Most Tragic Year in Kenya's History

"In Uganda the cotton solution is no prospect at all. Commerce...A little cotton might be obtained, but the export trade will mainly be in raw which diminishing in quantity every year in consequence of the destruction of the elephant." — Mr. Labourer, M.P., in the House of Commons, July 27th, 1952, during a debate on the Uganda Railway Bill.

Time of course has proved Mr. Labourer hopelessly wrong. Uganda now became the largest producer of coffee in the Commonwealth and the second largest producer of cotton. In 1952, we exported £13,554,946 worth of raw coffee and £28,696,860 worth of raw cotton quite apart from £4,055,344 worth of other items. Cotton, incidentally, does not figure anywhere in the list of Uganda's exports and ivory hardly at all. For its part, the National Bank of India Ltd. is proud of its contribution towards combating the Labourer's predictions. Coming the first Banking Office in Uganda at Entebbe on November 1st, 1908, the Bank witnessed the birth and establishment of the Protectorate's cotton and coffee industry and the Bank's services have been at the disposal of pioneer's ways, for eight years, and have helped Uganda's export trade from nothing to its present level.

Where we lead— prosperity follows

The history of East Africa began with the building of the railways. Where the lines led the way, prosperity followed. Today the Railways and Harbours are playing their part in one of the most dramatic economic expansions in Commonwealth history, and underwriting many new and important developments.

The pioneer work of the Railways goes on. From Kampala westwards to Kasere in the "Mwenzori" Mountains, a 210-mile extension is opening up new territory.

Between Mombasa and Pororo, along the busy Kilifi branch, throughout the Langanyika system, and wherever traffic is particularly heavy, hundreds of miles of existing line are being strengthened to carry more powerful locomotives and heavier trains.

$25 million worth of equipment still to be delivered includes 146 mainline and 37 shunting engines and 1368 units of rolling stock.

All this is one end—the continued development of the Railways and Harbours in the service of East African progress.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

A FULL YEAR HAS PASSED since the Government of Kenya declared a state of emergency on October 20, 1952. On that day the Lancashire Fusiliers reached Nairobi by air from the Suez

Efficiency And Ineptitude. Regiment was mobilized, and well over one hundred Kikuyu suspected of subversive activities were arrested among them Kenyatta and his chief assistants. The Commissioner of Police thereupon gave the public the silly assurance that Mau Mau had been decapitated. The folly of his complacency (which was shared by other senior officials) has long been apparent; but, for some inscrutable reason, the men capable of such irresponsible and dangerous assessments have been retained in their appointments. Of the many blunders of the Government of Kenya in the past twelve months, perhaps none has done so much damage as its stubborn refusal to rid itself of functionaries in whom the public lost confidence long ago. Mr. S. V. Cooke certainly spoke for the general body of the European community of Kenya when in introducing in the Legislative Council last week a motion of no-confidence in the Government, he charged the Chief Secretary, the Member for Legal Affairs, and the late Chief Native Commissioner with responsibility for "the disgraceful lack of policy and the inefficiency and ineptitude with which the situation has been handled."

The Chief Native Commissioner left Kenya months ago on leave, and will not return. The Chief Secretary and Attorney-General said Mr. Cooke ought to consider whether the country wanted them. Efficiency Not the Sole Criterion. scathing references to the police implied that the officer in command of that force could likewise be spared with equanimity. EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA has argued for months that the Government of Kenya could not expect to be fully trusted while it clings to men who had forfeited public trust. The whole system of Colonial administration (and not only in Kenya) has been brought into contempt by this obstinacy, which has caused the public to say that the convenience and careers of individuals were of more concern to the Colonial Service than good government or even law and order. If that complaint is still widely made, it is the blame must rest primarily upon the Government of Kenya, but in some degree also upon the European elected members in the Legislature for accepting such a position. They should have insisted many months ago that efficiency should be the sole criterion; and that anyone, however highly placed, should be promptly removed if he was seen to be inadequate for the burdens of his office. Kenya has been at war, and the salutary military rule of displacing unsuccessful senior men ought to have been followed. If the local Government had resisted that reasonable demand, it could have been driven to a change of mind by all the European elected members' withdrawing from Council, if necessary more than once, as a demonstration of their dissatisfaction and determination. But the elected members would submit to the Government's inactivity and they must therefore bear part of the blame.

The inefficiency shown in Kenya during the past year has been staggering and shocking. Would anyone in that country have expected last October that the Mau Mau insurrectionists would still be at Tragic their diabolical work a year later? Probably not one person of any colour in or outside East Africa would have thought that possible. The impossible has happened primarily because the Kikuyu still fear the Mau Mau Gang, were alien they respect the Government. That is tragic to the truth. If there were no so-called terrorism would have been quickly crushed. Instead it has stalked abroad by day, no less than by night, in a country previously so peaceful that its military and police were scarcely more than skeleton formations. Now three brigades of troops, including five British battalions, have to be employed; and never before, except during the Kaiser's War and Mussolini's war, had East Africa needed a British formation, however small. Yet this very month the evil power of the terrorists has been demonstrated even in the capital city of the country, where tens of thousands of Africans, four-fifths of them Kikuyu, have thought it safer to do the bidding of Mau Mau than rely on the Government for protection. If that has been the state of affairs in the African areas of Nairobi after a year, what must be the real condition of the Kikuyu Reserves?

In some localities it is that of civil war. In others the fine leadership of individual Europeans in support of courageous (and usually Christian) Kikuyu has encouraged a growing spirit of confidence.

Too Little, Too Late. For months some of these men, white and black, have recommended that an essential need was a declaration by the Government that, whatever the result of the appeals on legalistic grounds by Kenyaia and his cronies, none of them would ever be allowed to return to Kikuyuland. Such a guarantee was necessary because the tribe-sitters among the Kikuyu have continued to expect their return, and have therefore decided to give the information which might have brought many a murderer and oath-administrator to justice. That sentence of permanent banishment was pronounced on Tuesday of this week—many, many months too late. Almost everything done has been done months too late, the procrastination and vacillation of the authorities greatly strengthening the enemy and correspondingly weakening Kenya. When the trouble started there was not even a proper intelligence service, although responsible men had been warning the Government for years of subversive activities among the Kikuyu, and the failure to provide proper intelligence in such circumstances would have justified the displacement of the Member of Law and Order and the Commissioner of Police, the officials primarily answerable for such laxity. But Kenya still keeps them on her payroll.

After the folly of the so-called "cleansing ceremonies," by which, professedly, the administration used vainly of course, barbaric superstition as a means of releasing tribesmen from oaths taken under duress. Lacking, came the stupidity of the wholesale removal of Kikuyu from the White Highlands without proper arrangements for their reception and absorption elsewhere, thus providing the Mau Mau gangs with many emasculated and desperate recruits. If the Government felt any sense of urgency it was singularly unsuccessful in translating that sentiment into practice. Not until the emergency had lasted two months was even a military staff officer brought in; two months later a major-general became director of operations; only three months later still was General Erskine sent out to take full command, and it is only this summer that, under his thrustfulness, the Mau Mau have been brought under pressure in their forest lairs. Meantime, of course, oath-taking has spread, first among tribes allied to the Kikuyu and among crossbreeds, and then to some Isiamba, Masai, Maragoli, Luo, and others. Delay in crushing the rebellion has greatly increased the risk of its expansion to other areas. Widespread fear of the police (even among loyal Africans) has seriously interfered with the restoration of order; and there will be many Europeans in Kenya, officials, settlers, and missionaries, who will consider that the Governor has been ill-advised in his references to the police in the speech reported in other columns of this issue. Many Europeans and Africans in Kenya, and latterly an increasing number of Asians, have rendered splendid service, which has so often been misinterpreted by higher authority. Such incidents as the lamentable story of the last year. It has been redeemed from obloquy chiefly by the calm courage of the European settler community, the officials and missionaries at work in the Kikuyu country, and the Christian Kikuyu, and by the loyalty of the great mass of the Africans outside the Kikuyu tribe.

Kenyatta Petition Dismissed

THE JUDICIAL COMMITTEE of the Privy Council dismissed on Tuesday the petition of Jomo Kenyatta and five others for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council against conviction and sentence in Kenya on Mau Mau charges. The petition came before Lord Goddard, Lord Oaksey, Sir Morton of Henryton, and Sir Lionel Leach. For the plaintiffs Mr. D. N. Pritchard was accompanied by Mr. Ralph Miller and Mr. S. P. Fernando. For the Crown appeared Mr. John Whyatt, Q.C. (Attorney-General, Kenya), and Mr. Godfrey Le Quesne. Kenyatta and the five other Africans were last April sentenced to seven years' hard labour. A fuller report of the petition will appear next week.

Notes By The Way

M.P. For Thirty Years

HOW IRONIC AN OFFENCE IS it to tamper with the essential equipment of Parliament! Should I not be guilty of contempt if I continued to accelerate or decelerate the clock in the debating chamber? The answer is presumably in the affirmative. But what I could not do with impunity was done last week by a Minister in Southern Rhodesia to the great satisfaction of the whole House, and doubtless to the approval of the whole Colony. The adjournment of its Parliament eight days ago marked the end of 30 years of self-government under the constitution granted in 1923. Only one member elected at that time had continued to sit throughout the three decades (and for the same constituency) — Sir Godfrey Huggins, who cannot be a candidate in the territorial general election next November because no member of the new Federal Parliament may also sit in the legislature of a constituent State. Since his appointment as Prime Minister in the Interim Ministry of the Federation he has reverted to the status of a private member in the Southern Rhodesian House, which wanted him to be the last speaker on the last day of his membership.

Courteous Conspiracy

THAT KINDLY THOUGHT (of someone whose name has not been disclosed) would have been frustrated but for the presence of mind and admirable lawlessness of a Minister (whose identity has also not been publicly mentioned). When Sir Godfrey was due to speak several members were so engrossed in discussing the final item of business that they forgot the intended gesture of admiration and affection. To quote a telegram to The Times: "Other members realized what was happening, and one, a Minister, motioned to the head messenger to stop the clock. The messenger shook his head, whereupon the Minister, who knew the whereabouts of the switch controlling the clock, went out and stopped it. Meanwhile other members were passing hurriedly scribbled notes to the persistent talkers, who at last desisted." Then the clock was found to be working again, and the result was that Sir Godfrey Huggins had two minutes in which to convey the thanks of the Federal Government to Southern Rhodesia for its great assistance." By courteous conspiracy an historic occasion was memorably marked.

Borup

EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA has suggested from time to time that East African history ought to be much better known to East Africans of all races. It is not unusual to find men in positions of leadership, Europeans, Africans, and Asians, without any knowledge of important happenings of even 25 or 30 years ago, happenings which have a definite bearing on present problems; and on quite a number of occasions I have been shocked by the dangerous ignorance of African students of the past half-century in the territory of their birth. Now a writer in an Uganda newspaper has confessed that he knows nothing of the Borup case, whom a street in Kampala has just been named.

Missionary Pioneers

YET IT WAS Mr. Borup (then on the industrial side of Church Missionary Society work), who imported the seed for the first experiment in cotton growing thus establishing the industry which was for many years almost the sole source of wealth in Uganda. That is not to say that there would have been no cotton industry but for Mr. Borup; but many years might have passed before someone else did what he did. A missionary has likewise to be thanked for the introduction of coffee to the neighbouring territory of Kenya; and although there is still dispute on the point among Rhodesians, some are convinced that it was a missionary who began to grow tobacco in that Colony. All these modest men, who greatly benefited their fellows, their great service ought not to be forgotten by later generations.

Blunt Statement to U.N.O. on Britain's Colonial Policy

Non-Administering States Have No Monopoly of Good Intentions

MR. HENRY HOPKINSON, Minister of State for Colonial Affairs, was direct in his statement when he recently addressed the Fourth Committee of the United Nations. He said, inter alia:

"It is now uncommon for bodies like this committee to bear the view advanced that there is one fundamental cause, and one only, of social strains in non-self-governing territories — namely, racial discrimination. Certainly race relations constitute one of the crucial problems of our time, but anomalies in race relations not infrequently derive from the existence of other social problems, such as those associated with urban development, the existence of which in no way depends upon differences in colour or race."

"We believe that we must launch a broad attack on this whole problem of race relations, and that a valuable approach is to attempt to eradicate these social conditions which exacerbate racial divergencies rather than reconcile them. We profoundly believe that the concept of partnership is a valid concept, and that on this line, where can we advance to a world in which race differences are not a source of discord but rather give opportunities for the best in all races to be blended into a strong and harmonious society."

I was much struck the other day by a remark made in the general debate by the representative of Lebanon, who asked whether the notion of the nation-state should not be reconsidered in this amazingly contracted world. He suggested that the world to-day might be considered as being made up of six or seven fundamental cultural groupings. We also believe that the conditions of the modern world demand something more than its fragmentation on the basis of pure nationalism.

Towards Larger Units

"It is in this spirit that we are moving towards the creation of larger units and the development of cohesion and stability through emphasis on those things which bind men together rather than those which separate them. This process, we believe, is an inevitable development in the world at large. It is the spirit in which this assembly of nations was founded. We attach the greatest importance to the development of international co-operation in relation to the progress of non-self-governing territories. We shall play our part, and a very energetic part, in promoting regional groupings and associations for mutual or common technical problems.

We welcome the interest shown by the specialized agencies of the United Nations in the application to the problems of non-self-governing territories of the broad experience of mankind. We regard it as one of our cardinal functions in the non-self-governing territories to promote an effective technical assistance programme. The aid which we extend to our territories can well stand comparison with that available to any other country in the world; but we also feel that there is great value in associating this development with the technical assistance programmes of the United Nations and the specialized agencies. Finance alone stands in the way of the great and increasing participation of our territories in the expanded programme of technical assistance. We are well satisfied that the Technical Assistance Administration views our requests with sympathy, and we are equally well satisfied with the energy and effectiveness with which they have provided a wide variety of services to our territories. We have the will to cooperate.

Nine or Two Camps?

We should never subscribe to the view that there must exist in this committee two camps—the small camp of the administering authorities who by definition can be regarded as reactionary and obstructive, and the larger camp of the non-administering authorities who by definition can be believed to hold a monopoly of good intention. We believe that our fundamental objectives are the same.

We do not believe that individual problems are always approached without some degree of prejudice and without some degree of ignorance. It is of the utmost importance for the fruitfulness of our work and the reputation of our organization that the discussions and recommendations of this committee should manifestly be based on a true assessment of the nature of the problems and a generous understanding of the difficulties with which we are faced.

We consistently do our utmost to bring to meetings of this kind—and notably to the Committee on Information from the Self-Governing Territories—people who speak with authority and experience on the problems of our territories. It might be of great assistance if other Member States were to make a strong effort to do the same.

At a later stage my delegation may put forward concrete proposals designed to ensure that the matters with which we deal are examined, not solely within a preconceived political framework but, as world-wide problems, in the solution of which all countries can contribute.

It is impossible to set out the human problems which confront this committee in isolation. Many of them overlap the work of other committees in this assembly. All of them can be judged only against the background of the achievements of each of us in our own homelands, for it is only the knowledge we have gained in administering ourselves which teaches us to judge the success or failure of others. Only by joint efforts in the United Nations and within this committee can we solve the problems which are set before us.

Discarding Doubts and Suspicion

As was the intention of the drafters of the Charter, we can work together as one team; if we can discard some of the doubts and suspicions which exist on both sides, if we can draw on the maximum wisdom and technical knowledge which have gained from our own experiences, then the task of this committee will go forward harmoniously and steadily towards the goal which we all seek to attain—political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the peoples of the territories concerned.

Earlier Mr. Hopkinson had said:

"Wherever you look in the Colonial territories, with their vigorous Governments, and in many cases new constitutions and with their eager public opinion, we are met by demands for more and more frequent visits from their members of Home Government who have the responsibility of representing their interests. An equally great pressure of interest in regard to Colonial matters exists in our own Parliament at home. Debates on Colonial affairs are more vigorous during the present session of Parliament than those on any other topic. We can count on a full list of questions every week on Colonial matters addressed to Ministers by M.P.s ranging from the right to the extreme left. Finally we have to bear regard to world opinion represented most notably in this Assembly, and make sure that in devising our policies and planning for their execution we take account of the general situation."

If I might say one word in criticism, we feel that the report on educational conditions in non-self-governing territories places perhaps too great emphasis on the rapid extension of primary education. While we recognize the vital importance of the defeat of illiteracy, we feel that a territory must preserve some balance between stages of its educational development. You cannot have an effective system of primary education without a satisfactory system of teacher training. Such a system cannot be established without an adequate number of secondary schools from which to recruit student teachers. We must not gainanity through the sacrifice of quality, which may do lasting damage at a vital stage in the development of the territory.

Developing Capacity for Responsibility

Unless we insist on quality and equally insist on the provision of diversified opportunities for education of all types, both professional and technical, we cannot hope to achieve the objectives set forth in section A of the special report on education. If I had to state in a single phrase the fundamental objective of our educational policy, I should say that it was the development of the capacity for responsibility.

The objectives of Chapter 1 of the Charter cannot be met without a constant effort on the part of the administering authorities to thrust more and more responsibility on greater and greater numbers of the inhabitants of the territories. This process of the active evolution of responsibility can nevertheless not be followed blindly.

We do not believe that, just because there exists in any given territory a handful of brilliant and educated politicians that that territory is necessarily ripe to assume complete responsibility for its own affairs.

A stable democracy must be broadly based. There must be competence and enlightened interest at all levels of society, with a flow of educated and disciplined talents surging up to fill the places of the few brilliant individuals who will probably be found to lead the way in most countries of the world.

Her Majesty's Government would regard it as an utter dereliction of their duty if they handed over complete power to the peoples of the territories they administer when those territories had acquired no more than a facade of self-discipline and responsibility.

In some cases risks must be taken. But if we take such risks we must always be ready to recognize an error when we see it. If we were not to temper our enthusiasm with caution we might well find that after half a century of patient construction on the basis of democracy we had precipitated a relapse into conditions of instability in which the mass of the people had very little effective voice in the conduct of their own affairs and were abandoned to that tyranny which is perhaps the worst plight of any community—the tyranny of ambition and inexperience of a local oligarchy.

Smooth Transition to Independence

In recent years a number of territories and many millions of people formerly administered by the U.K. Government have become great independent countries. I think it can be said with all modesty that one of the main reasons why they have been so successful in making their own affairs why the transition from Imperial or Colonial rule to independence was carried out so smoothly with so few incidents is that over a long period of years British educational policy had evolved a trained and competent civil service and an impartial judiciary.

In the training of leaders we cannot underestimate the importance of higher education. It is in higher education that the general development of a sense of values for application to the ideals which are required on the lower wings of the educational ladder.

In 1952 there were approximately 1,900 full-time students in the several national institutions of higher education. The development of those newer institutions is making possible the application of the better that normally a student should

Mau Mau Leaders Permanently Banished from Kikuyuland

Firm Undertaking At Last Given by Kenya Government

SIR EVELYN BARING, Governor of Kenya, said in the course of a long speech in the Legislative Council on Tuesday:

"The military campaign will be pressed to a conclusion. The whole country owes a tremendous debt to General Erskine and all members of the security forces under his command. The United Kingdom Government have generously sent us troops and weapons to fight our enemy. With the troops at our disposal it should be possible to destroy Mau Mau as expressed by gangs of criminals in the forests."

Mau Mau is Doomed

"Let me tell any in this country who doubt it that if troops are withdrawn and a similar situation should arise again—and every step will be taken to prevent this—troops would immediately be sent back a second time. There is therefore no hope for success for the Mau Mau leaders, or for those of any similar disruptive organization, in a campaign of violence now or at any future date. Mau Mau is doomed, and the quicker its end the better."

"To prevent a recrudescence of Mau Mau or any other form of anti-social violence, and to avoid the need to use troops in large numbers a second time, the first and most important measure will be the maintenance of an effective Police Force."

"A major change of our security arrangements will be made. Much of the Kenya Police at its present strength will be disbanded and will be a strong Police Strike Force, with full training, capable of going quickly anywhere in the country. A third will be a number of mobile and mobile units to make sure that this big Police Force will be of high quality. The presence of Kenya Police in the African areas is a permanent and not a temporary measure."

"Independent schools in African areas cannot with safety be allowed. Powers of supervision and inspection are not sufficient to avoid the young from being led astray. The Government must also have a financial control through a grant in aid. This is the lesson learned from the history of the K.I.S.A. schools, which have been closed and which will not in any circumstances be reopened."

"Central Province has for some months had a greatly increased Police Force. It has been decided to institute closer policing and to build new police posts in other areas, the aim being to expand and extend the police cover throughout the Colony as much as possible."

"A Police Commission has visited Kenya, and it is proposed to bring before the Council its report. The Government has already accepted the interim report of the Commission, and has decided to implement decision discussed in 1947 to follow the U.K. precedent and fix the terms of service of the police separately from those of the Civil Service. It is hoped to present a Bill to the Council during the new session to give effect to this decision and to such other recommendations of the Commission as may require legislation."

Strain on Police

"A very great strain has been placed on the whole force under the Commissioner—the regular Police, the Kenya Police Reserve, and the Special Police. The rapid expansion of the force as a whole has inevitably resulted in a shortening of the training of recruits. But in spite of this all branches have carried out their heavy task in conditions of great difficulty with great efficiency. Thanks all ranks for the loyal and unspiring manner in which they have spent themselves."

"Closely connected with the expansion of the police has been a necessary expansion in the Prisons Department. The prison population has doubled since October 1952. All serving under the Commissioner for Prisons deserve the thanks of the people of Kenya for the manner in which they have coped with this great increase without there being any breakdown in the prison administration. Many convicts from security prisons have been dispersed to temporary prison camps, and it is intended to employ them to the economic advantage of the Colony as a whole. Already many are working in Nyanza on such undertakings as soil conservation and bush-clearing as an anti-settlement measure."

"As is well known, it has been necessary to detain the leading members of the unlawful Mau Mau society."

"The Commissioner for Community Development has been put in charge of a special Rehabilitation Department. The object of his work is to win back where possible Africans in prisons or detention camps, or in the African lands where minds have been polluted by Mau Mau propaganda. He has visited Mombasa, and from the work of this nature done there learnt many useful lessons. In such a difficult operation it is impossible to foretell the degree of success which will be attained, but an attempt can and must be made to win some of these people back from subversion to the false doctrines and false promises of Mau Mau."

In particular it is hoped that success will be obtained with the many thousands of Kikuyu who have left farms, forests, and other African areas and come back into the Kikuyu land unit.

Tribute to Administrative Officers

"After so much upheaval such as the emergency and the lessons learned from it, it is essential to overhaul the administrative machine in the districts and provinces, for on that ultimately all depends. An extraordinarily heavy burden has fallen on administrative officers. They have had to shoulder heavy responsibility and take many difficult decisions. I welcome the opportunity of thanking them for the way they have gone in their duty."

"Steps are being taken to ensure that there is closer administration of the reserves area, and there will be a greater continuity than in the past of service of administrative officers in their districts. There will be encouragement for the learning of a vernacular language of the province in which an officer is stationed. With increased staff more touring will be done."

In case any reader thinks that these measures will be frustrated, let me add that I am authorized with the full concurrence of the Secretary of State to say that neither he nor I can see the likelihood of a situation developing in which it would be possible to permit the return to any area where they might cause trouble, under any conditions whatsoever, of the leading personalities of the Mau Mau movement. Steps will be taken when necessary to give effect to this exclusion."

"These vile men, self-seekers who hoped to attain their ends by subversion and violence, have done incalculable harm to all in Kenya, and particularly to the members of their own tribe. It is fervent action should be taken against the few most vicious leaders of the Mau Mau movement."

"For this reason a Bill will be introduced for the forfeiture of land held in the Kikuyu land unit by two classes of persons: first, those convicted of certain serious offences connecting the offenders closely with the direction of the Mau Mau movement, and, secondly, any still at large who may be declared subject to the provisions of the Bill—that is in practice the best-known gang leaders now opposing the forces of law and order."

Forfeited Land

"In cognizance with this forfeiture of Mau Mau leaders' land I wish to make clear two points: (1) that the Government have no intention of taking any action against land other than that of those I have already mentioned, and (2) that the land which will be forfeit will be put to a public purpose. It might be used for a clinic, a school, or for agricultural experiment."

"For the Kikuyu land unit the provincial commissioners of the Central Province will be given special powers and a staff, administrative, police, and agrarian, to assist him in his heavy task of reconstruction and of the restoration and maintenance of peace and security. Measures will be taken to see that Kikuyu are as closely associated as possible with him in the implementation of these measures."

The Kikuyu chosen for this purpose, to whom the Govern-

Policy of Federal Party of Central Africa

Enabling Europeans and Africans to Live in Harmony

A STATEMENT OF POLICY covering 41 points has been issued by the recently formed Federal Party of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, of which Sir Godfrey Huggins is president. The document is in the following Principles

- 1.—To build a strong and prosperous State which will be a bulwark of the Commonwealth in Central Africa, imbued with British traditions of justice, freedom, and loyalty to the Crown.
- 2.—To serve the interests of all the lawful inhabitants of the Federation, to foster good relations between the various races, and to promote their common welfare.
- 3.—To preserve the fundamental rights of the individual throughout the Federal State, with freedom of speech, freedom of assembly within the law, freedom of the Press, and freedom of worship.
- 4.—To support loyally the Federal Constitution, while working for full membership of the Commonwealth in the shortest possible time.
- 5.—To foster and develop friendly relations with adjoining territories and to co-operate in matters of mutual interest.
- 6.—To keep open the possibility of other and adjoining territories becoming part of the Federation.
- 7.—To ensure that the future of the Federal State lies in the hands of the representatives of its inhabitants.
- 8.—To maintain and encourage private enterprise, but to call in State enterprise or aid where the national interest so demands.
- 9.—To maintain the use of English as the only official language of the Federation.

Objectives

- Development of Natural Resources.*—10.—To put into operation a vigorous programme of development throughout the Federation, designed to give full employment and prosperity to all its inhabitants, to provide for the absorption of its growing population, and to make full use of its vast natural resources.

- Immigration.*—11.—To encourage planned and selective immigration at the greatest rate at which the Federation can absorb immigrants, since we believe that a large European population is essential to the progress, prosperity, and happiness of all races.
- 12.—To take such steps as may be necessary to prevent the entry into the Federation of peoples or individuals whose presence might be detrimental to the economic, racial, or political stability of the Federation.
- 13.—To guard against Communism and other subversive activities within the Federation.

Towards a Healthy Economy

- Industry.*—14.—To encourage, and protect where justified, the development of primary and secondary industries, especially those based on the Federation's products, or considerations necessary to its economy, in order to achieve a greater measure of self-sufficiency and a healthy trade balance through increased exports.
- 15.—To encourage the growth of primary and secondary industries and to do so by taxation relief in respect of capital expenditure, by assisting in finding export markets, by trade agreements with other countries, and by protection against dumping or other unfair competition.
- 16.—To encourage the development of a large tourist trade.

- Communications.*—17.—To give high priority to the improvement and expansion of communications by road, river, water, and air, postal services and broadcasting, in order to keep ahead, of the growing needs of the country and provide for its anticipated development. To investigate the use of Zambezi and other waterways as a means of transport and communication.

18.—To strive for the acquisition of West and East Coast ports and rail links thereto, and with this end in view to enter into negotiations with the appropriate neighbouring territories.

Power and Water Supplies.—19.—To ensure an adequate supply of power for the maintenance and development of industry and agriculture, and to develop schemes for hydro-electric power and irrigation.

Minerals.—20.—To give such assistance to the territorial Governments as may from time to time be necessary to encourage the prospecting for and development of mineral deposits and their ultimate disposal, with special reference to the production of minerals for export and of coal and other fuels, including oil from coalbeds to encourage measures for improved utilization of coal and recovery of economic by-products of coal.

Food Production

Agriculture.—21.—To relieve food-sufficiency in regard to the food requirements of the Federation, and to this end to pay unremitting attention to the use of all available land, to soil and water conservation, to research, and to scientific development of the natural resources of the area.

22.—To endeavour to maintain a producer surplus which will be fair both to the producer and the consumer.

