THE DEVELOPMENT OF EAST AFRICA.

The problems of East Africa in general and of Kenya in particular have received much discussion in the British press during recent years and are undoubtedly destined to evoke still greater public comment in the future. A country whose interest first really awakened by the East African Campaign has grown as a result of the publicity given to the reports of the Orange Free Commission, the Duke and Duchess of York, Sir Hector Young Commission, the Duke of Wales, and the Duke of Gloucester, the constantly increasing company of expeditions sent to the country, and each way has East Africa been kept well in the public mind, though knowledge of the real facts remains the impression of an important new Dominion is being gradually made of lands which only yesterday were regarded as "inter-tribal warfare" and "savage." Citizens of the British Empire in Kenya have at times been surprised recently come under the notice of those at home, but nine out of ten of them would probably be glad to see the charges laid, and more particularly the charges laid certainly not been sufficient to make the impression that British rule in East Africa are as good as British settlers anywhere else which is to say that the sportsmen who believe in fair play and disdain to oppress the underdog, that it may be noted, was the judgment of the Orange Free Commission, and Sir Hector Young Commission, some of which hesitated to criticize when criticism seemed to its members to be desirable.

In this issue we publish, with acknowledgments to a South African newspaper, a record of some of the main impressions left by a visit to Kenya Colony on the part of Mr. J. H. Homey, one of the ablest men of the sub-continent, who, it will be seen, emphasizes the fundamental difference between the dual policy of East Africa and the colour bar of South Africa, believes that Kenya will in time have to face a much more serious "poor white" problem than the Union, and foresees many obstacles in the path of the establishment of a permanent white civilisation on the highland belt of East and Central Africa. "White" exports of wide East African expansion, he does not attempt to dogmatise, but as a South African he hopes that the experiment of European settlement may prove successful in the generations to come, which can hardly be of such high quality as the generation which pioneered the way, and which, as the extracts in this issue from the latest agricultural census report show, has in a brief span of years accomplished a wonderful work of development. With the greater use of labour-saving devices, increased knowledge on the part of the suffer and improved means of transport and marketing, all seems, however, a very reason to hope that progress may be continued so that a few decades hence the productivity of the territories may be immensely more than it is to-day.

East Africa is, we believe, only at the threshold of its development. The phenomenal growth of Native cotton planting in Tanganyika during the past five years will be anticipated to be matched in the next five by the output of coffee, groundnuts, cotton, and other crops in Tanganyika Territory, while the exploitation of the boundless mineral resources of Northern Rhodesia promises speedy development of a country whose some sound mining engineers have described as "the greatest what may be achieved in the future." As indicated in these pages last week by Sir William Humber, who, with his wife, will experience of cotton growing, was written in terms of the greatest enthusiasm of the British scheme which give the provision of funds for well-planned works and the terms of such financial assistance outlined a few days ago by the Prime Minister of Great East African importance, the dependence will in the near future increase, so much their contribution to the wealth of the world.

LABOUR'S VIEW OF TROPICAL AFRICA

Government controlled by the African inhabitants.

Part of the Labour and Socialist International.

In the African territories generally the inhabitants are not yet in a position to govern themselves. In many places, e.g. Kenya a grant of self-government in the full sense would merely mean that as in Southern Rhodesia the Native inhabitants would fall under the domination of the white settlers, who, having already acquired economic pre-eminence, would also usurp all political power. The white settler is in a position to demand the full sense of self-government in the full sense would be disastrous.

In most places, were the British Government to grant to these African territories political power, it would be seized by local groups of white adventurers and used for the exploitation of the Natives. More over, the British administration of these territories, its legislative institutions, and Native organs of government, have been destroyed, and the Native populations have not yet been educated to deal with the new conditions introduced in these territories. The sudden abandonment of the African would lead to complete anarchy. The policy to be pursued at the present is the preparation as rapidly as possible of the African peoples for self-government. This can be done by—

(a) Preventing political power falling into the hands of the immigrant minorities, who will use it for the furtherance of their own political and economic interests. Accordingly, the general legislative and executive power should remain completely in the hands of the Supreme Government, responsible to Parliament. This responsibility should be carefully guarded and equally applied. No measure of responsible government should be granted to these territories unless and until it is certain that the government will be responsible to and controlled by the African inhabitants.

(b) The general and political education of the inhabitants by means that should aim at making them as rapidly as possible capable of understanding and dealing with the political, economic, and social conditions of the modern world, which are the result of the penetration of Africa by European civilisation.

While the principle of trusteeship for Natives, in Africa and elsewhere, should always pending the completion of this educational process, animate the administration, and the interests of the indigenous inhabitants should be and remain paramount, immigrants should, as among themselves, enjoy complete equality with each other, and where electoral institutions exist the franchise should be general and equal and the electoral roll a common one, with mixed electorates, to the entire exclusion of communal or community franchises, whether similar or different. The latter, whilst tending to establish and preserve racial prejudice, arrogance, and domination, have also the effect of perpetuating and emphasising racial and communal differentiation.

These views, taken from the official report of the Labour and Socialist International, were first published some months ago, may prove of considerable interest to those who probably realise the truth of the views of the Labour circles for the adoption of which will lead to the realisation with the least delay of the day of Natives' self-government and thus able to see the realisation of the independence of Colonial peoples. East Africa has no conceivable Party politics, and the interests are essentially identical. The Labour and Socialist International will meet next month.

The Principle of Trusteeship

We believe that in the mandated territories under the British Empire the provisions of the Mandate System are, on the whole, strictly observed, and full reports given, but in some cases, particularly in the Tanganyika (formerly German East Africa), the powerful and insidious agitation, both in the colonies and in England, in favour of treating the territory as a part of the British Empire, restricting the access of foreigners to the territory, and applying its Native policy to that of the neighbouring purely British Colonies, Labour opposes this agitation and is in favour of an explicit understanding that the sovereignty in mandated territories is vested in the League of Nations.

The adoption of the Mandate system under Article 22 of the Covenant of the League of Nations makes it necessary to consider, even in the case of British Dependencies, the possibility of some kind of international control. The Mandate system is, of course, only applied to the late German colonies. But it is applied because the League Conference adopted the principle which has already been put forward by Labour, namely that the well-being and development of the peoples of African territories is a sacred trust of civilisation, and that the European States administering the territories must be considered only as trustees of Mandates answerable for their conduct to the civilised world.

Unless this is done, and the profession of Article 22 honestly carried out by the League and its Mandatories, the system must have a great effect upon the status of European States as non-mandated African colonial territory. The implications of the Mandate system and its honest fulfilment must be so important that it would be for all concerned but practically impossible for any State to refuse to accept in non-mandated territory the same obligations as are accepted under the Mandates.

The principle of trusteeship under a board of Nations cannot be applied arbitrarily to particular pieces of territory, it must be extended to cover all tropical Africa, and ultimately the right of the community of nations to supervise the trust carrying out by the trustee of the obligations of its trust must be frankly recognised.

The European Policy

What may be called the European policy favours the economic development of the country by European planters and planters through the use of or forced Native labour. It confines the white population to Reserves and gives to that population no security of title even within the Reserves. It debar the Reserve it sells or leases to European planters and individuals immense areas of land, and encourages and assists European syndicates and individuals to procure Native labour. It encourages and assists to encourage and assist the European planters to make beneficial use of the land in the Reserve, and it nearly always leads to the degradation of the Native. It focuses the attention of a section of the European community on the security of their possession of the land, and the evolution of a race of a privileged class of European employes, and from the moment that this policy is applied in Kenya, East Africa, Southern Rhodesia, and the Colon of South Africa.

