It is little over 50 years since the first rails were laid of the railway which is to-day the East African Railways and Harbours Administration, operating 2,930 route miles of metre gauge railway, some 6,000 miles of lake and river steamer services, 1,710 miles of road motor services, and the four ocean ports of Mombasa, Dar es Salaam, Tanga and Lindi.

Another part is at present under construction at Mtwarra in Southern Tanganyika for the groundnut scheme, in connexion with which many miles of new railway have been built.

In these 50 odd years the Railway has been a chief agent in the amazingly rapid progress of the territories it serves, and this progress continues. In 1929 the freight tonnage was 127 per cent heavier than it was 10 years previously, and passenger journeys had increased in the same time by 360 per cent.

The Railway, proud of its past record, and alive to its present responsibilities, is working so earnestly to maintain and speed the development of East Africa.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

CURIOUSLY ENOUGH, decisions which were deeply resented by both Italy and Ethiopia have paved the way for their reconciliation, which is about to be marked by the resumption of diplomatic relations. Sixteen years have passed since Mussolini cynically launched his armies upon their unprovoked aggression. For a little while his gamble seemed to have succeeded, but it was soon seen to have been the beginning of the end of the Fascist bombast which was to cost Italy so much in men, material, and money. One result has been the decision of the United Nations that Eritrea shall become an autonomous State under the sovereignty of Ethiopia. Another was the fantastic decision somewhat earlier that the former Italian Somaliland, now known as Somalia, should be granted self-government after a ten-year period of administration under Italian trusteeship. Ethiopia, remembering that Somalia had been one of the bases for the Italian attack, coveting access to the Indian Ocean through her ports, had not ceased since the end of the last war to repeat her claims to Somalia, and her resentment at the rejection of her demands was bitter and undisguised. Italy, on the other hand, exerted all the diplomatic support she could rally for the retention of Eritrea in some form, making the most of the fact that nearly twenty thousand of her citizens are permanently resident in that country. She too was to be disappointed. Her Ethiopian satisfaction in regard to Eritrea more than counter-balanced her disappointment over Somalia.

It is greatly to her credit that some thousands of Italians have been allowed to live and work in Ethiopia in entirely satisfactory conditions since the defeat of the Italians rather more than ten years ago. They might to be surprised by the Emperor's magnanimity for it was he who enjoined his countrymen to treat their defeated enemies well when, but for his striking forbearance, they might have been expected to wreak vengeance on those born wretches who had suffered so cruelly. There is no reason to think that they have since had cause for complaint, but they will naturally welcome the return to Adis Ababa of a diplomatic representative of their country. In an era in which intolerance has reached truly frightful depths in so many countries, Ethiopia's refusal to avenge herself upon the enemy nationals within her power ought not to be overlooked. It attests for much.

This issue begins the 28th Annual Volume of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

THE OVER-RIDING IMPORTANCE of sound farming in relation to soil and climate is stressed by Sir Frank Engdow in his report on agricultural development in Southern Rhodesia. "Of Great Changes Must all lessons from land Be Made Quickly. settlement and resettlement schemes in tropical and sub-tropical countries, none is sharper than that of failure through letting conventional and administrative change go ahead of knowledge of suitable ways of using land." Mixed farming is strongly advocated, and an instance is given of an African family living as well on five acres of land under this system as another family on twelve acres of shifting cultivation, the only difference being that the former worked eight hours a day against the latter's five. Trials of farming units larger than the family holding are recommended as possibly the only way of enabling a dense Native population to rise above subsistence level, particularly the group farm on a co-operative basis extending to three or four hundred acres. The Native purchase areas provide another means of testing a larger unit by means of African capitalist farmers. They appear in all respects more efficient than the Natives in the reserves, but need to be closely supervised. Up to the present little Native labour has been employed on these farms, which is not surprising when it is pointed out that the wages offered are often no more than one-third of those paid by European farmers. None the less, a scheme for the development of these areas is recommended. Throughout the report the fact is stressed that soil and climate are the master factors for food and survival. The numbers and desires of the peoples having run ahead of their wealth-producing powers, profound changes, quickly effected, must be made. "It is too late for steady adjustments."

Labour problems occupy an important part of the report. The dependence of both European farming and industry on immigrant African workers to the extent of more than fifty-seven and fifty-four per cent. respectively, actively discloses an already precarious position, which is likely to become worse as development proceeds in the neighbouring territories from which these labourers come, for then they will find increasingly attractive opportunities nearer their homes. This prospect underlines the need for drastic economy in the use of labour, for the plans of Rhodesians, whether as public leaders or private individuals, cannot otherwise be realized.

The report also stresses the importance of the labour market, but the labour market has been threatened if the Government's proposals are not to be threatened, and the question to be faced whether industry, commerce, and urban employment can, without jeopardizing the country's food, maintain their traditional reliance on what is, in effect, a special form of casual labour, African women, who are accustomed to hard work in the reserves, are disinclined to make any effort either for wages or on the family food plot when they accompany their husbands to European farms. This contrasts not only with the way of affairs in African tribal life generally, but with agricultural practice all over the world, which relies to a considerable extent on female labour, especially at peak periods. It is recommended that fully resident farm labour should be encouraged. To increase farm wages would not be sufficient inducement, and might even obstruct the objective by making short-term casual labour more attractive than ever. Improvement of housing and living conditions is considered a more hopeful life.

Bechuana Criticize British Government

"Tremendous Shock" to Traditional Law

FIVE TRIBAL CHIEFS in Bechuana territory convened a meeting between Tsekeledi Kama and the Bamanwato opponents in an effort to end the inter-tribal dispute. They have appealed to the British Government to take no action on the report of the three British observers until the meeting with Tsekeledi has been held in Gabarone.

The chiefs have issued a memorandum and 12 resolutions criticizing the British Government's handling of the dispute. The memorandum declares: Inter alia—

"The thinly veiled policy of the administration in including the Bamanwato of Serowe to vote of defiance against the so-called supporters of Tsekeledi was nothing else than a clumsy attempt to mislead the outside world that the Bamanwato bodily opposed Tsekeledi and thus were in his views."

"We believe it was the unscrupulous astuteness of the administration to perpetrate the division of the Bamanwato tribes for an ulterior motive, which can be none other than giving the Administration a plausible excuse to introduce a policy of such a nature to restore law and order. The logical result of such a policy is to give the Administration more power in domestic tribal affairs in all the Bechuana territories. Protectorate power, which was hitherto virtualized not justified in the limited role by which our lands are governed, it is a policy of subdivide and rule."

"It is our conviction that the administration took a wrong step from the beginning of the trouble, and that it has mislead the Commonwealth Relations Office. Our people are involved in a vortex of self-justification further to adduce the issue in defending their mistakes."

"We believe that neither the Commonwealth Relations Office nor the local Administration care refer the matter to an impartial commission whose findings could be further placed before a forum of public opinion."

"We are alarmed about the ultimate fate of Bechuana land Protectorate in the present reshuffling of territories as the result of it. We see our lands as a pawn which can be deliberately and cynically divided between the northern Dominion of Central Africa and the southern Dominion of the Union of South Africa."

"Our traditional faith in the justice of the British Government and their respect for human rights, and in the benevolent British protection, has survived a tremendous shock, which it will take the British Government all their time to restore."

The South African challenge is now making itself felt not only by warnings across the border, but by the movement of increasing numbers of British subjects with the South African view, into the British territories. The time has arrived to contrive and decide upon a middle British way if agreement can be found among the British territories and among their races.

Clash of Views

It is right and natural that those in this country who have striven long for the rights and interests of Africans should raise critical views against the danger that the new State, made mainly by Europeans, might turn out to be a trap by leaning too heavily towards the rights and interests of Europeans. It is right and natural that Europeans with their homes in the Rhodesias, who have watched the steady march of progress, with the new States in their countries, might fear the sudden invasion of new ways of thinking the large African majority in the new State which African capacity and experience could not conceivably support. The interests, where they are not the sweeping exclusives, are alike to adjust, and are finding a way. The clash of views proper to any democratic change can be developed only if it prevents a sudden

There is an opportunity in this project, and none of its details already sketched out, should be regarded as final, to give the record of the British Empire and Commonwealth yet another new hopeful turn. The future of Africa and the relations among its races present one of the largest questions marks overhanging the remainder of the 20th century. Some of them can be done at Victoria Falls to offer at least a partial answer.

Many will remain sceptical, open to the best of reasons and motives, of this way of determining the direction of advance. They will see that the interests of the Africans cannot be fairly served because the Africans will not be there in due numbers to speak for themselves. The objection is honest, yet it is grounded in a fallacy.

The aim, as it is everywhere else under British rule, is to create a state of affairs in which the African can come to be full development and show how fit he may be for self-help and self-rule. To insist that he shall speak in council now in equal numbers with others is to suggest that he has already arrived at the goal which is being set. It is to put the cart before the horse, though there must certainly be no clause in these proceedings, or in similar proceedings in other British territories, for even suspecting that the future is being unfairly rigged against the African by his more capable neighbours.

It will be the British responsibility at Victoria Falls to insist, not that the African shall take an equal share, but that the possibility shall be surely established for the new arrangements for him to take a steadily expanding share, as his fitness grows, with no arbitrary limit.

Viable and Viable State

Strong support for federation in the Rhodesias and Nyasaland is given in the first editorial comment in the current issue of The Review of The British Colonies published by The Times. The note reads:

"The aim is to create out of these small and heterogeneous territories a State that will be economically viable and politically inviolable. This is the choice that was made by the States of South Africa when they came together in Union earlier in the century. It now remains to be seen whether Central Africa can make the same choice."

"The main reason why the forging of such a federation is necessary now is that the British way of life, and particularly the British attitude towards the African, has been maintained in Southern Africa. The attitudes of the English-speaking and of the Afrikaans-speaking peoples on this point have always been different. The assumption 50 years ago was that these attitudes would synthesize, instead they have grown widely apart."

The creation of a Central Africa Dominion would be the federation of the part to be played by Britain in the destinies of Africa. Federation would strengthen British Central Africa by giving the population large enough to stand on its own feet and to encourage economic development. These three elements all lead to the primary production, although secondary industries are developing fast in Southern Rhodesia. They are, however, vitally in the sense that railways, roads, water, electric power, and labour all run across the borders and come to rest on the main system. The products of the mines cannot be exported, treated, or carried, without the help of the culture. This process would be immensely benefited by a political union between the territories. The Secretary of State for the Colonies and the Commonwealth Relations are touring Nyasaland and Rhodesia this month to discuss these matters. The British European and African alike will do well to fix their minds on less or any possible detailed objections to the report than has been put forward on the other association of Central Africa than on the alternatives which since they did they decide to go their own way, alone as separate territories.

It is not to now decide in principle to unite more closely, and to see if some continuing organization might bring about the desired end, each territory will in any case go its own way, lonely under the shadow of the conflict that is threatening in Southern Africa.

Each being alone, has not the means in manpower, in economic resources, or in influence outside its own boundaries, to forge for itself a future of independence and power.

To make the right choice will require in many instances the sacrifice of short-term sectional interests. It is, however, full of examples where a self-beneficial benefit is brought towards out of proportion to the sacrifice, and there are grounds for hope that Central Africa will not be behind in this respect.

Rhodes's Dream of Federation

RHODES'S DREAM of a federation of States from Egypt to the Cape, with allegiance to the British flag is far from realization. No one can tell what the future in Africa may be, but we in Central Africa before long, if all goes well, may have the opportunity of furthering our founder's great ideal."

This statement was made by Sir Godfrey Huggins, Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, in a recent speech. Proposing a toast to the memory of Rhodes, Sir Godfrey said:

Rhodes's success as a speaker was not due to oratory, but to the magnanimity of a big personality talking to large audiences in the same direct, familiar, homely language he would employ in personal conversation. One of his admissions was that "no one ever accused me of prepping a speech, though no doubt it is the proper thing to do." Thus many of his speeches appear to have a good deal to the imagination. Deeds, not words, were the natural expression of his energies.

Rhodes has believed in the Dominion status which is to mean complete sovereign independence, but with acknowledgement of The King as the head of the State. In the most intimate contact between His Majesty's Ministers in the British over-ruled States that had arisen from British colonialism.

This founder's speeches had laid bare the two rival ideas of his time in Southern Africa: (1) the Imperial idea, with equal rights for every civilized man without distinction of race, and the true democratic ideal; and (2) the exclusive idea, with political rights reserved for an oligarchy of Dutch farmers, on the ground of priority of occupation, and with the removal of race as a basis of the franchise.

Rhodes was not in favour of depriving the black of the vote, when his first idea of civilization, evidenced by the acquisition of some education and some property, might be met, but he utterly opposed giving the vote to masses of ignorant and irresponsible natives living under communal tenure, a state of barbarism. He believed in the thorough English view of gradual education to full citizenship as the only way to gain a civilization.

Shortly after the fall of Kimberley, speaking at the annual meeting of De Beers, the diamond company which he played so great a part in the founding of Rhodesia, Rhodes had suggested that a visitor to the mines a century later would see merely some dimmed pits, but that if he travelled into the interior he would recognize the general of their day, the great European civilization to the north. When the policy of the corporation was challenged, Rhodes always felt that it was so small a thing to be able to vote that it was worth it in itself to do anything besides the question of having it. To that a command was given by Godfrey Huggins.

These problems, and with the aid of the local community shareholders, and the

Short Annual Leave Proposed for Officials

Recommendations of Committee on Annual Leave

AN INTERESTING REPORT has been made to the Government of Tanganyika by the Committee on Rising Costs. The document has now been published at 3s. 50 cents by the Government Printer, Dar es Salaam.

The principal recommendations are thus summarized:

"Local production should be stimulated by every means possible.

"The efficiency of labour utilization should be increased to increase the output of the individual worker.

"Prices paid to the producer for all staple crops should be properly integrated to preserve balanced agricultural production.

"Control should be exercised over distribution of the principal essential commodities in short supply.

"Wide publicity should be given to the working of the price control system.

"Legal provision should be made for cancellation of the licences of traders convicted under the Price Control Regulations.

"Any export tax imposed on high-value export crops to subsidize consumers should be only temporary.

Cost-of-Living Index for Africans

"A cost-of-living index for Africans should be constructed. The existing cost-of-living index for Europeans and Asians should be replaced by a new index based on a new survey of the pattern of expenditure.

"Regulation should be introduced for the control of the grain-milling industry, designed to encourage an improvement in the quality of milled grain.

"Poultry strains should be progressively improved by extension of the activities of central breeding units.

"Every effort should be made to increase the supply of consumer goods in cattle-producing areas. Compulsory culling of cattle should be adopted if voluntary sales continue to be inadequate.

"Measures should be investigated of improving the price and cost of marketing goods.

"Statutory tribunals should be set up to allocate all new premises for letting. The rate fixed by section 3 (1)(b) of the Rent Restriction Ordinance as the basis of assessment of standard rent should be lowered. The limit of standard rent of £500 per annum prescribed by the Ordinance should be raised.

"The possibility should be investigated of encouraging increased production of charcoal as an alternative to wood fuel for domestic use.