23.—To develop an adequate supply of raw materials for the use of secondary industry.

24.—To encourage the fullest development of the export market for all suitable agricultural products.

25.—To give such assistance to the territorial Governments as may from time to time be necessary to encourage the development of peasant agriculture.

Education.—26.—To improve and develop, within the sphere of education assigned to the Federal Government, the existing systems of primary and secondary education at a standard at least equivalent to that provided in Southern Rhodesia at present, with such assistance as may be necessary for parents whose children cannot attend day schools and who are unable to meet the full cost of boarding fees and travelling expenses.

27.—To make such provision as may be necessary for the education and care of physically, mentally, or socially defective children.

28.—To provide through bursaries, scholarships and other approved means for the continued education of selected students who are lawfully entitled to benefit of the universities and other centres of higher education within the Federation or beyond its borders.

29.—To make grants-in-aid to approved centres of higher education and cultural institutions within the Federation and to those providing for students from the Federation, and also to make grants-in-aid for the purposes of research.

30.—To establish technical, mining and specialist training schools other than universities, designed to assist the development of industry, commerce, and agriculture; or to provide training for public service and the teaching profession; to establish as and when necessary trade schools.

Health Services

Health.—31.—To develop the major health services in as far as they may fall within the Federal sphere, and to improve general and special hospital facilities throughout the area.

32.—In doing so to make available the best medical, dental, ophthalmic and hospital services: (a) to encourage the growth or establishment of voluntary contributory health schemes, especially those providing cover for serious illness; (b) to give State assistance where necessary in order to enable voluntary societies to accept what are termed 'bad risks' at reasonable rates, with suitable safeguards against abuse.

Housing.—33.—To collaborate to the fullest possible extent with the territorial Governments in the provision of funds for housing, including houses to rent, which, although primarily a territorial responsibility, is one of the most important factors affecting the growth and expansion of the Federal State.

Disability and Old Age Pensions.—34.—To establish as examination shows the practicability a contributory scheme to cover disability and old age pensions.

Defence.—35.—To provide with available resources for the effective defence of the Federation and for rendering assistance to the Commonwealth in case of need.

Finance.—36.—To encourage the flow of capital from all available sources and to promote practical projects of development which will produce in the Federation economic, social, and political well-being.

37.—To make financial provision which will ensure that the services essential for the development of the Federation and the welfare of the population can be provided.

38.—To advocate the establishment at the earliest opportunity of a Federal Reserve Bank which will regulate the national currency, gold exchange, and the credit structure of the Federation.

39.—To combat inflation during a period of rapid expansion by correct monetary policy and the institution of such measures as may be necessary to check increases in the cost of living.

40.—To negotiate with other countries in the sterling area in maintaining the purchasing value of the pound.

Native Affairs

41.—To interpret (without prejudice) to the fact that Native Affairs are primarily a territorial responsibility the reference to partnership and co-operation in the preamble to the federal scheme as including:

(1) the desirability of conforming to a system that will enable European and African to live in harmony;

(2) the realization that the European and the African have distinctive and complementary parts to play in the Federation and that each should be rewarded according to his contribution to the partnership;

(3) the recognition of the natural desire on the part of our race to develop our traditional values and the need for keeping this in mind in the provision of facilities and amenities while the present wide differences exist in the cultural levels of the mass of the people;

(4) the gradual extension of political rights and privileges to those who conform to civilized standards of behaviour and culture, with a corresponding diminution in special political representation;

(5) the acceptance of the principle that persons acquiring political rights can no longer enjoy special privileges.

Two Points of View About the Nyasaland Disturbances

Our leading article discussed by the "Nyasaland Times"

WHILE GENERALLY AGREEING with the leading article in a recent issue of this newspaper on the causes of the disturbances in Nyasaland, the Nyasaland Times has criticized some of our statements.

It is clearly desirable that the other side of the story should be made widely known, and we therefore quote in full the leading article of our contemporary, It, read as follows:

"This will not be the first occasion on which we have devoted a considerable portion of our editorial space to an editorial from our London contemporary, EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA. Always this surrender of space has been fully justified. In the issue of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA of September 10th, the editor wrote:

"Failure to govern" is at the root of the troubles in Nyasaland. Because that truth cannot be expected from the commission with restricted terms of reference appointed by the Governor, it can be no substitute for the searching inquiry which ought to be made when the disturbances are over. As there should also be in Nyasaland when the emergency ends.

Leadership Lacking

The Government of Nyasaland having ceased long ago to give recognizable leadership, the Nyasaland African Congress (previously known as the Congress) recruited politically-inclined Africans, most of them in such junior official jobs as clerks in Government offices and teachers in primary schools) grew rapidly in power, which is extended by intimidation, mixed with judicious flattery, the case of some chiefs. Its methods have been in flagrant variance with those of the democracy which its spokesmen practise.

"A Social Secretary of State did, it is true, prevent the governments of Nyasaland and Northern Rhodesia from taking appropriate action until much damage had been done by the false and vicious propaganda of Congress extremists who, under the guise of educating public opinion about federation, were allowed to say and do what they liked. Fortunately, a general election brought the Colonial Office at a crucial moment a Secretary of State determined to limit the activities of the irresponsible misleaders of the African masses.

Mr. Melville, having told the African Governments to govern, the outlook was quickly transformed in Northern Rhodesia. There was no general strike, and Africans in European employment did not return to their villages, as threatened; on the contrary, many Africans saw that they and their fellow men had duped. The credit for that dramatic change is due chiefly to the Governor, Sir Gilbert Rennie, who made it his business to travel widely, meet Africans of all types, tell them the blunt truth, and challenge them to loyal obedience.

Because there has been no comparable display of initiative, energy and firmness in Nyasaland, it is there that violence has now to be suppressed. Days of violence occurred for weeks before rioting began, but disregarding the warnings of settlers that bloodshed would follow, the Government adopted an attitude of appeasement to the African troublemakers, so it is surprising that they continued their menacing threats?

Northern Rhodesia had already clamped a number of the worst offenders in gaol, dismissed others who were on the official payroll, and restored a sense of realism. If Nyasaland had done the same the lives would have been saved and the damage to race relations averted.

We generally endorse this editorial, but in detail we do not see entirely eye to eye with EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA. This, we believe, is the very first occasion on which we have not done so.

Our lack of "eye to eye" is in that though Mr. Joeson has very fairly indeed recognized the long-standing responsibility of Labour Colonial Secretaries for the Nyasaland disturbances, he does not—as he might well have done—attribute the entire responsibility to them. We suggest that the disturbances were due to failure so general in Nyasaland.

We do not think that this editorial is altogether fair to our Governor or Government. In our opinion both have had a difficult, and what might have been an extremely dangerous situation, in an entirely adequate manner.

"At any time, either before or as soon as the disturbance started, it could have been quashed in a day or two. Had it had a blow-off, a major raid, a visitation of the Star-Rail and squadrons of the R.A.F., within four hours away."

Very well, let us understand each other. His Excellency has to handle the situation with one eye to the disturbance, and the other on a vigorous Opposition African Party and the European leaders on. He chose to deal with the disturbance as he did, probably simply a police matter. Results, though perhaps reluctantly, have justified the decision.

Comparisons with Kenya and N. Rhodesia
"Our countrymen draw comparisons with Kenya and Northern Rhodesia. We disagree that such comparisons can be made. Originally the trend in Kenya was much more violent, but at an early date a high-ranking general was killed, and instantly suppressive measures became a military operation—thereby letting the Governor of the Colony out."

"In the same way Northern Rhodesia does not present a parallel. Here it is a Protectorate, but one that has advanced well ahead of Nyasaland. It has a largely elected Government and, more important still, a powerful financial group, interest which has had no inclination for having its outputs curtailed by political agitators so long as they have no gaols to slay them into submission."

"Finally, we think that, as far as the Nyasaland Government's handling of the disturbance is concerned, the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The disturbance is at an end, probably there will never be a recurrence. The mass African has learned his lesson, including that of a dislike for and disaffection of Congress and its supporters. No largesse of any consequence, physical or material, or no money, has resulted. And both communities are freed, once again, as they have been for so many years."

No one in Nyasaland is likely to have better information about the disturbances than the author of the local newspaper, whose opinions have therefore been given in extenso. A few comments should perhaps be added.

It would not seem fair to us to attribute the entire responsibility for the disturbances to South African Ministers. Apart altogether from the question of culpability on the part of the Nyasaland Government, Mr. Hess's proposal would exonerate the agitators of the African Congress and those who encouraged them to organize "non-violent co-operation", and just can scarcely not be his intention.

He writes that the disturbances could "only" have been quashed in a day or two if that was so, was never clear obligation upon the local Government to achieve that result at the earliest possible moment, since every avoidable delay might cost lives?

The fact that the appointment of a force of 2,000 men under the Governor of the Colony, but "a clearly ill-conceived".

Even worse, we think, is the suggestion that "Nyasaland Rhodesia's vigorous handling of agitation" was due to a powerful financial group which has no intention of leaving its empire scurried. By political action so long as there is a good chance of profit. The mining companies have not visited the practices of subversion with persistence. That has been done by the Government, and in particular by the personal ease and determination of the Governor. Had he been an advocate of the wishes and interests of the mining firms might have been disturbed.

Confidence No Share

It is to be hoped that the Nyasaland Times will be proved right in its prophecy that "probably there will never be a recurrence of disturbance", but it is now men of great experience in Central Africa who do not share that confidence. Doubts that kind in such quarters send good reason for a call and independent inquiry (which will be resisted by some people for very obvious reasons).

Finally, it is surprising to note that "no damage of any consequence to morale has resulted". On the scores of letters from Nyasaland which have reached us in the past couple of months every one has expressed a desire of variance with that statement.

The official correspondent of The Sunday Times telegraphed from Blantyre last week in the course of a long dispatch on the causes of the unrest:

"The organization of non-violent opposition was almost bound to end in violence, for the Africans who are constantly being urged to imitate the Indian techniques have not the temperamental aptitude for them, as has been proved over and over again."

The fact that once violence had been started it did not take the same course as in Kenya is attributable to a variety of reasons. The financial administration must take the largest share of the credit. The officials had remained in closer touch with the people than in almost any other African Colony. Secondly, the precedent of employing small, mobile, highly trained and disciplined police striking forces proved successful. These forces, which came from the Rhodesias and Tanganyika, numbered, in all only 250 men, but they restored order with a minimum of casualties. In general, the sense of timing shown by all concerned was admirable. Mr. Geoffrey Bayly, the Governor, was proved right in resisting the temptation to declare a state of emergency.

Majority Quick to Co-operate

On the African side there were differences too. The local population are nothing like so tough or intelligent as the Kikuyu. Except when under the influence of hysteria, the majority remained in the orbit of the Government and were quick to co-operate in the abnormal conditions. Finally, the Congress leaders, who in their view may have said and implemented and not deliberately preached hatred and violence as a political creed. One reason why the Southern Province was the scene of trouble is that it is more urbanized and the leaders more extreme than in the central centre.

In spite of these features, there is little cause for alarm in this episode of Nyasaland history. The Africans have revealed political immaturity and a readiness to listen to bad advice since the day when they first refused to take part in the discussions on federation. Several Europeans have behaved with great irresponsibility, and in one case a court seems to have gone out of its way to suggest that there is one law for the black and another for the white.

The British Government must bear their share of the blame for trying to introduce federation without allowing the administrative officers to give straightforward advice to the Africans who sought it.

A new party, the Progressive Association, is now doing its best. If this can establish itself, we may act as an opposition to Congress. There would certainly be a better chance of democratic institutions evolving if there were two parties in Nyasaland instead of one, as too often happens in Africa.

Another interesting development is the decision of the moderate party from Southern Rhodesia to hold a meeting in Blantyre. This party, which wears a form of apartheid, is acquiring support in Nyasaland among Africans who see in its policies a chance of the territory's becoming a full African State sooner or later. These are not however the policies favoured by Congress, which still believes in partnership as the ideal to be aimed at.

It is astonishing to read that opposition to the Congress leaders had not deliberately preached hatred and violence as a political creed's and that Congress still believes in partnership as the ideal to be aimed at. The speech of the president of the Congress and other members have reflected a demand for outright domination, not partnership, and the Governor of Nyasaland himself said recently that Congress agitators have adopted "the peasant to violence."

The condemnation of the British Government for trying to introduce federation without allowing the administrative officers to give straightforward advice to those Africans who sought it should have been qualified. Readers having intimate knowledge would interpret that charge as applying to the present Government. In fact, it was the Sury of the socialist Government and especially of Mr. James Griffiths as its Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Lowest-Priced Car in the World

Ford Company's Two New Models

SIR PATRICK HENNESSY, deputy chairman and managing director of the Ford Motor Co. Ltd., announced on Monday night that the Dagenham works of the company are now manufacturing more motor vehicles than any other plant in the world outside the United States, and that its new Popular car will be the lowest-priced four-cylinder car in the world at £275 plus £115 purchase tax. That is £85 below the cost of its closest competitor. Populars are already being produced at the rate of 250 daily.

The highest-priced Ford here is the V-8 American at £601 plus £250 purchase tax. The complete range for export and home markets is wider. Models are the Zephyr Mk. II (£23, plus £22), the Consul (£14, plus £197), the New Prefect (£395, plus £166), and the New Anglia (£360, plus £151).

Last month the Dagenham factory produced 23,465 an all-time record. For 1952 the average output was 661 units daily. For the first three quarters of this year the averages have been 8,500, 9,68 and 1,037.

Educating African Girls

AFRICAN OPPOSITION to female education is mainly due to discouragement by Christians of the attendance of girls at traditional puberty rites, says the African Education Department. The opening of more careers may convince parents that such education is worth while, but this is unlikely to be very effective. Basically there is a need for the African to change his ideas and his customs, which encourage the marriage of girls who have only just reached the age of puberty. This will be a slow process, but all energies should be directed towards hastening it by every agency concerned with African affairs." Last year 45,158 African girls were enroled in Northern Rhodesia's schools, a drop of 4,459 from the previous year.

A theoscope, a glass compass showing the direction and distance of places of historical interest, was recently unveiled on Salisbury kopje by Sir Dougal Malcolm, who presented it in memory of the pioneers. The theoscope, which cost £600 to build, indicates about 20 places. Its beacon, in white-washed cement, can be seen for many miles. It is on the site of Salisbury's first ammunition laager.

He would not seem fit to us to attribute the entire responsibility for the disturbances to Socialist Ministers. Apart altogether from the question of culpability on the part of the Nyasaland Government, Mr. Hess's proposal would exonerate the agitators of the African Congress and those who encouraged them to practise "non-violent non-cooperation" and that, can ascertain, might be his intention.

He writes that the disturbances could be put down quickly in a day or two. If that was so, was there not a clear obligation upon the local Government to achieve that result at the earliest possible moment, since every avoidable delay might cost lives?

He has accepted the appointment of a general officer to Kenya, Mr. [redacted] Governor of the Colony, out it is clearly a misconception.

Even worse, we think, is the notion that Northern Rhodesia's vigorous handling of agitation has been due to a powerful financial group which has had no objection of having its output curtailed by political action so long as, there are funds to slap them into. The mining companies have not visited [redacted] of subversion with punishment. This has been done by the Government, and, in particular, by the personal example and determination of the Governor. Had he been an apesee the wishes and interests of the mining groups might have been disregarded.

Confidence Not Shared

It is to be hoped that the Nyasaland Times will be proved right in its prophecy that "probably there will never be a recurrence of disturbance", but we know men of great experience in Central Africa who do not share that confidence. Doubt of mankind in such quarters is one good reason for an early and independent enquiry. Violence will be resisted by some people for very obvious reasons.

Finally, it is surprising to be told that "no change of any consequence is likely to result". Of the scores of letters from Nyasaland which we have reached us in the past couple of months, very few have expressed a view in variance with that statement.

A special correspondent of The Times cabled from Nairobi last week in the course of a long dispatch on the causes of the unrest:

"The decision to non-violent opposition was almost bound to end in violence, for the Africans, who are constantly being urged to imitate the Indian techniques, have not the temperamental nature for this as has been proved over and over again."

"The fact that once violence had been started it did not take the same course in Kenya is attributable to a variety of reasons. The provincial administration must take the largest share of the credit. The officials had remained in close touch with the people than in almost any other African Colony. Secondly, the expedient of employing small mobile, highly-trained and disciplined police striking forces proved successful. These forces, which came from the Rhodesias and Tanganyika, numbered in all only 250 men, but they restored order with a minimum of casualties. In general, the sense of security shown by all concerned was admirable. Sir Geoffrey Collier, the Governor, was proved right in resisting the temptation to declare a state of emergency."

Majority Quick to Co-operate

On the African side there were differences. The local Somalis are nothing like so tough of mind as the Kikuyus. Even when under the influence of hysteria, the majority remained on the side of the Government and were quick to co-operate in restoring normal conditions. Finally, the Congress leaders, whatever of them may have said at their meetings, had not definitely preached fire and violence as a political creed. Other reasons why the Southern Province was less prone to disorder are that it is more urbanized and the leaders were less extreme than in the north and centre.

In spite of these features, there is little cause for optimism in this episode of Nyasaland history. The Africans have revealed political immaturity and a readiness to listen to bad advice since the day when they first refused to take part in the discussions on federation. Several Europeans have seemed to have gone out of their way to suggest that there is a law for the black and another for the white.

The British Government must bear this charge if the party is trying to introduce federation without allowing the administrative officers to give straightforward advice to these Africans who sought it.

In my party, the Progressive Association, we are being formed. If it can establish itself, it may act as an alternative to Congress. There would certainly be a better chance of democratic institutions evolving if there were no parties in Nyasaland in the first place, as so often happens in Africa. Another interesting development is the decision of the Confederate Party from Southern Rhodesia to hold a meeting in Blantyre. This party, which deplores "a form of apartheid", may acquire some support in Nyasaland among Africans who see in its policies a chance of the territory's becoming an all-African State within the Federation. It does not, however, believe in the policies favoured by Congress, which still believes in partnership as the ideal to be aimed at.

It is astounding to read in that dispatch that the Congress leaders "had not deliberately preached hatred and violence as a political creed" and that "Congress still believes in partnership as the ideal to be aimed at." The public speeches of the president of the Congress and other members have already demanded outright domination not partnership, and the Governor of Nyasaland has himself said recently that Congress agitators have stirred the peasants to violence.

The continuation of these British Government for trying to introduce federation without allowing the administrative officers to give straightforward advice to those Africans who sought it should have been qualified. Leaders lacking intimate knowledge would interpret it at charge as applying to the present Government. In fact, it was true only of the Socialist Government, and especially of Mr. James Griffiths as its Secretary of State for the Colonies.

Lowest-Priced Car in the World

Ford Company's Two New Models

SIR PATRICK HENNESSY, deputy chairman and managing director of the Ford Motor Co., Ltd., announced on Monday night that the Dagenham works of the company would be manufacturing more motor vehicles than any other plant in the world outside the United States, and that the new Popular car will be the lowest-priced four-cylinder car in the world at £275 plus £15 purchase tax. That is £5 below the cost of its closest competitor. Populars were already being produced at the rate of 250 daily.

The highest-priced Ford is now the Zephyr Zodiac at £600, plus £251 purchase tax, giving the company a complete range for export and home markets. The other models are the Zephyr VI (£523, plus £22), the Consul (£470, plus £197), the New Prefect (£395, plus £166), and the New Anglia (£360, plus £151).

Last month the Dagenham factory produced 23,466 units, an all-time record. For 1952 the average output was 661 units daily. For the first three quarters of this year the averages have been 851, 968 and 1,023.

Educating African Girls

AFRICAN OPPOSITION to female education is mainly due to discouragement by Christians of the attendance of girls at traditional puberty rites, says the African Education Department. The opening of more careers may convince parents that such education is worth while, but this is unlikely to be very effective. "Basically this is a need for the Africans to change his ideas and his customs, which encourage the marriage of girls who have only just reached the age of puberty. This will be a slow process, but all energies should be directed towards hastening it by every agency concerned with African affairs." In the year 45,158 African girls were enrolled in Northern Rhodesia's schools, up of 1,590 from the previous year.

A toposcope, a giant compass showing the direction and distance of sites of historical interest, was recently unveiled on Salisbury koppie by Sir Dougal Macmillan, who presented it in memory of the pioneers. The toposcope, which cost £600, would indicate about 20 places. Its beacon in whitewashed cement, can be seen for many miles. It is on the site of Salisbury's first ammunition lager.

Vote of No Confidence Defeated

Support for Kenya Government

A MOTION by Mr. S. V. Cooke, member for Nairobi in the Kenya Legislative Council, criticising Government for the handling of the emergency, was defeated by 22 votes to 32, the African and Asian members voting with the Government. After some amendments had been accepted the motion read: "that in the opinion of this council the emergency is not being handled with the necessary imagination, vigour and sense of urgency, and calls upon Government to explore every means of remedying this situation forthwith."

Mr. Cooke said his motion was one of no confidence. He declared that there was an attitude of defeatism in the Colony, that the public had no confidence in the police which had become a byword of inefficiency, at venality; and that the cunning and ferocity of Mau Mau had been overestimated.

Greater Powers Sought

Mr. Michael Gundlach, leader of the European elected members, moved an amendment in favour of greater powers of decision being given to the Keny Government by the Secretary of State.

Mr. H. S. Rotter, the Chief Secretary, opposing both the motion and the amendment, instances the recent drastic measures which had been taken in the Colony.

Mr. E. Mathu, leader of the African members, thought that greater determination and more imagination were needed. Mr. H. Shadie, member for the Aberdares, could not agree that the Secretary of State was to blame, but having to refer matters to someone many thousands of miles away made it difficult for the local Government to move bodily.

Major F. W. Cavendish-Bentley, Member for Agriculture, firmly denied that Government had been devoid of imagination and sense of urgency.

Two more prominent Kikuyu, well known for their terrorist activities, have been ambushed and killed by the North Tetu. They are Chief Kimbouri and a chieftain (Shadrack).

Last week in the Karatu area 52 terrorists were killed mostly armed bandits. The number killed in the first two weeks of October in the other Provinces was as great as that for the whole of September.

Efforts by European farmers in areas near the scenes of operations include the erection of watchtowers with lights and the concentration of resident labourers in villages with strong stockades for the night shift.

In a joint statement on the official manpower policy the Governor, Sir Evelyn Barker, and the Commander-in-Chief, Sir George Erskine, have appealed to manpower committees, employers, and others to assist in providing recruits both for the Kenya Regiment and the police reserves. General Erskine would like the strength of the Kenya Regiment raised to 5000, but has temporarily accepted a minimum strength of 420. The present strength of the police reserve is now 15.

The trial of two Kikuyu alleged by the prosecution to be members of the Mau Mau central committee opened last week. Evidence was given of the collection of subscriptions for the defence of Jomo Kenyatta and other purposes, and of powers being given to set up a resistance front.

Two more trials changed the complexion of the situation in Nairobi on March 1st. In the series of trials which have been sentenced to death. These were the last executions in connexion with the Kasarani outrage.

In the Kasarani massacre of terrorists near Fort Hall in which 300 Kikuyu died, of which part, it is reported that only two or three terrorists escaped, out of a total of about 70.

The Asian call-up has now been extended to include men between the ages of 24 and 35.

Position in Nairobi

Mr. R. D. Lyland, officer in charge of the frontier locations, has issued a statement from which the following passages are taken:

"In the result, the position in Nairobi has rapidly deteriorated. Cases during June were 120 per cent., rising through July and August to some 20 per cent., and in September to approximately 30 per cent. crime of a serious nature, such as house and shop breakings increased proportionately, our figures in August, nine in July, six in June and one attempted murder in August and six murders, with five attempts in September."

"During the latter portion of September the law-abiding and peaceful sections of the African community were incited and inciting the boycott of the bus services and bans on smoking and the use of Asian eating-houses. This anti-social campaign was 100% successful because of the ubiquitousness of the bands of Mau Mau, who, in their movement, may be protected from reprisals by Mau Mau masters for any failure to observe the dictates of their gang.

Concurrently with this campaign directed against the rights and privileges of the ordinary African citizen inspired rumours and possible standstill were disseminated, accompanied by actual intimidation. This gave rise to a most critical situation, and used the authorities locally responsible for the maintenance of law and order and essential services to apply for reinforcements of military force.

Moral Revived

As a result of their representations, the Commander-in-Chief and the Commissioner Police promptly responded by introducing 1st Battalion King's Fusiliers and a considerable number of police. Their combined efforts resulted in a very appreciable restoration of confidence amongst all communities. Morale was revived, the crime situation showed much improvement, and the threat of a general standstill abated, particularly as the Trade Unions, inspired by positive action, declared themselves opposed to any strike.

Unfortunately these measures have not yet evoked sufficient confidence to encourage the mass of the African population to defy the Mau Mau imposed boycott, which—causing them such inconvenience. The situation, though much improved, therefore is far from satisfactory, and further measures are now being taken to frustrate the criminal, stiffen morale, strengthen public confidence, and protect the loyal African.

"The speeding up of plans for the closer administration of the locations, which are being put into effect by the joint co-operation of the Administration, police, and the City African Affairs Department, has been welcomed by a large section of African opinion, and the presence of district officers on the ground has done much to hearten the loyal elements. Coupled with these measures, constant and successful efforts have been made by the African Information Services to keep the community informed of Government's plans.

As a result of the recent developments spontaneous representations have been made by leading Africans for the adoption of measures to secure greater protection for the law-abiding and according to agreement, he decided to implement these requests by the provision of protective fencing round certain of the locations and at the same time to introduce a policy of racial segregation.

"The erection of protective fencing is intended merely as a temporary expedient to ensure the safety of the locations by depriving them of a refuge to shelter elements, one of whom have been compelled to leave the forests and reserves on account of the increasing pressure exerted by the security forces. At the moment it is considered that a considerable number of criminals have converged here from the locations, and pending police operations will, it is hoped, result in the expulsion of those that remain."

"The erection of a protective fence will assist the police in their efforts to prevent their return, and will in no way isolate the law-abiding Africans from normal contact with the other inhabitants of the city."

"It is likely that Katoleka location will be the scene of the first experiment in tribal segregation; this should result in an increased desire for positive action by the inhabitants towards their own self-protection. If this experiment succeeds the principle will be extended to other suitable locations, and may help to check the drift of loyal tribes from Nairobi."

Eastleigh a Prohibited Area

"Many criminals have left the locations, and there is evidence that many of them are finding harbourage in Eastleigh. It has accordingly been decided to make this a prohibited area to members of the Kikuyu, Embu, and Meru tribes, who, with certain exceptions, clearly set out, are forbidden to enter or be in the greater location of Eastleigh."

"The law measure which we have mentioned—and this is definitely long-term—chemically affects the present situation in the Five Federation of a Kikuyu elite township, located in the region of Ruaraka. No final decisions have yet been taken in this matter, but if implemented the scheme will provide for reasonable housing facilities for persons displaced under the present proposals for tribal segregation."

"Although the continuing threat of a stoppage of work has been averted and the general situation vastly improved, it is only to propose that the present rate of improvement can be maintained or bettered unless all these helping to maintain law and order continue their efforts without relaxing."

"It is the intention of the authorities to keep up and increase the present pressure with all the forces available in Nairobi, to return to its normal existence and all sections of the community are enabled to exercise their normal functions without hindrance."

U.S. Interests in Kenya Investment

Mr. Hope-Jones' Recent Visit

TWO MOTORCAR MANUFACTURERS, one British and the other American, are likely to take over assembly and manufacture of vehicles in Kenya, Mr. Arthur Hope-Jones, Member for Commerce and Industry in Kenya, told a gathering of London journalists on Tuesday.

He had arrived from a visit to the United States only a few days earlier, and leaves by air on Tuesday for Nairobi.

Mrs. Hope-Jones said:

"I have just returned from a month's visit to the United States, undertaken at the invitation of the American State Department and the Department of Commerce. My object was to discuss with interested American capital investors the many possibilities of profitable investment in Kenya, as certain questions of technical assistance could be left with the appropriate agencies of the United States Government."