The methods by which pressure is brought to bear upon the Natives to make them work for European employers are as follows—

Practical Policy for the Present

A practical policy for the present and the near future is to be founded on

- (a) A code of native rights for all such Dependencies, particularly with regard to land, labour, and taxation.
- (b) International labour legislation to raise the conditions of retained workers. The International Labour Organisation to deal with coloured as well as white workers. Liberty for coloured workers to join trade unions.
- (c) Governmental control over all capital investments in Colonial lands. Where costly machinery, experts, etc., are required, the Government should supply the necessary capital, encourage the use of machinery by the Natives, and educate them through the use of the land.
- (d) Independent native production to be encouraged as in West Africa. No recourse to the plantation system. The abolition of all the means used to bring pressure to bear on Natives to choose particular kinds of occupation.
- (e) Encouragement of cooperative associations for selling Native produce, supervising quality, enabling Natives to purchase their requirements collectively and individually at fair prices, and raising capital. Such associations to be controlled by the Government as far as the necessities until native members are sufficiently trained and educated to take over entirely.
- (f) Encouraging and actively cooperating with Native labour in the formation of trade unions, in the development of pioneer works, in the African International Federation of Trade Unions, and in the raising and maintenance of labour standards by the I.L.O. and the League of Nations.

Economic Imperialism Denounced

There is no doubt that the original ideas of those who successfully preached a doctrine of Imperialism for profit have proved to be largely illusions; the original Imperialists laid immense stress on the need of acquiring secure markets, on the principle that trade follows the flag. For example, the market which Britain, for instance, has secured for her products in Africa by the acquisition of her four Dependencies on the West Coast and her four on the East, is relatively negligible. Her exports to these eight possessions in 1915 were valued at about £1,000,000, or only about 1% of her total exports. Her exports to French West Africa were much larger than those to the Zambesi, Nyasaland, Tanganyika, Sierra Leone,

Gambia taken together, and were nearly equal to her exports to Kenya and Uganda. British exports to the West Indies and the Colonies reported nearly £3,000,000 worth of goods to Portuguese East Africa, while she exported only £5,000,000 to the whole of her own West African possessions. Her exports to these same were 50% more than to the whole of the British and West African possessions.

The protectionist answer, of course, is that the Colonial markets cannot be secured to the Mother Country except by protection, and that the British have not secured the markets for their African possessions because of the policy of free trade. This is not an answer which will appeal to Socialists, or to the internationalist, who has more than once declared its opposition to all protectionist measures in Colonies. Such protectionist measures in Colonies, themselves, is against the interests of the Colonies themselves and is a menace to the peaceful economic and national development of the world. And in practice such colonial protectionism has proved only partially successful, as is possible, as France has shown on the north and west coasts of Africa, to reserve a large part of a Colonial market for the Mother Country by protective measures. But experience shows that the amount which protection can do to alter the course of trade is very limited. After twenty years of protectionist Imperialism, from 1885 to 1905, it can be proved from statistics that in Algeria and Tunis France has succeeded in creating a market for French goods which took about 5% of all the commodities exported by France.

Possession of Colonies of Little Importance

The importance of the African Colonies on the East and West Coasts to Britain is shown by the fact that they supply her with less than 2% of her total imports, and that her imports from the Argentine are over three times larger than from her eight African possessions.

The possession of Colonies has proved of little or no importance to the workers and manufacturers of the Mother Country. Their demand for industrial products has been negligible compared with that of other countries, so that they have done little to increase employment or production. As sources of raw materials for industry in times of peace, they have no importance, for the capitalist company which works tin in Africa or produces rubber in Asia will sell as readily to an Englishman as to a Frenchman, to a Frenchman as to a German. The real profits of economic Imperialism have gone and still go to the financier or group of financiers and to the individual planter. It is the few people who finance the opening of a successful tin mine or the planting of a rubber estate who make profits from the exploitation of Asiatic and African territories. It is true that these people tend in each case to be nationals of the Imperialist power which owns the territory, but this is not always completely, or necessarily, the case.

The profits of the economic development of these territories under capitalism go to the foreign, mainly to small groups of European or American capitalists. The system is opposed to all Socialist principles and ideals. The Socialist demands that primarily the economic development shall be in the interests of the Native inhabitants and that the profits shall go to the Native communities. This can only be secured by those measures described elsewhere, through which the land and natural resources remain the property of the Native community, and Government either directly supervises the development or encourages the economic development by the Natives.

HOW KEPYA IS PROGRESSING.

Points from the Agricultural Census.

THE East African Agricultural Colony and Protectorate, which has reached us, covers the subject which is a most interesting and worthy document, the study of which can be cordially recommended only to settlers and potential settlers, but also to those publicists who lose no opportunity of attacking that British official and British settler, are joined in an unlovely alliance to track the African on his own land in Kenya to force upon him the "wage-slave" from the European settler, and to deny him adequate areas in which to like his own life cultivate his own soil, and graze his own stock. Such critics should note the following table:

	Acre
Native Reserves (including Masai Extension) ...	30,826,200
Forest Reserves ...	12,562,400
Land surveyed for farms and allocated ...	6,200,446
Land surveyed into farms and available for alienation ...	2,927,720
Government Reserves (outposts, quarantines, etc.) ...	1,832,640
Townships and Township Reserves ...	179,200

Thus, of a total area of not more than 41 million acres, nearly 31 million are reserved in perpetuity for Native use.

European Settlement.

And what of European settlement? The total area under occupation by Europeans at the end of July last is given as 4,966,346 acres, an increase of 5.43% in the twelve months, during which period the number of occupiers has risen to 1,971, equivalent to a 30.36% increase, compared with increases of 5.90%, 6.72%, 3.70%, and 5.37% in the four previous years. It is calculated that seventy-eight occupiers died or left the Colony during 1928, and that the number of new occupiers was 148. The number of occupiers does not, of course, mean the number of holdings, or the number of Europeans on the land, a census of European employed on agricultural holdings having shown a return of 2,807, an increase of 185 over the previous year's figures.

The following table showing the ratio of acres under cultivation to the total acreage occupied, reflects sustained progress:

Year	Total occupied area	Total area cultivated	Total area under crops at July 31	Total area cultivated at July 31	Percentage cultivated
1928	4,966,346	592,730	525,421	67,309	13.51
1927	4,737,920	512,543	438,035	74,508	10.82
1926	4,587,870	468,854	401,041	67,813	10.81
1925	4,400,523	392,638	329,331	63,307	8.88
1924	4,319,733	346,988	297,337	49,651	8.28

Having regard to the intrusion in the total occupied area of extensive areas entirely or almost entirely pastoral, the figure of 10.82% under cultivation is considered by the Director for Agriculture to be a satisfactory position at this stage of the Colony's development. The average cultivated per occupier is 302 acres, as against 32 acres per occupier over the 1924-25 period, and allowing a basis of six acres per head of stock, and three acres per head for sheep and goats, the development per occupier on an account of 100 acres is 600 acres and 300, respectively, the two areas occupied per occupier therefore averages 3000 acres.

30.4% of the area under cultivation in the Census was devoted to maize, 15.8% to wheat, and 11.1% to coffee.

Over 34,000 Acres Under Coffee.