"Consideration should be given to lowering the rate of interest which pawnbrokers are allowed to charge.

Income Tax Allowances

"Consideration should be given to increasing the allowances for children in assessment of income tax. Increased financial relief should be given where possible to married men with children.

"Government should consider the possibility of opening a restaurant in Dar es Salaam for serving midday meals and thus saving lunch-time journeys between office and home.

"Consideration should be given to introducing a system of assessment for rent of Government staff quarters taking into account the distance of the quarters from the place of work.

"So long as prices remain high the payment of a cost-of-living allowance calculated on a fixed percentage of substantive salary should be considered. When prices reach comparative stability substantive salaries and wages should be reviewed.

"Government should consider offering higher salaries to attract recruits of the best quality; the number of recruits should be reduced in preference to accepting any sacrifice of quality.

"Government should give a lead to other employers by introducing the institution of annual vacation leave for Europeans.

On the last point the report states:

"It has been suggested that an economy in Government expenditure could be made by extending the tours of Government servants to an average of two and a half years. The alternative to this measure should be taken of the provision of facilities to replace the present system of tours and long periods of leave by a system of short annual leave.

"The first alternative was considered at the time of the revision of salaries in 1948 and medical advice was against it. The savings involved would probably not exceed £50,000 a year as far as Government is concerned, since in fact many officers do already exceed the average period of tour and there would always be some cases where for administrative convenience and other reasons it would be necessary to allow a comparatively short tour.

Advantages of Annual Leave

"The second alternative is in many ways attractive. This proposal, which was put forward for the consideration of Colonial Governments by the Secretary of State in Colonial Affairs in 1942, has been considered in the past but was ruled out on the grounds of the cost and inadequacy of air transport. Now that the spread of air communications has increased between East Africa and the United Kingdom and favourable contract rates are offered by air-line operators, these objections no longer hold.

"The particular advantages which can be seen in such a proposal are as follows:

(1) Since an officer would be absent from the territory for only a few weeks, his place could remain unfilled as if he were on local leave, and the number of officers in the establishment could be reduced by the proportion of present leave to allow for replacements during vacation leave.

(2) If annual leave were given local leave within the territory for expatriate officers could be abolished with consequent savings.

(3) The period for which an officer served in a particular station could be governed by the convenience of the public service rather than by the necessity to appoint a relief in his place when he proceeded on long leave. This would work for greater continuity.

(4) Parents with children being educated in England would be able to see their children for several weeks in each year and those with children being educated in East Africa could, if they wished, take their leave during term time.

(5) Annual leave would probably increase efficiency by providing frequent recuperation.

"It has been informed that if Government were to give a lead in this direction it is probable that private employers would welcome it and adopt a similar system. We therefore recommend that consideration should be given to the institution of annual vacation leave for European civil servants.

Discounts for Cash

"We did not find one person concerned with retail trade who was prepared to state categorically that an appreciable reduction in prices would result from cash trading or that any appreciable discount for cash could be expected to become a regular trade practice.

"The argument that business with the customer can compare prices and buy from the cheapest source in one appointment to take into account the fact that the average purchaser has no time to go from one shop to another for the sake of saving a few cents. We therefore reached the conclusion that cash trading would not necessarily contribute to a lowering of the cost of living and could not therefore be used as an argument in favour of the weekly payment of wages.

"We believe the Africans to be as much in the hands of credit traders as Europeans; indeed, this point constitutes a significant argument against weekly wages. It was represented to us that if an African did not receive a lump sum at the end of the month he would not be able to deposit money with the shopkeeper against his purchases in sufficient amount to be able to obtain his needs.

"The payment of salaries and wages weekly would also give rise to considerable administrative difficulties. As far as Government is concerned we were advised that to switch over to weekly payments would be a considerable administrative undertaking which with certain classes of Government employees would probably be impossible for payments to reach the place of working under famous conditions 100 miles or more from their accounting office.

"It would also be necessary to revise salary scales completely and base them on weekly rather than monthly rates and several other matters would have to be considerably revised.

Labour Party's Commonwealth Policy

Resolutions for Annual Conference

THE AGENDA for the 50th annual conference of the Labour Party, which opens in Scarborough on October 7, contains five constituency party resolutions on Commonwealth affairs.

Pennine (Edinburgh) calls upon the conference to reaffirm the right of all Colonial peoples to full economic and political freedom, and interpretation of that principle to apply the policy of equal representation and discrimination at present pursued by the South African Government. (A) calls upon the Government to resist proposals for the integration of the South African Protectorates with the Union, to oppose any integration of Westland and Northern Rhodesia with Southern Rhodesia, and to demand the immediate publication of the report of the Commission of Enquiry in the case of Seretse Khama.

London (London) calls for a policy throughout our African territories in particular in Kenya and Tanganyika which respects the paramount interests and rights of the African people.

Bournemouth (Bournemouth) calls the Government to "take no action towards the Central African Dominion, as this would remove all colonial administrative legislation in the three territories, and for the reason that the present policies of the Government of Southern Rhodesia are markedly similar in many respects to those of the Union Government towards the coloured peoples."

Hendon (Borough) urges that the Government should recognize our Government is responsible in Africa for the rights of the Native people as supreme and should make no concessions either to South Africa or to the Government of other parts of the continent.

Several resolutions deplore South Africa's policy.

Commonwealth Section's Action

In the report of the party's National Executive Committee the activities of the Commonwealth Section are described as follows:

"The Commonwealth Sub-Committee has completed memoranda on 'The Colonial Office—Its Structure and Functions', 'Problems of Trade Unionism in the Colonies', 'The Native Land Husbandry Bill of Southern Rhodesia', 'Colonial Deportation Laws', and 'The Banishment of Tshetse Khama'.

Regular reports have been submitted on welfare problems of Colonial students in Britain. Background talks on Labour Party organization and policy have been arranged for groups from East and West Africa, Malaya, and the West Indies. Contact has been maintained with the Colonial students' unions in Britain, and 20 scholarships have been made available by the National Executive Committee to assist Colonial people to attend the 1951 summer schools.

"During the year Mr. E. G. Farmer visited Exeter, Bristol, Liverpool, Sheffield, Leeds, and Nottingham to meet Colonial students. A conference was arranged for party members and Colonial students in Manchester at which Mr. Griffiths, Colonial Secretary, was the principal speaker. Several local parties and many individual members of the party have entertained Colonial friends in their homes and at social functions. There has been a constant flow of individual visitors from the Colonies and the new Dominions who have been supplied with information about party policy and organization."

The Commonwealth Sub-Committee is composed of Mr. W. A. Burke, Mr. C. E. Atkin, Miss Alice Bacon, Mrs. B. G. Castle, Mr. T. Driberg, Mr. A. Greenwood, Mr. James Griffiths, Mr. M. Hewitson, and Mrs. E. White (all M.P.s), and Messrs. H. Earnshaw, A. E. Tiffin, S. Watson, and E. G. Farmer (secretary).

Land Ownership a Sacred Trust

"WE CAN RELY on the farming community, as we have always done in the past; they have never let us down." Making this comment at the Mazoe Valley Agricultural Show recently, Sir Godfrey Higgins, Southern Rhodesia's Prime Minister, said that the ownership of the land was a sacred trust. Acres of fine land were lying idle, and increased food production depended on the individual action of each farmer. Sir Godfrey repeated his recent statement that an owner who could not develop all his land should sell the surplus to someone who could afford to do so, and not expect the taxpayers to develop his capital assets.

"Sable Example of Official Technique"

Criticism of Tanganyika Proposal

THE REPORT of the Tanganyika European Council's proposal to accept the "new and improved" proposals of the party of Asians with Africans and to give in aid to the advance to self-government was criticized by Douglas Brown, special correspondent in Africa of the Daily Telegraph, in a long telegram sent from Dar es Salaam on Sunday.

His criticisms of the report of the Tanganyika Constitutional Committee are generally in line with those in the leading article which appeared in EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA a fortnight ago. The telegram said, inter alia:

"The report was drawn up without proper consultation with the European community. The Tanganyika European Council's policy is utterly opposed to that of the committee, leaders of the organization claim that 80% of non-official European taxpayers have joined it. They also say that when elections to the executive committee were held in May last year 75% of members voted. The council demand that the report be referred to a new Legislative Council to which the non-official members will not be nominated but elected by their respective communities in the proportions of seven, four, and three."

Charge of Unanimity

"The manner in which it has been proposed that the generally non-civic-minded Indians should be granted political equality is a subtle example of that Colonial Office technique which gives to the unacceptable the appearance of having been already accepted.

"The report bears an impressive claim of multi-racial unanimity. It is signed by all the non-official members of the Legislative Council, European, African, and Asian, and by the two leading members of the Government who completed the committee. It has received the general blessing of the Governor and the Secretary of State. Thus, when it is debated in the Legislative Council in November, everyone, present, official and non-official, will find himself committed to it in advance.

"The recommendations, however, are bitterly opposed by the vast majority of the non-official European community. They are the people who will be called upon to provide the essential financial element in the self-government of the future.

"The report erases the fundamental question in one sentence which merely makes nonsense of the rest. 'We find it impossible,' the committee say, 'either on a basis of numbers, or financial interests, or on a political maturity to make any assessment of the relative claims to representation by the three races.' It is to be 'equitable' and to 'lay a sound foundation for the permanent development of the territory,' they recommend, the equal distribution of seats.

"The non sequitur and confession of defeat is to form the starting point of a revolution—for the committee's proposal is revolutionary. To admit the claim of the Indians of East Africa to political equality either with the millions of blacks or with the all-important lowering of whites could do worse than 'destroy' as Kenya settlers have shown, all prospects of a British African federation."

A resolution passed by a public meeting of Europeans in Mwanza, calling for South African intervention in conjunction with the proposed constitutional changes in the territory, has been described as irresponsible by an emergency meeting of the Eastern Province regional committee of the Tanganyika European Council.

Problem of Character

THE KENYA CHURCH ASSOCIATION will meet in London on Wednesday, September 19, at 4.30 p.m. in St. Diana Hall, Lime Street, E.C.4, to discuss "Church and School in Kenya." Mr. A. W. Mayer, a former principal of Mazoe School, will speak on the need to impart a Christian character to the new African civilization, and Mr. Harvey Casswell, a former principal of the Teachers' Training Centre at Kabinda, on the need to blend the theology of the soil with one of the soil. Canon J. H. C. Hooper, Africa Secretary of the C.M.S., will preside. Tea will be available from 8.45 p.m. Those who can attend are asked to send a postcard notifying the fact to Mrs. R. ## Missing Links in Education Need for Technical Training

SIR PHILIP MURHELL, Governor of Kenya, said when addressing the Mombasa Saturday Club:

"There has grown a very widespread feeling among the part of Africans that they are entitled to be provided with education by other people, and that education must be as foreign as possible, if they are being lobbied off with something inferior. In consequence there has developed the confusion of thought, not by any means confined to Africans, which mistakes primary class-room teaching for education. Primary schooling is little more than the process of making those who receive it teachable.

"The magnitude of our 1952 bill for education for all three races will cause anxiety. But I fear it may not even now be generally understood that the greater part of it is for the preliminary process of making young people educable.

"If I were free to do so, I would stop any further development of primary education until I had been able to advance secondary and especially technical education and apprenticeship to a higher stage. It is particularly about technical education—in which I include not only the teaching in institutions but apprenticeship in all its various forms—that I feel the greatest anxiety, for the East African populations as a whole are technically totally unskilled populations, except for the immigrant element in them.

Emphasis on Agriculture

"Some people born in these countries have become competent craftsmen of various kinds, usually the simpler kinds, without going abroad. But if you exclude the entire element of the population which has come from other countries already trained and educated, as well as those born in the country who have gone to other countries for facilities which do not exist here, you will get a clearer picture of what confronts us.

"However the cost we have got to find the means of providing the missing links in our means of education, and above all technical education, in which I include agriculture in all branches, stock-raising, and forestry.

"It is untrue to say that Africans look only for white-collar occupations. On the contrary, there is a demand exceeding the places available for technical education in all forms. It is we who have been responsible for the attitude to education as a process of class-room teaching, leading to genteel employment as a clerk or teacher.

"No country can prosper and develop if it lives on imported skill, and if the country is rich enough to send its young people to institutions in other countries to acquire the essential skills of hand and eye, and with it the essential discipline and stability of character, without which craftsmanship cannot be attained."

Lord Ogmore's "Nairobi Nonsense"

CAUSTIC COMMENT on the recent defence conference in Nairobi is made by Truth in the following editorial note:

"An almost infallible method of judging a modern international conference is to assess its value in inverse ratio to the foolishness of the jargon with which its spokesmen sum up its work. Those who employ this method must endorse the view that the defence talks in Nairobi, taken at their face value, were an obvious absurdity. This is what Lord Ogmore, who presided, had to say of them: 'The conference has shown the world that the African Continent is determined to combine against any threat to its peaceful life and rule of law.' 'The mental picture is conveyed of Baganda, Somali, Kamba, Angoni, Mashona and Zulu tribesmen, in concert with thousands of other African peoples, gritting their teeth as they vow to defend their immemorial peace and passion for the rule of law. But for the presence of a handful of white administrators, this passion would express itself in myriads of inter-tribal wars, smelly wars, ritual murders, and the unpeakable despotism of savage kings.

"Lord Ogmore probably enjoys the sensation of speaking on behalf of an entire continent. That not one African in a hundred thousand would know where to find Russia on a map seems not in any way to mar his enjoyment. There is only one way to defend Africa, and that is certainly not the talking of nonsense about African determination to defend the rule of law. It is through the will of the British Government to uphold white supremacy and natural white leadership throughout the British territories."

Kenya's Constitution Committee Evidence Should Be Submitted Now

THE COMMITTEE appointed by the European element of the Legislative Council of Kenya to advise on constitutional principles has held its first meeting. The members are Sir Alfred Vincent (chairman), Sir C. Brauser, Mr. G. M. Edey, Sir Bertrand Glancy, Lord Francis Scott, and Mr. L. R. M. Welwood, M.L.C. The committee was to have included Air Marshal Sir Charles Medhurst, but owing to ill-health he was obliged to decline the invitation. The vacancy has been filled by Mr. R. S. Alexander.

The terms of reference are as under:—
"To consider and make recommendations to the European element as to the constitutional progress of the Colony, which will incorporate or further the policy as under, known as the Sabukia Agreement.

(1) The East African territories should be developed and governed on the principles of the traditions of western civilization.

(2) In order to achieve (1) the immigration of those people nurtured in the traditional principles of western civilization should be encouraged and all other discouraged.

(3) Opportunities should exist for the legitimate aspirations, economic and social, of all peoples living in the territories. The wishes of any people towards a full share in the direction of their affairs must be dependent on the character and ability of the people concerned; the pace at which this policy is carried out must be decided by those in authority locally, and must not be accelerated by ill-adviced pressure from abroad.

(4) The direction of affairs in our territories should pass progressively to those resident here, which must depend on European leadership in association with representatives of all races.

