It is little over 50 years since the first miles were laid of the railway which is to-day the East African Railways and Harbours Administration, operating 2,930 route miles of metre gauge railway, some 6,000 miles of lake and river steamer services, 1,716 miles of road motor services and the four main ports of Mombasa, Dar es Salaam, Tanga and Lindi.

Another line is at present under construction at Mbeya in Southern Tanganyika for the groundnut scheme, in connexion with which many miles of new railway have been built.

In these 50 odd years the Railway has been a chief agent in the amazingly rapid progress of the territories it serves, and this progress continues. In 1949 the freight tonnage was 127 per cent. heavier than it was 10 years previously, and passenger journeys had increased in the same time by 300 per cent.

The Railway, proud of its past record, and alive to its present responsibilities, is sparing no effort to maintain and speed the development of East Africa.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

THE PROSPECT that tropical Africa may within the next half century become mainly Christian is suggested by Bishop Stephen Neill, associate general secretary of the World Council of Africa May Become Churches, in a most

his recent tour of East and Central Africa. His commission was to make a survey of the present scope and future requirements of theological education, but he has interpreted his terms of reference with such wide and welcome breadth that the resultant report contains much of general importance. By permission of the International Missionary Council we are able to quote many striking passages from the report, and we commend them to the notice of readers generally, especially those who are engaged in public life. Probably few people are aware that Christian missions in Africa have grown more rapidly than those anywhere else in the world, and many may not realize that the admitted weaknesses in the African churches are largely due to the great rapidity of this progress, to inadequate shepherding of converts from primitive paganism, and to the indifferent education of most African catechists and some of the African clergy. Bishop Neill faces these facts quite squarely, and lays stress on the need to produce thoroughly and educated ministers.

One striking fact which he emphasizes, and which we do not recall ever having heard mentioned by anyone else, is that more than three out of four of the students now enrolled in colleges in East and West Africa are adherents of a Christian Church. This means says Bishop Neill, that the future leadership of East and West Africa will be "in some sense Christian," adding that "the extent and nature of the Christianity will depend on the actions not of the colleges but of the Churches." Extension of the work of the Student Christian Movement is meantime recommended. What the investigator has not proposed—doubtless because the subject was theological education, not education as a whole—is that special care should be taken in selecting men and women for appointment to the staffs of non-mission colleges in Africa. If they are Communists or fellow-travellers, as some have been in recent years, more than ready to parade their contempt for religion, they may seriously damage the faith of young African Christians, and inculcate purely material conceptions in them and other pupils. There is all too much evidence of the materialistic outlook of many young African students, and one evidence need is to give them other and better standards.

In the first place this is a personal matter, but it is also one of public importance, for those who take one or other of the courses at Makerere or any of the comparable institutions of higher education elsewhere in

Educating Africans For Leadership.

Africa must be expected to exercise increasing influence over their fellow-Africans. They having enjoyed the coveted advantages of instruction, automatically inherit a prestige which strengthens their influence, whether it be good or bad. If it be bad, they can do almost limitless harm; if it be good, they can spread beneficial influence of great value. We have often written in these pages of the high importance of leadership at this stage of Africa's development, and to produce the right kind of African leaders is quite as necessary as it is to produce wise leadership among Europeans, Asians, and Arabs.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES of the Secretary of State for the Colonies in respect of the Colonial Development Corporation have still not been adequately defined.

Secretary of State and the C.D.C.

Mr. Griffiths summarized them in the House of Commons the other day as those of ensuring that the activities of the corporation are in line with Colonial policy and in keeping with the general public interest. He held that he should not become involved in intervention in day-to-day administration or in the preparation or investigation of the technical and commercial merits of individual schemes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd—who may be Secretary of State for the Colonies in the next Conservative Government—retired from that still left the Ministry open to the risk of misleading Parliament about the corporation by making unreliable statements which it had itself provided, adding that that had repeatedly happened. In the same debate a Socialist member, Mr. Ellis Smith, charged the former chairman of the corporation, Lord Trefgarne, with having withheld adverse reports on important C.D.C. activities not only from the Secretary of State but even from his own board; and it is astonishing that the Minister of State, Mr. Dugdale, made no attempt whatever to deal with that damaging accusation, riding off with the allegation that the Opposition was inspired by personal and party hostility to Lord Trefgarne, perhaps because he was at one time a Labour M.P. But, as we have stated, it was a Socialist speaker, not a Conservative, who made that most serious indictment.

Is it not part of the duty of the Secretary of State to satisfy himself, in consultation with the Treasury whenever necessary, that public funds entrusted to the corporation are being satisfactorily ex-

An Analogy From Commerce.

He and his chief advisers have, we suggest, been placed by Parliament in a position analogous to that of the chairman and board of a great commercial undertaking which controls subsidiary companies, each with its own chairman and board. In such a situation the parent organization avoids hampering a subsidiary by frivolous interference, but keeps in the closest contact with its operations, plans, and senior personnel in order to satisfy itself that unwarranted risks are not being taken, and that any errors made are corrected as quickly and economically as possible. Similar action could easily be arranged by the Colonial Office, almost certainly without additions to its system of advisers, who already cover almost every major subject, or to its staffs in every territory in which the C.D.C. may operate.

It is upon the Secretary of State that constitutional responsibility for the corporation rests, and in the exercise of that responsibility Parliament and the public ought also to take what Official View ever steps are necessary to ensure a regular and adequate flow of information.

The corporation has broken one another after another to provide regular progress reports, and the Secretary of State has failed to insist that that unsatisfactory state of affairs shall end. Would it not also be reasonable for him to satisfy himself that the most important appointments made by the corporation are wise? The chairman or managing director of a commercial corporation would automatically take that precaution in regard to subsidiary companies, for every business man knows that the right leader can produce results in adverse circumstances whereas the wrong man may fail even if the prospects are favourable. For these reasons we hold the view that Mr. Griffiths has given too narrow an interpretation of his responsibilities.

THE COLONIAL OFFICE THREAT

to nationalize the cotton ginning industry of Uganda, which was criticized in these columns a fortnight ago, was, by a coincidence, denounced that same day in Kampala by the president of the Uganda Chamber of Commerce in the presence of the Governor, Sir John Hall, who replied merely that these affected could see the Secretary of State when he visits the country in May. That assuredly means that Sir John Hall cares not a tinker's damn about the industry (as we stated in our leading article), for if he had disagreed with any major point made by the commercial spokesman he would naturally have said so. He referred at length to other points raised by Mr. Clark and it was only on the subject of cotton that he refrained from comment. Yet the president of the chamber had quoted effectively from the Governor's budget speech, which emphasized that the million of pounds now needed to develop secondary industries could be obtained only if British industrialists and financiers had confidence in the political and economic stability of Uganda. Mr. Clark asked pointedly how they could have that confidence if nationalization were not to be forced upon the leading cotton industry in the Colonial Empire. Perhaps the Secretary of State for the Colonies will answer that question.

*Notes By The WayNorthern Rhodesian Loan

THOUGH ITS TERMS WERE BETTER than those of the recent Southern Rhodesian loan, last week's Northern Rhodesian 3½% issue of £54m. in London faced much worse, the underwriters being left with no less than 94%. The authorities and the underwriters were the victims of a sudden and relatively severe weakening in markets here and in the United States. There the chief influences were the approaching budget, sharp fears about developments over Persian oil, the unsatisfactory export figures for February, anxiety about inadequate stocks of raw materials and future commodity prices and the set-back on Wall Street. Between decisions on the terms of the loan and the opening day these factors produced their unfavorable effect.

Unfortunate Market Conditions

TWO MONTHS AGO Southern Rhodesia raised a 3½% loan in London at par for a 30 to 35 year period, and underwriters had to take up 43%. Northern Rhodesia shortened the term to 19-21 years and issued the stock at 99, thus offering the public considerably improved terms which, when the prospectus first became available, were regarded as just about right. The market in the scrip opened on Friday at a discount on the issue price and considerable multinational buying was reported, such investors regarding the stock as cheap at 99 or thereabouts. The disappointing public response was essentially due to the state of the market, not to lack of confidence in Northern Rhodesia or to special dissatisfaction with the prospectus.

Is This Education?

WHAT THE EDUCATION OF AFRICANS is still or very intelligent at times is suggested by the questions at some examinations. Bishop J. Horne's Siedle, a white Father well known in Tanganyika, has sent to me Dr. Isma'il Salama Standard, those set in a recent geography paper to African boys and girls in standard 8, most of whom were about 16 or 17 years of age. They were given two minutes each to answer questions such as the following: "Where is there a rift valley in Germany? Write down the names of the Black Mountains in Germany? Does the Si Kiang have a delta or an estuary? Name three things made from the wood of coniferous trees. Draw and label on a blank map of Europe the Meseta and Carpathian mountains and the Lanarkshire coalfields.

Preparation for West Life?

WILL ANYONE HOLD that such questions suggest that the best use can have been made of the time of the scholars who were expected to grapple with such queries? What proportion of the readers of this newspaper, educationists included, would be sure of scoring a pass under such testing? And to what imaginable use are young Africans supposed to put such knowledge if they acquire it? Education is supposed to be wise preparation for life. This travesty suggests to me at any rate a monumental waste of time and opportunity.

High Tea

HOW MANY AIR TRAVELLERS to and from Africa realize, as they savor tea in the cabin, that it is a very special brew? Since the boiling-point of water (212° at sea-level) drops one degree for approximately every 550 feet of altitude, it boils at 11,000 feet at about 192°—a temperature insufficient to infuse the tea leaves properly. Such conditions are partially corrected by the "pressurizing" of B.O.A.C. air-lines, but boiling point is nonetheless still several degrees lower than normal. A special tea has therefore been blended for B.O.A.C. Stewards and stewardesses pre-heat all equipment and add extra sugar to a quart for each 12 oz. of tea. Dwellers in forty areas like Molo in Kenya clearly know.

An Invitation

NO PART OF THE Empire can have among its ex-Servicemen a higher proportion of ex-Servicemen of the British, East and Central African Dependencies, to which an exceptional appeal must therefore be made by an ex-Service organization able to claim without exaggeration that it is unique. An organization of that character—and it has great character—has told me that it would particularly welcome visits from old Africans and Rhodesians when they are in this country, and I pass on the invitation with pleasure. For acceptance of it by readers would bring joy to those who have a special title to it. I refer to the Star and Garter Home at Richmond, Surrey, for sailors, soldiers and airmen who were crippled in the service of their country. There are 160 of them in the home at present, about half from the 1914-18 war and the others from the 1939-45 conflict. They are members of an amazingly happy community; but they are eager for visits, especially from those coming home from overseas. No prior appointment need be made.

Tropical Africa Might Be Mainly Christian in Fifty Years

How Churches Should Meet the Challenge of Materialism*

THE FUTURE OF TROPICAL AFRICA will be determined in the next 20 years. If the Churches rise to the opportunity, that future might be set firmly and unshakably in the Christian direction.

The part played by Christians in the life of the African countries is so remarkable as to hold out the hope that in 50 years' time tropical Africa might be in the main a Christian continent. The forces of Islam are still aggressive, but less is heard of the Moslem menace than 50 years ago. A far greater danger is the sheer materialism, consequent on the rapid and destructive effects of the application of mechanical power to African life, which may become the "religion" of educated and semi-educated young Africa.

A Church does not flourish unless its ordained leadership is adequate to the spiritual needs of the lay people of the Church, and able to take its part, with energy and courage, in the development of national as well as of ecclesiastical life. For these reasons the training of the ministry in Africa should have, at once almost first priority in the whole scene of the Christian enterprise to-day.

Africa was one of the earliest fields of Christian enterprise, but more than any part of the world, it manifests that fluctuating and uncertain character of Christian progress. After the disasters of the Muslim invasions, little was done for Africa until the Portuguese took up the task again in the 15th century.

Influence of Training in Africa

Probably there is not a Christian Church or mission in tropical Africa which does not wish to keep open for some of its African members the possibility of a period of study and training in one of the countries in which the Christian Church has had a longer history than it has in Africa. There could seem, however, a general argument that such a period abroad should be preceded by extensive theological and ministerial training in Africa and should be regarded rather as special training for special responsibilities than as a formal part of theological education. The availability of training in the West should not be accepted as an excuse for failing to provide the safest means for adequate theological training in Africa itself.

In the early stages of almost every mission the first ordained ministers are trained individually or in very small groups by their leaders, with whom the students reside on terms of such intimacy as existed between St. Paul and the young friends who accompanied or represented him in the evangelistic enterprises of the apostolic period. This method has very much to commend it and can never be wholly replaced by any other. Until recently it has been the method followed in the highly successful mission of the Church Missionary Society in the Southern Sudan.

But this type of training is expensive in man-power and strength. Invariably it tends to strengthen the emotional rather than the intellectual, and sometimes at the expense of the intellectual; and too great influence on the part of one greatly loved teacher can make the pupil susceptible to other influences in the life of the Church by which he might well profit. Even where the individual method has been abandoned, only with regret, almost every mission has in course of time been driven to the foundation of a theological school or college.

* Being extracts quoted by permission of the International Missionary Council from Bishop Stephen Neill's report on his survey of theological education in East and West Africa.

The East African is inclined to be a little resentful of what he considers to be the superior air given himself by the West African. West Africa is not readily accessible to the idea that it might have some useful things to learn from East Africa. Those transferred from one side of the continent to the other have not always found it possible to adapt themselves to the new conditions, and have not always been successful in their work. Nevertheless, to the visitor from Europe or Asia the resemblances seem much greater than the contrasts.

Almost everywhere there is the sense of a vast, empty, largely undeveloped country. Except in some of the most fertile and densely populated areas, humanity seems to be holding on precariously in its environment, rather than to be in process of successfully subduing it. There is the omnipresence of the African tribal system, richly diversified within itself, but presenting similar features in widely separated areas. There is the almost universal phenomenon of erosion and the alienation of the soil, in fighting which at last the efforts of enlightened Governments seem to be crowned with a measure of success.

Short History of Christian Influence

From the Christian point of view, what immediately impresses the visitor is the newness of everything. The first baptism among the Virili and intelligent Kikuyu took place only in 1908, in the Nyanza region of Kenya in 1908. The great churches in Uganda have been built up within the memory of living men—since the great "persecution" of 1886. The first ordination of an African as a deacon in the Universities' Mission to Central Africa took place only in 1879.

In numbers growing the missions in Africa have outstripped those in every other part of the world. Recent estimates suggest that a population of the continent may now be as much as 300 million, and that 10 million are within the Christian constituency. For our present purposes we shall divide the seven millions of Congo and Ethiopian Christians and the perhaps one million Europeans, mainly in the south. Even so, the creation in little over a century of churches numbering 3 million adherents is most memorable. In India, after four centuries of missions, slightly more than 2% of the population is Christian, in tropical Africa the proportion of Christians seems to be not less than 10%.

The social status of Christians in these areas is not less remarkable. There are no areas in which every chief importance is a Christian, though it must be admitted that of those who are nominally Christians the majority for one reason or another are not in good standing in their respective colonies.

The rapidity of progress is one of the greatest causes of weakness in the African churches. The resources available have been quite insufficient to fit adequately for those who have come in on a background of primitive savagery and need. More than a rather hasty course of elementary instruction in the Christian faith is that to be delivered from the old patterns of custom and into a real understanding of the Christian gospel. The demands it makes on those who profess allegiance to

Shortage of Ordained Ministers

The shortage of trained and ordained ministers is one of the weaknesses in the development of the Church. The majority of African Christians live in small and scattered groups, and this makes adequate supervision and spiritual care more difficult than in countries where the Roman system, in its fullness, has long been established. In Uganda, for example, there is on the average only one ordained minister to 5,000 baptized Christians.

There are areas in which the Roman Catholic missionaries outnumber the Protestants by 10 to 1, and the number is still increasing. It can hardly be doubted that the Roman Church consciously aims at turning tropical Africa into Roman dominion, and perhaps by this means recouping losses that it has suffered elsewhere.

The gravest weakness of the Roman system in Africa is that everywhere the non-Roman African ministry exceeds by far more than 10 to one the Roman African priesthood. The reason for this can be given in a single phrase—the insistence on celibacy. Elsewhere, in some Uniat Churches, the Church of Rome has a married priesthood; it has, as far as shown no signs of creating a Uniat church in tropical Africa. It is notorious that the maintenance of genuine celibacy is extremely difficult under the conditions of African life, and specially so for those who have come recently out of tribal conditions.

After a number of disappointments, the Church of Rome has become extremely cautious in the ordination of Africans to the priesthood. Whereas the Anglican Communion has seven African bishops, the Roman Church has only one. Mgr. Kiwanuka, in Uganda; and it was said to me by Africans that Mgr. Kiwanuka presided so long in Rome as almost to have ceased to be an African. It was also stated by Africans that no African Roman priests are left under such supervision by the European missionaries as to feel themselves permanently in a dependent position. At a time when the African claim to independence and equality is so extremely strong, this weakness on the part of the African ministry cannot but work against the progress of the Roman Church and its real integration with the life of Africa.

