000 are sold of each issue.

For the education of the public generally, the Bureau produces primers to teach adults to read, books on agriculture, health, the work of Government and other subjects of interest and profit to the literate adult.

An aspect of the publishing work which is of great significance is the seeking out and helping of African authors. The organization was founded to develop a supply of literature in and for East Africa, and the Director and his staff regard it as of prior importance to get local writers to take their part in building up this new literature. An average of 60 to 80 titles a year has been published in 26 languages, and over two million of the Bureau's own publications have been sold. When it is realized that this work has been done by a staff that has never exceeded three senior officers, two of them with other duties as well as publication, and four or five clerks, this Government, I think, has cause to thank those whose foresight established the Bureau on such sound and economical lines.

The Bureau has another task to perform, that is the establishing and running of a lending library service. Valuable as its publication work is, it is of a temporary nature, for the policy of the Bureau is to encourage and promote publication of books locally by commercial firms, and it is thus working to the dissolution of this part of its duties. In its library work, however, it is laying the foundations of a social service that no modern country can do without. All it has been able to do so far with the small amount of money at its disposal is to lend small libraries for other people to run and to develop a postal library service for a limited number of members. Scarcity of funds has so far made it impossible for this, or any other East African Government, to devote to further development of library services the money which is clearly needed. I have, however, been giving much attention to the necessity of planning the kind of library service that the growing literate population of Kenya requires. We have managed to obtain a generous grant from Her Majesty's Government to make it possible for an experienced librarian to work in East Africa for several years. His duty, as far as Kenya is concerned, will be to work with a committee I have set up to investigate and plan the future development of our library services. It is obvious to me, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that this Government, which is spending at the rate of over £6,000,000 a year on educating people and enabling them to read, must give some thought to devising ways whereby books may be readily available to the people we have educated.

I hope that the work of this committee, and the services of the expert librarian to which I have referred, will help us to see the way ahead in the development of library services, since it has been a grave disappointment to me not to have been able to assist more generously such admirable enterprises, for example, as the Scif Bin Salim Public Library in Mombasa.

Museums are another educative influence in the life of the country. Dr. Leakey, as Curator of the Coryndon Museum, has established an international reputation, and has made Kenya known in scientific circles throughout the world. I would like to refer here to perhaps the less well-known Stoneham Museum near Kitale. In a lifetime of collection and scholarly research, Colonel Stoneham has built up, largely at his private expense, an unrivalled assembly of objects and specimens illustrating the archaeology, zoology and history of this area of Africa. He has also assembled a museum reference library of over 5,000 volumes or scientific publications relating to the subjects in the museum collections. Some of these books are very rare and of considerable value and constitute, with the collections themselves, a national asset which I feel it is our duty to preserve. It has been, again, a great disappointment to me that so far I have been unable to find the funds which are presently required to house these collections adequately, to make them more readily available to the public and preserve them properly for posterity.

Our present annual grant—for what I am convinced is a very important element in our national life—is the derisory sum of £100. When facilities such as libraries and museums have to compete in their claims on finance with the massive problems of expansion of formal education they inevitably come off very much second-best.

Now that the field of adult education has been made the responsibility of a separate Ministry I intend to explore the possibility of handing over these and similar responsibilities to a colleague who will, I hope, not be quite so ravaged in the assessment of priorities as I, perforce, have been. The frontiers of adult education have not as yet been precisely defined, although it is clear that been precisely defined, although it is clear that activity of the new Ministry. I have already

[The Minister for Education] arranged to consider this matter further with my colleague, the Minister for Labour, Social Security and Adult Education.

I realize, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that there is much of interest to hon. Members in the field of education which I have been unable to cover in this speech without excessively imposing on the generous tolerance of the House. My hon. friend, the Director of Education, will at a later stage in the debate supplement my remarks by covering many of these omissions and I hope the House will understand that the fact that I have omitted reference to questions of great interest to many hon. Members does not mean that they do not command my attention and regard. But I cannot impede the House indefinitely in its eagerness to express ideas on such a vital matter as education and I therefore beg to move.

The Minister for Labour, Social Security and Adult Education (Mr. Ngala) seconded.

Question proposed.

Mr. Muliro: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I must congratulate the Minister for having presented his speech so well as this Vote on Education, seeing that it is his last speech in this Council as a Minister probably. It has been the best that I have heard and I would have hoped to have him longer than this, but it is unfortunate.

When one comes to look at education, Mr. Deputy Speaker, one finds that we must now work for education for Kenya's citizens. Whatever methods, whatever policies, the Minister for Education has to bring forward to this House, all that must be aimed at creating better citizens for this country. I think the Minister completely — I did not listen to his speech yesterday and if he did say so he will correct me—ignored the idea of an integrated educational system for the whole of Kenya rather than continuing with this discriminatory service. I think if Kenya has to be one nation our educational system must be one so that the children learn to live together at school and they have to be brought up together like that so that they live as citizens of tomorrow. Now, if our educational system is to be on parallel lines, the Europeans have their own schools, the Africans have their own schools and the Asians and the Arabs as well. In fact they come down even to Muslim and non-Muslim schools for Asians and schools even for Goans. If we are having these various educational systems in this country, what it all means is that we are actually trying to create small nations within the same nation. I would say, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that if we carry on with this policy I do not know where we shall move to. This is a challenge to all people in this country who are determined to live in this country as citizens of Kenya. We must now think of one integrated system for our education. I know the various fears are from the European community. They maintain that once we have an integrated educational system the standards will drop. I do not know what these standards are. If the standards are to drop, even if the children mix at higher levels, these standards will go down inevitably, because if pupils from the Alliance High School and the Prince of Wales School go to the Royal Technical College to benefit by instruction at the Royal Technical College it shows clearly that the standards at the Alliance High School and the Prince of Wales School are very much the same. I have said before, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that we can never create equal educational opportunities on parallel lines. We cannot because we are bound to lay a certain emphasis on certain racial groups rather than on others. So on this I would urge the Minister for Education to work very seriously towards one integrated educational system. It might be difficult—and know it is difficult—at primary level, but definitely at secondary level we must make a start now. A certain percentage of places in European schools should be opened to pupils of other races. It should be done likewise in African and Asian schools. If we can start like that we will be at least administering some sort of treatment for these few Europeans who do not want an integrated educational system at all. I would urge them that if they do not want an integrated education system that the place for them is to move away from this country probably and go back to Europe where they will have their children educated without Africans or Asians.

Now, another point that I would like to raise, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is on adult education. I think the question of adult education which is now being given to a new Ministry is a very, very important problem for Kenya. Unless our masses are getting some form of education—and here I would urge that the Ministry of Adult Education now start some form of continuation evening classes in various townships, even in various districts which are even around teacher training centres. For instance, one could take a place like Kaimosi in my own district where we have got a teacher training college. These trainees could go out in the evening and try to teach the adults in intermediate and primary aided schools which we have plenty of in my home district, the adults who have never been able to go to school. Unless our masses are intelligent they will never be able to choose between the two evils in this country. We are talking of democracy, but we are not preparing the people for the idea. We must now start working for that and I think the sooner the Government of Kenya realizes that the better it

[Mr. Muliro] will be for this country. I think here is where the Colonial Office probably and the British Government, if they are interested in Kenya at all, if they are interested in our future at all, here is where they should give us some money and start trying to create that good future which everybody longs for. Whenever we talk about these things we are always told that the Africans are not ready for it. If we have not been ready for it for so many years under the British Government, this is the greater urge to be independent in order to work this thing out ourselves here in Kenya.

While talking on adult education, I would also say that we are very appreciative of the work the Makerere Extra-Mural Department have done in Kenya. The results in Nairobi have been very great and I think this should be expanded to all parts of Kenya. I think we should have three resident tutors in Kenya, one in Mombasa, one in Nairobi, and another one in Kisumu, and if the Kisumu one cannot work through the whole western part of Kenya we should have another one stationed at Nakuru; or the work in the Rift Valley should be shared between the resident tutors for Nairobi and Kisumu. This is what we would urge the Kenya Government at least to do. If we could get some resident tutors to be paid for by Kenya if Makerere could not afford it, we could do a service to our country like that.

Then I come to one of the most deplorable things in this country: the common entrance examination. I have said here on this Vote from year to year; ever since I came into this House, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the common entrance examination must be abolished. We have moved a Motion in this Council already. It has been accepted by the Government, that the common entrance examination would be abolished as soon as possible. That phrase "as soon as possible" is becoming very typical nowadays. As soon as possible: we do not know when it comes but it continues on and always the Government will use the same phrases. "We will deal with that as soon as possible." Now, I think the Kenya Government must wipe out this phrase from its vocabulary. The common entrance examination is doing no service at all to Kenya. As long as a child is just given a little bit of education and goes back to ignorance, that child is worse than the one who has never been to a school at all. I would prefer my child to be completely illiterate without having tasted education rather than have him thrown out of school after four years; that is, the boys and girls who are being thrown out are being thrown out at the ages of ten or eleven. Now, a child at ten and eleven, at least from eleven onwards, is in his adolescence stage, as we, the teachers, say. As all adolescents require careful handling by an experienced teacher, yet at that time our policy throws out thousands of children and they become the spivs in Nairobi, Kisumu, Mombasa, Kitale and Eldoret. Those are the ones whom you say are becoming a social menace, but they are a social menace not because of their choice but because of the bad educational system. I do not say, and I would be the last person to say it, that if there were no competitive common entrance examinations all the children could go on with education up to the age of fourteen or sixteen. Some of them would drop out naturally, but please let us wipe out the common entrance examination.

I know the Minister for Education will come forward and say: "Where is the money and where are the schools?" All these are problems but we know also that we can improvise some temporary schools and people are prepared to be voluntary teachers to teach at a given time. In fact, African teachers would willingly do it. I was a teacher. I would be prepared to overwork myself and teach in the morning and the afternoon — two classes rather than have the African children suffering. So this system of education should be equated. Not only should I like that, but it is discriminatory. It is only African children who have this examination and no other child in Kenya. The Asians do not take this examination, the Europeans do not take it. Why should we discriminate if we say we are looking for one Kenya where there will be no discrimination?

While talking on this issue of education, again I would urge the Government—and I regard this as the most urgent and a most serious issue now facing Kenya—when we look at our Northern Province, that the Northern Province is the most neglected part of Kenya. Just now you find people as disgruntled as the Somalis in the north who say they would rather join Greater Somalia than Kenya. But this is because the Kenya Government hitherto has never tried to integrate the Northern Province into the Kenya nation as such. This is the time we should try and give them more education. We should build more schools for the Northern Province. We should build more schools for the Masai. I think the concentration, Mr. Deputy Speaker, should be more in these areas than anywhere else in Kenya. When you look at the number of schools in the north at present, there are two intermediate schools only and so there are two intermediate schools only and so there is today in the Masai reserves. I think these people should be given more facilities at intermediate levels and once the number of intermediate graduates are many we should have at least, or the Kenya Government must think of, a secondary school for the Northern Province. Virtually every province now in Kenya has at least one secondary school. It is only the

[Mr. Muliro]

Northern Province which has none, so this is one of the issues which our Ministry of Education should consider very seriously.

Another urgent issue is the salary of the teachers. When one looks at the salaries of the African teachers in Kenya, one wonders whether actually the Education Department is interested in the teaching profession at all. The teachers work very hard all the time and find out later on that the pupils who have gone through their hands probably become clerks in towns like Nairobi and get very much more money than the teacher who taught him.

Hon. Member: Question!

Mr. Muliro: Well, you say, "Question", but you can find an ordinary K.P.F. teacher who becomes a typist in Nairobi getting definitely more money than some of the 12 teachers who taught him. That is a fact and if you want to query that you need only look at the statistics of the various departments and you will find that those clerks are getting much more money than the teachers.

Here also when you come to look at the K.T.I teacher, there is serious discrimination between the African K.T.I and the Asian K.T.I teacher.

The arguments which the Minister always advances is that the Asians have to be induced to teach. I would say that nobody should be induced to teach. A teacher is by profession a lover of children. Now, if the Asian members are not interested in teaching at all, what I would say is this, the answer is in integrated educational system. If the Asians there do not want to go to teach and they want to become lawyers or doctors, the Africans will teach all the children in Kenya. I am prepared to go to an Asian school and be the headmaster of one of their schools if the Asian teachers do not wish to come forward, so why induce the people who are not even interested in teaching the children; people who are interested in some higher salaries to come into the teaching profession? The best thing you could do is to raise the salaries of all teachers irrespective of their race, but to keep the African behind in salary and to tell them that we are raising the salary of the Asian K.T.I simply because we have to induce him, that cannot cut ice with us at all.

When the Minister came to talk about higher education I was pleased about his remarks but I did not very much like his ideas when he said that we have some students in America at present who have gone through, as he calls it, "casual patronage" and these ones are not doing very well. I regard anyone going out of Kenya as someone who will learn something from that by the very fact that if anyone leaves in this country even for a visit only to another country outside Kenya at least overseas this person is a better person, even if he does not come back with any certificate. For education in itself does not merely mean possessing a certificate. A certificate can be obtained by any rogue. One can be schooled but not educated because education actually is far more than being merely schooled. Therefore, I think the Minister should also consider that aspect of it, that by the very fact that you are here in Kenya you are now better educated about Kenya's problems than when you came here some three years back with Mr. Lennox-Boyd as Under-Secretary for the Colonies. I do not think you will argue against that.

Now, also I would say this, that if some of the best students from Kenya get the chance to go out to the United States of America, Britain, India or Burma, China, or any of these places, please let these best students go out and do not say, "Oh, no, let us fill our colleges here first", because I think even if the best students go out, we will be achieving very much more than by saying, "Let our best students stay close here in Kenya." I regard local education here as inadequate.

Now, another interesting point is this, that the Minister for Education thinks that only the first class divisions should be allowed to go in for higher education. But achievement in a given examination at a given moment does not in any way prove that that particular student is more brilliant than someone who will get a lower mark. One might be suffering from examination fever and, having been a scholar myself, I know that. During that time he is very emotional and finds that he does not do well. But I think the best criteria in all secondary schools is that records should be kept so that any student who wants to go out, even if he obtains a third-class certificate at his school certificate examinations, the principal can be asked "How was the progress of this student throughout the last two years, at least?" If it is shown that this person was quite brilliant, allow him to go wherever he wishes to go, even Makerere and do not confine him only to the first- or second-class certificates.

Now, finally, I would say this, that education, as I said before, regarding the Ministry of Agriculture, these two Ministries are the key Ministries in Kenya and, therefore, the men in these departments are the people who actually determine the future of Kenya. The Minister for Education, the Director of Education, and all the people in the Education Department must know they are harbouring a very great responsibility. The attitude of our teachers towards development to me is far more important than the attitude of probably any other people over on the opposite side because the whole education system must be aimed at creating better citizens and you can never get better citizens unless the teachers and all the people working in that particular department are contented and happy people.

Therefore, whether the Minister likes it or not, let him look upon the development of education with that in mind. First of all let him get a contented teaching service. Now you have got the National Union of Teachers. Now, all the problems of teachers should be through that department, irritating problems like what I have had to face here on discipline and all that should go through their own organization, and hence have a better contented teaching service. When in this Council I moved a Motion in this House that we must have an integrated teaching service, and the sooner that is implemented the better it will be for our future. We can never have an integrated educational service unless we start integrating the teachers in their national organization.

With these few remarks, Sir, I beg to support.

Major Day: Mr. Speaker, Sir, I would like to start by congratulating the Minister on what I thought was a very lucid and very sensible and extremely detailed speech. In fact, Sir, I thought it was characterized by the hard-headedness which we very often associate with people who come from north of the border in Great Britain. But I was very relieved, Sir, when the last speaker, the last hon. Member who spoke, said that he did not, as he did in the previous debate on agriculture, suggest that we had a lot of lessons to be learned in the matters of education because if we had studying what is done in Israel the New, Sir, I tremble to think what might happen to the educational system of this country—admittedly it would be thorough.

Now, Sir, I was very interested indeed on the subject of higher education and as far as Makerere College and the extra-mural—the money required for the extra-mural, the extension of the extra-mural—facilities are concerned, Sir, I cannot believe that anyone in this House would not agree with his suggestion, when I believe he said that he was trying to find this money.

Now, Sir, we all talk repeatedly in this House about this wind of change. It is a comparatively recent expression which was made, as everybody knows, by the Prime Minister of England, Sir, when this wind of change, or whatever you like to call it, is blowing, I think it behoves sensible people, of whatever race they may be, not to let themselves be blown away too fast by it. In other words, let us approach these problems, these complicated problems which are upon us today, and we all recognize it whatever our opinions may be, we all recognize it, let us approach, Sir, this very crucial and difficult phase in the evolution of this country with a sense of conservatism in its truest and best sense, that is to say, before any changes are made they should be studied very carefully, and let them be analysed, whether these changes will ultimately devolve to the benefit in the main of all the races in this country.

Now, Sir, I do not wish to press the Minister by asking for too many assurances, but in a time of change it is quite natural that the minorities should indeed ask for assurances, and I would ask him this. I would like him to assure this House that whatever changes may be coming in the educational structure in this country the standard will be made higher and not lower, that is to say, the standards of education, and the final product of that education will be what will always be its goal and objective, that is to say, a high standard of the final product.