Importance of Industrial Development

Over the past six years there has been a real development in Kenya. The nation's commerce has doubled during that period, and apart from the basic and essential development of agriculture, African and European, there has been a large growth of secondary industries. This has been helped forward by the development of water resources by the rapid and indeed urgent progress of the Geological Survey. Industrial development in Kenya is now of prime importance.

"It is the policy of the Government to attract outside capital by every legitimate means and there has been very considerable success in achieving this objective in the benefit of all the inhabitants of the Colony. British capital has made the largest investments in Kenya, and it is hoped that this process will continue to an increasing degree. There has also been considerable investment of Dutch, Scandinavian, and Italian capital."

"It was felt that this was an opportune time for me to go to America. That point of view has been proved right, during my visit. I found, for example, definite interest in oil exploration in northern Kenya; in clothing manufacture, motor-car, and agricultural machinery assembly and part-manufacture, and a number of other specific projects."

"In addition, I was able to obtain from the Foreign Operations Administration a promise of technical assistance in the development of important deposits of rare earth, including nobium and titanium, at Mrimoni on the Kenya coast south of Mombasa."

Mr. Eugene Black Hopes to Visit Kenya

"Mr. Eugene Black, president of the International Bank, expressed a desire to visit East Africa next year. I am sure that this important visit will enable him to see East Africa as a region of the world where the funds of the Bank can be invested with profit and prudence over the coming years."

"Through the kindness of Mr. David Rockefeller, I was able to meet many of the leading investment bankers of New York, and, I believe, engage their interest in Kenya as a country of rapidly growing opportunities, while through the assistance of Mr. Lawrence Rockefeller I was able to interest their people in the political and social problems of the Colony."

"It is because the Kenya Government does all in its power to promote investment by providing necessary services such as factory sites, power, water, road and rail connections, together with a comparatively high standard of social services for a new country that I was able to arouse so much interest."

Kenya's principal port, Mombasa, is the most rapidly growing port in Africa. Electric power consumption in Kenya is increasing at the rate of about 50% a year.

"Apart from the above, some time ago, despite the Mau Mau trouble—and the success and determination of the Government in dealing with the problem of Mau Mau—the growth of the national income and of industrial output offer strong evidence of the suitability of Kenya as a field for investment."

"This visit should be looked upon as part of a sustained campaign by the Kenya Government, backed by attractions of Kenya public opinion, to entice as much capital as possible to the outside capital without which no real promise of the country for all its inhabitants cannot be realized. It should also be noted that the reconstruction programme already in train."

Confidence Despite Mau Mau

In reply to questions Mr. Hope-Jones said that his discussions had not been adversely affected by Mau Mau. The bankers whom he had met had regarded it as much less serious than the impediments to capital investment in many other parts of the world. It was also noted that during the present year the United Group had decided to come to Kenya, the British Overland Gemetal Company having committed itself to a large outlay on a cement works near Nairobi, and that another group had planned to spend building another cement factory near Mombasa.

The visit had, he thought, been well timed for there was a rapidly spreading understanding in the United States that whereas the rescue operations undertaken since the war have been useful, permanent solution could only be found along the lines of the report submitted three months ago by Mr. Douglas, the former U.S. Ambassador in London.

Kenya's Board of Commerce and Industry, with five European, five Asian, one African, and two Arab members, had been enthusiastic about the visit and wholly approved of the introduction of American capital, which should not prejudice the British share of East African trade, for as the national income was increased by capital investment the demands for imports should rise substantially.

The import policy of East Africa was not designed to favour United Kingdom exports, but to defend the pound sterling, the strengthening of which would doubtless enable the colonies to relax still further the licensing of imports from the U.K.

Some time ago the national income in Kenya was about £10m., and subsistence agriculture contributed £6m. Now the national income has reached £18m., and without any major addition by subsistence agriculture, that indicates an increased market for imports.

The field for capital investment had been hampered, but for the next generation there would be limitless scope for development in East Africa. Animal exports of hides and skins, now shipped perhaps 90% in the unprocessed state, similarly to sisal industry exported its output as fibre, not twine, though some manufactured form. Uganda's important cotton production went overseas; in the Lake state, and many other samples might be given of the possibilities of local processing, perhaps not to the final finished state.

Nairobi's Factory Sites

Since the end of the war nearly 500 factory sites had been sold in Nairobi and Mombasa, and the world had to extend its factory areas on the mainland for rapid development of industry, especially of those interested in export, was to be expected as a result.

It was probable that vehicle assembly and manufacturing works would choose Mombasa because the companies would look for markets outside East Africa; also, an American agricultural machine concern which contemplated operations in Kenya might well establish itself at Nakuru, in the middle of the European farming area; and a clothing factory might prefer, the shores of Lake Victoria, in the centre of dense African population.

Labour was not a problem, as locally trained and created, Mr. Hope-Jones knew, skilled African welders employed in a steel drum factory at Mombasa who earned between £30 and £40 a month, or approximately the United Kingdom rate of wage for such work, and many skilled or semi-skilled factory workers in Nairobi, earning between £15 and £20. The wages of unskilled men in secondary industry were seldom less than 50s. though the minimum wage prescribed by the Government often 75s., and sometimes 100s. higher.

There was great scope for the development of retail distribution on the American model, with low profits and quick returns for capital. Some of the better known organizations engaged in distribution and trading in the U.S.A. had a lively interest in the prospects in Kenya.

Red, white, and blue have been selected as official colours by the Federal Party of Central Africa.

Partnership and "Apartheid"

Archbishop's Views on African Problem

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY said in the course of his address last week to the Convocation of Canterbury:

"In Kenya there is open rebellion by a section of one tribe, together with a return to forms of primitive savagery in which African is turned against African as well as against European. But what stands out with encouragement and hope is this, heroic witness of many Kikuyu Christians in standing up to their faith against terrifying intimidation, and then the attitude of Christian people in Kenya, both black and white, inside and outside Government circles, who are seeking already to build up a firm spiritual basis for goodrace relations."

Referring to apartheid in the Union of South Africa, the Archbishop continued:

"Anything said here must be tempered always by the recollection that we have no direct experience in this country of being numerically a minority race in a multi-racial society, and we have no experience of living under the constant fear that our racial and cultural inheritance might be obliterated altogether by other races at a far slower stage of development. It is out of such daily experience that there has in some form always been the generally accepted policy in South Africa, having to manage the power of an instinct or a religious principle."

Violating Christian Principles

It is indeed supported by many just and God-fearing men of one particular Church tradition as a reasonable attempt consonant with the Christian faith, to provide a structural solution to the situations between the races in a multi-racial society. At the same time, the policy is often conflict with other Christian opinion outside South Africa. And we are bound to make clear that it is regarded by us as a direct violation of the moral principles of the Christian faith.

"It is part of one's duty to God and our neighbour to let our judgment be known. But it is not the duty of the Church here to interfere in any other way with affairs in South Africa and attempting to do so are likely to injure the very cause we have at heart. It is the business of the Church of England in South Africa, and other Christians there, to extend the application of Christian principles to political and social life there—a duty our Anglican brethren are discharging with a frankness and fearlessness which wins our entire trust and appreciation."

"In Central Africa a great decision is now to be made—the first election in December. A Federal Government Federation was accepted in this country in Parliament, and in Central Africa in the sincere belief that it would be worked out along the lines of a true partnership unequal enough to start with, inevitably but with the hope and expectation of faithful development to full partnership in due time."

"Since then, a political party has been launched which seems to introduce something like a system of apartheid into the Federation. If this is successful, it would be a reversal of the whole understanding upon which Federation was, confirmed and accepted. Thus the choice must be made, in December, between the contrasted principles of partnership and apartheid, the one leading to a free society and the other to frustration and ultimate destruction."

Pay and Allowances of M.P.s

NO ALTERATION to the present £150 salary for Southern Rhodesian M.P.s has been proposed by the select committee which has advocated raising the salary of the Prime Minister from £3,000 to £3,500 (with a £500 tax-free allowance) and of other Ministers from £2,500 to £3,000 (with £300 tax-free allowance). But the committee has recommended increased allowances, e.g. £100 annually for those living within 25 miles of the Assembly, and £250 beyond that radius. Travelling allowances dependent upon the size of constituencies are proposed, ranging from £50 a year in those exceeding 1,000 square miles to £200 in those of more than 15,000 square miles. A tax-free allowance of £500 for the Leader of the Opposition, and £250 tax-free entertainment allowance for the Speaker are other proposals.

ObituaryColonel Reginald Turner

JUDGE HERBERT BOWN, an old friend of Colonel REGINALD TURNER, D.S.O., who is reported to have died in hospital in Nairobi at the age of 83, from wounds inflicted with a bush-knife by a terrorist while he was in bed in Nairobi, writes:

"Turner, the son of a doctor, went to school near Osborne. The headmaster was a favourite of Queen Victoria, and young Turner early learnt how to hand a cup of tea to her, a memory which amused him in later days when in a supercilious company. At Cambridge he showed a great capacity in surmounting fences than examination. So his father said: 'I cannot afford a cavalry regiment; you have no inclination for a learned profession; what will you do?'

"Attracted by the search for gold, he was, I believe, the first man to take a herd of cattle to the Klondyke, and he had many tales of the Chilcot Pass and its horrors, and the contrast between the quiet efficiency of the Canadian North West Mounted Police (not yet Royal and Canada-wide) and Soapy Sam and his fellow desperadoes on the Alaskan side of the border.

Gold Rush Exploits

"Turner took part in gold rushes in New Guinea and Australia, where he was the last mine-owner to pay wages during the great slump. A few days later he was in the market square with an auctioneer's licence selling bales of hay, strings of camels, and tins of water. He had learnt auctioneering in Dawson City, Klondyke, and it was to prove a standby in the 'downs' of a varied life.

"The South African War found him in the queue to join a crack irregular corps at five bob a day and no questions asked; to qualify meant a pound to a recruiting sergeant and ability to stick on a buck jumper once round the school despite the rough-riding sergeant-major and a long whip. In due course Turner got his three stripes, a commission, and a decoration.

"He wandered the Empire till 1914, sometimes making good. Twice, when money was money, he was worth about £70,000, but it went on further developments. In 1914 he went back to the Army in the retreat of the 5th Army in 1916, he commanded the 1st Bn. Northamptons, and was awarded D.S.O.

"More than 50 years ago, when a rich man, he first reached Kenya to shoot, and the Governor of the time pressed him to take up land along the railway at half a crown an acre. In later years he told of his refusal with a rueful smile. In 1920, he was back in East Africa hoping to repeat his success in Australia and Madras, making but great luck never came his way again.

"He was, however, always a happy man, optimistic to a degree, cheerful, and with not an enemy or a grievance. Once he said to me: 'Several times I have been told what it is to be rich. I have also known what it is to be poor, quite near the bone, but I think I have always been equally happy.'

Elephant-Shooting in His Sixties

"Always in perfect condition, he remained the figure of youth. Every morning or evening he walked at least five miles, and especially in African sun he cycled everywhere. I heard say that years ago the only people in Singapore who did not think it ingra dig to bicycle among Asiatics were the Chief Justice and himself. For many years he breakfasted with us every Sunday morning on our shamba outside Dar es Salaam, and when well over 60, taught the children to ride over the horizontal and parallel bars. He was shooting elephants when past the year of age."

"The Hitlerites, as they were in charge of German prisoners at Dar es Salaam, and then of Italian prisoners in Nairobi, followed by a Kenya Government job in Disposals. Finally he was head of a reformatory camp for Nairobi African rebels. Just before the outbreak of the Mau Mau struggle he wrote appreciatively of the good intentions and efforts of the people with whom he worked—district commissioners, the police, officers, and magistrates—all gentlemen—but I fear that our old-glove methods did not suffice. His last letter expressed the sorrow he felt at the generalship of Africans in Kenya who suffered most from Mau Mau. Now they have got him. Mau Mau attacks on Europeans seem to specialize in children, women, and old men."

What he will do his son has learnt by chance in Northampton in the Hitler war when I met the secretary of the British Legion. We had a talk in his office in London. One of the little band who formed the British Legion in Dar es Salaam, he showed me an old man, and he was largely the innovator of the Naval Red Cross, and always a great worker for them.

"When luck was somewhat kind it was his pleasure to give a little dinner at the club, and in the old-fashioned way, the ladies would always find a posy on the table with some little silver favour.

"With his trim horsemanship figure, pink and white complexion, piercing blue eyes, clipped moustache, and incisive speech, he was a typical old world officer, neat and tidy, whether in shorts, workaday whites, or evening dress.

"So passes a hard worker, an old adventurer, a loyal friend, a good companion, and an old soldier of the great Queen and her successors."

Mr. Guy Foyster

MR. GUY FOYSTER, whose death in Lusaka is reported, arrived in Central Africa in 1920 to grow tobacco, but 11 years later joined the Northern Rhodesian Government service. He retired in July, 1952, but a few months later took a temporary post in the Survey and Lands Department. Born in London in 1882, and educated at Ilfracombe College, he was with the National Provincial Bank from 1908 until 1920. During the First World War he was commissioned in the Devonshire Regiment, serving with it in Mesopotamia and India.

In 1920 he left for Nyasaland to become a tobacco planter. In 1926 he moved to Southern Rhodesia, and five years later entered the accounts department of the Northern Rhodesian Medical Department. He was afterwards in the Income Tax, Veterinary, and African Education Departments, and was transferred to the provincial administration in 1939. In 1945 he became secretary of the Road Service Board.

He leaves a widow, a son at Grahamstown School, and a daughter aged 12 in Lusaka. Mrs. Foyster teaches at Lusaka European School.

Mr. T. B. Probyn

A FORMER COLLEAGUE writes: "Some of the survivors of the Chartered Company's administration in Northern Rhodesia will remember with affection Tommy Probyn, whose death occurred recently at his home in Norfolk at the age of 73. He joined the staff at the Treasury in Fort Jameson in the early years of this century and later migrated to Livingstone. He was a first-rate and popular official, genial and humorous, a keen shot and golfer, and was gifted with a fine voice which was much in request at concerts. He retired in 1923."

AIR CHIEF MARSHAL SIR ROBERT BROOKE-POPHAM, G.C.V.O., K.C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., A.F.C., whose death at the R.A.F. hospital at Halton at the age of 75 is reported as this issue goes to press, was Governor of Kenya from 1937 to 1939. A memoir will appear next week.

For the Blind

NINE REGIONAL ACTION COMMITTEES of the British Empire Society for the Blind are to be formed in Nyasaland—in Zomba, Blantyre, Limbe, Mlanje, Cholo, Port Johnston, Port Herald, Lilongwe, and Mombasa, each consisting of two Europeans, two Asians, and two Africans. This is in preparation for a Protektorate drive for funds beginning next February, with the aim of establishing a school and training centre for the blind at Blantyre. During an exhibition in that town a party of sixty adults and children will be seen doing school work, performing office tasks, and following various crafts.

Letters to the EditorEgyptian Bribery and Corruption*Influence on Elections in the Sudan.

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

SIR.—The optimism which Mr. Broadbent shows in his letter on the forthcoming elections in the Sudan seems to me to be based largely on hope rather than on fact. I have spent the last seven years in the Sudan, and from what I saw there and from what I have heard since from both British and Sudanese, gloom rather than optimism is the predominant feeling throughout the country at present (not ignoring the southern tribes and northern peasantry).

There may well be politicians in the Northern Sudan who are confident that they can resist and combat Egyptian bribery and influence, but is their confidence based on results? Is it wishful thinking? And what methods do they propose using to combat them? It would be very interesting to know!

Mr. Broadbent, like the Foreign Office, coolly ignores the vast mass of the southern tribes and northern peasantry whose interests and welfare ought to be our first concern, and this has been the biggest mistake, and most criminal act of the British Government throughout. These people continually showed that they did not want any immediate change in the day-to-day administration of the Government in the Sudan, and they were as continually assured that none would take place without their prior consultation. All to no purpose.

The northern politicians by their irresponsible actions in Cairo and Khartum last year and this, forced the hand of the Government and paved the way for the Egyptian bribery and intrigue, which they are now apparently so confident they can resist. By all means let them prove it if they can.

Mr. Broadbent goes on to say that the only point he wishes to emphasize is that the Sudan is quite different in its background and make up from my Eastern, Middle Eastern, or African country. What exactly he means by this, and on what grounds he says it, is not made clear. But if he is hoping that bribery and corruption are unknown in the Sudan, that they will not be used in the coming elections, and that the mentality of the Sudanese people is such that they will have nothing to do with them, I am afraid he is wrong. Cases of bribery had occurred in the Sudan before I left in May, and I have little doubt that more will have occurred since.

Major Salam Salem has himself admitted that money has been "spent" in the Sudan, and has agreed in future to limit it to £20,000! However much one may dislike the truth, the fact remains that the Sudanese is in some ways little different in character from his northern neighbours. It does no good allowing sentimentality to cloud one's judgment.

Mr. Broadbent concludes by hoping that all will be well in our relations with Egypt, as also in the Sudan, and thereby echoes the hopes of us all; but hopes alone cannot resolve a situation which we created by casually abandoning our friends in the Southern Sudan, giving the politicians a false sense of his own importance in the North, and relying too implicitly on the good faith and good will of Egypt.

Brook's,

London, S.W.1

Yours faithfully,

R. H. M. BOYLE.

Egyptian Designs on the SudanGross Misrepresentation of Great Britain

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

SIR.—Everything in your leading article on the Egyptian campaign to divide the Sudan was true, but you underpainted rather than overpainted the picture. The broadcasts from Cairo constantly represent the British as "colonizers" in the Sudan; when everyone ought to know that no part of the world under British administration has been so completely free from any suggestion of colonization. That honourable term is used, dogmatically by the Egyptians and so understood by many listeners in the Sudan, especially the clique of politicos who have absorbed their little stock of clichés from Socialist circles in this country.

You mentioned the virulent Egyptian newspaper campaign against Britain and her administration in the Sudan, but not that papers containing such articles are flown to Khartum for prompt distribution among the literate and the ill-educated minority.

Gross misrepresentation of Britain has long been a feature of some newspapers published in the Sudan, where the authorities have been amazingly tolerant. On numerous occasions, they might well have taken action against the offenders; some publications have traded on the official magnanimity. Some publishers have received printing machinery from Cairo which they could not have afforded as a normal commercial transaction.

The Egyptians have distributed money freely, not only among Sudanese writers and speakers, but also in the tribal areas to induce men of local prominence to support the idea of "Unity of the Nile Valley" (even if they have no real conception of its meaning). When some members of the Socialist Republican Party (which favours independence) went to a tribal area recently, they were asked by the chief, "How much money have you brought?" and he explained that he and his sub-chiefs had agreed on a scale of payments for persuading their people to vote. The Egyptians have been here before the S.R.P.

The whole position is extremely serious, but, with the exception of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA, the British Press appears content to ignore it.

Yours faithfully,

SUDANI,

"Africa Must Be Free" ConferenceComments of A Correspondent

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

SIR.—With reference to your report of the "Africa Must Be Free" Conference organized by the Congress of Peoples against Imperialism, the public list of "organizations to be represented" failed to distinguish between those sending delegates and those sending observers. A body of which I am a member had notification of the conference, but declined to send a delegate because it did not assent to the basic resolution. We did, however, allow one of our number to act as an observer. We were misrepresented as sending a delegate, and perhaps some other bodies had the same experience.

Were you aware that the West African Students' Union proposed to delete that part of the resolution by which "Conference calls for a programme of all-out economic and technical assistance to raise the standards of African peoples"? The conference declined to delete the point; but the mere fact that the West African students so proposed, apparently disdaining European assistance, is significant of their attitude.

There was significance also in the fact that the conference declined to accept an addendum to findings proposed by the Peace Pledge Union. That this conference also places on record that it is opposed to the use of violence by either party, and urges that all disputes be settled by the method of negotiation and not by force.

If the conference declined to accept that, with a view to seeking more acceptable phrasing to clothe the same sentiments, what can it mean but that the majority of those present regard civil and inter-racial war as the means of attaining its end?

Yours faithfully,

Good Publicity for N. Rhodesia

Film of "Duel in the Jungle"

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA:

Sir.—Before leaving for London I would like to take this opportunity on behalf of the entire "Duel in the Jungle" unit of thanking the people of Northern Rhodesia and paying tribute to this wonderful country.

We were offered every facility by the authorities to film some of the renowned beauty spots, and this, in my opinion, cannot fail to make our film one of the finest and most authentic to be produced with an African background. It should also stimulate terrific interest throughout the world in Northern Rhodesia.

We were especially glad to welcome to some of our locations members of the Northern Rhodesia Information Department, who took advantage of the presence of three internationally-famous stars (Jeanne Crain, Dana Andrews and David Farrar) to gain much valuable publicity for their country.

In view of recent Press attacks, I would point out that the Information Department officials visited us to serve their own interests. Members of the Associated British Marcell Hellman Productions publicity department were invited, but fully occupied in publicizing "Duel in the Jungle." The officials naturally used our film as a medium to publicize Northern Rhodesia. From cuttings sent to me from many parts of the world it is obvious that their visit was highly successful and must inevitably be of great value to the tourist trade of this equatorial land.

Yours faithfully,

ALAN THOMSON,

Unit Publicity Representative.

Sir Evelyn Baring's Speech

ment will give protection, help, and responsibility. Most of those who in the testing time of the recent troubles have proved themselves to be the friends of peace and the enemies of the Mau Mau movement.

In the Kikuyu areas outside the Kikuyu land unit step must be taken for many years to come to control the entry of Kikuyu, and to see that those Kikuyu who still live in them do not again start a Mau Mau movement.

In the settled areas the present arrangement to forbid the return of Kikuyu who have left farms and forests to go back to the Kikuyu land unit will, for the time being, be continued. The terms and conditions of the return of any such Kikuyu and Kikuyu residence and work on farms and in forests must be comparable with the maintenance of security.

Let me add that I do not believe it possible for the work on farms and in forests to be carried on without any Kikuyu at all, or, on the other hand, for there to be a return to conditions before the Emergency when on many farms and in many forest areas far more Kikuyu families lived than was realized either by the Government or their supporters.

Federal Election Campaign Opened

Political Division on Racial Lines

SIR GODFREY HUGGINS opened the Federal Party's election campaign in the Copperbelt of Northern Rhodesia last Saturday, being supported on the platform by Sir Roy Welensky and Mr. Malcolm Barrow, the two other members of the Interim Ministry of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Opposition to that Federal state, said Sir Godfrey, had meant in Great Britain the surrender of a considerable part of her control over the Government of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, mainly to Europeans living in Central Africa. Her Majesty's Government had naturally had to satisfy itself that the control would not be misused and that the policies pursued would accord with British tradition. It had been understood that those in Central Africa who advocated federation were pledged to inter-racial co-operation in the development of the territories.

Attempt to Meet Constitution

The reason for the reservations introduced by H.M. Government in the nature of an insurance policy was that the U.K. Government realized that there were certain people in these territories who held very different views on the treatment of Africans and could not be relied onto interpret the constitution in the spirit in which it was conceived. The emergence in the present election campaign of some of these people as a political entity must have disturbed H.M. Government in their desire to insist upon safeguards.

We assumed that the British Government would not exercise the theoretical power they possess to interfere with us. Think what an uproar there would be in Central Africa if the Parliamentary Opposition in Britain announced that if they returned to power they would upset our present constitution and go off on a different track! Yet that is just what certain people in Central Africa are doing now.

There is now arising here a political entity comprised of a variegated mixture of former opponents of federation and general malcontents, with as its hard core the members of the former Democratic Party. This Democratic Party consisted of a small band of extreme Afrikaner nationalists. These people have formed themselves into a party to fight the first federal elections on a straight plank of apartheid. This is a tragic development in Central Africa. Never before have we had political divisions on racial lines."

No Lowering of European Standards

SIR ROY WELENSKY said in Broken Hill a few days ago:

The basic reason for federation was to integrate the complementary economies of Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. The proposal to introduce apartheid is the antithesis of that. I will oppose with all my power the suggestion for the creation of "Gold Coast States" within the Federation. I believe that the policy of the Confederates would give African nationalism all the encouragement that it wanted, and would in fact aid it in its design."

The Federal Party, he added, determined to see that there was no lowering of European standards, which meant that the African must earn himself if he wished to rise to a higher level. In the political field the African could enjoy only such a share of political control as he was capable of earning by demonstrating that he had attained civilized standards of behaviour and culture.

Settlement of Africans

TO ESTABLISH NEW AREAS for African settlement in Kenya the Development and Reconstruction Authority will spend £3m. in the next five years, of which £297,000 will be spent this year. The largest scheme is the Makueni settlement of 450 square miles in the Kamba country, where during the last five years 4,450 Kamba have been accommodated. 3,200 acres brought under cultivation, and grazing provided for 3,217 head of cattle. Last year the authority spent £5,325,000, bringing the total since 1946 to £23m. This year total expenditure will reach £64m., of which £3m. will be allocated to new Government buildings.

Campaign Against the Desert Locust

Swarms May Reach Kenya This Month

LOCUST CONTROL MEASURES adopted by headquarters in Nairobi after the study of reports from Abyssinia, the Sudan, Ethiopia and Somalia should be able to prevent all but small swarms from getting through when the expected invasion of Kenya's northern frontier begins within a few weeks. A new generation of locusts is likely to approach the Rift Valley early in January. The control plans would, however, be seriously jeopardized if the monsoon were delayed.

A planning conference was held in Addis Ababa recently to co-ordinate the campaign. To deal with heavy swarms breeding in eastern Ethiopia, the Ethiopian Government has created a special committee. Teams will enter the area as soon as the opportunity. If the nomadic Issa tribe has been overcome, an experimental scheme of air spraying is to be launched from three bases at Hargeisa, the aircraft and anti-locust operators moving south as the monsoon begins. Experts from the U.S. and the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization attended the Addis Ababa discussions.

The latest situation summary by the Anti-locust Centre in London states, inter alia:

"Control against hoppers is practically completed in northern Ethiopia, Eritrea, the Sudan, Chad territory and French West Africa, but there have been escapes in Ethiopia whence swarms are invading the Somaliland Protectorate and the Ogaden. Swarms in all stages of maturity are beginning to move southwards across the Somali Peninsula; some have been reported from southern Ethiopia, and a few small swarms appeared in north-eastern Kenya."

"Young swarms in the Sudan, northern Ethiopia, and Arabia will move northwards, and may invade Egypt. Breeding on both Red Sea coasts is likely to continue throughout the winter. In the Somali Peninsula heavy breeding is imminent, and more swarms may reach Kenya during October."

More than 15,000 Africans in the two Rhodesias and Nyasaland now own wireless sets.

take at least his first university degree in his own country, and that he should attend overseas universities only at the post-graduate level.

"We shortly intend to supplement this provision for higher education by the creation of a university in Central Africa. It has been decided with the agreement of the three territories of the Federation that this university will be on a multi-racial basis and we hope that it will prove a potent influence in the improvement of race relations in this part of Africa within the concept of partnership."

"In the territories for which we are responsible, the basic problem is the wise use of the land. We consider that the fundamental element in our policy was development of a sense of responsibility. In countries without agrarian economy the people have the great responsibility and necessity of conserving and developing the resources of their land. In many countries of the world we are faced by the ever-increasing pressure of the population on the land and this has become acute in several British territories particularly in Africa."

The reasons for this pressure are undoubtedly to be found in the removal, under half a century ago, of colonial administration, of the population controls which normally operate in a primitive society, such as smallpox, famine, pestilence, such superstitious practices as, Fangfride's and, perhaps above all, the chaos and destruction caused by the slave trade. Why, with all the resources of modern agricultural science, has the yield of the land not kept pace with this increase? In Africa, the cause of failure lies in the inability of traditional African peasant agriculture to do more than maintain the population at an unsatisfactory subsistence level; and then only if shifting cultivation can be practised. This has led to whole regions being laid waste by desertification and erosion.

In general, the soil of Africa is not particularly fertile or deep. As has been wisely said, "poor soils make poor people, and poor people make poor soil worse." It is natural, where pressure upon the land is most severe, that the ordinary African tribesman, with his limited experience and restricted outlook, should see the problem as one of obtaining relief by simply occupying new land where he can continue his old ways. Experience has shown that this is no solution. Land tenure and agricultural practices must be changed, and in such a way and at such a pace as not to shatter the fabric of society.