A further increase of 9,511 acres is returned as planted in July 31, 1928, this being the highest annual increase yet recorded. The total area now stands at 34,775 acres. 820 planters submitted returns representing 4.6% of all the European occupiers in the Colony. The following table shows progress made during the past five

Year	1 year	2 years	3 years	Percentage increase per cent.
1928	24,498	25,692	33,884	12.08
1927	21,721	25,581	27,270	8.19
1926	22,888	22,307	23,753	5.85
1925	20,224	17,713	21,203	8.47
1924	27,883	13,200	18,902	14.01

The total quantity of "clean" coffee produced was 223,621 cwt., and of ibohi 52,621 cwt., or a total of 276,242 cwt.

Sisal and Sugar Cane.

The area under sisal increased by 20,690 acres, equivalent to 20.60%, compared with 18.30% in the previous year, and was the greatest annual increase so far recorded in this industry, the estimated production of which for the year 1927-28 is given at 305,000 cwt. A comparative table of cultivation and export shows:

Year	Area under sisal	Exports Cwt.
1927-28	48,621	290,190
1926-27	27,931	340,988
1925-26	26,740	276,400
1924-25	35,710	255,772
1923-24	27,137	207,873

The substantial increase in cultivation is clear evidence of the progress of the sisal industry. The area under sugar cane was 31,192.84 acres, 9.40% more than the 28,483 acres of 1927, compared with the previous year. During the year 22,207 cwt. of crystallised sugar valued at £31,498, were exported from the Colony, importations of sugar are stated to have dropped to a negligible quantity.

Tea Culture.

Year	Area under tea	Crystallised sugar Cwt.
1927-28	1,008	127,034
1926-27	781	106,748
1925-26	1,000	106,748
1924-25	655	57,200

The area under tea is given as 10,000 acres, compared with 8,250 acres in the previous year, and it is estimated that 4053 acres will be planted during the succeeding year. 33,400 lb. of tea were produced in 1928, during which year factory prepared tea was produced in the Colony for the first time. The comparative table gives the following particulars of tea areas and production:

Year	Area under tea	Crystallised sugar Cwt.
1927-28	1,009	127,034
1926-27	781	106,748
1925-26	1,000	106,748
1924-25	655	57,200

Labour.

The table giving an average number of men, women and children employed in agricultural and pastoral labour during the twelve months ending July 31, 1928, is as follows:

Year	Men	Women	Children	Total
1928	83,000	4,000	12,200	99,200
1927	78,500	4,000	11,500	94,000
1926	77,800	4,000	11,200	93,000
1925	77,800	4,000	11,200	93,000
1924	66,700	4,000	11,200	81,900

The average number of units of labour employed in 1928 is returned at 114,500, this figure in 1927

DEATH OF MR. J. W. YOUNG, WHELPALE. OTHER EAST AFRICA'S PASS AWAY

Death of Mr. J. W. Young

Death of Mr. J. W. Young

It is with the deepest regret that we record the death in Kampala in the forty-second year of Mr. Dudley Whelpdale, one of the best known and best liked business men in Uganda, in which country he had spent the past fifteen years. Until about five years ago Mr. Whelpdale had devoted himself to coffee and rubber growing, but then he began business on his own account as a Secretary, Auctioneer, and Insurance Agent, and two years later took in Mr. Clifford Moody as a partner.

For several years past Mr. Whelpdale had been so stricken with illness that his friends had not expected him to live as long as he did, but his spirit was unquenchable to the last, his interest in public affairs continued, and he found no opportunity of urging any course he deemed to him likely to advance the interests of his adopted country.

His private letters to the editor of The African were always most welcome, and, despite his physical disabilities, he always dealt with optimism. "If only the world treated work as a hobby, what a wonderful race it would be!" he wrote once when apologising that, on account of pressure of business, which had kept him busy for twelve hours a day, he had delayed a little while in sending some promised information.

"Hammer hammer, hammer at this abominably distorted theory of the exploitation of the Native," he urged at another time. "I doubt if any of us here had a better and fairer show than Mr. Macpherson. For twelve years of my life I have lived along there, worked with them, played with them, protected them, and doctors them to the best of my ability in times of illness and stress, and I am a very average one of the original planters out here. And my claim for that period of slavery is a loss of not more than £100 a year in petty suffering of my clothes, food, cash, and wild flogging of honourable labour, tending of crops and livestock. Of all the different tribes in Uganda the Baganda are the very worst. Even so there are outstanding characters among them, and on the whole one likes them, but men like X will not fail to improve the relations between black and white. (It is a little curious that X's brothers in clerical life do not rush to his assistance.)"

"I have many very excellent and dear pals in the C.M.S. and the S.P.C.K. people out here, and they know, both of them, that the planters have run schools, built houses, and built houses for the lotos on the estates, for the good of all concerned, where they may be taught and prayed to. Maybe they are a little bit afraid and wattle, but when we are in a bind and wattle ourselves, but miles from any medical help, we will find little dispensaries in which our wives ran and attended to, built camps for smallpox, cerebro-spinal, meningitis, and plague cases, we will amongst them with food, and often blessed them with reverence and decency when the lotos people deserted and ran from them."

"I can only wonder that it is as bad by the Native Uganda as much the poorer for the passing of this indomitable soul, whose funeral at a magnificent Cathedral was conducted by Bishop White and was, we are assured, attended by a greater gathering of European, Indian, and African than has ever previously been present at the funerals of any person in the Protectorate."

Our readers will join with us in sincerely sympathizing with Mrs. Whelpdale and her children, with Mr. Clifford Moody, his friend and partner, and with Mr. C. C. Ishmael, his brother-in-law.

We deeply regret to report the death of Mr. Young, managing director of the East African Agency Ltd., who passed away last week in Nairobi from pneumonia, complicated by diabetes. From the time he had known himself to be suffering for the past two years or so his recent letters had however spoken of much improved general health, and the news of his death has therefore come as a great shock to his wife and two children, who had hoped to leave London shortly to join him in East Africa.

Mr. Young, whom many pre-war settlers in Kenya will remember as Bwazi Nhimu, was, above all things, a trier; whoever task fell to his lot was undertaken with energy and enthusiasm. Thus, when only about twenty-one years of age he was for several months acting manager of one of the great coaling companies in Aden. That business experience stood him in good stead as a planter in Kenya, and after the War, in Tanganyika Territory, where he was for a time of the temporary manager of the Public Works Department. While in Nairobi, while on home leave in 1922 that Department had no work for him which he could be engaged, he interested himself in the disposal in the country of East African properties, and returned Kenya to report on various estates on behalf of City interests, which, however, hesitated to exercise the options he had secured, though some we know, exceptionally favourable and if exercised, would have shown large profits, even within a few months.

When in 1927, weary of the interminable delays often experienced in the City of London by the same means with estates for sale, he decided to start business for manufacturers representative, and in association with Mr. J. P. Castellani, founded the Kenya Agency Ltd., which speedily obtained the representation in Kenya, Uganda, and Tanganyika Territory of many well known British concerns, on whose account Mr. Young, upon whom fell the duty of organising the East African end of the business, with headquarters in Nairobi, had worked at the highest pressure for the past two years. There can be little doubt that his devotion to the claims of business while in undifferent health contributed materially to his early demise.

Mr. Young, though he made no parade of his religious, had deep religious convictions, which stirred him in times of great anxiety and stress, and many of our readers will long remember him with affection. They will join with us in deepest sympathy with Mrs. Young and her children.

Fatal Polo Accident

African Colonel George P. Atkinson, D.S.O., 1st Lt. of the 1st Cavalry Regiment, who recently commanded the Nigeria Regiment, and who met with a fatal accident earlier in the month while playing polo in Nigeria, will be remembered by many of our readers as having served in the East African Campaign. He was a very keen sportsman and a former F.O. sportsman in London, the international polo player, who is at present serving in the Sudan.