* Now, Sir, in this business of the wind of change and the Bill of Rights—we hear so much of this jargon these days—it would seem to me that it is reasonable and just to expect that any community and any parent has the right to ensure that his children are educated in that manner and in the tradition and in the general standards and, Sir, indeed, perhaps most important of all, in the religion in which he himself wishes to have his children educated in. Therefore, Sir, all this talk of integration and compulsory integration, sometimes as we hear it suggested, is to my mind quite immoral, quite wrong, and cannot in any way be substantiated in the sense of justice as most of us or all of us I hope in this House understand it. It is admittedly true to say that any parent will always have the liberty of educating his child as he so wishes it providing he has the means to do so. Well, Sir, there are many people from all the communities in this country who do not possess those means, and it is to those people, Sir, that I suggest this suggestion or talk of integration is likely to be most damaging, most unsettling, and, Sir, to cause that very lack of confidence which he has talked about so much in this House recently; because part of the economic stability of this country is to depend on the importation of skill then, Sir, those skilled people must have the right to educate their children as they would be able to do; Sir, in the countries from which they came. This is elementary justice.

Sir, I do not wish to continue at any length, and unless it be misunderstood by people in this House that I am endeavouring to put forward an [Major Day] objective of this nature from a racial point of view I will tell them that it is not so, that what I am endeavouring to say, Sir, is to urge the Minister for Education to regard this problem with justice, with a due regard towards attracting people into this country who will increase the ultimate economic stature of this country, and in doing so, Sir, will provide those means possibly which will raise the standard of living of all the people of this country today; because that, Sir, is basically what I think we all wish to do in this House, and that, Sir, is one of the main objects of education.

I beg to support.

Mr. Travadi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I am not going to make a long speech today with a time limit of only 30 minutes, but I would say that after hearing the Minister I really think that the wind of change has swept over the heads of this Ministry tremendously to an extent that today in spite of the fact that today the Estimates are based or are framed absolutely on racial lines he has kept away himself from those racial talks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, last week a friend of mine of this House, I should say, without mentioning the side, told me, "Mr. Travadi, when talking about education why knock at the stone wall for nothing? You are going to get anything." I told him that I remember some Christian friends of mine talking to me that there was something of the sort of an advice in the Bible to say, "Knock at the door and it shall open." If I go on knocking and knocking a day may come, because if the cause is a righteous one, and if the thing that I am after is really a righteous cause, and an injustice is being done for the last 30 or 40 years, then I am pretty sure that one day a day will come when somebody will hear my cry, if not here at least somewhere outside this House and the things will be remedied.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, coming to the aim of the Asian education and the obligations of the Government to each race and more particularly towards the Asian, as I am now speaking on behalf of the Asian community, so far as the Asian community is concerned, Mr. Deputy Speaker, hon. Members do not know that they are being treated in a way they ought not to be. The authorities treat the Asian community as if its members are in Kenya but not that they are of Kenya. I repeat again, that the educational authorities treat the members of Asian community, and the children, as if they are in Kenya but not of Kenya. Nobody knows yet and more particularly, I, a man who has been taking so much interest in education, what the obligations of the Government towards the Asian children are. To me it appears that the education is in the main no doubt being given to the Asian community, but it appears to me to be a sheer waste. I am not talking about the higher education at the moment but I am just confining myself up to the secondary course.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I feel there is a lot to be said about this as I am really studying the developments of education for Asians, but I am entirely dissatisfied with the progress that has been made. I was also thinking that with the arrival of two new Members, one the Minister for Education, and also the new Director, our things will improve. But to my utter surprise I am beginning to feel the other way about. I wanted really to congratulate the Minister today for having tackled the African education in detail to an extent that any third party can very well say that it is really satisfied as to how the Minister has analysed the situation. But he has entirely missed or omitted deliberately the two sides of the education, the Asian and European education. We know at the moment, Mr. Deputy Speaker, what is taught as education in our Asian schools. The teachers there no doubt will keep the class quiet by teaching here and there and after a year's progress we have our prize distribution ceremony where we Members and more particularly the heads of departments, particularly on the education side, are invited there. The Principal preaches a sermon and then after that some prizes are given, and thereafter a few Indian dances are performed, and the show is always over. We do not know the intrinsic value of what education really ought to be, there is no seriousness felt for Asian education anywhere else.

Now I am just confining myself because the time is very short to two points and more particularly I would touch on secondary education and its senior Cambridge examination. The results of the last year, Mr. Deputy Speaker, are that the higher school certificate, out of the 50 who sat for the examination, only 26 passed. That was called 52 per cent result. Out of the school certificate examination, out of the 1,247, Mr. Deputy Speaker, 706 passed, that is 56.34 per cent result. But one must know what the total number of students in the secondary education was. The total number on the roll was 10,608. Such a big number only produced 26 higher school certificate passes and 706 school certificate passes. In contrast to these, Mr. Deputy Speaker, out of 3,189 European students, 92 appeared for the higher school certificate and 71 passed, the result being 78.25 per cent. In the school certificate, out of 509 over 455 passed. The result is over 90 per cent pass. In looking at the contrast [Mr. Travadi] I should say the money spent on Asian education is a mere waste. I do not say that it has been in any way extravagant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, talking about the qualified staff in the Asian schools, I remember in the year 1958 when the hon. Nominated Member, Mr. Nurmoahmed, put a question to the Minister, when Mr. Luyi, the then Minister for Education, replied, he said there were sufficient numbers of qualified teachers to man the Asian schools up to 1960. The question now arises, does the Minister hold the same view now or is he satisfied that the answer given then was a correct one? Because I know as a matter of fact that out of the 60 or 64 aided schools there was not a single qualified teacher in 44 schools and the answer here is that up to 1960 there were sufficient qualified teachers to man the Asian schools.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Minister referred to the question of replacing European teachers in African schools by training more Africans in the training centres, but so far as the Asians are concerned the process, is the reverse. We had this problem, I am not talking from any racial point of view, let that be made absolutely clear, I am not speaking from a political point of view, that also I would like to make clear, but on our side and coming over to our side and being dumped on our side, Sir, the Minister should take note that we resent this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, recently we had two or three examples in Nairobi at the Ngara Secondary Modern School, they call it a secondary school, there is another school, Eastleigh Secondary School, too, to which European principals are being sent. I also understand that in Mombasa a European has gone or is going or something of that sort. Now, this question of Europeanizing our Asian schools has had the attention of this House and with Government not only now but during the years of 1926, 1927, 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, and even in 1950; and again now the educational authorities have the audacity to raise this issue again and make a move in this matter. Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like to know if the Education Department can supply here to this House the number of European principals with their qualifications at least in Government Asian schools as at today and how many were there in 1950 so that we may know at least during the last ten years what number of principals there were and what changes have taken place since.

I would also like to know the number of applications that have been received by departments for secondary schools so that we may know how the decision was arrived at, whether there were any Asian applications and whether their qualifications were sufficient to justify the appointments.

I would also like to know, or this House to know, the results at least for the last three years, particularly for the English, language, of the senior secondary examination, what was the percentage of passes, both in the language and the general passes of the senior secondary examination of the Asian schools where there are or were and still are European principals, so that a definite comparison can be made as to the fitness or otherwise of these European principals doing such jobs in our Asian schools.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I can appreciate very well the necessity for a European or English teacher so far as the language side of the teaching goes. I am not opposed to that, and that is the reason that I am only speaking from the educational point of view and not from any racial and political point of view; but just because there is a racial point of view; but just because there is a man here and a man there you should go on the pushing that man on to the Asian side when the other side is being vacated. I have a strong objection to that. I know that arguments could be advanced that the tuition under a European principal would be the best. There would be a European argument also that if you do not have a European principal the efficiency of the school may suffer. The third argument also is being advanced, if I remember rightly, that the impartiality of European staff is beyond Caesar's doubt. The fourth one is also said to us very often that Indians or Asians have some sort of a religious bias either against the Muslims or against the Hindus. I hope I would not be called upon to answer these replies because I am fully and thoroughly prepared for that. I do not want to take much of the time and go into the detail.

I also understand and appreciate the appointment or the engagement of European principals in private and/or aided schools, say the Ismaili schools and others. I know that there they are the boss. The boss is not the Education Department with a European principal, and the Minister for Finance on top, and the top one, also, the European one, the Minister, etc. The boss is the managing committee of the community which has engaged him and that makes a lot of difference. I just would like to let the House know that I am not unaware of this issue as I have got a like to dwell much on this even speak for hours on this issue, but I will confine myself to this.

Coming to another subject with regard to the Woodhead/Harper Commission recommendations about one Asian Assistant Director of Education, and his appointment in this Education Department, a week before an answer was given that

[Mr. Travadi]

Mr. Amar was ably filling the post of Acting Assistant Director of Education. Cannot this Minister or the Education Department create one more post and add one Assistant Director to the Estimates to say that he is in charge of the Asian education, and not just to go on asking that man to go on lingering, lingering and lingering, and acting, acting and acting, when the demand for such a man in charge of Asian education is over a score of years old? I remember in 1942, and in 1943, that we have been hammering at the Governor, the then Governor, and even at the Education Department, and pressing upon them to have one Asian in charge so that we may know where we are leading to. Up to now, as I have said before, the Asian community does not know what its education system is leading them to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker we had a lot of agitation over the K.A.P.E. passes and things like that, and a visiting Commission, headed by Mr. Woodhead and Mr. Harper recommended that there should be Modern schools, that they were an absolute necessity in Kenya, and the Director of Education, if I remember rightly, in the Advisory Council's meeting, even if I remember rightly, if I read it, in the Annual Report, even the recent one of 1959, and at one of the prize distributions meetings promised that from 1960 at least onwards there would be a third year for the modern school courses, and I am told, and I think it is on very good authority, that at least in Nairobi, if I am right, they have not yet started. Now, what is the good use of two years modern education to boys of 13 and 14 who hardly know their jobs and yet they are thrown on to the streets to lead their lives, and to earn their livelihoods. Will that boy be able to? Will the Minister, after putting his hand on his heart, say that that boy of 15, 16, or 17, or whatever it may be, after two years, Sir, of modern education, or at least seven years of primary education—I am not talking about modern education in the United Kingdom, in modern education there they have got up to five years education, and from the examination will lead him to the technical college, but really here everything is debarré so far as the Asian is concerned—I therefore ask the Director of Education to tell me why and what are the reasons why you have not started? Are there not sufficient numbers of boys and girls to carry on for the third year? If you say that only that boy should be given third year modern education who has completed the 12th year in Standard VII then look at the seven years before. If the child is admitted at the age of 7 he has to complete a least seven years primary course, so he will be 14 when he gets into the modern first year. How can he be there at 12 years of age when he is 13 or 14 already? It is impossible, and then you impose the condition on him that because the boys or children are not available there will be no course. There has been this trouble for the last five years, from 1955 and 1956. Either we have good full modern education or we do not have it at all. But why this sort of business of bluffing going on so far as the Asian community goes?

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you remember or the House will remember when we last year discussed the Woodhead/Harper recommendations that it was brought to the notice of this House that the Minister or the Education Ministry had appointed a Committee to examine and advise on the education of a unified teachers service for teachers serving in Asian schools. The Government had accepted the recommendation of the Commission in Sessional Paper No. 4 of 1958/59 gave, and the following were the words, "it will certainly do its utmost to make conditions of service in all schools as uniform as possible." The reference is paragraph 35 of the Sessional Paper just now referred to by me. For this acceptance of the recommendation by the Government I remember that congratulations were showered on the Ministry and the Director and the Minister at that time. What was the recommendation of the visiting Commission? Here are the words, "F. (6) The conditions of service in aided schools should be gradually made similar to those that obtain in Government schools." Page 36 of the Report. Now, will the Minister therefore submit that Committee's Report here to this House, whatever the recommendations, and the reasons why they have not been accepted, so that the House may know what is going on from behind the scenes, and far the information of the hon. Members of this House I would also add that it was in the year 1949 when the Hartwell Committee was appointed. That particular Committee also made a similar recommendation.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have got a little bitter thing to be said here, and that is about staff quarters in aided schools, and that is with regard to the capital grant. I understand the Education Department does not give the grants to aided schools to build quarters for their staff. I do not know where lies the hurdle. These grants are always on a £ to £ basis and, if I remember rightly, even 75 per cent or something over 50 per cent or 60 per cent would be given if there is a real demand for it. This was a recommendation also of the Hartwell Committee and is not the provision for building housing for grant aided school teachers, part and parcel of education, Mr. Deputy Speaker? Then why no grants or capital grants are given to these Asian grant aided schools to built quarters for the school teachers.

[Mr. Travadi]

Arising out of this generalization I would like to know whether it is a fact that the Asian staff quarters at Nyeri are being built with the funds collected from school children. I underline the words "from school children", and the word "from" and not even "by". The second question is, what the Government has to say to this, and what is its policy towards this. The third question is, does Government encourage such a practice of collecting money for staff quarters from school children; and when I am putting these questions I have got sufficient material before me, a sort of an official document, written by an education officer to the school concerned, and referring to another school, that this school is doing it, and why do they not do it. "You ask children to collect funds for your staff quarters." Is this thing tolerable, Mr. Deputy Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have got one more point to be made clear which is in regard to the Minister when he referred to the appointment of an adviser of the U.S.A. British Embassy. I was in England on the round table conference and had an opportunity to meet many East African students there and there the Kenya Students' Adviser—I know his name well but I do not wish unnecessarily to bring in his name here—but the complaint was against him not just from one or two but from over dozens of students that they did not fare very well with the advice of that official. When I came back to Kenya I verified many of the complaints and even one or two responsible persons substantiated that there were a lot of complaints against that particular man, and I hope, without going too much into the details that the department concerned will make a note of it and takes the necessary action to avoid further, unnecessary representations being made.

I beg to support.

Mr. Mboya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I want only to make a very few observations during this debate. My hon. friend, the Member for Nyanza North has made a number of points on the Minister's speech, which I cannot but merely endorse, as they represent to a large extent, what many of us think from the African point of view about this particular debate. I would like when the Government speaks later in the new development plan or in the new plan after the Beecher Plan on education, they have in mind to take care of the present problem that exists, vis-à-vis those African children who are unable to continue school after Standard IV and also those children who are unable to continue school after if A.P.L.

after Standard VIII. The Government must be aware that there are numerous of these children today who are thrown out of schools, and who, either because of their age, or because of not having sufficient education are neither useful to themselves nor to the country as such. I do not believe that we can afford to ignore the large potential that exists in these children, and I think that if for no other reason, but for the fact that we are deeply concerned with the economic development for our country we should do whatever is possible, and indeed urgently to make use of this large potential. And especially this would apply in the case of children at Standard VIII level, some of whom are of an age that they could usefully be made use of, either in some training programme, or in industry under some apprenticeship system. I have said, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for the last few years in the House, that it is possible, in fact to introduce a system, which would require, compulsorily, if necessary, that such children are made to go to some training institution for vocational or technical training consistent with the immediate needs of the country. I cannot overemphasize the great danger that exists today, especially in the urban areas, when we have some of these children coming to towns, which indeed they must do, since there is nothing for them in the reserves, and seeking jobs which they cannot get, ending up (frustrated, and ultimately becoming destitute, and ultimately becoming criminals and spies. I think it is necessary that this particular problem be looked into, not only this educational problem, but also as a social as an educational problem, but also as a social problem, and I would like to hear the Government, when the Minister replies, to tell us what, if any, they are prepared to do further on this question.

There has been a statement made about the expansion of education, and the emphasis on secondary schools. This we support with every strength and means that we can afford. We ourselves have felt the need for secondary schools, and have, in fact, gone further than merely asking the Government to do something about it, by expressing the readiness of our people if necessary, to help contribute towards the capital cost, or other expenses involved in terms of an educational rate or an educational tax. We would like to co-operate with the Government in expanding the educational system, and the only condition, of course, that we have, is that we should be fully consulted on whatever programme the Government has in mind if we have to pay an extra tax. I think that no African today in whatever remote part of this country can minimize the need for his children's education. On the contrary, many of them will sacrifice practically anything in order to secure education for their children.

[Mr. Mboya]

I would also like to hear something from the Minister when he speaks on what he said about emphasis on secondary education rather than expanding the lower level of education. And also, he said something about the gradual approach to universal education. Perhaps when he deals with the question of children at Standard IV level the Minister or the Director of Education might tell us what plans they have in mind regarding our consistent demands for the removal of the Standard IV examination.

Now, Sir, the Minister, when he spoke, emphasized the need for expanding the teacher training institutions, and attracting more teachers, and indeed I heard him say that it might become necessary to pay inducement pay for some teachers to come to this country.

The Minister for Education (Mr. Mathieson): I do not think that I said that, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I think what I was referring to was the hope that I had to offer some inducement next year to graduates of Makerere College to enter educational training there after graduation. That, I think, was the only occasion on which I used the word inducement in my speech.