Clamour for Land

It is not unnatural that clamour should sometimes arise for small areas of land in some East and Central African territories, but it efficiently for generations by European communities to be turned over to the African for tribal occupation. Such a step could at best provide only slight and temporary relief to African congestion. All thinking people would regard the expropriation of land properly farmed by one man, in order to hand it over for destruction by others, as an act not only of injustice but of folly.

"Large areas of land in the African territories are still undeveloped and under-populated, and our efforts are now being directed to an examination, in the light of all available experience, of the most promising ways of making use of this empty or half-empty land, for of making fuller use of it by efficient and permanent agriculture."

"But agriculture alone can't be a satisfactory basis for economic prosperity unless in exceptional circumstances. I am far from subscribing to the view that every country, whatever its natural resources and the character of its population, should seek to satisfy its own needs from its own industrial production. But some element of industrialization is essential to produce a socially well-balanced community and to absorb some part of the pressure on the land."

"In any programme of industrialization the provision of cheap power is essential. In this connection I should like to mention two great schemes of hydro-electric development in Africa which are only the prelude to many others—the scheme, now under examination in the Gambia, to harness the waters of the Volta River for the production of electricity; for irrigation, and for the processing of manganese, and the dam constructed at the Owen Falls in Uganda. The first stage of this hydro-electric project is now on the verge of completion, and the Jinja dam will be opened by Her Majesty the Queen next April. Not only will this project act as a great stimulus to industrial development in Uganda, but it will also serve as a link in the control of the waters of the Nile on which we are working in close collaboration with other interested Governments."

Press Comment on Sudan Elections

Al-Watan, the organ of the Socialist Republican Party in the Sudan, claims that the Egyptian navigation station at Malakal provided their steamers for the use of National Unionist Party supporters in their election campaign.

Sayed Bush Dhi, a member of the former Legislative Assembly, wrote in a letter to the journal that independence was the natural aim of any country, and that the unity of the Nile Valley was not a fundamental aim of the Sudan. After urging unity of the southerners, he continued: "If the Northern Sudanese agree to any sort of unity with Egypt, this will directly mean that the Southerners should separate from the Northern Sudan. The direct result of any sort of unity with Egypt is that the Sudan will be turned into an Egyptian province."

Further comment on Egyptian conduct of the electoral campaign is made in El-Bayan.

Having already referred to the fact that Egypt is doing everything in her power to sway the votes of the Sudanese electorate, we would now add that she has granted extraordinary leave of absence to Sudanese officials of the Egyptian Government to enable them to come to this country equipped with money with which to buy votes in areas where these officials originally come from. Two full aircraft of such men who include students also, have arrived in Khartoum.

Commenting on the appeal made by Mr. Sukman, Secretary-General of the Sudan Electoral Commission, that the political parties should issue a joint statement that the elections should be carried out peacefully, a spokesman of the N.U.P. said his party would never resort to violence, would wholeheartedly respect the result of the elections, and would be bound by it. Similar sentiments were expressed by the Umma Party and Ustaz Ibrahim Bedri, of the Socialist Republican Party, considered these views admirable if they were implemented.

Conference on Fauna and Flora

AN INTER-AFRICAN CONFERENCE ON FAUNA AND FLORA will meet in Bulawayo, Ruanda-Urundi, from October 26 to 31. The official title is "Conference Internationale pour la Protection de la Faune et de la Flore en Afrique."

The leader of the British delegation is Captain Keith Caldwell, who flew out on Tuesday. His co-delegate from the United Kingdom is Mr. W. S. Bates, of the Colonial Office.

British East and Central African representation will be as follows:

Kenya.—Sir James Kirkpatrick, Acting Game Warden; Mr. Mervyn Cowie, Director of the Royal National Parks; and Captain A. J. A. Price, for many years Game Warden in the Colony.

Uganda.—Mr. B. G. Kinlock, Game Warden; and Mr. C. Swaby, Conservator of Forests.

Tanganyika Territory.—Mr. G. H. Swinnerton, Game Warden; and Mr. Allan Brooks, a research zoologist attached to the Game Department.

Northern Rhodesia.—Mr. T. G. C. Vaughan-Jones, Game Warden; and Mr. M. S. Price, a provincial commissioner.

Somaliland Protectorate.—Mr. G. E. Curtis, an administrative officer.

Sudan.—Captain Peter Molloy. Nigeria is sending the Inspector-General of Forests, but Nyasaland, Zanzibar, Transvaal and Swaziland, Basutoland, the Gold Coast, Sierra Leone, and the Gambia are not sending delegates.

Belgium, France, Portugal, Spain, the Union of South Africa, and Southern Rhodesia will be represented, and the United States and Holland may send observers.

Following the conference there will be a three-day tour of the Parc National Albert.

A marked decrease in European tuberculous cases is reported by Southern Rhodesia's Secretary for Health, who attributes it largely to the new regulation requiring all permanent immigrants to produce a radiologist's report of freedom from active tuberculosis. In the six years before the measure took effect, half of the known cases were among new arrivals. Among Africans the incidence is high, and such measures as mass miniature radiography are under consideration.

S. Rhodesian Parliament Adjourned

Early Years Under One Constitution

THE SOUTHERN RHODESIAN PARLIAMENT has been adjourned until February 23. Territorial elections will take place in the following month.

This adjournment is a notable event in the Colony's history, for it ends 30 years of parliamentary government under the 1923 constitution. It is unlikely that the Legislature will in fact be called again before the elections; the new Parliament will thus meet after the Federal Assembly of the Rhodesias and Nyasaland has become a legislative reality.

The final speech, a brief one, was made by Sir Godfrey Huggins (the Federal Prime Minister), who now sits in the territorial Parliament as a private member. He is the only sitting representative of that Chamber who was present at its first meeting, in May, 1924. Sir Godfrey has always sat for a Salisbury constituency; this tradition he will maintain in the Federal Assembly, if he is elected as representative for Salisbury Suburb, a newly-created federal division.

Amalgamation: One Day?

The House also heard Southern Rhodesia's new Prime Minister, Mr. Garfield Todd, describe the Colony's responsibilities under Federation. Perhaps many would have preferred amalgamation to the complex federal system, he said, but at some future date "considerations of convenience of government, economy of administration, and wider matters of welfare may lead the three territories to unity."

Certain territorial powers would be transferred to federal control on July 1, 1954. On the previous day all territorial postage stamps would be withdrawn and new federal stamps introduced, and, some time the B.S.A. Police force, which is now federal, would be retained.

Mr. Todd stressed the vital importance of the Native Affairs Department, which would remain territorial. "I believe that one of the first major responsibilities which the new territorial Government must face after the election next year will be a thorough consideration of all aspects of Native administration and the staffing problem."

Burquest to Rev. M. Scott Not Valid

THAT A REQUEST by Mrs. Margaret Webster, Kingston, Surrey, to the Rev. Michael Scott was not valid has been ruled in the Chancery Division by Mr. Justice Upjohn. Mrs. Webster, who died in September of last year, left her residuary estate of £5,500 to the Rev. Michael Scott to use as he deemed best for the better understanding between white and coloured peoples and the betterment of their (the coloured peoples') conditions, materially and spiritually. The judge said that Mrs. Webster had given no intention of the means whereby such purposes might lawfully be achieved. The use to which Mr. Scott was entitled to put the fund was by no means confined to the betterment of coloured people in Africa; he could finance a political party, run a newspaper, establish a trade union for coloured people, or promote legislation in any number of countries. He might argue, and indeed he had argued, the case of some coloured people before the United Nations. The wide scope of the gift made it impossible to hold that its objects were charitable. The residue of the estate therefore devolved as on an intestacy.

Work done or controlled in detail last year by Northern Rhodesia's Public Works Department was almost 45% higher in value than in 1951, the respective totals being £3,286,702 and £3,540,789. Only by commissioning consulting engineers, architects, and quantity surveyors for many larger jobs could the tempo of development be maintained, says the annual report. The figure of 8.4% of total expenditure for personal emoluments is regarded as very satisfactory. The approved European establishment is 315, the average number of African employees was 12,029.

Rhodesian Tobacco Mission for U.K.

Will Also Visit Australia

THE RHODESIAN TOBACCO MISSION is to come to this country next month, announcing this last week. Mr. R. Campbell, president of the Rhodesian Tobacco Association, said that this good-will mission, which would also visit Australia, planned to discuss renewal of the Rhodesian agreements with overseas buyers of tobacco.

He believed that Rhodesia had nothing to fear from such competitors as the U.S.A., Canada, India, and Italy, so long as we get down to producing good tobacco in and year out and to keeping our costs of production as low as we possibly can without stinting our crops.

Raise Minimum Yield

Although it was unfortunate that only once in the last six years had growers been able to supply overseas markets with the quantity and quality of leaf desired, it was agreed with the aid of the Tobacco Research Board, to reduce seasonal fluctuations to the minimum. The first step towards lower costs must be the attainment of a minimum yield of 400 lb. per acre.

"I am sure," Mr. Campbell added, "that we can prove we are a reliable market for both quality and quantity, and can sell at a competitive price. If we do this, nobody will be better pleased than the U.K. and Australian buyers, who shall have to make a great effort. The grower who expects high prices to save him from the results of inefficiency, recklessness and ignorance, will go to the wall, and he will be the loss of the industry."

Higher immigration quotas have been announced for the last quarter of this year by Southern Rhodesia. The number allowed to enter from the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland is raised from 1,140 to 1,500, this figure also applying to South Africa. The alien quota is raised from 180 to 290, and the quota for other African territories from 90 to 200.

Friends to Mr. E. C. Whitehead

Sir Godfrey Huggins on His Services

A TRIBUTE to Mr. E. C. Whitehead, Rhodesia's Minister of Finance for seven years, came in the following terms by Sir Godfrey Huggins:

"When I became Minister in 1946 it was thought that the R.A.F. were going, immigrants had not arrived in any great numbers, and the general atmosphere was one of slipping back to the 1939 position. Mr. Whitehead had visions of great development. He was a firm advocate of increased activity by the Government in order to initiate and stimulate the expansion which was possible in the Colony's subsequent development. He was also never in increasing the population as rapidly as possible, and there was much criticism from those who favoured the more orthodox financial policy of damping down Government activity."

At that time there were no relations, not only from politicians, but also from officials, that the country could not stand the pace in regard to immigration and development, and that we were heading for a financial crash and a reversal of the immigration trend. It was when, with a change in international conditions, the policy of expansion required to be changed and controlled he was prepared without concern for his personal position, to recommend to his colleagues the pre-emptive measures to stabilize the country's economy.

Sir Whitehead had realized, added Sir Godfrey Huggins, that it was essential to maintain the best possible relations with London—with the Government of the day, the officials, the money market, and investors—his success in ensuring that such relations were always at their best had gone much to assist Southern Rhodesia's progress since the war.

New Mission Hospital

A 30-YEAR-OLD DREAM of a mission hospital for the Kaonde people has come true for the Rev. G. S. Foster. In 1917 he joined the South Africa General Mission station in the Kasempa district of Northern Rhodesia, some 200 miles north-west of Lusaka, but his plans for a hospital had to be shelved several times. A Government hospital was opened at Kasempa in the thirties. Now, however, Mukinge Hill Mission has its own 60-bed hospital, built by the Rev. G. M. Gifford and other mission members, and dedicated by Mr. Foster's son, who until six years ago was serving in Canada.

Disastrous Attitude to Education

"THE IDEA that the good schoolboy is the one who sits quietly like an empty pot, waiting for the teacher to pour in proper doses of knowledge, is still firmly and disastrously fixed in the minds of most boys, and perhaps a few masters," writes Mrs. W. C. Little, principal of Mundu African secondary school, Lusaka. Most boys were prepared to work hard, but their efforts were too often confined to slavish textbook learning. The staff had so far been rather unsuccessful in inducing appreciation that learning was a process calling for constant effort on the part of both."

Kenya Financial Anxieties

Problems of Finding New Capital

COMMENTING on the need for supplementary estimates in Kenya, the Manchester Guardian has written:

"The question is how these costs—amidst year's are to be met. Mr. Vasey will be anxious to avoid any radical increase in taxation. The country is in dire need of capital investment. Millions are needed fully to develop the farming potential of the White Highlands and to set agriculture in the African areas on a sound basis. Moreover, without the growth of secondary industries, the African scope for employment outside peasant cultivation, there is very much chance of solving the agrarian problem in the reserves."

Private Investment Discouraged

The inflow of private capital has already been discouraged by the Mau Mau revolt. A big increase in taxation would discourage still further. Yet if the law dries up Kenya will face a grave recession which would render if not halt the existing programmes of social betterment, urban and rural housing, more schools and the like, it would put a sharp brake on economic progress generally and check the hope of providing a better way of living for Africans, and with it the best assurance against continuing or growing unrest."

The British Government may have to consider grants-in-aid to meet the immediate costs of the emergency, but if the private investor is still reluctant, some form of public support for economic development, as well as the enterprises in social development appropriate for assistance under the Colonial Development and Welfare Acts, is not an attractive prospect; but is there any chance of solving Kenya's already difficult political and racial problems if the country is gripped by a slump?"

Students Receive £500 p.a. Each

No AFRICAN STUDENT from Tanganyika Territory at Makerere College, Kampala, the university college for East Africa, pays the full college fees, which average about £540 a year. "The maximum which is asked of any African student who can afford it," said the Member for Uganda Services when answering a question in the Legislative Council of Tanganyika some time ago, "is a nominal fee of £50 per annum, plus an allowance of £17 10s. for his own pocket money. The balance is paid by Government from the revenues of the Territory, in addition to the annual block grant to the university college. Of the Tanganyika African students now at Makerere only three are paying the full amount—the nominal fee."

Shell Company of Rhodesia Great Developments in C. Africa

THE SHELL COMPANY OF RHODESIA LTD. has completed its new bulk storage and distribution depot near the outskirts of Blantyre, Nyasaland, which tank will give 366,000 gallons, now exists with a total storage capacity. This development has involved a capital outlay of about £120,000.

Mr. E. B. Morgan, a director of the company said at the opening ceremony that similar facilities had recently been provided in Lusaka, that plants of bulk storage in Gwelo were in the development stage, and on the drawing board. In view of the fact that £180,000 had been spent on depots in Bulawayo and Omzima, and about £150,000 would be spent similarly in Bulawayo and Ndola.

Petroleum Consumption Soars

Consumption of petroleum products in the two Rhodesias and Nyasaland had risen from 64,000 tons in 1939 to 275,000 tons this year. This four-fold increase was well above the world average, but it was expected to be exceeded as the Central African territories forged ahead as a result of federation.

The Shell Company of Rhodesia, employing about 200 European and 300 Africans in the three territories, the annual pay-slip being £260,000. Last year the railways in the three territories were paid £820,000 and duties paid to the Government reached £225,000. Apart from capital outlay, the annual expenditure is about £1,500,000.

Sudan External Trade

Domestic exports from the Sudan in the first eight months of this year were valued at £25,450,972 compared with £27,897,358 in the corresponding period of the previous year. Exports were £29,711,934 (£E1,110,265), and imports £23,041,924 (£E42,215,827), of which the United Kingdom supplied £E15,100,533 (£E1,984,947). Egypt £E2,262,466 (£E2,752,669), £E2,670,664 (£E2,985) and Italy £E1,299,312 (£E1,605,017). UK was the Sudan's largest customer with purchases of £E2,452,226 (£E20,350,985); India with £E1,649,969 (£E24,315); Germany with £E1,667,769 (£E1,010,321); France with £E1,972,777 (£E7,892); Egypt with £E1,606,760 (£E2,253,671); and finally with £E1,321,526 (£E2,730,040).

Internal Loan

THE NORTHERN RHODESIAN GOVERNMENT is floating its first internal loan, a maximum specified amount. The statutory limit for internal borrowing is £5m. issued under two classes: 4% redeemable 1965-72 and 5% redeemable 1965-72. The loan will finance public works, roads, housing, etc., and the Government Plan, which is now expected to require more money than the 1949 Estimate of Revenue. To see what the needs of Northern Rhodesia will be in the shape of internal borrowing, commented Mr. M. Taylor, Financial Secretary: "I have thought it might be an advantage to be guided on the Northern Rhodesian

None of the 475 assessments bounded by Umzima, Northern Rhodesia, was over £1,000. Removing this, the new financial year begins with a sum amounting to £1,000,000 less than the sum then due, and the sum due is £1,000,000 less than the sum due for even mechanical lifting works. Obviously the accumulated sum bounded by Umzima, Northern Rhodesia, is £1,000,000 less than the £1,000,000 due for the same area. But sales of £1,000,000 less than the sum due for the same area

Of Commercial Concern

Estimates by the Sudan Gezira Board value this year's output at £16,829,000, of which £14,360,000 is for long cotton, £111,000 for scarfs, £66,000 for light and mixed cotton and £2,450,000 for cotton seed. Total expenses on the joint account appear at £5,025,000. After adding the expected surplus from the board's share and the interest receivable on bank deposits the tenants' share of the total should amount to about £5,150,000, from which the board will recover costs made to them and charges for ploughing and sowing seed. The balance payable to tenants will average about £165 per 10-feddan holding.

As a means of eliminating from the London register of cargo at Mombasa goods which are not available for early shipment to principle which the East African Section of the London Chamber of Commerce has pressed, the Union-Castle and British India lines now require shippers to provide signed declarations that their existing registrations cover cargo which is awaiting transport, that cancellations of orders will be promptly notified, and that in future they will send forward for shipment only the cargo specifically mentioned in the calling-forward notices of the shipping companies.

African Explosives and Chemical Industries (East Africa), Ltd., will shortly start production in their new Nairobi factory of cattle dips, insecticidal dusts, and other products marketed by Coopet, McDougall & Robertson (East Africa), Ltd., and Plantation Ltd. At the start there will be employment for about 50 Africans.

Representatives of the Governments of Uganda and the Belgian Congo and of the East African Railways and Harbours Administration agreed at a meeting in Entebbe that present traffic and prospects during the next few years do not justify any immediate extension of the western Uganda railway from the planned rail-head at Kasese or the installation of mining facilities on Lake George and Lake Edward. It was felt that attention should be concentrated on the improvement of road communications.

Company ReportsEast African Power and Lighting Company, Limited*Hydro-Electric Developments, in the Territories*Increase in Unit Sales 21.8%*Major G. M. Taylor's Statement

THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE EAST AFRICAN POWER AND LIGHTING COMPANY LIMITED was held in Nairobi on October 20.

MAJOR C. M. TAYLOR, C.B.E., M.C., chairman of the company, who presided, said:

"The directors' report and accounts for the year ended December 31, 1952, have been in your hands for the prescribed period, and I assume that you will have them at hand. Turning to the company's balance sheet you will observe that the authorized capital increased by £1,000,000 in accordance with the resolution passed at the extraordinary general meeting in June, 1952, now stands at £7,500,000, whilst the issued capital reflects the rights issue of 1,737,777 ordinary shares of Shs. 20s. each at Shs. 22.00 each made during the year under review.

Share Premium Account

You will also see that following the resolution passed at our last meeting our shares of all classes have been converted into three appropriate stock units of Shs. 20s. each. The share premium account has been augmented by £15,951, the net proceeds of the premium of Shs. 22.00, less expenses, together with a small balance of premium on the 1951 issue. There remains a reserve remain unaltered, and full provision has been made for all taxation up to the date of the accounts. Under current liabilities the principal item, viz. £135,000, represents temporary accommodation from our bankers, subsequently refunded.

On the other side of the account land, buildings etc., plant and machinery stand at £5,970,356 and you will again observe the very heavy expenditure during the year amounting to £1,581,091. This figure represents a record expansion in our capital works in Kenya, whilst, in addition, the sum of £581,190 expended in Tanganyika is also a record. The investment in the subsidiary companies shows an increase of £390,000, being share capital in the Tanganyika Electric Supply Company Limited, subscribed by us at par. The net advances to subsidiaries at £15,362 rose by £222,369, the greater part being in respect of development in Tanganyika.

Current assets show a sharp advance principally on account of stores, which rose by £444,425 in the last quarter of the year. The cause lay in the heavy shipments during that period of long outstanding orders, which would normally have been spread over 12 months or more, but which the weakening of markets elsewhere enabled our suppliers to accelerate their delivery to us. The value of stores on hand at £986,267 should show a substantial reduction next year.

Electricity Sales Revenue Rises

With a 25% increase in gross revenue from electricity sales, the increase of £67,049 in trade debtors to £312,829 is not unreasonable.

The revenue account shows that our operating surplus, dividends and income from investments amount to £531,460. After allowing for administrative expenses, depreciation on our customary and adequate scale, audit fees and payment of interest to our bankers, the net revenue for the year is £289,285, compared with the previous year's result of £287,323. The amount brought forward from our fast account was £119,943, making the total available £409,228. Of this sum East African income tax absorbs £30,624, and the dividends paid and proposed on the preference and ordinary stock require £336,650.

Interest Payment

As you are aware, consent of the Kenya Government has been given to the payment of interest out of capital on capital locked up in projects of a long term nature, this year the interest amounts to £78,389, thus reducing the net appropriation for dividend payment to £55,236. The amount carried forward to the next account is £120,333, compared with £119,943 brought in.

The notes to the accounts disclose that at the end of the year our outstanding commitments for expansion and development in Kenya and Tanganyika amounted to £2,910,167. Since the close of the year under review arrangements have been made by our London colleagues with our bankers for temporary facilities to cover this position. The provision of further capital to place the finance for current construction work in Kenya and Tanganyika on a more permanent basis is a matter which is being studied at present in relation to the future rates of development of our undertakings in East Africa.

It will be of interest to members to be reminded that since 1945 our investment in fixed assets in the group has risen from £1,753,854 to £8,867,620, an increase of just over 400%, whilst during the same period our current assets have called for an additional investment of £1,227,622. These impressive figures indicate that we have not been backward in taking our share in the development of the territories in which we operate, and that finance has always been attracted to sound undertakings such as ours.

The development of our business is demonstrated in our unit sales which increased from 132.95 million kilowatt hours to 161.91 million, a rise of 21.8%, for which the three companies in the group received in gross revenue from electricity sales £1,572,918, compared with £1,266,809 in the previous year. Against this costs continued to increase, principally in the expenditure on fuel oil, which was 60% over the previous year.

Hydro-Electric Power Developments

In my remarks at our last meeting I gave you full details of the progress during the year now under review of the new hydro-electric and thermal stations then under construction. I therefore do not propose this year to do more than to summarize the position. In Nairobi the 7,400 kW. of the Wanjiru hydro-electric scheme is in operation. The final 1,000 kW. set should be installed in December, thus completing that scheme.

At Nairobi South Power Station the heavy slow speed 1,200 kW. diesel mentioned last year has been in operation since April, 1953. A further 3,000 kW. of diesel plant should be installed by the end of the year, followed by the first of the 2,500 kW. gas turbines in early 1954. I am glad to say that this machine has at long last passed its tests and is now in transit to Nairobi, and also that on present indications from the makers we expect the second machine early in 1954.

Despite the installation of the foregoing new plant, however, reliance in emergency has still to be placed on some of our diesel plant, now nearly due for retirement. Subject to this we trust that, unless abnormal circumstances arise, we should be able to avoid the repetition of the load shedding which occurred last year and during the early months of this year. The Board would like to take this opportunity of thanking our consumers and particularly certain of our larger consumers who, at no little inconvenience to themselves, assisted us by their co-operation and their forbearance during the period of rationing.

Civil Engineering Works

Progress on the civil engineering works at the 8,000 kW Low Tana hydro-electric scheme is satisfactory. In addition, we have placed on order for the Nairobi area one steam turbo-alternator set of 5,000 kW. and boiler, together with a 4,300 kW. of heavy diesel plant for intermittent duty, to safeguard the period between completion of Low Tana and the development at Seven Forks, for which the designs and project report are now complete.

Meantime, we have been approached by the Uganda Electricity Board, who are desirous that we should take a bulk supply in Nairobi from their system. Prior to the necessary submission to Government we turned the problem over to our technical advisers in London, both for economic and technical examination and for discussions with officials of the Uganda Electricity Board. During the course of these discussions news available in England was kept fully informed.

For Mombasa we have on order a 5,000 kW. oil-fired unit similar to that projected for Nairobi, and a suitable site has been located which will allow adequate expansion for the development of this area of supply.

Elsewhere in Kenya operating conditions have been satisfactory and supplies have been maintained at times.

Throughout the difficult period in Nairobi and in planning for the future in all areas in Kenya, we have had much help and constructive criticism from the Electric Power Advisory Board, to whom our thanks are due.

In Tanganyika Territory the Tanganyika Electric Supply Company's station at Kibagati Falls has been augmented by 5,000 kW.

Tanganyika Power

The Dar es Salaam subsidiary received substantial additions of plant, although, notably in Mwanza, much of the new plant was fully loaded as soon as it came into commission. In Dar es Salaam itself we now have two heavy marine type oil sets of proved reliability which should cover our requirements there for a year or two ahead. For the various Tanganyika power stations we reached satisfactory arrangements for the maintenance of machines to be held in reserve against our future requirements, thus without immediate financial commitment.

As you will remember we have had in mind for some time that the organization of our operations in Tanganyika would be assisted and improved by the amalgamation of our two companies there—the Tanganyika Electric Supply Company, Ltd., and the Dar es Salaam and Mafet Electric Supply Company, Limited. This involved a new license of which we submitted a draft to the Government of Tanganyika in December, 1952. In order to help in this and elsewhere a new law was agreed with the Government in the appointment of an independent engineer to assist and advise them.

Outlook for Current Year

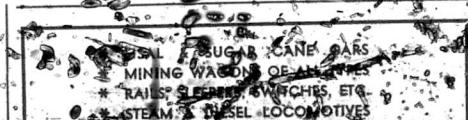

Turning now to the outlook for the current year the results for the first half, although disappointing to the Board, could not be considered as entirely unsatisfactory since the savings from the recent adjustments in tariffs, together with the savings from additional hydroelectric power in Nairobi and Mombasa had not been reflected in the revenue returns. I am now pleased to say that more recent returns show a marked improvement and that we are now approaching figures which the directors consider satisfactory. In this connexion you will remember that interest on certain temporarily unremunerative capital is being paid out of capital.

When I spoke to you in December last I referred to the grievous outbreak of violence among the Kikuyu, which unfortunately still persists. Although it may be too early to say what the eventual effect may be on our business, so far there have been no adverse effects or indeed any evidence of recession in demand. In this connexion I am pleased to say that all our staff concerned, including our African staff drawn from all tribal areas, have worked well and loyally.

During the course of the year we have had the benefit of consultations in East Africa with Mr. Andrew MacTaggart and Mr. Donald Brook of our London boards and also with Mr. O. M. White, M.B.E., F.R.I.E., a director of Hallam, Beatty and Company Limited. These consultations were of extreme value in view of the financial and engineering problems involved in our future policy of development to meet the ever growing needs of our existing and prospective areas of supply.

TrIBUTES TO STAFF

Before closing I should like on behalf of the Board to thank myself and, I am sure, on behalf of the shareholders, to thank the staffed in Kenya by Mr. G. M. Walker and in Tanganyika by Mr. D. J. Stringer and Mr. C. C. Murray for their unstained and loyal services during the year. To Mr. G. C. Reed, our secretary, and Mrs. H. C. Trenoweth, our London secretary, and their staffs in Nairobi and London we tender our thanks for their excellent work during the year.

British Overseas Stores, Ltd.

Mr. R. J. Blackadder's Review

THE 21st ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF BRITISH OVERSEAS STORES LIMITED was held on October 6 in London. Mr. R. J. BLACKADDER, M.C., C.M. (the chairman) presided.

The following is an extract from his circulated statement for the year ended March 31, 1953, relating to Portuguese East Africa:

"Following many periods of acute congestion, the Port of Beira has been free since the middle of 1952. This satisfactory position has been achieved in spite of an increase in port tonnage, as a result of the new rolling stock and haulage power recently acquired by the Rhodesian and Portuguese Railways, together with adequate control of the volume and dates of shipping, which has ensured the full utilization of the port without overstraining the railway facilities. Our subsidiary, Allen, West and Shepherd, Limited, has naturally benefited from the improved conditions, which we have every reason to believe will continue."