To some extent, the shortage of African ministers is compensated for by the work of lay ministers. These are numbered by thousands. In fact, the village catechists, with his slender qualifications and very modest pay, is the real hero of the Christian situation in Africa. He bears testimony to the wonderful faithfulness and devotion of a class of men who carry on under conditions of great isolation, with little spiritual help, and according to their lights shepherd the flock of Christ in the face of difficulties that might well daunt the heart of those who have had far greater privileges in the way of Christian background and instruction.

Debt to African Clergy

In every area evidence can be found of the weakness and failure in spiritual depth in practical efficiency, even in moral conformity to the demands of the Christian law. Nevertheless, it would not be right to go further without placing on record a conviction as to the immense debt which the Church owes to its African clergy. Few of them are scholars, few are saints, few are outstanding leaders, but cannot the same be said of the clergy in Europe or in America?

We are told in scripture that it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful. Judged by this standard, the African ministers find not greatly easy company with their brethren in other lands, especially if allowance is made for the immensely greater difficulties with which they have to contend. But we must add that in the main the African clergy are far from being adequate to the demands that must be made upon them if the Church is to fulfil its rôle. Africa is getting education and for the first time finding its place on the general stage of human history. The man to whom spiritual responsibility is committed must be aware of the changed world in which he lives and able himself to play a part in it.

General Educational Foundation

Most African clergy have started life as village catechists. After a short course of elementary training, they have begun their work as preachers of the Gospel. They have then been brought in again for one or two periods of training as catechists, and then finally for a further period of training for the ordained ministry. On the whole, this theological training is well done within the limits of what is possible under present conditions. The weakness is not so much in the training itself, as in the inadequacy of the general educational foundation on which it rests. Many African clergy have received hardly any general education at all.

For a very long time the African Churches will need many ministers of the old type, whose qualities of faithfulness and devotion can find their outlet in the service of the village congregations. Equally, if the new generation is to do the best in the service of the Church, it will need the pastoral care of ministers who have themselves been educated from within the new context of African life, understand its new problems, and can understand its new needs. Our concern is to consider how, with the minimum of dislocation, the necessary new can be joined to the indispensable old.

Deportation of Uganda African Leader Debated

Allegation of Mr. Fenner Brockway in Musazi Case

THE DEPORATION from Uganda of Mr. Ignatius Musazi was the subject of an adjournment debate in the House of Commons last week at the instance of Mr. FENNER BROCKWAY (Labour).

He said that Mr. Musazi, president of the Uganda African Farmers' Union, with 80,000 members, represented 25% of the peasant farming population of the Protectorate. Visited Britain in 1949 with the object of explaining to the Colonial Secretary the difficulties which Uganda African farmers had in making arrangements for running their farms. He also wished to show the British constructive movement, so that on returning to Uganda he could develop the organization of the farmers on constructive lines. The Secretary of State had, however, not seen him.

Charges against Mr. Musazi
In April, 1949, Mr. Brockway continued, disturbances broke out in Uganda. There is no evidence whatsoever that Mr. Musazi had anything to do with those disturbances at all. The only charge made against him in connexion with those disturbances was that he sent a telegram to the Colonial Secretary and that a copy was sent to the Governor of Uganda.

"As that telegram was not published until nine months after the disturbances it obviously could have had no effect in encouraging the disturbances at all. I am not denying that telegram, though Mr. Musazi himself puts a very different interpretation on what appears in the Kingdom report."

"There are two other charges only made against Mr. Musazi. The first was in 1939 when he was charged with forging signatures to a petition. The actual fact the bona fides of the signatures were recognized and because of that the charge had to be changed to transferring signatures from one petition to another. He denies absolutely that he was guilty but he was found to be guilty and was sentenced to 18 months imprisonment. The offence committed 12 years ago cannot possibly justify deportation from Uganda."

The other charge against him is that he participated in a general strike in Uganda in 1945. On that occasion he deserved his offence and asked for a public trial. A public trial was refused. Mr. Musazi was reported for five years for conspiracy with intent to overthrow the Protectorate and the Buganda Government. I have examined with the greatest care all the facts about Mr. Musazi's attitude in this country and in Uganda. I am entirely convinced that his influence throughout that period was for moderation and against violence.

Colonial Confidence
I went to Uganda recently to make a detailed investigation of this matter. I came to the conclusion that the charges against Mr. Musazi's organisation are justified; that the charges against Mr. Musazi himself are not justified. I could not find a single man in Uganda who believed that Mr. Musazi should be prevented from returning to his office, of course, through government offices."

"The Bishop of Uganda expressed his complete confidence in Mr. Musazi. The staff of Makerere College expressed complete confidence in him. Professional men and business men expressed their complete confidence in him. I have known this man closely myself for nearly two years and I say that there is not an atom of violence or vengeance in him. There are very few men for whose character I have greater respect."

Mr. Brockway alleged that the Government had since found out that everything he had said about Mr. Musazi's organisation was true. He admitted that within detention Mr. Musazi was fully devoting himself to building the Uganda farmers' movement on a constructive basis. The Colonial Secretary had been gravely misled.

He (Mr. Brockway) had been assured by the Colonial Secretary that Mr. Musazi would be free to live under conditions in which his wife and family could join him, and where representatives of his organization would have access to him. The facts were that Mr. Musazi had five children at school, and with the allowances which would be given if his wife lived with him in the village of deportation (Moyo), she would have to go on working in order to maintain the children at school. It was impossible for her to join him. Moreover, since Moyo was a two-day journey, what change was there for representatives of the farmers to go to discuss matters with him?

"The honest thing would be for the Uganda Government and the Colonial Secretary is acknowledge that a mistake had been made both about the organization and the man.

MR. J. GRIFFITHS (Lab.) reported Mr. Brockway as he believed that the Colonial Secretary was sympathetic to some alteration in the system by which people could apparently be deported or detained without trial in the sense in which the British people regarded a trial.

MR. N. DODDS (Lab.) said that the co-operative members in the House were satisfied that the action taken had been a terrible blot on Colonial administration.

Secretary of State's Reply

THE SECRETARY OF STATE Mr. J. Griffiths, replied that he was examining with the Governor the existing powers of deportation.

The Uganda African Farmers' Union, founded by Mr. Musazi, had believed that the arrangements made for the sale of their cotton to the ginneries and the conditions under which the sales were effected were not all that they should have been. That in itself was a problem. The future of the ginning industry—in which a promising co-operative movement was developing—was being given considerable attention.

In April, 1949, there were disturbances which led to loss of life and some considerable damage to property. My predecessor appointed a commission of high judicial experience and with the highest qualities to make an inquiry. The commission recorded a finding which was that the disturbances were the result of activity by the Uganda Farmers' Union, Mr. Musazi, and the Batasi Party. These were held jointly responsible for organizing what the report of the commission described as a planned rebellion.

On the evidence I have examined, I think my predecessor was right in accepting the findings of the inquiry. The position under Ugandan law at that time was that no charge could be made in regard to any event six months after the event had taken place. Therefore, no charge has been made against Mr. Musazi. But he and another leader of another party were both held responsible for this planned rebellion.

The Governor of a Colonial territory is responsible for its security, and he must bear that in mind, particularly when there have been experiences which have not been happy. There had been tragic experiences in Uganda. Planned rebellion which leads to loss of life is not something to be treated lightly, and a Governor has to take the steps which he made think necessary to prevent further disturbance taking place.

Mr. Musazi is still in detention in Mombasa. He is provided with decent quarters, and arrangements have been made for his wife and children to be with him. Mr. Brockway thinks that the allowance made to Mr. Musazi is inadequate. That is a matter of opinion. He is not kept in a prison. During the daytime he is allowed out within the precincts of the town."

Mr. Griffiths said a way would be found by which Mr. Musazi would re-agree with the Government. That did not prevent him from criticizing me from saying that the ordinance was not all it should be, but it was desirable that the farmers' union should be brought within the ordinance.

When the Governor is satisfied that it is possible to have Mr. Musazi freed from all restraint, then he will be allowed to return to his area. When he does, I hope it will be his major and only concern to develop the co-operative movement, and that we shall have no more planned rebellions, no disturbances, and no loss of life."

Question Time

MR. J. JOHNSON (Lab.) asked if the Colonial Secretary would sponsor publication of an atlas of the Colonial Empire.

MR. DODDAGE: "The Colonial Secretary is well aware that maps are lacking in many Colonial territories. To remedy this defect the Central Directorate of Colonial Surveys was set up in 1946 and is turning out work as fast as available resources permit."

MR. G. B. CRADDOCK (Cons.) asked the number of cotton ginners in Uganda; how many were operating during the present cotton season; and how many were owned by Europeans, Asians, and Africans respectively.

MR. DODDAGE: "There are 125 ginneries of which 77 are owned by Europeans, 17 by Asians, and one by Africans. 155 ginneries are being operated during the 1950-51 cotton season, including 6 owned by Europeans, 141 by Asians, and 9 by Africans. The Protectorate Government has called on the African-owned ginneries that work and are loaned to the African Co-operative Union, which is also operating 10 African-owned ginneries."

MR. CRADDOCK asked the Colonial Secretary if he was aware of the serious deterioration of the soil in the Machakos area of Kenya.

MR. DODDAGE: "Yes. The Kenya Government is fully aware of the serious situation in Machakos, which has been aggravated by an unprecedented two years' drought. A series of relief and resettlement areas have been and are being developed stretching from Kibwezi to Marukeni. No less than 132 small dams and 40 larger dams have been built since Machakos Reserve districts last three years, and much work has been done to accommodate over-population. Measures are being taken at present to draw in men in the areas with a view to obtaining increased contribution from the local African population without which little real progress can be achieved."

MR. J. JOHNSON (Lab.) asked the numbers of people entering Northern Rhodesia in 1948, 1949, and 1950, and how many had come from the Union of South Africa.

MR. DODDAGE: "The figures are as follows: 1948, 5,716 (including 2,392 South African nationals); 1949, 6,533 (4,462 U.K. and nine months, 5,692 (3,252). The figures for the last quarter of 1950 are not yet available. It is estimated that 30% of immigration into Northern Rhodesia from the Union of South Africa was offset by repatriation, and 25% of immigration from the United Kingdom is similarly offset."

MR. J. HENDY (Lab.) asked when the Northern Rhodesian Government intended to have a census of the African population, and the reason why a census had not been carried out earlier.

MR. DODDAGE: "District commissioners in Northern Rhodesia have carried out an annual population count many years. It was decided recently not to hold a simple census on normal lines, but to undertake a detailed demographic survey based on a sample of villages. This inquiry which was carried out in the latter part of 1950 gave numbers and rates of births and deaths as well as population estimates. The analysis of the results of the inquiry is not yet available."

African Colonial Forces

MR. ALPORT asked the Secretary of State for War whether he had any statement to make regarding the Government's policy for the organization and employment of African Colonial units in the event of emergency.

MR. M. STEWART: "The importance of the use of African Colonial units in an emergency is fully recognized, and plans to this end are now being examined."

MR. ALPORT: "Does not the hon. gentleman realize that the Commander-in-Chief has recently had to deny rumours that African troops were being used exclusively in Rhodesia and labour units, and does not he agree that it is very important that the Government should get out a clear statement on this matter at an early date in order to check any decrease in the morale of the African units?"

MR. STEWART: "Meanwhile, of course, it is important that rumours of that kind should not be spread."

Mr. Welensky on Gold Coast Elections

Criticism of Colonial Secretary

CRITICISM of the Colonial Secretary's comments on the Gold Coast elections has been made by Mr. Roy Welensky, leader of the non-official members of the Northern Rhodesian Legislative Council.

If Mr. Griffiths has been correctly reported," he said in Broken Hill, "I think it fair to tell him that the vast majority of Europeans in Southern and Central Africa do not agree with him. If it is the aim of the British Government to repeat the policy which has been applied to India, Pakistan and Burma, the great majority of Europeans in Colonial Africa will back me in saying that we will resist with the utmost vigour any attempt to apply that policy."

The Government in Britain has been caught up in its own folly, but we will not stand idly aside and see Northern Rhodesia ruined by the same folly. The British Government must realize that it is impossible to talk of partnership and in the same breath imply that Northern Rhodesia is to go the way of Burma, India and the Gold Coast."

Mr. Welensky, who is himself a Socialist, also said at the beginning of this week that, given the minimum of interference from London, Central Africa could formulate a policy which would allow Europeans and Africans to join in government and developing the colony to the best advantage. He described as "arrant nonsense" the view of the Socialist Government in Great Britain that democracy was merely a counting of heads. Democracy could work reasonably well only with a reasonably qualified electorate. He accepted the policy of giving full

Wool washing wool from Syria is but one of the more pictureque activities of The United Africa Company in the Middle East. It imports cocoa, textiles and machinery into Turkey; exports tobacco and matches, manufactured cooking oil. It trades extensively in Iraq, and operates the most modern date packing station in the territory. It acts as shipping agent up and down the Persian Gulf.

Operating from the Bosphorus to the Gulf of Oman, sometimes as agent for traders, sometimes as manufacturer, its Company or its local subsidiary, deals in a range of produce, merchandise and capital goods which, for sheer diversity, would confound the imagination of the author of the Arabian Nights.

United States and Colonies Views Changed¹⁰ Last 10 Years

MR. IVOR THOMAS has contributed an interesting article to The Times on the United States attitude to Colonies. He wrote, inter alia:

"Until recently it was not possible, outside Anglophilic circles, as many Europeans have found, to get a fair hearing in the United States for the British handling of Colonial and other Imperial questions. Empire was a dog with a very bad name."

In the past few years, however, a great transformation has taken place in the official American attitude and to a large extent in that of the American Press and public.

The beginning of a better understanding may be dated to the agreement in 1940 for the lease of naval and air bases in the British West Indies, whereby, in Mr. Churchill's phrase, the British Empire and the United States became "mixed up together in some of their affairs for mutual and general advantage." Two years later the Anglo-American Caribbean Commission was set up. Not the least of its contributions has been the insight which it has given the American members into the true objectives of Colonial rule as opposed to the caricatures.

In 1943 such an insight was by no means common in high places and the proposals made for the supervision of dependent territories by the projected United Nations were sometimes dictated by good intentions rather than by knowledge.

Fixed Dates for Independence

According to a proposal of Mr. Cordell Hull, endorsed by the President, the Colonial Powers were to be called upon to fix "as soon as possible, the dates upon which Colonial peoples under them would be granted full independence within a system of general security." Such a proposal to fix dates for independence is still sometimes heard in the United Nations, but not usually with American support.

It is perhaps not surprising that at Yalta, according to Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Churchill was moved to exclaim: "After we have done our best to fight in this war and have 'done no crime to anyone, I will have no suggestion that the British Empire is to be put in the dock and examined by everybody to see whether it is up to their standard."

Invaluable work has been done by officials of the Colonial Office, and especially by Sir Hilton Poynton, in explaining to them, and to the members of the State Department, such as Mr. Benjamin Gere, the principles of trusteeship leading to partnership by which British Colonial rule is animated, and in showing how the speed at which these principles can be applied depends largely on the capacity of the Colonial peoples to train themselves for self-government.

American officials, and through them their political agents, became convinced of the sincerity of British motives and aware of the stubborn nature of Colonial peoples. Territories are not backward because they are Colonies, but are "Colonies" because they are "backward," was a typical, perceptive saying of Sir Hilton Poynton.

In the light of these events the American attitude to the United Nations became more sympathetic to the Colonial Powers.

There are large groups of Americans in that organization which have striven to support automatically and enthusiastically proposals for the immediate ending of Colonial status anywhere and everywhere. And precisely because, like the United States, they are "mindful of their own Colonial origins," most Latin American, Arab, and African members have been induced to go into the lobby to support Colonial Powers because they felt that in so doing they were fulfilling themselves. In some cases, as in South Africa, where they were drawing on their own shortcoming.

The Soviet Union quickly realized that if it could show that its best chance of defeating the United Nations was on the Colonial issue, in so doing it could not only mislead the Colossal Secretariat of the oppressed, but might even win the support of the United States, or at least embarrass the American delegation.

This was not lost on the Americans, and as they saw more and more evidence both of the sincerity of the Colonial Powers and of the hollowness of the attack, they tended to reassess their lands, their aims, moral arguments to the advancing authority.

From my own experience I am deeply conscious how much the United Nations owes in these matters to the solid good sense of Mr. Forster Dallin. That tendency was enhanced, of course, when the United States took over the trusteeship of the former Japanese-mandated islands and itself became an administering authority, but it is important to get the sequence of events right: the attitude of the United States had changed before this new assumption of Colonial responsibility, and not because of it.

Racial Discrimination in Uganda

European Association's Memorandum

IN SPITE OF REPEATED ASSERTIONS from the Prime Minister and the Colonial and Foreign Secretaries that there is no racial discrimination in the Colonial Empire, Europeans in Uganda are definitely discriminated against. This memorandum issued by the Tero European Association, it continues:

"Land. There are vast areas of Crown land in Uganda unoccupied. The Governor in a recent declaration stated that it is not the intention of H.M. Government and the Protectorate Government that the Protectorate of Uganda shall be developed as a country of non-African farming and settlement. In other words, no application for land will be considered if submitted by Europeans. This has already happened.