Mr. Mboya: I am glad to hear the correction. The point I am trying to make is that whereas there is this emphasis in the Minister's speech for the need to even induce Makerere graduates to go back to Makerere and take a diploma in teaching, I am informed that in the last year or so a number of African graduates, who have returned to Kenya after training overseas on Government scholarships, and some of them have been teachers before they went to Britain, and their academic standing in the universities in Britain was so outstanding that they were given further grants to continue post-graduate work, have come back, only to be told by the Education Department that they had no vacancies, and we have—I see the Director of Education shaking his head—we have cases of this kind where these people have had to go and seek employment in Uganda, and in one case the chap has had to return to Britain in order to get employment in the teaching profession. It does seem to me that either we have an explanation of why these people could not get jobs, or that something is definitely wrong in the department. If, in fact, the Director of Education, by shaking his head, indicates that he was not aware that some people had applied and been refused jobs, then, of course, something is definitely wrong, unless, of course, we are to be told that their qualifications were such that they were not suitable as teachers. But, as I say, some of these people who have been refused jobs, or who have been told there were no jobs, some of them were teachers before they went to Britain, and even more important we, the taxpayers of Kenya, paid for them to go to Britain and allowed them to use the money to train and get degrees in certain fields, and even gave them further grants for post-graduate work, and it would be ridiculous, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to suggest that having freely agreed to give them money to go overseas and train in those fields, that when they come back here we tell them that we have no jobs for them. I would strongly question the wisdom in paying for their education in the first place if that were to be the case. I would strongly question the wisdom of encouraging them, at Government expense—at the taxpayers' expense—to undergo six years or four years' courses in the United Kingdom, only to come back to their own homes and be told they had no jobs.

Only a few minutes ago, my friend, the Member for Central Area, was talking about the need to have teachers other than Europeans in responsible positions in the Asian teaching service in this country. Now, Sir, we, the Africans, would like also to advance the need for promotion opportunities for Africans in the Education Department to jobs of responsibility. So often we are told that the reason why there are no Africans at the highest level in the department is because there have not been any with either the required qualifications or the required experience. But if, Sir, when they return with the necessary qualifications we tell them we have no jobs, then it will take a hundred or a thousand years before we can have people with the necessary qualifications, and who also have the necessary experience. And I therefore call on the Director of Education, or the Minister, to explain precisely what has happened in this particular case.

Now, the next observation I want to make is with regard to higher education. The Minister stated in his speech that Makerere would not be taking any of the Cambridge school certificate boys or girls as from next year. Now, I did not clearly understand whether this referred to the intake this year, in other words, last year's Cambridge school certificate boys and girls, or it referred to this year's, in other words, the boys who will sit for the Cambridge school certificate at the end of 1960. Now, Sir, I see it refers to the boys and girls who will sit for the Cambridge school certificate at the end of this year, and I want to make this point. Whereas Uganda and Tanganyika already have institutions which will enable them to send to Makerere people with higher school certificate, it would appear that Kenya, by agreeing to this joint agreement—or by accepting this joint agreement—because I understood it to be said that this was a decision of Makerere and also the territorial Governments

[Mr. Mboya] I would like to know why supporting Makerere, I would like to know why Kenya should have supported this decision before we were ready, before we were in a position to compete for places in Makerere with the other two territories. Is it being suggested that for the next year we do not pay any money towards Makerere?

I know that we have some students there already, but not only do the other territories have students there already, but for the next two years, when we are still pioneering with the Higher School Certificate in Kenya, they will be sending students to Makerere. I would like to know why it is: (a) that we were left behind by these other territories, and (b) why we agreed this decision before we were in a position to match the facilities in the other territories? I would also like to know how this decision affects the next year's intake into the Royal Technical College, because otherwise there seems to be some disparity in the status that will be accorded the Royal Technical College, which, as I understand it, is intended to become a university college, perhaps by next year, when they have the next intake. It is my own view, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that Kenya should not have accepted this decision at this particular stage. That Kenya, in fact, should have moved much faster than we have moved, and that until we were ready with enough schools providing for Higher School Certificate we should not have been ready to accept this decision on the part of Makerere.

It was stated, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that by next year there will be about five schools that will provide opportunities for Higher School Certificate education, and that it would account for about 160 of our very best students. Now, Sir, I would like to know the relationship between the 160 students and the total number of students who will be sitting for Cambridge School Certificate next year. I would like to know also what is the ratio between the 160 students and the number of students who have, say in the last five years, gone successfully through Cambridge School Certificate. It is very easy to tell us, we will have five schools with Higher School Certificate training. It is also very easy to say we will be providing opportunity for 160 of the very best students to study at these five schools, but I think the picture is incomplete until we know from how many students we are going to choose the 160 students. And I would also like to know if this figure does not cater for the greater percentage of the students that would normally qualify to go on for higher education, what plans there are: (a) for those who fail to go into these five schools, and (b) for expanding those five schools rapidly to meet the demands of the country?

In so far as scholarships or overseas educational opportunities are concerned, we have, of course, the Kenya Government scholarship schemes, but I think it must be recognized that apart from the students we send to the Royal Technical College and also to Makerere there are many African students who would, in normal circumstances, and in countries with greater facilities be able to pursue education at the university level. The students have to be catered for, too. Our own facilities for students to go to Europe or to Britain, and also under the Commonwealth scholarship scheme, are very, very small indeed, and I want now to say something about the private arrangements that some of us have been able to make for students to get out to go to other countries, the United States, Ethiopia, Liberia and also the contribution that is made by India, Pakistan, Western Germany and Italy in the last few months, and other countries. I want especially to say something about the American scholarship programme with which I am closely associated, because I have seen, not only in the Press, but also I have heard some criticisms by some Members, and there was a reference to it in the Minister's speech. I think there is a very serious misunderstanding as to the nature of the private scholarship programme.

First, the programme developed out of the discussions held between myself and Dr. Kiang and a number of American people and also American institutions. We consider that it is not only our right, but also our duty, to supplement the present efforts of Government by expanding the educational facilities at the highest possible level to enable our students who cannot go to Makerere, the Royal Technical College or the United Kingdom, also to have an opportunity for university education. We consider it, in fact, a responsibility on the part of any African leader to do what he can to try and help African students who may wish to study overseas, and it was out of this consideration, recognizing that it was both our initiative and duty to do so, that we took the initiative to arrange for scholarships for African students to study in the United States and in other countries.

It was difficult to organize a scheme such as this. Firstly, there is the distance involved, and therefore, the physical difficulty of the institutions in the United States to be able to establish immediate contact with the students who may apply to enter those institutions. Consequently, there is also the problem of transportation which has to be met by all these students if they wish to go to the United States. There are many institutions in the United States that will give partial [Mr. Mboya] of full scholarships to students to study in their country, but these institutions do not give the transport facilities that are necessary. In the past, there have been Kenya students who have privately, on their own initiative, applied for admission to various American colleges. They have been admitted, but some of them have not been able to go because they have not had transport to the United States and, therefore, the original idea was to help such students to get enough money, or to raise enough funds for transport to the United States. That was the original idea.

After we had helped a number of students with transport, the demand for this service increased, and more and more institutions also got interested, and during my last visit to the United States in 1959, during the whole tour at various institutions I visited I discussed the possibility of scholarships. As a result a number of scholarships were arranged. The procedure which is used in accepting or admitting students is as follows. The students apply in the normal way by filling up the forms provided for by the universities, and the universities, after studying the students' application forms and all the relevant documents, such as their certificates, their school leaving certificates and various recommendations decide whether the student is qualified or not for admission to the institution. We do not here, locally, decide as to whether or not the student is qualified for admission. We only make it possible for the contact to be made between the institution and the student who wishes to apply to the institution. We also make it possible for the student, once he has been admitted, to travel to the United States, and in so far as choice is concerned, we were limited merely to the choice of filling up the places that exist on the charter plane in the last year's programme. We do not have so much the choice as to which students will be admitted and in what institution. If, therefore, there should be any academic difficulties in the way of those students who are admitted into various institutions in the United States, we, as individuals, or as an organization, cannot be held responsible for this final choice of the quality of the student.

Now there have been suggestions by some people that perhaps the students who were going to the United States were merely the left-overs or undesirable elements and so on. I most emphatically wish to deny this. I do not think that the students who have gone to the United States have been of the worst quality, or that they have been merely chosen, as was reported in the Press this morning, on political considerations. That is far from it. We have sent some students who have had two years at colleges. Some of them have been those with first-grade school certificates, and certainly the various institutions have insisted on the highest possible qualifications before admission.

It has been suggested that some of them have met with academic difficulties. Now, Sir, I would say that it is not strange when a student goes to a United States university and finds some academic difficulty. How many students have we sent to Britain who have failed or who have met with academic difficulties, and who have been on Government scholarships? How many students have gone to Makerere and failed or met with academic difficulties? Why should we expect the African student who goes to the United States to be superhuman or any different from his fellow African student who has gone to other countries? I therefore completely, completely wish to deny the suggestion that because one or two students have failed, that therefore the type of student we have been sending to the United States is necessarily of the lowest type. In fact, I can produce evidence to show that the students who have gone to the United States have not only competed effectively with the other students in the United States, but that in some cases they have come on top, as a result of which some of them have been transferred to such well-known institutions as Harvard and so on. Many of them have entered for scholarship competitions, and have come first out of 6,000 candidates. That is not a record to be ashamed of. It is a record to be proud of, and I am completely satisfied that our students who are in the United States are doing all that is possible within their capacity to uphold the good name of Kenya in the educational world.

The suggestion has been made by some people that these students are undergoing hardship. In fact, I think it was the hon. and gracious lady, the Member for Uasin Gishu, Mrs. Hughes, when she came back she said that there were some students undergoing hardship, even up to a point almost of starvation. Now, if this is true, Sir, it is a very serious situation. If it is true that there are some students today in the United States from Kenya who are starving, then I say that it is a very serious situation. I am in touch with not only the student body, the Kenya student body, in the United States, but also with the African/American Student Foundation which is in touch with all the individual students in the United States, and I am not aware to date that there is a student from Kenya in the United States who is starving, and I would be very happy of the hon. Member would let me have the names of the students she has met in the United States, and who have told her they were starving. In [Mr. Mboya] fact, I told the Minister outside the House, that if he had any information of this nature we would be very glad to have the information, not just because we want to be able to ascertain that these allegations are true but because we would certainly like to be able to help such students, if at all they are starving and to find some help for them.

Now, Sir, I am not saying that every student in the United States is living in comfort, palaces, in luxury—far from it. But I would submit that neither is it true that American students themselves live in palaces, in luxury and comfort. Quite a few American students are undergoing difficulties or hardship. There is bound to be some hardship of some sort. The question is what hardship we are talking about. If any student leaves here to go to Makerere, or to go to the United Kingdom, for example, and does not expect some hardship, well, then, I think he should not go at all.

Many African students who have come back to this country with degrees have undergone some hardship, and I do not believe that our boys or girls should be led to believe that when they go to the United States they are going to live in luxury. They are going there to do a job of work, and if they have not got the strength of character and ability and courage to stay there and work hard and succeed, they have no business going. So if anybody suggests to me that this is only a question that is limited to our students who have gone to the United States, I would say certainly that man is very ill-informed. I have visited students in India from Kenya and other parts of Africa. I have visited our students in London, and I know that our students in London undergo a lot of difficulties or hardship, despite the Government scholarships. I have, and I am sure the Government has, information to the effect that some of the students to whom we give Government bursaries are writing back to say they have not got enough money, and they would like to have a little bit more money.

Now I cannot find, therefore, that there is any strange situation in so far as those African students who have gone to the United States is concerned, but I say again, that if, in fact, there is a case of a student who is starving, then please let us have the name so that they can be given the necessary help, instead of trying to use this sort of thing merely to hit at the programme to try and destroy it, which is what some people are intent on doing. Some people have been against this programme ever since it was started. Some people are against it merely because the students are going to the United States. Some people are against it because, perhaps, they have other personal or ulterior motives. We will not allow those motives—we will not allow these destructive elements—to destroy that programme. That programme, we think, is making a useful contribution. It is filling the gap which the Kenya Government and this country cannot afford to do at the moment, and I think it should be encouraged rather than discouraged.

If there are any useful suggestions that might help on the question of preparation and orientation of the students before they leave, we will welcome those proposals or suggestions. If there are any points on academic questions which the Education Department, or anyone else, wishes to make, we will welcome these suggestions and try to use them. In fact, I would even go further—that we would be prepared to avail ourselves of the services of a member of the Education Department to give us ready and technical and other advice and assistance, in order to make sure that these criticisms are fully met. I would be prepared to make room for that sort of assistance in the programme, but let us not try to be negative about it and merely try to destroy the programme.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy): I am afraid your time is up, Mr. Mboya. I have let you run over a little bit.

Mr. Mboya: I thank you very much, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I perhaps forgot to look at the clock, but I think this is a subject which has been so badly misrepresented in the past.

I beg to support, Sir.

Mr. Blundell: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have only two small points which I wish to raise with the hon. Minister. In 1952, as a result of a Motion which I moved in this Council, we set up by Ordinance the Higher Education Loans Fund, and in the nine years during which I have been and in the nine years which I have only had, I think, one operating it we have only had, I think, one default on the money which we have loaned to parents or to students for higher education overseas. And not only that, the number of students, boys and girls of all races, whom we now have mainly in the United Kingdom, is now having about 120 to 123, so that under the something about this scheme, which was initiated by provisions of this scheme, which was initiated by myself, we have had the benefit as a Colony of educating 123 people at any one time in the United Kingdom successfully.

Now that is done by an allotment of £5,000 a year in the Budget to the Board for apportionment to students. There was no specific undertaking by Government in the Ordinance to give £5,000 a year, but Government has regularly given us £5,000 a year, and it was accepted that that would be done until the sum reached

[Mr. ole Tipis]
I hope he will do all he can to help because, especially when we are out to try and encourage the Masai to get educated, we should at least do everything possible to help them, especially as far as the education of the girls and the boys is concerned, and I hope he is doing something about it.

Now, the other thing is that I note from the Minister's speech that the policy as far as the expenditure and the planning of the elementary education is concerned, he said that the basic unit in educational administration and planning is the D.E.B. which finances elementary education for Africans in the African district council areas as to one-third from tax yields. Now I know the Masai are having quite a lot of difficulties now, especially those boys who come from the remotest parts of the country where parents are not interested in the least in education. The difficulty they are having is that they are rather encouraged to send a boy to school and when the boy is asked to produce the school fees, he fails to produce the fees and then he is thrown out of school. I should have thought that way to get out of this difficulty is at least to allow the people, I mean the taxpayers, to rate themselves to provide additional money for these boys who are being thrown out of schools. Let the people, the community, the tribe concerned, help until such a time as these people can really see the benefit of education. We must do every thing to encourage them.

Now, the other thing, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is that I should have thought, and I would very much like to emphasize this to the Minister, that sympathetic consideration to Masai, or other backward tribe students who manage at least to get through the overseas school certificate examination, should be helped to go either to Makerere or the Royal Technical College or overseas without insisting on their having attained a first grade pass in this examination. That is the only way of helping them out. Also, it is really depressing to see that even in such areas which are so backward, the Education Department still insists on the competitive entrance examination, just hundreds and hundreds of children turned out of school, they have no future at all, and, in fact, they disappear in the reserves, having attained absolutely nothing. On the whole, I think it is time we got rid of this competitive entrance examination. It is doing a lot of damage rather than good, and I do not think we can really go on with it. Now, the other thing is the question of adult education, because every time I raise this matter I am told that quite a lot of money or profit money accruing from sales of beers in the municipal or county council beer halls goes towards providing services for the Africans. I know we have got a few of these social halls in the settled areas and I would only be too delighted to hear from the Minister as to how many of these halls have adult education or evening continuation classes for the employees residing in those areas. What we have, of course, is what they call the Maendeleo ya Wanawake Clubs here and there in the district and that is all. What about the employees on the farms? What are we doing about them?

Now, I do not want to spend more time on this, but on the whole, I would really ask the Minister to do all he can to help, especially in the areas I have mentioned, because if we do not do more, or a lot, in those areas, then, of course, we are retarding the progress of the rest of the country.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Conroy) resumed the Chair]

With these few words, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Kirpal Singh Sagoo (Nominated Member):
Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I would like to start off by congratulating the Minister, not only on the able manner in which he has introduced his Vote, but also on his wonderful achievement in persuading the Treasury for an increase of £660,500 in that Vote. Now, Sir, that increase is amply justified, and I am sure the hon. Members will endorse my remarks when I say that the money spent on education is money well spent. The only complaint that I ever have is that it is never enough.

Sir, I would like to touch upon a subject which I must confess has caused me considerable anxiety. It cannot be said, Sir, that the increase in school fees has not had any after effects, especially amongst the poorer sections of the community.

I wonder if the Department has any statistics available or has thought fit to initiate them to verify these effects of the increases in school fees. For instance, I would like to know firstly if there has been a drop in the number of pupils as a result of a rise in these fees and if these figures could further be broken down to show the boys and the girls thus affected separately in order to ascertain whether the parents in fact attach equal importance to the education of boys and girls, or not. Secondly, have an incidents of malnutrition or similar ill-effects been brought to the notice of the principals which could be attributed directly to the rise in the school fees. If so, what action is being taken to remedy the situation?

[Mr. Sagoo]
Thirdly, Sir, has there been an appreciable increase in the remissions? The House will remember, Sir, that when the increases were introduced I sounded a note of warning that the committees dealing with the remission of fees should give generous and sympathetic consideration to those applications. I would like to know, Sir, whether my prophecy then has come true today.