New Railway Line

The construction of the new railway line from Southern Rhodesia to Lourenço Marques is progressing and will probably be complete in 1955. The ultimate effect of this on our Beira business is hard to estimate. Total tonnage passing through this port should remain at the maximum which facilities can handle, but some of this may be low rated cargo carrying little profit. Such high-rated traffic as we may lose should benefit our associated company, Lourenço Marques and should thus reduce any loss of revenue in Beira."

The report was adopted.

Acquisition by Turner & Newall, Ltd.

Control of Porter's Cement Companies

MESSRS. TURNER & NEWALL, LTD., have issued the following statement:

"The negotiations for the acquisition of a controlling interest in Porter's Cement Industries (Rhodesia), Ltd., announced in the Press on September 9, have resulted in firm offers being made by Turner & Newall, Ltd., for the 300,000 ordinary shares of £1 each in Porter's Cement Industries (Rhodesia), Ltd., and for the minority interest in Porter's Cement Industries (Bulawayo), Ltd., comprising 135,000 ordinary shares of £1 each. The basis of exchange will be one Turner & Newall ordinary share of £1, fully paid, for each two shares of the Rhodesia companies.

"The offer remains open until October 24, but sufficient acceptances have now been received to enable the matter to proceed and the permission of the Capital Issues Committee of H.M. Treasury to issue the appropriate number of Turner & Newall ordinary shares has been obtained. It is not intended to issue renounceable allotment letters.

"The Turner & Newall shares to be issued in exchange for shares in the Rhodesia companies will, as from the date of issue, rank pari passu with the existing issued ordinary stock of the company and will accordingly rank for the final dividend which will normally be paid in January, 1954, in respect of the year to September 30, 1953."

"If all the ordinary shareholders of the Rhodesia companies accept the offer, it will be necessary for Turner & Newall, Ltd., to issue 267,500 ordinary shares of £1 each, credited as fully paid.

"An offer has also been made to acquire the 200,000 7% cumulative preference shares of 5s. each in Porter's Cement Industries (Rhodesia), Ltd., at a price of 6s. each, payable in cash."

Northern Rhodesia's telephone trunk service has been extended to the Lusaka-Bancroft Mine. The Choma exchange has become automatic. The trunk services to Nyasaland has been inaugurated, and the Fort Jameson-Lilongwe trunk service has been completed.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

AN UNCONVINCING DEBATE on the situation in Kenya is reported on other pages. Mr. S. V. Cooke's motion would have been better moved months ago, and he erred tactically in describing Strange Debate in Kenya. Even if it were in the Government, for that enabled some members on his side of the House to withhold support on the contention that unsophisticated African tribesmen might derive wrong impressions from a demonstration of lack of faith in the Administration. We cannot recall that their earlier criticisms were inhibited by such considerations. However that may be, Mr. Cooke made easily the best speech of the day, which closed with his main charges still unanswered. His weighty indictment of the Chief Secretary, the Member for Law and Order, and the late Chief Native Commissioner received strong support from his colleagues. Yet it was scarcely mentioned by those opposite, and the chief Government spokesman escaped from his predicament by ignoring most of the case against him and selecting a few passages for mild condemnation. That procedure proved the weakness of the official position. Mr. Blundell, leader of the European elected members, might have been expected to see that weakness exposed in order to bring home the widespread dissatisfaction. He promptly covered it up by moving an amendment. At best, that was a bad blunder in tactics. And that is all I said of his failure to give the mover the customary notice that he would introduce an amendment? His first error was to make statements so extravagant that the Government benches must have welcomed an opportunity for if they could not reply properly to Mr. Cooke they could emphasize his contradiction.

Mr. Cooke spoke for the European community of Kenya, which has been deeply distressed by the happenings of the past year, and it is regrettable that the other elected members did not join him in demanding accountability for the Chief Secretary's Feeble Reply. In demanding accountability for the tanking, procrastination, and absence of a sense of emergency which have characterized the whole period of the emergency. They might have qualified some of the statements into which Mr. Cooke was led by the warmth of his indignation and still endorsed his general criticism, but they passed over in silence his impressive tally of inefficiencies and concentrated their comments on minor matters of phraseology. That negative, they might have left to the Government speakers who had little positive to say in their own defence. The Chief Secretary failed to meet the charges of lack of policy, bad judgment, and negligence. He denied complicity in a speech which was so steeped in complacency that it might have been excusing the shortcomings involved in the outbreak of the Mau Mau insurrection, not accounting for its fierce twist in the last month. He even took credit for preventing the general strike in Nairobi by bringing off, after only two months of rebellion, which followed a typical suggestion that a police force would be trained to be more courteous. The inference is that extreme disidence would be caused in the force by drawing attention to the misbehaviour of some police askari. The implication was that the representatives of the public might make no complaints. That is an indefensible position for any Chief Secretary to assume. If the charges were justified, Mr. Cooke did not fulfil his duty in bringing the matter to the notice of the authorities (all Kenyans have, we now learn, been by letter). "If they were annihilated, they could have been demolished without ill-effect on the morale of the force." Still sounding, the Chief Secretary declared that he could find nothing ambiguous in the letter offering peace terms to the Kikuyu gangs. He leading a fact which appeared in EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA on August 17 would enlighten him, and show why we critics of the "repellent ambiguity" of that document.

Mr. Blundell was scarcely more convincing than Mr. Potter. His argument was that the Administration had not handled the emergency with the necessary imagination and vision. Recalling the European Leader's Secretary of State Has Charges Refuted. withheld the necessary powers of decision from the authorities in Kenya. It is astonishing that anyone who knows Mr. Langton and his work should accuse him of delaying Kenya's full support in her troubles. The Member for African Affairs (whom non-officials have great confidence) firmly contradicted Mr. Blundell, saying that he had never had cause to feel that the Secretary of State has been unsympathetic or unhelpful or has exercised any unnecessary delay in trying to help us and give us the maximum support possible. This reflection upon him is entirely unjustified. The Chief Secretary confirmed that very great assistance has been rendered by the Secretary of State and

Mr. Cooke dismissed Mr. Blundell's implication that the Secretary of State is holding on to the coat-tails of the gentlemen on site, with the assertion that he is giving them every latitude it is possible to give. Though Mr. Blundell did not withdraw his criticism of the Minister, he changed his ground by contending that the Government of Kenya had no choice but to do what it should have done because it feared the reactions of other countries. He produced no evidence in support of that accusation.

Small wonder that Mr. Marilyn Cowie described the debate as unconstructive. Beginning robustly, it became progressively anaemic. Had the members constituted themselves a Council of State Leadership for frank discussion of the most Lacking serious problem which the country has ever had to face, the motion would have served a profitable purpose. Forcibly giving away what opportunity the Chief Secretary and Mr. Blundell must share the main responsibility for, neither was concerned to focus debate upon the main issues, and so challenge the Legislature to make its optimum contribution. No Secretary of State, having read the Hansard report for October 18, would be persuaded to delegate still more of his responsibilities to Kenya, for he would inevitably conclude that there is sad and dangerous weakness on both the official and non-official sides in that tried Colony.

Notes By The Way

Trusteeship Committee's Recklessness

THE TRUSTEESHIP COMMITTEE of the United Nations moved from recklessness to recklessness, decided on Monday to assume the right to discuss Central African Federation as represented, or misrepresented, in objections from chiefs in Nyasaland which have been transmitted through the Rev. Michael Scott to the General Assembly. Emphasizing that the Charter gave the committee no right to interfere in such a matter, Lord Hudson gave a blunt warning that the British delegation might be driven to discontinue its co-operation. But his motion to close the debate was defeated by eight votes, and the Indian delegate succeeded with a motion which leaves members free to reopen the question whenever they wish.

Courtesy Repaid with Arrogance

IT HAS LONG BEEN EVIDENT that the Trusteeship Committee is bent on arrogating to itself rights which are excluded by the Charter. Metropolitan Powers are accountable to the United Nations in respect of trust territories only, but, as a matter of courtesy, Her Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom has furnished information on social and economic conditions in Colonial territories, including Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. There has been no suggestion that that course will be discontinued now that those two Dependencies are federated with Southern Rhodesia, but the United Nations would have no just cause of complaint if the information were henceforth withheld. It might apply itself to the irresponsibility of its own Trusteeship Committee.

Prideful for Ignorance

THE IGNORANCE of the agitators against British Colonial administration was illustrated again last Sunday by a news telegram in the Observer from Mr. Peter Stansbury, who reported from the U.S.A. that India was to advise Trusteeship Committee to hear the Rev. Michael Scott on the question of the "proposed" Central African federation, and that Mrs. Menon, the Indian delegate to that committee, had spoken of her fears of the contemplated change. Twice in three paragraphs the Indian representative and the reporter were shown to be unaware that the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland is a fait accompli. The Observer knows federation to exist constitutionally, and the two blunders on its front page must be attributed to sub-editorial oversight.

Capitalizing Mau Mau

WITH THE POLITICAL and other sentimentalists who speak maximum speed in the most so-called "democratic" and experienced people he led to think again by what has happened in British Guiana. The White Paper presented by Her Majesty's Government to the events leading to the suspension of the constitution of that Colony records that the Minister for Education and the Minister for Labour started an African and Colonial Committee which issued a report for the Mau Mau, which was aimed for the continuing terrorists in Kenya, and specialized in vicious anti-white propaganda. Dr. Jaja, at the time First Minister and leader of the People's Progressive Party, is reported as saying in March of this year: "In Kenya the Africans are not only killing white men who ask them not to kill them, but killing their own people who turn to us to say that should be done to stop us . . . what is fitting the cause of the Government are not the people." So Mau Mau was capitalized by these admirers of communism.

Sir Gordon Munro

SIR GORDON MUNRO, since February High Commissioner in London for Southern Rhodesia, who was about to become the first High Commissioner for the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, has, to his own deep regret—which is wholly shared in official and non-official circles in Central Africa and London—had to withdraw from active life at least temporarily. He has suffered for some months from duodenal trouble, and medical advisers insist that he must avoid worry and strain. This will be a sad loss, for Sir Gordon's personality and experience peculiarly fitted him for his office. Wide knowledge of Central Africa, infinite friendliness, diplomatic qualities, financial acumen and integrity, and a zest for work were all needed by him to possess all these qualifications in general measure. His enforced retirement is indeed regrettable. Until a new experiment is made, Mr. B. Ross, the able and experienced Deputy High Commissioner for Southern Rhodesia, will act in this country on behalf of the Federation.

End Kenya

KENYA FRIENDS of the Tanganyika European Council who sees its monthly bulletin must have been shocked to see in the latest issue a dozen columns of closely printed matter about Kenya which under the guise of history represent an attack on British administration and settlement. Since the writer, Mr. Richard K. Pankhurst, this is not surprising. What astonishes me is to find the organ of European settlement in Tanganyika giving him such space, promising more, and not even questioning any of the allegations of a writer who is a persistent critic of European effort.

Doctored History

HISTORY FIRST PARAGRAPH contained a clear warning, for it referred to the "settler system being imposed by force on the African peoples." A little later Mr. Mbiyu Kamanya and Mr. Acheng Ochieng, two of the protégés of Messrs. Fenton Brockway and Leslie Halcro, are mis-described as "distinguished Kenya Africans." The Government of Kenya is falsely accused of "making common cause with the employers to fix wages at the lowest possible rates," of "precluding the possibility of the Africans making any profit from their own holding," and of "rendering virtually impossible concerted action by the African workers to raise their wages or improve their conditions." A committee has for some time been considering the future of the L.A.C. It would do well to examine its bulletin.

Has Government Shown Adequate Sense of Urgency?Emergency Measures Debated in Kenya Legislative Council

MR. S. V. COOKE, elected Member for the Constituency of Nairobi in the Legislative Council of Kenya recently, said that it is the opinion of this Council that the operations against the terrorists are not being conducted with the necessary "gour, determination, imagination, and sense of urgency," said inter alia:

"I bring this motion because there is a very strong feeling in this country—and especially among business men this feeling is growing—that all the shilly-shallying and dilly-dallying and muddle and muddles which have characterized the policy of the last 15 months has got to cease."

Their Best Not Good Enough

"It will be my unpleasant duty to arraign certain gentlemen on the other side. Every member recognizes their sincerity, ability, and integrity. The only thing I call in question is their handling of this difficult situation. They will say that they were doing their best. Their best is just not good enough. I very much doubt if they possess that sense of judgment that is so necessary."

"This is a motion of no confidence in Government. As it will be imputed that I am inclined to be wise after the event, I will list some of the warnings that I have uttered in the past 15 years."

"In 1940 I wrote that Nairobi was a powder mine which might explode at any moment. In 1942 I advocated in this Council a social survey of Nairobi

That was inspired by my experience on the Strike tribunal when I had seen the scandalous state of affairs that prevailed in the Nairobi slums. That survey was not held; if it had been we might have escaped some of the horror of Nairobi today."

Report Not Even Debated

"In 1948 the African Post-war Employment of Africans Committee drew the attention of Government to the effect that the Africans returning from the Army should have, and that things were likely to be very difficult from the crime point of view. That report did not even receive debate in this Council."

"In 1948 I proposed two motions which were supported by Mr. Mathu, who drew emphatic attention to the fact that the people in Kikuyu were meeting in caves and banana groves cursing the chiefs and the Government. No action was taken. A few weeks later, following a number of instances of police in Ruiru, I wrote an article for which I was rebuked by the then Attorney-General."

"I have profound respect for the military ability and courage of General Erskine and General Hinde, and my criticisms are of their strategy and tactics, which they may well be compelled to adopt by pressure from other quarters. With regard to the hard core of the rebels, as General Cameron says, 'about 500'—what is Government policy? As that hard core has established itself in positions in the mountains and forests, their policy to starve them, or to go in and liquidate them? My contention is that we must do very much more here still than in the immediate future.

"The Kildare was never an aggressive person; he was assertive, rather like the English in that respect, as distinct from the Irish and the Scots! He liked penetrating into other people's minds, but he was not an aggressive person. Like the English, he was, underneath, a deeply religious person."

"To crush these people who were on the point of being crushed by the Masai and the Somalis when we arrived - we had in this position at the moment five regular battalions of the British Army, six battalions of the King's African Rifles, one battalion of the Kenya Regiment, one Squadron of bombers, 2,000 regular and irregular police, 18,000 home guards, and many thousands of armed Europeans and Africans. We have an army of nearly 60,000 people, and our total casualties to date in action have been only 10; our Afar casualties killed and wounded are only half of those killed by accident.

The 2nd Battalion Fusiliers, who have a very great and deserved reputation in both wars, left this country after nine months without one man killed, wounded, or missing. This is not wagging a finger.

Forests Not Impenetrable

"I know the forest as well as anybody in this room, and I must say that they are as impenetrable as some people try to make out. You find besides you get bambos, but through the elephant paths, and buffalo tracks. At any rate, if one Nairobi corner cow and a calf, boys can find their way through the forest surely our trained troops can find their way through it and annihilate those plague of Indians."

I am told that it is impossible to attack them. Indeed, Well, I have a hundred here about the gallant actions of Inspector Stanley Davidson, who, although wounded, attacked the hideout with this men and performed a very gallant exploit, and came to grips with the rebels. The same happened the other day with the Loyalty guard, who went into the dense bush fought the rebels hand-to-hand, and there over 35 of them in open叛逆 bush. The single casualty of the home guard was one man wounded, which illustrates that we are very much inclined to overestimate the cunning and ferocity of the Maori.

"I do not believe there was any killing of rebels - save as a result of some unfortunate mistake. They were defeated by two ladies at Meetei; they were defeated and captured by the Kinangop by two other women, the other day. Their chief victims are young children and old aged men and women. In this Council a year ago I drew attention to the menace of the forest. If action had been taken then, the rebels might have been annihilated," said: "There are potentialities of the gravest danger if we allow those men to establish themselves in those impenetrable forests from which it is only too easy, to swoop down on defenceless farms." The Member for Law and Order is not there - he is now here to-day, either?" - but if he were here, "A month ago, immediately I heard that the rebels were encamping in the forests, I saw him and impressed upon him the necessity of taking strong action against them. When they take sufficient action, we shall have a Blitz, but nothing ready yet."

Wet or Too Dry

We are told that it is impossible to follow the rebels. It is either raining or too dark. I have seen five more bandits in one of which the Embu caught the rebels over three rivers including the Tana River followed them two or three days and nights, and then surrounded them. People of the Abere tribe did the same thing a week ago. If they can do it, others can do it. And we believe we are hitting those people hard enough. The focus of infection is the Mau Mau hard core in the forest, and they must be dealt with first, last and all the time.

"In Nairobi the military have been called in because the civilians have failed to keep law and order. Civil law has apparently broken down.

~~There is great lack of confidence in the police. Some time last year drew attention in this Council to the behaviour of the "police". General Templer places above everything else proper behaviour on the part of the police and he started a campaign amongst them in Kenya which has had miraculous results. The misbehaviour of the police at askari in this town has made them lose the confidence of the general public, and, of course, they will get the information they require.~~

There are three examples from a Nairobi paper called the Citizen. If they are irresponsible why were these allegations not contradicted months ago? One alleges that wanted men were found sleeping down in a police station. Another alleges that men sleeping in a police post. Another alleges that men wanted on serious charges escaped from the Supreme Court. Here is a more serious statement published two or three weeks ago. It says of the Commissioner of Police: His force has become a by-word for infidelity and defeat, by a sullen Native population which has been terrified into silence about the criminals. That is a very serious charge indeed. Are Government going to accept it as true and reform the police or say it is untrue and do nothing?

Loss of Arms in Naivasha

"We had this monstrous position at the sacking of Naivasha Police Station. I do not know if any disciplinary action has been taken on whoever is responsible. We had a report from Colonel Modera which was very much cut down, and I am going to demand should be published. What is Government afraid of in that report? In what section of the police station, 10 or 40 arms of precision were stolen. How can you keep up the morale and discipline of the force if a matter of that magnitude is allowed to pass without anything being done?"

"The other day we had a gesture of contempt—oath-taking right behind the District Commissioner's office and our future house."

There must be people on the other side of the Counter-respondent for this disgraceful lack of policy, this impetuosity and this inefficiency. It seems to me that there are three people responsible - the Chief Secretary, the Member for Legal Affairs and the Chief Native Commissioner. I have got nothing but admiration for my friend Mr. Whitley. I except him from anything I say as it applies to the substantive Chief Native Commissioner, who seems to have disappeared since he went on leave nobody knows to-day where he is or what he is doing. These three gentlemen must be held responsible for the position in Kenya to day. I say they are lacking in judgment and the advice they have given to the Government is not the soundest advice.

I mention the ~~second~~ by indeed the criminal commission to allow the Kirku to leave the farms and go back to their reserves. I advocated that that should be stopped months ago. It has been stopped now, months too late. That according to Deden Kinimati increased his force—it is an exaggeration. I imagine—a thousandfold. I believe that it is the opinion of General Eskeino that it was deplorable bad judgment to allow those people to go back to the reserves. It is full of dissident angry people, many of whom went into the forests. They could have been given public work to do.

Renrehensible Ambiguity

We had this absurd document, the peace-treaty which must have been issued with the connivance of the Chief Secretary EAST ASIA AND RHODESIA referred to that document as reprehensible and of a scandalous character. Mr. Graham Green, Woolwich Standard, said: "Under these surrender terms man cannot live. So they may."

"We'll likely to issue a document if we had waited two or three months until General Erick's operation were all swayed and he had established his posts in the forest. We was ready. If hard, they would have been in time to get these leaflets out."

"All those things which I could mention, a hundred more, have made me lose all confidence in the judgment of the Chief Secretary and the Attorney-General. They seem to me to be overruling sense of judgment which is absolutely essential. Your country says it is this. Therefore I say that they ought to consider whether the country wants them much longer.

"I desire the assassin in this country at the present moment to be killed. Everyone seems to be willing to kill the man. My wish is, though instead of with bullets there was desertion, which would be deplorable. People say they are going to leave this country. They can capitalise it so coming on. I think we right spirit is to tell Government exactly what we think of them. We cannot any longer tolerate the shilly-shallying and dilly-dallying that has been going on."

Mr. MUTHENI seconded a brief maiden speech saying that the troops were sitting all round the enemy waiting to be given the word. He pointed out that there had been many casualties for the terrorists were bad shots. Kenyans young men and the troops had done a grand job.

THE CHIEF SECRETARY, Mr. Henry Potter, said in the course of his reply:—

removing them back to Mount Kenya, and some of them to Nairobi. A considerable amount has been done by way of food denial campaigns and the use of aircraft. The position generally speaking has improved in certain parts of the reserves, but there have been a considerable number of incidents—not only against us, but also in our favour.

The policy is to go in fighting wherever practicable. The method of starvation has been used as an effective weapon. Recently the troops have been increased to enable us to do more active combatant action in the forest. There is no question of leaving all the fighting to the Kikuyu home guard. They have done extremely good work, but most of these operations are joint operations by the Kikuyu guard, the Army, the police, either by two or three of those forces.

Work of Security Forces

"We all would like to see these things dropped in a straightaway, so that they are prevented from committing more dreadful crimes. Since October 22 of last year 1953 enemy have been killed 1,965."

Mr. COOKE: "Camp followers."

THE CHIEF SECRETARY: "They are the enemy. Some of the biggest difficulties have been caused to us by camp followers as food carriers. The implication that the security forces sat back and did nothing is without foundation. As long as there are further thugs in the forest we shall have to stand up that number of casualties."

"A week or so ago in the Fort Hall district, one action resulted in the death or capture of a band of some 70. In last week-end two actions took place in the Matheria division in South Nyeri. In one the K.A.R. killed nine, captured eighteen, and in the other some were arrested. In another, the Kikuyu guard found a gang of 30 and killed seven and wounded and captured some others. A gang of 20 going to Nairobi, who had been robbing their relatives down elsewhere, cause much trouble, and the co-operation of criminals was achieved by them, with the result that we had two different kinds operating together, the Mai Mai people and the criminals who seize any opportunity to pursue their crimes. During July-August the number of incidents in Nairobi increased very considerably—robberies, hold-ups, and murders."

"In the light of the lawless elements in September, embarked on an intimidation campaign by initiating boycotts on houses, smoking of cigarettes, and various things. They overreached themselves, but they did achieve in the first instance a certain degree of success. There was then talk of using intimidation as a means to bring about a standstill amongst African workers of the town. It was not that the African workers wished to stop work, but they had become intimidated. Then Government took action, namely, particularly at the protection of African workers. The police were increased, and troops came in to support the police and assist in the protection of the loyal Africans. That shows that the word 'head' of the events in this connection because this latter standstill did not take place."

"The effect was immediate, and a very considerable degree of confidence was restored. The crime figures were substantially reduced, and we have had a number of robberies and hold-ups and other forms."

Operation Court

"I am not General Templer's 'Operational Committee', we have not been told, and it is hoped that we shall be able to produce a hit of the same kind, but we cannot do this overnight. It requires a lot of training, the power of the police force, and it is not to be expected that this will bring about a standstill during the emergency, but I hope that it will go a substantial way towards easing the emergency, but I hope that it may be possible to do something on the lines mentioned. The master has already received the attention of the Commissioner of Police."

"He is to know, therefore, to what extent he can rely on us in giving him information and news of information forthcoming. I do not deny that these things occur, but I hotly deny that anything on the wide scale which he implies has taken place. We said that this might be true because Government had not denied it. It is true that two witnesses disagreed. I quoted a statement that the force had become a 'word for venality'. Those statements are difficult to contradict. The answer is a plain negative. The publication to which he referred is a weekly publication. The disadvantage in inquiring a matter of that kind are increased by the delays which would take place before they are published, and it is frequently the case that it is better to take no notice because by the following week something else will have dropped, if not been indicated, which will replace the information taken in the original matter."

"There is an inescapable foundation for his argument. I do not deny that occasional trouble of this kind has taken place. Every possible action is taken to prevent its recurrence and to deal with it. Drawing attention to statements of that kind cause extreme disturbance in a force or any body of persons at which such accusations are leveled."

"The peace term document has had quite considerable results. Some of us, I only were food carriers, small fry who did not really count. Others were people who did count. One information is that even the number that there were 1,000 or 1,000 have had a definite effect on the ranges, and it has proved a considerable amount of very useful information. It is suggested that the document was ambiguous. In my reading it was not ambiguous."

Mr. NADAN said (in part): "If we pass a motion of this kind the Mau Mau could say to their adherents: 'The Europeans and the Asians and African-nominated members of Councils have no confidence in the Government of the Colony. Why don't you want to support the Government? That would be an unanswerable argument if the motion is passed."

"The second inevitable result would be to make the present members responsible for mistakes made in the past. The third reason is that if we pass the motion the Government would resign, and we would have no alternative Government to take their place—not to say, and I hope not until complete agreement has been reached between all peoples of this colony as to how such a Government could work and how it should be formed."

"But some incidents do not give me much confidence. There is the Nairobi incident, when the police station was sacked. I still do not know who was responsible for the Mau Mau acquiring so many arms. Compare the officials in the Police Station to the citizens who get fined for being careless about their firearms. One European was sentenced to a term of imprisonment also."

Mr. BUNDELL: "Shamed—accused!"

Mr. NADAN: "In this case, I think, it is not racism. Do not introduce racialism to everything. It does not exist as much as it thinks. I think that kind of apply people, but they are not of this country. They are here to serve and administer to us, not to rule us. The Government is not to be blamed."

Mr. Bundell's Amendment

MR. BUNDELL: "I am going to move an amendment for the following reasons. First, we believe that the motion deals with the one element of operations in which there has been marked improvement recently. Secondly, the mover made it clear that the motion was of no confidence and, very much for the reasons which the last speaker has given, the majority of my colleagues will not feel inclined to support that particular aspect of the motion."

"I propose from this side a vote of no confidence in the Government may have an effect on all those loyal tribes and people who are not, so to speak, fond of the art of parliamentary discussions as we are; it must rouse in their minds the great suspicion of members opposite and make them wonder whether indeed they are holding on the right track that would be disastrous."

Mr. NADAN: "Opposite—mark all at their deficiencies, such as they are sometimes in decisions and sustainances in book—are nevertheless not entirely their own masters. I stress the word 'sometimes'. Therefore I move the following amendment: 'That this Council is of the opinion that the emergency is not being handled with the necessary imagination, vigour, and sense of urgency, and urges the Secretary of State to allow a greater power of decision by the Government in Kenya.'

"This position of members on this side of the council in relation with the Government is a clear one of advice only, without any executive responsibility. Why did the situation get so bad in Nairobi before necessary action was taken? Our police lack in the middle ranks a great deal of experience and knowledge, and some time ago discussions were held with a view to recruiting senior men of experience and responsibility. Why has that not happened?"

"The public of all races would like to know the Government's intentions in regard to the really evil men in the Mai Mai movement, those who have taken the three degrees oath and usurped. Are they going to be allowed to return amongst us and to cause further havoc?"

Africans Must Work Hard for Future Prosperity

Sir Evelyn Baring on Kenya's Problems and Prospects

SIR EVELYN BARING, Governor of Kenya, was reported in our last issue to have announced in the Legislative Council that none of the leading personalities of the Mau-Mau movement would be allowed to return to any area where they might cause trouble, under any conditions whatsoever.

He added: "These vile men, self-seekers who hoped to attain their ends by subversion and violence, have done incalculable harm to all in Kenya, and particularly to the members of their own tribe. It is felt that some striking action should be taken against the few most villainous leaders of the Mau-Mau movement."

Because the text of the Governor's long statement reached EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA only just before it was made closed for press, only the most important passages in regard to the suppression and punishment of Mau-Mau could be recorded.

Sir Evelyn Baring also said on the same occasion:

"How rapid Kenya's development was before the emergency can be seen in the growth of our nation's income, rising from £53m. in 1947 to about £107m. in 1952, with an annual net expenditure on capital and recurrent account going from £8m. in 1946 to £20.7m. in 1952. The expenditure on the main social service groups in that period grew from £1.7m. to £5.4m."