(5) To strive for the closer integration of those African territories with economic and other common interests under a constitution which will allow for the development of each territory and will recognize (a) that different racial policies may be desirable for the several States forming the proposed association and (b) that Imperial treaty obligations exist.

The committee has been requested to consider all relevant past proposals, authorized commissions, committees, etc., and of private persons and non-official bodies, to examine any constitution which it may consider pertinent, and to take evidence regarding the wishes and aspirations of the European or any other community.

Any persons or bodies who wish to submit written evidence are invited to send it to Box 1730, Nairobi, to arrive not later than October 15. The committee proposes to visit many centres outside Nairobi so that a fair hearing may be given to all who wish to express opinion.

Lord Reith's Policy of Candour Another Uneconomic C.D.C. Venture

LORD REITH's policy of candour about the Colonial Development Corporation caused publication at the week-end of the following statement:

"The Colonial Development Corporation in their annual report for 1950 indicated that it was doubtful if the Atlantic Fisheries factory ship ARMACAN QUINN could be operated economically. Exhaustive trials on a commercial basis over the last six months have shown that fishing and production targets submitted to the board proved impossible of achievement. Furthermore, high operating costs make it impossible even on best expectations for the vessel ever to become profit-earning.

"The board have therefore decided to recommend to the Secretary of State for the Colonies the discontinuation of operations forthwith, and disposal of the vessel and other assets of the undertaking. The vessel will return to the United Kingdom, and the ship's company will be paid off. Possibilities of disposal are being investigated.

Total capital involved is £505,300; of this hull, engines, plant and equipment account for £127,700, cost of conversion £176,800, development and operating costs £201,300.

"This further heavy loss of public money did not occur in East and Central Africa, but in view of the great commitments of the C.D.C. in those territories the public will be interested in the above official statement."

A Question of Experience Kenya Press Officer

THE EXPERIENCE OF MR. HUMPHREYS, who has recently appointed Press Officer in the Government of Kenya, has been questioned in the House of Commons by Mr. Michael Blundell, who asked:

"In view of the recommendation made by the Select Committee appointed to report upon the Information Services that the post of Government Press Officer should be held by an officer with sufficient journalistic experience to enable him to give constructive advice on technical matters to editors who require such assistance, and which was accepted by the Legislative Council, will Government state what journalistic and technical experience the present holder of the post had obtained before his appointment, and the number of editors to whom he has rendered advice on technical matters?"

Formerly with B.E.A.

The Acting Chief Secretary replied:

"Due to his appointment the present holder of the post of Press Officer, Mr. Downes, had been Press liaison officer in British European Airways from 1946 to 1948, and gained his journalistic and technical experience during this period, and also when employed as Press liaison officer in the Kenya Information Services from July, 1948, to December, 1950, when he was in close and continuous contact and association with the Press. That experience was considered to be adequate for the appointment. The reply to the second part of the question is six."

The Chief Information Commissioner, Mr. E. R. St. A. Davies, added: "Mr. Mathu, six papers which had received advice, five, we had been dialect papers and the other a Muslim publication."

Mr. E. W. Mathu, an African non-official member, inquired what had been made as a result of the advice given to the editors.

Mr. Davies: "The advice given has been on questions of layout, news sources, the use of illustrations, and materials. There is some improvement, but not as much as we had all hoped."

More Dollars for Southern Rhodesia Mr. Whitehead on his London Visit

DISCUSSING his recent visit to London, Southern Rhodesia's Minister of Finance, Mr. E. C. B. Whitehead, said that the Colony had received an increased dollar allocation to buy American petrol, piece goods, and additional paper supplies. A supplementary allocation to $300,000 for petrol had been made because supplies were no longer available from Abadan, and more would be forthcoming if needed. The $1.5m. allocation for various types of oil for the year ending June, 1952, was an increase over last year's total.

To buy piece goods from America $500,000 had been allocated; these would be the first such purchases since the dollar restrictions. The paper allocation had been raised by over $300,000 to $20,000; the greater part of the increase going towards raw materials for making paper, and ton-tainers as a new Rhodesian factory. The amounts available for industrial purposes and tobacco packing had also been increased.

Mr. Whitehead disclosed that he had made a provisional application to the E.C.A. mission in London for the cost of building a railway to the Portuguese border, but he said that negotiations would be protracted. The survey by the American consultants must first be received.

During the last three years the Colony had assumed that it could raise £5m. annually by loans in England, excluding railway requirements, but it was impossible to forecast the amount that would be available in the future, although he was satisfied that it would not be less than in the past. London interest in the Colony's development was "very healthy," and the success of the recent local loan would undoubtedly strengthen the City's confidence in Rhodesia.

"The British Government would have earned much better dividends if they had put into the Rhodesias some of the millions they have spent so little avail in other territories," Mr. A. M. Bentley, chairman of the Rhodesian Stock Exchange, Bulawayo.

Kenya Planning Committee's Report

KENYA'S PLANNING COMMITTEE, which was reconstituted last year to revise development plans in the light of changing circumstances, has now issued its findings. The members were Messrs. G. Rankine (Chairman), M. Blundell, J. J. K. Chemahari, F. T. Holden, Chumani Kirpatani, V. A. Maddison, and J. Padley, with A. M. Wilkie as secretary.

The report stresses the importance of improving the health and efficiency of the Colony's man power and of attracting capital for agriculture and industry. The advantage of expanding invisible exports, and the need for better communications and social services. Capital funds should, it is urged, be applied to promote progressive development of all factors of production which will result in a well-balanced and broad-based economy.

The revised 10-year programme amounts to £35,489,500, towards which it is expected that £30,926,500 will be available, leaving a deficit of £4,563,000. Schemes financed from the inter-territorial and central research allocations of the Colonial Development and Welfare vote, local authority schemes from loans raised by the Colony for extending to local authorities, and £5m. required for Mombasa's water supply, are not included. Concern is expressed about increases in recurrent costs, estimated at £2,544,600 by 1956.

Large Settlement Schemes

The decision of the East Africa High Commission to formulate plans for the self-sufficiency of the territories is welcomed. The land problem is considered the most serious and urgent facing the Colony. Additional funds for soil conservation and a basic allocation for dam construction are recommended. Overstocking should not be allowed to cause further deterioration in the soil, and an interest-free loan should be granted to the Meat Commission for the establishment of a tinned meat factory for scrub stock. Government is urged to intensify the policy of large settlement schemes.

The forest-planting programme is considered by the committee not only one of the best long-term investments which the Colony can make, but also of being of great assistance in absorbing excess population. The forestry scale could be increased to finance the expansion.

Adequate water supplies are vital, and local authorities should be encouraged to finance, construct, and operate their own supplies.

The road system, which is inadequate for the volume of traffic, must be improved if agriculture and secondary industries are to be developed. A new trunk airport is needed, and it is recommended that £200,000 be allocated for local airfields and the new airport at Embakasi, near Nairobi.

It has been necessary to augment the allocations for education made in the interim, respectively £2,200,000.

Cost-of-Living Allowances

COST-OF-LIVING ALLOWANCES in Zambia have been approved at the following rates: 20% on the first £300, 15% on the next £350, and 10% on the remainder. The allowance, which will be retrospective to January 1 this year, and carry a limit of £200 for any one Government servant, will be in force until at least the end of the year. If husband and wife are both employed by Government, only the allowance on the higher salary will be paid. In the Seychelles the maximum allowance is £100 and the new scale will be dated back only to April 1. On less than £107 10s. a year the allowance will be 33 1/3%; from £107 10s. to £225 the salary will be made up to £130; from £125 to £225 the allowance will be 25%; from £225 to £234 7s. 6d. the salary will be made up to £281 5s.; from £234 7s. 6d. to £300 the allowance will be 20% and above that figure 20% on the first £300, 10% on the next £300, and 5% on the remainder. The allowances apply to locally resident pensioners.

Inter-Territorial Co-Operation

THE UGANDA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE has unanimously resolved to apply for membership of the East African Chambers of Commerce and Industry, a decision which it reached after 21 years ago. Mr. J. J. Johnson had given notice that he would move to Kenya in his absence through illness the case for joining was put by Mr. C. Handley Bird. Mr. D. Marphatia supported the proposal because Uganda's participation would consolidate the spirit of inter-territorial co-operation, but he advocated a rider recalling the circumstances of past disagreement. Mr. F. J. Brats seconded the proposal on the ground that the historical background would be a useful pointer to the future. After Mr. Bird had suggested that such a rider would be an insult, Mr. Marphatia agreed to withdraw it from the original motion and to substitute it as a separate resolution for entry in the records of the Uganda Chamber, but not to be officially forwarded to the Associated Chambers. That course was agreed.

Kafue Hydro-Electric Scheme

MR. P. A. NICHOLSON, Economic Secretary to the Northern Rhodesian Government, stated last week that his Government had decided to investigate the possibility of drawing up a definite project for the exploitation of the Kafue River for hydro-electric purposes, but had not yet come to any conclusion on the findings of the Inter-Territorial Hydro-Electric Power Commission. It had not decided (as had been inferred in some Press reports) that it would not participate actively in the Kariba scheme until investigations had been undertaken into the possibilities of the Kafue Gorge. "Further investigation is required into certain aspects of the Kariba scheme," said Mr. Nicholson, "and the Government is referring the report to the Electricity Development Committee, which is shortly to be gazetted, and one member of which will be the chairman of the Inter-Territorial Commission."

Land and Agricultural Bank

APPLICATIONS FOR LOANS received last year by the Land and Agricultural Bank of Kenya were about the same in number as in 1949, but the amounts required were slightly lower. Long-term loans completed during the year numbered 140, involving £248,977, while 84 for a total of £147,400 were awaiting completion. Thirty-one short-term loans were completed and two awaited completion. The capital of the bank was increased by the release and transfer of £750,000 from funds hitherto allocated to the Farmers' Conciliation Board. Revenue during the year amounted to £53,133 and expenditure to £37,427. The value of loans issued since the inception of the bank is £2,313,258, of which £1,240,334, or 53.6%, have been repaid. Loans written off stand at 9%.

Commission for Africa

THE SUGGESTION that the United Nations should set up a regional economic commission for Africa has been rejected at the plenary session in Geneva, but further study will be given to the proposal. The British delegate, Mr. G. Corley Smith, said that such economic work was better done in other ways. He believed that British urgency in seeking to raise African standards of living was recognized, but whilst Britain was prepared at U.N.O. to go into constructive questions of detail, virulent anti-British propaganda had in the past prevented such attempts. The establishment of economic commissions was largely a matter to be decided by the Governments of the regions concerned.

Broadcasting programmes in Southern Rhodesia have been extended from 43 to 56 hours weekly.

Soil Erosion

IN SPITE of all our efforts in education in Africa, efforts to teach soil conservation are still in the thought of among the aspirants for law degrees, the desirability of becoming lawyers depends on the school teachers. If only the money spent on groundnuts and poultry farms in Africa had gone into soil conservation and instruction of farmers of all races on how to save soil, conserve water, and plant trees, we might by now have had increased food supplies and most certainly have brought hope for a better future at home and in the countries affected. As it is, in spite of the efforts of a devoted minority, in nearly every country of the world, where erosion is acute, soil conservation limps sadly behind soil destruction. Lord Portsmouth, in a letter to The Times.

Rhodesian Transport

"WE ARE DEPENDENT almost entirely on the port of Beira, and our need for a further outlet is becoming acute," said Mr. G. A. Davenport, Southern Rhodesian Minister of Mines and Transport, when he recently addressed the Institute of Transport in Salisbury. Action would shortly be necessary to connect the Colony's rail system with the port of Lourenco Marques, he said, either direct or through Beit Bridge, as an outlet for expanding production and to relieve pressures on existing lines and Beira. Mr. Davenport referred to the staff difficulties of Rhodesia Railways, which have 81 locomotives and 1,350 wagons still on order, and would probably operate 223m. net ton miles this year, compared with 142m. in 1946.

Tobacco Growers Warned

EVEN THE MOST OPTIMISTIC FARMERS in Northern Rhodesia could not hope that tobacco prices would remain at their present high level, said Mr. G. B. Beckett, Member for Agriculture, when he opened the new warehouse of Northern Rhodesia Tobacco Graders, Ltd. He warned farmers not to "get their tobacco at any price"; for that meant quantity rather than quality and growing the crop on unsuitable soils. More Turkish leaf should be grown; it was a useful crop for stabilizing a farm's labour force. Tobacco Graders, Ltd., is owned by five growers, but graded for about 50 other farmers. The company, which employs three Europeans and 250 Africans, expects to handle about 500,000 lb. of leaf this season and 1m. lb. next year.

Native Housing in Salisbury

SALISBURY CITY COUNCIL'S Native housing programme has been praised by Mr. G. A. De Roberts, president of the Salisbury Chamber of Industries. After a tour of Harari township, he said: "We saw a completed block of hostel accommodation for single Natives built by Natives. Another block, completed and painted, was really outstanding and would provide an effective answer to critics in Britain of the way Africans in Southern Rhodesia are treated. We saw shopping centres, sport, cinema, clinic, and other facilities of excellent standard."

Party Split

THE UNIONIST PARTY of the Sudan, which stands for Dominion status under the Egyptian Crown, with the Nile of succession, has split as a result of the action of the party's executive in deciding to dilute from membership anyone who continues with the Constitution Amendment Commission. Nine members of an executive committee who rejected this decision and resolved to act as a separate faction include two members of the Amendment Commission and the editor of El-Rai El-Amm. The opposition element which refuses participation in the commission's work is led by Hammed Tewfik, on whom the Egyptian Government has conferred the title of bey.

NEWS ITEMS IN BRIEF

Increases in court fees, the fees chargeable by advocates, and those payable on the admission of legal practitioners have been increased by one-third in Tanganyika. Unchanged for more than 20 years, the fees are now similar to those fixed in Uganda in 1947 and in Kenya two years later.

Farming practitioners in the Katanga Province of the Belgian Congo have suggested that an agricultural college for Europeans should be established. Another local proposal put before the Government is that young Belgians in the Congo should do their military training there instead of going to Europe.

K.A.R. in Malaya

An advance party of 11 officers and men, including an African Rifleman led by Major J. D. ... of the 1st Battalion, arrived in Singapore at the beginning of the week by air from Nairobi. The 1st (Nyasaland) and 3rd (Kenya) Battalions are due to arrive in January for 18 months' duty in action against the bandits.

A grant of £500,000 will be made by the Uganda Government for educational buildings during the period 1951-56. £100,000 is likely to be spent this year. It is proposed that £172,000 be allocated to self-governing schools, £150,000 to Protestant mission schools, £150,000 to Roman Catholic mission schools, £50,000 to non-mission schools, and £50,000 reserved for contingencies. The allocations will be solely for post-primary education and teacher training.

Compulsory military training will be a heavy burden for Kenya Europeans, about 208 of whom will be conscripted each year. At the age of 16 they will be liable to do 21 weeks' intensive training in Southern Rhodesia, after which they will be attached for two years to the Kenya Regiment for weekly parades and annual camps, to local R.A.F. units, or to the East African Naval Force. The cost to Kenya is expected to be about £20,000 in the first year, rising to nearly double that figure.