Nyasaland Pioneer

With regard to the death in Limbe of Mr. G. Copland, one of Nyasaland's old-timers, it is to be explained that one of the river steamers in the early days of the Protectorate, was later engaged in carrying and constructing many of the hotels in Chiromo and Limbe, and later took up land.

East Africa in the Press.

ON SAFARI ON KILIMANJARO

A CONTRIBUTOR to The African Century pays the following tribute to his companion on a Kenya-Tanganyika boundary survey commission:

My companion on this safari was as good an example of a wounded hero as you could wish to meet. When war broke out he was in an English cavalry regiment, and lost his leg in France. After a spell as captain and magistrate in India he made a living for a little as a nurse, and was then in elective office in the Colonial Service. There was nothing that he could not do, from playing a round of golf to climbing into a perilous crows' nest to sit in a fortification day and night. At some an official was taking sick, so I deceived most people who, thinking he had sprained his ankle and was a bit lame, sent him in the blue the wooden leg is discarded. He wears a pair of shorts, a safari shirt, and an eyeglass. One bare leg and in a brown sock and a brogue shoe. He stands the crutches to a porter and is up on his donkey in no time.

Kilimanjaro entranced the writer, as may be gathered from the following passage:

Here it is good to be alive. To rise early and see the glaciers on Kilbo kissed by the rising sun, to feast one's eyes on the short-green grass, to listen to the guinea-fowl noisily quitting the trees to breathe the fresh clear air—that here could be a want.

An hour's walk through open forest glades brought us to the boundary and the forest proper through which the road from Moshi to the Forest station at Engare Rongai lies its way. Here we slept two nights, and were regaled with succulent strawberries, new potatoes, green peas, and other homely luxuries. The house is built on the edge of the forest, with an amazing view of the limbo plain below. The garden is a glorious profusion of English flowers. A furrow winds in and out of the nursery, where seedlings of Podocarpus, an evergreen, are raised for the work of re-foresting the area ravaged by bush fires.

That is what we heard along the stream, busy pursuing its course through the forest, and on the log dam at the top, splashing our legs over the water, still so cold, fresh from the melting snow.atives of the highlands persuaded to neglect the forest. The people it was spites, but we could not see the futility of the case of the building, too so different from the sandy rivers, which we were accustomed to in the plains. There is something sinister about those broad, dry rivers of Africa. When they flow they do not meander like an English stream, but swirl along relentlessly as a bent on a mission of destruction.

Our horse was in some charge of a pack which encircled Kilimanjaro like a waistband all way up its northern slopes. He was the one type of East African one expects to meet in a pack like this, and were dead. He was his companion on the safari. Before the War he had faced a career of fighting in Algeria. Now he was a pack animal, a thing which, though he might be a little

THE COST OF EAST AFRICAN TRAVEL

Astrical comparisons of the cost of travelling in Uganda and the Sudan have been made in the Practical Times by Mr. Owen Tweedy, who says:

A comparison to be justifiable must be specific. Nile tourists is taken under the wing of the Sudan Government at Khartoum, and the first stage south by steamer and extends to Khartoum a distance of 287 miles. It is covered at a rate (excluding food and sleeping) of 3s. 6d. per mile. The second stage by steamer and motor from Khartoum to Nimule, a distance of 1,102 miles, requires a rate (again exclusive of food) of 7d. per mile. The bare cost from Suva to Nimule is 15s. 6d. for a total distance of 1,389 miles, or 6d. per mile. The cost of a keeper from Wadi Halfa to Khartoum is £1 1s. and food—excellent and supplied by the catering department of the Government Railways—is 10s. 6d. per day over the northern and 5s. 6d. over the southern stage. The minimum cost at the Khartoum Hotel, where the tourist must spend a few days before taking the Nile boat south, is 10s. 6d. per day.

The boat leaves the Sudan at Nimule, where, chair of the Sudan Government, he starts on his journey as in the Sudan by steamer, motor and railway to Kampala, the capital of the Protectorate. The distance is 487 miles, the cost is 20s. 7s., which equals a rate per mile of 3s. 6d. as against a Sudan rate for similar travel of 6d.

PROGRESS IN THE SUDAN.

The Rev. W. Wilson East, D.S.O., General Secretary of the Church Missionary Society, who has just returned from a visit to the Sudan, says in the following interesting article to The Church Times newspaper:

It is difficult to recognise in the Sudan to-day with its mildness of changes, the country where General Gordon battled against slavery and corruption, and where later a fanatical Devilshomb led the country to the ruin of the Sudan and the oppression of the people. It is only thirty years since the battle of Omdurman, and in that time a hostile people has become friendly, a enslaved and crushed race has been freed and liberated, a desert has been turned into a fruitful garden. Not highways have linked province to province, but always bus from Wadi Halfa across the sandy plain to Khartoum, and a branch line runs across the thin Abyssinian frontier. Another branch, the gum arabic road from Kordofan to Port Sudan, and yet another brings train-load after train-load of long staple cotton from the Gezira, south of Khartoum, for shipment to the Lancashire cotton mills.

Here is a country, half as old as Rome, hoary with age, yet one of the young of countries in the world. Its thousands of years its history was one long list of evil deeds by evil rulers. The black people of the Nile passed through centuries of torture, as a people they died, and as the British administration they began. The changes are a veritable resurrection to a new hope of a race whose life was filled with blank despair. The New Year brings with it all the Western devices of pleasure. The cinema is increasingly in evidence. The motor bus and taxi are already quite common, and a motor was at Wadi Halfa, the main town in the new Sudan area. I counted over twenty houses standing in the square. Plans are being prepared for Khartoum, and the plans of the

SISAL GROWING IN TANGANYIKA.

SEVERAL interesting statements are made by Mr. Lepper in an article in Empire Production in the course of which he writes—

"Although it is always risky, but the general expectation is that the price of sisal is unlikely to go much below £40 in the immediate future, and if grass crop prospects are favourable later in the year it may easily move up towards £50.

"The story is current that one experimental shipment of sisal was sent to London attracted the notice of an East End dealer, who thought he could find a market for it as an adulterant for dog biscuits, but his proposal was indignantly rejected by the recipient. One of these days some less inhumane use for the waste will probably be found, as the result of the attention which is being devoted to the subject.

"Steps have been taken recently by East African producers to counteract the extensive propaganda on behalf of sisal which is being conducted by Mexican interests, but it would seem that something more is needed in this direction, particularly on the Continent. It is difficult to believe that the translation and dissemination of the Empire Marketing Board's sisal pamphlet, which is the main feature of the somewhat timid efforts of the East African sisal interests in this direction, is likely to have much influence on foreign consumers of sisal fibre.

He concludes with the following attack on Tanganyika's present Native Policy—

"The East African sisal industry has a fine record of achievement since the War, and there is no reason to be pessimistic as to the outlook, always provided that it receives the supports to which it is entitled from the Governments concerned. Perhaps one of its most assiduous dangers is the development of an excessively sentimental attitude towards the African Natives, the indication of this vocal and influential, but thoroughly ill-informed, section of the people of Great Britain, which used to be referred to as the Exeter Hall element. A growing indiscipline and lack of respect for the white man have been apparent for some time past in Tanganyika Territory, where the most fantastic experiments in Native administration under the policy officially described as 'indirect rule' are being conducted. These attempts to graft the theories of European intellectuals on to a population which is little in advance of the neolithic stage of development, could be disastrous but for the probability that they will lead to even worse results than the Liberian case.

The Empire Mail says: "Eastern Africa to-day."