It seems strange that Europeans of British stock who have fought in one or both the last two wars in defence of East Africa should be refused land in a part of the Empire which they defended.

The result of this policy will be that this Crown land will remain unoccupied and unproductive indefinitely, when the world is crying out for food and raw materials.

Any foreign Native from the Belgian Congo, French and Portuguese territories may come into Uganda and take up land where they please, cultivate it and establish a home, and this be a question of colour?

"At land auctions no European may bid for Native property, but those same Natives may purchase property in England to which they wish.

M. Dundale's Misstatement

Mr. Dundale stated to the Fabian Society in England that there were 500 settlers in Uganda. This statement is incorrect. There would be more if the land policy did not discriminate against them. It is noticeable that there such settlers exist the standard of life of most of them has vastly improved. Further, there has been an increase of Natives settling around such estates.

"Taxation. The European pays income tax. The Native does not, however prosperous he may be. This also applies to Native companies. There are a great number of Native landowners who collect rents from Native tenants, but they pay the same small sum tax as the tenants.

We propose that there be substituted for both income tax and poll tax a graduated poll tax applicable to all, irrespective of race or colour.

In addition to income tax, we also pay a poll tax which is approximately five times that of the Native.

"Medical. A small point illustrating racial discrimination by the Government is that the European pays for medical attention and drugs in Government hospitals, while the Native obtains these advantages free.

There are many hospitals and dispensaries throughout the country for Europeans with accommodation for the Toto district, where there are now over 100 Europeans in various occupations; no provision at all is made for their medical treatment or accommodation. The nearest hospital accommodation for us is over 40 miles away.

"Arms. The Governments of East Africa invariably grant arms to the people of these territories, as three groups, Africans, Asians, and Europeans, for the purposes of legislation, taxation, etc. This racial grouping is a kind of our choosing and we deplore it. We believe that such continuous emphasis on racial difference between groups leads eventually to racial antagonism between those groups; and being very conscious of the overriding need for security in Uganda, we implore Government to cease from this policy of discrimination and to treat all people alike under the law, irrespective of the racial groups from which they have sprung.

The Colonial Secretary stated that in the Colonial Empire there is no racial discrimination and that there is equal opportunity for all, whatever the race or colour. As pointed out in this memorandum, this statement is a mere hollow pot.

East African Section in London

Cargo Tax Burden on Trade

EAST AFRICAN SECTION of the London Chamber of Commerce appointed a taxation sub-committee last week, consisting of one representative each of Kenton Gold Areas, Ltd., and Messrs. R. Lehmann and Co. Ltd., R. C. Trebil and Co. Ltd., and A. Wigglesworth and Co. Ltd., "to submit recommendations" to the chamber's taxation committee before it gives evidence before the Royal Commission on the Taxation of Profits and Income.

It was felt that the views of companies engaged in commerce, agriculture, and mining in East Africa should be co-ordinated and sent forward, particularly as the revenue authorities in the United Kingdom hold opinions at variance with those of the authorities in East Africa in connexion with allowances for depreciation, estate rehabilitation, and other allowable deductions.

Mr. Sydney Tranter drew attention to the recent transfer of domicile by companies operating in the Overseas Empire, and continuing combined capital summing up to millions of pounds, solely because of the undue burden of present U.K. taxation. Some members of the section had, he said, taken that step already; others were known to be contemplating it, and if the United Kingdom Government continued to refuse fair relief many more transfers of domicile would soon be made.

Waiting for Two Years

A member complained that his company had been waiting two years to ship 250 tons of cement to East Africa, and that 180,000 tons were still ahead of them on the register, which, he suggested, must mean that some firms had registered far larger quantities than they could sell.

The chairman, Mr. H. E. Phipps, described the regular as "untenable" and that was admitted by a representative of the Africa Castle Line, who explained that the shipping companies could not discover definitely whether their ships were called forward. Even then the failure to produce the cement did not necessarily mean that the entry had not been genuine at the time of entry, or supplies which may have been available could have been sold elsewhere in the interval.

Pointing out that the companies had the right to claim freight on cargo called forward and not delivered, the chairman suggested that they should adopt that course in one or other badge as a deterrent to those who abused the system. It was agreed that the recent increases in ocean freight between the United Kingdom and East Africa were reasonable in view of the increased charges which the liner had to meet, owing to slow handling in the docks and higher costs of fuel.

Considerable improvement in the shipping position was reported by the chairman, who said that general commercial cargo shipped to Mombasa and Dar es Salaam respectively totalled 14,001 and 2,584 tons in November, 15,855 and 3,423 in December, and 18,163 and 3,798 in January. In mid-February 12,400 tons were on the register awaiting shipment to Mombasa, and about 11,400 tons were booked for Dar es Salaam.

Objection to Kenya Government's Decision

The intention of the Government of Kenya to alter the grading of chillies was unanimously regretted. Strong objection was expressed to the policy of renaming f.a.o. and not one member supported the idea of introducing a new classification between f.a.o. and undergrade.

Notice was also given that the Government of Kenya would revise the grading of white haricot beans.

A resolution of thanks to Mr. A. E. Pollard for his co-operation with the section was passed with acclamation on a motion by the chairman, who said that Mr. Pollard was about to retire from the staff of the East African Office.

Mr. Morton expressed great regret at the impending loss of a colleague who was at one time H.M. Trade Commissioner in East Africa and had been most helpful to the office in London.

Southern Rhodesia's Trade Last Year

Adverse Balance Halved

SOUTHERN RHODESIA'S visible adverse balance of trade dropped from £20,000,000 in 1949 to £10,500,000 last year.

The total value of foodstuffs imported in 1950 was £89,735, a rise of nearly £10,000. Imports of wheat increased from 76m. lb (£915,000) in 1949 to 89m. lb (£1,023,000), but maize imports fell from 56m. lb (£116,000) to 46m. lb (£40,000). Other foodstuffs imported included raw sugar 54m. lb (£700,000) compared with 51m. lb valued at £74,000 in 1949; and tea, 23,000 lb (£349,000), compared with 42,870,000 lb (£25,600).

The significant and continuous rise that took place in imports of metals, metal manufacture, machinery and vehicles in the immediate post-war years was halted in 1950, when the value of imports amounted to £24,761,664, as against £35,043,153 in the peak year, 1949. A high percentage of goods in that class consisted of capital equipment and other goods for development purposes. The decrease, the Colony's Economic Bulletin suggests, is indicative not of falling demand but of the decreasing rate of world supply position.

Imports of Machinery and Vehicles

Imports of machinery totalled £80,750,000 (£8,454,000 in 1949), motor vehicles £3,687,000 (£3,770,000 in 1949), and railway material £2,524,000 (£2,897,000 in 1949).

The value of imported fibres, yarns, textiles and apparel continued to expand and reached the record figure of £11,613,299, an increase of £1m. This was largely attributable to price increases, but also to heavier imports of clothing yarns and other raw or semi-manufactured goods for the textile industries.

Heavy purchases of mineral oils increased the value of imports of oils, fats, resins, paints, and varnishes from £2,308,443 in 1949 to £3,282,241. The steady increase in imports of motor spirit continued during the year, when 31m. gallons were bought (£1,123,000), against the previous record figure of 24m. gallons (£749,000) in 1949.

There was a slight rise (£2m. to £2,300,000) was recorded in imports of woods, canes, and manufactures, but this would have been greater had world supplies and transport facilities been easier. Substantial imports of rubber tyres and tubes and footwear caused imports of leather and rubber articles to advance from £1,642,972 to £2,208,856.

U.K.'s Share of Exports

The United Kingdom took Southern Rhodesian goods to the value of £21,897,835 (53.7% of the Colony's domestic exports) against £16,529,152 (55.8%) in the previous year. Manufactures to the United Kingdom from Britain rose from 47m. lb (£8,579,000) to 61m. lb (£12,36,000).

Purchased by South Africa, now Southern Rhodesia's second best customer, continued to expand and amounted to £4,429,990 (10.9% of domestic exports), compared with £2,591,000 (8.7%) in 1949. Apparel constituted the main item exports in this category totalling £1,560,000, as against £756,060 in the previous year.

Southern Rhodesia's exports to Northern Rhodesia reached the record figure of £3,441,916 (£2,977,269), but the actual share in domestic trade declined from 10.2% to 8.4%.

Salvation Army

Full details of the work and personnel of the Salvation Army are given in their year book for 1951, which has just been published. It shows that in the East African territories, where the territorial commander is Colonel G. C. King, there are 321 officers, 208 employees, 146 corps, five societies, 175 outposts, 80 schools, and nine institutions. In Rhodesia, under the command of Colonel T. Holbrook, there are 288 officers, 455 employees, 188 corps, 68 outposts and societies, 148 farms, eight institutions, and 197 schools.

ENTRY INTO THE ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, SANDHURST AND WOMEN'S ROYAL ARMY CORPS SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION

Opportunities are now available for male Colonial candidates wishing to adopt the Regular Army as a career to enter the Royal Military Academy at Sandhurst from East Africa.

APPLICANTS should apply in the first instance through the headmasters of their schools, and must be between the ages of 17½ and 19½ years, and have passed an examination equivalent to the School Certificate of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board.

Only candidates who are members of families established and resident in the territory from which the application comes and British subjects or citizens of the Irish Republic are eligible.

Candidates must also be able to fulfil British Army standards for service in any part of the world.

PROCEDURE

Following the application through the headmasters of schools the candidates will be interviewed by the General Officer Commanding East Africa Command. The cost of travelling to and from Nairobi will be borne by the candidate, but the cost of return passage, quarters incurred while attending the interview are met by the War Department. Following the approval of the General Officer Commanding East Africa Command, a free fare passage, second-class or tourist-class, to the United Kingdom is granted, and candidates are required to appear before a Regular Commissioning Board.

The successful candidates are then enlisted on a Regular Army engagement of two years, with the Colours and seven years on the Reserve, and undergo a pre-Sandhurst training in the ranks before joining the Royal Military Academy. Candidates who fail the Regular Commissioning Board are liable for their own maintenance following the announcement of their failure and the cost of a return passage to their home country.

ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY COURSE

The course at Sandhurst lasts for 18 months, divided into three terms, with leave granted between each term. Officer cadets will receive 5s. per day for the first 12 months, and 6s. 6d. per day for the remaining eight months. Candidates who complete the course successfully will be commissioned into the rank of 2nd Lieutenant and will receive a daily basic rate of pay of 17s. 6d.

WOMEN'S ROYAL ARMY CORPS

Female Colonial candidates who wish to join this corps as Regular Officers will follow the same procedure of application and interview as given for male candidates. The age limit is between 18½ and 26 years, and married women are eligible provided no cohabitation is given that family circumstances will not be permitted to restrict liability to military service. Successful candidates will be posted to the one-year appointment and sent to a training centre in Nairobi. Service from period of basic training before entering the Officer Cadet Training Wing for a nine-months course, and during the training period until date of commissioning, female candidates will receive a daily rate of pay of 17s. 6d. Officers in the Women's Royal Army Corps, a daily rate of pay of 17s. 6d. will be received.

FAR

All the above rates of pay are net rates, after deduction of commissary, mess, and accommodation charges, which is removed from the rate of pay on commission.

Role of the Colonial Office To-Day

Sir Hilton Poynton's Survey

SIR HILTON POYNTON, a Deputy Under-Secretary of State at the Colonial Office, writes in Corona:

"The achievements in economic development in the Colonies in recent years (and the prospects given a settled world) are most encouraging. Of course, we cannot claim all the credit for such achievements for Government alone. Private enterprise, nature, and the world shortage of some commodities have perhaps had a much or more to do with it. Even so, these very satisfactory developments have occurred in territories for which we together are governmentally responsible.

I say 'we together', and I mean by that the United Kingdom Government and the Colonial Governments, with the Colonial Office in the middle, linking the two and belonging to both.

"There is a story of a visitor to London walking along Whitehall during the war, gazing at the buildings and churches looking for some particular one. Eventually he stopped a passer-by and said: 'Excuse me, but could you tell me which side of the War Office on?' The answer was 'Ours, I believe.'

"Which side is the Colonial Office on? I have no difficulty in saying firmly: 'Yours, I believe.'

A Much Less Authoritarian Body

The whole nature of the work of the Colonial Office has changed profoundly since I came into it 21 years ago. The Colonial Office is much less an authoritarian body than it was in those days. In its relation with Colonial Governments, it has surrendered a good deal of its authority now that almost every Colony has a non-official majority in its Legislative Council and Finance Committee, and often the rudiments of a ministerial system.

Parallel with this development, owing largely to the war and the period of shortages, exchange difficulties, and so on which have followed the war, is the increasing complexity of post-war economic problems, and with the multiplicity of international organisations, there is now need for closer interests, as well as ours, to integrate their economic policies. The Colonial Empire much more closely with that of the U.K. itself and the rest of the world.

In the old days the Colonial Office enjoyed a great deal of independence in Whitehall. To-day owing a very much wider field it has to work as a team with other departments, and also to take part and keep track of the increasing international machinery to which I have referred. In other words, the Colonial Office has to a great extent lost its position of autonomy in both directions—in relation to Colonial Governments, and to the rest of Whitehall.

"I often think that our previous isolationism in Whitehall was a weakened and futile to other departments regarding the Colonies as a departmental hobby of the Colonial Office, instead of a national responsibility of H.M.G.

"To-day our rôle is not so much to control the Colonies but, in the economic field, of which I am speaking, (a) to provide them with services—money (C.D.W.S.) and advice which enable them to prosecute their plans of development; (b) to negotiate on their behalf with other departments and internationally, to safeguard and promote their interests and get them a proper place in the international stage; (c) to demand to represent to Colonial Governments the point of view of H.M.G. on general Commonwealth and world economic policy, and ask for their help when we need it in carrying out policies which we believe to be for the general good, even though sometimes they may involve some sacrifice of local interests. I regard (a) and (b) as our primary function, but I make no apology for including (c) among the functions of the modern Colonial Office.

Unfailing Help from the Treasury

There is to-day a wide inter-departmental interest in and sympathy towards the Colonies. We have received unfailing help in recent years from the much-maligned Treasury. They have really been splendid and remarkable in this case. I know of no recent case in which it could be said that Treasury obstructiveness—or anything else—had stood in the way of any important Colonial development.

"We work very closely with the Treasury and other departments whose activities have an important bearing on development such as the Ministry of Supply, Ministry of Transport, Board of Trade, Foreign Office, and Colonial Relations Office.

"There is a permanent inter-departmental committee on Colonial Development presided over by the Director of the Central Economic Planning Staff (I am vice-chairman), which has served a most useful purpose. It is mainly practical and educational. The members of the staff know each other's outlook and have rapidly become familiar with the basic problems of Colonial economies. As a result, the Colonial Office is increasingly on the ground floor in the formulation of policy for the disposition of the economic resources of the United Kingdom, instead of queuing up behind the 'are, of course, many other inter-departmental committees which we sit, and ultimately we can sit, matters individually or collectively."

"In the long run we get the best results and departmental negotiations by a common sense attitude—not backing any and every proposal of the Colonial Office—ministerial show-downs excepting of the most extreme cases. Otherwise we should simply go to bad and end up nothing from the Colonial Office, worse than bad and liable to rejection. We must exercise our judgment in such cases."

"Indeed, I would say that in the past the Treasury had probably done far more harm to the interests of the Colonies by over-enthusiastic support of what had been done in under-enthusiastic support of what had been done than not a difference of view between the Colonial Office and a Colonial Government, which between them conflict of interest between the U.K. and the colony, but is no more than an ordinary difference of view as to where the true interests of the colony lie and how best to attain them. If there is a difference, it is not clear about it and explain the position."

"I do not see anything inherently incompatible in the Kingdom seeking the co-operation of Colonial Governments in helping the U.K. King and Country. Another Commonwealth area, a sterling area, is the world's largest. In an independent world every community of people, whether in a sovereign country or in a British-governing colony, owes obligations of good-neighbourhood as well as justice and rights."

Threat to Uganda Cotton Industry Order against Proposed Nationalization

IN A LEADING ARTICLE a fortnight ago East Africa and Rhodesia said that the Secretary of State for the Colonies had rejected a plan for the nationalization of the Uganda cotton ginning industry which had been evolved after months of effort by the Uganda Cotton Association and accepted as satisfactory by the Government of Uganda.

We attributed this obstructionism by the political head of the Colonial Office to doctrinaire reasons, and argued that such cases made nonsense of the reiterated official claim that the policy was to offer Colonial governments all possible expert advice and guidance and then encourage them to make their own decisions in the light of local requirements.

On the very day on which that leading article was published in London, the president of the Uganda Chamber of Commerce, Mr. V. M. Clerk, referred at the annual general meeting of that body in Kampala which was attended by Sir John Hall, the Governor, to a proposal from the Colonial Office to nationalize the cotton ginning industry.

Enterprise of the Pioneers

Defects in the industry could be said to put right if Government wished to meekly rather than end the enterprise of the largest cotton-growing industry in the Colonial Empire. It could not be suggested that lack of enterprise lay behind the Secretary of State's intention, for the courage shown by the pioneers in Uganda was unexampled, and it had brought light and civilization to many areas previously inaccessible.

