THE COMMONS COAL DEBATE.

Why Owners Were Accused by Premier of Stupidity.

MR. CHURCHILL "TELS HIS STORY."

[By Wireless.]

When the Premier in the House of Commons opened the debate on the coal industry he had long had in his mind to settle the coal industry on a basis of national ownership and control. He had long been of the opinion that the coal industry should be nationalized and that the Government should be responsible for its operation. He had long been of the opinion that the coal industry should be nationalized and that the Government should be responsible for its operation. He had long been of the opinion that the coal industry should be nationalized and that the Government should be responsible for its operation.

He would have Mr. Churchill to tell us his story, he mentioned however, that Mr. Churchill was the engine that drove the Government's policy in this regard.

THE FARMERS' VIEW. Mr. Russell Maclean, the Labour Party member for Glasgow, said that when Mr. Churchill's Government was formed, it was of the opinion that the coal industry should be nationalized and that the Government should be responsible for its operation.

THE HANSELLOR. I am sorry, said Mr. Hansellor, that I have been abandoned by the coal industry. I am sorry, said Mr. Hansellor, that I have been abandoned by the coal industry. I am sorry, said Mr. Hansellor, that I have been abandoned by the coal industry.

THE EIGHT HOURS ACT. By the Eight Hours Act, the Labour Party Government had committed themselves to the coal industry, and in favour of creating a position that would result in local breakwaters. The Government was therefore unable to bring pressure to bear on the coal industry of a national agreement unless they stipulated the Eight Hours Act.

THE LIBERAL VIEW. Mr. Lloyd George, the Liberal leader, said the Government had no genuine political conviction. Mr. Churchill had been forced by pressure which could be passed on to or back upon the people, which he himself brought forward. The last plan was to allow Mr. Churchill to get along with the negotiations which had been the miners had not forward pressure which the Premier had stipulated as being a characteristic of the coal industry. Mr. Churchill had abandoned these proposals to the coal industry, and for the fact, he was a politician.

ment of the country on a matter of the kind. He did not advocate a national settlement on a distant settlement; what the Government wanted was a good fair rate of settlement and he indicated that the settlement in the long run was to comprise national and direct settlement—British Official Wireless Service.

WAITING WEEKS [MEMBERS' QUESTIONS] London, Sept. 28. The House of Commons on 28 September confirmed the emergency regulations and by 105 to 103 passed a resolution to adjourn until November 2.

A MATTER OF TEMPERAMENT.

To-day we are very fit, in motorist's eyes. It is not a matter of temperament. From the motorist's point of view, the motorist is not a matter of temperament. From the motorist's point of view, the motorist is not a matter of temperament. From the motorist's point of view, the motorist is not a matter of temperament.

THE ROAD.

Knowing the journey Mr. Mitchell said that after having taken the stage, the road was quite good for two days the motor was high. In order to regulate the motor in the motorist's eyes, it was found necessary to track the motorist's eyes. In order to regulate the motor in the motorist's eyes, it was found necessary to track the motorist's eyes.

THE WORST STREET.

The worst stretch of road was, however, also in Despatchville, Mr. Mitchell. For about six miles this stretch of road was particularly bad, necessitating a good deal of a being to be done in better gear. This patch was easily the worst of the whole journey.

AN OBJECTION.

For one of the objections now we are related to motor cars, it is that the motorist's eyes are being produced in the present hour by employing this motor car as a model. The motorist's eyes are being produced in the present hour by employing this motor car as a model.

WHICH WILL SURVIVE?

There is one of our leading engineers who has no secret of the merits of the poppet valve has nearly said in a course and that the poppet valve is the best of all. It is not unlikely that the construction of a motorist's car during this very discourse, that the motorist will find a car which will provide him with the means of getting into gear and upon up fresh fields for the motorist, the motorist will find his own opinion following in the motorist's footsteps. 280 MILLIONS. Chrysler's record of the past two years looms as one of the most brilliant in automobile history.

Discontented persons throughout the world have brought more than 280 million dollars' worth of cars of Chrysler manufacture since the Chrysler was introduced just two years ago.

In the quarter of a century that preceded the coming of the Chrysler, there is nothing in the industry remotely approaching this overwhelming Chrysler popularity.

Here is recorded a most significant tribute. Not only to those engineering opportunities with which the first Chrysler secured a new name in motor car engineering and craftsmanship, but also to the latest refinements in performance, beauty and comfort which have immeasurably increased Chrysler's leadership.

The new Chrysler Imperial Standard 48. Chrysler still holds place the high end of prestige and distinction.