Mau-Mau Conspiracy Checks Development

But in an important part of the country a check to the growth of good relations, to prosperity, to all forms of hopeful development has been suffered as a result of a conspiracy aimed at attaining power by violent means—the conspiring of Mau-Mau. For the country to recover it must become both secure and prosperous. Given the conditions of racial relations between the various peoples, we good believe that those relations will soon move in a climate of economic development. I also believe that the primary need for that development is a sense of security. Prosperity and security go together.

Any considerable reduction in the area of our forests might seriously affect the water supplies, and therefore the agricultural health. There is the possibility of the development of a very valuable forestry industry through the growing of softwoods, and I trust that we can develop it as successfully as has been done in the Union of South Africa. But most softwood timber produced from Kenya will have to be exported, facing competition in world markets after bearing the expense of the long haul to Mombasa. For this reason economy in the cost of production is very important.

"At present production depends on the forest squatting system. Our aim will be the reform, and perhaps in some cases an alteration, of this system; but definitely the maintenance of the forestry industry with the cheapest production methods possible, subject always to the permanent need for security and a reasonable degree of European supervision.

We farms I visualize development down certain lines. One is an increase in cottage labour and a decrease in the number of squatters. This will be carried out carefully in close consultation with local authorities and local production committees, and having regard to the varying conditions in different farm areas. I must caution that in future labourers must live in small groups of houses on each farm, not in many scattered huts for the condition of scattered huts, on some farms and in some forest areas, has helped the spread of Mau-Mau."

"If European farmers want to develop it will be necessary to take measures, in the interests not only of economic prosperity but also of security against farms where many Africans live without little European supervision. I hope that with the development on farms of groups of houses which will be like small villages, it will be possible to provide security. Some has already been done in some forest villages along some railway areas. These measures will secure houses to be built with owners closely linked to them and often overlapping them, but having as their purpose the reconstruction and development of the country. It will not be possible to do this by financing the development out of its own resources."

Best Soil in East or Central Africa

"The Government believe in the future of European agriculture in Kenya. In fact, they consider that the greatest asset Kenya possesses is the soil of its inland country, on which a great deal of the European farming areas as well as the whole of the Kikuyu land unit and to the west the Nandi, the Kisii, and the Kamba.

"They do not have the materials enjoyed by many other countries in respect of what we describe as a temperate climate permitting us to grow for the production of food to be found anywhere in East, Central, and South Africa. This land, I repeat, is partly in European and partly in African occupation.

"The Troop report on European agriculture has suggested away to the development of Kenya as an important instead of a small, food-exporting country. It is Government's intention to develop European agriculture to the greatest possible extent and as quickly as possible. We hope to lay a White Paper on the Troop report this session.

"Along with this we should concentrate on the development of industry. Since the Emergency investment and the growth of industry have undoubtedly received a check, but the check has been by no means a complete one. Big companies have been prepared to investigate and, in fact, to start industries right in the middle of the emergency. I hope that once security returns this industrial development will be enhanced.

"The growth of factories in the towns implies an increase in the number of Africans living under family conditions in these towns, and for this the provision of more family housing is an urgent necessity which the City Council of Nairobi, other local bodies, and the Government have under consideration. A stable African working population in towns is essential. Only in that way can productivity, skill, and thus wages be increased.

Reconstruction Problems

"Perhaps the most urgent reconstruction problem facing the Government is the absorption into the Kikuyu land unit of the large number of Kikuyu who have moved there either off farms and forestland from other places. This must be set in its proper place in the general picture of African development. African agricultural development must depend on the provision of finance and our ability to obtain the necessary staff to supervise works. This development will cost several millions. Plans are already well advanced.

"The timing and extent of the completion of these plans will depend on the general financial position and prospects of the Colony, which will become clearer after discussions which the Member for Finance is shortly to hold in London. But given the money and the men, we have in preparation schemes for greatly intensified agricultural development in African areas. Within the area at its disposal the Government's intention is that the development of African land units should continue, in spite of the great burden in finance and manpower which is falling on the country through the emergency.

"First there are our development plans for such areas as Nyasaland Province and Uganda; and this development is the central point in our policy.

"There is also the Kikuyu land unit and the need to assist with the absorption of displaced Kikuyu. Our aim is to help the Kikuyu land unit by using up it when possible some of those Kikuyu who have to be kept in custody. We intend that by these measures the capacity of that land unit, which includes Embu and Meru, may be increased to support the increasing Kikuyu population. There will be irrigation schemes and the clearing, development, and cultivation of the bracken areas, care being had to existing rights. There is the possibility of the development in these areas of a dairy industry.

"There will be also an intensification of measures which have already proved highly successful, for example, soil conservation in the cultivated areas of the Kikuyu land unit. It is already proposed to increase the carrying capacity of African areas and to improve the standard of living there by raising the African population of each crop where the soil and climate are suitable and where there can be an economic unit. An increase in the capacity of the African areas to support a larger population is a basic necessity. We must press on with our process of encouraging African cultivation of cash crops. When we do this the Government will receive income from this country by many skilled and experienced farmers in the cash crops.

If there is to be real agricultural progress in African areas, attention must be given to the consolidation of fragmented holdings into economic units and to the grant to good farmers of greater security of tenure than they have at present for well-farmed small holdings. Any exemption with the issue of special land sanctions or of occupancy will be punitive. For this special sanction is required by an amendment to the Native Land Trust Ordinance. It may also be necessary to accelerate the lining up of African advisory committees for development. At the focal point government must take its place by the side of the county councils recently established in European areas, which, I am sure, will prove a great success. Kenya is notable for its African district councils. As in the United Kingdom county councils cannot carry out without district councils under them so in the various African districts of the African areas, such as Nyanga, the steady and safe increase in the responsibilities and duties of African district councils will largely depend on the growth of the local council schemes.

Experimental Schemes

Experimental schemes are in progress to make loans to African business men, who operate in the reserves, where the existing system of land tenure and other factors hinder their power of raising capital. We are also carrying experiments in two schools, one in Nyanga and one in Ukaraba to train African handymen from boys who would otherwise leave school at or before the end of the primary class. A third experiment is being made with adult education near Nakuru.

The Development Committee's report envisaged expenditure of £45m. over the 10-year period. This plan has been revised and estimated expenditure over the 10-year period is now £60m., of which over £23m. had been spent to the end of 1952. Another £6m. will have been spent by the end of 1953. Applications to the planning sub-committee of the Executive Council exceed £10m. in addition to the carry-over of £3m. on the existing development plan.

Financial limitation, which is likely more than ever to be the governing factor in the rate of development expenditure unless it becomes less, priority should be given to those schemes likely to increase the national income and economic strength of Kenya so that the expansion of the social services will contribute on a sound foundation.

The total allocation for roads, including £500,000 for the Nairobi Bridge, was £296,000, of which £420,000 will have been spent up to the end of 1953 plus £46,000 from the Capital Development and Welfare grant for the Great Trunk Roads. Mombasa Authority will in the last half of 1954 receive a capital grant of one-half of the amount provided in 1953, which will enable it to go ahead with projects already in train. A comprehensive survey has been carried out of the road system in African areas and an estimate made of the money required for its proper development and maintenance. Every effort will be made to improve roads in African areas within the limits of the financial available.

African Housing

The Central Housing Board under the chairmanship of the Deputy Governor has been set up to deal with the pressing need of providing more African housing in urban areas. A large scheme to provide housing for 15,000 Africans and Arabs in Mombasa is already well advanced and discussions are taking place to see how far it can best assist the early building of more houses for Africans in other centres, particularly in or near Nairobi. The board has a £2m. loan for its purposes.

A stable African working population in the towns—men of regular employment, substance and security—will be achieved, in my view and that of many others, by providing only bed spaces. Homes are required, and it is no excuse for not providing them to say that "homes cannot be provided for Africans for financial reasons." The African population of our towns has reduced in the numbers required for all forms of settlement including new industry, and no more, the African housing problem in our towns might assume more manageable and known proportions and enable us to provide decent homes for Africans rather than sleeping spaces for individuals. It would also materially assist our security problems. The present operations in Nairobi will afford valuable lessons.

We aim to maintain our programme of development in education, but this must be considered in the light of the money available. In connexion with education I wish emphatically to make one statement: that experience has shown that independent schools in African areas cannot safely be allowed. Power of supervision and inspection is not sufficient to avoid the young from being led astray. The Government must also have a financial control through a grant-in-aid. This is the lesson learnt from the history of the Kenya Independent Schools Association schools which have been closed and will not be in any circumstances reopened.

The work of the Medical Department will be severely handicapped should the emergency continue. The policy of carving the costs of modern medical and dental services of prevention and social medicine, chiefly in terms of the people, through the medium of local health centres will be pursued energetically. Government believe that this will provide an integrated health service for a greater number of people than would the spending of the same amount on additional hospital beds.

Health and Employment

Close attention will also be paid to health, education and the study of social factors affecting health, and negotiations are proceeding with the World Health Organisation and the United Nations International Emergency Fund for financial assistance in this endeavour. A notable example of good work recently done is the development of blood transfusion services amongst among the blind, with the capable assistance of such voluntary organizations as the Red Cross and the Kenya Branch of the British Empire Society for the Blind.

Much good work has been done in varying circumstances by the officers of the Department of Labour. Government attaches great importance to the report of the committee now sitting under the chairmanship of the Labour Commissioner which is examining wages and conditions of employment in relation to skill and output in the agricultural and urban industries. It is hoped the report of that committee will be received towards the end of the year.

In Kenya, as elsewhere in Africa, the growth of industry is bound to give rise to certain developments. One is a growing need for family houses for Africans in the towns. Another is a wage level at any rate in certain industries, related to the requirements of a worker living with his family in the town; and in this respect the work of the wage councils recently established in Kenya is notable. A third is security for the worker, particularly in his old age; and this is not confined to Africans. This question will require careful attention as industry develops.

Military Training

In matters of defence the Government have many serious commitments to meet. It is our policy to maintain both the Kenya Regiment and the compulsory military training scheme during the emergency. In charge of the training scheme we have made a great contribution. The Kenya Regiment has played an outstanding part in the difficult and dangerous work of putting down the Mau Mau movement.

The report of the Salaries Commission will be received during this session. I would say that my Government, in unison with the governments of Uganda and Tanganyika, advised the commission that its rule that the three-fifths rule which is at present applied to posts of the Unified Service level should be abolished.

The Public Service Commission should do its very important work during this session.

A White Paper will be laid dealing with the Cusack letter report on the introduction of a consolidated fund procedure and consequent alterations in the structure and system of financial control.

It may be helpful to many Africans who are in doubt about the future, and it may clear the minds of those who, from uncertainty as to what future are wavering in their loyalty. Government if I attempt to summarize Government's attitude to and plans for the future of Africans.

No Place for Violence or Sedition

While African development and progress toward a prosperous life and the chance of holding positions of responsibility will be assisted in every way possible, having regard to their ability and to the country's economic resources, there is no place whatsoever for violence or for the subversive secret societies as a way of achieving any aspirations or any progress. Government will not tolerate such violence or such activity. The longer Mau Mau continues, the less there will be to spend on African development, and particularly in the operational areas the more delayed will be the start of that development.

"Our schemes for Africans will cost money, and until the method of financing the special costs of the emergency has been settled, it is not possible to say finally that sums will be available for such development; but we hope to do this as soon as the United Kingdom authorities and then to enter on schemes of the nature mentioned.

In these schemes we will not forget those who have loyally, and in many cases bravely, helped to keep the Queen's peace. If the Kikuyu people are not to miss the benefits of future development they should give up at once any tacit support of Mau Mau or give evidence to its threats.

must emphasize one other point about the future that Africans of the Colony must work hard for their own better improvement, especially the young men of the Kikuyu tribe. There is no easy way to any country to prosperity, and certainly no easy way in Kenya.

If Africans Want Improvements

"If the Africans of the Colony want, as I know so many of them do, more and better education for their children, a better standard of living for themselves, better housing, and better opportunities for higher paid employment, they must work for these things, must increase their productivity and so qualify for better wages, must be reliable in their work, and get away from the need for constant supervision to ensure that the work is being done at all. Above all, they must co-operate with Government, which has their interests at heart, and they must be loyal to their Queen."

It is often said that an individual who has suffered a very serious illness, who has known the extremes of weakness and the depth of depression, and yet has conquered and recovered, has from his sick bed a man of more than usually great vitality and determination. President Roosevelt was such a man. I hope that Kenya will be such a country."

Queen's Message as Federal Constitution Takes Effect

Rhodesian Analysis of General Election Prospects

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN sent the following message through the Governor-General to the people of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland when the Constitution of that new State came into full operation on October 22:

"To-day, when the Constitution of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland comes fully into operation, I send to you, and through you to all my people in the Federation, my heartfelt good wishes. I pray that the blessing of Almighty God may rest upon the people of the Federation, and that, living together in increasing fellowship and good will, they may use their combined strength for the advancement of all. May those with whom the burden of government will rest be guided with wisdom in the tasks ahead."

An inspiring vision has been vouchsafed to you. To realize it will call for sustained endeavour in so developing the resources of the Federation as to make possible a better living for all by the expansion of education, health and other services. These endeavours will meet with the sympathy of all those who, in every part of the world, look with good-will upon your efforts and wish for the Federation a great and successful future.

"To you all I declare my sympathy in your resolve to fulfil the great ideals to which we are devoted."

Hard Work to Win Majority

On the same day The Times gave prominence to an article by its Salisbury correspondent, who stated emphatically that Sir Godfrey Higgins and Sir Roy Welensky will have to work hard for their majority in the Federal Parliament. He wrote (in part):—

"It would be a mistake to believe that, because in Southern Rhodesia there was a two-thirds majority for federation at the referendum, the electorate will give similar support to the party led by the champions of federation. The Federals, since African affairs remain the concern of the individual territories, felt no need to put up an African policy, and so are at a disadvantage compared with the Confederates, whose policy on racial issues is definite and clear-cut."

The main fight will be between the Federals and the Confederates. The latter have few men of ripe political experience. Even their leader, Mr. J. R. Dendy Young, a Salisbury barrister, only entered the Southern Rhodesian Parliament at the general election five years ago.

"One point in the Confederate policy is likely to be a source of worry to it. This is the provision for four African members in the Southern Rhodesian Parliament elected by African voters. This is felt by many people, including some of the party's supporters, to be going too far, and not to be in conformity with the party's general policy."

It is felt that the politically immature African, unsophisticated and susceptible to intimidation, is more easily swayed by demagogic than by European, with his background of long experience of the working of the democratic system, and that the election of Africans by Africans, fair as it may look in theory, would lead to an irresponsible type of person entering Parliament.

It is an unfortunate fact, in Southern Rhodesia at least, that the comparatively few Africans who have reached the stage of education and culture which would rank them as assets in public life are not the ones to win the limelight; indeed, they seem reluctant that it should do so.

Recent events, such as the Mau Mau disturbances in Kenya and the shuffles in Nairobi, have certainly helped the Confederates. Even minor affairs such as the introduction of Africans at Government House receptions in Southern Rhodesia in connexion with the royal visit, may have some influence owing to the belief in some quarters that the white man is on the way out unless he takes steps to safeguard himself.

Nor is the Federal Party helped by the Colonial Secretary's proposals to give more seats to Africans in the Northern Rhodesia Parliament. The question as to whence of how Africans will eventually come to dominate Central Africa unless the Confederate policy is adopted. Afro-Africans are often anti-European sentiments still expressed in certain quarters in Britain may have a considerable effect on the first federal election and not in the way that the critics in Britain would wish.

Fear of African Domination

Some feel that Federal and Confederate policy in the long run may amount to the same thing—African dominance in Central Africa; for as a consequence, vote-roll may eventually see the white vote swamped by the black, the creation of African States might see a White State ringed round by powerful economic combines, and demanding an ever greater share in the overall Federal legislature.

Some observers believe that the way out of the present state of confusion would be to freeze racial power, or, say, the next five years—the expiration of life of the first Federal Parliament—so that attention could be concentrated on the primary task of laying for the Federation a sound economic and financial foundation.

Such a policy would please neither Europeans nor Africans with strong views on racial questions, but it would enable careful thought to be given to such questions over the next few years, with possibility of agreement at the end. It would also foster political stability and outside confidence.

In the last few days there have been some more encouraging signs for the Federal Party. One is the offer of Mr. J. L. Smit, member for Charter in the Southern Rhodesia House, to stand for them in the Sebakwe federal constituency. While Mr. Smit was opposed to federation during the referendum campaign and holds pronounced views on Native policy, he is convinced that the first duty of all is to put federation firmly on its feet, and that the Federal Party is best able to do this. It is also reported from Matabeleland, where there are several federal seats, that the Confederates have made very little headway.

In Salisbury recently Sir Roy Welensky said again that the chief aim of the Confederates was to wreck the federal plan.

He doubted whether the electorate would entrust the Confederates with the responsibility of forming the first Federal Government, a result which would be "a fate worse than death for Northern Rhodesia; the British Government's attitude would at once harden, and if federation should fail we should be brought under full Colonial Office control again."

The separation policies of the Confederates would never work in South Africa; the apartheid policy was 300 years out of date. What did the Confederates do with their Native population? Would they have made with cheap labour if the black slaves had been in competition with those from the white States? If all Africans in the European areas were to be returned to the black areas, as stated by a Confederate spokesman in Broken Hill, were all domestic and agricultural workers in the white areas to be "Europeans"? Everyone knew what to be impractical.

Sir Roy accused the Confederates of seeming anxious to precipitate racial claims. The Federal Party believed in such a clash inevitable, keeping the door open for civilized Natives.

Of the recent talks in London on Northern Rhodesia's constitution, Sir Roy Welsensky said: "I am not sure I agree that the talks were a failure. Although we did not get all we wanted, I believe the agreement can, and will be reached, particularly if Mr. Lynton concedes the conditions for himself. It may even be worth while to have a little delay if the personal split will bring about the changes we want." Mr. Lynton's sharpest critics would not accuse him of being carry-eyed; and I believe he would be impressed with arguments on the spot.

It is only through lack of direction in the past, particularly under the Labour Government, that the Africans in Northern Rhodesia have got the idea that they have only to shout loud enough to get anything they want. The African has still to be taught that he must earn his right to political advancement, and that he will not get it until he shows he has developed a sense of responsibility.

Sir Roy Welsensky has agreed to continue as leader of Northern Rhodesia's selected members until the federal elections. He spends several days each week in Salisbury.

Federal Departments

Several departments of the Government of the Federation are now operating on a skeleton basis, and the following are the postal and telegraphic addresses:

Governor-General—Milton Building; GOVERNOR-GENERAL, PRIME MINISTER and Cabinet Secretariat—Milton Building, "FEDPRIME."

Treasury—Princess Margaret Hospital; "FEDPR," Federal Assembly—Baker Avenue; "FEDPAR."

External Affairs—Milton Building; "EXTERNAL."

Defence—Milton Building; "FEDDEF."

Internal Affairs—Princess Margaret Hospital; "FEDIN."

Attorney-General—Vincent Building; "FEDLEX."

Public Services Commission—Princess Margaret Hospital; "FEDSER."

Information Services—Princess Margaret Hospital; "FEDIN- FORM."

The Treasury, Department of Internal Affairs, and the Information Services will later transfer to Milton Building, and the Public Services Commission will go to Rhodesia House.

Capitals 100 Miles Apart

If SALISBURY becomes the federal capital of Central Africa, the new capital of Southern Rhodesia must not be within 100 miles. A motion in that sense has been carried by one vote in the Colony's Parliament. Mr. D. W. Lardner-Burke, who raised the matter, said that some people wanted Salisbury to fill both roles, but that would cause over-centralization, and over-development of the city and great strain on accommodation, and to have two Governors, 10 or more Ministers, and all departmental heads in one place would be completely unworkable. No town of importance, except Gaborone, would be ruled out by this motion.

South and Central Africa

DR. MALAN, Prime Minister of the Union of South Africa, said last week at the annual congress of the Free State Nationalist Party that the United Nations had created unrest in Africa; that India had argued before that organization that the white man must quit Africa, and that the Union must insist on the transfer of the Protectorates to her by Great Britain within five years. Saying that H.M. Government hid behind the refusal of Africans to agree to that course, he mentioned that federation in Central Africa had been introduced despite almost unanimous opposition by Africans, and added: "That attitude has put further ground under our feet in regard to the Protectorates."

Nyasaland's First Election

Federal Regulations Published

NYASALAND is not to have separate federal constituencies. Regulations governing the election of four representatives—the Protectorate's first political election—state that the members will be representative of the whole country. Every voter will thus have ~~two~~ votes, but cannot cast more than one in favour of any candidate.

The first step towards preparing voters' rolls is application to the Governor by properly-constituted associations and organizations for recognition as constituent associations. Such applications must be made before next Monday (November 2), with a list of members.

The Governor must be satisfied that any such body was formed before September 3, 1953. Enrolment forms will then be completed by the members, who will sign a declaration in the presence of a returning officer. Twenty polling stations are to be set up throughout the Protectorate.

Franchise qualifications are as follows: citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies; minimum age 21; permanent residence for a total period of two out of the last three years; membership of a recognized constituent association; income, salary, or wage of at least £200 per annum or occupation of property worth £250; adequate knowledge of the English language; and ability to complete and sign the enrolment form unassisted.

Mr. R. M. M. King, chief returning officer, is responsible for preparing a voters' roll for each polling station. Candidates' nomination papers must be signed by at least 10 supporters. Every candidate must be qualified for enrolment as a voter. The elections will take place on the same day as in Southern and Northern Rhodesia.

Coffee is the only article in world trade that is to-day at its peak. Nearly all other commodities have fallen back to the pre-Korean war levels.—Mr. Charles Schuman, president of the European Committee of the United Merchants' Association.

I Read Each Issue From Cover to Cover

OF THE THOUSANDS of letters received each year, a surprisingly high proportion contain the statement: "I read each issue of East Africa and Rhodesia from cover to cover."

In that category of eager readers are many public and professional men, industrialists and traders, missionaries and miners, civil servants and farmers. Because they regard the paper with special friendliness, many go out of their way to tell us of news and happenings of which other publications are not informed. Thus, East Africa and Rhodesia often publishes exclusive news supplied by its own readers in token of their interest in the task we seek to achieve.

If that spirit animates people of such diverse interests, many others would surely derive similar pleasure and profit from the paper if they knew and read it as thoroughly.

Perhaps you are one of them. Shall we add your name to our subscription list? The Air Edition to East and Central Africa costs 70s.; the surface mail edition 30s., to any address.

Sir Gordon Munro's Resignation

Mrs. J. B. Ross's Acting Appointment

THE PRIME MINISTER of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, Sir Godfrey Huggins, made the following announcement yesterday:

"Acting on medical advice, the present High Commissioner for Southern Rhodesia in the United Kingdom, Sir Gordon Munro, who has been on sick leave since July 1, will be unable to accept appointment as Federal High Commissioner, as had been hoped and intended."

Sir Gordon Munro will accordingly relinquish his appointment as High Commissioner for Southern Rhodesia in the United Kingdom on October 31, by which date the External Affairs of the Federation will have been assumed as an exclusive subject by the Federal Government, and the post of High Commissioner for Southern Rhodesia will automatically lapse.

A new Federal High Commissioner will be appointed in due course. Meanwhile Mrs. J. B. Ross, the present Deputy High Commissioner for Southern Rhodesia, will be appointed to act as Federal High Commissioner.

U.K. High Commissioner to Federation

The Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations has appointed Mr. I. M. R. MacLennan, at present United Kingdom High Commissioner in Southern Rhodesia, to be the first United Kingdom High Commissioner in the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, with effect from October 30.

Mr. MacLennan, who is 43 years of age, was educated at Hymers College, Hull, and Worcester College, Oxford. Before his appointment to Southern Rhodesia two years ago, he had served in Canada, South Africa, and in the Commonwealth Relations Office.

Medical Mission Work in E. Africa

DR. MARY GIBBONS said in a recent B.B.C. broadcast appeal for funds for Christian medical work in Africa:

"I first went to Africa over 32 years ago as a teacher, but there was so much illness among the children and their parents that it seemed that we were educating a dying race. So I came home, qualified as a doctor, and returned to do medical work in Tanganyika. I opened our hospital at Minaki 22 years ago to-day—with £3—and since then I never had a dull day."

"Africa is a vast continent. Think what it means to be ill when your nearest hospital is several days' journey away; and be thankful that you can ring up a doctor or pop round the corner to a surgery or a chemist. It is a very grim thing to be ill in the African bush. Nobody knows what to do for you and nearly everybody thinks that your illness is due to someone's evil spell. Probably your relations will drag you off to a forest clearing to have the illness drummed out of you."

"One day a man came to see me. All he needed was a course of Epsom salts. He lived many miles away, so I gave him a large bottle full to last for several weeks. That afternoon an orderly came running to my house and said: 'Come quickly, mama; a man is dying on the road.' I dashed off, and behold it was my friend of the Epsom salts, rolling in pain. Asked what was the matter, he said: 'Mama, one dose of that medicine did me so much good that I drank the whole bottle, so that I could be cured for ever.'

"Another time a boy, who had been a patient, came to me with 6d. in his hand and said: 'This is the first time in my life I have ever felt well, and this is the first money I have ever earned. I want it to go to help other people to feel well.'

"Governments all they can with their own hospitals, and they give grants to mission hospitals, but this provides only a fraction of what is needed. We want to spread our medical help more widely, and we want more maternity centres. £200 will build and equip a dispensary; it will enable five African mothers to have their babies in safety and comfort; and you can keep a woman in hospital for two days for the price of twenty cigarettes."

British M.P.s. on Kenya's Problems

Appreciation of African Advancement

IN A RADIO INTERVIEW in Nairobi, Mr. Charles Hobson and Mr. George Brown, two British members of Parliament, gave their views on some of Kenya's problems affecting Africans.

Answering questions prepared by the African Information Service announcer, Mr. John Gitonga, the M.P.s said that they had been greatly impressed during their brief visit by the advances made by Africans, especially in agriculture. "They had seen anybody they wished, met people of all tribes, many of them privately, and had had valuable conversations with them."

"Despite what we heard about Kenya in England," said Mr. Brown, "the greatest impression I shall take back is that so much is already being done here." Mr. Hobson remarked that he had been surprised by the mechanical ability of many African artisans, especially those working in the railway workshops.

Giving their views on the emergency, they said they thought the real answer was for people to get to understand each other better. Mr. Hobson said that in this very beautiful and rich colony" each race needed the others. He thought that some Africans were capable of holding quite important positions, and the matter was simply one of time. "They should be encouraged to assume responsibility."

Output of African Workers

Mr. Brown commented that the first stage in the process was in the field of African local government. The output of the African workers was lower than that of his British counterpart, but he had seen some workshops in which the African output was almost as good as that of the British workers. In that case the hours worked by Africans were lower than those in Britain.

Mr. Brown said that Africans would have to change over from a land-based economy to working for money wages. Until that happened the standard of living would have to be raised, partly by raising wages, which he thought too low, and partly by improving housing conditions and social services. Mr. Hobson said that African standards of output in industry and in agriculture would have to be raised at the same time. "We have seen the beginnings of this in Nyanza, where some of the farming was of a very high standard indeed," said Mr. Brown. He looked forward to the growth of a responsible and well-organized trade union movement to increase efficiency and raise living standards.

Asked whether he thought the Kikuyu land grievances were justified, Mr. Hobson said that as Africans were now living longer and increasing in numbers, there was bound to be a pressure on the land. It was a challenge which people in Britain had had to face. He pointed out that the Kikuyu were not the most hard pressed in this respect; parts of Nyanza were much more heavily populated.

Both the M.P.s agreed that much could be done by ending land fragmentation, opening up new land, and introducing better farming methods with Government assistance.

Letter to the Editor

Mr. Broadbent and Mr. Boyle

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA
SIR.—If any of your readers who saw Mr. Boyle's attack on me in your issue of October 22 will turn back to the previous issue to see what I actually wrote on the subject of the Sudan elections, they will find that I expressed none of the foolish opinions which Mr. Boyle has attributed to me. Psychiatrists, I think, call this mental condition "suggestionality," and it is known as "cotard" in the French dependencies.