Mr. Gordon Walker, Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations, denied today he left London because there was any foundation for rumours that a resolution had been passed at a meeting last week of several tribal chiefs in Bechuanaland and insinuating that in connexion with the discussion of a closer association of the British territories in Central Africa His Government had considered participation in the Bechuanaland Protectorate by the new federation in Central Africa and the Union of South Africa.

Letter to the EditorCentral African Federation*Criticism of a Leading Article

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA

SIR—Your criticisms of Dr. Banda's article on the federation of the Central African territories in your editorial comment of August 23 is misleading to your readers because of its failure to face facts. Without going into the historical detail of these territories, we will deal with the salient points which you have raised. Nor would it be out of place to point out that the recent London conference on closer association of the Rhodesia and Nyasaland by officials was the climax of a long struggle by settlers for more political power. Therefore a study of Central African politics would be incomplete if we regarded the present report as entirely divorced from the amalgamation of 1931 and 1938. To go further than this, even the clamour for a self-government which was mooted by the European non-official members of the Northern Rhodesia Legislative Council was a part of the same plan.

Dr. Banda has drawn your attention to the point that there is "absolutely no difference between the amalgamation of 1931 and 1938 and the federation of 1951" and we are in entire agreement with him. What is important to bear in mind is the object in view which would be attained by either amalgamation or federation. Since your paper has been advocating closer association of the Rhodesia and Nyasaland, it is only common sense to realize that you are now supporting the present report because you are aware that the object which would have been attained through amalgamation could now be attained through federation. Who could deny that those who were advocating amalgamation are now posing as federalists? The evidence at our disposal does not support the view that they have.

ever since the idea of closer association came into the news, Africans have never lost that deep resentment for any form of closer association with Southern Rhodesia. It is such association; how loose it may be, which is the thin end of a very dangerous wedge.

Dr. Banda's article is clearly clear that "there is no difference between the Native policy of Southern Rhodesia and the Native policy of the Union of South Africa." We are surprised at your evasion of the question. We are not impressed by the official survey "that the Southern Rhodesia policy for the future does not differ materially from the stated aims of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland." All that your readers would like to know is the present Native policy, a point on which you have failed to answer your correspondent.

Moreover we are convinced by Sir Godfrey Huggins' speech last January at Oxford University, a full account of which we have read, for the benefit of your readers, we will quote one statement from his speech which clearly illustrates the difference between the Native policy of Southern Rhodesia and that of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. "The key to our policy is that we place economic advancement and provision of social amenities a long way ahead of political advancement." It is obvious that economic and social problems cannot be divorced from politics, and it comes more so in a country where the reins of government are in the hands of the minority. In Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland we believe that economic, social, and political advancement are an integral part of a balanced development of any community and should go hand in hand.

Therefore it is clear that the Native policy of Southern Rhodesia is just the opposite of what the British Government is trying to do in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, and the Africans of these territories are justified to reject any plan which conflicts with their policy, however plausible that plan might be.

From your statement it seems that because of the 27 Africans representing the Governments of the United Kingdom, Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland gave their blessing to the report, due to economic and strategic considerations, the Africans should accept it. We do not believe that federation is desired because of economic and strategic reasons. The main reason is a political one. More could have been done to improve the lot of these territories, even without resorting to federation, if only a bold policy of training Africans to take their place in industry were adopted by Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. May we point out that no sound economic policy would be carried out which would benefit all sections of the community without impinging upon the political sphere?

Your reference to Dr. Banda's pamphlet and letter as "destructive, provocative, and unreliable" is typical of all Europeans who fear Africans' political development. In fact, you have even hinted that the pamphlet is subversive, at least in part. This is not the view which is shared by our people in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland and by our British well-wishers. The fact that the pamphlet has exposed the report on close association as treacherous to the Africans is a credit to Dr. Banda and Mr. Nkumbi and their African colleagues from Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

Those men and women who believe that we have a right to play a fuller part in the affairs of the countries of our land will welcome the pamphlet because it sets out clearly the principle on which we base our arguments. Dr. Banda's estimation in the opinion of his fellow-countrymen is very high. We all look up to him for inspiration and guidance, especially at this crucial hour when all that we have believed and laboured for is at stake. Intelligent Africans, who feel that they have a duty to their own people, will support Dr. Banda and those who share his views in their campaign against federation. Any African leader who reclaims federation does not only lack moral courage but is also a traitor to his own people. We have very reliable information that officials are exploiting the ignorance of some chiefs to accept federation. We question whether that is morally right.

We also very seriously doubt that what you say about Mr. Chilenge is correct. If it is, then his leadership has failed, because he has shown his inability to stand for what is right for his own race. However, we are making inquiries, and as soon as we hear from Northern Rhodesia we will let your readers know about it.

Your attack on Sir Stewart Gore-Browne is unworthy of you. Sir Stewart has lived and is still living in Northern Rhodesia, where he sets, speaks, and indeed lives among the Africans. Until recently he was their representative in the Legislative Council. He knows their views on this question because he has been the one to try even to explain it to them in the past during 1949, as you know. Have you forgotten that in 1949 after the Victoria Falls Conference for the Key, Kasokolo, and Mr. Nelson Nalumbango toured the whole of the country in order to get the Africans to consider the Victoria Falls proposals. From all that and what he has since heard from the Africans he is in a better position than any other European to know what the true feelings of the Africans are on this question. We want to tell you and your readers that what Sir Stewart said is even more true than he himself knows.

Those who oppose federation are doing a public duty not only to Africa, but even to the British Commonwealth, because the history of a colonizing nation is not judged by the material wealth but rather by the virtues of political freedom which it can impart to other subject people in order to determine their own destiny. We strongly believe that no section of the community has any right to interfere with the development of any other community. Therefore on this score we are going to do all that is humanly possible to oppose federation.

If this letter had been written by Europeans it would not have been published when the demands on our space are so heavy, for it adds nothing to the case against federation. Indeed, it once more reveals the weakness of the pretensions of the opposition. The seven African signatories mistake assertion for argument and reiteration for reasoning, and prefer the demonstrably unreliable statements of the Banda pamphlet to two White Papers carrying the authority of 27 senior officials of the British, Southern Rhodesian, Northern Rhodesian and Nyasaland Governments. We believe that almost all our readers will accept the official report, as we do.

We have not evaded Dr. Banda's statement that there is no difference between the Native policies of Southern Rhodesia and the Union of South Africa, but have pointed out that it is not the official policy.

In his introduction to an address of Sir Godfrey Huggins we pointed out that his whole policy, if anyone would suggest that it was not, was that it was not to be based on political, economic and social problems, but on the extension of economic advancement and social amenities above an extension of political powers.

It is true that more could have been done to train Africans for industry, by no means only in Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, but throughout the whole of Eastern Africa. For many years EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA has advocated that policy, not because it seemed to have any intimate connexion with federation, as our correspondents suggest, but because we considered it to be for the general good of the territories and their African inhabitants in particular.

The letter, it should be noticed, describes the report on closer association as "treacherous to the Africans," and any African leader who may acclaim federation is designated "a traitor to his own people." Do these seven young Africans now taking study courses in Great Britain want that Gleichschaltung which was an essential element in Nazism and Fascism and is still the outstanding characteristic of Communism? Is every man who exercises independent thought to be branded a traitor because his opinions are not those of many, perhaps the majority, of his fellow-citizens?

The allegation that we "backed" Sir Stewart-Gore-Brown is not justified. We merely suggested reiteration of the remark which he was alleged to have made to the Secretary of State that "well over 99% of the Africans are against federation."—Ed., E.A. & A.]

Sudan Light and Power

IN REPLY to a proposal by a committee of private citizens in the Sudan that the Sudan Light and Power Co., Ltd., which runs the public transport services and electricity and water supplies in the three towns, should be nationalized, the Acting Financial Secretary has said:

The principal functions of the company are the provision of the capital required to finance the public services and the management of these services on behalf of the Government. The Government owns the public services, but will pay the company for them only in 1955. The public services can therefore be said to be nationalized already.

This arrangement was made because the Government would have found it difficult to find the capital at the time, because the development and the operation of the services required highly specialized and technical knowledge which was not available within the country, and because it was desirable to enlist the aid of some agency which was able not only to obtain and provide the necessary plants, but also to keep in touch with the latest modern developments in the provision of public utility services.

All these advantages have still very considerable value, and they would be immediately lost if the company were nationalized. I am not aware of any advantages likely to result from nationalization, which would outweigh the loss, particularly as the remuneration the company receives for its services cannot be regarded as exorbitant. Consideration must be given shortly as to what is to happen at the end of 1955 when the present agreement terminates. The various local interests will be fully consulted.

World production of raw cotton in the 1950-51 season is estimated at 26,900,000 bales by Mr. Dudley Windel in the Empire Cotton Growing Review. With a carry-over of 16,665,000 bales, the total supply was 43,625,000 bales, of which 31,685,000 were consumed and 200,000 destroyed. In the previous year production was 30,210,000 and consumption 27,915,000 bales. To last season's total the Sudan contributed 410,000, East Africa 320,000, and the Belgian Congo 205,000 bales. In the Sudan, last autumn the area sown to cotton increased by about 10%, the growing period was ideal and the yield an all-time record. There was little change in the planted acreages in Uganda, Tanganyika and Kenya.

Tobacco growers in the Eastern Province of Northern Rhodesia are being hit by a sudden collapse in prices at the Fort Jameson auctions. Bales of inferior grades were left unsold or "given away" for 1d. a lb. The Deputy Director of Agriculture commented: "This will be a warning that the industry is a highly speculative one, although there is nothing to fear for the good grades. New growers have been hit hard." Some comparative prices are: June, 1st day, 68d.; August, 1st day, 25d.; June, 4th day, 49d.; August, 3rd day, 23d.

Mining*Mining Companies and Dividend Controls

THE MINING ASSOCIATION has written to the Controller of the Exchange giving reasons why its members should be exempt from dividend control.

It is claimed that the hardships of British overseas mining companies in the country would not in the main serve the purpose for which it has been stated the Bill is to be introduced, would tend to reduce the quantities of metals and minerals available to this country during the present emergency periods of rearmament, would impose a special burden upon the shareholders of mining companies, because their industry is a wasting one and because many such companies can reap the benefit of their enterprise only in periods of high prices; and would mean that, for so long as the Control continued, the industry, being subject to foreign competition, might lose valuable opportunities to acquire new deposits and turn them to account or to develop and expand its existing operations.

Tanganyika Concessions

TANGANYIKA CONCESSIONS, LTD. has been informed by the Treasury that the proposed measure for the limitation of dividends on ordinary shares will apply to that company, which, if the proposed legislation is passed, could consequently distribute only about 10% of the shareholders. But for the recent announcement by the Controller of the Exchange the board would have recommended a dividend for the past year of 25%. Control of Tanganyika Concessions was recently transferred to Southern Rhodesia, but the company is still registered in the United Kingdom—as are the Northern Rhodesia companies which transferred control to Africa some months ago, namely, Rhokana Corporation, Rhodesian Anglo-American, Rhodesia Broken Hill Development Co., Nibanga Consolidated, and Rhodesia Copper Refiners.

Taxation's Deterrent Effect on Enterprise

Widespread Interests Reviewed

THE FIFTY-FIRST ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF BOOKER BROTHERS, MCCONNELL AND COMPANY, LIMITED, will be held on September 26 at the registered office of the company, 37-41 Gracechurch Street, London, E.C. 4.

The following is the chairman's statement, circulated with the report and accounts for the year ended December 31, 1950:

We have again dealt in the directors' report with the main features of the accounts, but I would call your attention to the further improvement in the company's liquid position. Last year I said that a new bout of inflation was full of financial problems for us. It is indeed, as is the case with all businesses. In Bookers, however, the nature of our undertakings and of the economy of the Colonial territories where we operate tends to some extent to insulate us from the most exaggerated features of inflation, or at any rate, to postpone their impact.

For this reason your directors foreshadow a dividend policy primarily designed further to improve our liquid position and to conserve our cash resources against such elements of inflation as come upon us. Furthermore, in a business of the size and sweep of Bookers, there are bound to present themselves from time to time new projects for which we feel we must find finance. We cannot afford to pass by new investment which we regard as essential to the well-being of our existing business and of the Colonies where we trade.

Taxation

The present high level of taxation adds immeasurably to our problems. Certain Colonial Governments, recognizing its deterrent effect upon enterprise and development, have recently adopted the enlightened policy of granting substantial tax relief to new industrial concerns. In so far, however, as investment in new Colonial industries comes from the United Kingdom—as it is largely bound to—the taxation system of His Majesty's Government entirely nullifies these Colonial tax concessions. The West India Committee have submitted to the Royal Commission on the Taxation of Profits and Income a memorandum calling attention to this anomaly.

It will not be out of place to quote a letter on this subject from your vice-chairman which was published in The Times on May 12, 1951:

Colonial Tax Relief Nullified

It is remarkable that, while it is the stated intention of His Majesty's Government to encourage Colonial development, each of their recent financial planning drafts designed actively to discourage it.

To give three examples: First, the proposed ban to transferring abroad the management and control of United Kingdom companies. This will effectively prevent that partnership between United Kingdom capital and Colonial control and management which can alone create the proper climate for Colonial development.

Secondly, the omission of Colonial development from the Chancellor's "priorities" in his latest memorandum of guidance to the Capital Issues Committee. This omission, coupled with the Chancellor's emphasis on projects designed to improve the supply of raw materials and to save dollars, will confirm Colonial suspicions that the interest of the United Kingdom in Colonial development lies rather in the potential value of Colonial resources to the United Kingdom than in the benefits which such development brings to Colonial peoples themselves.

Thirdly, several Colonial Governments have recently enacted legislation granting substantial tax concessions to industrial enterprises, in particular relieving dividends paid in early years from taxation in the hands of their recipients. United Kingdom legislation, far from complementing this constructive arrangement, entirely ignores it, with the result that the United Kingdom takes advantage of tax revenue specifically sacrificed by the Colonial Governments in question. This largely nullifies Colonial attempts to attract United Kingdom capital.

Living Standards Jeopardized

Since that letter was written His Majesty's Government have conceived the limitation of dividends. It is alleged that this measure, which is really nothing but a perpetration of political expediency, is to protect the standard of living in the United Kingdom. It seems most improbable that it will have this or any other beneficial result. One result, however, that it certainly will have is gravely to jeopardize the standard of living of British Colonial peoples.

It is difficult to imagine any more effective way of drying up the main source from which money for Colonial development must still come—British private enterprise. How can any company here raise money for Colonial development if this measure comes into force—and it is only by continued development of their resources that increasing Colonial populations can maintain, let alone improve, their present low living standards.

Reorganization

Last year I told you that we had reached the final stages of preparing a comprehensive scheme for the financial reorganization of the group and that we aimed to put the scheme into operation on January 1, this year. This has been done and we are fully satisfied that our administrative and financial organization is now appropriate to our diverse business. The expansion which we are conducting with the 1950 accounts illustrates the new organization. It will also, I hope, give you a new impression of the fascinating diversity of Bookers.