What lay behind "this pressure from the Colonial Office for nationalizing the industry which is so well organized?" It could not be for the purpose of ensuring participation by Africans for the industry itself shared official views in that respect, and had already leased ginneries for operation by the African co-operative society, and that co-operation would increase as the movement developed.

Action Which Would Frighten Capital

Mr. Clark recalled that the Governor had said during the budget session of the Legislative Council: "If industrial development is to become an accomplished fact, it is essential that leading industrialists and financiers in Uganda should have confidence in the future of Uganda." They are not going to invest millions or employ their technical knowledge and equipment in a country, however rich in natural resources, in whose 'political' or 'economic' stability they have little confidence."

Did the Colonial Office feel sufficiently to force nationalization upon the cotton ginning industry would sound the death knell to all private enterprise in the country, asked the president of the chamber. Capital would certainly want why of Uganda in that case and that at a time when there was a greater need ever for industrial development.

The Governor had recently stressed the need to encourage and stimulate the establishment of heavy and secondary industries. For total capital on a large scale would be required, and it would not be forthcoming if the Government were now to interfere with the existing cotton industry by forcing nationalization upon it.

The industry had always resented the official policy of bulk sales, and even the Government was now convinced that it was detrimental to the best interests of Uganda. Yet circumstances had made it necessary to enter into a trade agreement with India by which bulk selling of cotton was continued for a further three years, though admittedly with the qua pro quo of an assurance of piece-goods and jute return.

Uganda's cotton production ought to be raised to at least 500,000 bales a year, but in the immediate future that could not be done except by extending the area under the crop. Great expenditures were placed on the research work at Namulonge.

Governor's Dislike of Nationalization

Sir John Hall said in his course of his recent visit representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and the Cotton Association would be able to state their views in regard to nationalization to the Secretary of State when he visited the country in May.

He (the Governor) had hoped that bulk sales of cotton could be discontinued, but the threat of war and the demand for rearmament now compelled the Central African economy in hard currencies, the maintenance of currency controls, and others to ensure regular supplies of cotton at reasonable and stable prices. There must consequently be postponement of the date at which we can hope to escape from the circumscriptions of bulk selling and dispose of our crop in a free and competitive market."

He was convinced that the cotton crop in Uganda would be substantially increased even with the present acreage; indeed, an additional yield of no more than 200 lb per acre would raise the crop above the half-million bale mark, which was the present objective.

Kenya Legislative Council

A MOTION by MR. A. B. PATEL to abolish racial segregation for commercial and residential purposes was defeated in the Kenya Legislative Council by 22 votes to eight, the official members voting with the European elected members. Mr. Mathew pointed out that the status quo for land reserved for Africans would have to be maintained "not for racial but for economic reasons," as the land might be bought by the Indian community, which is the richer in Kenya.

DR. T. F. ANDREW, Director of Medical Services, introducing the Pharmacy and Poisons (Amendment) Bill, said: "Certain traders, mostly oil dealers, hold quite large stocks of poisons, whether they are suspected with good reason have come into their hands illegally. This black market is a pernicious and dangerous thing. A motion that the increases in the price of maize should not be passed to the consumer but made good by a subsidy was rejected by 23 votes to eight.

ASPHALT

A local legend at La Brea, Trinidad, describes how the famous pitch lake was once the site of an Indian village. The villagers offended the local deity by their persecution of the boojum birds (which were animated by the souls of dead Indians) and as a punishment they were engulfed in the pitch lake with their belongings.

In 1595 when on his ill-fated expedition to South America in search of El Dorado, Sir Walter Raleigh called at Trinidad. He made use of the pitch for caulkng his ships and reported that he found it "most excellent good" - an opinion which has since been endorsed by road makers in Great Britain and in many other parts of the world.

Statement of Dismissed MinisterMr. Halsted's Exposition

MR. R. F. HALSTED, lately Minister of Trade and Industrial Development in Southern Rhodesia, whose dismissal by Sir Godfrey Huggins we once made in our last number, has issued a statement which includes the following passage:

"If the petrol madge was the only consideration, I might have agreed to the Prime Minister's request for my resignation, unjust as it was in the interest of having a stable Government for the Colony."

For some time past there have been fundamental disagreements between the Minister of Finance (Mr. E. C. Whitehead) and myself. In more recent months I have been alone in the Cabinet in opposing some of the Minister's wider economic theories which he has been seeking to put into practice. In my opinion the Minister of Finance is a inflationist, and he is in his efforts at announcing a crisis as propounding some revolution in order to combat it. As a result of my intervention in the Cabinet discussions I have been able to some extent to curb the Minister. Again I stress that in recent months I have been alone in this.

"Had I therefore resigned? or the Prime Minister asked, I would in effect be leaving the Minister of Finance with very nearly free hand to put his theories into practice at the expense of the people of the Colony. Unconvinced it was therefore I decided in these circumstances to resign, even but to put it out and do what I could to act as a brake on the Minister. I believe now that it is only a question of time before the Minister of Finance brings the Government tottering down."

Oppose Rationing Scheme

Mr. Halsted then goes into some detail as to the course of the madge over petrol, saying that a proposal by the Minister of Finance for the immediate introduction of a full wartime petrol rationing scheme had been strenuously opposed by him just before he left Salisbury. It was a holiday; that Cabinet support for his (Mr. Halsted's) view was reversed while he was away; that he was not notified of the change and knew nothing about it until his return to the Colony some weeks later; that he then obtained some modification to the drastic scheme which had been accepted; and that he told his colleagues of his grave doubts whether the necessary arrangements could be made departmentally in the time.

The statement concludes: "I do not mean to gainsay the fact. I believe it is my duty to remain and carry on from the Government back benches the task which I am now unable to do in the Cabinet, the task of restraining the Minister of Finance from crippling the Colony by introducing his wild economic theories, theories designed always to curtail individual freedom and place more power and controls in the hands of the Minister of Finance and Government officials."

Problem Might Have Been Tackled Earlier

The Rhodesian Herald commented: —

"Mr. Halsted has as much right as the next man to stick to his guns, but if he had followed orthodox practice and asked to be relieved of his post, his ax would have been quite as effective and far more dignified. He could have written the usual letter of resignation, making clear his viewpoint, yet at the same time indicating that he did not wish to cause unnecessary embarrassment. When Mr. Halsted may easily claim that the policy decision was taken in his absence, and that he was therefore not responsible for it, the problem began some months at least before, and the recent confusion was to a large degree caused by the fact that it had not been tackled earlier."

Since the last general election Ministers have got out of touch with the electorate. Too many of us, while deplored unavoidable factors which make our own businesses far more difficult and less efficient than they used to be, fail to realize that these factors apply to the business of running a country. Ministers have become too deeply immersed in routine; they have not got about them among the public, or kept them sufficiently and intelligently informed as to what is going on. The new Government should make a determined effort to remedy this position."

The Bulawayo Chronicle wrote editorially: —

"The Prime Minister is notoriously loyal to colleagues particularly those of long standing, and it would seem that he endeavoured to withstand the pressure of several days, taking the opportunity also of putting some of the complaints of disgruntled members in their true perspective in relation to party and Government policy as a whole."

"The most surprising change is the appointment of Mr. W. A. E. Winterton, former Minister of Native Affairs and Public Health, to the Ministry vacated by Mr. Halsted. This portfolio is definitely overhaded, particularly in view of the part it will have to play in certain aspects of the defence programme."

"Mr. Winterton has not been a success in the House since he became a Minister, and has not yet learned the art of brevity in presenting a Native case. In his department, however, he has done well. He works hard, shows a keen desire to gain knowledge of his field, and prefers a talk across the table to a sheet of correspondence. His associations with trade and industry have probably been confined to legal aspects, and it may be that the Prime Minister considers that a man with preconceived ideas may see more clearly the national rather than the sectional interest."

Surveys by U.S. Engineers

TWO AMERICAN ENGINEERS, Mr. Edgar F. Foster and Mrs. Clarence M. Jackson, members of the United States Bureau of Reclamation, flew to Northern Rhodesia from London last week to explore the possibilities of increasing food production by utilizing the flood waters of the Kafue River for rice growing. Their survey, sponsored by the Colonial Office and the Economic Cooperation Administration, a third member of the Bureau of Reclamation, Mr. Theodore Ahrens, ground-water geologist, has been assigned to Italian Somaliland for four months to conduct a survey sponsored by the Italian Government and E.C.A.

Colonial Forces

COLONIAL MAN-POWER AND DEFENCE were debated in the House of Commons last week on an opposition motion regarding that the British Government "has failed to facilitate in co-operation with Colonial Governments the additional use of Colonial volunteers in defence of the causes of democratic freedom." An amendment moved by Captain W. Field (Lab.) that the Government should investigate the possibility of raising further forces in the Colonies and Dependencies was passed by 185 votes to three. The debate will be reported fully in next week's issue.

Blantyre and East Africa, Limited

Highest Profit Yet Achieved

Mr. J. W. H. Steedman's Review

THE FIFTY-SECOND ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF BLANTYRE AND EAST AFRICA, LIMITED, was held at the company's offices, 2 Charlotte Square, Edinburgh, on Monday, March 19, 1951.

MR. J. W. H. STEEDMAN, chairman of the Company, had circulated to shareholders with the report and accounts for the year ended September 30, 1950, a statement from which the following are extracts:

"The directors are again pleased to be able to present to the shareholders a satisfactory report for the year ended September 30, 1950."

Weather conditions on the tea estates were reasonably good, and the tea crop for the year amounted to 2,150,975 lb., as compared with 1,990,862 lb. in the previous year. The increase for the year was accordingly 180,113 lb., or 9%. The crop from the various estates was as follows: Lauderdale, 822,695 lb.; Glenorchy, 411,382 lb.; Limbuli, 724,798 lb.; Zoa, 212,100 lb.

During the year additional tea acreage was planted on Glenorchy and Limbuli Estates, and the planted area of the company's tea estates at September 30, 1950, was 2,759 acres, of which 65 acres were immature.

Increased Costs

Costs again continued to advance during the year. In particular our expansion programme was affected by a surcharge of 60% on the ocean freight of machinery and other requirements between the United Kingdom and Beira. That surcharge has recently been removed and a new "phasing" scheme for cargo to Beira has come into operation. This, however, has been easier generally, and the congestion at the port of Beira has been somewhat relieved.

Unfavourable weather conditions throughout the planting and growing season adversely affected the tea crop. The total amount of fresh and flu-cured tea delivered to our factory from our estates and the auction floors amounted to 2,150,975 lb.

The tea crop was normal, but the downward trend in the price received for tea oil during the year under review was disappointing. We understand that more favourable prices are now expected.

Financial Results

Taking into account profits and losses, you will see that our net profit before taxation was £100,000, being the highest figure which your Company has yet achieved. Other income is also slightly higher, and with the balance brought forward from last year, there is a total disposable amount of £15,170. Taxation absorbed £1,000, leaving £49,000 and the directors suggest for your approval that there should be placed to the general reserve account £10,000, and to the suspense account for buildings and machinery £20,000.

Please note that this sum indicates the year the company has expended over £200,000 on additional machinery and fittings required on the various estates, and these still remain to be done to bring our tea factories in line with the increasing needs and into modern-day manufacturing practice. It is therefore suggested that no decision should be made on this proposal.

The Company has constituted a surveyor to complete some work on the Mwazi Estate. This status of the surveyor of Mwazi Mountainland is well watered, with a favourable rainfall, and consists of three excellent tea-growing land. They have therefore made a beginning with its development as a tea estate and a course of time it is hoped to make it a self-contained unit with its own factory and other buildings. The completion of that development will, of course, be possible for some years.

The remaining items of the profit and loss account and the balance-sheet will be readily followed. You may remember that last year reference was made in this review to negotiations with the Nyasaland Government for the acquisition by them for Native settlement of certain areas of undeveloped land. These negotiations have resulted to date in the transfer to Government of some 26,000 acres; and other individual sales to private persons have also been concluded. The net result is that the estates now stand in the balance-sheet at the sum of £16,857—a very conservative estimate of the company's property in Nyasaland.

Dividend Policy

It gives your directors pleasure to be able to recommend a somewhat increased dividend and while they are always hopeful of stabilizing dividends, it must not be taken that this can be repeated every year. This rate of dividend is in complete conformity with a policy of moderation and restraint in the distribution of profits. It is equivalent to only a small percentage on the capital employed by the company as represented by the balance sheet figures. It is no new thing for this company to exercise moderation and restraint, for that is its traditional policy. Only by careful husbandry and rigorous self-denial over the past 52 years has it been possible to build up our resources and develop our estates to their present strength and capacity.

You will naturally want to have some idea of what the coming year may have in store for us, but I am afraid that it is not possible to be very definite at that point. Up to the end of 1950 there has been a policy of bulk buying of tea by the Ministry of Food. This arrangement had various advantages, especially during the period of transition following the war.

Re-opening of Tea Auctions

It has now been arranged that the London tea auction should be reopened in April, 1951. Briefly, the effect of this will be that our tea, instead of being taken over in Africa by the Ministry of Food, will be consigned to London auctions. As these have not yet started, it is impossible for your directors to say what their trend will be. This new arrangement will have one disadvantage, and that is that we shall require to finance our tea production for an additional period estimated about five months before receiving payment for our consignments. In view of our considerable production, this will certainly involve a large part of our liquid resources.

Ross Stark's Services

I cannot conclude this review without making special reference to the fact, which you will have noticed in the directors' official report, that Mr. R. Ross Stark has had to be released from the position of managing director. I need not tell you how sorry we all are that Mr. Stark has found it necessary to come to this decision. His initiative and drive have been throughout the

Another port is at present under construction at Mtwaru in Southern Tanganyika for the groundnut scheme, in connexion with which many miles of new railway have been built.

Within these 50 odd years the Railway has been a chief agent in the amazingly rapid progress of the territories. It is true that progress continues. In 1950 freight tonnage was 117 per cent heavier than it was 50 years previously, and passenger journeys increased in the same time by 300 per cent.

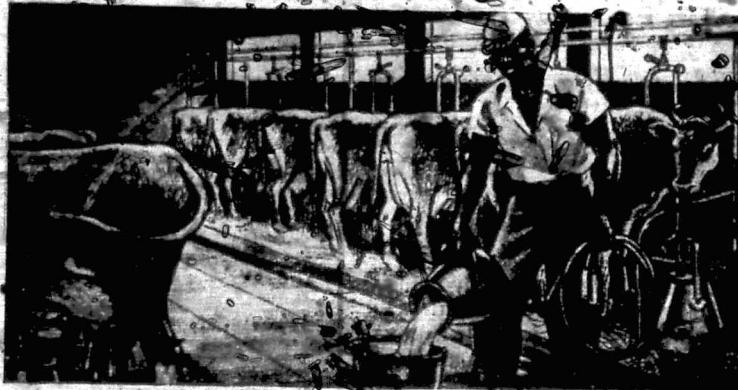

The Railway, proud of its past record and alive to its present responsibilities, is sparing no effort to maintain and speed the development of East Africa.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

THE PROSPECT that tropical Africa may within the next half century become mainly Christian is suggested by Bishop Stephen Neill, associate general secretary of the World Council of

Africa has Become Churches, in a most Mainly Christian interesting report on his recent tour of East and Central Africa. His commission was to make a survey of the present scope and future requirements of theological education, but he has interpreted his terms of reference with such wide and welcome breadth that the resultant report contains much of general importance. By permission of the International Missionary Council we are able to quote many striking passages from the report, and we commend them to the notice of readers generally, especially those who are engaged in public life. Probably few people are aware that Christian missions in Africa have grown more rapidly than those anywhere else in the world, and many may not realize that the admitted weaknesses in the African churches are largely due to the great rapidity of this progress, to inadequate spiritualizing of converts from primitive paganism, and to the indifferent education of most African catechists and some of the African clergy. Bishop Neill faces these facts quite squarely, and lays stress on the need to produce thoroughly educated ministers.

One striking fact which he emphasizes, and which we do not recall ever having heard mentioned by anyone else, is that more than three out of four of the students now enrolled in colleges in East and says Bishop Neill, that the future leadership of East and West Africa will be "in some sense Christian," adding that "the extent and nature of the Christianity will depend on the actions not of the colleges but of the Churches." Extension of the work of the Student Christian Movement is meantime recommended. What the author has not proposed—doubtless because his interest was theological education, not education as a whole—is that special care should be taken in selecting men and women for appointment to the staffs of non-mission colleges in Africa. If they are Communists or fellow-travellers, as some have been in recent years, more than ready to parade their contempt for religion, they may seriously damage the faith of young African Christians, and inculcate purely material conceptions in them and other pupils. There is all too much evidence of the materialistic outlook of many young African students, and one evident need is to give them other and better standards.

In the first place this is a personal matter, but it is also one of public importance, for those who take one or other of the courses at Makerere or any of the comparative institutions of higher education elsewhere in Africa must be expected to exercise increasing influence over their fellow Africans by having enjoyed the coveted advantages of instruction, automatically inherit a prestige which strengthens their influence, whether it be good or bad. If it be bad, they can do almost infinite harm; if it be good, they can spread beneficial influence of great value. We have often written in these pages of the high importance of leadership at this stage of Africa's development, and to produce the right kind of African leaders is quite as necessary as it is to produce wise leadership among Europeans, Asians, and Arabs.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES of the Secretary of State for the Colonies in respect of the Colonial Development Corporation have still not been adequately defined.