Yours faithfully,
PHILIP BROADBENT

Southern Rhodesia's budget normally presented in April will be delayed until next July, according to the new Minister of Finance, Mr. Donald MacIntyre. In that month the Federal Government proposes to take over most of the territorial departments exercised with federal functions, and only it is to open the federal financial year.

Success of East Africa House Fostering Inter-Racial Understanding

WHEN MR ANDREW COHEN, Governor of Uganda, visited East Africa House in London last week,

V. G. Matthews, chairman of the club, said that when Sir Philip Mitchell had opened East Africa House in September, 1950, he had expressed the hope that the standards of a West End club would be maintained whilst at the same time a home from home would be found for East Africans. Mr. Matthews continued:

"The general committee in administering East Africa House has consistently followed this precept. We have always attempted to ensure that the club afforded the maximum of physical and spiritual solace to those sojourning in this country from overseas."

The club now has a membership approaching 1,600. All the East African territories are well represented, as are all those from Indian territories. In addition there are members from Nyasaland, the Rhodesias, Somaliland, and territories bordering the Persian Gulf. We have also many members from the United Kingdom among people who have East African connections, who desire to preserve their overseas friendships."

With the rapid expansion of membership it became clear that the original premises would prove inadequate, and subsequently, with funds provided by the East African Governments, the building premises at 38 Great Cumberland Place were acquired and reconstructed as part of the club. These premises were opened by Edward Twining earlier this year.

If the club is to be judged purely on a cash basis, I am afraid the financial Secretaries of the East African Governments would not regard the experiment as an unqualified success. A present debt has to be met from the revenues of East Africa every year. But an experiment of this kind cannot be judged solely in terms of cash. Its dividends are paid in tolerance, human understanding, and the mutual good, with that flows from the meeting of men of all races and territories in equal terms. In this view the dividends paid in that manner have been handsome. It is our policy to maintain and enhance those dividends, and with the help and understanding of people of East Africa I am sure we shall succeed."

Sir Andrew Cohen accepted honorary membership of the club, saying that he firmly believed in the club and that for which it stood.

Leslie Hale on Driving Charge and Disqualification for a Year

MR. LESLIE HALE, Socialist MP for Oldham West since 1950 and for Oldham from 1945 until that date, was fined £20 with five guinea costs at Marlborough Street police court, London, W.C., last Friday for being in charge of a car in Oxford Street early that morning while under the influence of drink. He was disqualified from driving for a year.

Mr. Hale, a solicitor, pleaded guilty, saying: "It is a serious charge, and I ought to have more sense."

A police constable testified that finding Mr. Hale "slumped over the steering wheel of his stationary car, he had struggled him with difficulty, and that when I asked Mr. Hale if he had staggered and fallen over the bonnet. A doctor had later certified his unfitness to be in charge of a car."

Mr. Hale said that he agreed with the police evidence except the reference to falling over the bonnet of the car. He had driven for 36 years, and perhaps covered 700,000 miles. He could claim a very good record. He had had little sleep for two or three nights, and a bad cold for some time. Thinking that he had been up late to take a glass of wine, he had stopped his car at the side of the road, switched off the engine, and tried to rest, and he was sleeping when the constable came along. He was still half asleep when he awoke.

The magistrate said when imposing the fine and disqualification: "Your frankness does you credit, but it is a very serious charge and the gravity is not lessened by the position of the person against whom it is brought."

Mr. Hale, who visited Kenya some time ago with Dr. Brenner Brockway, is associated with him in a number of organizations. He is treasurer of the Congress of Peoples against Imperialism.

ObituaryAir Chief MarshalSir Robert Brooke-PophamFormer Governor of Kenya

AIR CHIEF MARSHAL SIR ROBERT BROOKE-POPHAM, G.C.B., K.C.B., G.C.G., D.S.O., M.C., A.F.C., who died in hospital in this country last week at the age of 72, was Governor of Kenya from 1937 to 1939, resigning the appointment to return to duty with the Royal Air Force.

Lord Harlech, then Mr. Ormsby-Gore, while Secretary of State for the Colonies had been seriously concerned about a successor to Sir Joseph Byrne in Kenya, and his selection of one of the strongest personalities in the R.A.F. was regarded as a happy choice. He went quietly to work to prepare Kenya for an independence from Ethiopia.

"Brookham," as he was widely known, had ability, vision, enterprise, tact, persuasiveness and determination, and he quickly brought harmony to a sadly disunited Kenya, for he was a good conciliator. He had small regard for ceremony, was an excellent horseman, and lover of the country, and he made no secret of his conviction that practical Christianity offered the only sure solution of East Africa's problems.

Career

He had been commissioned in the Oxfordshire Light Infantry in 1898, and had, in 1911, obtained the 10th pilot's certificate issued by the Royal Aero Club. Seconded to the Air Battalion of the Royal Engineers, he transferred to the R.E. on its formation, and was one of the first six British pilots to cross the German lines in Flanders in 1914.

In the Royal Air Force he was successively Director of Research, Commandant of the Staff College, A.O.C.-in-C. of the Fighting Area of the Air Defence of Great Britain, A.O.C.-in-C. in Iraq, Inspector-General of the R.A.F., and A.O.C.-in-C. in the Middle East. He was the first airman to become Commandant of the Imperial Defence College, and he had much to do with the Empire air training schemes in Canada, South Africa and Southern Rhodesia.

As C-in-C. in the Far East when Malaya fell to the Japanese, he was the subject of much criticism, against which he was defended by Sir Winston Churchill and Lord Trenchard. His dispatch, when published in 1948, showed serious deficiencies in the quantity and quality of equipment at his disposal; the command had, for instance, no tanks and only 148 first-line aircraft.

Sir Robert, whom Kenyans remember with affection, had played rugby and polo, had been a well-known point-to-point rider, was an amateur archaeologist, and was keenly interested in farming. He is survived by Lady Brooke-Popham, a son and a daughter.

Mr. Max Danziger

MR. MAX DANZIGER, who died in Southern Rhodesia last week at the age of 67, was Minister of Finance in the Colony from 1942 to 1946. Born in the Cape Province, he was educated in the Union, but went to Southern Rhodesia as a young man. Starting as a lawyer in Gwelo, he extended his practice to Salisbury. He was one of Southern Rhodesia's early M.P.s, after the grant of responsible government.

DR. J. H. BARTLETT, who has died suddenly in Kisumu, Kenya, joined the Colonial Service in 1932. After military service from 1939-43, he became president of the Mombasa division of the British Medical Association in 1952.

Mr. Amery's Visit in Central AfricaMay Save South Africa by Its Example

THE RT. HON. L. S. AMERY, who recently revisited the Union of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia, thus concluded two articles in the Daily Telegraph:

"The franchise in Southern Rhodesia is limited. Only a few hundred Africans in Elgin, and of these barely half have taken the trouble to register. There is plenty of social apartheid, as well as an industrial colour bar in many occupations. But these things have all worked, on the whole, not on any ideological or quasi-religious theory, but on a reasonable give-and-take acceptance of the realities of the racial relationship."

The result is obvious to the casual observer: that the African in Southern Rhodesia looks happy, and is frank and friendly in his bearing, very unlike, in this respect, the African in the great centres of the Union.

"Meanwhile, the policy in the major Quaker reserves and in the present British Protectorates could increasingly, on apartheid principles, be brought closer to that of Nyasaland and Northern Rhodesia."

It is not too much to say that the best hopes of averting disaster in the Union depend very largely on the measure of success achieved by the new Central Africa. By this I mean not only its moral success in solving the problem of racial, political, economic, cultural, and social, but also its actual material success in attracting capital, building up industry, and, not least, in attracting European immigration, and so proving that the measure of partnership conceded, both in the central and local Governments, can mean the strengthening and not the overthrow of European civilization.

"Central Africa may yet save itself by its exertions and its wisdom, and save the Union by its example."

Men of Ill-Will at Work

IN A CONTRIBUTION to Truth under the title "Men of Ill-Will at Work," Mr. H. Wynn Jones has considered, the harm likely to be done in Central Africa by the recently formed Confederate Party, this precious collection of malcontents, cynically using the title "democratic."

The article says:

"Maybe some of those who feel—and they are not an insignificant number—that blacks marching forward on one side of the fence can keep pace with whites marching on the other side more effectively than all marching along together without a fence will so forget their sense of responsibility as to back Denby Young, gained-Huggins."

"The words of Mr. Godfrey Huggins in his farewell speech as Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, after nearly a generation of devoted service, must be recognized as the voice of sanity, even of conscience: 'To introduce racial politics into this country,' he said, 'will be the end of Southern Rhodesia and the end of our founder's dream.' As the Confederate Party stands for the general election, then all other parties should combine to fight them."

"If it is vain hope that among those in the territories who profess and call themselves Christians there can be found enough men of high purpose to lead and inspire their fellows in the spirit of true Christianity towards a goal of genuine spiritual as well as economic partnership?"

"There are men in this country and in Africa, white as well as black, who have confused the pulpit with the soap-box, splendid pulpit with a ghastly nightmare. Their paths lead to chaos. The alternative path is obvious to all but the wilfully blind. Let me hope nothing happens to dull human vision still further in British Central Africa."

Governor and Political Speeches

THE CHAIRMAN of the Confederate Party in Northern Rhodesia, Mr. John Gaunt, has asked the Governor for an undertaking that, as the Queen's representative, he will remain outside the political arena during the forthcoming general election. The request was made because Sir Gilbert Rennie was present at a banquet in Ndola at which Sir Godfrey Huggins, Prime Minister of the Federal State, attacked the racial policy of the Confederate Party. Mr. Gaunt emphasized that such speeches were never made in the presence of the Queen, and contended that the Governor, as Her Majesty's representative, should require assurances that there will be no political references at functions which he attends.

Resistance to Mau Mau Is Growing Nairobi A Gangster Town, Says General Erskine

"WE ARE GOING TO HAVE SOME SET-UP in the Aberdarens on a big scale," General Sir George Erskine told a Press conference in Nairobi last week. "There were slow better police stations in the Kikuyu Reserve and better morale," he said, "the cordon of the West had been handed over to the police and the Kikuyu Guard, and every soldier was now in his post." The south-west side of Mount Kenya was the worst area, and some of the Kikuyu Guards had been broken by arm and disarmed.

The spirit of Major General Mau Mau was growing, though not so greatly as could be desired. Nairobi, a gangster town, was essentially a police problem, and he was anxious to withdraw troops as soon as possible.

Bullets Will Not End Problem

"I do not believe that bullets will finish this problem," General Erskine declared, "although forceful measures are necessary to obtain respect for law and order." Harmony on a long-term basis had to be achieved. There was no danger, that frustration and impatience might lead to rash actions. The emergency would continue for some time, but tension would be removed eventually.

During the first year of the emergency 24 Europeans and Asians and 704 Africans were killed by terrorists, and 451 of all races wounded. The security forces killed 2,208 terrorists and wounded 699. Prisoners taken by the security forces, including arrests and captures, numbered 138,235; of whom 87,045 were released, and 51,307 tried.

In the three weeks ended October 11 security forces killed 287 terrorists and captured 148. A further 96 terrorists surrendered. In the same period one African member of the security forces and 10 civilians were killed and four wounded.

Last Week's Casualties

Last week 103 Mau Mau were killed and 22 captured. One European was wounded and four Africans were killed and four wounded.

In the course of a three-day operation in the Fort Hall district by members of the King's African Rifles and the Kikuyu Home Guard, 26 terrorists were killed and four suspects detained. Several of the dead were members of Kenya Army of Independence fighters.

A patrol of the King's African Rifles detained 16 Mau adherents, including four wanted chief and one wanted civil policeman.

On Sunday 17 terrorists were killed and two men and three women captured near Fort Hall while engaged in an oath-taking ceremony.

Four African women found in possession of ammunition were arrested in the South Nyeri district.

Banasio Kakangara, who was killed in Nairobi by terrorists last week, was the son of Chief Lukai, who was murdered during the Laikipia massacre in March. Kakangara's body was found in a sack at the back of his van in a main road. He had been strangled.

Three Africans have been arrested on suspicion of complicity in the attack on Baricho Mission. Two African nuns who were listed as having died in hospital it is believed that all the terrorists who made the attack have been killed.

On a farm in the Maro Meru area five Kikuyu herd boys who have been missing since October 11 have been found strangled.

The home of Mr. J. G. Sullivan, a farmer in the Nyeri district, was ransacked in his absence.

Two Kikuyu guards and one labourer on a European farm south of Rumuruti have been abducted by terrorists.

During a house-to-house search in Nairobi specially trained officers discovered important documents. Six screening teams under the direction of Colonel T. Henfrey, detained 134 men headed by the police. Large sums of money were discovered during a search of Kikuyu women and children by women police officers, some having nearly £100.

The appointment of Deputy Commander-in-Chief in East Africa will take place at the beginning of December, when Lieutenant-General Sir Alexander Cameron, who became G.O.C. in East Africa in October, 1951, and Deputy Commander-in-Chief last August, will return to the United Kingdom. Major-General G. D. G. Heyman has been appointed Chief of Staff and Colonel G. A. Rimbault will be his deputy.

Improved Information Services

In order to improve the information work in the Kikuyu, Embu and Meru Reserves of Kenya Mr. J. H. Reiss has been seconded for six months to operate mainly from Nyeri, spending most of his time in the reserves. An announcement from the Information Department in Nairobi states:

"Every endeavour has been made through radio, Press, pamphlets, booklets, loud-speaker vans, and other means to keep the Kikuyu, Embu and Meru fully informed of the facts of the situation and to direct their minds away from Mau Mau doctrines. The provincial information officer already stationed in Nyeri, Mr. H. L. Stricker, will assist Mr. Reiss in the intensive information drive, and it is proposed to appoint temporary information officers in most districts of the Central Province. One is already operating in Embu."

"The purpose of the increased information drive is twofold—to improve the methods of assessing the effects of the information material already put out, making any changes that are necessary, and strengthening the existing means of disseminating information."

The special correspondent of The Times who is revisiting East Africa, telegraphed from Arusha:

"The Tanganyika Government has recently announced that it intends to register Kikuyu women. This may lead to voluntary exodus, as it did when the registration of Kikuyu men was enforced earlier."

"In the Arusha and Moshi areas, as in the Kenya Highlands, African tribes and white settlers dwell side by side. The tribes are multiplying because of the healthy climate and good food. European settlement acts as a barrier to their expansion. Thus agricultural grievances build up. In Arusha and Moshi events have taken the tragic course that they have in Kenya, but feelings run high and the utmost forethought and tact are needed in dealing with them."

A Wise Trail, my Friend

FAMOUS FOR MORE THAN SIXTY YEARS

Livingstone Statue in Kensington

Unveiling by Colonial Secretary.

MR. OLIVER LINTELTON, Secretary of State for the Colonies, said when he unveiled a statue of David Livingstone last Thursday at the Royal Geographical Society in Kensington Gore:

"The 19th Century was an age of great men; and foremost among those historic figures who epitomized the heroic virtues of their age stands David Livingstone."

"This Scottish missionary unlocked the door of the African continent and opened a new page in its history. His remarkable journey across Africa undertaken on foot, with only a few African companions, and in the face of unimaginable hardships, led the countries of Europe to open up an unknown continent and laid bare before the world all the horrors of the slave trade."

"All the aspects of Livingstone's life work combine to forward our great humanitarian purpose. By penetrating the vast and unknown lands of Central Africa he brought the word of God to the African people; he opened the way to trade and to the civilizing influences which followed; he exposed and attacked the two dark scourges which overshadowed the people—the slave trade and the relentless tribal wars, with all their toll of tragedy and human suffering."

Devotion of African Companions

"All here will know of the love he inspired in the Africans and of the devotion with which his African companions carried his body through unknown and hostile country to the tomb to lie at last with his countrymen in Westminster Abbey."

To-day, 80 years after his death, the link still lingers through which he passed in the 20 years between 1855 and 1873—Angola, Mozambique, the Belgian Congo, Northern Rhodesia, Nyasaland, and Tanganyika—are each moving forward toward nationhood in the great and noble African continent."

"We who have inherited the task of helping the African people in their forced march must only try in humility to follow the example of patience, tolerance, humanity, and dedication that his life sets us."

"Before I unveil this statue in his memory, it can do no better than to recall to you those words in which Lord Curzon eulogized David Livingstone's claim to lasting fame at this society's celebrations in 1913, of the centenary of his birth: 'An missionary,' said Lord Curzon, 'he was the sincere and zealous servant of God. As an explorer he was the indefatigable servant of science. As a conqueror of the slave trade he was the fiery servant of humanity.'

"Most of the initial cost of the memorial has been defrayed by Lord Gates, the remainder coming from a memorial fund set up 50 years ago which maintains the well-known Livingstone Memorial at Chitabvo, Northern Rhodesia. This is now in the care of the Northern Rhodesian Commission for the Conservation of Natural and Historical Monuments. Among those present was Dr. Hubert Wilson, grandson of Livingstone."

Mr. Hubert Wilson, grandson of Livingstone, and Mr. H. H. Jones is the sculptor.

Textiles for the African Market

THE LANCSHIRE SHOULD EXPERIMENT with a particular cloth especially made for the East African customers as recommended by the textile team which recently visited the territories under the leadership of Mr. J. D. Campbell. Revealing this at a Cotton Board conference in Harrogate, Mr. Campbell suggested that the fact that the cloths had been specially designed should be printed on the selvedge in Swahili, together with a statement that the colours were fast. He added that the industry had not yet considered the idea. He did not propose that Lancashire should try to recapture the market for the cheapest materials, such as Japan supplied, but that an attempt should be made to secure a share in the demand for better qualities. Competition had to be met from Japan, India, and the Continent. Emphasizing the need for frequent visits to the territories by manufacturer's representatives, Mr. Campbell said that it was necessary to impress on the minds of Africans that "Made in Britain" guaranteed good quality.

ParliamentColonial Topics in ParliamentConstitutional Changes in N. RhodesiaCOLONIAL TOPICS from edited Hansard at question time

In the Sommertown when N. Rhodesia resembled last week.

The official statement on the constitutional changes in Northern Rhodesia [already published in these pages] was repeated by the Colonial Secretary, who was then asked by MR. H. HUGHES (Lab.) what effect will these matters have on the peace of mind of Africans in the Federation, with a view to making them more satisfied with the change in the constitutional status which is being forced upon them?

MR. LYTTELTON: "This arbitrary award, if I may use the term, is designed to increase African representation and to give at this stage of the constitutional development of Northern Rhodesia a proper balance."

MR. JAMES GRIFFITHS (Lab.): "Having regard to the fact that this is a constitution for Northern Rhodesia in the new context of federation, and since what remains in the colony are mainly matters of interest to Africans, is this not an occasion on which much more substantial support might be given to the Africans?"

MR. LYTTELTON: "We had to try to strike a golden mean in these matters."

MR. GRIFFITHS: "Since it appears from reports that Africans will not be satisfied as it is proposed to have, further discussions with them."

MR. LYTTELTON: "It was impossible to get a measure of agreement between the two parties, and it will not surprise hon. members opposite that both parties are dissatisfied with my award."

MR. J. JOHNSON (Lab.): "What about the effect on the peace of mind of the white settlers? I gather that Sir Roy Welensky likes this as little as the Africans do."

MR. LYTTELTON: "That is true. The awards as often happens with compromises is unsatisfactory to both sides. That may or may not encourage one to think that it is the right settlement."

Intimidation Used by Agitators in Nyasaland

MR. LYTTELTON made the following statement on the recent disturbances in Nyasaland:

"The recent disorders began on the night of August 18. A European, from whose orchards there had been several thefts, set a watch of four Europeans and three Africans. The watch caught two Africans out of a party of six who were stealing fruit but were forced to release them when a crowd collected. Next morning a large crowd at the estate office demanded the release of the two Africans, who, although they had been rescued by their fellows, were rumoured to have been murdered by the Europeans. The police were obliged to use force to disperse the crowd and one African was killed."

"Subsequently a succession of disturbances and acts of hooliganism, some small and some more serious, occurred over areas of five out of the eight districts of the Southern Province. The direct cause in each case was traceable to a few persons who incited the villagers by exhortation and intimidation to break the law. Particular efforts were directed to undermining and attacking loyal Native authorities, destroying their courts, and burning or looting their property."

"In a typical incident, itinerant agitators would arrive in a village and call a meeting to condemn Government laws, as typified by local Native authorities. Police sent to disperse a meeting would find their passage obstructed by road blocks, and on arrival at the village would find that, although the agitators had passed on, the crowd remained very much worked up and aggressive, without regard for tear smoke, batons, and in some cases fire-arms, would have to be used to disperse the meeting."

"Noticeable throughout the disorders was the widespread use of intimidation and threats of violence. And the agitators' policy not be implemented by the use of considerable threat and apprehension, resulting in the movement of bands of hooligans armed with sticks, spears, bows and arrows and knife-knives."

"During the disorders, from August 18 to September 18, the following casualties were reported: rioters: Africans, one killed, 72 injured (nine seriously); security forces, eight Europeans and nine Africans slightly injured; two hundred and thirteen persons have been convicted for offences connected with the disturbances."

"The disturbances appear to have arisen from a complex of circumstances, not one of which can be singled out as the main cause. There was undoubtedly a disregard of custom, though diminishing opposition to certain progressive legislation which had been introduced since the war, such as deals with soil conservation, cattle dipping, etc., tree-limits, and village sanitation. The administration of these measures has tended to make the Native authorities unpopular with their people, especially in those areas such as the Cholo district where they do not hold a position sanctioned by the tribal tradition."

"In the Cholo district where the disorders broke out, there had for some time been a campaign of agitation directly designed to foster land grievances. This area, which was virtually uninhabited when the first large freehold alienations were made to Europeans in the 1890's, is now densely populated, and Africans, whose numbers have been augmented by the ingress of those seeking work as well as by natural increase, now have insufficient land for their needs."

Trouble Fomented by African Congress

"Many Africans have never become reconciled to the tenant system or to the fact that considerable areas held by Europeans under freehold are still undeveloped. These grievances have during the past 18 months been skilfully fomented and intensified by agitators, many of whom are known to be members or followers of the Nyasaland African Congress."

"Superimposed on this background has been the campaign launched by Congress in protest against federation. A Congress proclamation of April 6, advocating non-payment of taxes and disobedience to laws, was followed by widespread intimidation and misrepresentation calculated to fan the grievances of the rural African and to shake his confidence in his chief, the Government and the European population. The cumulative effect of all this was to produce among the population a state of alarm and uncertainty which the activities of agitators brought to a head in the recent disturbances."

"I am glad to say that the Protectorate has been quiet since September 18. I understand that the Nyasaland African Congress has wisely decided to call off its campaign of non-co-operation with the Government, and it seems likely that further trouble may now be avoided."

MR. J. JOHNSON (Lab.) asked the Colonial Secretary if he would send a commission to inquire into the cause of the disturbances.

MR. LYTTELTON: "The disturbances have already been investigated by a commission appointed by the Governor, with the Chief Justice as chairman and Mr. C. E. Snell and Mr. K. E. Mposa, an African M.L.C., as members. I expect to receive a copy of the report shortly."

MR. JOHNSON: "Does the Minister agree that the large number of disturbances have caused anxiety well beyond the confines of the territory itself? In fact, there is enormous anxiety in this country. Since he has finally agreed to consider the case for an all-party commission to go out to Kenya to investigate the situation there, why cannot he do similarly in this smaller territory of Nyasaland?"

Commission of Inquiry

MR. LYTTELTON: "I am going to study the report of this commission before making up my mind one way or another."

MRS. R. W. WILSON: "Is the Minister satisfied that the terms of reference were wide enough? The area in which the disturbances took place has been for quite a long period a trouble spot in Nyasaland. It was called a storm centre by Sir Sidney Abrahams, who undertook an inquiry six or seven years ago. Is the Minister satisfied that these very narrow terms of reference of a local commission of inquiry are really adequate to meet the troubles of Nyasaland at the present time?"

MR. LYTTELTON: "The hon. lady must judge for herself whether the terms of reference of the commission were unnecessarily restricted. They are as follows: 'To inquire into the disturbances of November 18, 1952, and connected disturbances, to inquire into the cause of such disturbances, and to make any recommendations which they may think fit.'

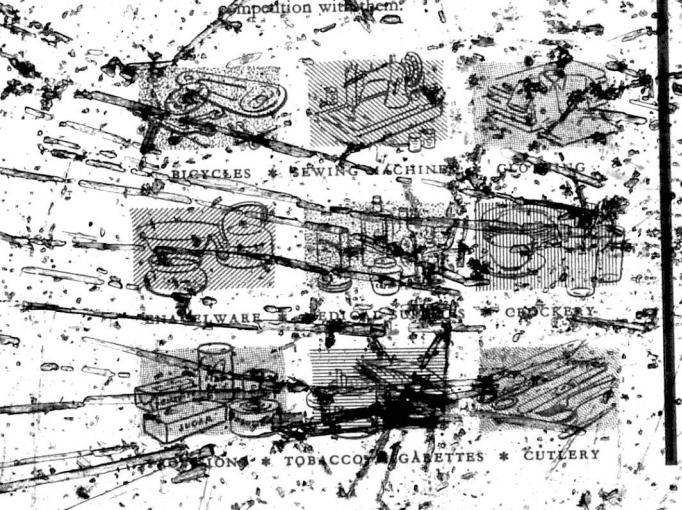

MR. L. HALE (Lab.) asked the number of casualties, by race and tribe, in the fighting in Kenya to the latest convenient date, stating the number of inquests held, the number of prisoners taken and released, the number tried, and the number awaiting trial.

MR. LYTTELTON: "Total casualties arising from the Emergency, killed and wounded: Europeans, 57; Asians, 24; Kikuyu, 3,743; other Africans, 281. The total number of those arrested is 138,235. Of these 82,053 were released, 53,307 have been tried and 865 are awaiting trial. The total number of inquests held is not readily available."

MR. HALE: "Is it not a fact that very few have been held? In face of these appalling figures, will the Minister make a new effort at conciliation? Is he not aware that many of the extreme right wing elements in Kenya even are now supporting proposals that some efforts should be made to release African leaders and use their mediation to try to restore peace and happiness in Kenya? Surely the longer this goes on the more difficult it gets and the worse and more difficult the cure."

Mr. LYTTELTON: "The hon. member is quite wrong in saying that the situation is getting worse and more difficult to cure; I would recommend him to read very carefully the Governor's speech."

SIR H. WILLIAM (Contd.): "Will the Minister analyse the figures to make sure how many people were killed on each side, because all the Africans have been lumped together and many of them were on the respectable side and not on the revolutionary side?"

Mr. S. SILVERMAN: "When the hon. gentleman says that matters are getting progressively better, will he bear in mind the ancient and honoured warning against the belief that one can secure peace only by creating a desert?"

SIR HALE: "Is the Minister aware that the overcrowded state of the reserve is making very much worse indeed and that the drift of population into towns and the farms is making the economic situation still more difficult?"

Mr. LYTTELTON: "I should like to assure the Kadiyu Reserve is extremely large and that a very large number of other things are happening in Kenya to falsify the hon. member's good impression."

Mr. SHEPHERD (Continued): "The value of Japanese textiles entering the Colony increased during the first six months of this year over the corresponding period for the first six months of 1952."

Mr. LYTTELTON: "The new values are approximately £33,000 and £31,500,000, respectively. These figures include imports for re-export."

Mr. J. GRIMOND (Lib.) asked the Colonial Secretary if he would review the censorship regulations in Colonial territories with a view to removing the censorship from all literature which did not directly incite to lawlessness."

Mr. LYTTELTON: "No, sir. I am not prepared to interfere with the right which Colonial Governments have long had to decide what literature should be banned in their territories."

Mr. GRIMOND: "While I am not asking the Minister to interfere in detail with Colonial Governments, will he not suggest that the banning of literature such as Marx's 'Theses of Surplus Value,' which can hardly incite to violence, will in the long run do nothing except give fuel for Communist propaganda?"

Mr. LYTTELTON: "I quite agree that that particular publication to which the hon. member refers is not very healthy. But I think it would be inappropriate for me to intervene."

Somaliland Protectorate Penal Code.