Notes

Our sugar undertakings in 1950 were most profitable, thus in 1949, and progress for the current year is satisfactory so far. In the field of research and scientific work we are doing very much more of improving yields from our manure and fertilizer. Despite their starting with a deficit and progress inevitably fell upon us from time to time, and towards the end of the year a few dollars were in British Guiana was discovered there. It is being ecologically dealt with, and the experts tell us that there is no reason for undue alarm. Encouraging progress is being made with experiments in mechanical field cultivation. Work on modernizing our factories goes forward well.

The group of estates for which Bookers are responsible either as owners or agents produced 138,272 tons of sugar in 1950, as against 120,755 tons in 1949. Even higher output had been confidently expected, but abnormally heavy rainfall in the first two months of the year and consequent flooding of large areas of cultivation upset calculations badly and did considerable damage to some of the canefields. Weather is one of the great hazards of tropical agriculture, and we provide against it as far as is economically possible. Present estimates are that the 1951 output will exceed that of 1950.

Agitation Efforts Abortive.

It is never safe to prophesy about the labour situation for unfortunately political agitators and self-seekers are always with us. They aim, for their own ends, and directly contrary to the interests of the workers, to inflame opinion against the industry, and bring about major stoppages of work. Happily, in 1950 their attempts were largely abortive, thanks to the good sense of our workpeople, and thanks to the fact that normal labour negotiations with the recognized trades unions were conducted in that atmosphere of mutual understanding and good-will which can alone inspire successful human relationships.

We attach much importance to welfare and the personal touch. As an indication of what is being done, I cannot do better than quote from the annual report of the social welfare organizer of the British Guiana Sugar Producers' Association: "The managers on the sugar estates of this Colony are giving welfare a real place in their annual programmes, and a marked advance can be noted."

Security for Future Development

Markets.—I told you last year that an agreement had been reached which, while it by no means affords the security which West Indian circumstances justify, at least affords a minimum measure of security against which we can plan for the next eight years.

In recent months you will have learned that His Majesty's Government, before this Commonwealth Sugar Agreement could be signed, and without consulting the Commonwealth Governments and producers with whom they had negotiated it, chose to open separate negotiations for the contractual purchase of Cuban sugar. These, which culminated in the signing on August 10 of a trade agreement between the United Kingdom and Cuba, have not essentially complicated and delayed the signing of the Commonwealth agreement. The general position is therefore clarified and uncertain, and Commonwealth producers are most perturbed by the lack of consultation between His Majesty's Government departments which has brought about this emergency situation.

Prize by Colonial Office

Perturbed as we are, I must, nevertheless, express our sincere appreciation of the help and understanding which we can always be sure of receiving from the Colonial Office. The British West Indian and other Colonial people are fortunate in the constructive way in which the department fulfil their most complex responsibilities.

The future of the Canadian market is also causing us much anxiety because currency control and other restrictions in Montreal restrict West Indian trade interests in leading Canada to turn to non-Commonwealth sources for her sugar. It would be disastrous for the British West Indies, if by such means they lost their main point of view, were this tendency to being about some serious disarrangement extraneous to which the British West Indies themselves could in no way be held responsible.

Shop-Keeping

The concentration of the group's trading and shop-keeping activities under Campbell Booker Carter, Limited, (formerly Campbell Bros. Carter and Co. Limited.)

In Central Africa our trading interests have been split up into divisions each of which has been given a financial structure which should be adequate for the expanding environment in which they trade. In 1950 they had a deservedly good year.

In British Guiana, 1950 results were about the same as 1949, given reasonable general trading conditions, we hope to do better in future, despite price control and increased competition. In Trinidad, Stephens, Limited, improved upon last year's results and current returns show continued expansion.

Price Controls

Price controls operate with varying degrees of severity in British Guiana, Northern Rhodesia, and Nyasaland. Their departmental effects are particularly noticeable in the retail trade in British Guiana and in the wholesale trade in Northern Rhodesia. In Northern Rhodesia, it will depend whether or not we shall be able to continue to extend our wholesale trade in that territory.

"We cannot believe that measures of price control (and taxation) which make it impossible for the trader to find the money to replace stocks at unyieldably higher prices, can possibly be in the interests of the community as a whole. Indeed, in Colonial territories, whose developing economy depends upon the ready supply of consumer goods, ill-conceived measures of price control may well impede development, and thus reduce the standard of living."

Co-Operation and Good-Will

"There is a fine spirit of co-operation and good-will between, and throughout, our various trading enterprises, and the pooling of experience of trading conditions in Central Africa and the British West Indies must be beneficial. Facing pages 1 and 20 of these accounts we show interior photographs of two of our shops—one in British Guiana and one in Northern Rhodesia. In the supplement to these accounts we show other photographs which I hope you will find interesting."

"The problem of suitable housing for overseas staff is always pressing, and causes us considerable concern—particularly in British Guiana, where building costs are excessively high. This is not a problem impinging upon our shop-keeping undertakings alone. The easy solution is, of course, to abandon the high standards which we have established, but it is one that we will not lightly accept in this or any other aspect of our responsibilities."

Shoppers may not, perhaps, be aware of the extent of Campbell Booker Carter's business as an export, shipping and contracting house for clients throughout the Union of South Africa, the Rhodesias, East and West Africa, Ceylon and Hong Kong. Their current figures of turnover are the highest we have known.

Shipping

On January 1, 1951, the company's Liverpool office was formed into a separate company, under the name of Booker Brothers (Liverpool), Limited. This is now the parent company of the group's shipping and other interests. It holds the shares in Booker Line, Limited (formerly The Arabaka Steamship Company, Limited), Booker's Shipping and Trading Company, Limited, and Booker's Shipping Transport and Wharves, Limited, the last being a company registered in British Guiana and responsible for the operation here of the group's coastal shipping services, shipping and air line agencies.

doring, warehousing, and wharfing, businesses and road transport.

"Because this new organisation did not come into operation until January 1 this year, 1950 was not affected by it. It will, however, be convenient to refer briefly to the 1950 results under the new grouping.

Booker Line Limited.—ASAKA and AMAMURA operated successfully in spite of the formidable task of completing 12 voyages in the year between them. Towards the end of the year, in order to improve our service, it was decided to charter a third vessel.

"The line is always faced with the possibility of having to contend with adverse factors beyond their control, notably bad weather, which can affect not only the steamer's sailings but also loading and discharging. Only once during the year were sailing schedules upset through labour disputes—a waterfront strike in Georgetown. The outstanding morale and loyalty of our sea-going personnel do much to help us overcome difficulties.

"It is not surprising that operating costs continued to increase, but this was largely offset by higher rates of freight.

"Apart from our own shipments, it is satisfactory that we are able to rely upon the valuable support of so many shippers from this country to British Guiana.

"In common with other shipping companies, the line is faced with the problem of providing out of current revenue funds required in due course to replace ships, at prices which at present can be calculated only by guesswork; but which guesswork suggests will be incomparably above their original cost.

Encouraging Results

Bookers' Shipping and Trading Company Limited.—Results were encouraging. Shipping and forwarding work undertaken for outside shippers continues to increase, and progress made by the department responsible for booking sea and air passages is particularly pleasing. We are sending shareholders with these accounts a booklet describing the services which the travel department of this company has to offer.

Demerara Shipping Interest.—Difficulties have been experienced in restoring coastal craft to first-class condition after the war. In particular, motor coasters have been held up owing to slow delivery of spare parts. The results of all departments were, generally speaking, worse than in 1949, the main factor responsible being rapid increases in operating expenses not balanced at the time by corresponding increases in revenue. The prospects for the current year are rather more reassuring.

Rum

"It is with deep regret that I have to record the death in February, 1951, of Mr. R. P. Gray, a senior director of United Rum Merchants Limited, and one of the past owners of the business. For over 20 years he had done a great deal towards its success.

"United Rum Merchants Limited had an excellent year, the outstanding achievement being to bring on the market their principal brand, Lemon Ruff, and to increase its sales. This increase was all the more encouraging in view of the rum consumption in the United Kingdom declined during the year. It gives a ground for believing that the company's advertising, with which most of you will be familiar, is proving effective in bringing before the public brands which they like. I am glad to be able to say that this favourable trend has extended into 1951, and has earned public confidence in the names Lemon Ruff and Lamo.

"As in other parts of the group, returns from satisfactory sales are being offset by rising costs of production and distribution. We are most anxious to avoid raising the price to the consumer, and can only hope that further increased sales will make this step unnecessary.

"United Rum Merchants' peak trading period coincides with the end of Bookers' financial year. As may be inferred from the directors' report, United Rum Merchants' short-term borrowings were on December 31, very high. This borrowed money, being required to finance duty recoverable from customers, is a reflection of the high volume of branded sales.

Properties, Holdings and Services

"Of the smaller companies in British Guiana (now subsidiary to Bookers' Properties, Holdings and Services Limited, formed on January 1, 1951), the R. D. Balata Company, Limited, had a satisfactory year, and Bookers' Manufacturing Drug Company, Limited, also proved on its 1949 results. The G.G. Engineering Company, Limited, did well and shows considerable promise for the future. We look to Bookers' Properties, Holdings and Services, Limited, to foster any new projects which we may decide to undertake in British Guiana.

Management and Staff

"Apart from the many problems of those troubled times, the process of reorganization has thrown a great deal of extra work and worry upon our management and staff. I am sure, however, that the company's employees—as well as its shareholders—will benefit from the greater efficiency of our new administrative machinery, working, as it is, more smoothly every day.

"Our finest asset is the team of men and women who operate our businesses, and because we know that they are good and bear the responsibility and do the work allotted to them, we can face with confidence whatever the future may have in store for us."

The Consolidated Sisal Estates of East Africa, Limited

Net Profit More than Doubled

MR. N. C. S. BOSANQUET

THE INTERIM ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING OF THE CONSOLIDATED SISAL ESTATES OF EAST AFRICA, LIMITED, was held at 5 and 7, Eastcheap, London, E.C.3, on Tuesday, September 14.

Mr. N. C. S. Bosanquet, chairman of the company, had circulated 10 shareholders with the report and prospectus for the year ended March 31, 1951, a statement of accounts and terms.

The company is 15 years old and this year and, if you approve the recommendations which we make in our report, will have paid 12½% to members on the original register who have retained their holdings until the date of this meeting. The capital of £250,000 is now represented in the property account on the other side of the balance sheet by fixed assets of nearly twice that figure, while current assets in excess of all liabilities amount to approximately £184,000. This figure of £185,000 would be reduced to £140,000 as and when we are permitted to pay out the 25% allocated to dividend reserve. It is perhaps not too much to say that the company has at last achieved a sound and dignified balance sheet backed by liquid assets which make for some provision against less prosperous times in the future.

£250,000 Paid in Taxation

A good crop and high selling prices have provided us with good profits for the year under review. The extent of our prosperity can be gauged by the fact that we have to pay just over £250,000 in taxation. You will see that we bring a profit figure into the appropriation account of £215,947 after making provision for all taxation. We are placing £125,000 to general reserve, £5,000 to staff contingencies reserve, £207 to maintenance of agricultural implements, and £45,947 to dividend reserve. The interim dividend of 10% paid in January, 1951, absorbed £13,750, and we propose a further dividend of 15% taking £19,688, and to carry forward the balance of £18,512 to the next account. This compares with £12,396 brought in.

Just after these accounts had been passed by the auditors, Mr. Gaitaneri made the announcement in the House of Commons, and by the 14th hour we found ourselves prohibited from declaring a final dividend of 25% which had been our intention, and that the situation which we are permitted to distribute for the year is 25%. A statement has already been written in London about this regretful political move, and it is unnecessary for me to comment further on it. I propose this year placing 25% to dividend reserve, and if or when this threat of an acquisition of a large amount of returns for our capital is removed, shall pay a further dividend to our members.

Advantages of Company Control

Looking at the accounts the dominating figure is taxation, and in this connection we have had some few letters, 10 in all, from members representing £5,500 stock, urging us to transfer the company to Tanganyika. Quite apart from the fact that present legislation prevents such a step being taken, it is not convinced that it would be in the interest of members to do so. London is the centre from which the company can best be controlled. It is not possible to control first from the point of view of our advisers.

In discussing the tax closely in touch with world markets, and are provided with sales agents abroad which are quite invaluable to the company. In times of fantastic selling prices this position becomes a little obscured, but time and again by means of an immediate opportunity we have made good losses in this department which in competitive times show a surprising difference in the profit and loss account. Transfer to control abroad means complete change of selling policy from London and the operation of all sales of produce from East Africa.

Engineering and Agricultural Consultants

In engineering we have first-class advice, profit and a highly trained and experienced engineer as consulting capitalist who visits our suppliers in this country and ensures that we obtain the right thing at the right price. We are advised and aided in this highly technical department in such manner that the company is saving large sums of money while gradually perfecting its factory arrangements.

In scientific work, more especially as relating to soil and fertility, we are fortunate enough to have the services of an Oxford professor who visits our estates, lays down our experiments, and who will, I am confident, gradually and in time find out the intricate secrets of our soils, knowledge upon which the future of any company, such as this engaged in tropical agriculture, must depend.

Rapacious Economy of Socialist

I am glad to have opportunity to dilate on these points so that members may know that this company is not guided alone by a board of directors, but that they are protected and served by professionals in the essential departments who would be difficult to come by were we to divorce ourselves from the centre of the world. And finally I am unwilling to believe that we are condemned to Socialist legislation, in perpetuity, legislation which seems to have as its main aim and object the paralysation of success and enterprise by heavy taxation. Would it eventually transpire that we must indeed submit to such a fate, it is our duty that our care is not to let control pass to the hands of our estates. In the meantime, I should be glad if the company failed to make a right and proper contribution towards the cost of rearmament by disappearing from the list of enterprises registered in this country.

Two Ex-Bankers

Under current assets you will notice the investment of £5,000 in an unquoted security. This is a small interest which we have taken in two ex-bankers' properties which have been formed into a local company. Apart from the fact that we hope that this may prove to be a profitable investment, it puts us in touch with an entirely different line of thought in estate management from our own, and should prove of value to us and our general manager from this point of view.

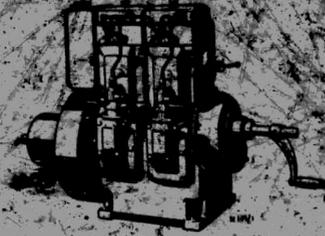

Mlingoti.—You will see that Mlingoti estate has now come into our hands on a 99-year lease. The purchase of this property suits us very well. Contiguous to Kibara, it is really well and conveniently managed. Provided with its own factory and transport, it is a self-contained unit. It is a fine estate, resting up additional areas under agreement for making it a steady 1,000-ton production of brominating water. On the other hand, prices were high for our fibre, we expect to

It is little over 50 years since the first rails were laid of the railway which is to-day the East African Railways and Harbours Administration, operating 2,930 route miles of metre gauge railway, some 6,000 miles of lake and river steamer services, 1,716 miles of road motor services, and the four ocean ports of Mombasa, Dar es Salaam, Tanga and Lindi.