"Any publication giving up-to-date, authoritative and easily understood information regarding the various territories of the Empire is to be welcomed. This is done for a comparatively little-known group of Colonies by 'Eastern Africa To-day', published by East Africa, of Great Fitzfield Street, London, W.1, at 6s. post free. In its contents the needs of the colonist are met in full measure, and the business man also receives great help. An understanding of local conditions is vital to the success of a manufacturer's marketing campaign. The accurate information given in this book was compiled with the aid of the East African Governments. There is a great future for East Africa as a sphere of settlement and for trade, as will be discovered by a perusal of this volume, which is profusely illustrated with interesting photographs.

KENYA'S PRESSURE ON LABOUR.

LONG OVERLOOKING attention to the conviction of the inhabitants of the Belgian Congo that not more than 5% of the 'fit growth men' can be safely withdrawn from Native communities for work on European enterprises, says in a letter to The Times—

"In Kenya tribes from 15% to 63% of the 'fit growth men' are withdrawn from the Reserves to labour. It is not surprising that there is evidence that population in the Reserves is falling off and that Native social life is being impaired. Had reasonably considered principles of exploitation been laid down—as the East African Closer Union Commission now urge that they should be—whether on a consideration of paramount Native interests, or even on a basis of dual policy which up to this date there has been no attempt to do, there would have been no more difficulty in securing due regard in Kenya by European immigrants to these conditions than there is in securing it on the part of the Negro Europeans in Belgian Congo. The British Government, long before the Protectorate was made a Colony with a Legislative Council, had the framing of such principles of policy entirely within its own discretion. It deliberately adopted, under the inspiration of the development fetish, the ignorant and inordinate line of unrestricted pressure for labour, and has not, yet profited even by the example of the Belgian Government to set foot on the path of sanity."

MADE INVISIBLE BY A CHAMELEON.

We recently quoted from Major W. E. Smith's interesting article in The Police Journal on African magic and spells. Another passage, it has been suggested, which our readers might care to read is the following—

"Powers of creating invisibility are frequently associated with the head of a chameleon, but sometimes, as in the following example, not quite in the manner desired or expected by the user. A man was suspected of having stolen a considerable amount of money and jewellery, despite the excellent alibi which he produced. An abortive search was made of his house, during the whole of which he maintained an insolent attitude, supplemented by a defiant grin of challenge. When the police officers were leaving the house, a chameleon's head was noticed in a corner of the room, presumably to make that particular spot invisible—an ineffectual device; as an astute constable dug beneath it and found all the stolen property buried there. The suspect's grin of challenge then changed to a look of amazement, fostered by the proved impotency of a hitherto believed potent charm."

Do any East African tribes so many of which feature the chameleon—ascibe to it such powers of creating invisibility? It would be interesting to know whether any of our readers have experienced anything of the above kind.

A motor car left behind a Nairobi garage one night disappeared and was beached eighty-eight miles from Nairobi on the Kapado-Moshi road," says the current issue of The Kenya Police Review, adding: "The occupants were two young Natives, a Masai and an Akamba. The latter wished to go and see his brother in Tanganyika. He will now have to postpone his visit."

KENYA COMPANY'S MOTION FAILS.

Ivan Pedersen Ltd., of Nairobi.

In the Companies' Winding Up Court last week Mr. Justice Maughan dismissed with costs a motion by Messrs. Ivan Pedersen Ltd., of Nairobi, to dismiss a petition to wind it up brought by Messrs. J. W. Mitchell, the grain brokers and merchants of Holland House, Funn Street, E.C. 3, and Mr. C. Bennett, K.C., of Ivan Pedersen, said that the foundation for the motion was that the presentation of the petition was an abuse of the process of the Court. The petitioners were judgment creditors for £5,774 and the petition was based on that debt, but when the petitioners were given leave to sign judgment it was ordered that execution should be stayed pending the hearing of a counterclaim which Ivan Pedersen alleged against the petitioners.

His Lordship said counsel was that Ivan Pedersen was registered not in England but in Kenya and having no members and no more, although it was within the jurisdiction in the Court to wind it up. His Lordship replied that it was a very curious state of things in that were so, whereupon Mr. Bennett and Mr. Justice Astbury had so decided in a similar case.

Financial Arrangements.

The Ivan Pedersen Company had a nominal capital of £1,000,000, of which about £10,000 was issued. It carried on the business of exporting grain and Native products, and, according to the evidence, that business was a very happy and successful one. The petitioners, produce brokers in London, had for some time acted as the company's brokers and had rendered it financial assistance. Last year the petitioners lent the company £25,000, which became repayable with interest on December 31, 1928. At the same time the petitioners undertook to establish and the company said to maintain a revolving credit of £100,000 for a period of twelve months from June, 1928, with the Standard Bank of South Africa for the purpose of enabling the company to make purchases in Africa. The agreement upon which the company relied was one to amount in the credit for twelve months, which had not been done.

At this stage His Lordship said he had obtained Mr. Justice Astbury's note of the case he had decided. It seemed to him a precisely similar petition, and the learned Judge had dismissed it with costs. It would be very inconvenient to differ from Mr. Justice Astbury's decision, which he thought he ought to follow, leaving the matter to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Archer, K.C., for Messrs. J. W. Mitchell, said that his clients would certainly go to the Court of Appeal. Mr. Justice Astbury's decision, in his opinion, was a wrong one and ought not to be treated as binding by the Court. Ivan Pedersen was incorporated in a British colony and had a place of business in England, and he submitted that the Act did not exempt a company like that from the jurisdiction of the Companies' Winding Up Court, because it had, or was said to have, only seven members.

His Lordship, having said that the petitioners should have an opportunity of deciding on whether Ivan Pedersen had in fact only seven members when the petition was presented, Mr. Bennett argued that, in any case, there was no ground for the motion, and that it should succeed. Mr. Archer replied that his evidence was that there was no foundation whatever for the alleged counterclaim. It was not true that there was an unconditional contract giving Ivan Pedersen unrestricted access to what company paying what was undoubtedly due from it.

The Judgment.

Delivering judgment, His Lordship said the motion, which was of an unusual order, asked the Court to dismiss a petition to wind up before hearing the petition, as a result, the petitioners would never be heard. The law provided for petitions to be presented to wind up companies, and the practice had long been that the petitioners should be advertised, put into the list, and disposed of in the familiar manner. True, the practice was open to abuse, people without real ground for presenting a petition might do so in order to do the company harm and without any real ground for thinking that the petition could succeed, and in many cases the presentation and the advertisement of the petition might do harm to the company. It had therefore long been settled that the Court could on motion order a petition to be dismissed, but such applications should be made only in very special circumstances, and a motion of this kind might in general not be made unless it could be shown that the petition was presented in bad faith or was an abuse of the process of the Court.

The motion in this case had been supported by a number of affidavits in which charges of bad faith were freely made against the directors of J. W. Mitchell, and it was asserted that the petition was presented without any real ground, in order in some way to ruin the company. In His Lordship's opinion the facts as presently established did not bear out any such contention.

The Company to Blame.

Ivan Pedersen was incorporated in accordance with the laws of Kenya Colony and had a London office. It borrowed from the petitioners £25,000, which was repayable with interest at 5 1/2% on December 31, 1928. The company was then unable to repay the whole sum and it was ultimately arranged that £15,000 should be paid forthwith and the balance on January 1st, 1929. It was also arranged that the petitioners should renew a revolving credit of £100,000 given to them in the previous January with the Standard Bank of South Africa to finance the company. There was a dispute as to whether that revolving credit was to endure irrevocably for six months. It was not in dispute that only £5,000 of the balance was paid and in a week or ten days the petitioners cancelled the revolving credit. The company at once began to allege bad faith on the part of the petitioners.

