

by the dispatch sent to the G.O.

Uganda, we did not definitely commit ourselves to a medal, but raised a point as to whether the period of service should not be 10 years instead of 12 years etc. etc. I don't see why we should not withdraw - in further course - from the implied concurrence in the grant of a medal.

The matter is one, I think, on which we ought to have the opinion of the Chief Clerk's Dept.

It will be observed that Capt Edwards's proposal that the medal should bear the R.C. Arms on one side & on the reverse an inscription "For long service of good conduct". Such a medal would presumably not emanate from the Sovereign - though on this point, which appears to be the crux, see Mr Macneighlen's memo. in G.O. 2803/10 Ceylon p. 3

On the whole, I should be inclined to leave out the medal from the measures calculated to increase the popularity of the police, & be content with the the exemption from taxation - and the employment of ex-politicians in G.O. offices in East Uganda, subject of course to the claims of ex-K.A.R. soldiers others mentioned by G.O. Uganda being given equal consideration for these inferior appointments.

The question of a local Police medal for the E.A.P. or Uganda must clearly be settled by any decision come to on the general question of medals for Colonial Police Forces as raised by Mr Macneighlen in his memo attached to Gov. 31603/10 Ceylon. In the meantime we had better settle the E.A.P. that the general question of local police medals is under consideration, & that approval therefore cannot be given to the issue of such a medal in the E.A.P. or write in the same sense to U. with reference to the implied approval

Yes - as regards police medals this is clearly the right course, and I think I would go further and indicate that now there is a King's Police Medal for all the forces of the empire that probably should supersede that is the road to which I incline.

Granting of Good Conduct medal and exemption from taxation.

3. I have been aware in the course of this report of the clear necessity for providing the Protectorate with an efficient well regulated, and up-to-date police organization, and I have made equally clear the fact that the achievement of so desired an end lies in a great measure in obtaining a better class of men, as also in improving the prospects and status of all ranks of the Force. So great a necessity is there for making the police service a popular and attractive one that I feel compelled to further this issue in every way possible and with this object in view desire to make the two following recommendations:-

- (1). The granting of a good conduct medal to members of the force after a continuous good service of 12 years.
- (2). The exemption from any description of taxation on return to civil life after 12 years exemplary service in the Police Force.

I am firmly convinced that the measures advocated above holding out as they do inducement for the rendering of continued good and honest service, will encourage and stimulate all ranks to a higher and nobler performance of duty and I feel further assured that beyond their shadow lurks two of the main factors for improving the tone of the whole service. If my recommendations respecting the good conduct medal be approved I would suggest that the medal be a silver one - about the size of a florin - with the

Protectorate

Protestor's coat of arms engraved on the face and bearing the inscription "For long service and good conduct" on the reverse and that it be worn on the right breast the ribbon being a dark red one. The expenditure entailed by this proposal will not exceed £5 per annum. The effect of recommendation No. II on the revenue will be infinitesimal as it is most improbable that the number discharged under these conditions will exceed twenty per annum. In view therefore of the increased efficiency likely to accrue from the retention of long service men in the force and of the important part these measures will play in the future welfare of the force it will in my opinion be a regrettable fact if these recommendations are not accorded the support they merit.

The recommendations of paragraph 193 provide as a measure for popularizing the Police Service the granting of a good conduct medal after a continuous good service of 12 years, and the exemption from any description of taxation on return to Civil Life after 21 years exemplary service. So convinced am I of the need of these measures that I trust Government will see its way clear to approve them.

I have brought home in the course of this report the clear necessity for providing the Protectorate with an efficient well regulated, and up-to-date police organization, and I have made equally clear the fact that the achievement of so desired an end lies in a great measure in improving the prospects and status of all ranks of the Force. So great a necessity is there for making the police service a popular and attractive one that I feel compelled to further this issue in every way possible, and with this object in view desire to make the three following recommendations:-

- (ii). The exemption of any description of taxation on return to civil life after 21 years exemplary service in the Police Force.
- (iii). The employment in all government offices as messengers, peons, and the like, of none but ex-policemen.

If my recommendations respecting the good conduct medal be approved I would suggest that the medal be a small silver one - about the size of a florin - with the Protectorate arms engraved on the face and bearing the inscription "Long service and good conduct" on the reverse, and that it be worn on the

58. Measures to popularize Police.

(a) "Good conduct medal" after 12 years:-
(cost £5 per annum).

See King's African Rifles Regulation 108 II as to "Long Service and Good Conduct" medal after 12 years service for men of "exemplary" character.

... whether Officer Administering the Government is of opinion that 12 years, as in King's African Rifles, would not be a more fitting period.

Para. para 58.

(a) With regard to the proposal that a good conduct medal should be granted to members of the force after a continuous good service of 12 years, I have to invite your attention to the King's African Rifles Regulation 198 (11) "Medals for Long Service and Good Conduct". By this regulation a medal may be awarded after not less than 18 years' service to a soldier who is recommended by the Officer Commanding the Battalion and certified to be of exemplary character. I understand that in the regular army a similar period of service is required, before such a medal is granted. If a medal of this kind is to be valued, it should not be too easily obtainable, and I am inclined to think that the necessary period of service should be 18 years for the Police as for the King's African Rifles. I should be glad to learn whether you concur in this view.
