CORRESPONDENCE.

(The Editor would assume liability with the names of correspondents.)

EXEMPLARY SENTENCE.

(The Editor thinks the following may be of general interest.)

Recently my house was broken into during my absence for one night or so. The burglar, a "blabber," was evicted to the night house as a deterrent for a crime which was never for seeing his spots, with which he was not to be troubled again. He was then taken to the station house, where he was held for a few days, and then sent to the workhouse for a period of six months.

A girl who had been brought up in a most refined and noble manner, and who had been educated in the best of schools, was one day taken to the station house for a crime which she had committed. She was held for a few days, and then sent to the workhouse for a period of six months.

It is a pity that the law does not provide for a more lenient treatment of such offenders, especially where the crime is one of passion or weakness. The present system is too harsh and unchristianlike.

I shall be glad if you will make use of this information in your paper as you think fit.

Protectorates Trade.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Imports: 1911, £1,100,000; 1912, £1,200,000. Exports: 1911, £1,000,000; 1912, £1,100,000.

The trade in the protectorates has shown a steady increase in both imports and exports during the last two years. This is due to the opening up of new areas for settlement and the development of the primary industries.

The principal exports from the protectorates are coffee, tea, and hides. The principal imports are foodstuffs, clothing, and machinery. The trade is largely carried on by private firms, but there is a growing interest in public enterprise.

The trade in the protectorates is of great importance to the Empire. It provides a valuable source of revenue for the Government, and it also helps to develop the economy of the protectorates.