Now, Sir, in order to assess the marginal cases as a result of the last Kenya Asian Preliminary Examination provincial committees were set up under the aegis of the Education Department. I can confidently say, Sir, that their work has proved to be most satisfactory indeed. I say so, Sir, of my own experience on the Central Committee, and I am sure that if the member for the Eastern Electoral Area had been present here he would have said the same for the Coast Committee.

Speaking at the opening of an Asian school only last week, His Excellency the Governor laid great stress on the teaching of English in the Asian schools and very rightly too. In this country the official language is English. The Advisory Committee on Asian Education some years ago recommended very strongly the introduction of English as a medium of instruction right from Standard I. I know that the Department has accepted and in fact implemented that recommendation. What I would like to know is what success we have had with this experiment and how far has it been extended. For, Sir, I cannot too strongly emphasize the need for teaching not only good English, but better English in the Asian schools and the Department should not leave any avenue unexplored to achieve that end.

Early this year, Sir, a motion was put forward by the Member for Nyanza North, who also I am afraid is not present in the House, which called for a unified service for teachers and with an amendment from the Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade, was accepted by the House. I wonder, Sir, if any scheme is being formulated or if any move is being made by the Department in that direction? For, Sir, I am particularly anxious to see that the teachers in grant-aided schools are put on the same footing as the teachers in the Government schools.

In the past, Sir, I have time and again emphasized the need for playing fields, especially attached to the schools. I am told that there is no Crown land adjacent to those schools. Well, Sir, I would like to suggest most humbly that if there is no Crown land available in the vicinity and if there is a piece of private land available instead that it should be excised and the owner of such land should be compensated adequately. Forgive me for being so parochial, Sir, in pursuing this point, but I have got a specific case in mind and that is that we have a piece of vacant land in between the Ngara Primary School and the Ngara Secondary School in Nairobi which would make a playing field ideally suited to the needs of both the schools. Sir, I am told that that piece of land is partly Crown land and partly private land. May I suggest, Sir, that if there is any money left at the end of the financial year which is unspent it could be very conveniently used to purchase that little bit of land.

Speaking of the financial year, Sir, I think I am correct in assuming that this is also the end of the three-year development period. I am certain it would be of interest to the House to know how much capital has been spent (a) during the development period now ending and (b) during the present financial year. And again, may I repeat, Sir, it would also be of interest to know in view of my previous remarks how much money has been left unspent.

I hope, Sir, that the Minister will forgive me if I have sounded too much like a school-master asking most of the questions, but then in introducing his Vote he confined his remarks mostly to African education and I do hope that he will not mind this extra homework in answering the queries that I have raised.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to support.

Air Commodore Howard-Williams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, at the abortive Lancaster House Conference, already confused by events, I suggested that a fund of £25,000 should be created with the object of giving and taking care of the education of the younger people of this Colony towards their ultimate destiny of interdependence based on the test of merit and ability, experience and integrity, which the Leader of the House conceded to me would be the criteria of the future employment of people by the Government. Now, the money has not been forthcoming, but, Sir, I would like to suggest that we do not despair. There are other methods that we should adopt, particularly in this House.

I recently applauded the hon. Minister for Commerce and Industry for his suggestion that we should consider the possibility of all races paying an extra poll tax towards education. The African race, of course, in particular, and the idea of that would be to develop their education and the existing educational system. That is the way, I suggest, Sir, to take the political mickey out of education on the principle that we want to raise rather than lower the standards and that seems the only way we can possibly do so without the large sum of money I suggest being forthcoming.

To lower the standards for any race would surely be, suddenly to introduce changes in the monsoon and leave the ship of the new state of Kenya in irons, proceeding backwards because of the undercurrent of political opinion. As someone who was educated beyond the primary stage, I must in truth admit that the other day I was shown a paper in mathematics by a young boy of 16 and I sat down to attempt this paper, when it would seem that I was not in any way in sympathy with the examiner. I found it rather beyond my powers after half an hour, and this young man passed that paper with, I think it was, 85 per cent. There is no doubt, Sir, that standards are rising. Then, for heaven's sake, let us foster that development if we foster no other.

I oppose the Motion in that there is no reference to the excellent suggestion put forward by Dr. Kioko, and I consider that is the way to progress. One thing is certain in my opinion, Sir, and that is that our African friends, when they get control of this Government, will take notice of Dr. Kioko's suggestion and of what I have now said.

I beg to oppose.

Mr. Muchura: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I think the statement or the speech of the Minister in moving his Vote was a very good speech in that it did give us a lot of inside information on what has been happening not only over the past year but during the years that have passed from the time the Beecher Report was written down to the time when he was delivering his speech. In the first one he gave us an example of how they were trying to tackle the teacher training problem and also how much they were trying to do in the way of scholarships for training teachers in the universities and other places. The next thing which I welcome, and have always been connected with, is the question of technical education in the shape of the Kenya Technical Institute. I think this should be ready by this year, and I hope all the plans are ready in detail for working it.

The next one which pleased me most was this appointment of the students' adviser, or an organization, as it is in London, in Washington, D.C., because I remember discussing this with some people who had been connected with the students' unit or advisers of the desirability for somebody to whom the students in the States can go, especially those from the British territories, and especially from East African territories. I am glad this appointment has been made and this, I am sure, will be a great help to the students now.

At the same time I must say it is probably one of the few Government departments or Ministries that have realized that things do move pretty fast sometimes, and with that realization they realize that the Beecher Report, although it was meant to be for ten years, is already ten years behind by now, and so they have worked up their own schemes without this report. They are decentralizing and trying to bring in some ideas which, according to them of course, will be of great help in the education problems as they stand today.

I would like to welcome the enumeration census to be held next year to try to find out exactly the country's requirements in the way of education at primary, intermediate and secondary levels which I think will be a great help because without that it will be very difficult really to work up or draw up a programme. I accept the idea of appointing more education officers and assistant education officers to try and work up this decentralization programme. I did not understand the mathematics but he said that they are providing education, I think, at primary level, for between 110 per cent and 120 per cent. It may be, as my hon. and gallant friend here says, that there have been advances in education, but this one I cannot accept.

Now, the next points which I would like him to deal with when he replies or when the Director of Education replies, are the following. Last year I raised the question of private schools with money subscribed, buildings put up by private people, mainly Africans. There is no mention of it and I still feel there is need and room for it. I am talking of schools to be built and be put at the disposal and supervision of the Education Department officers and inspectors and the like. What is the Government's opinion about it? Can Africans put up their own schools?

The next point is probably affecting some of the items in the Heads. I do not understand the Mombasa Institute of Muslim Education having an extra £4,000 added on to its Vote. Is it one of these schools that is supposed to be a grant-aided school because this is something extra over and above the others (I cannot remember what it is called, but is it a part of these grant-aided schools)—is it a religious institution or what is it? Why is it not treated as other grant-aided schools are?

Now, the other item I could not understand, and here I may have to declare my interest, is B5 I and K1 5. The first deals with training for Government officers, £2,600, and the latter is the Kenya Development scholarships at £5,000, which is an increase of about £500. I declare my interest in this that I am a member of the Kenya Development Scholarships Committee. I cannot understand this because the scholarships are for serving officers. Now what is the other one for? Why are they put under two separate Heads? I would have liked, if I were in the position, to make that total £7,600 because I only know it too well—as you heard the Minister for Agriculture was complaining because he had not got enough agricultural officers. Last year, and it is no secret, and the year before we turned down quite a lot of applications from the Agricultural Department because we had not got the money. If we had that money at least one or two would have been away by now taking these courses. Probably one has gone, but I do not know the figures. But what I am trying to suggest is this, that there may be a very good reason why they should be under two different Heads, and that particular Vote K1 5 needs an increase, to be able, to do the sort of thing that the Minister overseas for Agriculture is doing with some assistance from the United States, i.e. send suitable candidates. It is not that we did not get the right and qualified applicants but merely that we did not get the money to enable them to go.

The other point which I would have liked to raise is what appears under the Head B4 I, and it is what is called a combined cadet force, with an allocation of £4,500. I do not understand what that means. I do not know what it is supposed to be doing with a sum of £4,500, an increase of £3,200 from last year. I would be glad if the Director or the Minister could tell me exactly what that sum of money is used for. I would have preferred to have that sum of money used, say, in the Kenya Development scholarships and therefore raise the total from £5,000 to something like £9,500, which sum will enable the Board to send not two but probably three or four more serving officers for studies overseas to have higher qualifications so that they can do better.

Now, the next point which I want to talk about, and this has been mentioned here by many other speakers, is the question of extra-mural work of Makerere. I may have to go into greater details about this particular subject because once again I am a member of the Advisory Committee on the extra-mural work in Kenya and have been since the beginning. Last year I did suggest that it should have been possible to have another resident tutor in Kenya at least. This was not done but of course the Minister referred in his speech to the fact that this was something he considered to be worth while. This was because, I think, he attended the Kaloleni Rally last month. Now, if somebody asks, "What is the value of this and what does it do, and how is it working?" for those who may not know we have had a resident tutor for three years. He has been trying his best to work between here and Nyeri, Mombasa and Kisumu, Nakuru, and all the centres, and tripping up and down, trying all he can to organize classes and going round himself to give lectures. Now, he has done a sterling job in Kenya and I was very sorry to hear from the Minister this afternoon that he is soon going to go to Hong Kong. What is unfortunate is this, that the present director at Makerere came from Hong Kong and they rob us of our man to go to Hong Kong, merely because of some technicalities and indecision. However, he has done a lot for Kenya in the extra-mural field.

I have evidence that there is a great demand for extra-mural work in Kenya. Last night I met a friend of mine from Machakos where they have formed one of the seven extra-mural associations, and this simply means that people get together, talk about it, appoint a chairman, arrange for the lecturers with the assistance of the tutor who is in Nairobi, and these people tell me that they have got their association going and have arranged a series of lectures, and there was no question that in fact all the possible assistance has been given to them.

Now, the next one is further proof that there is a great demand for this. The Minister for Education, I am sure, is in possession of a paper containing a resolution that was passed by the students from Kenya who attended the fourth annual study vacation at Makerere at the end of last month. The resolution reads as follows, and I quote, "We, the Kenya students from Kenya attending the Fourth Annual Study vacation of the Department of Extra Mural Studies at Makerere wish to record our profound appreciation of the part played by the Government of Kenya in developing and financing the invaluable work of the Department of Extra-mural Studies. However, in view of the fundamental political, economic and social changes which are crowding in on Kenya and which affect most its adult population, we feel most strongly and urgently that the present provision of only one resident tutor in Kenya serving only in the Nairobi area on a restricted budget is not only inadequate but quite unrealistic. We therefore feel that it is imperative that two further resident tutors be appointed at the earliest possible moment to extend the work to Nyanza and the Coast regions in which we know from our own experience that there is a very real demand for this most urgent need. We wish therefore to urge the Kenya Government in the strongest possible terms to do all in its power to establish two such resident tutors within the present financial year, that is 1960/61."

[Mr. Muchura]

We note that in the Budget now before the Legislative Council the proposed Vote for Education is £4,166,700. Of this only £4,012 goes towards the extra-mural work in Kenya. We understand that a further £3,620 would be sufficient to cover the total cost of two resident tutors and their work for the six months from 1st January, 1961, which is probably the earliest date by which someone could be appointed. Now, that is the opinion of those students from Kenya who attended the study vacation. Out of the 200 students who attended 80 came from Kenya and all the students came from the three East African territories. So we had more than a lion's share of the numbers of students attending. Out of those some of them were students or past students of the extra-mural class and or associations, and had been attending courses, mainly around Nairobi, and some of them from associations in Nyanza, Nakuru, in Kisumu, and the like; and that resolution was their considered opinion.

Now, as to the cost of this scheme. The whole of this programme is going under the College Quinquennium, and the next one begins not earlier than 1961, about the middle of next year. But if it is allowed to wait up to that time the first tutor that could ever be appointed could only be available early in 1962. The Department of Extra-Mural Studies admit that the first priority is the Nyanza Region. This is not the Kenya Advisory Committee, of which I am a member, but this is the decision made at Makerere, and that is what the Director of Studies will put before the Academic Board and all the other boards which are connected with this. Now, as has been stated in that resolution, this is my request, that this Government—the Minister for Finance is not here but the Secretary to the Treasury is around—should make it possible for the Minister for Education to be able to have these two resident tutors within this financial year, and the sum of money quoted is £3,600, or thereabouts—I am sorry that I have mixed my figures up—and that the Minister for Finance should make it possible for the Minister for Education to appoint these two tutors within this financial year, i.e. the earliest date would be from 1st January to the end of June, 1960. I think it is highly probable that that is the time that the Quinquennium of the College will start and if these tutors are already there the College will find it very difficult not to take them on within the beginning of their Quinquennium. For your information we had a meeting with the Principal of Makerere, who attended our meeting as a visitor, and I felt that he was favourably disposed to try to assist in this work. Now, for the information of the Minister for Finance, these courses cover a wide field of subjects and they are aimed at our adult population, not necessarily the old-age men but some of the younger men who are employed but who spend their time in the evenings studying. The subjects are varied and cover a wide field such as "Functions of Adult Education", "What is Democracy?" Economics, Agricultural Economics, Intelligence, Good Laws, West Indies, Colonial Development in Africa, "The University and You", Rural Economics, "What is a Good Film?" Literature, Sociology, Local Government, Psychology, Finance in Under-developed Countries, Economic Development in Ghana, Constitutional Changes in Nigeria, Government, and "What is Education For?" International Background to Education, Introduction to Symphony, Advanced Economics, Kenya Economy in 1960, to Current Social Problems. Instead of people sitting at home after work or going to beer shops and other places I think the time spent attending some of these courses is not only of help to the individual himself but to the general benefit of Kenya. Out of those ones, I am not very good at statistics, but I will give some indication of what is being done. We have got at least about 50 tutors who have helped us up to 31st March this year, that is about three-quarters of the academic year which closes at 30th June. Out of those 50, ten were African, five were Asian, and this number is limited by funds and not by the demands. Now, the Resident Tutor here is given £720 to pay the tutors or the lecturers, less £200 which should be collected in fees and normally they collect between £120-£150. That leaves between £650 and £670. The lecturers are paid at the rate of Sh. 30 per meeting and that one compares badly with the figures in the United Kingdom. It is very low, because in the United Kingdom they are paid more per meeting, up to Sh. 80. Now, the fee charged is 50 cents per time—it is not free—which is also higher than it is in the United Kingdom, even now, leave alone at a comparable stage of development as Kenya is today, so the fees do compare unfavourably with the United Kingdom and our teachers do it at a much lower figure than they would have thought of doing it for in the United Kingdom and the fees are comparatively higher. Now, I would have liked to suggest, and here I appeal to the Minister for Finance, that if he did make this possible for the Minister for Education to find these two resident tutors for a period of six months beginning on 1st January, 1961, to 30th June, 1961, this will not be a recurrent expenditure on his part because the Quinquennium will have taken over and will continue with this, and not only that but one would have put in even more of the work which it is suggested should be done almost immediately instead of delay. The chances to get such people are not easy. But at least I would very strongly urge the Minister, and his colleague the Minister for Finance, to make this possible because it is a great help and contribution to the future of Kenya.

Commander Goord: Mr. Deputy Speaker, after listening to these learned and technical discourses on education I feel I should apologize to the House for rising to speak on a subject upon which I really know nothing about. Although I spent many years on a District Education Board I never really succeeded in mastering the technical jargon of T.I's, T.2's, sidestreams, slipstreams and all the rest of it. Nevertheless, Sir, I would like to say a few remarks in support of some of the matters which were raised by the Member for Central Rift and earlier in the Budget debate, I think, by the Member for Rift Valley, and that is the question of African education in the settled areas. I think it is very well known that in the settled areas African education has lagged behind for various reasons. The basis of education in those areas is of course the farm school, and I think the reference to employers and farm schools by the Member for Central Rift will in part be appreciated by those farmers who have provided schools; but he did rather speak as though they were very, very few and far between, whereas actually there must be many hundreds of them—possibly the hon. Director of Education would tell us how many there are later in the debate—and in my experience there is always a long waiting list for registration. There are more farmers wanting to start schools than there are teachers to man them or supervisors to supervise them.

The farm schools will necessarily, I feel, be the basis of education in the settled areas for many years to come, but I, for one, have long looked forward to the time when we shall move to something more like a village school and that with the extension of the community-centre principle we shall get the schools moving into those centres where they can be larger, have a higher quality staff and a much better standard of supervision.

Now, Sir, the essence of the matter which I wish to raise here, is that in the settled areas there is a strong desire on the part of the African population to make a greater contribution to their education than they are making at the present time. In the recent amendments to the County Councils Ordinance provision was made for a local authority to raise a rate for capital purposes and I believe in two places at least this is going forward, I would hope to see that extended. But I believe the authorities are a little disappointed that having done this, they find that they are merely the agents to raise the money and they immediately hand it over to another authority—namely the District Education Board of the Education Department actually to spend it. I do think that they wanted to have a certain amount of credit for the erection and ownership or management of the schools.

A movement now, however, is to extend this movement from the African people, to extend this in the direction of recurrent expenditure, and here undoubtedly certain difficulties arise. In the first place, of course, much of the labour in a settled area is not in itself settled. Again a man working in a particular area may have some children in say Kisumu and some he wishes to put to school locally. Then again there is the question of the enormous amount involved in recurrent expenditure and it does seem dubious as to whether useful amounts for recurrent expenditure could be raised through any sort of local tax.