In His Lordship's view there was bad faith, it was on the part of the Ivan Pedersen Company and no reasonable person could blame the petitioners for commencing proceedings in the King's Bench Division for the payment of the balance of £27,774 due to them. They obtained leave to sign judgment for that amount, with costs, but execution was stayed pending the trial of the company's counterclaim. There might be reasons for not dealing with the petition when it came on, but he had no reason whatever to suppose that the petitioners in presenting the petition did not really think that they were absolute creditors of the company for a substantial sum.

He came to the conclusion that the petitioners were in the right and that the company's suit was perfectly proper, and that it could have had no difficulty in making some arrangement by the offer of some security for the payment of the debt if that debt remained after the counterclaim was disposed of. He was not now dealing with the petition or expressing an opinion as to what course the Court should take when it came on next week, but only with the motion to dismiss it before it was heard. In his view the motion failed and must be dismissed with costs.

GENERAL HERTZOG AND EAST AFRICA

THE UASIN GISHU RAILWAY

Friendship and Co-operation Proposed

In announcing the Nationalist programme for the coming General Election in South Africa General Hertzog, the Prime Minister, said last week that he specially excluded Southern and Northern Rhodesia from his programme. He said that his idea of a great Union of Africa was not to be not a mere formal union, but a union which would not arise from treaty or friendly relations with British territory in East Africa. On the contrary, he and his Government had always advocated and would try to maintain the close ties of friendship and co-operation with those territories. Nationalists had created, however, in South Africa as a 'State allowing itself to be united either by federation or by unification, a system which could never be anything else than a Native States. If returned to power, the Nationalists would reject the South African Party's doctrine of the incorporation of territories of the Union with British Native territory in East and North-East Africa. They would strive to solve the Native problem along the lines of political and territorial segregation.

MR. J. H. HOFMEYR ENTERTAINED

The Hon. J. H. Hofmeyr, late Administrator of the Transvaal, who recently paid a brief visit to Kenya Colony, was entertained to luncheon on Friday last by the Royal Empire Society. His Royal Highness Prince Arthur of Connaught and the Rt. Hon. J. S. Amery, M.P., were present.

Sir John Sandeman Allen, M.P., Chairman of the Council of the Society who presided, said that he proposed the health of the guest, said that Mr Hofmeyr had obtained his M.A. degree before he was six years of age, and that before he had reached thirty he had served as Principal of the University of Johannesburg and had been appointed Administrator of the Transvaal, in which offices he had earned the appreciation of all sections of all communities. While he had a great future in the service of his country, South Africa could be doubly benefited by his services.

Mr Hofmeyr's speech was of great and impressive plea for greater co-operation within the Empire. On his journey to England he had, he mentioned, visited Zanzibar, the meeting place of Africa and India, and had spent two stimulating weeks in Kenya, where he had seen with intense interest the work of development of the great resources of a part of the African continent which encourages European settlement.

Mr Amery, proposing the health of the guest, said that he had never listened to a more interesting or more inspiring speech at a gathering of the Royal Empire Society than that of Mr Hofmeyr, whose services to Africa and the Empire had already been great and would, he was confident, be much greater in the years to come.

The process of land leasing in the various Dependencies continues. In order to bring the matter into line with the terms of the Commission will hereafter be known as the 'Royal Commission on the Province of Zanzibar, the District of Tanganyika, the Province of Provincial Commissioner of the Province of Zanzibar and Assistant District Commissioner of the Province of Officers, while the Director of Railways and Electricity will be known as the Director of Electricity and Wireless Department.

The Uasin Gishu Railway route chosen by the East African and Harbours Corporation is a state railway, and the major portion of the cost of construction will be borne by the Government of the country, but the public money was wasted in order that the railway should pass through large areas of land in the possession of Lord Delamere and Major Gordon. According to this statement Major Gordon said that even if he were to choose the route for forest areas and well in view of the fact that a railway would be required to carry the lumber and that the Government would be a competent surveyor for the purpose of locating the proposed line, his survey was made afterwards approved by the Kenya and Uganda Railway, merely showed that the route chosen by him had done his work.

Mandates for German Colonies.

Lieut. Commander Kenworthy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs when the subject of Germany being given a mandate for one of her former colonies was last under discussion; and what was the attitude expressed by His Majesty's Government?

Sir A. Chamberlain: The mandates over the former German colonial territory (which derived from the Treaty of Versailles and not from the League of Nations) were definitely allotted to the existing holders and there has never so far as I am aware, been any suggestion that any of the existing mandates desired to be relieved of its responsibilities. Our position was explained to Germany at the time of the Conference of Locarno and has been more than fully stated since. The mandates were to be called into being on the unlikely event of an existing mandate being vacated. We should be prepared to consider the claim of Germany as of any other Great Power, member of the League, but we can take no engagement in advance in regard to so hypothetical a contingency.

Lieut. Commander Kenworthy: Will the right hon. gentleman be good enough to answer the first part of the question as to when this matter was last under discussion?

Sir A. Chamberlain: It has not really been under discussion since, I think, the Locarno negotiations. No doubt there have been references to it since that.

Mr. Thurley: May we take it from the reply that the view of the Government is that it is a definite advantage and gain to have these mandates?

Kenya: Harry Thuku.

Colonel Wedgwood asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether he has received a communication from the Kikuyu natives respecting the liberation of Harry Thuku; and, after the seven years' banishment of this man against whom no charge was ever proved, will he be allowed to return to his family?

Mr. Ormsby Gore: The case of Harry Thuku was referred to in a petition of which my right hon. friend has a copy, addressed by the Kikuyu Central Association to the Governor of Kenya. The Governor proposes to discuss this matter with my right hon. friend, while he is in this country, but I do not anticipate that it will be possible to come to a decision until after his return to the Colony.

Colonel Wedgwood: Will the right hon. gentleman bear in mind when his discussion takes place that the Harry Thuku problem arose just a little time when they reduced wages by 10 per cent.?

Mr. Ormsby Gore: As the right hon. and gallant gentleman knows, there are a good many factors. The whole question is connected with the settlement of various outstanding tribal questions of policy, and that is why we cannot anticipate any final commitment in regard to this matter.

Uganda: Natives from Ruwenzori.

Sir A. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies what will be the status of the natives of the Ruwenzori mountains situated by the borders of Uganda, who are suffering from famine, and whether the British Government are prepared to take any steps to help them in their distress; and what is the position is there with the Belgian authorities in connection with the situation?

Mr. Ormsby Gore: My right hon. friend has not yet received any report from the Governor. He is, however, asking by telegraph for an early report by despatch on the situation.

INDIANS IN EAST AFRICA.

Mr. S. Sastry to Confer with Sir S. Wilson.

As he goes to press East Africa is officially advised that at the invitation of the Secretary of State for the Colonies the Government of India are deputed the Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastry to help the local Indian communities in East Africa to state their views to Sir Samuel Wilson on matters arising out of the Hillier Young Commission's Report and to be at Sir Samuel Wilson's disposal if he wishes to make use of him in dealing with Indian deputations.

Mr. Sastry's visit will supersede the contemplated appointment of a representative of the Indian community on the Executive Council of the Government of East Africa.

Mr. W. N. Watson, now on leave from Northern Rhodesia, has done much hard work as Honorary Secretary of the Local Branch of the British Service League, of the Broken Hill Political Association, and of the Football Association.

