Mr Botchley

I discussed this with Mr Seymour Yesterday after the discussion on the Constitutional points as to the need of an act of Parliament to satisfy the Convention.

We thought that the best plan was to let Mr E. Nately see these buildings and to let the Station first see the schedule prepared in our proposed note included all the buildings to be built at the time when Sir E. Nately wrote his despatch, his

It is possible that the actual time for transfer may have been longer because of the way in which the transfer was made to the Dues for and other to be done.

The amounts offered in payment not less than the value previously set after the method had been agreed (assuming there to be for each a Jubilee) previously set that amount is in proper.

We may suppose the Col. Est.