Now, Sir, I do feel that there is a problem here for Government. We have a certain potential for improving education in the area and it is hardly necessary to point out that that potential can be far better used by applying it locally than by applying it nationally. The hon. Member for Nairobi North did suggest poll taxes for education. I feel that there is considerable merit in this suggestion, particularly if it replaced an element of the present personal tax. But nevertheless, a national poll tax has very much less appeal to the individual than would a local tax to build a local school. So I do hope, Sir, that Government will examine this problem and see how they can use this local potential, to which, in common with the Member for Central Rift, I hope would be added, a contribution to the potential from local ratepayers, and see how they can apply it to the general problem of raising the standard of education in the settled areas.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Pandya: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I must congratulate the Minister on the way he introduced the complex Estimates of his Ministry. The increase of £500,000 in the Recurrent Estimates on Education can but be welcomed by this House for we have always demanded better and adequate facilities for education of children in this country. But it is also very important to decide how this money should be spent in the interests of education. All anomalies—and there are many which do exist between the Different rates—should be removed. I did ask, Sir, in the main policy debate for uniformity in the application of rules for different rates. Here, Sir, I want to refer firstly to the method of collection of school fees. In Asian schools the procedure is to demand fees in advance and if these are not produced on demand, the children are not allowed

[Mr. Pandya] to enter school. Now I understand, Sir, the procedure in the European schools is quite different and indeed I remember one or two years ago having seen an item of considerable bad debt for the non-payment of school fees. But, Sir, I have another reason for my protest. The burden of collection of school fees on the principal and the staff of the schools is indeed causing a great hardship and annoyance to these education people who could better devote their time to teaching instead of worrying about collecting fees, keeping accounts and banking the money received by them. This was expressed in no uncertain terms at a recent School Day in Mombasa and I do urge the Minister to seriously consider this matter and effect better efficiency and better administration and better use of the staff to more proper educational matters and to do something to overcome this position of deficiency.

Now, Sir, there is also another point of difference, and that is I understand on reliable authority that unqualified European women teachers receive a salary of £651 as against unqualified Asian women teachers of £187 10s. Now, Sir, this is bad enough as it is, but it is worse when such European teachers are posted to an Asian school. Let us examine what are the practical effects of this move. It is firstly totally wrong to give different treatment to those employed in the same school, particularly the difference being on the grounds of race, when it is remembered that both these teachers are unqualified women teachers. But the disastrous effect is that the extra salary eats away unnecessarily, whatever little is granted towards the expenditure on Asian education and I hope, Sir, that this is another matter which the Minister would look into.

In the Development Programme for 1960/61 Table 3 shows the scheme values for the three years 1957-60 and then the amount spent in the first and second year and what it is intended to spend in the current year. Now when one looks at these figures on Asian education, it is enough to reveal that very little was expended in the first two years of the Development Programme and that out of a total of £613,000, proposed to be spent over the three-year period, over £400,000 was to be spent in the current year. Now, Sir, I would like the Minister to tell us whether he expects the whole of this sum to be spent within this current year, or is there going to be a large sum carried over to the next development period? This is most important in view of our previous unhappy experience when large sums of money were voted in Development Estimates and which have remained unspent and, indeed, were not carried over to the next development period, with very disastrous effects when particularly we have been clamouring for more accommodation, more schools for more children who are unable to find places in the present over-crowded schools.

Now, Sir, I want to say a few words on modern education. The Minister is aware of the feeling of the Asian community on this matter and indeed he knows the reasons why the community has opposed this system of education so I do not propose to repeat these reasons here in great detail, particularly when this system was begun at a time when schools were badly equipped, were badly provided with staff and with textbooks. Also there was then the problem of accommodation. But Sir, at a recent prize-giving ceremony at the Eastleigh Secondary School last month where the Minister was the guest of honour, the Principal, I think, doubted the value of the modern course, whether the finance was really justified, except that he recognized the only questionable merit that two extra years at a school would be better than no school at all for these children. He also questioned whether there was better hope for these children after their so-called qualification and whether they would really be able to get jobs, particularly when so many able children in receipt of an academic qualification were finding things very difficult. Now here was the opinion of someone, Sir, who in the words of the Minister himself "has a distinguished record of devoted and long service since 1929" and under whom, Sir, I had the very great privilege of being partly educated. Of course, Sir, the Minister in his reply on that day in his inimitable style, justified the policy of modern education, particularly when the trend in Britain today is not very favourable to this type of education, provided for the so-called backward and slow children.

Now, Sir, in the policy debate, I had made the point that the Advisory Council on Asian Education was unanimously against the increase of the school fees and in reply the Minister said—and I quote, "Well, Sir, I was frankly not surprised that the Advisory Council was against an increase in fees." Sir, if he anticipated the advice of the Advisory Council, where was the necessity for him to consult this body? And previous to that the Minister had an indication from the Asian Elected Members that they opposed the proposed increase in school fees.

Sir, does the Minister feel and think that the advice of these public workers from all over the country—and mark you, Sir, these gentlemen were appointed as his advisers by the Minister himself—was not worth it? What is the use of having such a body if the Government time after time flouts the advice that is given by these people in good faith and in all sincerity? It seems, Sir, that the Government pre-determines the policy on [Mr. Pandya] Asian education that it will not accept the advice of its Advisory Council until it suits its own policy.

Sir, I would also like to ask the Minister what useful function does this body perform. When the Government in most cases acts in a very autocratic manner and does not accept advice which is sincerely tendered in the best interests of the community by the people who should know its own community. Does the Minister forget, Sir, that the Advisory Council members were prepared to discuss with the Minister and his advisers other measures that could have been taken to overcome the difficulty, to overcome the extra expenditure and if the Government members had thus extended its hand of co-operation; but this was not accepted and I think the Minister has made it abundantly clear that he does not intend to accept the advice of the leaders of the community who were selected to serve on this Advisory Council, except when it suits the policy of the Government. I suggest, Sir, that this is a sad reflection on the state of the relationship that exists between the Education Department and the Asian population.

Now, finally, Sir, I want to refer to a matter that has been raised several times in this House. It was raised today, and that is with regard to common schools and integrated education.

Now, Sir, the Member for Aberdare who was speaking today said that we should view the changes with a little conservatism. I think that when the Member for Nyanza North spoke he was even more conservative when he suggested that only a limited number of children be mixed in the different schools of different races and a start be made on these lines. Now, Sir, I can do no better than, on this particular problem, quote from a broadcast of Dr. Leakey who is, as everybody will accept, a true and full Kenyan, born and brought up in this country, who is the distinguished curator of the Coryndon Museum and he had this to say, and I quote: "Another fear of the Whites is that Africans and Asians want to send their children to the Government controlled schools on an equal footing with their own children. Why not, provided it is a truly equal footing? I see no reason why a Luo, a Kikuyu, a Sikh or an Ismaili who can qualify to enter the Prince of Wales or the Duke of York School in open competition with my sons or grandsons should not do so. If they can go to public schools in England, why not here? I should like to feel that future African leaders and administrators had had the same cultural and educational background as I and my family." He goes further and has this to say: "If we do not want our children to be educated in multiracial schools, we can always send them to private schools, and if we open our schools to members of other races both in respect of entry and of qualification and without any lowering of standards (which I think is worrying most people), we shall get only the best and ablest of the other races who are likely to be the future leaders. I would like these potential leaders to grow up with my children and have the same ideas about culture, manners, honour and sense of responsibility as I hope my children have. You cannot argue that selection for Government posts must be by merit alone and then prevent potential leaders of all races from getting the very training that will allow them to obtain posts on a merit basis."

I, Sir, endorse every word of what Mr. Leakey has said and feels so strongly about. This is the reason, Sir, this is the heart of the matter and the sooner we adjust our ideas according to the changing conditions, the better it will be for the interests of all the peoples who live in this country.

•Sir, I beg to support.

The Minister for Labour, Social Security and Adult Education (Mr. Ngala): I would like to congratulate my colleague the Minister for Education for the very brilliant introduction of this Vote. The Minister has been in this country a very short time but he has wonderfully adapted himself to the Ministry and shown very good understanding of the educational problems of this country. I think he is a credit to this country.

I would like to show one aspect in which I have very much appreciated the Ministry's attitude and that is in the aspect of higher education. As a person who has been very much at the education focus of this country, I have watched his steps in this aspect of higher education and beginning with the Royal Technical College I have seen it growing from the moment of his arrival in this country when African students were complaining of wasting their time for the first two years they were in the Royal Technical College, to the present moment where the College has assumed a different status altogether and when a special relationship is being obtained with an overseas university so that the college is able to award degrees. I think that the Royal Technical College for the short time we have had it, is real progress for those who are interested in higher education in this country. At the same time the intake in Makerere College has increased during this period and I think this reflects how much interest the Minister has in higher education.

Now, the Working Party Committee on Higher Education has ended with the possibility of having an East African University. Now this, again, is progress. During this time there has been the introduction of five centres for the higher school certificate in the African education. I would like to know whether the Minister is really satisfied that the five centres will meet the recent ruling that was passed by Makerere College of having an intake of students that have attained higher school certificate. This ruling has been brought rather suddenly, perhaps, to us and I would like to know because there are many Africans that are very much concerned about this ruling in relation to the admission next year to Makerere College.

Now regarding higher education for students going to America is concerned, I think having freshly come back from the United States, and also having seen some of our students in America, I am probably in a much better position to say exactly what the situation is in America.

First it would be quite wrong for anybody to suggest that these private undertakings of sending students to America are a waste of time. I think it is quite wrong to suggest that, and I do not think that the Government side has suggested that at all. I have seen students in universities that are doing very well. I observed three of our students and one was a girl at a place called Atlanta University. She was doing very well, so well that the mistress in charge said that this girl was a credit to Kenya. Now, I was very much touched and pleased by the record of her work. In another university at a place called Berea College in Kentucky, I met a student who was actually left behind by the air lift here in Nairobi who, by his own arrangements, had got through to the university and he is doing very well too. Now, in Tuskegee I met a student also who has gone on his own arrangements, does not get any bursary and has impressed the principal so much that the principal has offered to help him as much as possible.

This certainly reflects the keenness and the hard working attitude of the African students that go over to the United States to study. Of course, one naturally expects difficulties, particularly when the students go to a country which is quite strange to them and with very small financial assistance. I have got a number of the problems which concern the students which I am going to put to the African Elected Members' Organization for discussion and some aspects I intend to put to my hon. colleague for consideration. I feel that in view of the good work which I have seen being done by the students there, the country as a whole should do something about these students in America.

I think I would say that our local education is not adequate but its quality is just as good, as education provided in many other countries which I have seen. Of course, it is not adequate in the sense of the extension of it and provision of it and I hope that we shall work out and make the necessary facilities for higher education as expounded so that more and more students get a chance of having their higher education more easily available in their own environment, but this is not to suggest that they should not go overseas for further education.

Now, as far as adult education is concerned, this is an aspect which has already been dealt with by my hon. colleagues and when I produce my Vote in due course, I will dwell at great length on the policy of the new portfolio for adult education. During this time I hope to reply to my friends, the Member for Central Rift and the Member for Nyanza North.

The common entrance. Now, I think the time has come when a serious step to accelerate the idea of doing away with the common entrance examination should be considered. I think it is well understood that the Africans generally are not satisfied with four years' education for his child and I hope my colleague will look into the possibility of accelerating this scheme. I strongly feel that it is not just sufficient to leave it to the Africans to contribute on a poll tax basis, I think some real undertaking should be done. In places where we have seen this being undertaken, it has always been speeded up by either Local Government's sincere co-operation or Central Government's sincere co-operation. Of course, we are limited in many aspects but I would like my colleague to look into this very seriously so that some attention is given.

The question of Mionie in Mombasa is very important, particularly at this time when we are very much interested in the provision of higher education and I would recommend that this issue is taken up so that the country in general and the Coast Province in particular gets a chance of having an institution which is profitable and of a standard which is comparable to any institute of a similar kind in this country or elsewhere in any country. There are buildings here, there is very good equipment and probably the academic standard and the staff ought to be looked into and if this is a possibility it ought to be gone into, but to date it has not been done in the past and this is something I would like my colleague to look into.

The integration. Now, I believe that integration of schools it is time that since the public—all of us—the country seems to be interested in this, I believe that a committee should be set up to go into this and give us a full report on this subject, because so many people are interested in this in the country today, probably it is time that a committee should be set on this.

[The Minister for Labour, Social Security and Adult Education]

With these few words I would like to support the Motion.

Mr. Mate: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I congratulate the Minister for Education on what I consider to be a very clear statement of policy and tackling what I consider to be the very difficult subject of education.

I felt that it was a well thought out programme and I think that there is very much that the Minister should be thanked for. He said that the aim is to improve the present structure and strengthen it here and there, so that we could have a better education in this country. But, Sir, the most important thing we want to see in Kenya is expansion, and my suggestions to him are going to be based mainly on what I think could be done to expand the system.

Sir, as far as the African community is concerned, and in line with the other communities in Kenya, education is regarded as perhaps priority number one for the progress of this country; we shall urge for the abolition of the common entrance examination and I would like to hear a clear statement from Government as to what programme there is for the abolition of this common entrance. I should have liked to hear a statement as to how many more intermediate schools Government proposes to put up next year, and the year after, and when they think that they might have solved the problem. I say it is urgent because if we wait too long when only a percentage of the African children go to school, we shall never change our course. There are areas in which the children do not go to school now, but if we could achieve a state of education in these areas where children go to school, by the time all the children in Kenya are going to school, we shall have achieved the basis for further expansion. I would like to hear from the Minister later on what programme he has, whether two years or three years for having eight-year education. It is not enough to say we are doing more. In this particular case I would like him also to say how many intermediate schools are proposed for Meru District for next year. The reason is this, this year we had been allocated a few extra schools after the first term and we were told through the District Commissioner that we had better wait and not build those schools because next year we will have many more schools.

So, I would like to hear how many more schools are we going to have next year in Meru District because of this particular hold-up that we have. On the side of the secondary schools, I am glad to hear that he is proposing to have 15 more secondary schools. I hope that in opening these schools Government are going to seek the assistance of the people themselves, and that they are going to ask if the people are prepared to do something about it themselves. I say this because I feel the African in Kenya has been hindered by this Government by not being allowed to run schools himself. There is the example of the African Christian schools in Fort Hall, in the Githumu area. These schools are African schools. I do not see any reason why Africans themselves, like Government, or the missions, or other private bodies, should not be allowed to go ahead and put up their own schools. Government will continue to tell us that they are going to put up more schools, but they are losing a lot of opportunity. Before the Emergency we had independent schools in many parts of Kenya. They got mismanaged, but it does not mean that we have no funds, no buildings, no teachers, and the sooner Government opens the way for Africans to help themselves by opening more schools, the better. I would agree with the Member for Nairobi North that there should be a levy, together with the poll tax, in order to raise the educational facilities in Kenya, but I would go even further. When in an area the parents are prepared to put up money, and they are prepared even to put up money for the salaries of the teachers and houses, we should be allowed to do so, and I do not see exactly why the Government should say Africans should not be allowed to run schools for themselves. The Europeans do it, the Asians do it, and the Arabs do it, and why should we not, and I hope soon Government will change their policy on this particular restriction.

These schools should be subject to inspection like any other schools, but there should be another system in the country for improving education. Our boys try to go to Uganda every year to the schools there. Why not put up schools here? I do not think Uganda have any better materials than we have in the way of teachers or in the way of children, and I hope the Government are going to consider this matter seriously.

The other point I should like to mention on the intermediate schools and the technical schools is libraries. These are very important. Where schools do not have good libraries and there is a shortage of teachers, the children's education is hindered, and I would like to see more libraries and better libraries in the schools.

On the question of teachers, I should like to mention the problem of housing. I did raise this point again in this House that in all schools, in all educational institutions, houses should not go by colour or race. They should be shared out by priority according to arrival. I know schools where Europeans are given preference.

We have got Makerere graduates today who come to teach in these schools, and I do not like to see this kind of thing go on, where African graduates are given inferior houses and Europeans are automatically given better houses, and I mean it seriously. If the Minister is interested I will give him the particular cases I have in mind and the particular places. I do not think I should mention names here, but I would be quite happy to give him details.

The other thing is planning. The Ministry of Works sometimes surprise me when they plan houses. I quote an example of a school laboratory which has big laboratory windows, but no expanded metal wire for protecting the science equipment against stealing, or perhaps in the kitchen, where they have the food, the windows are glass windows and they do not have the metal wire to protect where the stores are. I do not understand it. Again, I am quite willing to give the Minister examples, and I think if the Ministry would put a little common sense into this sort of thing I do not think we should substantially alter the Estimates at all. Why not consult the principal and the headmaster on the spot on the kind of modifications they would like to see in the particular schools instead of going on according to the so-called plan from Nairobi. I feel this question of planning schools is most important.