Secretary of State And the C.D.C.

The activities of the corporation are in line with Colonial policy and in keeping with the general public interest. But held that he should not become involved in intervention in day-to-day administration or in the preparation or investigation of the technical and commercial merits of individual schemes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd—who may be Secretary of State for the Colonies in the next Conservative Government—referred to that still left the Minister open to the risk of misleading Parliament about the corporation by making unreliable statements which it had itself provided, adding that that had admittedly happened. In the same debate a Socialist member, Mr. Ellis Smith, charged the former chairman of the corporation, Lord Trefgarne, with having withheld adverse reports on important C.D.C. activities not only from the Secretary of State but even from his own board, and it is astonishing that the Minister of State, Mr. Dugdale, made no attempt whatever to deal with that damaging accusation, riding off with the allegation that the Opposition was inspired by personal and party hostility to Lord Trefgarne, perhaps because he was at one time a Labour M.P. But, as we have stated, it was a Socialist speaker, not a Conservative, who made that most serious indictment.

Is it not part of the duty of the Secretary of State to satisfy himself, in consultation with the Treasury whenever necessary, that public funds entrusted to the corporation are being satisfactorily expended? He and his chief advisers have, we suggest, been placed by Parliament in a position analogous to that of the chairman and board of a great commercial undertaking which controls subsidiary companies, each with its own chairman and board. In such a situation the parent organization avoids hampering a subsidiary by frivolous interference, but keeps in the closest contact with its operations, plans, and senior personnel in order to satisfy itself that unwarranted risks are not being taken, and that any errors made are corrected as quickly and economically as possible. Similar action could easily be arranged by the Colonial Office. Almost certainly, without addition to its system of advisers, who already cover almost every major subject, or to its staffs in every territory in which the C.D.C. may operate.

It is upon the Secretary of State that constitutional responsibility for the corporation rests, and in the exercise of that responsibility to Parliament and the public, he ought also to take that Official View, ever steps are necessary to ensure a regular and adequate flow of information.

The corporation has broken one after another to provide regular progress reports, and the Secretary of State has failed to insist that that unsatisfactory state of affairs shall end. Would it not also be reasonable for him to satisfy himself that the most important appointments made by the corporation are wise? The chairman or managing director of a commercial corporation would automatically take that precaution in regard to subsidiary companies, for every business man knows that the right leader can produce results in adverse circumstances whereas the wrong man may fail even if the prospects are favourable. For these reasons we hold the view that Mr. Griffiths has given too narrow an interpretation of his responsibilities.

THE COLONIAL OFFICE THREAT

to nationalize the cotton ginning industry of Uganda, which was criticized in these columns a fortnight ago, was, by a coincidence, denounced that same day in Kampala by the president of the Threat of Nationalization. Uganda Chamber of Commerce in the presence of the Governor, Sir John Hall, who replied merely that those affected could see the Secretary of State when he visits the country in May. That assuredly means that Sir John Hall shares the view of the industry (as we stated in our leading article), for if he had disagreed with any major point made by the commercial spokesman he would naturally have said so. He referred at length to other points raised by Mr. Clerkland and it was only on the subject of cotton that he refrained from comment. Yet the president of the chamber had quoted effectively from the Governor's budget speech, which emphasized that the millions of pounds now needed to develop secondary industries could be obtained only if British industrialists and financiers had confidence in the political and economic stability of Uganda. Mr. Clark asked pointedly how they could have that confidence if nationalization were now to be forced upon the leading cotton industry in the Colonial Empire. Perhaps the Secretary of State for the Colonies would answer that question.

Notes By The Way

Northern Rhodesian Loan

THOUGH ITS TERMS WERE BETTER than those of the recent Southern Rhodesian loan, last week's Northern Rhodesian 3½% issue of £5m. in London fared much worse, the underwriters being left with no less than 94%. The authorities and the underwriters were the victims of a sudden and relatively severe weakening in markets here and in the United States. There the chief influences were the approaching budget, sharp fears about developments over Persian oil, the unsatisfactory export figures for February, anxiety about inadequate stocks of raw materials and future commodity prices and the set-back on Wall Street. Between decisions on the terms of the loan and the opening day these factors produced their unfavourable effect.

Unfortunate Market Condition

SIX MONTHS AGO Southern Rhodesia raised a 3½% loan in London at par for a 30 to 35 year period, and underwriters had to take up 43%. Northern Rhodesia shortened the term to 19-21 years and issued the stock at 99, thus offering the public considerably improved terms, which, when the prospects first became available, were regarded as just about right. The market in the scrip opened on Friday at 2 discount on the issue price and considerable institutional buying was reported, suggesting investors regarding the stock as cheap at 97 or thereabouts. The disappointing public response was essentially due to the state of the market, not to lack of confidence in Northern Rhodesia or to special dissatisfaction with the prospects.

Is This Education?

THAT THE EDUCATION OF AFRICA is still very intelligent at times is suggested by the questions at some examinations. Bishop J. Holmes Siedle, a white Father well known in Tanganyika, has sent to the Dar es Salaam Standard those set in a recent geography paper to African boys and girls in Standard 8, most of whom were about 16 or 17 years of age. They were given two minutes each to answer questions such as the following: Where is there a rift valley in Germany? Write down the names of the Black Mountains in Germany? Does the Si Kiang have a delta or an estuary? Name three things made from the wood of coniferous trees. Draw and label on a blank map of Europe the Meseta and Carpathian mountains and the Lanarkshire coalfields.

Preparation for what Life?

WILL ANYONE HOLD that such questions suggest that the best use can have been made of the time of the scholars who were expected to grapple with such queries? What proportion of the readers of this newspaper, educationists included, would be sure of scoring a pass under such testing? And to what imaginable use are young Africans supposed to put such knowledge if they acquire it? Education is supposed to be wise propagation for life. This travesty suggests to me at any rate a most unwise waste of time and opportunity.

High Tea

HOW MANY AIR TRAVELLERS to and from Africa realize, as they sip their tea in the air, that it is a very special brew? Since the boiling point of water (121° at sea-level) drops one degree for approximately every 330 feet of altitude, it boils at 11,000 feet at about 192°—a temperature insufficient to infuse the tea leaves properly. Such conditions are partially corrected by the "pressurizing" of all Q.A.C. air-lines, but boiling-point is nonetheless still several degrees lower than normal. A special tea has therefore been blended for B.Q.A.C. Stewards and stewardesses pre-heat all equipment and add an extra measure of sugar to the tea at 10,000 feet. Dwellers in lofty areas like Molo in Kenya please hold.

An Invitation

NO PART OF THE EMPIRE can have among its European population a larger proportion of ex-Servicemen than the British East and Central African Dependencies, so an exceptional appeal must therefore be made by an ex-Service organization able to claim without exaggeration that it is unique. An organization of that character—and it has great character—has told me that if it would particularly welcome visits from European and Rhodesians when they are in the country, and I pass on the invitation with pleasure, for acceptance of it by readers would bring joy to those who have a special tie to it. I refer to the Star and Garter Home at Richmond, Surrey, for sailors, soldiers and airmen who were crippled in the service of their country. There are 169 of them in the home at present, about half from the 1914-18 war and the others from the 1939-45 conflict. They are members of an amazingly happy community; but they are eager for visits, especially from those coming home from overseas. No prior appointment need be made.

Tropical Africa Might Be Mainly Christian in Fifty Years

How Churches Should Meet the Challenge of Materialism*

THE FUTURE OF TROPICAL AFRICA will be determined in the next 20 years. If the Churches rise to the opportunity, that future might be set firmly and unalterably in the Christian direction.

The part played by Christians in the life of the African countries is so remarkable as to hold out the hope that in 50 years tropical Africa might be in the main a Christian continent. The forces of Islam are still aggressive, but less is heard of the Modern menace than before. A far greater danger is the sheer materialism, consequent on the rapid and destructive effects of the application of mechanical power to African life, which may become the "religion" of educated and semi-educated young Africa.

A Church does not flourish unless its ordained leadership is adequate to the spiritual needs of the lay people of the Church and able to take its part, with insight and courage, in the development of national as well as of ecclesiastical life. In these tasks the training of the ministry in Africa should have the almost first priority in the whole scope of the Christian enterprise to-day.

Africa was one of the earliest fields of Christian enterprise, but more than any part of the world it manifests that fluctuating and uncertain character of Christian progress. After the disaster of the Muslim invasions, little was done for Africa until the Portuguese took up the task again in the 15th century.

Importance of Training in Africa

Probably there is not a Christian Church or mission in tropical Africa which does not wish to keep open for some of its African members the possibility of a period of study and training in one of the countries in which the Christian Church has had a longer history than it has in Africa. There would seem, however, general agreement that such a period abroad should be preceded by extensive theological and ministerial training in Africa, and should be regarded either as special training for special responsibilities, or as a normal part of theological education. The availability of training in the West should not be accepted as an excuse for failing to provide the easiest means for adequate theological training in Africa itself.

In the early stages of almost every mission the first ordained ministers are trained individually or in very small groups by missionaries with whom the students reside on terms of subordination as existed between St. Paul and the young friends he accompanied or represented him in the evangelistic enterprises of the apostolic period. This method has very much to commend it, and cannot easily be wholly replaced by any other. Until recently it has been the method followed in the highly successful mission of the Church Missionary Society in the Southern Sudan.

But this type of training is expensive in man-power and strength. Inevitably it tends to strengthen the devotional rather than, and sometimes at the expense of, the doctrinal; and too great influence on the part of one greatly loved teacher can make the pupil unresponsive to other influences in the life of the Church by which also he might well profit. Even where the individual method has been abandoned, only with regret, almost every mission has in course of time been driven to the foundation of a theological school or college.

* Being extracts quoted by permission of the International Missionary Council from Bishop Stephen Neill's report on his survey of theological education in East and West Africa.

The East African is inclined to be a little resentful of what he considers to be the superior air given himself by the West African. West Africa is not readily accessible to the east that it might have some useful things to learn from East Africa. Those transferred from one side of the continent to the other have not always found it possible to adapt themselves to the new conditions, and have not always been successful in their work. Nevertheless, to the visitor from Europe or Asia the resemblances seem much greater than the contrasts.

Almost everywhere there is the sense of a vast, empty, largely undeveloped country. Except in some of the most fertile and densely populated areas, humanity seems to be holding on precariously to its environment, rather than to be in process of successfully subduing it. There is the omnipresence of the African tribe system, richly diversified within itself, but presenting similar features in widely separated areas. There is the almost universal phenomenon of erosion and the degradation of the soil, in fighting which at last the efforts of enlightened Governments seem to be crowned with a measure of success.

Short History of Christian Influence

From the Christian point of view, what impressively impresses the visitor is the newness of everything. The first baptism among the wild and intelligent Kikuyu took place only in 1896, that in the Lusanza region of Kenya in 1908. The great church in Uganda have been built with the memory of living men since the great persecution of 1886. The first ordination of an African as a deacon in the Universities' Mission to Central Africa took place only in 1879.

In number of growth the missions in Africa have outstripped those in every other part of the world. Recent estimates suggest that the population of the continent may be as much as 200 million and that 12 million are within the Christian constituency. For our present purpose we shall take the seven millions of Coptic and Ethiopian Christians and the perhaps two million Europeans, mainly in the south. Even here the situation in little over a century of churches numbering 13 million of adherents is most memorable. In India, after four centuries of missions, slightly more than 2% of the population is Christian. In tropical Africa the proportion of Christians seems to be not less than 10%.

In some states of Christians in these areas is not less remarkable. There are wide areas in which very chief importance is a Christian, though it must be admitted that those who are nominally Christian are the majority for one reason or another are not in good standing in their respective churches.

The crudity of process is one of the greatest causes of weakness in the African churches. The resources available have been quite insufficient to provide adequate shepherding for those who have come in from a background of primitive paganism and heathenism, more than a rarer purged course of elementary instruction in the Christian faith if they are to be delivered from the old patterns of traditional thought into a real understanding of the Christian Gospel and its demands. It makes on the average a poor allegiance to it.

Shortage of Ordained Ministers

The shortage of trained and ordained ministers is one of the most serious weaknesses in the equipment of the Church. The great majority of African Christians live in small and scattered groups, and the West makes adequate supervision and spiritual care more difficult than in countries where the hierarchical system in its fullness has long been established. In Uganda, for example, there is on the average only one ordained minister for 5,000 baptized Christians.

There are areas in which the Roman Catholic missionaries outnumber the Protestants by 10 to 1, and the number is still increasing. It can hardly be doubted that the Roman Church consciously aims at turning tropical Africa into Roman dominion, and perhaps by this means recouping the forces that it has suffered elsewhere.

The gravest weakness of the Roman system in Africa is that everywhere the non-Roman African ministry exceeds by far more than 10 to one the Roman African priesthood. The reason for this can be given in a single phrase—the insistence on celibacy. Elsewhere, in some Uniat Churches, the Church of Rome has a married priesthood, but has so far shown no signs of creating a Uniat church in tropical Africa. It is notorious that the maintenance of genuine celibacy is extremely difficult under the conditions of African life, and specially among those who have come recently out of tribal conditions.

After a number of disappointments, the Church of Rome has become extremely cautious in the ordination of Africans to the priesthood. Whereas the Anglican Communion has seven African bishops, the Roman Church has only one (Mr. Kiwunuka, in Uganda); and it was said to me by Africans that Mr. Kiwunuka has resided so long in Rome as almost to have ceased to be an African. It was also stated by Africans that the African Roman priests are kept under such close supervision by the European missionaries as to feel themselves permanently in a dependent position. At a time when the African claim to independence and equality is so extremely strong, this weakness on the side of the African ministry cannot but work against the progress of the Roman Church and its real integration with the life of Africa.

To some extent the shortage of African ministers is compensated for by the work of lay ministers. These are numbered by thousands. In fact, the village catechist, with his slender qualifications and very modest pay, is the real hero of the Christian situation in Africa. A bear testimony to the wonderful faithfulness and devotion of a class of men who carry on under conditions of great isolation, and little spiritual help, and according to their lights shepherd the flock of Christ in the face of difficulties that might well daunt the heart of those who have had far greater privileges in the way of Christian background and instruction.

Debt to African Clergy

In every area, evidence came before me of weakness and failures in spiritual depth, in practical efficiency, even in moral conformity to the demands of a Christian few. Nevertheless, it would not be right to go further without placing on record a conviction as to the immense debt which the Church owes to its African clergy. Few of them scholars, few rare saints, few outstanding leaders. But cannot the same be said of the clergy in Europe and in America?

We are told in scripture that it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful. Judged by this standard, the African ministers had not, negatively or comparatively with their brethren in other lands, especially if allowance is made for the immensely greater difficulties with which they have to contend. But we must add that in the main the African clergy are far from being adequate to the demands that must be made upon them if the Church is to fulfil its rôle. This is getting education, and for the first time finding its place on the general stage of human history. The man to whom spiritual responsibility is committed must be aware of the changed world in which he lives and able himself to play a part in it.

General Educational Foundation

Most African clergy have started life as village catechists under the aegis of elementary training which they have begun their work as preachers of the Gospel. They have then been brought in again for one or two periods of training as catechists, and then finally for a further period of training for the ordained ministry. On the whole, this theological training is well done within the limits of what is possible under present conditions. The weakness is not so much in the training itself, as in the inadequacy of the general educational foundation on which it rests. Many African clergy have received hardly any general education at all.

For a very long time the African Churches will need many ministers of the old type, whose qualities of faithfulness and devotion can find their outlet in the service of the village congregations. Equally, if the young generation is to be held in the service of the Church, it will need the pastoral care of ministers who have themselves been educated from within the new context of African life, understand its new problems, and can discharge its new needs. Our concern is to consider how, with the minimum of dislocation, the necessary new can be joined to the indispensable old.

Deportation of Uganda African Leader Debated

Allegation of Mr. Fenner Brockway in Musazi Case

THE DEPORATION from Uganda of Mr. Ignatius Musazi was the subject of an adjournment debate in the House of Commons last week at the instance of Mr. FENNER BROCKWAY (Labour).

He said that Mr. Musazi, president of the Uganda African Farmers' Union, with 80,000 members, represented the peasant and farming population of the Protectorate. Visited Britain in 1949, was object of explanation to the Colonial Secretary on the difficulties which Uganda African farmers had in making arrangements for gaining their freedom. He also wished to study the British co-operative movement, so that on returning to Uganda he could develop the organization of the farmers on co-operative lines. The Secretary of State had, however, not seen him.

Charges against Mr. Musazi

In April, 1949, Mr. Brockway claimed that disturbances broke out in Uganda. There is no offence whatsoever that Mr. Musazi had anything to do with those disturbances at all. The only offence made against him, in connexion with those disturbances, was that he sent a telegram to the Colonial Secretary relating to that was sent to the Governor of Uganda.