Another port is at present under construction at Mtwara in Southern Tanganyika for the groundnut scheme, in connexion with which many miles of new railway have been built.

In these 50 odd years the Railway has been a chief agent in the amazingly rapid progress of the territories it serves, and this progress continues. In 1949 the freight tonnage was 127 per cent heavier than it was 10 years previously, and passenger journeys had increased in the same time by 340 per cent.

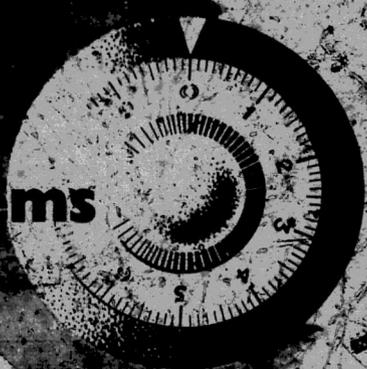

The Railway, proud of its past record, and alive to its present responsibilities, is sparing no effort to maintain and speed the development of East Africa.

MATTERS OF MOMENT

THIS WEEK'S CONFERENCE at the Victoria Falls between representatives of the United Kingdom, Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia, and Nyasaland is of great importance, but it will not necessarily decide the issue of Central African Federation. It is conceivable, for example, that every African speaker may oppose federation, but that not one of them will be able to satisfy the Secretaries of State that their opposition is reasonable, in which event the two Ministers may well feel that it is their duty to tell the Cabinet that it should proceed with the plan for federation, subject to necessary amendments of detail. That, indeed, appears to be the situation which the two Ministers and the Cabinet will have to face, for the Africans who have objected to the very principle of federation in the talks of recent weeks have not produced a single argument of substance. So sympathetic a Minister as Mr. Griffiths has had to tell them again and again that their fears were baseless; but they have nevertheless repeated monotonously the same unconvincing assertions.

What is a trustee to do in such circumstances? Is he to act in accordance with the expressed desires of a ward who stubbornly adheres to convictions which are demonstrably wrong and contrary to his own best interests, or is he to fulfil his trust for the ward's present and future good though the ward will for the moment not recognize the rightness either of the motive or of the action? The worthy trustee will surely take the second course; and from that obligation we cannot see that the Imperial Government can escape unless it is prepared to put expediency before principle and sacrifice the general good of British Central Africa to the clamour of a tiny minority of educated and semi-educated Africans, practically none of whom has had enough experience of affairs to reach a reliable judgment in such matters, and some of whom have so feared the truth that their propaganda against federation has been a mixture of falsehoods, exaggerations, and intimidation.

It is being suggested in some quarters that if the African representatives continue to mistrust the proposals for federation, the whole matter should be dropped. Federation is either right or wrong. The Right Policy from the standpoint of Is To Do Right. Central Africa as a whole. If it is wrong it should be dropped, because it is wrong, not because a few African extremists have agreed to express mistrust. If it is right, it should be made operative at the earliest possible moment, whatever any small groups of any race may say. Most problems in the world to-day are the direct consequence of the refusal "to do the right as God gives us to see the right." Not until three months ago had all the fundamental facts in favour of federation been authoritatively analysed, listed, and published. The document in which that was done comprehensively and thoroughly has been attacked, of course, but not one of its many points has been reduced. Knowing the solid strength of fact in the report, its opponents can merely sneer at it or seek to smear it. Are we now to be told that "democracy" implies submission to that kind of comment and obstructionism provided it can masquerade as unanimous within a small but very vocal group? If so, the self-government to which groups of Colonies are encouraged to look forward will be a sorry and sickening substitute for the Pax Britannica to which Africa owes so much.

Campaigners against federation misrepresent it as a movement of white settlers who are resolved to break the influence of the Colonial Office. That is a clever but untrustworthy suggestion. If it

Sinister Misrepresentation. were true, the Secretary of State for the Colonies and the official in charge of the African division of the Colonial Office could not have shown themselves so sympathetic to the present proposals as they have done. They have naturally not committed themselves irrevocably to the precise plans for they are servants of a Government which has reserved its judgment, but they have no doubt to approve that they regard the scheme as a practicable basis for a policy which would not outrage the Colonial Office. Hitherto the Colonial Office has opposed federation. Now it is attributed to her, to otherwise the Secretary of State would not have gone to Africa, and he would certainly not have gone if the Imperial Government regarded federation as a device to deprive it of powers which it ought to exercise. There are far weightier and less sinister motives for a constitutional development of great political, economic, and strategic significance.

The fundamental aim is to promote inter-racial good will and a sense of nationhood. As Rhodesia and half a century ago, and as Sir Godfrey Huggins has made clear again and again, the objective

Main Aims of Federation. must be equal rights for all civilized men—not premature and therefore irresponsible gestures which involve manifest dangers and no continuing advantages, but genuine rights granted progressively as character and capacity are developed by Africans to exercise them. That must take time, and it is dishonest to disguise the fact. Meantime, the Imperial Government has the inescapable duty of discharging its responsibilities, and that cannot be done by seeking to appease a vociferous and small section of the African community. In our view it can be done only by deciding in favour of federation. History would pronounce a harsh verdict if faith were not kept when the whole destiny of British Africa from the Limpopo to the Nile is at stake. The challenge is that of faith to all parties—the Imperial Government no less than the Europeans and Africans on the spot.

Notes By The Way

Revolt In The City

THE REFUSAL of the directors of three great Central African copper mining companies (Roan Antelope, Rhodesian Selection Trust, and Mufuire) to recognize the right of the Government to impose dividend limitation before Parliament has considered and sanctioned such a measure has been cordially welcomed in the City. Cautious commentators, however, point out that if the present intentions of the Cabinet, as announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, do become operative, the shareholders of the first two companies could receive for the next two years dividends totalling no more than one-fifth of the present level. Most shareholders will probably support the stand taken on their behalf, receive the higher distribution with satisfaction, and allow the future to take care of itself.

Government by Warning

THESE COMPANIES present the Treasury with some knotty international problems, for the great American Metal Corporation owns rather more than half of the capital of Rhodesian Selection Trust and nearly a third of that of Roan Antelope, and both companies have many American and French shareholders. Such foreign companies and individuals may well ask why they should be denied fair participation in the splendid profits lately earned by the companies, and if for reasons of pure party politics the Socialist Government imposed dividend limitation in these cases retrospectively, despite the present lack of statutory justification, it would almost certainly provoke protest from the State Department, with which it will scarcely wish to quarrel on such an issue. Mr. R. L. Frain, chairman of the

Central African Federation Conference Opens at Victoria Falls

Local Negroes' Affairs in 1950-51 Years Are Grounded

THE VICTORIA FALLS CONFERENCE of Central African Federation opened on Tuesday under the leadership of Sir John Kennedy, Governor of Southern Rhodesia. It is expected in coming days to discuss the economic and social conditions to be discussed and there will be frequent press conferences.

The British Government was represented by the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations, Mr. C. Gordon-Walker, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. James Griffiths, and five officials.

The Governors of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, four of Southern Rhodesia's seven Cabinet Ministers and the Ministers of Education and Health of the three territories were present. Five Africans attended from Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, two from Southern Rhodesia.

Shades May Be Remaining Out

On the eve of the conference the special correspondent of THE TIMES telegraphed:

"Although the gap at the moment may seem wide, there is a solid ground for optimism in the recognition by the principal dominions of the necessity of bridging it, especially in view of the latest developments in the south, with Dr. Malan's declaration concerning the Protectorate and the formation of a new party by the Afrikaners in Southern Rhodesia. There is a general feeling that the sands may be running out.

Ordeal among the Europeans in Southern Rhodesia is still hard. There are still some who believe a minority are essential in order to give them a closer education. For the time being they prefer assimilation to federation.

Rhodesia's traditional leaders have exercised over the past few years a strong influence on the British Government. It is likely to influence the proposed status of the Minister for African Affairs, the outcome of which, as they see him, will also affect the number of nominated members in the Assembly and may suggest a bi-racial system to which the Government is already inclined.

It is also possible that the number of nominated members in the Assembly and may suggest a bi-racial system to which the Government is already inclined.

stories are sticks which can be snapped by themselves, but if bound together by federation can have far greater strength than merely the aggregate of their addition.

There is plenty of room for discussion, argument and suggestion as to precisely what form the binding of that bundle should take. What is devoutly to be hoped is that those who are assembled at the conference will realize, and agree, the necessity of the binding—if British Central Africa is to have a secure future.

In Salisbury last week, many representatives of the urban African population told Mr. Gordon-Walker that they favoured federation in principle, but were unwilling to accept it unless one Native policy prevailed, and that must be the policy pursued by the Colonial Office in the two northern territories. Under such conditions they would even accept amalgamation.

In his reply the Minister emphasized that it was not foregone conclusion that Southern Rhodesian Africans would not have their own representation in a Federal Parliament. Earlier in the day he had told a gathering of more than 100 chiefs and counsellors from Mashonaland that partnership was the aim of Southern Rhodesia's Native policy. It was said that the partnership principle had never previously been so clearly enunciated in public to a representative gathering of local Africans.

Full Racial Co-Operation

When he met the Western Province African Provincial Council at Bulawayo, Mr. Griffiths said that if federation took place the policy of the British Government towards Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland would remain unchanged, that policy was the development of the two territories towards self-government within the Commonwealth on the basis of full co-operation between the races.

He said that Africans in Northern Rhodesia feared that transferring responsibility for immigration to the Federal Government would produce an influx of European settlers with the eventual aim of undermining the indigenous population.

The Kitwe branch of the Northern Rhodesian African Congress presented a seven-point petition. Mr. Griffiths did not comment on the proposals, which were as follows:

- (1) Institution of universal adult suffrage;
- (2) Re-institution of the policy of paramountcy of African interests;
- (3) Increasing African representation in Legislative Council;
- (4) Removal of all forms of colour bar and racial segregation;
- (5) Assistance in higher education to enable Africans to take medical and all degrees;
- (6) African members of Legislative Council to be given portfolios;
- (7) Continuance of Colonial Office rule until such time as the Africans are in a position to demand self-government on their own terms.

Self-Government and Partnership

In Lancaster, the Minister was asked by Dr. L. M. Rogers of Northern Rhodesia, would it be possible to grant greater freedom of choice and ultimately self-government under federation. Mr. Griffiths replied that on the basis of partnership with all races, public opinion would be the basis of the decision.

The chairman of the local branch of the European Anti-Communist and British Staff Association reported that 5% of the 123 members favoured federation, and Mr. A. Miller said that 20% of the African population understood what federation meant.

Mr. Griffiths pointed out that the African was concerned only about such matters as change in land, Native policy, and wage control. He stated that Africans fear about federation were procedure because they would still be controlled by N.M. Government.

When a delegation of African trade unionists visited federation, the Secretary of State told them that the economic program which had provided Africans with better living conditions would be expanded more rapidly than in the three Central African territories which are to be federated.

Mr. S. A. Hyatt, president of the Association of Manufacturers, Commerce and Industry, said that federation would increase immigration, enhance investment possibilities, and increase the general bargaining power of the three territories.

A petition supporting federation signed by 1,178 of the 1,366 white residents of Broken Hill was handed to the Minister in that town.

Only by evidence of the good-will of the Europeans could Africans be assured that their fears of the consequences of federation were groundless, wrote the Central African Post, of Lusaka, in a leading article.

Mr. Fletcher's Remarks

Mr. P. B. Fletcher, Southern Rhodesian Minister for Native Affairs, was stated to have said last week that African opinion in the Colony on federation "does not count"; it was represented by the Government, and the federation negotiations were "negotiations between Governments." He added that Mr. Gordon-Walker would have two meetings with Africans in Salisbury and two in Bulawayo.

Mr. J. Powys Jones, Secretary for Native Affairs, was reported to have said later that a departmental survey of African opinion on federation had been made for the Cabinet; he did not know whether this would be shown to Mr. Gordon-Walker, and Mr. Fletcher had forbidden its issue to the Press.

The Manchester Guardian commented next day:—

"If he has been rightly reported, Mr. Fletcher has thrown a large-sized spanner in the works. On the eve of the Falls conference, to which representatives of African bodies have with some difficulty been persuaded to come, he is said to have announced that African opinion 'does not count.'"

"If it does not count in Salisbury it certainly does here. No British Government, of whatever political colour, is likely to back the federation plan if the Africans in the three territories remain as overwhelmingly opposed to it as they now appear to be. They may possibly be wrong, short-sighted, or misinformed about it, but they cannot simply be left out on account of the ground that Mr. Fletcher speaks for them."

"Mr. Griffiths and Mr. Gordon-Walker may have hoped to persuade them that the safeguards contained in the plan were sufficient for them. They will be twice as hard to persuade now. They may well say to Mr. Griffiths: 'Yes, while you are here we are bound to Victoria Falls to join in the deliberations. But see what it will be like when you go away.' And the Africans of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland will bring back their 'yes' to Colonial Office first. If Mr. Fletcher has been misheard or misunderstood he had better clarify his words quickly."

On the following day Mr. Fletcher denied the report, saying that when a reporter had telephoned asking for the interview on African opinion:

"I told him I was not prepared to give him anything for publication on the eve of the Falls Conference. The Prime Minister had already made his statement on the Falls. Any further conversation was simply to give reports which I refused to give an interview."

African Opinion Assesses

"I have suggested that African opinion did not count. I have publicly maintained this in spite of the common roll we should always be at pains to ascertain African opinion." I pointed out that in the Salisbury African opinion is represented through an annual assembly of representatives.

Mr. Godfrey Hughes told journalists who asked him about the incident that the grounds for the Falls conference had been made to the Government of Southern Rhodesia, and that the working had been done in difference from that in the case of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland. That was because Southern Rhodesians had a properly constituted Parliament elected by British voters on a common roll. Africans were British subjects in Southern Rhodesia.

Nevertheless, the Colony Government had arranged for Mr. Gordon-Walker to meet with African leaders and had proposed extensive reports on African opinion. From the time it was known that the Africans did not understand the operation of federating in these countries were likely to be entirely opposed, and on the whole the opinion expressed was that they would not support the federation unless such support for the plan could be obtained from the majority of Africans as well as their leaders.

The Nidom and District Chamber of Commerce and Industry has passed 40 resolutions on the subject of federation, which it whole-heartedly supports in every way.

Rhodesia" ought, it is felt, to designate the federated State, which should have a new capital away from the industrial centres of the component territories. The vicinity of the Kafue River is suggested as a possible site.

While the chamber dislikes the proposal that the making of terminating of the appointment of a Minister of African interests should be the prerogative of the Governor-General, subject to the approval of the Secretary of State, it would accept it as an interim measure if after an agreed period the appointment or termination of appointment lay with the Federal Parliament.

It is felt very undesirable that the Governor-General, being the direct representative of H.M. The King, should be called upon in any way whatsoever to make what is in effect a political appointment.