Will the contributor whose sketch entitled "Christmas Day's Experience" appeared in our issue of January 3 over the initials D. McE., kindly communicate with the editor in order that payment for the article may be made.

Bedtime Stories

Short-time comes all too quickly for a healthy child. A bedtime story from mother or father is the best remedy. Give the children that bedtime story which passes into the sweet dream-land of slumber.

This is the mother's opportunity to restore strength to build up brain and nerves and body and to give her child the material necessary for these purposes. Give the children that regular cup of fragrant, easily digested "Ovaltine" which restores strength. This delicious beverage is a natural source of energy and health-giving nourishment. Prepared from malt, milk and eggs, "Ovaltine" is easily digestible for growing children. It ensures strength, builds up the nerves, and checks growth of the nervous system.

MR. J. H. HOFMEYR ON KENYA

His Impressions of the Colony

Mr. J. H. Hofmeyr, who recently visited the Kenya Colony, has contributed his impressions to the Pretoria News, from which we quote the following:

A visitor from South Africa should not take long to feel at home in Kenya. At every step one finds points of contact with, and reminders of, our own country. There are other lines, too, apart from similarity of climate, along which one finds points of contact with South Africa.

I had barely entered the train when men told me of the improvements recently made in the railway service. A few years ago there were no dining cars and beds, no toilets. To-day the service is in all these respects excellent, the trains having been speeded up, and all fit not in Gath—there are some things in our South African railway which I learn from the Kenya and Uganda Railways. And so it is, that many a traveller in Kenya to-day thanks South Africa for having given him the jolty and the experience of Sir Christian Felling. At Nairobi we heard first speak with gratitude and affection, as one of the builders of their Colony, of another South African, Sir Robert Gordon, the last Governor.

But of chief interest to the visitor from South Africa is the correspondence between Kenya's problems and our own, sufficiently like, they are to attract attention, and sufficiently similar to be dealt with through the same channels. As one approaches the main centres, one is immediately drawn to the main centres of the unfinished Empire, and one realizes the business quarters of the town. It is as if one were in South Africa, where, in an Indian town, one finds to Kenya, as to Natal, the Indian, who brought the European a necessary contributor to the colony's economic development, in this respect, was in connection with the construction of the railway, that he came. In Kenya, as in Natal, the Indian has remained, and at the last census there was an Indian population of 26,759, as against 124 of Europeans.

As to the Indians there are, of course, in Natal, more than 2,500,000 of them, but it is a part of the lowest stage of development than our own South African Natives, but at some points in the economic sphere in advance of them, and having on the borders the Natives of a South African University College and the Bank of East Africa, bought with the wealth that cotton has brought them, and for Kenya, for South Africa, there is the problem of how best white and black shall live together in a common country.

Great Expectations.

Kenya is a land of great expectations. At Nairobi this Colony of 12,500 Europeans has spent £80,000 on a Government House, before which our own, at Pretoria, fades into insignificance. Their schools are built to Baker designs at a cost per pupil of £100 for tutorial buildings and of £250 for hostels. In the Transvaal corresponding figures would be £40 and £160, and the taxpayer who accuses the Provincial Administration of extravagance will doubtless note this comparison. In private life there is also a high standard of lavishness.

One spoke of the minarets that catch one's eye in Nairobi. There is another dominating building—a fine six-storey hotel, just completed. A similar building is going up, and there are two other large hotels in existence—and all this in a town of 5,000 inhabitants off the beaten tourist track. If the minarets are significant, so also is this new hotel, for it tells us of the wealth of these settlers, a element which has come out to develop the land.

Kenya, I said, is a land of great expectations, but it is also a land of doubts and questionings. On the day that I visited its £80,000 Government House, I read in one of its papers an account of a public debate on the question "that Kenya is in every way a suitable place for permanent white settlement." And the majority of good Kenyans present voted in the negative.

The continent of Africa is a great laboratory for experiments in racial relationships. Throughout it there are contacts between a lit and colored races manifesting themselves in diverse forms; in the East African Colony the contacts are not extensive and the resultant problems are amenable to treatment. In South Africa we see them at a high stage of complexity. Kenya occupies a middle position. The European has come there as to a land in which he can build a settled home. He constitutes a majority in the population which is mainly, but still not entirely, European. He regards it as his country, and so, while its problems are certainly not so complex as those of the South African, they are more difficult of solution than those of

The Future of White Settlement.

I have referred to the question whether or not Kenya is suitable for white settlement. A recent visitor, Sir Alfred Davies, declared categorically that it is, and never will be. For his sake I shall not venture on so definite a statement, nor do more than seek to analyze some of the factors that affect the question.

Solignum versus White Ants

What has happened to this wood?

It has been attacked by white ants. The stage below the same wood and treated with Solignum is the same condition as the above was treated with Solignum.

Protect the Member with Solignum

DEAR SIRS,

You may be interested to know that a friend from Kenya (East Africa) staying with me recently was admiring your Solignum on poultry houses when the conversation happened to be on the preservation of woodwork. I was very interested to learn from him that the only satisfactory method he had discovered of treating fencing posts was with Solignum. These white ants would not touch wood if it is treated with Solignum. I am glad you are quite free to use the above if you wish.

Yours faithfully,
J. STEPHEN HIGGS

Heathfield Sussex
In the above wood, the ants are not attacking the wood, but the treatment is simple and inexpensive and allows timber to be used in any position and for as long through life as if it were new.

PARKER PRODUCER GAS PLANT CO.

First, there are the climatic considerations. Ordinarily tropical lands, with their excess of heat, are not suitable for European settlement. However, in the heart of the tropics, it has been found that Equatorial land, it has been found that the Uganda border a considerable area over which the high where Europeans can live in health and comfort. The temperatures of the highland belt are usually not pleasant than that of the temperate zone. In fact, some 7,000 Europeans have already settled in the country.

There is a further reason for the desirability of the highland belt, because it has an agreeable climate and a low air level, that it is necessarily suitable for permanent European settlement.

There is a question as to whether the long exposure to the tropical sun will impair the vitality of non-European races. The difference between the climate of the highlands in the matter of their reactions to the conditions opens a big field for physiological investigations. At the present the doctor's belief is that the European race is more prone to tropical conditions than only savages. It has very favourably impressed on my the appearance of the children of the settlers in the schools that I visited.

Native Questions.

In dealing with native questions, the Government is guided by what is known as the "Open Policy." This complementary development of Native and non-Native communities involving the principle that development of Native industries for an end in itself. With that policy the representatives of the settlers have declared their agreement, but there is little enthusiasm for it amongst the Natives, they respond. I shall give an example of that policy one of the most significant things that came to my notice in Kenya.

There has been established a Native Industrial Training School, where by means of an excellently revised system of technical training and apprenticeship it is hoped to turn out a skilled Native artisans annually. The root idea is that the Natives should provide Kenya's skin goods. I shall give an example of that policy one of the most significant things that came to my notice in Kenya.

It is significant to see in South Africa, for ultimately this deliberate restriction of the colour bar must be the final result. But chiefly it is significant for the development of Kenya. The settlement in Kenya is still in the first generation, and the first generation of settlers of high quality, than that of any other colony. In the second generation there will be many Europeans not suited to agriculture, nor fitted for the higher posts in commerce and industry, or their Kenya will be left out opening as unskilled workers, or as skilled tradesmen. Kenya stands face to face with a powerful problem, which is not unique in South Africa and it will have to deal with that problem in an accelerated form.