Mr. R. SORENSEN (Lab.) asked for particulars of the Bill dealing with a new penal code in the Somaliland Protectorate, the reasons advanced by members of the Advisory Council in rejecting the proposals, and what were the ratios and conditions obtaining in Somaliland prisons?

Mr. LYTTELTON: "The Bill is one of a number designed to replace Indian Criminal Law and Procedure in the Protectorate by enactments based on English law. The opposition in the Protectorate Advisory Council to its introduction was not supported by reasoned arguments, and I can only attribute it to dislike of innovation as such. The ratios and conditions in Somaliland prisons are laid down in the Prison Rules of 1953, of which I will have a copy sent to the hon. member."

Mr. SORENSEN: "If the Minister satisfied that those ratios are adequate to maintain fair health in the prisons?"

Mr. LYTTELTON: "Blank say."

Mr. SORENSEN asked for what extent the desert had encroached on Kenya in the last 20 years.

Mr. OLIVER LYTTELTON replied: "No true deserts without vegetation exist in Kenya except in the Northern Province, and there is no evidence that these wastes are spreading. Semi-desert, which supports a certain amount of scrub, bush and grass, is widespread throughout the Colony below the height of 3,500 ft, but within this area the vegetation varies greatly from place to place and from year to year because of differing types of soil and erratic rainfall. No scientific records or positive figures are available to show that any general permanent change is taking place; the average rainfall over the last 20 years has shown a slight increase over the previous average."

"These semi-desert regions are mainly pastoral, and in many localities nest permanent water supplies the vegetation has shown a change for the worse because of heavy over-stocking during dry weather. Efforts are being made to repair this damage by reducing the number of livestock, by enforcing grazing controls and by providing fresh water supplies; but no rapid improvement can be expected."

"Elsewhere there are extensive marginal areas under agriculture where during the last 20 or 30 years greater demands have been made on the land and serious devastation has developed, both through over-stocking and primitive methods of cultivation. These areas are mainly hilly; rainfall is variable, and the soils are easily eroded. Though again no scientific records are available, personal observation has led many people to conclude that the climate has changed for the worse and that soil and temperatures have risen."

"These conditions seem to be the inevitable result of the increasing denudation of the soil, and they can be cured only by a great improvement in African methods of land management. This is to say that the energies of the Department of Agriculture and the African Land Utilization and Settlement Board have been devoted since the war, and with some success, to the problem of inducing primitive peoples to abandon

"By the process of inducing primitive peoples to abandon their traditional ways and adopt good farming methods as yet been solved, and in some areas very limited progress has been made."

East Africa Central Assembly Great Debt to British Taxpayers.

THE EAST AFRICA LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY has asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies to bring all possible pressure to bear on the Kenyan Government which undertook to participate in the international campaign against the desert locust but have failed to fulfil their promises. The Finance Committee said that the British Governments in East Africa could have contributed £24m. from the inception of the scheme until the end of 1953 out of a total of just under £34m.

Mr. H. R. Fraser emphasized the debt of the territories to the British taxpayer, who had financed the start of most of the services under the control of the Assembly. "H.M. Government could not be expected to subsidize research in East Africa for ever, and the territories must now expect to pay their own scientists from their own resources, and that would be possible only if there was an increased production of everything."

Mr. FRASER spoke of the very generous assistance given by the Government. About £3m. a year was now being spent by the High Commission, almost one-third on personal emoluments, one-third on items of an extraordinary nature, and one-third on normal running expenses. Referring to claims that the Salaries Commission would recommend further increases in pay, he sounded a warning emphasizing that salaries must fall.

Sir Robert Scott, Administrator of the High Commission, spoke of the illegal immigration last year of a subversive agent with the flamboyant name of 'Pedigree polyphemus' the correct name for the rust disease which had caused such extensive damage to maize in West Africa.

"Up to last year Puccinia polyphemus had not been known in East Africa. Immediate action was clearly required if East Africa was not to be threatened with the same kind of losses as West Africa suffered since 1949 when the disease first appeared." Accordingly the Plant Breeding Committee got down to the problem straight away. They decided there should be an allocation of responsibility for ensuring that East Africa should be saved from the major disaster which might result from a further spread of this pest.

The East African Agriculture and Forest Research Organization at Mombasa had been instructed to obtain disease resistant strains from Central America where this rust had been known for some time, to undertake a rapid series of tests in East Africa, and then cross-breed the strain with East African strains considered most suitable for the production of a hybrid."

Kenya's Agricultural Show

MR. L. G. TROOP, bursar of Wardswoth Agricultural College in Hampshire, who earlier this year published a report on Kenya agriculture, and recently visited Northern Rhodesia, opened the annual show of the Royal Agricultural Society of Kenya, in Mitchell Park, Nairobi, last week. The Colony was, he said, one of Africa's favoured places, and he hoped that in 30 or 20 years the Highlands would be fully developed and so become the larder of East Africa and a demonstration to African farmers. The show was fully representative, and the number of pedigree cattle entered was double that of last year. Commercial concerns reported good business, one company booking orders on the first day for tractors worth £15,000. Buyers of pedigree livestock were present from many British and foreign territories in Africa.

I.S. Funds for Port Improvement

Works at Mombasa and Tanga

£44M. is to be spent on port improvements at Mombasa and Tanga; half will be provided on loan by the Government of the U.S.A.

A White Paper (Cmd. 965) containing the text of letters exchanged between the Governments of the U.K. and U.S.A. shows that £4,040,000 will be spent on extensions to the port of Mombasa and £40,000 on the use of Tanga.

Mombasa is to have two new berths at a cost of £2.5m.; they will add 1,130 ft. to the deep water accommodation, the item including the quay wall, with foundations and back fill, a storage shed, port cranes, and supporting road and rail connections.

£1m. will be needed for new storage facilities, including the construction of four new sheds, 150 ft. by 420 ft. each, open storage stacking areas, and the necessary reparation and construction of road and rail connections; £50,000 for the construction of 720 ft. of new lighterage wharf and two sheds 140 ft. by 300 ft., with additional stacking grounds and road and rail connections; £260,000 for the construction of new dock yard and mechanical shops; and £10,000 for rehabilitation of the oil quay and cased oil wharf and adjustments necessitated by the construction of berths 9 and 10.

First Phase

The first phase of the work, including the construction of the two new berths, the lighterage berth, and the new storage facilities, is being started, and should be completed by June, 1955.

Of the £740,000 estimated to be needed for Tanga, £50,000 will be required for the extension of the lighterage wharf to 350 ft., £200,000 to rebuild 600 ft. of existing wharf, £120,000 for the construction of a 30,000 sq. ft. storage shed, £100,000 for the construction of a marshalling yard and other wharf facilities; and £20,000 for shipways and marine and mechanical workshops.

Financial assistance by the U.S.A. is stated to have the purpose of increasing the development of the supply of essential raw materials by eliminating port congestion and providing for greater port capacity than at present levels of shipments and allow for their increase.

It is the judgment of the Mutual Security Agency that the additional port, storage and ancillary facilities to be afforded by the programmes will substantially contribute to the accomplishment of the purposes of Section 14 of the Mutual Security Act of 1947, as amended.

The Mutual Security Agency is to loan to the Government of the United Kingdom, from the U.S. 1948 United States portion of the counterpart account, up to £2,200,000 for the port of Mombasa development programme and up to £37,000 for the port of Tanga development programme.

Interest is to be at the rate of 5% per annum.

Two New Liners

TANTALLON CASTLE, a new 7,400-ton Union-Castle ship, was launched at Harland and Wolff's Belfast yard on Thursday by Mrs. S. Barr, wife of the general manager of the line. The seventh vessel to be constructed by the company since the war, and the third to bear this name in the history of the company, the new cargo ship has eight single-birth and two double-bunk cabins. She will be employed between the U.K. and South Africa. Another new vessel which will operate on the same route is the turbine steamship CLAN STEWART, of 8,450 tons gross and 11,300 tons deadweight, built for Clan Line Steamers Ltd. She has accommodation for 12 passengers.

Labour Party Troubles

BRIAGARDEN ALFRED RALSTON, a vice-president of the Rhodesia Labour Party, has resigned from the party. This follows the recent resignations of Mr. W. H. Eastwood, and the only Parliamentary representative, and Mr. F. D. Lacey, of Salisbury, who considerably increased the Labour poll in the recent Salisbury by-election, 'won' by the United Party. Two hundred ex-members of the Union branch have formed a branch of the Confederate Party.

NEWS ITEMS IN BRIEF

Southern Rhodesian general election is now expected to be held on January 20.

An East and Central African Hydrological Conference opened at Nairobi on Monday.

Immigrants into Northern Rhodesia in the first seven months of this year numbered 4,512.

The Federal Party here has 13 branches in Northern Rhodesia, and others are being formed.

East African Commissioners of Police are meeting in conference in Dar es Salaam this week.

East African branch of the Royal Army Medical Corps Regimental Association is being formed.

Two-thirds of the crops in the Erigave district of the Somaliland Protectorate have been destroyed by locusts.

The latest date for posting surface mail in London to ensure delivery by Christmas in Portuguese East Africa, Nyasaland and Rhodesia via Beira is October 29. For Tanganyika and Zanzibar the latest date is now given as November 4.

Rhodesian All-African Convention

The Southern Rhodesian All-African Convention decided last week by 71 votes to one to rescind its declaration of non-co-operation with the Government in consequence of its opposition to the federal plan. It elected a committee of four to watch over the rights of Africans in the Federation.

"You are about the only town that has not made application to become the Southern Rhodesian capital," said Sir John Kennedy, the Colony's Governor, during a farewell visit to Fort Victoria. Praising its spectacular post-war progress, which he thought unequalled in Southern Rhodesia, Sir John said that its European population had more than doubled in seven years, and it was about to become a municipality.

Kenya Settlers beat the Officials in a cricket recently in a three-day match. The win, by six wickets, came with only five minutes in hand after their first innings. The Officials made 229 and 179 (H. G. Claude Belgrave scored on both occasions with 60 and 53), and the Settlers made 228 and 178 for four (R. C. E. Mayers being run out at 22, T. M. Bell scoring 57 and D. G. Hunter 21 not out in the second innings).

That a flourishing colony of angelsharks exists somewhere in the East African coast, possibly near Malindi, is the opinion of Professor J. D. de Smidt, head of the Department of Ichthyology at Rhodes University, Grahamstown. He recently visited Kenya for a meeting of the Scientific Council for Africa, South of the Sahara, which discussed plans for an international expedition to discover the habits of the fish.

Two "Europeans" recently saw a meteor fall in Barotseland. Mr. I. M. Eldridge, district commissioner at Sesheke, saw a large blue ball of fire with a smaller, one trading behind it; he calculated that it fell about 80 miles north-west of Katima Lulilo, near the Angolan border. Mr. Ronald E. Shahin, an American hunter, was sitting beneath a tree with an African in the Senanga district when the meteor " streaked over the horizon." Three minutes after its disappearance came a loud rumble, causing the tree to shake.

In consequence of publishing a communiqué issued by the Nyasaland Government, the editor of the Nyasaland Times, Mr. D. G. Hess, has been charged with contempt of court on an application made by Mr. Lawrence Mapemba and Mr. Hartwell Solomon, two members of the Nyasaland African Congress, whose trial on allegations of possessing seditious documents and claim that their trial will be prejudiced by publication of the statement. The Chief Justice of Nyasaland reserved judgment when the case came before him last Saturday.

Kenya Legislature

When I visited the offices of Fort Hall I was very impressed with the number of young men who were operating in that area. They are daily in contact with an evil enemy. They are working under difficult conditions to re-establish confidence among people and law and order, and to defeat that enemy. That is what I saw in Fort Hall, we have, they got a very good team indeed. (Applause.) When we were there we were told by the administration that the evil men had gone to Nairobi. Now there is an exodus from Nairobi. Will these evil men who took back be swiftly apprehended and held under detention orders?

There are people in this country who should know better who have issued during the emergency these pamphlets dealing with various matters. What people in this country cannot understand is why such people are left in the emergency causing further disruption in people's minds by the issuing of these pamphlets.

Death Penalty for Civil Administration

In the service of members on this side the Council had been advised it should have stopped a large development of the Mau Mau movement when we advised members opposite to make the administration of the Mal Man oath a death penalty. We advised that first in November and moved it in Council in January. Eight months later we have had an emergency regulation in which what we asked for about eight or 10 months ago has been accepted!

It is important to grasp the vital initiative which is necessary as long as a large element of decision lies 2,000 miles away. (Applause.)

All members in this group except the member for Kisumu demanded the issue of the surrender leaflets, and with the result I moved in a public meeting in Nairobi. This is a responsibility which we must accept as well as the main opposition.

We never prosecuted the emergency with our faces turned forward; we have always tended to look over our shoulder. We ought to say: "These men are rebels, we are going to deal with them as hardly, as vigorously as efficiently as we can. We will support every loyalist to the utmost of our ability." But we will never cure the problem of the rebels as long as we are concerned with looking over our shoulder with the people of other countries are thinking.

We ought to be as ruthless as we can with the rebel and, having defeated the enemy, then turn—and not until then—to the task of reconstruction and rehabilitation. To attempt that task in the middle of a major attack upon the rebels blunts the weapon with which we are attacking. As long as we continue to shout about recognition and rehabilitation during the actual battle we shall provide the enemy with ammunition far, far better than they can supply.

"That is our fundamental error up to date in dealing with this emergency. Nobody imagines that this problem can be cured solely by the defeat of the enemy in the field. The first is to defeat the enemy on the battlefield, the second to start the arduous task of reconstructing and rehabilitating him."

Colonial Office Control

MR. CHANNAN SINGH: "The amendment makes the motion more unacceptable to me than it originally was. The Colonial Office interferes in our affairs much less than it should. I certainly do not agree that the powers which the Colonial Office now has should be transferred to local people, be they officials or non-officials."

MR. MITHU: "Although I agree with a number of the arguments advanced by the mover of this amendment, I would not support it because of the latter part which brings in constitutional matters. There should be no constitutional change until discussions have taken place. I do think the Government of this country have taken decisions without any unnecessary interference from the Colonial Office."

MR. COOKE: "I strongly oppose the amendment. I am sorry the hon. gentleman did not do me the courtesy of showing me a copy, nor did he say he was going to propose this amendment when I was speaking to him half an hour ago."

The implication is that the Secretary of State is holding on to the coat tails of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not believe it. I believe he is giving them every latitude if it is possible to give. It will be any fault, I believe it has been the lack of vigour at this end. I could not possibly support that amendment."

The CHIEF SECRETARY said that the Government could not accept the amendment because, like the motion, it was not true. Very great assistance had been rendered by the Secretary of State.

People loosely refer to the Colonial Office or the Secretary of State holding up things or doing something which they do not like. So long as the constitution remains as it is the eventual responsibility lies with Parliament. The Secretary of State is responsible to Parliament, and we here cannot put ourselves off into a completely watertight compartment. All we did there would be considerable disadvantages. It is because of the existing constitution that we have received the help we have from H.M. Government.

MR. MACONOCHE WELWOOD: "The motion does not ask for an alteration in the constitution. The amendment asks the Secretary of State to delegate more authority locally to members opposite, in point of fact."

Much has been said about the assistance which we receive from the United Kingdom, for which we are grateful. But it is sometimes over-stressed. The Mother Country is helped by her Dependencies. It is the responsibility of the U.K. to assist her children in their difficulties, and not a grudgingly given thing which we are lucky to get.

"We talk round and round the subject of this emergency and throughout the country everybody is discontented. Inevitably lay the blame on the shoulders of the Government to some extent, and so the I. But I know the ultimate responsibility is the perpetual political silly-shalying as to whether, if you take strong action, it will have political repercussions at home."

MR. NATBOO said: "In these days of swift communication with within a few days you can have as long a talk as you like with London, discussing the position, getting advice and assistance, it is untrue—and the non-European races will oppose it tooth and nail—to ask any more delegation of power to the local Government until and unless the non-official members on this side of the Council can convince us that we can get a fair go in all decisions of all the actions of this Colony."

Colonial Office Unjustified

THE MEMBER FOR AFRICAN AFFAIRS said: "The Member for Nairobi touched on what he described as the impact of politics in England on action and policy. Such a state of affairs can well arise in Kenya, and may well do so to the detriment of operations."

"During my short time in Nairobi, since I have had to deal with such matters as have to do with the Secretary of State, I have never had cause to complain. He has been sympathetic or unhelpful or has exercised any unnecessary delay in trying to help us and give us the maximum support possible. I believe he will continue to do so. This reflection put on him by the mover of the amendment is entirely unjustified."

MR. COWIE: "I think it unfortunate the way this debate has gone. The whole debate is not being frightfully constructive, and I do urge the mover of the motion not to press it to a division. I oppose both the amendment and the motion."

GROUP CAPTAIN BRIDGES: "On many occasions in this Council and outside I have raised the need for greater sense of urgency, more troops and more forces in the air, speedier action, greater realism. Had all the measures put forward by members on this side been adopted with reasonable speed, the end of the emergency would have been very much closer."

"The mover gave me the impression that he was implying a certain lack of courage with in the troops. I dissociate myself from any implication of that sort."

MR. COOKE: "There was no such implication. I was asking about what orders they got from the Commander-in-Chief; it was nothing to do with the troops themselves, but what the policies were."

GROUP CAPTAIN BRIDGES: "I am extremely glad to hear we hear that large numbers are now going out and will presumably back to the reserves. That is obviously going to add to the difficulties there, and probably provide resources for the rebels in the future. Government might at any time withdraw the facilities of rail travel; 1,500 have left today by rail. That could very well be stopped."

DR. HASSAN: "I am not supporting the motion because it is tantamount to a vote of no-confidence in the Government, and the amendment I equally do not support because, in addition to no confidence in the Government, it also suggests no confidence in the Secretary of State and the Colonial Office."

"It is going to take a very long time to deal with the present situation and the way, in my opinion, members on this side of the Council can help is by supporting the Government, sympathising with them, helping them with good suggestions and assisting them in the operational side and in the affairs of dealing with lawlessness."

THINGS WORTH DOING

Studying engine wear

Shell technicians gauge piston ring wear, not only by traditional methods of weight and measurement, but also by radio-active means. A piston ring is rendered radio-active. Then, at a Shell laboratory, it is fitted to a test engine and run under specialist care. Minute wear is shown by radio-activity in the lubricating oil. As wear of the ring increases, so activity mounts in the oil.

Experimental study of engine wear, by Shell research today, produces very practical, beneficial results for world transport tomorrow.

Of Commercial Concern

The hard fibre market is said by the quarterly review Fibre Fibres to be in better shape at present than at any time since it was overtaken by the collapse of prices 15 months ago. Stocks of fibre in the hands of consumers are no longer excessive, and the carry-over at the end of the year is not now estimated to be above 70,000 tons, or about 10,000 tons below earlier expectations. World output for 1953 is computed at 50,000 tons under last year's total, though there is no tendency for production in British East Africa to decline. There is no suggestion of any appreciable advance in prices, but "a further firming up of markets" is considered possible.

Exports from Ethiopia, including re-exports, for the year ended September, 1952, were valued at 112,000,000 Ethiopian dollars, compared with 10,400,000 dollars in the previous year. Imports were 111,800,000 (1951) 10,000 dollars, which accounted for 52.1% and oilseeds for 11.1% of the exports, while 37.8% of imports were cotton textiles.

Tea Auctions

At last week's auctions in London 722 packages of African teas were sold for an average price of 3s. 3d. per lb. against 1,105 packages averaging 3s. 3d. per lb. in the previous week. The highest price reached was 2s. 7d. per lb. for a consignment from Kenya.

Uganda has 800,000 bags of maize surplus to growers' requirements for last season's record crop. About half of this is sent to Tanganyika and Kenya, where drought has caused shortages. Kenya's share will be supplied on a replacement basis.

"Statistical Abstract, 1938-51," published by the Government of Tanganyika at 6d., gives 116 tables of statistical information covering a wide range of subjects.

Following the death of Mr. E. C. Ford, the company bearing his name is to be voluntarily liquidated, and the London representation of Messrs. Brown & Claperton Ltd., Blantyre, and Nyasa Tea Estates Ltd., Chilolo, Nyasaland, will henceforth be the concern of Messrs. Tozer, Kenstey & Millbourn, Ltd., whose staff will be joined by Mr. J. W. Benner, director of the E. C. Ford company.

The world maize crop for 1953 is now estimated by the U.S. Department of Agriculture at 5,630 million bushels, almost equal to last year's output. The all-time record was 6,000 m. bushels in 1948.

An increase in the basic price to the producer of maize and white millet in Tanganyika during 1953 from 3s. 10d. per 200 lb. exclusive of bag, has been announced by government.

Anyone owning explosives or fireworks in Kenya must declare them to the authorities by the end of this month, and any loss of these articles must be reported.

Riddoch Motors Report

RIDDOW MOTORS LTD., a company registered in Arusha, Tanganyika, after providing for depreciation and £1,650 for taxation, earned a profit of £39,169 in the year ended May 31st last, compared with £61,490 in the previous year. General reserve received £5,000, and a dividend of 7½% was paid, requiring £2,812, leaving a carry-forward of £1,000 against £7,728 brought in. The issued capital is £250,000 in ordinary stock of 10s. Revenue reserve stands at £44,083, and current liabilities at £86,056. Fixed assets are valued at £166,361, and current assets at £23,970.

The report states that business generally continued to show an increase on the previous year, but that a period of slack in the supply position in the U.K. caused a temporary flooding of the local market, with sharp competitive conditions and a certain amount of off-loading by competition. During the year the company's premises in Moshi were largely rebuilt.

The directors are Messrs. J. G. Riddoch (chairman), F. J. Blake (managing director), Andrew E. Bowes. The secretary is Mr. F. M. McNaughton.

The 12th annual general meeting was held in Arusha, Tanganyika, on October 12.

Kyanite Production in KenyaDr. B. N. Templerley's Memoir

DECLINE OF KYANITE PRODUCTION in Kenya since 1939 is attributable to the exhaustion of the rich type of ore and a lack of interest in kyanite as maximum from less rich but far more abundant ore.

This examination is based on a memoir entitled "Kyanite in Kenya," by Dr. B. N. Templerley, formerly of the Geological Survey and published by the Kenya Minerals and Geological Department. This paper appeared during the past decade Kenya was the world's greatest supplier of kyanite.

The most important localities for kyanite were those where they were discovered first by the late Mr. J. W. Wilkinson, the late Sir Charles Franklin, regular claims and gradually developed the property. Claims further north, now the property of Kenya Kyanite, Ltd., were discovered by Mr. C. R. G. Scott and Miss P. Lloyd, wife.

At all these occurrences the material first worked consisted of large irregular lumps, some as large as a cottage, composed almost entirely of kyanite. As the veins obtained segregations have become fewer, it has been necessary to concentrate on the less rich ore to form the main bulk of the kyanite-bearing horizon.

The rock may be crushed and treated by flotation to extract the kyanite, and then converted into mullite in large rotary kilns. All kyanite has to be converted into mullite before it can be used for furnace linings, glass-melting tanks, etc., as in its original state it expands considerably on heating, whereas with mullite expansion is small.

Mineworkers' President Supports

A UNANIMOUS VOTE OF CONFIDENCE in Mr. B. P. Burke, president of the European Mineworkers' Union in Northern Rhodesia, has been passed by the executive. He had earlier been criticized in connexion with meeting certain mining executives socially.

Company ReportUruwita Minerals, Limited.*M. R. Brasseur's Statement

THE ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF URUWITA MINERALS LIMITED was held in Mpanda, Tanganyika Territory, October 21.

MR. R. BRASSEUR, the chairman, said:

"You have before you the annual report of your directors and the accounts of the company for the year to March 31, 1953. I would refer you in the directors' report under the heading Finance, to our statement that there might be a shortfall in the funds available for completion of our developing programme. This shortfall might amount, with lead at £80 per ton to £400,000. I am pleased to state that good progress has been made in obtaining such additional finance as is necessary."

"The Tanganyika Government, after consideration of a report by their mining department, has agreed to guarantee a sum of £120,000 to secure the balance of piping required for a water supply from the Uganda River. The conditions of the grant of this guarantee provide for coverage of a non-payment of a director to the board and the obliging the charge over the mine concerned until the loan is repaid. Your directors will welcome the representative to the board."

"The cash payment of £50,000 to Agumaga Mining, Ltd., referred to in the directors' report, has already been received."

Inased production of concentrates
Production of concentrates was increased during the first six months of the current year. A total of 3,018 dry metric tons of average 11% lead were reported. Prices realized were lower than expected, with a result that the anticipated profit has been met. This with lead at £80 per ton, leaves a possible short fall of £200,000 up to the date of the beginning of construction of the new mill. Your Board is in active continuing negotiations to obtain further loans in order to cover any shortfall which may arise in the future."

"The Uganda Government have been kept informed of the late deliveries of machinery and steel and the consequent delay expected in the beginning of full production. Their agreement has been sought and obtained to the further borrowing necessary by reason of this delay."

Southern Minerals Report

The report of the consulting engineers—Southern Minerals LTD.—included the following statement:

DEVELOPMENT. Underground work was largely confined to preparing the Mwamaka roadway for stoping. Developments advance amounted to 1860 linear metres and stope development (preparation) to 2620.5 metres, height of 444.3 metres. Average grade of ore prepared verified the grade of the ore-blocks previously reported.

SHAFTS. No. 1 shaft timber was destroyed below level six on loading pocket by a fall in ground and must be replaced. This did not interfere with hoisting. No. 3 shaft was completed to level four by a pilot raise, and is being connected to level four and equipped for production.

ORE RESERVES. Reserves were provisionally recalculated on the basis of blast-hole mining, with inclusion of a lead for the sake of economy, and because heavy media separation tests indicate a low percentage of low-grade material. With lead and copper at present prices (£90 and £230 per long ton) and with ore excluded which is less than 40% per metric ton placed in all stages in the form of concentrates, average ore value is calculated to be £55s. per metric ton. Under the same conditions but with lead price at £70 and copper price at £20 per long ton, the ore value is calculated to be 78s. per metric ton. The present life of the mine, excluding probable and possible ore and a crushing rate to the new plant of 100 metric tons per day, is approximately seven years.

Expenses

WORKING COSTS. It is calculated that working costs will be approximately 30s. per metric ton of ore hoisted, and an additional 5s. per ton should be allowed for long range development, shaft sinking, preparation, and expenses beyond the mine's control or a total of 30s. per metric ton.

REPAYMENT OF LOANS. The redemption allowance accumulated and accumulating for tax calculation purposes should permit, at working costs, repayment of the Government loans outstanding within three years after production date.

ROBUSTION DATE. Deliveries of structural steel and some machinery imported from the U.S. have been considerably retarded by strikes, the permanent wind. No. 7 shaft has not yet been shipped and the headgear not yet fabricated. Under presently probable delivery, production date would not be before second quarter 1955.

NEW PLANT. 60% of the loan funds from U.S. Government agents were expended for equipment and construction, 5% of the value was received as equipment at the mine, and some 10% of the plant was constructed.

Ore Reserves

The conclusions which may be drawn from the above are as follows:

"Realization of our ore reserves at present current prices of metal would, after liquidation of all loans outstanding and engagéd and after repayment of the share capital in full, provide a reasonable amount for distribution to the shareholders. I have estimated realization expenses at 30s. per ton of ore in addition to the 30s. per ton for working costs, and I have made no allowance for the residual value of plant and machinery installed on the mine."

"The latest estimate of the ore reserves amounts to 3,000,000 tons excludes any ore which may be found below 20 metres beyond No. 6 level. During the seven years which it will take to mine the ore reserves we can reasonably expect to develop more ore to replace this tonnage."

"The new zone recently disclosed on No. 7 level is developing satisfactorily, and it would appear that it lies west of the west working faces on No. 9 level. It must also be remembered that there are at least two mineralized zones in the Mwamaka area located by diamond drilling. Steps will be taken to investigate these deposits by driving a new level below No. 6 level horizon if possible."

From the above I am sure you will agree that there is every possibility of materially increasing the value of the company to shareholders, having already assured the shareholders a substantial investment with reasonable