"As that telegram was not published until nine months after the disturbances it obviously could have had no effect in encouraging the disturbances at all. I am not defending that telegram, though. Mr. Musazi himself puts a very different interpretation on what appears in the Kingdom report."

There are two other charges only made against Mr. Musazi. The first was in 1939, when he was charged with forging signatures to a petition. In actual fact the bone fides of the signatures were recognized, and because of that the charge had to be changed to transferring signatures from one petition to another. He denies absolutely that he was guilty but he was found to be guilty and was sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment. The offence committed 12 years ago, cannot possibly justify deportation from Uganda.

The other charge against him is that he participated in a general strike in Uganda in 1945. On that occasion he deserved his defence and asked for a public trial. A public trial was refused. Nevertheless, he was deported for two years for conspiracy with intent to overthrow the Protectorate and the Buganda Government. I have understood the greatest carelessness about Mr. Musazi's attitude in his country and in Uganda. He is an entirely convinced that his influence throughout that country was for moderation and against violence.

Urgent Call for Complete Confidence

I went to Uganda immediately after my detailed investigation of this matter. I came to the conclusion that the charges against Mr. Musazi's organization are justified; that the charges against Mr. Musazi himself are not justified. I could not find a single man in Uganda who believed that Mr. Musazi should not be prevented from returning, except of course the Government officials.

The Bishop of Uganda expressed his complete confidence in Mr. Musazi. The staff of Makerere College expressed complete confidence in him. Professional men and business men expressed their complete confidence in him. I have known this man closely myself for nearly two years and I say that there is not an atom of violence or vengeance in him. There are very few men of whose character I have greater respect.

Mr. Brockway alleged that the Government had since found out that everything he had said about Mr. Musazi's organization was true: they had admitted that, while in detention, Mr. Musazi was developing himself to build up the Uganda farmers' movement on a constructive basis. The Colonial Secretary had been gravely misled.

He [Mr. Brockway] had been assured by the Colonial Secretary that Mr. Musazi would be free to live under conditions in which his wife and children could join him, and where representatives of his organization would have access to him. The facts were that Mr. Musazi had five children at school, and, with the allowances which would be given if his wife lived with him in the village of deportation (Moyo), she would have to go on working in order to maintain the children at school. It was impossible for her to join him. Moreover, since Moyo was a two-day journey, what chance was there for representatives of the farmers' union to discuss matters with him?

The honest thing would be for the Uganda Government and the Colonial Secretary to acknowledge that a mistake had been made both in the organization and the man.

Mr. J. GRIMOND (Lab.) reported Mr. Brockway said. He believed that the Colonial Secretary was sympathetic to some alteration in the system by which people could apparently be deported or detained without trial in the sense in which the British people regarded a trial.

Mr. N. DODDS (Lab.) said that the Co-operative members in the House were satisfied that the action taken had been a terrible blot on Colonial administration.

Secretary of State's reply

THE SECRETARY OF STATE. Mr. J. Griffiths replied that he was examining with the Governors the existing powers of deportation.

The Uganda African Farmers' Union, formed by Mr. Musazi, has believed that the arrangements made for the sale of their cotton to the ginneries and the conditions under which these sales were effected were not all that they should have been. That in itself was a problem. The future of the ginning industry—in which a promising co-operative movement was developing—was being given considerable attention.

In April, 1953, there were disturbances which led to loss of life and some considerable damage to property. My predecessor appointed a commission of high judicial experience and with the highest qualities to make an inquiry. The commission recorded a finding which was that the disturbances were the result of activity by the Uganda Farmers' Union, which Musazi formed, and the Bataka party. These were held to be primarily responsible for organizing what the agent of the commissioners termed as a planned rebellion.

On the evidence I have examined I think my predecessor was right in accepting the findings of the inquiry. The position under Uganda law at that time was that no charge could be made in regard to any event six months after the event came into place. Therefore no charge has been made against Mr. Musazi. But he and another leader of another party were both held responsible for this planned rebellion.

The Governor of a Colonial territory is responsible for its security, and he must bear that in mind, particularly where there have been experiences which have not been happy. There had been tragic experiences in Uganda. Planned rebellion which leads to loss of life is not something to be treated lightly, and a Governor has to take the steps which he may think necessary to prevent further disturbances taking place.

Mr. Musazi is in detention in Mombasa. He is provided with lodgings, quarters, and arrangements have been made for his wife and children to be with him. Mr. Brockway thinks that the allowance made to Mr. Musazi is inadequate. That is a matter of opinion. He is not kept in a prison. During the daytime he is allowed out within the precincts of the town."

Mr. Griffiths said that it would be found by which Mr. Musazi would co-operate with the Government. That did not prevent him from calling off from saying that the Ordinance was not all it should be, but it was desirable that the farmers' union should be brought within the ordinance.

When the Governor is satisfied that it is possible to have Mr. Musazi freed from all restraint then he will be allowed to return to his area. When he does I hope it will be his major and only concern to develop the co-operative movement, and that we shall have no more planned rebellions, no disturbances, and no loss of life."

Question Time

Mr. J. JOHNSON (Lab.) asked if the Colonial Secretary would sponsor publication of an atlas of the Colonial Empire.

MR. DUGDALE: "The Colonial Secretary is well aware that the maps are lacking in the Colonial territories. To remedy this defect the Central Directorate of Colonial Surveys was set up in 1946 and is turning our work as fast as available resources permit."

Mr. G. B. CRADDOCK (Cons.) asked the number of cotton gins in Uganda; how many were operating during the present cotton season, and how many were owned by Europeans, Asians, and Africans respectively.

MR. DUGDALE: "There are 134 ginneries of which 122 are owned by Europeans, 171 by Asians and one by Africans. 155 ginneries are being operated during the 1953-54 cotton season, including 12 owned by Europeans, 131 by Asians, and one by African. The Protectorate Government has leased one of the Asian-owned ginneries to the ranch and sub-lets it to the African Co-operative Union, which is also operating one African-owned ginnery."

Mr. CRADDOCK asked the Colonial Secretary if he was aware of the serious deterioration of the soil in the Machakos area of Kenya.

MR. DUGDALE: "Yes. The Kenya Government is fully aware of the serious situation in Machakos, which has been aggravated by an unprecedented two years' drought. A series of relief and resettlement areas have been and are being developed stretching from Kibwezi to Makueni. No less than 132 small dams and 16 larger dams have been built in Machakos Reserve during the last three years, and much work has been done to rehabilitate over-populated areas. Steps are being taken at present to strengthen staff in the area with a view to obtaining increased contribution from the local African population, without which the progress can not be achieved."

Mr. J. JOHNSON (Lab.) asked the numbers of people entering Northern Rhodesia in 1948, 1949, and 1950, and how many had come from the Union of South Africa.

MR. DUGDALE: "The figures are as follows: 1948, 6,733 (5,166); 1949, 7,519 (4,462); 1950, nine months, 5,692 (3,522). The figures for the first quarter of 1950 are not yet available, but it is estimated that 50% of immigration into Northern Rhodesia from the Union of South Africa was offset by repatriation, and 25% of immigration from the United Kingdom is similarly offset."

MR. J. HORN (Lab.) asked when the last census of Rhodesia was taken the Government intended to take a census of the African population, and the reasons why a census had not been carried out earlier.

MR. DUGDALE: "District commissioners in Northern Rhodesia have carried out an annual population count for many years. It was decided recently not to hold a full census on normal lines, but to undertake a detailed demographic survey on a sample of villages. This inquiry which was carried out in the latter part of 1950 gave comparative numbers and rates of births and deaths as well as population estimates. The analysis of the results of the inquiry is not yet available."

African Colonial Forces

MR. ALPORT asked the Secretary of State for War whether he had any statement to make regarding the Government's policy for the organization and employment of African Colonial units in the event of emergency.

MR. M. STEWART: "The importance of the use of African Colonial units in an emergency is fully recognized, and plans to this end are now being examined."

MR. ALPORT: "Does not the hon. gentleman realize that the Commander-in-Chief has recently had to deny rumours that African troops were being used exclusively in frontier and labour units, and does not he agree that it is very important that the Government should get into a clear statement on this matter at an early date in order to check any decrease in the morale of the African units?"

MR. M. STEWART: "Meanwhile, of course, it is important that rumours of that kind should not be spread."

Mr. Welensky on Gold Coast Elections

Criticism of Colonial Secretary

CITICISM of the Colonial Secretary's comments on the Gold Coast election has been made by Mr. Roy Welensky, leader of the non-official members of the Northern Rhodesian Legislative Council.

"If Mr. Griffiths has been correctly reported," he said in Crooked Hills, "I think it fair to tell him that the vast majority of Europeans in Southern and Central Africa do not agree with him if it is the aim of the British Government to repeat the policy which has been applied to India, Pakistan and Burma, the great majority of Europeans in Colonial Africa will back me in saying that we will resist with the utmost vigour any attempt to apply that policy here."

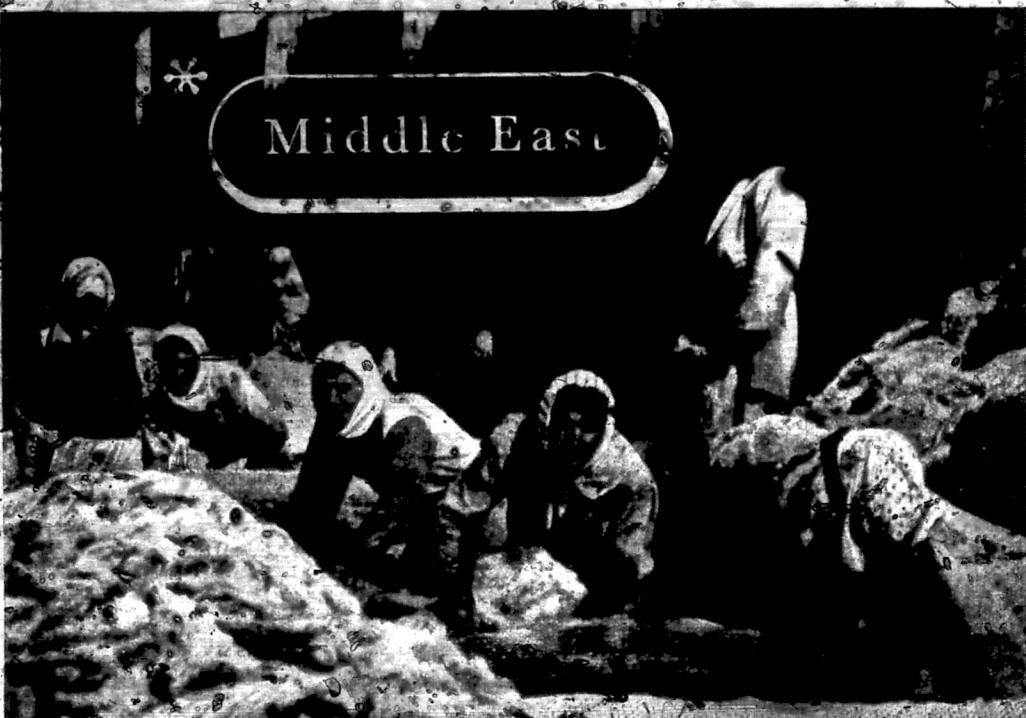

"The Government in Britain has been caught up in its own folly, but we will not stand idly aside and see Northern Rhodesia ruined by the same stupid error. The British Government must realize that it is useless to talk of partnership and in the same breath insist that Northern Rhodesia is to go the way of Burma, India and the Gold Coast."

Mr. Welensky, who is himself a Socialist, also said at the beginning of this week that given the minimum of interference from London, Central Africa could formulate a policy which would allow Europeans and Africans to join in governing and developing the country to the best advantage. He described as "arrant nonsense" the view of the Socialist Government in Great Britain that democracy was merely a counting of heads, for democracy could work reasonably well only with a reasonably qualified electorate. He accepted the policy of equal rights for all civilized men."

WOOL WASHING AT DEPPON, SYRIA

Wool being baled for shipment.

Wool washing at Deppon, Syria, is one of the more picturesque activities of The United Africa Company in the Middle East. It imports cocoa, textile and machinery from Turkey; exports tobacco and cigarette manufacture, cooking oil. It trades extensively in Iraq, and operates the most modern date packing station in the territory. It acts as shipping agent up and down the Persian Gulf.

Operating from the Bosphorus to the Gulf of Oman, sometimes as agent or trader, sometimes as manufacturer, the Company, or its local subsidiary, deals in a range of produce, merchandise and capital goods which, for sheer diversity, would baffle the imagination of the author of the Arabian Nights.

United States and Colonies Views Changed Last 10 Years

MR. IVOR THOMAS has contributed an interesting article to The Times of the United States attitude to Colonies. He wrote, inter alia:

"Until recently it was not possible, outside Anglophilic circles, as many savages have found, to get a fair hearing in the United States for the British handling of Colonies and other Imperial questions. 'Empire' was a dog with a very bad name."

In the past few years, however, a great transformation has taken place in the official American attitude and to a large extent in that of the American press and public.

The beginnings of a better understanding may be dated to the agreement in 1940 for the lease of naval and air bases in the British West Indies whereby, in Mr. Churchill's phrase, the British Empire and the United States became 'mixed up together in some of their affairs for mutual and general advantage.' Two years later the Anglo-American Caribbean Commission was set up. Not the least of its contributions has been the insight which it gave the American members into the true objectives of Colonial rule as opposed to the caricatures.

In 1943 such an insight was by no means common in high places, and the proposals made for the supervision of dependent territories by the projected United Nations were sometimes dictated by 'good intentions' rather than by knowledge.

Fixed Dates for Independence

According to a proposal of Mr. Cordell Hull, endorsed by the President, the Colonial Powers were to be called upon to fix, so soon as possible, the dates upon which Colonial peoples under them would be granted full independence within a system of general security. Such a proposal to fix dates of independence is still sometimes heard in the United Nations, but not usually with American support.

It is perhaps not surprising that at Yalta, according to Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Churchill was moved to exclaim: 'After we have done our best to fight in this war and have done no crime to anyone, I will have no suggestion that the British Empire is to be put in the dock and examined by everybody to see whether it is up to their standard.'

Comparable work has been done by officials of the Colonial Office, and specially by Sir Hilton Paynton in explaining to them, one by one, the principles of trusteeship leading to partnership by which British Colonial rule is manifested and in showing how the speed at which these principles can be applied depends largely on the capacity of the Colonial peoples to train themselves for self-government.

American officials, and through them their political chiefs, became convinced of the sincerity of British motives and aware of the stubborn nature of Colonial problems. Territories are not backward because they are Colonies, but are Colonies because they are backward. Was a typically persuasive saying of Sir Hilton Paynton.

In the light of these events the American attitude to the United Nations became more sympathetic to the Colonial Powers.

There are large groups of Americans, that organization which has tended to submit automatically and unthinkingly to proposals for the immediate ending of Colonial status anywhere and everywhere, and precisely because, like the United States, they are 'mindful of their own Colonial origins. Most Latin American, Arab, and Asiatic members could be trusted to go into the lobby against the Colonial Powers because they felt that in so doing they were justifying themselves; and in some cases, it is to be feared, were drawing a blind over their own shortcomings.

The Soviet Union quickly realized this fact and saw that its best hope of defeating the western Powers was on the Colonial issue. In so doing it could not only magnify the champion of the oppressed, who might even get the support of the United States, but it could embarrass the American delegation.

This was not lost on the Americans, and as they saw more and more evidence both of the sincerity of the Colonial Powers and of the hollowness of the attack, they tended increasingly to stand by them and to moral support to the administration authorities.

From my own experience I am deeply conscious how much the United Nations owes in these matters to the good sense of Mr. Justice Dugdale. This tendency was enhanced, of course, when the United States took over the trusteeship of the former Japanese mandated islands and itself became an administering authority, but it is important to get the sequence of events right: the attitude of the United States had changed before this new assumption of Colonial responsibility, and not because of it.

Racial Discrimination in Uganda

European Association's Memorandum

IN SPITE OF REPEATED ASSERTIONS from the Prime Minister and the Colonial and Foreign Secretaries that there is no racial discrimination in the Colonial Empire, Europeans in Uganda are definitely discriminated against. A memorandum issued by the Toro European Association. It contains:

Land. There are vast areas of Crown land in Uganda, unoccupied. The Governor in a recent declaration stated that it is not the intention of H.M. Government and the Protectorate Government that the Protectorate of Uganda should be developed as a country of non-African farming and settlement. In other words, an application for land will be considered if submitted by Europeans. This has already happened.

"It seems strange that Europeans of British stock who have fought in one or both the last two wars in defence of East Africa should be refused land in a part of the Empire which they defended.

The result of this policy will be that this Crown land will remain unoccupied and unproductive indefinitely, when the world is crying out for food and raw materials.

"Any foreign Native from the Belgian Congo, French and Portuguese territories may come into Uganda and take up land where they please, cultivate it and establish a home. Can this be a question of colour?

"At land auctions no European may bid for Native property, but those same Natives may purchase property in England if they so wish.

