LEMCO AND MILK is a powerful, tissue building, invigorating, readily digested food tonic.

A glass twice a day does more for invalids, delicate children, anaemic and "nervy" people, than change of air. Add it to a spoonful of Lemco to half a pint of warm milk.

LEMCO AND MILK is a powerful, tissue building, invigorating, readily digested food tonic.

A glass twice a day does more for invalids, delicate children, anaemic and "nervy" people, than change of air.

Add it to a spoonful of Lemco to half a pint of warm milk.

MEANS NEWLAND, TAITTON AND CO. A new wave of the growing interest taken in the development and the future of the Province which has resulted in the fact that an exceptionally interesting prospectus from the Agricultural Bank of East Africa is being issued.

A study of the Annual Report 1910-11 of the Department of Agriculture, just published, will show the progress of the farming and planting communities, and we would particularly call attention to the increase in the value of the various export crops.

COAST WATTLIES.

When Sir Henry McCallum Governor of Natal came three or four years ago mentioned the fact that Hon. Mr. Marshall Campbell was starting a wattle plantation on the coast, the experiment was subject to some objection from the natives.

It was stated that the tree was not so common as it is in the Cape, and that it would not properly suit the coast, that it would not grow and failure was predicted by the natives. However, all the pessimistic prognostications have been disproved as the Natal Estates are now being planted with the tree.

The trees are being planted extensively and the fact is quite to the credit of the Government. It is said that the fact of the increase of the wattle industry is due to the fact that the Government has been planting wattle on the coast for some eight years and all up country. There are 4,000 acres now planted and the plantations, on land which is the domain of the whole estate, and will, for a long time, be the industry of the province.

Harry waited until they were seated, and then, drawing forward a chair, took out a folded sheet of foolscap.

"I'm afraid I shall have to speak at some length," he said. "One of you is Arnold's cousin; the other his brother-in-law, which is why I have asked you to be my guests. You are both just men, and though any prejudice you may have will be in Arnold's favour, I am willing that you should decide between us."

"I had one purpose in inviting this country," Harry went on. "I wanted to clear your father's name. It is some years since I discovered that he was not to blame for the loss of the Calabaria."

He saw Christopher's slight start and the astonishment in Vane's eyes; but Arnold looked on with an unaltered face, and could have fancied that he had expected this.

"I knew the task I meant to undertake would need time and money, and I wanted not worked desperately until at last fortune turned in my favour," Harry added. "Then I came over here, and found that the minds of all I met had been poisoned against me. I was a stranger from the wilds, with a tainted record, the son of a man who died in unadvised disgrace. For that I have to thank his cousin."

"Statement is not proof," Arnold remarked, with an approach to a sneer. "Are you in a position to convince anybody that you were a man of property?"

"No," said Harry. "The charges instituted against me contained just enough truth to make their contradiction almost impossible. I was not a man of any thought, honesty and love of a duty. I shall not deny them. I leave myself in my friends' hands."

"I think you can seek for justice," Vane informed him.

"Thank you," said Harry. "Now I'll ask your attention to this confession made by the Calabaria. It was written on the 15th of May. There was dead silence, except for his unperceived level voice, while he read out Sailer's statement. Arnold leant forward with his face on his hand, as if he did not wish to make a word, Vane sat very still with an expressionless countenance, and Christopher's face grew very stern."

"Is this the truth?" said the latter, leaning out, looking at his cousin when at length Harry laid down the paper.

Arnold, who did not answer him, turned to the young man. "What do you expect of me?"

"An endorsement of the document, declaring that you have heard it and find it correct."

"Suppose I refuse?" Harry retorted, driving his wedding's wife into a corner.

"I am not certain that the applicants have got hold of several facts which I fancied would never come out." He rose, and stood leaning against the table. "Until the telegram arrived I had some expectation of being able to arrange a compromise, but as this is now impossible I'm in your hands. There is only one thing to do and that, as Harry suggested, is to leave the country."

"None of us will stand in the way of your doing so," Vane informed him, dryly.

"It isn't enough that you are going. You'll have to do more than that. I've been practically involuntarily for a long while, and the last pound of ready money I could raise has been spent in an attempt to get you out of one or twice it looked as if I would succeed; but there's only ruin in front of me to-night. If I stay here I shall, no doubt, shortly be arrested."

"What do you want?" Christopher inquired.

"First, an assurance that Maud will be provided for. There's a mother's love for a father's."

"It is promised," said Christopher; and Harry broke in, "I'll see to that."

"My claim's a first," added Vane. "You need have no misgivings about my niece's future."

"Then, said Arnold, 'I'll have to ask you for five hundred pounds. Considering the disgrace my name would bring upon you, it's a reasonable demand. It should, I think, set me on my feet in my own way, South America?'"

"You shall have it," said Vane; and when Christopher and Harry added assurance to the same effect, Arnold looked at them with a sneer.

"It seems there is a competition among you for the honour of getting rid of me," he remarked. "You are all against the thing. But let Christopher deal with this for me, and I'll see to it."

"I'm only to add that if I leave very shortly, I can get the right man."

"Christopher went first out on a cheque, which he pocketed. 'Thanks,' he said. 'It isn't likely to cause you any further anxiety. Now, if you'll excuse me, I'll go and give orders to the groom to be ready. One of the men made an answer, and then went an awkward silence which he left them without another word."

turned back towards Lord Tived by accident. "It was a soft, clear night, with half-moon in the sky, and it struck him like he had never seen the valley look so beautiful. As he approached Lind Wood he saw a white-clad figure waiting at the gate, as when he reached it Alison stretched out a hand to him."

"I am astonished," she said. "I must try to forgive me."

"You have been splendidly generous. I have made my father tell me perfectly warranted and very natural."

"I was horribly uncharitable," she protested. "You have been splendidly generous. I have made my father tell me perfectly warranted and very natural."