Coming to the subject of overseas education, I was very pleased to hear that the Minister himself felt concerned about students who go privately to overseas colleges, but at the same time, he should not only feel concerned, but he should assist them. He should do what he can to assist these students indirectly or directly. My argument about people going overseas either by Government help or private, is that there is no competition between the students going out and Makerere or the Royal Technical College—both schemes are complimentary. All I can do is to congratulate the people who assist in this kind of thing, and I would like to pay special regard myself on behalf of the African communities, to people like Dr. Kioko and Mr. Mboya, who spare the time and energy to try and help these students through this American system. But more so, those American friends in America, who, in conjunction with the people here, are fostering these schemes. We have nothing but to thank them—the people on the committee. People like a man called Mr. Harry Belafonte, Mr. William Sheinemann, Mr. Jackie Robinson, Mr. Sydney Nortier, and Mrs. Ralph Blanche. They should be thanked by the people of this country because they are doing these things privately. It costs money and it gives our students a chance of going overseas; and they should not feel their scheme is not wanted. I feel it is the duty of all of us in this country to thank these people for what they are doing. As it is it seems to me there are certain quarters where the scheme is looked upon with doubts and not such happiness, or maybe with jealousy. I feel that these schemes should be supported by everybody, and on the question of the students who may in trouble in America or in any other country, an isolated example of a student in difficulties was quoted, and those who feel they can do something should help the students.

On the question of the grade I would myself do anything for an African student who had reached and even failed the Cambridge school certificate to go to an outside college elsewhere, or another school to complete his education. The reason is this. If you take the I.Q. of any African who out of this competition of Standard IV goes through the intermediate stages, passes his K.A.P.E., has four years of secondary education and comes back in difficulties, his I.Q., his initial ability compared with the European child or the Asian child who has no comparable handicaps at all, the African has really been able to achieve something, and to consider discouraging students on those grounds because they have not Class 1 or Class 2 when you have got no universal education is wrong. We are talking about the very few who we can afford to give education to now, and I regard any African boy or girl who attains the standard of school certificate as a brilliant student, considering the shortage of staff and the difficulties they may have in their own home, and in this connexion nobody would dispute the advantages of going to an outside country.

The other difficulty we have experienced, some of us, is the negative attitude of our Government in trying to recommend and encourage students going out to America. They should be positive, and students who, for example, get a place in a college outside, in America perhaps, in a recognized, accredited college, or in Britain, or anywhere, they should, say a co-operative society wants to help him to go or an African district council has voted money for higher education and they want to help him to go. Government should be positive in this matter. Again, I have cases which I could quote to the Minister if he wants to know, where students have been discouraged, and sometimes very little effort has been made to assist them. There is a case of a student I know who is reading subjects which are supposed to be queer in Kenya here like Spanish, in common with other subjects, and he is supposed not to be good enough for Kenya later on. I would say this. We have suffered a long time here because we do not have Latin in African schools, or even French, and if students want to do law or even medicine they have to start from the beginning to pick up Latin in order to go to a university where they can study law or even medicine.

Why should our Government limit our curriculum here in Kenya like that to English as the only foreign language, whereas they know very well that any university arranges its groups of subjects according to its own regulations, and I feel this question of interfering with the curriculum a student is doing does not do anybody any good.

I met a student who came from Sweden, where he had taken a degree, and he had done it in Swedish. He was in London learning English. I am sure that student, after completing his course in English is going to be as well educated as anybody else, and when it comes to degrees in America, do you mean to tell me an American doctor is worth less than a British doctor, that an American scientist is inferior to a British scientist, and that an American agriculturalist is inferior to a British agriculturalist. These are all theoretical, but as long as a college is recognized by the people of its own country, its degrees in this country will be useful. How is it with those who come from India or America. When they come here they are employed. Now I would like to feel that the Government here takes notice of these elementary things because when the students are discouraged and told when you go to America and you read this or the other you will not get any job here, the students come—including the now Minister for Commerce and Industry—and they are employed by Government as lecturers, perhaps, or even education officers or by companies like tobacco companies they tend to suspect Government. Nobody would believe the Government would begin to discourage students. True it will be important to have some help in sorting out the kind of careers they are going to follow, and as the hon. Member for Nairobi Area said, if the Government are prepared to assist in helping the boys to choose the right courses to begin with at the right colleges, it would be very much appreciated. So rather than take a negative attitude to it, I feel our Government should take upon itself to foster it, and for my own part it is no competition between the African student and Makerere if, as it is today, Makerere cannot take all the boys that pass the Cambridge school certificate or even for the Royal Technical College. Instead they send a letter to another college outside. They send their documents. They are assessed there, and the students get a place to go to that particular college.

Then we come to the question of girls' schools in Kenya. In many of the boys' schools, intermediate schools, African headmasters have taken over from European headmasters. In many girls' boarding schools in Kenya and intermediate schools there is a clear belief that only a European lady is suitable to become the headmistress, and I have seen it happen that an African acting headmistress is replaced by a European headmistress, who may be no better qualified than the African girl teacher in the school. I would like Government to look at this particular problem, which is becoming a headache to many African women teachers, some of whom have got their T.2 training, and others have the K.T.I. when a European woman is put on top of them on purpose.

Furthermore, I say that an African lady is better qualified to train our young women for the future than the European mistress. They do not understand it. We should have our own women teaching our own women.

The other think I criticize most highly is domestic science. They are taught nothing that really matters. They are taught how to cook cakes and many other European delicacies. We have no use for these things. Africans have these things on a particular day when a visitor comes. They should be encouraged to improve on their own African cooking. In Nyanza I am sure they could make a better job of the kind of food eaten in Nyanza, even if it is the Central Province or the Coast. So I would like the Minister and the Director to give serious consideration to African conditions because in practice in their own homes they do not need this kind of knowledge, and many become frustrated later on when they find that their so-called domestic science, as regards cooking, comes to nothing. Other things like sewing and taking care of little children and that kind of thing is all right.

But on the question of African food and diet, although there may be no qualified people they should begin by pioneering. They could perhaps send some of these girls to other countries, Ghana and Nigeria, to go and see how the teachers there have adapted themselves. Another weakness of the girls' schools is that there should be a bias towards using those foodstuffs they do use in their own houses instead of fancy things in domestic science, cooking cakes and things like that which they never eat apart from occasionally.

[Mr. Malé]

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I was very pleased to hear the Minister mention the question of census in 1961. So far as district education boards, African district councils, schools committees, education officers, and supervisors are in the dark. In planning we do not know how many children are there and we cannot anticipate how many more shall have become of school age in the following year, so I congratulate the Minister for having thought about the question of a census by 1961.

My last point is just the one I have on the relationship between the formal education and the new Ministry of Adult Education. I do not know what the Government are going to do about another Department which is called Community Development which, to my mind, is only wasting a lot of time. I would like to see some substance in the so-called Maundero ya Wamandaka or Maundero ya Wanama groups. Dancing and jumping about is all right but if you could spend this time in doing a little arithmetic or doing a little accounting or something practical it would help the country better. They could have sports once in a week or once in a month but as it is now it has turned into being a kind of sports meeting and life becomes a long long festival and they do nothing sensible or practical. So I would like to know what the Minister proposes to do, especially the Minister for Labour, the new Minister, regarding the position between adult education, formal education, and the community development. Personally I feel that if a solution could be worked out whereby all the Jeanes Schools and the Maundero groups and the continuation classes were given more attention and some substance put into them it would be of great value. At the same time the K.B.S. could be used for better purposes than mere entertainment and records all the time, for having programmes on something sensible, perhaps civic studies. As it is now there is so much music played, jazz music, that half an hour could be spent each evening on simple civics, and an officer appointed to give lectures over the radio would be of very great service. The Minister may be surprised to know that Africans have radios in very far away places which you cannot imagine, so, in conclusion, I would say to the Minister for Information and Broadcasting that they should devise a system of, say, half an hour each evening where something serious is spoken. What I hear nowadays is nothing but mere entertainment of a very cheap, perhaps low, nature—some people like it for popular reasons—but there could be some educational value in this kind of thing.

I have heard also the news of a kind of adult education institute somewhere in Kikuyu. To begin with I heard about this institute and I did not like it myself because it had some sort of political association. If it is going to start without any political affiliation or any political bias but purely as an academic institute then I think the Government should give these people some encouragement in making sure that it is started purely for higher and adult education, to be used for co-operative societies' officers going there to do some courses, social studies, and that kind of thing. Otherwise I would support the Minister.

Mr. Rogers: I should like to offer my congratulations to the Minister on the way he set forth the structure of his Department and his plans and I thought particularly his statement on higher education was a very clear exposition and the House will have noted that this will be on an East African basis. From all points of view I think it is highly desirable that it should be, particularly from the point of view of the students, for in this way they will have at their disposal a wide variety of subjects to choose from, whichever territory they come from in East Africa. If, for instance, they want medicine there is Makerere, and if they want engineering, there is the Royal College, and similarly for other subjects. If, however, we developed our higher education on a territorial basis the same would not be possible or at the very least would be extremely difficult.

I was very pleased to hear the comments of the hon. Member for Nyanza North on adult education, and I myself agree that the need for this type of education in Africa is great. The need for education is so great in fact that I feel we ought to attack the problem at every level and not look upon it just as the level confined to childhood and early youth, nor should we think that when a person has finished his schooling he has finished his education. I am sure the suggestions by the hon. Member will have the Government's careful consideration and I look forward to hearing our new Minister whose portfolio is Adult Education on how he is to develop his plans to which he has already referred. I feel, also, that there are other ways of developing adult education apart from on a Government basis, and I would like to refer briefly to a College which is shortly going to open, a College the Governors of which number several hon. Members in this House. The College is, I would add, completely autonomous. Until we have a suitable name for it we refer to it as the College of Citizenship. Now, it might be said that until we can afford in this country secondary education for all our children the money should be spent on nothing else, and I was very glad to hear that Mr. Muliro does not agree with this policy and I am sure the Minister will also not agree. Furthermore, the College I have spoken about received a grant from the Dulverton Trust of £35,000, and although we will of course have to look for other monetary assistance this most generous gift enables us to make a start. We think the courses will commence at the beginning of next year and we trust that the students will be sponsored by Government and other public bodies and other employers, that they will sponsor their employees to our College. The courses will be wider educational courses than generally understood in the term "education". They will particularly embrace economics, sociology, Government administration, and so on. These men and women coming as they do from all parts of the country will, I think, have a unique opportunity of discussing each other's problems and each other's difficulties, and they will be able to reach an understanding of each other which will perhaps not be possible anywhere else in Kenya. I am certain, therefore, that our College will be able to take its place alongside other projects in the field of adult education and I am sure it will have the support of hon. Members of this House.

I beg to support.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I was interested in listening to the Member for Central Province North talking about activities in schools which we do not always associate with learning, activities particularly on the sports field, and I would like to spend a few moments dealing with this particular aspect of education because of course, as you know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I believe that it is in such activities that we have in this country, as in all parts of the world, the most natural field for people getting together and growing up together without any inhibitions whatsoever on either side. There is no doubt about it that whatever racial co-operation there is in this country, and at times there is far too little, but whatever there is, much of it has been generated from the sports fields of Kenya, from the sports fields of schools where pupils of all races have played together at a very young age, and I would like to pride amongst some of my best friends, Sir, amongst other races in this Colony, those who I learned to know at a very young age on the sports field in Kenya. There is much being done. There is much being done by the Education Department in this particular respect. But there is something lacking. Mr. Deputy Speaker, in the co-ordination between the effort at school and the effort by Government after school. Now, I am not suggesting for a minute that we want Government to come into post-school sport any more than it has to. I believe that this should be typically a voluntary effort, and the further we can keep it away from Government the better it will be, but in this country, owing to our circumstances, it is necessary for Government to pay far more attention than they do perhaps in maturer countries; but what is needed is some co-ordination between those who are working on this effort at schools, and I am now referring particularly to the Department in the Ministry concerned with, I think they term it physical education, between those people and the people in the Community Development Department of Government, and I believe that at the top level, at Ministerial level, there has got to be a knocking of heads together so that they, the Ministers in turn, can knock some heads together lower down the scale. We have a tremendous potential, Mr. Deputy Speaker, in this country in this particular sphere of activity, and I ask our Government to keep their eye on this target just as much as on the academic target.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there have been several references today to integration in our schools, and I propose tomorrow when I resume this speech to make a statement on this particular subject because I do believe that when people refer to this subject of integration, when our African and when our Asian friends refer to it, they mean, really, integration into European schools. There is no doubt about it that the standard of education in our European schools is the best in the country. That is not saying that there is not the best in African and Asian schools. But by and large the best consistently is in our European schools. It is very natural, therefore, that our African, Asian, and Arab countrymen should be looking at our European schools with somewhat envious eyes, and therefore I wish to face this particular problem quite honestly and squarely in this particular context because I am sure that when our countrymen of other races refer to this they are really, shall I say, talking at the European community in this country. I do not want to develop this today because it is an important theme and I would like to speak to it uninterrupted, but when I speak tomorrow, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I intend to say some hard words concerning my own European community on this subject.

Meanwhile if this evening I can just finish off by saying how disappointing it is that there is no reference in these Estimates to non-racial education. For some years now there has been progressive thinking on non-racial education and I am talking of the subject quite apart from integration into European schools. There is need now for Government to come out with a clear-cut policy on non-racial education. I would like in the few minutes left before we close today to quote in this particular respect what was said last year in this same debate by the hon. Specially Elected Member, Mr. Slade. It is in the HANSARD of 21st May, 1959, at column 1051. He said this, and I quote: "Sir, I would suggest to the Minister that the right general policy for non-racial education is that you maintain your monoracial Government schools until the races concerned, the majority of each race, are prepared to accept modification of that policy. Encourage them as much as you can to think in terms of the future and to see that the prospect is not really so terrifying, and for the purpose of that encouragement and in order to make a start we come to the second leg which is the importance of encouraging now the development of non-racial schools by private enterprise. If you do that on a voluntary basis you are frightening no one because no one need send his children to a school of that kind, but I am sure people will do so and by so doing they will prove that the thing can succeed and that given strict standards at the school their children can emerge just as well and in some ways possibly better than they might emerge from a purely racial school." That, Mr. Deputy Speaker, was said by Mr. Slade last year and there never really has been, so far as I can recollect, any answer by Government on the clear admission of a policy for non-racial education; and the Government are invited again this year to rethink about this, and perhaps in his reply the Minister might care to make a statement upon it. I will develop tomorrow the particular case of the non-racial Roman Catholic school at St. Austins. Meanwhile, Mr. Deputy Speaker, you may consider this convenient for me to finish and continue tomorrow; or I will go on if you wish me to.

PRAYERS

MOTION

REDUCTION OF PERIOD FOR INTRODUCTION OF BILL

The Chief Secretary (Mr. Coutts): Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move:—

THAT the period between the publication of the Traffic (Amendment) Bill, 1960, in the Gazette and its introduction into this Council be reduced from forty to seven days.

Hon. Members will be aware that under section 40 of the Order in Council applicable to the publication of Bills, that except in the case of a Consolidated Fund Bill or an Appropriation Bill, it is necessary for a Bill to be published 40 days before introduction to Legislative Council. If it is proposed by the Government that that period should be reduced, then it is necessary first of all to get the Governor's consent and also it is necessary for His Excellency to consult either the Chairman of the Council of State or in his absence the Deputy Chairman. I have received this minute from His Excellency which reads as follows: "That in accordance with section 43 of the Kenya Constitution Order in Council, 1948, I have consulted the Deputy Chairman of the Council of State, the Chairman being absent from Kenya, and give my assent that in respect of the above-mentioned Bill—that is the Traffic (Amendment) Bill, 1960—the period of 40 days between its publication in the Gazette and its introduction in Legislative Council may be reduced as necessary."

Sir, I must say to hon. Members that this is not a usual step and I would like to assure hon. Members that Government does not like to interfere with the normal rules and regulations which give hon. Members a reasonable period in which to look at such legislation as introduced by the Government. But this Motion is only being put forward by the Government because of its financial importance. If hon. Members have read the Bill they will notice that it is an amendment to the Traffic Bill but I regard it much more as similar either to the Consolidated Fund Bill or the Appropriation Bill, both of which are financial Bills and which under the Order in Council can be introduced at a lesser period than 40 days. It is because in fact the Government wishes to safeguard its revenue that we are taking this unusual step.

[The Chief Secretary]

If hon. Members look at the second part of the Memorandum of Objects and Reasons of the Bill itself, they will see that it is stated that the purpose of the Bill is to protect the revenue and its enactment will not involve additional expenditure of public money. It is to protect the revenue and if we are to protect the revenue it seems to the Government that we should bring it in as soon as possible. I would ask hon. Members that in speaking to the Motion that they would reserve any criticism of the Bill itself or anything to do with the Bill until we come to the Second Reading of the Bill and speak only to the Motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I beg to move.

The Minister for Education (Mr. Mathieson) seconded.

Question proposed.

The question was put and carried.

Order for Committee read.