Mr. Dugdale's Misstatement

"Mr. Dugdale stated to the Fabian Society in England that there were no settlers in Uganda. This statement is incorrect. There would be more if the land policy did not discriminate against us. It is noticeable that among such settlers exist the standard of life of those Natives has vastly improved. Further, there has been an increase of Natives settling around such estates.

Taxation. The European pays income tax. The Native does not, however prosperous he may be. This also applies to Native companies. There are a great number of Native landowners who collect rents from Native tenants, but they pay the same small sum tax as their tenants.

We propose that there be instituted for both income tax and poll tax an graduated poll tax applicable to all, irrespective of race or colour.

"In addition to income tax, we also pay a poll tax which is approximately five times that of the Native.

A small point illustrating racial discrimination by the Government is that the European pays for medical attention and drugs in Government hospitals, while the Native obtains these advantages free.

There are numerous hospitals and dispensaries throughout the country for Natives with accommodation. In the Toro district, where there are now over 1000 Europeans in various occupations, no provision at all is made for their medical treatment or accommodation. The nearest hospital accommodation for us is over 200 miles away.

General. The Governments of East Africa invariably group the peoples of these territories into three groups, Africans, Asians, and Europeans, for the purposes of legislation, taxation, etc. This racial grouping is not of our choosing and we deplore it. We believe that such continuous emphasis on the difference between groups tends eventually to bring about an estrangement between these groups, and being very conscious of the overwhelming need for security in this field, we implore Government to cease from this policy of separation and to treat all people alike under the law, irrespective of the racial groups from which they have sprung.

The Colonial Secretary stated that in the Colonial Empire there is no racial discrimination and that there is equal opportunity for all, whatever the race or colour. As pointed out in the memorandum this statement is a piece of hypocrisy.

East African Section in London

Ceding Tax Burdens on Trade

EAST AFRICAN SECTION of the London Chamber of Commerce appointed a taxation sub-committee last week, consisting of one representative each of Kenton Gold Areas, Ltd., and Messrs. R. Lehmann and Co., Ltd., R. C. Trebil and Co., Ltd., and A. Wigglesworth and Co., Ltd., to submit recommendations to the chamber's taxation committee before it goes into action before the Royal Commission on the Taxation of Profits and Income.

It was felt that the views of companies engaged in commerce, agriculture, and mining in East Africa should be co-ordinated and sent forward, particularly as the revenue authorities in the United Kingdom hold opinions at variance with those of the authorities in East Africa in connexion with allowances for depreciation, estate rehabilitation, and other allowable deductions.

Mr. Sydney Trainer drew attention to the recent transfer of domicile by companies operating in the Overseas Empire, and controlling combined capital running into many millions of pounds solely because of the undue burden of present U.K. taxation. Some members of the section had, he said, taken that step already, others were known to be contemplating it, and if the United Kingdom Government continued to refuse fair relief, many more transfers of domicile would soon be made.

Waiting for Two Years

A member complained that his company had been waiting two years for ship 250 tons of cement to East Africa, and that 180,000 tons were still ahead of them on the register, which he suggested must mean that some houses had registered far larger quantities than they could sell.

The chairman, Mr. H. E. Phipps, described the request as reasonable, and that way admitted being responsible of the Anchor-Castle Line, who explained that the shipping companies could not always get their tonnage ready to call forward. Every time the failure to produce the cement did not necessarily mean that the entry had not been genuine at the time of entry. Goods supplies which may have been available could have been sold elsewhere in the interval.

Pointing out that the companies had the right to claim freight on cargo called forward and not delivered, the chairman suggested that they should adopt that course in one or two trades as a deterrent to those who abused the system.

It was agreed that the recent increases in ocean freight between the United Kingdom and East Africa were reasonable in view of the increased charges which the lines had to meet, owing to slow handling in the docks and higher costs of fuel.

Considerable improvement in the shipping position was reported by the chairman, who said that general commercial cargo shipped to Mombasa and Dar es Salaam respectively totalled 14,001 and 2,584 tons in November, 15,855 and 3,423 in December and 18,363 and 3,798 in January. In mid-February 12,400 tons were on the register awaiting shipment to Mombasa, and about 41,400 tons were booked for Dar es Salaam.

Objection to Kenya Government's Decision

The intention of the Government of Kenya to alter the grading of chillies was unanimously regretted. Strong objection was expressed to the policy of renaming f.a.o. and not one member supported the idea of introducing a new classification between f.a.o. and undergraduate.

Notice was also given that the Governments of Kenya would revise the grading of white haricot beans.

A resolution of thanks to Mr. A. E. Pollard for his co-operation with the section was passed with acclamation on a motion by the chairman, who said that Mr. Pollard was about to retire from the staff of the East African Office.

Mr. Morton expressed great regret at the impending loss of a colleague who was at one time H.M. Trade Commissioner in East Africa and had been most helpful to the office in London.

Southern Rhodesia's Trade Last YearTrade Balance Altered

SOUTHERN RHODESIA'S visible adverse balance of trade dropped from £25,000,000 in 1949 to £10,500,000 last year.

The total value of foreign imports in 1950 was £389,735, a rise of nearly £10,000. Imports of wheat increased from 76m. lb (£915,000) in 1949 to 89m. lb (£1,023,000), but textile imports fell from 56m. lb (£519,000) to 46m. lb (£440,000). Other foodstuffs imported included raw sugar, 54m. lbs (£700,000) compared with 41m. lb valued at £748,000 in 1949; and tea, 2,831,000 lbs (£349,000), compared with 3,287,000 lbs (£563,000).

The significant and continuous rise that took place in imports of metals, metal manufactures, machinery and vehicles in the immediate post-war years was halted in 1950, when the value of imports amounted to £24,761,664, an against £26,043,155 in the peak year, 1949. A high percentage of goods in that class consisted of capital equipment and other goods for development purposes. The decrease, the Colony's Economic Bulletin suggests, is indicative not of falling demand but of the generalization in the world supply position.

Imports of Machinery and Vehicles

Imports of machinery totalled £897,5,000 (£8,454,000 in 1949), motor vehicles £3,687,500 (£3,770,000 in 1949), and railway material £2,524,000 (£2,897,000 in 1949).

The value of imported fibres, yarns, textiles and apparel continued to expand, and reached the record figure of £11,613,299, an increase of £1m. This was largely attributable to price increases, but also to heavier imports of clothing and other raw or semi-manufactured goods from the textile industries.

Heavy purchases of mineral oils increased the value of imports of oil, waxes, resins, paints, and varnishes from £2,308,443 in 1949 to £2,282,241. The steady increase in imports of motor spirit continued during the year, when 31m. gallons were bought (£1,123,000), against the previous record figure of 29m. gallons (£749,000) in 1949.

Only a slight rise (£2m. to £2,300,000) was recorded in imports of woods, canes and manufactures, but this would have been greater had world supplies and transport facilities been easier. Substantial imports of rubber tyres and tubes and footwear caused imports of leather and rubber articles to advance from £1,643,972 to £2,208,856.

U.K.'s Share of Exports

The United Kingdom took Southern Rhodesian goods to the value of £21,897,835 (53.7% of the Colony's domestic exports) as against £16,329,152 (55.8%) in the previous year. Manufactures, so far as they go to Britain rose from 47m. lb (£8,379,000) to 61m. lb (£12,336,000).

Purchases by South Africa, now Southern Rhodesia's second best customer, continued to expand, and amounted to £4,429,990 (10.9% of domestic exports), compared with £2,591,008 (8.7%) in 1949. Apparel constituted the main item of exports in this category totalling £1,560,000, as against £756,080 in the previous year.

Southern Rhodesia's exports to Northern Rhodesia reached the record figure of £3,441,916 (£2,977,269), but the actual share in domestic trade declined from 18.7% to 8.4%.

Salvation Army

Full details of the work and personnel of the Salvation Army are given in their year book for 1951, which has just been published. It shows that in the East African territories, where the territorial commander is Colonel G. C. King, there are 321 officers, 208 employees, 146 corps, five societies, 175 outposts, 80 schools, and nine institutions. In Rhodesia under the command of Colonel T. Holbrook, there are 288 officers, 455 employees, 158 corps, 68 outposts and societies, 148 farms, eight institutions, and 177 schools.

ENTRY INTO THE ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, SANDHURST AND WOMEN'S ROYAL ARMY CORPS SCHOOL OF INSTRUCTION

Opportunities are now available for female Colonial candidates wishing to adopt the Regular Army as a career to enter the Royal Military Academy at Sandhurst from East Africa.

APPLICANTS should apply in the first instance through the headmasters of their schools, and must be between the ages of 17½ and 19½ years, and have passed an examination equivalent to the School Certificate of the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board.

One candidate who is a member of families established and resident in the territory from which the application is made, and British subjects or citizens of the Irish Republic are eligible.

Candidates must also be single and fit by British Army standards for service in any part of the world.

PROCEDURE

Following the application through the headmasters of schools, the candidates will be interviewed by the General Officer Commanding East African Command. The cost of travelling to and from Nairobi will be borne by the candidate, but the cost of rations and quarters incurred while attending the interview are paid by the War Department. Following the interview by the General Officer Commanding East Africa Command, a free sea passage, second class, or tourist class to the United Kingdom is granted, and candidates who interview appear before a Regular Commissioning Board.

The successful candidates are then enlisted on to Regular Army engagement of five years with the Colours and seven days on the Reserve, and undergo a pre-Sandhurst training course. They select joining the Royal Military Academy. Candidates who fail the Regular Commissioning Board are liable for their own maintenance following the announcement of their failure and the cost of a return passage to their home country.

ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY COURSE

The course at Sandhurst lasts for 18 months, divided into three terms, with leave granted between each term. Officer cadets will receive 5s. per day for the first 12 months, and 6s. 6d. per day for the remaining eight months. Candidates who complete the course successfully will be commissioned into the rank of 2nd Lieutenant and will receive a daily basic rate of pay of 7s. 6d.

WOMEN'S ROYAL ARMY CORPS

Female Colonial candidates who wish to join this Corps as Regular Officers will follow the same procedure of application and interview as given for male candidates. The age limit is between 18½ and 26 years, and married women are eligible provided an undertaking is given that family circumstances will not be permitted to restrict liability to general service. Successful candidates will be posted to an appropriate appointment and sent to a training centre at Colinton, Edinburgh, for a period of nine weeks' training before entering the Women Cadet Training Wing for a nine-months' course, and during the training period until date of commission female candidates will receive a daily rate of pay of 7s. 6d. Women in the Women's Royal Army Corps, a daily rate of

Role of the Colonial Office To-day

Sir Hilton Poynton's Survey

SIR HILTON POYNTON, a Deputy Under-Secretary of State at the Colonial Office, writes in Corona:

"The achievements in economic development in the Colonies in recent years and the prospects (given a settled world) are most encouraging. Of course, we cannot claim all the credit; past achievements for Government alone. Private enterprise, nature, and the world shortage of some commodities have perhaps had as much or more to do with it. Even so, these very satisfactory developments have occurred in territories for which we together are governments responsible.

"I say 'we together', and I mean by that the United Kingdom Government and the Colonial Governments, with the Colonial Office in the middle, linking the two and belonging to both.

"There is a story of a visitor to London walking along Whitehall during the war, gazing at the buildings and asking 'Is it looking for some particular one. Eventually he turned to a passer-by and said: 'Excuse me, but could you tell me which side is the Colonial Office on?' The answer was 'Ours, I believe.'

Which side is the Colonial Office on? I have no difficulty in saying firmly: 'Ours, I believe.'

Much Less Authoritarian Body

The whole nature of the work of the Colonial Office has changed profoundly since I came into it 21 years ago. The Colonial Office is much less an authoritarian body than it was in those days. In its relation with Colonial Governments it has surrendered a good deal of its authority now that almost every Colony has a non-official majority. In its Legislative Council and Finance Committee, and often the rudiments of a ministerial system.

Parallel with this development, owing largely to the war and the period of shortage, exchange difficulties, and so on which have followed the war, due to the increasing complexity of post-war economic conditions and the multiplicity of international organisations to which it is necessary to co-operate, as well as efforts to integrate the economic policies of the Colonial Empire much more closely with that of the U.K. itself and the rest of the world.

In the old days the Colonial Office enjoyed a great deal of independence in Whitehall. To-day over a very much wider field it has to work as a team with other departments, and also to take part and keep track of the increasing international machinery to which I have referred. In other words, the Colonial Office has to a great extent lost its position of autonomy in both directions—in relation to Colonial Governments and to the rest of Whitehall.

I often think that our previous bonhomie in Whitehall was a weakness and led to other departments regarding the Colonies as a mere trivial hobby of the Colonial Office, instead of a national responsibility of H.M.G.

To-day our rôle is not so much to control the Colonies but, in the economic field, of which I am speaking, (a) to provide them with services, money (C.D.W.) and advice which enable them to prosecute their plan of development; (b) to negotiate on their behalf with other departments and internationally, to safeguard and promote their interests and get them their proper place in the sun; and (c) when occasion demands to represent to Colonial Governments the point of view of H.M.G. on general Commonwealth and world economic policy, and ask for their help when we need it in carrying out policies which we believe to be for the general good, even though sometimes they may involve some sacrifice of local interests. I regard (a) and (b) as our primary function, but I make no apology for including (c) among the functions of the modern Colonial Office.

Unfailing Help from the Treasury

There is to-day a wide inter-departmental interest in and sympathy towards the Colonies. We have received unfailing help in recent years from the much-maligned Treasury. They have really been splendidly and remarkably quiet cases. I know of no recent case in which it could be said that Treasury obstructiveness or anything up any important Colonial development.

We work very closely with the Treasury and other departments whose activities have an important bearing on development such as the Ministry of Economic Affairs, Supply, Board of Trade, Foreign Office, and the Colonial Relations Office.

There is a permanent inter-departmental committee on Colonial Development presided over by a Vice-chairman of the Central Economic Planning Staff (I am Vice-chairman which has served a most useful purpose). It is very practically self-educated. The members of the group know each other's outlook and have rapidly become familiar with the basic problems of Colonial economics. As a result, the Colonial Office is now more and more on the ground floor in the formulation of policy for the disposition of the colonies of the United Kingdom, instead of 'queening it'. There are, of course, many other inter-departmental committees on which we sit, and ultimately we can sit matters individually or collectively.

In the long run we get the best results in departmental negotiations by disengaging as far as possible from any party line, by being down responsive to the needs of the case. Otherwise we should simply get a bad rapport and everything from the Colonial Office would be liable to rejection. We must exercise very judicious in such cases.

"Individuals would say that in the case the Treasury had probably done far more harm to the interests of the colonies by over-enthusiastic support of schemes than had been done by under-enthusiastic opposition of such cases."

"More often than not a difference of view between the Colonial Office and a Colonial Government arises from conflict of interest between the U.K. and the colony, but it is no good that either side should be too anxious about where the true interests of the colony lie and how to attain them. If there is a real conflict, it is better to be clear about it and explain the position."

"I do not see anything inherently impudent in the Kingdom seeking a collaboration of Colonial Governments in helping the U.K., Kingdom or another, or the Commonwealth in some steering areas of the world, without some sacrifice to themselves. After all, in an independent world every community is responsible, whether in a sovereign country or in a semi-self-governing rights."

Threat to Uganda Cotton Industry Protests against Proposed Nationalization

IN A LEADING ARTICLE a fortnight ago EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA reported that the Secretary of State for the Colonies had rejected a plan for the organization of the Uganda cotton ginning industry which had been evolved after months of effort by the Uganda Cotton Association and accepted as satisfactory by the Government of Uganda.

We attributed this obstructiveness by the political head of the Colonial Office to prima facie reasons, and said that such cases made nonsense of the reiterated official claim that the policy was to offer Colonial Governments all possible expert advice and guidance and then encourage them to make their own decisions in the light of local requirements.

On the very day on which that leading article was published in London, the president of the Uganda Chamber of Commerce, Mr. V. M. Clerk, referred at the annual general meeting of that body in Kampala which was attended by Sir John Hall, the Governor, to "pressure from the Colonial Office to nationalize the cotton ginning industry."

Enterprise of the Pioneers.
Defects in the industry could, he said, be put right if Government wished to men, rather than end the existence of the largest cotton growing industry in the Colonial Empire. It could not be suggested that lack of enterprise lay behind the Secretary of State's intentions, for the courage shown by the pioneers in Uganda was unexampled, and it had brought light and civilization to areas previously inaccessible.

What lay behind "this pressure from the Colonial Office for nationalizing the industry which is so well organized?" It could not be for the purpose of ensuring participation by Africans for the industry itself shared official views in that respect; and had already leased ginneries for operation by the African co-operative society, and that co-operation would increase as the movement developed.

Action Which Would Frighten Capital

Mr. Clark recalled that the Governor had said during budget session of the Legislative Council, "the industrial development to become an accomplished fact, it is essential that leading industrialists and financiers in Britain should have confidence in the future of Uganda. They are not going to invest millions or employ their technical knowledge and equipment in a country, however rich its natural resources, in whose political or economic stability they have little confidence."