Composition of Federal Parliament

It is considered that the time has not yet come for Africans to sit as members of the Federal Legislature, and that the nine members to be nominated to represent African interests should, to begin with, be Europeans. African interests are fully safeguarded by the Minister of African Interests, the nine members of the Federal Legislature nominated to represent African interests, and the constitution of the African Affairs Board, which will include at least three Africans.

Nyasaland and Northern Rhodesia Africans sit in the territorial legislatures, and there is no reason for this policy to be altered. It is hoped that at a later date the experience so obtained will prove Africans to be capable of assuming the responsibilities of membership of the Federal Legislature.

Chambers of Commerce and Industry of all three territories should be adequately represented on all boards and committees. In the initial stages of federation all adjustments of the present policies in the three territories must react in some way on commercial and industrial affairs.

It should be the policy of the Federal Government to consolidate gradually the differing laws into one legal code.

It will be most unsatisfactory and inconvenient for returns to be rendered to both federal and territorial income-tax departments.

The suggested basis of federation is unduly expensive, and in effect will superimpose an additional expensive administration on top of existing ones. Very considerable savings could be made by the transfer of further departments of the Federal Legislature, and the abolition of redundant ones. The territorial Administrations could become provincial administrations, with considerable savings in expenditure. The further departments referred to above are agriculture, forestry, veterinary services, public relations, marketing boards, and eventually, on consolidation of the legal code, police and prisons.

In the course of its conclusion, the chamber recorded:

For the high importance it is liable to be attached to African opinion favouring federation, as reflected in the Press and in public statements made by a small section of African intelligentsia claiming to represent the mass of African opinion, notwithstanding that there is no substantial evidence that they have obtained a clear mandate from the African public.

Africans have only to compare the present stage of their development with that which existed in Central Africa prior to the advent of the Europeans to find the tremendous progress which both must have made through association and co-operation with one another.

Agreement with Native Trade Unions

Chambers of Commerce and Industry have already shown their willingness to co-operate with Africans, for example, in negotiations between the Government and African trade unions which were recently conducted by the assistance of both parties.

The necessity of such co-operation in other spheres will become apparent to the African people, and ultimately in the future of the country, and the Government and business community Africans will qualify to participate fully in the government of the individual territories.

Africans must be educated, and recognize the fact that European life, as found in the Rhodesia and Nyasaland territories, does not and has never been their inheritance in the particular forms of themselves and their territories. They are determined to create and develop the territories for the benefit of all races resident therein.

East Africa: Testing Ground of a Multi-Racial Society

Two Key Issues Are Agrarian and Cultural

EAST AFRICA is one of the great testing grounds where the future of a multi-racial society has to be worked out. To understand the present political stresses there, it is necessary to review clearly the number, distribution, and employment of the various groups that make up its population. Figures for the three territories at the 1948 census were:

	Kenya	Tanganyika	Uganda
Whites	29,000	18,000	3,000
Indians	99,000	44,000	33,000
Arabs	24,000	11,000
Africans	5.2m.	7.4m.	4.9m.

These figures by no means tell the whole tale. Apart from natural increase of all races, the immigrant groups have increased more than the others because of economic development. Thus the European population in Tanganyika has increased by two-thirds since the 1948 census. The Indian populations in all territories have increased by several thousands.

Within these racial groups themselves, there are subdivisions with important social and political differences. Of the Indians about half are Hindus, while the Muhammadan section belongs largely to the Ismailia sect, followers of the Aga Khan.

The Europeans in turn are more varied than is generally realized, particularly in Tanganyika, as is natural with its past history as a German colony and a League of Nations mandate.

A recent check on the principal area of white settlement in that territory showed that out of 410 farmers only 89 were truly of English-speaking stock. Of the rest, 163 were Greeks and 60 Afrikaners. In the principal industry, sisal, the Swiss are a powerful element.

Italian Immigrants

In Kenya the European population is predominantly British, but there is a sizeable Afrikaner minority, especially round Eldoret, and Italians, who make excellent immigrants, are being admitted at a rate of 1,000 a year.

Even Uganda, not traditionally a home of Europeans, is attracting a polyglot influx to work on development schemes such as the Owen Falls Dam and a hydro-electric station. A most noticeable shift in the balance between European races, which could have far-reaching consequences is the growing number of Afrikaners.

Geographically, the European population is much more concentrated than the Indian. This is especially so in Kenya, where apart from officials and missionaries, most Europeans live in the central part of the colony known as the "White Highlands."

In Tanganyika, on the other hand, they are not only fewer but more scattered. There are two main areas of European farming settlement: one round Kilimanjaro, Arusha, and Moshi on the Kenya border, the other in the Southern Highlands near the Northern Rhodesian border. A third colony of Europeans is located on the sisal estates round the east coast port of Tanga. These communities emphasize the isolation of the Tanganyika European communities from each other.

In Uganda the European element is relatively small. The Indians are distributed fairly generally throughout the territories, but are mainly confined to the towns, few of which are without Indian shopkeepers.

Of the Europeans, only a minority have a permanent stake in the economies, and by far the largest proportion of this minority inhabit the farms of the Kenya Highlands. But even in Kenya, officials, the commercial community, and particularly since the war, the "retired" element combine to outnumber them. The European urban population of the capital, Nairobi, alone amounts to a third of the whites.

A recent account of the European population in Tanganyika showed 6,000 officials, 3,000 missionaries, 3,000 in commerce, 2,000 in the grandeur scheme, 2,000 in mining and plantation works, and only 1,000 with permanent stakes in the country. Even the settlers are not counted in the sense that Australians or Canadians are. Most send their children home to school and themselves spend leaves "at home" if they can afford it.

"By the courtesy of 'The Times,' we are able to reproduce in full this survey written by their special correspondent who was lately in Kenya.

The Indians are in many ways more deeply committed as a community to a future in East Africa than are the Euro-peans. Filling the middle grades in the social pyramid, as clerks and small traders, many of them have risen to eminence. Some families are now reaching the fifth or sixth generation in East Africa.

In Kenya their great grievance—one among many—is their inability to own land except in certain restricted residential areas. They are deeply split among themselves, the Muslims there tending to align themselves politically with the Europeans, the Hindus with the Africans. Both tend to think in terms of securing better conditions.

The future of all these communities depends in the long run on the relations they are able to establish with the indigenous population which laps round the settler enclaves, dwelling especially in Kenya, often in overworked, eroded, and over-grazed homesteads. Even in Tanganyika with its vast expanses the same conditions can occur because the people are driven to concentrate by the prevalence of drought and tsetse fly over large stretches.

Inflationary Prosperity

The African inhabitants are not poor by African standards. Because of the high prices of primary products there is much money in circulation. But this prosperity has an inflationary, and therefore unsettling, tinge.

Politically the Africans are on the whole apathetic. Compared with the peoples of West Africa they seem generally to lack initiative. They are divided into hundreds of small tribes widely differing in culture and development, and they thus lack the homogeneity of the great West African tribes. This makes it harder for them to combine. Exceptions are the Baganda, the Kikuyu in Kenya, and the Chaga and Haya in the north of Tanganyika.

There are centres of smouldering, and at times violent, discontent. This occurs where economic grievances translate themselves into racial antagonism. The two chief centres are in Kenya, where the European has taken on the guise of the landlord, and in Buganda (central Uganda), where the Indian has monopolized the rôle of middleman in the staple industry, cotton. In both these regions the normal grievances of peasant farmers may become identified with race rivalry. In both of them an educated class is rapidly evolving.

Tanganyika has been less troubled. Except among the Chaga and Kilimanjaro peoples and closely connected with Kenya, political activity is almost unknown. There is irony in this situation, since Kenya has done more in a practical way for its Africans, in terms of health services and Native administration, than almost any other African Colony. The Kenya African does not see this; he sees only the contrast between well-tended European farms and his own deteriorating shambas. A dangerous outcome of this is the flow of squatters from the Native reserves into the European areas, where they form a ready seed-bed for political malcontents to cultivate.

The objective for the East African territories, as is widely agreed, must be the formation of a plural society, in which all races co-operate. This is notoriously the most difficult to achieve, and in East Africa there are special obstacles, but it is the only way in which the rights of achievement of the immigrant races can be reconciled with the rights of the indigenous population.

White Settlement Justified Itself

White settlement has not only justified itself by what it has done for the African in the past, its abolition would not be to their interest in the future. At the same time it is not ethical, nor is it any longer practicable, to maintain by force the pre-eminence of a few thousands of Europeans living for the most part in a place the size of an English county in an area the size of Europe. There has to be mutual respect and consent.

The settlers, and certainly the European political representatives, tend to take rather a different view. They place more emphasis on rights of ownership than of achievement.

In political compromise they see the opening of a slippery path that will end in measures such as nationalization, a fear which now haunts all racial minorities in British Colonies. They feel that if Britain will not support them, then perhaps a Nationalist South Africa would, or, preferably, a British Central African Dominion. The position of Tanganyika is, of course, crucial in such calculations, because of its status as a United Nations trust territory lying athwart British Africa.

Where the Africans are concerned it is easy to see in which way 'stresses' will develop. The basic trouble here is agrarian pressure on the White Highlands. The present position could be maintained only if the African population were static, but it is increasing annually, acquiring education at great speed, and developing a wide range of modern economic demands. Kenya itself is nearing the end of its tether in coping with this pressure. Solutions will probably have to be sought in the other two territories, although this may raise even more thorny issues.

The attitude of the Indians as the third race is confused. A large section of the Indian, as opposed to the Muhammadshah community in Kenya seeks to develop support of the Indian Government for the Indian colonists and to forge as close links as possible with the Indian nation. That, like European approaches to the South African Government, is fishing in very troubled water indeed. The presence of so many Indians in Uganda is a serious problem without them that Kenya territory is a very serious problem for the African State.

The basic East African racial conflict, an agrarian and cultural one, could be resolved, a general easing of tensions achieved. The second is a matter of education. The gap between European and African is immeasurably wide, far wider, for instance, than in West Africa or the West Indies. Operation it would be much easier to close the gap in social relations.

Left to itself, East Africa could no doubt work out its own solution in due course. That is the claim most frequently made locally. Some account, however, has to be taken of outside events, otherwise local events will simply overtake local ones.

If broad terms, the only safe way of preventing this would be to get all races into the boat as soon as possible and rowing together.

How To Improve African Conditions of Life

Proposals of the Colonial Summer Conference in Cambridge

FOSTERING RACIAL CO-OPERATION the improvement of co-operation between the various departments of an administration and the populations administered, relations between traditional African leaders and the younger educated men, means of discovering new leaders, the advancement of women, the promotion of efficiency—these were some of the most important of the subjects discussed by the Colonial Summer Conference at Queens' College, Cambridge, organized by the Colonial Office.

One of the most urgent problems in East and Central Africa was agreed to be that of promoting racial partnership at all levels. It was considered that the lower tier of local government bodies such as Native authorities and African district councils, should in present conditions be all-African, although in urban areas there is already a degree of racial representation on village management and township boards.

Racial partnership in local government could, it was felt, best be achieved at the county level (to use the term in the recent report on constitutional development in Tanganyika); there representative members of all the races should deal with subjects of common concern to them all, such as the development of communications, the conservation of natural resources (including soil, timber, and water), and the control of disease and markets, and so improve understanding and sympathy.

Attention was called to the fact that there is direct African representation in local government bodies in East Africa but not in Northern Rhodesia (except in the purely African townships) and the view was expressed that Northern Rhodesia should fall into line with East Africa in this matter as soon as possible.

Local Government Councils

An account of the local government councils recently held in Nairobi and attended by representatives of all races impressed the conference, which recorded the hope that the authorities in Kenya might on future occasions invite people from other East and Central African territories.

There was overwhelming testimony from many territories that traditional African leaders and popularly elected members of Native councils are co-operating well.

Numerous district officers reported that the traditional authorities increasingly welcome the co-operation of the more progressive and popularly chosen representatives, and tend to leave to them the administration of the more novel features of local government, while they confine themselves to the older functions of the maintenance of law and order, the collection of revenue, the allocation of land, and the settlement of disputes arising from Native custom.

A partnership between the prestige and authority of the traditional leaders and the wider knowledge of modern administrative requirements often possessed by progressive and non-traditional elements was considered to be desirable and to have been successful on the whole.

Much time was given to the consideration of means of discovering African leaders of initiative and judgment. Among the expanding middle class are men who have made money and created a local position for themselves by occupations foreign to the basic African pattern and in almost all areas some Africans are now beginning to stand out from among their fellows as exceptionally good farmers, as the best of the employees of the local or central government or as traders. From among them recruitment to local government bodies should not be difficult.

It was the experience of the representatives from many African territories, however, that while in the rural areas election usually resulted in the choice of the best candidate, that was by no means so frequently the case in the towns, the more sophisticated populations of which were more liable to be misled by demagogues, and less likely than rural populations to know intimately the character of the candidates.

To attract men to the service of local government was felt to require a deliberate effort to build up the prestige of councillors; they should be consulted by officers of the central government on matters of major and minor policy, and perhaps be granted privileges, not normally accorded to the ordinary citizen, such as the right to wear some badge of office. There was agreement that a councillor should not incur financial loss as a result of his public work, and that the chairman of a permanent working committee of a local council might be paid an appropriate allowance.

Increasing Co-operation

The old idea—by no means dead in some official circles—that there is frequent friction between administrative and technical officers in the field was sharply denounced, many speakers testifying to the close and cordial co-operation existing from the district level upwards.

In regard to areas in which Africans and non-Africans live side by side, it was strongly recommended that at the district team level and local authority level the knowledge of non-official Europeans should be utilized in the cause of African community advancement, and that administrative and technical officials should work for greater practical co-operation between the races.

A valuable step in securing the interest of non-official Europeans in community development among Africans would, it was suggested, be to invite them to take part in such conferences as that at Cambridge, so that by joining in the discussions they might help to formulate aims and plans.

Missionaries ought, it was considered, to be encouraged to take an even more active part than at present in the work of school committees, education boards, and other organizations in the local authority areas.

As to the greater participation of African women in public work, their burdens in village life must first be lightened. Would it not be better to defer building a court house, social centre, rest house, or office, in favour of services which would give some relief and respite to hard-pressed womanhood?

It was felt that Governments should make conscious and consistent efforts to convince men of the importance of the advancement of women in Africa; that such advancement should be increasingly undertaken by women; that women should be recruited to agricultural staffs; and that one of the best means of gaining the confidence of women and promoting their progress would be to spruce up women's health visitors with homecrafts lessons.

There was emphasis that rural training centres should be made examples of being at a slightly higher standard than that of the neighbourhood, and that they should carry out experiments in the production of a set of simple tools for better village life, such as corn-grinding machines, simple cooking stoves, ox-draws and carrying large drums of water in order to relieve time-wasting visits to wells, large drums for water storage in houses, and improved agricultural implements.

It was recognized that such measures must involve a readjustment of attitude and a substantial effort by Governments, but since the standard of living is the standard of the home, which is the standard of the women, there was agreement that too much stress could not be placed on these matters.