MOTION

NOTE 20—MINISTRY OF EDUCATION

THAT MR. SPEAKER DO NOW LEAVE THE CHAIR
(Resumption of debate adjourned on 18th May, 1960)

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, in this debate there have been several remarks concerning the integration of schools. Yesterday, before the close of business, I accepted that such remarks are aimed mostly at the European schools and at the European community and I offered to answer these today. Sir, in February this year there was an announcement by Government concerning boards of governors for European schools. I am sorry, it was dated 16th March, 1960. It had this to say in one portion: "The Government notes that a number of European Elected Members to whom this matter is of great concern have already advocated that the Boards of Governors when constituted should consider the admission of suitably qualified children of race other than those for whom the schools were initially established. The Government welcomes this attitude and hopes that the Boards of Governors will act upon it in their discretion." That statement of policy, Sir, was agreed by all the European Elected Members. It is therefore, Mr. Deputy Speaker, most unfortunate that the matter has been raised in this debate before the European community has had the opportunity of working the new system and the opportunity of showing that quite naturally and without inhibitions it can be colour-blind towards all those of the same or similar standards of home life, of behaviour, of ideals, and colour-blind towards those with the same fundamental approach to codes of honesty and morals.

I accept, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that there are some Europeans who may not fulfil all those standards, but that is our job, the job of our community, to deal with them, and we will do so; and let me add that only harm can come if the best children of other races are forced into intimate contact with those of our own community that we ourselves regard as bad hats. Sir, my belief is that when the new system of boards of governors is working the European community will respond to the opportunity and the challenge offered by displaying in our attitude to other races in our schools the inherent liberalism and the inherent progressive thought which I believe is in the majority of the people in our community; and, therefore, I say again, Sir, that it is unfortunate that some of the other races should have introduced this subject in this policy debate on education before we have had an opportunity that has been offered to us to deal with it, and it is, also unfortunate, therefore, Sir, that outside this House prominent members of the European community are attempting to take advantage of the emotional issue of other races into our schools with utterances that are wholly contrary to the spirit of the policy agreed by all the European Elected Members.

Here, Sir, I would like to refer to one of two of the type of statements made. This is one of them: "There must be no change in the system of European education until children born today have completed their education." That means, Sir, that there shall be no change, or those who uttered those words mean that there will be no change in the system of admission to our European schools for some 15 years. I only have one retort to that argument. I do not wish to argue it; I have only one retort: totally unrealistic. Another such statement: "Other races into our schools must be resisted at all costs." That, Sir, to me sounds mighty like intimidation of the boards of governors before they have even started, and I would suggest, Sir, that it is quite unfair to the boards of governors which will be established; and these are the same sort of people who are the first to proclaim that there must be no intimidation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is also the difficulty in our community of those who wish to try to have the best of both worlds. We have heard it often said that we want other races to attain our standards. They must learn to behave like us; they must have our ideals before they can be given responsibility. Yet, Sir, when suitable candidates of another race come forward to accept the challenge, our answer, so common, is: "Yes, we want you to have our standards, but do not come near us to learn them."

Mr. Deputy Speaker, we cannot have it both ways, and if we try to we are in danger of being classified as hypocritical. But, Sir, let us make no mistake about it. This whole question of other races into European schools is delicate and difficult in this transitional stage. We need the help of everyone, and we need the thinking of all progressive people, and here are some casual suggestions.

Firstly, may I say, Sir, that we are not helped by insults and provocation from other races. I would ask that the leaders of the other races would try and understand our position in the matter. There is also the very great difficulty of the initial selection, and here there is a very heavy responsibility of the parents on both sides. No good, Sir, will come if children are forced together against the will of their parents. There is nothing more bewildering to the minds of children to go into bigoted homes after their day at school to find parents talking in a way quite opposite to what the children are trying to grow up to in their schools. And here, Mr. Deputy Speaker, there is a particular responsibility upon the mothers. It is this problem that comes closer to them than it does to anyone, and I would commend to the Minister the services of the East African Women's League in this particular respect, because I can think of nobody better placed to deal with this subject in a perfectly natural way, as between mothers.

There is also the question of making perfectly certain that the admissions into our schools are age for age with academic equality and physical and mental compatibility on all sides, and I would suggest, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the place to start this is in the sixth form of our present schools.

May I add, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I certainly look forward to the day when it is appropriate that a member of another race will be on the board of governors of our schools to help us—they more than anybody—to help us preserve the standards and the traditions that have been created. They want to come into our schools because of the high standard that has been created in them, and because of the high standard we brought to this country, and we will look to them, in turn, to make certain that there is no lowering of these standards.

Now, may I ask two particular points of the Minister? Firstly, there will be no progress in this matter until he is able to announce the composition of the boards of governors, and the method of election. And may I say to him quite clearly, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that if there is any sign, any sign whatsoever, that these boards of governors are under the patronage of Government, they will be destroyed before they even start. They must be in a position to show the free choice and the free will of the community.

Secondly, for the Minister to answer is that we have not got a hope of progressing whilst the congestion, whilst there is still the over-congestion in our own schools, because it is not the slightest bit of use trying to think along progressive lines if, in fact, there is no room in our schools for the existing school population to come into. And I believe that if the Government wish to move in this direction they too have a responsibility to equip us with the facilities to do so.

Yesterday, Sir, I referred briefly to the non-racial school to be established by the Roman Catholic community at St. Austins. This is to provide for sixth form education for boys; both borders and day boys on a non-racial basis. Government is contributing £40,000 from development funds towards the capital cost on the condition that this school caters for a minimum number of African boys. And it is strange that Government is treating this as part of the Vote for African education. We appreciate, of course, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the African needs are more pressing than those of other races, but why has this particular matter to be dealt with under the African Vote instead of a new non-racial Vote for grants-in-aid? Surely Government must confirm that they support this—confirm to the Roman Catholic community that they support this as a non-racial venture—because all capital other than that from Government, that is the £40,000, all the rest of the capital has been subscribed on the basis that it is expressly for this non-racial purpose. As a corollary, the agreement must confirm that the annual grant-in-aid will be based upon the needs of all pupils at this school, and not merely African pupils. I understand, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that the Minister and the Director of Education have sympathy in this particular respect, but it would be helpful if in replying to this debate they would put it on record as to exactly what the attitude of Government is towards this non-racial Roman Catholic school venture.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support the Motion.

Dr. Adalja: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have just a few words on Asian education. I must admit, Sir, I am constrained to use the words "Asian education"; because I am a firm believer in an integrated and a non-racial set up at all levels of education. I would not like to say anything more on this occasion, as I have recently said freely and forcibly elsewhere. I will wait anxiously to hear the plans of proposed Boards of Governors for European schools to admit at least some of the pupils of other races to their schools.

[Dr. Adalja]

Sir, I would like to say, as I said in the beginning a few words on Asian education. A lot has been said, but I believe one point has been left out, if I have not missed any of the speeches, and this point is concerning double sessions existing in Asian primary schools. Sir, this device was introduced I believe round about 1945 as an answer to the lack of places in schools. As a result of this device some pupils go in the morning and others in the afternoon. Fifteen years have passed by and yet this device persists very widely. Not only that, but the device has extended and is extending to grant-in-aid schools. I would therefore like to hear from the Minister his plans for eliminating this device, and I believe the Department itself agrees that the device is highly unsatisfactory.

The second point I would like to make, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is concerning the race of staff to be employed in a school, and here I would like say at once, Sir, that I am not worried, as to the race of the staff employed in any school. I believe the criterion of employment should be not the race, but the merit relative to the post to be filled. It does not matter to me, Sir, whether, James, Jaroge or Jaswant Singh is appointed. All that matters is that the person who is appointed is able to carry out his duties satisfactorily. One of the hon. Elected Members said yesterday that he would like to be a headmaster in an Asian school. May I say, Sir, right now, that as far as I am able to judge, and I believe I am in a position to judge because I have been associated with Asian education for quite a long time, that neither the Advisory Council on Asian Education, nor the Asian community will offer any opposition to his appointment, on one condition, and that is an inflexible condition—that he has the merit to fulfil the requirements of the post he seeks. If he has I would certainly say, Sir, "Go ahead, apply". Kenyans, of Asian origin in this country will welcome him with open arms on the basis of his merit, not on the basis of the fact that his skin is shades darker than mine.

With these few words, Mr. Deputy speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Odunga: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I rise in the first place to give my compliments to the Minister for Education for his sincerity in trying to put forward his educational policy. I have been impressed that he, as a person, seems to have got the right type of convictions, and had his hands been quite free, and I wish they were, I am sure that his educational policy would have been much more progressive than what they are at the present moment, but being a cog in the wheel, he has got nothing to do but to fall in with the Government general educational policy, which is really absurd indeed. All the more, I still hope that the general education policy of Kenya will have an intensive research, and improvement might be got later on. But for the moment we cannot say that it is even half way or even a quarter of the way to meet the immediate needs of the people of this country.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, before I tackle some of the points which I have down here, I will only try to answer some of the statements made here on the question of the common schools and the integration of schools in this country.

I know that this particular problem when it is to be discussed many people seem to be sensational or emotional in a way, but I should say that anybody in this country who is out to see the harmonious race relationship in Kenya must support the integration of schools and children learning together from the very beginning, not minding or not actually trying to hide behind the language difficulties because with languages, recently I was in some other countries where the African students go when they do not completely know the languages of those people, and when they get into that country it took them only six to eight months and then they are conversant with the languages of those countries and they start with the languages of those countries and they pass very difficult examinations in the languages of those countries. Therefore the language difficulties, the language obstacle should not actually come into the way. I know that in Kenya the lingua franca is first Swahili, second is English and as such if the parents are keen to see that the schools are integrated and to see that the children learn together, I am sure that these difficulties of learning Swahili and English will not be a problem at all.

A speaker here has just mentioned that (I think it was yesterday) the people must be free to bring forth the children in the way they like or to give their children their education in the best way they prefer. Well, I quite agree. I quite agree that that is a prerogative which is given to parents, but on the other hand we must also consider the surroundings in which those children are going to live. We must also consider their future and those with whom they are going to work and as such we must give them education which face realities and at the same time try to make them be conversant with their surroundings and the people with whom they are going to work. I do not think at the present moment, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we are doing that at all. There are some people here who talk of co-operation, who talk of the harmonious race relations and yet they are hesitant to come forward to support integration of the schools, to support the common schools. They always tell me that I am a racist and yet it is I who go heart and soul for the common schools. I am prepared to bring up my children to work together with other children from the very beginning. For example, I have a son of five who I am prepared to take a common school right from the beginning. I have told him that he can begin in that school if we can get all boys beginning together, provided he can begin from the bottom level together with those boys, and learn together with those boys. If it is necessary to learn English and Swahili, let him start with those and get on with those people he will learn it much better. But why are other people not prepared to do that? If they say that they want to stay here and they talk of Europeans and Asians, in my mind I have not got Africans, I have not got Asians, I have not got Africans. I have only got that this is an African country and everyone who has accepted to live in Kenya, they are all Africans, whether their body is white, whether their body is brown, they are all Africans, if they want to live in this country and as such there are no schools which are called European, there are no schools which are called Asian, all schools are Kenya schools if they are supported by public money in this country. I think it was a very evil man who gave them the idea of creating schools for races and that disease has never been cured, but if we wanted to cure it, I think this is the time we should get medicine for it, and I do not know whether we shall get that medicine with those people who want to perpetuate it, they think in the lines of Europeans, they think in the lines of the Asians, they think in the lines of Africans. It will only be cured if we begin now to adopt one way and that is that we are all Africans of Kenya and as Africans of Kenya our children are born equal, when they are brought forth from their mothers they are all naked, they all begin to experience life in the same way, the same manner, the same everything. There is no outlook for a European, there is no outlook for an Asian, there is no outlook for an African, they all experience the sun, they see the sun the same way, they see the vegetation the same, they see their surroundings all the same and they also taste the food the same. They all suck their mothers the same. There is no difference at all, they all start life the same, so why should some people try to teach their children as they do, they try to teach their children by telling them that "Oh, if you see a black face that is a boy, and whenever you meet a black face he is a boy." I had the experience in the streets when I met some European boys many of them had addressed me as a boy. They said "Oh, that is a very good-looking boy!" Because they think only of the Africans they see at home and they have been taught to believe that the African must be addressed as a "boy", therefore he has taken it that any black face was a "boy". Such a boy can only learn that all Africans are not boys if they go to learn together with all the African boys. He will see those boys also defeat him even in the examinations, he will see that some of them learn much quicker than he does and he will learn that human beings are only human beings, whether they are black, white, coloured or any other kind, they are all human beings and they have got different qualities. There might be some whites who are very clever, there might be some blacks who are very clever and some of them are also very stupid. That is something they can only be taught if they begin at the very beginning learning together. That is my sincere belief and I believe that that is what we can do at the very beginning in this country if we want to improve the race relations.

There is no other way of our doing it except through educational facilities and educational institutions in this country and the sooner we abolish all these racial schools the better for us, and begin immediately on these lines.

Now I know, Mr. Deputy Speaker, many people will bring a lot of excuses. Say "Oh, no, we have got different classes in our own homes, some of them are brought forth and wed in a different manner". That is all the better. What about the ones who are going to live in this country? Are they going to live all their lives exclusively sumptuous? Are they going to deal only with those who have lived in such a way? Are they going to live their lives with boys who live similar lives? They need to experience the lives of other boys because that is the exact life they are going to live or also, is the nature in the world in which they are going to live.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I would like the Government to adopt this policy at once and to leave it for those people who are proud enough and would not have the modesty to mix with other people, they should be given that facility of running their own private schools and let them provide them with their own money completely. If they are people like that I have no quarrel with them. Let them run their own schools but they should not expect to get public money. In all public schools there should not be any segregation. There should not be any more assigned schools for any one race.

Now coming back, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to the overseas education, it was pitiful to hear the Minister trying to blame those boys who are going overseas or blame the provision for so many students to go overseas, to go to America or to go to other places. I think it is just—I am sorry if I disappoint the Minister but it was true in the papers today, this morning also and it was made perfectly clear that whereas you would like to discourage it and encourage only.

The Minister for Education (Mr. Mathieson): I hope the hon. gentleman did not misunderstand anything I said yesterday. I do not know whether he heard my speech on this matter, but I made it perfectly clear that I did not in any way decry the efforts of those who are seeking further educational opportunities overseas for African students from this country. All I wished to ensure was that it would not be to the detriment of our local institutions of higher study, nor to the detriment of any individual students who was set on a course for which he was not adequately equipped, either academically or financially.

Mr. Odings: I think you are quite right and I am sorry if I was mistaking you, I would be only too sorry about it.

Now I want to explain exactly what I would have liked to lend my support to, I do think that whereas you would like to encourage our own local institutions and local education, I think that any student who is anxious to go overseas, besides getting the general education, he has also a rare experience which he is going to gain from the countries overseas which he is not going to get in the local schools.

Furthermore, the local institutions have also got their prejudices. I have never liked the way the students at Makerere are being controlled in their ways of expression. I remember that last time when I was at Makerere many students complained to me that they were not free to express themselves either on political matters or on general matters; that they have got some Special Branch students also, among them who report things to the Kenya head of the Education Department. Often also they get some warnings here and there on their political views and so on. I think that is pitiful. The students at that stage should be left free because that is part of their education. They should be left free to learn about political matters, educational matters or social matters, in a free manner in order to be able to judge later on for themselves and to make up their minds on the type of life they are going to lead in this country. Many people say, and especially those people who go for higher education overseas, that there are such facilities; that in the universities overseas they have got the freedom to express themselves in the universities and to discuss freely their political problems. In that way they get themselves completely conversant with the current affairs, either in their country or in the countries overseas.

At the same time, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am one of those people who believe very strongly that when students are still young is the time when they should acquire as much education as they can and as such I do not see any reason in restricting them to schools simply in America or even in Great Britain. They should be left to go to those places, even which at the present moment are called the Iron Curtain countries, because if they go to these places they will learn for themselves what is right and what is wrong. If you deny a boy something he will want it very much, but if you leave him free to go to those places he will be satisfied and he will satisfy his curiosity and will not actually do anything. Therefore, I think that since we are short of educational facilities in this country and since even Great Britain alone cannot meet all our needs, since even America alone cannot meet them, we should let these boys go anywhere where they can acquire knowledge. Knowledge is knowledge and immediately somebody gets it he will judge for himself what is right. The other time I was speaking to one of the Indian officials in this country and he told me that he had been surprised that some of the students who had been to India or who had studied in India when they came back here did not speak so nicely about India. That should show you that even from those places where they were not allowed to go to, even if they go to Russia or even if they go to Yugoslavia, these students will not necessarily all come back praising everything that they have seen in Russia or those other countries. They will have their own judgment, they will have seen a lot of things, they will have seen even the advantages and disadvantages of those countries and therefore the best way of stopping somebody doing something is to let him actually go and he will learn the disadvantages and the advantages of that place.

The Minister for Labour, Social Security and Adult Education (Mr. Ngala): What did you learn there?

Mr. Odings: Well, I was not there long enough to learn anything. However, I met some of our students in Yugoslavia and I found those students much more intelligent. They have learned a great deal. They can tell you a lot of things which formerly probably they may not have been able to tell you. So let them go to these places and they will learn. I do not know why this should be in Kenya. Kenya is the only place where there are a lot of restrictions. There are so many restrictions that the students cannot go outside. But what about places like Nigeria? You get the Nigerian students all over the world. How do they get there? They are all under the British Government. They are all under the British and they go there, but Kenya is the only place where you find that our students are very few in other countries. Even in Great Britain we have very few indeed because the Government here is not prepared to send the students there. The Government probably has not got money for anybody. Those they send to Great Britain will be moulded and moulded and then you find that they are very, very nice boys, much nicer than when you sent them.