Did the Colonial Office not realize that to force nationalization upon the cotton-ginning industry would sound the death knell to all private enterprise in the country, asked the president of the chamber. Capital would certainly shy of Uganda in that event and that at a time when there was a greater need, ever for industrial development. The Governor has already stressed the need to encourage and stimulate the establishment of heavy and secondary industries. For total capital on a large scale would be required, and it would not be forthcoming if the Government were now to interfere with the existing free industry by forcing nationalization upon it.

The industry had always resented the official policy of bulk sales, and even the Government was now convinced that it was detrimental to the best interests of Uganda. Yet circumstances had made it necessary to enter into a trade agreement with India by which bulk selling of cotton had continued for a longer time, though admittedly with the aid of a quid of an assurance of piece goods and jute return.

Uganda's cotton production ought to be raised to 1,000,000 bales a year, but in the immediate future that could not be done except by extending the area under the crop. Great expectations were placed upon the research work at Namulonge.

Governor's Dislike of Bulk Sales

Sir John Hall said further in his reply that representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and the Cotton Association would be able to state their views regard to nationalization to the Secretary of State when he visited the country in May.

He the Governor had hoped that bulk sales of cotton could be discontinued, but the threat of war and the unavoidable need for revenue now compelled the economy in hard currency. The maintenance of currency controls, and steps to ensure regular supplies of cotton at reasonable and stable prices, therefore must consequently be postponed until the date at which we can hope to escape from the circumscriptions of bulk selling and dispose of our crop in a free and competitive market."

He was convinced that the cotton crop in Uganda would be substantially increased even with the present acreage, indeed, an additional yield of no more than 200 lb. per acre would raise the crop above the half-million-bale mark, which was the present objective.

Kenya Legislative Council

A MOTION by Mr. A. B. PATEL to abolish racial segregation for commercial and residential purposes was defeated in the Kenya Legislative Council by 22 votes to 21, the official members voting with the European elected members. Mr. Mathy pointed out that the status quo for land reserved for Africans would have to be maintained, "not for racial but for economic reasons," for the land might be bought by the Indian community, which is the richest in Kenya.

DR. T. F. ANDERSON, Director of Medical Services, introducing the Pharmacy and Poisons Amendment Bill, said: "Certain traders, mostly of the lesser sort hold quite large stocks of poisons, which it is suspected with good reason have come into their hands illegally. This black market is a pernicious and dangerous thing."

A motion that the increases in the price of maize should not be passed to the consumer but made good by a subsidy was rejected by 23 votes to eight.

ASPHALT

A local legend at La Brea, Trinidad, describes how the famous pitch lake was the site of an Indian village. The villagers offended the local deity by their persecution of the winged birds (which were animated by the souls of dead Indians) and as a punishment they were engulfed in the pitch lake with their belongings.

In 1595 when on his ill-starred expedition to South America in search of El Dorado, Sir Walter Raleigh called at Trinidad. He made use of the pitch for caulk his ships and reported that he found it "most excellent good" an opinion which has since been endorsed by road makers in Great Britain and in many other parts of the world.

Statement of Dismissed Minister

Mr. Halsted's Explanation

MR. R. F. HALSTED, lately Minister of Trade and Industrial Development in Southern Rhodesia, to whose dismissal by Sir Godfrey Huggins sentence was made, in our last number, has issued a statement which includes the following passage:

"If the petrol muddle was the only consideration, I might have agreed to the Prime Minister's request for my resignation, as it was in the interest of having a stable Government for the Colony."

"At some time past there have been fundamental disagreements between the Minister of Finance (Mr. E. Whinneyhead) and myself. More recent months I have been alone in the Cabinet in opposing some of the Minister's wilder economic theories which he has been trying to put into practice. In my opinion the Minister of Finance is a Fascist, and he is an accomplice in announcing a crisis and propounding some revolutionary theory in order to combat it. As a result of my intervention in the Cabinet discussions I have been able to some extent to curb the Minister. Again I stress that in recent months I have been alone in this."

"Had I therefore resigned? The Prime Minister asked, I would in effect be leaving the Minister of Finance with very nearly free hand to put his theories into practice at the expense of the people of the Colony. Unsavoury as it was, therefore, I decided in these circumstances to refuse to resign but to carry it out and do what I could to act as a brake on the Minister. I believe now that it is only a question of time before the Minister of Finance brings the Government crashing down."

Opposed Rationing Scheme

Mr. Halsted then reviews in some detail the course of the muddle over petrol, saying that a proposal by the Minister of Finance for the immediate introduction of a full wartime petrol rationing scheme had been stoutly opposed by him just before he left Salisbury for a holiday; that Cabinet support for his (Mr. Halsted's) view was reversed while he was away; that he was not notified of the change and knew nothing about it until his return to the Colony some weeks later; that he then obtained some modification to the drastic scheme which had been accepted, and that he told Mr.

The statement concludes: "I do not mean regarding my seat. I believe it is my duty to remain and carry on from the Government back benches the task which I am unable to do in the Cabinet, the task of restraining the Minister of Finance from crippling the Colony by introducing his wild economic theories, theories designed always to curtail individual freedom and place more power and controls in the hands of the Minister of Finance and Government officials."

Problem Might Have Been Tackled Earlier

The Rhodesian Herald commented:

"Mr. Halsted has as much right as the next man to stick to his guns, but if he had followed orthodox practice and asked to be relieved of his post his exit would have been quite as effective and far more dignified. He could have written the usual letter of resignation, making clear his viewpoint, yet at the same time indicating that he did not wish to cause unnecessary embarrassment. Mr. Halsted may fairly claim that the policy decision was taken high above him, and that he was therefore not responsible for it; the problem began some months at least before, and the recent confusion was to a large degree caused by the fact that it had not been tackled earlier."

Since the last general election Ministers have got out of touch with the electorate. To many of us, while deplored, unavoidable factors which make our own businesses far more difficult and less efficient than they used to be fail to realize that the same factors apply to the business of running a country. Ministers have become too deeply immersed in routine; they have not got about enough among the public, or kept them sufficiently and intelligently informed of what is going on. The new Government should make a determined effort to remedy this position."

The Bulawayo Chronicle wrote editorially:

"The Prime Minister is notoriously loyal to colleagues particularly those of long standing, and it would seem that he endeavoured to withstand the pressure of several days, taking the opportunity also of putting some of the complaints of disgruntled members in their more objective perspective in relation to party and government policy as a whole."

"The most surprising change is the appointment of Mr. W. A. E. Winterbottom, former Minister of Native Affairs and Public Health, to the Ministry vacated by Mr. Halsted. This portfolio is definitely overlaid, particularly in view of the part it will have to play, in certain aspects of the defence programme."

Mr. Winterbottom has not been a success in the House since he became Minister, but he has learned the art of brevity in presenting a Native case. In his department, however, he has done well. He works hard, shows a keen desire to gain knowledge at first hand, and prefers a talk across the table to a sheet of correspondence. His associations with trade and industry have probably been confined to legal aspects, and it may be that the Prime Minister considers that a man with no preconceived ideas may see more clearly the national rather than the sectional interest."

Surveys by U.S. Engineers

TWO AMERICAN ENGINEERS, Mr. Edgar F. Foster and Mr. Clarence M. Jackson, members of the United States Bureau of Reclamation, flew to Northern Rhodesia from London last week to explore the possibility of increasing the food production by utilizing the flood waters of the Kasai River for rice growing. Their survey was sponsored by the Colonial Office and the Economic Cooperation Administration. A third member of the Bureau of Reclamation, Mr. John C. Atchley, ground-water geologist, has been assigned to Italian Somaliland for four months to conduct a survey, sponsored by the Italian Government and E.C.A.

Colonial Forces

COLONIAL MAN-POWER AND DEFENCE were debated in the House of Commons last week on an opposition motion regretting that the British Government "has failed to consult in consultation with Colonial Governments" the additional use of Colonial volunteers in defence of the cause of democratic freedom. An amendment moved by Captain W. Field (Lab.) that the Government should investigate the possibility of raising further forces in the Colonies and Dependencies was passed by 185 votes to three. The debate will be reported fully in next week's issue.

IN SOUTHERN Rhodesia this year imports the same quantity of British steel—40,000 tons—as in 1950, the increased price of £5 per ton will cost the Colony an additional £200,000. It has been stated by Mr. C. R. Hutchings, Controller of Iron and Steel in Southern Rhodesia, that, unfortunately, however, he added, that the same amount could be obtained. Even at the higher price, British steel would still be considerably cheaper than the Continental product which the Colony would have to buy to bridge the gap.

THE KASALA COTTON LTD., providing £155,000 for taxation, reported a profit of £4,480 in addition to £2,145, from sale of investments, for the year ended Jan. 30 last. Blantyre and East Africa, Limited

Highest Profit Yet Achieved

Mr. J. W. H. Steedman's Review

THE FIFTY-SECOND ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF BLANTYRE AND EAST AFRICA, LIMITED, was held at the company's offices, 2 Charlotte Square, Edinburgh, on Monday, March 19, 1951.

Mr. J. W. H. STEEDMAN, chairman of the company, had circulated to shareholders with the report and accounts for the year ended September 30, 1950, a statement from which the following are extracts:

"The directors are again pleased to be able to present to the shareholders a satisfactory report for the year ended September 30, 1950.

"Weather conditions on the tea estates were reasonably good, and the total tea crop for the year amounted to 2,220,975 lb., as compared with 1,990,862 lb. in the previous year. The increase for the year was accordingly 180,113 lb., or 9%. The crop from the various estates was as follows: Lauderdale, 822,695 lb.; Glenorchy, 411,382 lb.; Limbuli, 724,798 lb.; Zoa, 212,100 lb.

"During the year additional tea acreage was planted on Glenorchy and Limbuli Estates, and the planted area of the company's tea estates at September 30, 1950, was 2,759 acres, of which 65 acres were immature.

Increased Costs

"Costs again continued to advance during the year, particularly our expansion programme was affected by a surcharge of 60% on the ocean freight of machinery and other requirements between the United Kingdom and Beira. That surcharge has recently been removed and a new financing scheme of cargo to Beira has come into operation. Transport, however, has been easier generally, and the congestion at the port of Beira has been somewhat relieved.

"Unfavourable weather conditions throughout the planting and growing season adversely affected the quality of the crop. The total amount of fine and flu-cured leaf delivered to our factory from our estates and the auction floors amounted to 1,166,510 lb.

"The flue crop was normal, but the downward trend in the price received for flue oil during the year under review was disappointing. We understand that more favourable prices are now expected.

"In respect of taxation you will be gratified to learn that our net profit after taxation for the highest year which we have yet achieved, £1,166,510, was slightly higher, and, with the balanced account forward from last year, there is a total disposable sum of £15,170. Taxation absorbs the large sum of £49,000 and the directors suggest for your approval that there should be placed to the general reserve account £10,000, and to the special reserve account for buildings and machinery £20,000.

"Let me explain at this point that during the year the company has expended over £50,000 on additional machinery and buildings required on the various estates, and there still remains much to be done to bring our existing factories into date with the increased output and into a more modern mode of production. It is necessary to make up for the loss of production due to the prolonged absence of the manager of the company, Mr. R. Ross Stark, who has been ill for some time.

watered with a favourable rainfall, and consists largely of excellent tea-growing land. They have therefore made a beginning with its development as a tea estate and in course of time it is hoped to make it a self-contained unit with its own factory and other buildings. The completion of that development will, of course, not be possible for some years.

The remaining items of the profit and loss account and the balance-sheet will be readily followed. You may remember that last year reference was made in this review to negotiations with the Nyasaland Government for the acquisition by them for Native settlement of certain areas of undeveloped land. These negotiations have resulted to date in the transfer to Government of some 26,000 acres, and other individual sales to private persons have also been concluded. The net result is that the estates now stand in the balance-sheet at the sum of £116,857—a very conservative estimate of the company's property in Nyasaland.

Dividend Policy

It gives your directors pleasure to be able to recommend a somewhat increased dividend and while they are always hopeful of stabilizing dividends, it must not be taken that this can be repeated every year. This rate of dividend is in complete conformity with a policy of moderation and restraint in the distribution of profits. It is equivalent to only a small percentage on the capital employed by the company as represented by the balance sheet figures. It is no new thing for this company to exercise moderation and restraint—or that is its traditional policy. Only by careful husbandry and rigorous self-denial over the past 52 years has it been possible to build up our resources and develop our estates to their present strength and capacity.

You will naturally want to have some idea of what the coming year may have in store for us, but I am afraid that it is not possible to be very definite on that point. Up to the end of 1950 there has been a policy of bulk buying of tea by the Ministry of Food. This arrangement had various advantages, especially during the period of transition following upon the war.

Reopenings of the Auctions

It has now been arranged that the London tea auctions should be reopened in April, 1951. Briefly, the effect of this will be that our tea, instead of being taken over in bulk by the Ministry of Food, will be consigned to the London auctions. As they have not yet started, it is impossible for your directors to say what their first sale will be, but the new arrangement will have one disadvantage and that is that we shall require to finance our tea production on the additional price estimated about five months before receiving payment for our consignments. In view of our considerable production, this will certainly involve a large part of our liquid resources.

Mr. R. Ross Stark's Service

I cannot conclude this review without making specific reference to the fact, which you will have noticed in the directors' official report, that Mr. R. Ross Stark has asked to be released from the position of managing director. I need not tell you how sorry we all are that Mr. Stark has found it necessary to come to this decision. His initiative and drive have been throughout the company's history of enormous service to its fortunes. We are, however, more than pleased that Mr. Stark is willing to continue as an ordinary director and to serve the company the benefit of his wide experience. In the circumstances, we have to ask you to confirm Mr. Stark's appointment as an ordinary director.

Since our last annual general meeting the directors has appointed Mr. N. W. Raynor to be our general manager in Africa, and to him and to the remainder of our staff in Nyasaland we are indebted for much devoted service in the company's interests.

The report and accounts were adopted and a dividend of 20% on the ordinary shares of the company was

The retiring director, Mr. George Elmhurst, was re-elected, and Mr. R. A. G. Stansfield's appointment to a seat on the board duly confirmed.

A hearty vote of thanks for the work in Africa and Edinburgh terminated the proceedings.

Standard Bank Commercial Report

THE STANDARD BANK OF SOUTH AFRICA, in a report on economic and commercial conditions in East Africa received a few days ago, write:

During the last three months in East Africa, in consequence of price increases, stocks have tended to disappear from the market. Chief among commodities affected are cement and iron bars.

The cost of living index as at December 31, 1950, was given as 203.11 points above that announced at the beginning of 1950. (1939 = 100.)

In the bazaars, increased prices, shortage of shipping and delays in transit have combined to lock up trading capital. In general, imported goods are easily sellable at higher price levels, and there appears to be no lessening of turnover.

Building for domestic and residential purposes continues unabated.

The month has been unusually dry with almost baking sun and scorching winds. Coffee in the main areas has suffered and pasture and cattle fodder have become short. In some outlying districts, however, supplies have been seriously affected.

Sales of coffee in Mombasa have included 4,500 bags Uganda Native Robusta at £10.42s.-£16.9/- per cwt.; 13,600 bags Uganda Native U.C. at £15.7s.-£18.9/- per cwt.; 7,580 bags Pufuba Native Robusta at £16.4s.-£16.9/- per cwt.

In Nairobi 11,293 bags offered and 10,270 sold at £25.29/- per cwt.

The cotton season in the Kisumu area is in full swing. Harvesting of Kenya wheat has almost been completed at more than 1,250,000 bags.

Uganda Cotton Season Opens

Uganda's cotton season has opened in the Eastern Province, since when business has been very brisk. The highest price being paid for raw cotton and coarse are placing a very large amount of cash in circulation. With the extra money at his disposal, the African demand for bicycles and corrugated iron sheets has been very great.

In addition to the cotton works at Toro, there is considerable building activity in that township area.

The official estimate of the cotton crop is still 300,000 bales. In most areas the cotton is being delivered quickly, but as usual there is some expectation.

The Bolango coffee crop now nearing an end is expected to reach 100,000 tons of parchment.

Reports from most trading centres in the country reveal a slackness of business.

As reported from Liddi (Southern Province) Bulambo, Lake, Tabora (Central), and Arusha (Northern Province). Plenty of food crops in these areas have got ahead. In the Kilimanjaro area coffee picking continues to be brisk.

On Zanzibar it is estimated that 15,000 tons of cloves had been shipped by the end of January, 1951. It is often noted that a bumper crop is sold at record prices. Overseas shipments have been effected up to £40 per ton C.I.F. basis.

Exports of cloves have exceeded 38,791 bales to Straits Settlements and 2,158 bales to India.

Record prices have been paid for steers in the Northern Province. On Tanganyika beasts changing hands up to £40. Pounds for hides and skins in 1950 were nearly three times those ruling in the previous year.

Among the Company's principal holdings are interests in Anglo American Corporation of South Africa Ltd., Rhodesia and Anglo-American Ltd., and Tanganyika Concessions Ltd.

The directors are Mr. A. C. Wilson (chairman), Mr. D. Balfour of Inchyra and Masson J.P.O. Kimber, Mr. D. McDermott, Louis Oppenheimer, R. H. Oppenheimer (alternate), W. E. Groves, F. A. Gurnett, C. F. S. Taylor and S. S. Taylor.