Kenya Needs More Capital Lack of Funds Delays Development

Sir DAVID MITCHELL, Governor of Kenya, said when recently addressing the Rotary Club of Mombasa:—

"Mombasa urgently needs a new water supply, and a pipeline 135 miles from the nearest adequate source, Mzingi Springs, would cost £4m.

"Mombasa and the coast urgently need a permanent toll-free bridge across the harbour, greatly improved facilities for crossing the harbour towards the south, more berths in the port, more equipment, more roads, schools, hospitals, and other things.

"It is not possible for a country to develop without capital investment, thank it for a farm or business, and the total capital investment in Kenya up to the outbreak of this year on Government accounts outside the Railways and Harbours, was only £34m.

"In addition to such funds as we can raise in the Colony, our only market for long-term loans at moderate rates of interest is London. Money can be raised on some Continental bonds, but at 5% or 7% or more, which London is content with 2½% or 3½%. American money is at a discount of not many pence less, rather than those of the London market, so it is not likely to see much attraction in Colonial Government securities.

Investment Conditions Unfavourable

"But the London market is dependent on the economic and financial conditions prevailing in Britain, and at present those conditions are by no means favourable to increased investment.

"The East African territories and the High Commission (in the name of the East African Railways and Harbours, and the Post Office), the Finance Members concerned, the Colonial Office, and the Treasury have been working out a joint planned programme for loans in the London market, a programme which must be financially related to the situation in that market, and so designed that as hardships in the various Administrations do not set in, each other's way.

"In the case of Kenya the planning Committee has produced an admirable and well-balanced plan, but there is a gap in the finance which is not able to finance for development projects of about £10m, even without the Mombasa water supply, which is a special case. Our real gap is in fact 29m, or 30m, which would be reduced by the extent to which the investing public in East Africa take up East African loans, but the chances of a really substantial reduction by this means, I think, remote.

"In the judgment of my advisers we cannot hope to reduce the gap by going to the London market and asking for more on ordinary loan accounts. There is great confidence in London, in East Africa, in the Government loans, and private enterprises of considerable variety, given a reasonable risk and rates of interest which are fair and adequate in relation to the risk, capital for private enterprise is available in substantial quantities.

"I believe that any sound and properly worked-out scheme for industrial, mining, or agricultural development by private enterprise in this Colony would get its capital in London, provided the Capital Issues Committee gives its approval and investors saw a fair chance of a profit commensurate with the risk.

"Investment in Government securities is a different matter, and there is a definite limit to the amount which can be raised in London for the purpose. Investors are very willing to support East African issues and the in Kenya have been particularly enabled by the restriction to our loans and the Railways and Harbours and Mombasa City Loans. Nevertheless, we are disappointed with the great difficulty that we cannot see where we are to raise the total sum of capital that we require.

"The Government have the Commonwealth Bank for development loans, but this is a small fund, and I am afraid that in the present economic conditions and play-off part in the present economic conditions, we have a rudimentary road system, and a railway system which requires port accommodation, and railway developments, the expansion are urgently needed.

"We can now say with some certainty that we have 100,000 tons of coal in the area, in south Tanganyika, a market which took only some 30,000 tons of local ash from Masadi. Kenya wants 250,000; our afforestation policy in Kenya, combined with exploitation of hard woods, will certainly yield 50 to 100,000 tons of timber for export in a few years. (It is already 100,000 tons a year, but we have 200,000 tons.) Uganda minerals may well add another 100,000 tons to our rail and port problem, while kyanite and mullite from Kenya may reach very large figures; they have, since 1949, been only just under 20,000 tons, from all a few years ago.

Canning Factories

"There are factories in being or projected capable of canning 45th scans of fruit and vegetables a year. We must assume that we shall solve the problem of bringing our surplus meat, beef, mutton, and pork to the hungry people of the world; and that may be another 100,000 tons. And the foundation of all development is transportation, without which no adequate measure is possible to talk of expansion of productivity in other words, substantial railway and harbour development must be regarded as a pre-requisite.

"These things are not the rosy dreams of all unpractical middle-aged bureaucrats; many of them are accomplished facts, and all are as near certainties as anything can be, provided we can raise the capital and obtain the capital goods to make it quite possible—capital not only for Kenya, but for Uganda, Tanganyika, the East African Railways and Harbours, the Posts and Telegraph services, the air services, and the essential research.

"It is not going to be easy but it has got to be done, and as the prospects and the safety of investment in this market are realized more and more, it will, I hope, be done in increasing measure by the investment of East African profits in East African securities.

German Delegation in Rhodesia

A WESTERN GERMAN ECONOMIC DELEGATION has been visiting Southern Rhodesia. Its leader, Dr. A. HAYEK, Secretary of the sterling area section of the Western German Ministry of Economics in Bonn, said in Salisbury that they could supply machinery of all kinds, textiles, precision instruments, iron, and steel, and that it was hoped to collaborate with British and other Commonwealth firms in helping to develop African territories. He was accompanied by Mr. F. W. WELKE, a director of the German Central Bank, Frankfurt. Last year Western Germany's imports from Rhodesia were valued at about £500,000, and her exports to Rhodesia were £200,000 during the first half of this year, the figures rose to £1m and £250,000 respectively. Germany has bought mainly hides and skins, asbestos, copper, and tobacco, and has sent to the Colony agricultural and other machinery, tools, pipes, sheeting and wire.

The Northern Rhodesia Regiment has asked all ex-Askari for additions to its collection of campaign medals.

Tshekedi's Lawsuit Against Interim Interdict Granted

ESHEKEDI KHAMA was last week granted an interim interdict in the Bechuanaland High Court against Keaboka Kgamane, who has since Tshekedi's bailiwick from the Bamangwato Reserve been undertaking official tribal administrative duties.

The interdict restrains Keaboka from publishing or causing to be published material which Tshekedi has calculated to result in damage to him in person and to his property rights, or from instigating or doing acts of hostility against Tshekedi and his supporters.

Keaboka was ordered to file an affidavit in reply before to-day and Tshekedi's petition will be heard next Wednesday.

Tshekedi's petition alleges that Keaboka has shown hostility towards him, based on a desire to succeed to the tribal chieftainship. An alternative plea sought to divest Keaboka of all official powers.

Tshekedi stated that Keaboka is a grandson of Kgamane, brother of Sekgoma (former chief of the Bamangwato), and that the line of succession (Tshekedi having renounced all claims) is Serrese, Khama, then Keaboka, and then Keaboka.

Feeling Stirred Up

The petition alleged attempts by Keaboka to stir up feeling amongst the tribesmen against Tshekedi-Khama, and that the bailiwick order served upon Tshekedi was based upon evidence supplied by Keaboka, who defected to the British Government into the belief that Tshekedi was not wanted by the vast majority of the tribe. In this sense, was Keaboka vested with the powers of chieftainship, but his activities had resulted in the restriction of his (Tshekedi's) lawful right to live in the reserve.

Keaboka is accused of misrepresenting the views of the tribe at a kgotla held in the reserve. That meeting was called to decide what representations should be made to the three British observers. Tribal law and custom dictates that every decision taken at a kgotla is final and irrevocable. That kgotla was presided over by Sekgoma, who prepared a statement afterwards indicating his personal decision—that Tshekedi should return. He then handed the statement to the observers, under a false impression that it conveyed the views of the tribe as a whole. It is alleged that he is prevented from caring for the interests of persons subject to the influence of Keaboka. The High Court's jurisdiction lasts until November 26.

Reports that through the mediation of Chief Bathoen of the Bangwaketse tribe, agreement had been reached between Keaboka and Tshekedi to hold a kgotla to discuss the return of the latter to the Bamangwato, reserve have been denied by both parties, according to a statement issued last week by the High Commissioner. These reports had first suggested that a round-table conference would be convened by senior reserve chiefs. Chief Bathoen stated in Lobatse that efforts of reconciliation would continue. Several chiefs are understood to be preparing a report enjoining upon their criticism of the administration made in their recent memorandum.

Commemorating German Surrender

THE 2,000 CAMPERS paid £1,300 to erect for the British gait at Victoria Falls last year, according to a 1950 report of the Northern Rhodesia Commission for the Preservation of Natural and Historical Monuments and Relics. This was £800 more than in 1949. Many campers had to be turned away, and the Falls Conservancy is considering erecting more gait. New monuments recommended for protection are Fort Monze and cemetery (one of the early police posts established about 1892), and Na Chitale Falls in the Mkushi district, where prehistoric paintings have been found. A design submitted by Mr. M. J. Mozzi was accepted for the proposed memorial on the Chitale Falls to commemorate the German surrender in 1918. It will be in the form of a shelter in local stone and wood, with a flat roof, on a plinth will be set bronze plates with inscriptions in English and Chitumbwa, by Sir Stewart Gore-Smith.

Obituary

Mr. L. K. Robinson

Mr. L. K. Robinson, who was a member of the Southern Rhodesia's first Parliament after the grant of responsible government, has died in the Beaufort district at the age of 71. Educated in Guernsey, he joined a firm of East India merchants with the intention of going to Burma, but volunteered for the Imperial Yeomanry when the South African War broke out. In 1902 he joined the B.S.A. Police, and on discharge went into mining. Subsequently he turned to cattle farming, and founded the Makosi River Bushing Co. in the Victoria district. He was returned as M.P. for Victoria in 1924, and was regarded as an exceptional public speaker.

Mr. F. M. Rogers, C.M.E., who has died in this country at the age of 61, was on the staff of Kew Gardens until he entered the Colonial Service in 1920 in order to join the Amanat research station in Tanganyika. Thereafter he was responsible for maintaining the grounds which did him credit. In the recent war he was a valuable soldier in the production of much needed rubber in the Seychelles and in Uganda, and later he was concerned with the development of cinchona bark. He leaves a widow and a son.

BRIGADIER GENERAL CECIL PICKFORD HIGGINSON, C.M.E., D.S.O., who has died at his farm in the Umavales, Southern Rhodesia, was 85, and had lived there for 30 years. He fought in the South African War, and at the outbreak of World War I commanded the 1st Battalion The King's Shropshire Light Infantry. At the Battle of Mons he was severely wounded, but a leg had to be amputated. After retirement in 1919 he went to Rhodesia and began farming.

MR. DANIEL JONES, aged 84, an early settler in Southern Rhodesia, has died in Salisbury. He went from Wales to South Africa in 1891, and shortly afterwards travelled north with two friends to take up employment with Mr. Tom Meikle. He later farmed for many years in the Lydiate area. Mr. Jones and a Mr. Dang'wa were the bridegrooms in Rhodesia's first double wedding—in November, 1894.

FATHER ALFRED CONNELL, S.J., Rector of St. George's College, Salisbury, has died after a long illness. Born in Johannesburg in 1906, he started his novitiate in London in 1924, returned to Rhodes University, Grahamstown, to read Africans, and went to Salisbury after ordination in 1940. He was a keen cricket coach.

MR. JOHN HOPELEY, who died last Thursday in Southern Rhodesia, in which he had farmed for some 40 years, had been a leading English amateur heavyweight boxer as a young man. He played cricket for Cambridge University and the M.C.C., and rugby football for Blackheath and the Barbarians.

on Comments of a Southern Rhodesian

To the Editor of EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA
Sir,—They have developed a passionate hatred of Whitehall, stronger even than their native loyalty to the Crown, and many of them accept with apparent indifference the fact that two-thirds of present-day immigrants are Afrikaners from the South. Those words were contributed to the Daily Telegraph by a Mr. Douglas Brown, and quoted in EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA so that its readers might know what was being written about Rhodesia.

In view of our record, we can only regard the suggestion of disloyalty to the Crown as ignorant impertinence. Although we dislike much of the policy forced on the Colonial Office by politicians, to describe this as "passionate hatred" is an irresponsible exaggeration.

Mr. Brown's statement that Northern Rhodesia is a land of "land" careers rather than for settlement where "home" remains 5,000 miles away is certainly not consistent with the increasing white farming settlements that is taking place, nor is his reference to the "home" 5,000 miles away consistent with his assertion, which I challenge, that two-thirds of present-day immigrants are Afrikaners. Northern Rhodesia is as suitable for European settlement as is Southern Rhodesia.

His description of Nyasaland will suggest to those who do not know it that it is on all fours climatically with such places as Sierra Leone. The fact is that the major portion of the territory lies at an altitude of 3,000 feet or more, with a climate that attracts holiday-makers.

At this time, when it is important that people in England should know the truth about these territories, it is a great pity that the Daily Telegraph should have published such an article.

Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia. Yours faithfully, G. N. STURGEON.

Cathedral of the Highlands

CONSECRATION of the nearly completed Cathedral of the Highlands in Nairobi has had to be postponed on account of supply difficulties from November 1 to January 25 of next year. EAST AFRICA AND RHODESIA learns that the Rt. Rev. Geoffrey Allan, Bishop in Egypt, will preach the consecrating sermon, and that the Governors and Bishops of the Eastern African territories will be invited to attend. Two years ago an appeal for £30,000 was launched, and almost that sum has already been received. If there is a balance it will be used towards electrifying the organ.

Overtime

THE REPORT of the Northern Rhodesia Committee on overtime work done by Government employees has been accepted by the Legislative Council. The committee found that such shortages made overtime inevitable, and that the best possible time off in lieu; that, however, was not always possible; and a certain amount of paid overtime was necessary. Payment should be made only if the employee is called upon to work, including the professional, administrative branches, clerical and general (Immigration Department), and the police. The committee also said that while supporting the general principle, the elected members did not think that long hours of overtime should be required of any one, and that Government should do everything in its power to avert it.

Petrol Warning in S. Rhodesia Farmers' Union Criticize Minister

THE MEMBERS of Southern Rhodesian commerce and industry are to be kept turning the Colony must get down to an austerity drive in respect of petrol. This warning was given a few days ago to Bulawayo business men by the Minister of Trade and Industry, Mr. W. A. E. Winterton. "The petrol situation has never been as bad as now," he said. "Consumption of all fuels is going up, and the situation is not likely to ease for three or four months."

Sharp criticism of the Government's handling of the fuel situation has appeared in the organ of the Rhodesian National Farmers' Union, which has said:—

"If there was sufficient storage capacity for 1,111,000 gallons in February, why were only 30,000 gallons in store recently?"

"If the railways found that in June they were needing tank cars to carry water in excess of their normal requirements, why have no steps taken to ensure that the fuel position was not jeopardized? The railways had similar trouble last year and they did not learn a lesson."

"Changes from past experience have been so obvious that it is difficult to comprehend how unneeded the lessons appear to have been. Changes in the person of the Minister appear to have had little or no effect—except that where his predecessor endeavoured to make promises, which remained unfulfilled, the present Minister endeavours to avoid committing himself at all."

"Whether there is some constant factor in the organization of fuel—a factor which spells negligence—we do not know. What is obvious to all is that the life-blood of this Colony, fuel, appears to be handled in a way which even the most inefficient office boy could scarcely perform less desirably."

"We in Rhodesia are creating a new nation. It will be a sad loss to the blending of that nation if there is not sufficient Scottish blood in it."—Mr. E. C. F. Whitehead, M.P., Southern Rhodesian Minister of Finance.