[Mr. Odinga]

I think if you want education you should give the people the chance of learning. They will later on form and make themselves. If you refuse somebody his right to education—why, we people were refused when we wanted to go to Great Britain; I remember, I was not a very good boy, but did I get the chance of going? I did not get the chance of going: if a boy is deliberately denied the chance it only makes him bitter because he feels that you are only trying to curtail his chances of going if he knows that he is just as good as any other man mentally—by stopping him you are frustrating him and you are only making him your enemy instead of making him a man who is co-operative. Therefore, the best thing is to give this student the chance of going and to get the education, if he can actually acquire it.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, the Minister mentioned something about primary education in Nyanza and he said that at the present moment the primary schools there are more than enough. Indeed, I cannot actually subscribe to that opinion, that the primary schools there are more than enough. If it is in comparison with the secondary schools, yes. But to meet the needs of the people, they are far from being enough. I would challenge even those people who did the research because I know so many places in Nyanza Province which are not well served by even the primary schools. I know that at the present moment the primary schools which are there have not got enough secondary schools to cope with the students which are coming from those schools, and if he was thinking only in this connection, well, I would agree with him. However, it is very pitiful because we need more and more primary education. We want each and every child to have this education and really the fathers and mothers are longing for it. They would do anything; they are prepared to pay anything to get their children educated. Well, they cannot do that in some districts at the moment. As far as secondary schools go, particularly from the area where I come from—Central Nyanza—we have heard complaint after complaint many times that we have not got the secondary schools, no Government secondary schools, I have mentioned it here several times. It was mentioned also several times by my predecessor and it seems as if, I think, the Government hates Central Nyanza so much that anything which has to be done there they will avoid doing, and instead switch to somewhere else, and I do not know why they should do that. I would also say that I know recently many schools especially primary schools have been closed in Central Nyanza and I understand that they belong to a certain sect which probably was not approved of by the Government as an educational authority. Well, I think that that was pitiful because these schools were entirely run by the Africans themselves. There is one also which is connected with me near my home, where I spent a lot of money in putting up a school and I knew that all the local residents also did a great deal to put up this school. We put it up because we knew that the children there would in two years attend a primary school which was about three or four miles away from them and we wanted to help these students, who were at the age of five, or between five and seven, learn how to read and write before they went. In actual fact, all those children who have learned at that school are going on very well now that later on they have joined the primary school nearby. I think that when the local people are prepared to sacrifice a little bit of their money to run these schools, if they are going on keenly, I think they are not the type of people who should be discouraged as the Government did. I think it is better for the Government to encourage them, and if there is any assistance which could be given to them, it should be.

Now, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have got only one or two very small matters to raise and they concern the Educational Loans Board. Here, too, I would say that at the present moment the Africans benefit very, very little from this fund because the security which is wanted for this money is rather high for an African parent or for an African student. I am sure that the Government should be a little bit considerate and know that at the present moment it is the African who probably is unable to pay all the way for his overseas education, although he is very, very anxious that his children should go to learn overseas. As such, the Government should find a way of guaranteeing this money for these students to go overseas. These boys, when they go overseas, are an asset instead of becoming a liability to the Government, and as such it is the responsibility of the Government to assist them to go overseas for their further education. Therefore, the security which is needed should not be considered in the way a man who is going to use his loan for business purposes would be required to do.

Another thing which I should also mention in passing, Mr. Deputy Speaker, is about the arrangement of the administration of areas, educational areas, in Kenya. I understand that our area is called the West Kenya Region. Well, the West Kenya Region is a very, very large region. I noticed that other areas are divided into smaller regions and when there is any division, then the West Kenya Region also receives its quotas just as those other areas. I think that that area, being far too large, should be divided into two, or three, or four, regions rather than making it only one region which might put it at a disadvantage when there is any consideration or allocation of teachers, allocation of funds or allocation of any other thing.

Now, in ending, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I should say that from my area the education of girls and the girls' secondary schools are completely nil. I should say that is so at the present moment, especially in secondary education. We have not got even one in our district. I remember that Maseno was earmarked to have a secondary school put up and I do not know what happened later on.

Now, I hear that that school has not materialized, and I do not know who, when there is a plan for Central Nyanza, later on decides to withdraw it and then probably take it somewhere. I think that the Government should look into this and see that Central Nyanza also receives its fair share and a fair deal, and also whether there is an evil man who is trying just to undermine our educational facilities in Central Nyanza. The Minister should see to it that we get girls' secondary schools in Central Nyanza. I have said it many times that we should get girls' secondary schools in Central Nyanza. If we do it at this time we shall benefit from it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I beg to support.

Mr. Zafrud Deen: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, I do not agree with a great many things that were said by the hon. Member for the Central Electoral Area yesterday, but he did make some pertinent points which deserve his attention.

Sir, I have observed, and so have many other Asian Members on this side of the House, that the continued silence of the Asian Members is misconstrued as a sign of weakness and subjection to political pressures. I wish it to be understood that we brought back from London with us the spirit of Lancaster House of common understanding and good will, and we are endeavouring to stand firm by that spirit. We consider that this Lancaster House arrangement was a very great achievement on the part of the Members who attended. To talk of a racial division is an anathema to us but under the prevailing conditions it would be total betrayal of the Asian community if we do not comment on certain aspects of this Vote.

Sir, I do not agree that Asian schools should not have European teachers. We do want European teachers particularly to teach English in the Asian schools. But what we object to is the air of superiority, the overbearing attitude which has been much in evidence in the past and which still persists to some degree. I am not suggesting that the authority of the European headmaster be flouted, but what I do suggest is that the Asian teacher and Asian students should be treated with the same consideration and respect which one would give to a member of his own community. Sir, I believe this was the point which the hon. Member tried to make in his speech yesterday.

It must be admitted that there have been racial changes under the guidance of the present Minister, but much remains to be desired. There still exists an undercurrent of antipathy towards the Asians which must be eradicated. Sir, experience tells us that many persons in authority are perched so high up that it is impossible to approach them. The reason for this is not far to seek. The controversies over the question of the Kenya Preliminary Examination which led the Asian community and the Asian parents on the war path with the Department still rankles in the minds of many people. This also perhaps accounts for the inordinate delay in receiving answers from the Department, not to speak of complete and arbitrary rejection of genuine requests.

Sir, in this context I would refer to the lack of confidence shown to the Asian Advisory Council. This body even in its advisory capacity has proved ineffective. It meets twice a year for a few hours and hardly any assistance or advice is sought from it, and the members seldom if ever are given opportunity to make representations on matters concerning even their own particular areas. The Asian Advisory Council could prove of immense assistance and value if it is considered that one of its most important functions was to act as a liaison between the Department and the public. The feeling is openly expressed by almost all the members of the Asian Advisory Council and it would be well worthwhile that the co-operation of the Members of this Council is enlisted on all occasions.

Sir, when some novel and uncommon ideas and practices are introduced, such as admission to the secondary schools on a zonal basis, no one has ever been consulted, Sir, you must take into consideration the people whose welfare you assume you are watching.

The Department is unaware how much hardship this could cause to the parents since it disregards entirely any request for reconsideration.

Another glaring example is the siting of the new schools. Take the case of the Duke of Gloucester School. The whole surroundings of the school, which was to be built on the model of the Prince of Wales School, has been callously disfigured. Staff houses, flats, and servants' quarters have sprung up on the grounds which were intended to be left as open spaces. Domestic life of those living in these places is brought within the view of classrooms and it is bound to distract the attention of the classes. A primary school, and a training college now stands on the grounds of this school and a hostel is now being built where there should have been playing-fields.

Sir, how is it expected to raise the standard of Asian education when every device is applied to lower the standards all round. It is my contention that the only real benefit which the Asian community receives from the Government is in the form of education. If intruders are going to be made into this then we have a genuine and serious complaint. The Estimates clearly showed that the burden of education is equally shared by the community. They contribute heavily in the buildings of the schools and then manage them at the same time. In 1959/60 £500,000 was saved on the Education Vote. Sir, it would be most interesting to know how much of this came from the Asian grant.

The question of the Asian Preliminary Examination will always remain a bone of contention, and the only way to remove the suspicions, however unfounded, is by introducing common examinations. A start was to be made in this direction in some of the subjects but nothing so far seems I have been done.

In answer to a question a few days ago the Minister said that the Acting Assistant Director for Asian Education was doing his duties admirably. May I ask the Minister why he cannot fill this post permanently. Is this because he is an Asian? If this is the reason then the criticism I have made and which the other Members have made before me, are fully justified. I would earnestly request the Minister to look into this carefully.

Sir, I would urge the Minister to keep his watchful eye on the question of admission of boys from the modern schools to the technical institutes. I say this in spite of the assurances given by him that the Department would think that the students from the modern schools should have a place in the technical institutes. I say this because some of the officials of the Department have in public and in private made no secret of the idea that the Government is not committed to give education to Asian boys after the preliminary stage.

Sir, finally I must pay compliments to the Minister for the efforts towards higher education. This is what the country needs most at this time. This will open up opportunities to those who cannot avail themselves of overseas higher education, even when bursaries and scholarships are awarded to them. Although we are all looking forward to the day when we will have common schools here, at least we can make an immediate start without the fear of having to fight the racial concept of education. Neither the contention that the standard of education would be dangerously lowered could be advanced, and here, Sir, I must endorse the views expressed by the hon. Member from Central Nyanza that there are two definite opinions with regard to when the common schools should be introduced in the school. From what we know, after deep discussions all over the country, that this is the right time to have common schools. I agree that there are communities and there are races with their own standards of morals and standards of behaviour and so on, but if we do not give a start to integration at this stage we will never make a start, and the racial differences, animosities which have been in evidence in the past will continue to the detriment of the progress of this country, which I am sure we all want to avoid.

Sir, I wish to say here that it is only through education that all traces of racial prejudices and discrimination could be pulled out of the roots in the minds of the people, and the greatest responsibility therefore rests on those who manage the education of this country, and it is only in this way that the non-racial outlook can spread from one end to the other.

Therefore, Sir, I must say once again before I sit down that the attitude of the Department, although it is very difficult to prove, but from very close contacts of the members of the public there is evidence that a great number of officers, I would not say all of them, have not given that lead to the members of the other races in this country which should bring us closer together, and this attitude must undergo a very quick change, otherwise you will always hear from the floor of this House people getting up and trying to run down one another.

Sir, I beg to support.

Sheikh Mahfood Mackawi: Mr. Deputy Speaker, Sir, during the debate on the Budget the hon. Minister for Education dealt with the majority of the points which had been raised by Members of this House and he said that he would deal with any further points when we came to discuss Vote 20. Sir, I raised two points during the Budget debate. My first point was when the second boys' primary school would be built at Mombasa on the corner of Makupa and Tudor and when the building would be started.

As far as my second point is concerned, I raised the question that the modern secondary course conducted at the Arab Secondary School is a complete failure. Sir, even when he opened his speech on Vote 20 he did not answer my two points which I had raised during the Budget debate. I think the hon. Minister for Education has done nothing for the Arab education at this time. My friend the hon. Minister is shaking his head, that he is not forgetting the Arabs.

However, now, Sir, I should like the Director of Education to answer the first point and also to have a thorough investigation of the results of these courses and to consider the possibility of introducing commercial subjects instead of the modern secondary courses which the Arab parents did not want to send their boys to in these modern schools. I hope the Director of Education will give me a satisfactory reply to these two points.

Now, Sir, I would like to mention about the non-racial education. In Arab schools Africans are admitted without any discrimination, and even my hon. friend Mr. Khamisi is one of the products of the Arab schools.

Sir Charles Markham: Shame! Send him back again!

Sheikh Mahfood Mackawi: At present there are about 40 per cent of African boys and girls in our schools in the coast, and I would like to support my friend the Member for the Eastern Area that children of all races should be admitted in all schools. I know he will be very pleased at this.

Sir, we are always speaking about racial co-operation in this House, and why do we not start our racial co-operation in education in all schools of all races? As the hon. Member for Nairobi West said, there is no racial discrimination in sports. I am one who is very interested in sports, and he knows, the Member for Nairobi West, that I am very interested. I believe in fact that if it is clearly put to the Government the same move as facilities in sports I think the Government would welcome the move.

Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am sure that we are the people who are causing all this trouble. As I say,

I think the trouble is with Members of this House itself.

Sir, I beg to support.

Sir Charles Markham: Mr. Deputy Speaker, for the first time since I have been a Member of this House, I think, I have decided to speak on this particular Vote. I do so, Sir, because it has always been a privilege of those who are ill-educated normally to participate in this debate, and as, Sir, I am eligible for that qualification I am now going to use that privilege.

Sir, referring first of all to the speech of the hon. Member for Yugoslavia, and I am sorry to say that he is not here, I enjoyed his speech, Sir, particularly when he gave his impressions of the innocence of youth or children as they were born. I was sorry, Sir, that he showed his usual prejudice that he did not mention girls at all. He only talked about boys. I presume, Sir, that his remarks about education must apply to the opposite sex as well. I will not say the weaker sex, Sir, since I saw a girls' school hockey team playing the other day. But nevertheless I think it is important, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that this problem of women's education should be tackled, and so often I do hear from hon. Members, such as the hon. Member for Central Nyanza, talking about the problem of the male sex but ignoring totally the problem of the females. It is important that I say that, Sir, because, as the House may remember, all hon. Member made a plea for children of all races to grow up together with multiracial education. I think it is important, Sir, that the House should remember that children are born in this world innocent and they are only corrupted later on by the influences which they hear or the influences they receive from their own homes. I think as well, Sir, it is important that we should not let this subject, which is emotional I know to many people, guide our thoughts on the wisdom of various suggestions of schooling. It has been said, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that during the last war the speed of a convoy was the speed of the slowest ship, and therefore it would be manifestly unfair to ask all children regardless of race to travel at the slowest speed because one of them was not capable of going faster. I have always believed, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that children do inherit a certain amount of the background of their parents. It is natural that a child born in poor circumstances has a much harder task than a child born of parents who have a happy home life, and therefore I do think this House should consider most carefully before we rush in to the idea of all schools becoming free for all, of the background of the children. I want to make it quite certain and quite sure, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that I am not being racial on this issue. We have got to consider the tribal prejudices which exist. We have got to consider as well that certain of our African friends believe in female circumcision, whereas to others it is a nauseating operation.

Mr. Mboya: What has that to do with education?

Sir Charles Markham: The hon. Member for Nairobi Area was not here, Sir. I was referring to his colleague the Member for Yugoslavia, as I called him, the Member for Central Nyanza, and, Sir, therefore, when the hon. Member said, "What has that got to do with education?" I was answering a point made by his colleague and not what he said.

That is why, Sir, it is important that if we are to get together, as the hon. Member wishes us to, first of all it is important that the barriers are broken down which exist at the moment tribally, and rather than the idea of having children of all races together it will be quite impossible to make this a reality if the beliefs of the various children were totally different. For example, Sir, youth, particularly the female youth, Europeans, are brought up normally with the basis that they should learn a profession, or go into the field of business, and then eventually marry and have children and become housewives. Other tribes, Sir, or other races—their outlook is totally different; and one has only got to see some of the opposite sex trudging along the Escarpment every evening carrying vast loads of timber to realize that their function in life is vastly different to what we hope our children will do.

Mr. Mulliro: No.

Sir Charles Markham: Sir, the hon. Member for Nyanza North says, "No". Then let him, Sir, through his efforts of being a national leader persuade the people of the Kikuyu tribe that such a practice is wrong.

Mr. Mboya: It is dying.

Sir Charles Markham: Sir, it is dying, the hon. Member for Nairobi Area says, I think it is killing them anyhow.

Now, Sir, the reason I have raised this, is this. This issue of multi-racial education has become an emotional issue which is ranging far beyond normal commonsense. All of us, I believe every Member of this House, Sir, of my own community, have accepted the fact that at later stages in a child's development there should be complete multi-racial education in universities. That has been said, Sir, on numerous occasions and must be repeated now. But what we have said, and again I support it, and I believe that the leader of one of the main political parties in this country has said the same thing, is that the parents of young children should have the right to educate their own children amongst their own community to begin with.

An Hon. Member: Without public money.

Sir Charles Markham: Sir, I am told that it should be without public money. If the Government likes to reduce the incidence of taxation, very high taxation, on my own community, I feel quite certain that they are willing to pay for it themselves. As it is, Sir, we are paying a very large proportion—and we do it quite willingly—for the members of the other races.

Therefore, Sir, I was somewhat surprised at the speech of the Member for Nairobi West. He stated, Sir, that the statement issued by the Government in March has received the unanimous support of the European Elected Members' Organization. That, Sir, is perfectly true, and that statement did receive their support. But what we have not yet heard, and we still have not heard are the details of the boards of governors. We have not heard, Sir, and, indeed, the hon. Member asked the question, who is going to appoint the boards of governors. We gave, Sir, our support to the principle of establishing boards of governors, which is nothing new incidentally, for the schools. That support, Sir, has, I believe, been agreed by the rest of our community. But, Sir, what I was surprised to hear from the hon. Member, in the course of his speech this afternoon, was that first of all he explained that the boards of governors should have full powers and then proceeded to tell them exactly what they should do. I would have thought it should be the other way round. If you establish a board of governors then they should be the people who decide on the policy of admission, and they alone should be the people, and not the Member for Nairobi West.