There is a serious question of the future of the Natives and the situation of the Natives. The Natives hope to have a main market for their products. This would be a very important step in the development of the Natives. At Nairobi, I found that the Natives are very well supplied with goods, but they are still in the process of developing their own industries.

FUTURE RAILWAYS IN TANGANYIKA

Aerial Survey Recommended

In his address to the Royal Empire Society on April 17 last, Mr. C. G. Cochran-Patrick, who was in charge of the Aerial Operations Company's aerial survey work in Northern Rhodesia, spoke of the work undertaken for the Rhodesian Congo Border Commission and also of the Northern Rhodesia Government, which will be remembered, commissioned a survey of the Zambezi river and its tributaries, that was undertaken under the leadership of the main object was to assess the navigable possibilities of the river on the right side of the Zambezi, and showed very clearly how the river had wandered from its original course in the valley bed, and another disclosed sandbanks showing up through the water.

Referring to a Hilton Young Report, Major Cochran-Patrick said: "The commission recommends that large areas to the north and south of the Central Tanganyika Railway should be surveyed as soon as possible, with a view partly to aid in the location of junction railways between Tanganyika and Kenya on the north and Tanganyika and Nyasaland on the south. Such railways should be located not only with a view to avoiding physical obstacles, but also with a view to tapping areas which will eventually be of value either from a mineral or from an agricultural point of view, and in order to do this it is absolutely essential that large areas should be rapidly surveyed in such a way that an accurate knowledge of the soil, the climate and ecological conditions should be acquired. The only possible way by which these surveys can be carried out within a reasonable time and at a reasonable cost is by the use of air survey."

INDIAN PROBLEMS IN KENYA.

THEIR official representation to the Government of India in the present year, to East Africa to help the local Indian community in the expansion of their lives to the standard which has resulted in the satisfaction of Hon. Sir M. Sastri, whose proposals should be equally acceptable to the European and Indian alike in the two years which have passed since Mr. Sastri became the first Agent General of the Government of India in South Africa. He has, in the past, received great work in improving inter-racial relationships; moreover, while winning the confidence of the South African Government and the respect of public opinion in the United Kingdom, he has secured the trust of his fellow Indian settlers, who have never known a Government which has so far advanced the interests of a non-British race, and which has so far advanced the interests of a non-British race, and which has so far advanced the interests of a non-British race.

by the same attributes. Indeed when he passed through Mombasa some weeks ago on his way back to India from South Africa, the address which Mr. Sastri gave to a public meeting attended by both Europeans and Indians was an eloquent plea for mutual understanding. Feelings were more strained between Europeans and Indians in South Africa two years ago than they are in Kenya to-day, and the qualities of Mr. Sastri, which have enabled such great progress to be registered in the sub-continent, have an equally important influence on the course of affairs in East Africa. His prestige, which will ensure him a following from settler leaders, ought to make him an acceptable spokesman to all but the most extreme Indian elements, some of whom, assisted by a section of the Anglo-Gujerati Press, will certainly oppose whatever conciliatory proposals are advanced.

The general election of representatives has now been completed in Kenya Colony, and some six years, though the Indians regarding such representation as a slur upon their nationality and as failing to their self-respect, have sought to impeach the Imperial Government's decision by electing candidates from election. The recommendation of the Hiltce Young Commission is in favour of a common roll on an equal franchise, which would discriminate between the races, though in advancing this suggestion the Commissioners emphasize that their ideal is realizable only by consent, which the European population could be expected to give only if their interests were safe from the danger of being overwhelmed; the Commissioners further propose inquiries by the High Commissioner to show both Europeans and Indians exactly how any scheme of revision of the franchise would work out in practice. The Colony's settler leaders naturally reported that the communal franchise formed an essential part of the settlement of Kenya, and that they objected to any revision of the franchise on a common roll, but on the other hand it is obvious that any community is at liberty to approach Sir Cecil Wilson on any aspect of these reports, and the fact that the most difficult and delicate matters of race will be confronted will have a far-reaching effect on the present and future position of Indian in the Colony. Mr. Sastri has proposed to South Africa that he can see a European settlement, as well as an Indian, and would that his presence and influence contribute to the discussion of these matters in an atmosphere of moderation and with a desire for reconciliation. There are, as it well known, points which the settlers cannot concede, and his negotiation to improve the feelings between Europeans and Indians is best will be a triumph of the good.

INDIAN CLAIMS IN KENYA

What the Hilton Young Commission Thinks

We have advocated the franchise qualification in Kenya on the ground that a civilisation test is not suited to conditions in Eastern Africa. This is supported by the opinion of leading publicists and by the fact that natives in the settled areas enjoy the franchise as it will undoubtedly be made to include their rights. The fixing of a uniform franchise qualification for all races is a quite separate question from the question whether the different communities should vote on a common register to be prepared communally. It has been the purpose of this article on the long-standing controversy over the question of communal representation...

In the territories where there are no elected members of the legislature the question naturally does not arise and there is generally speaking, no serious friction between Europeans and Asiatics in those territories. It is not, however, that an acute controversy has arisen since the origin of the exclusion of the Indians from the franchise granted to the Europeans in 1910. The protests of the Indians in Kenya at this exclusion have been strongly supported by public opinion in India.

The 1923 Negotiations

The history of the subsequent negotiations is as detailed in the White Paper of 1923 (Cmd. 2604) and need not be repeated here. We reproduce however the relevant passages of the terms of settlement which the Secretary of State was prepared to accept on basis of an agreement between the Colonial Office and the India Office as recorded in what is known as the Woodheadton Report. These terms were detailed as follows: "The program dispatched by the Secretary of State to the Government of India in September 1923 was that the franchise should be common to all persons of all races and ages and British protected persons (right to vote) for the twenty years and upwards possessing the qualifications which were to be prescribed."

Either a complete census of the population was to be held in order to determine a method of apportionment which would approximately result in equal representation in the common electorate. To do this it was necessary to adopt a qualitative proportion of educational qualifications instead of a combined standard. It should be noted that in order to give the 50 per cent. the qualification standard would be unreasonably low, the number of standards laid down irrespective of these being percent qualifications, to be made strict enough to enable the Indians to obtain seats in the general election of March 1923. Further it was decided that no register would be admitted to the new register, whether in possession of the new qualifications or not, and application for registration, whether European or Indian, would be required to possess these qualifications. Qualifications. The official majority was to remain. Alternative proposals as follows:

(a) Five elected members representing seven constituencies three of which return one member and four two members. In the former European candidates only to be admitted to elections in the latter, three only to be admitted to election seat and one Indian seat. In the latter, four Europeans, four Indians, and two native members. Seats held by four each to be held by two members. Seats held by three each to be held by one member. Seats held by one member to be held by one member. Seats held by one member to be held by one member.

The Commission thought that the... (text is very faint and partially obscured by ink blotches) seven representatives and one to be retained in the Chamber. One seat on each committee should be Indian, the 100 European, giving each of seven Europeans according as the total will be twelve or fifteen elected members and four Indians. This alternative would not preclude the inclusion of some Europeans and might be more acceptable to the Indians. The Government of Kenya continue and report on the possibility of having seats to be allocated to the natives in the Chamber, but no to be delayed until next session.

Deep Feelings Aroused. The Government of India were willing to accept the scheme although they did not consider that it fully met the claims put forward on behalf of the Indians. The Government of Kenya rejected the scheme mainly because it found that it gave no sufficient safeguard to the European community against Indian predominance in the future.

Further attempts to secure agreement were unsuccessful, mainly owing to the opposition of the European community, and in July, 1923, His Majesty's Government decided that the interests of all concerned in Kenya would best be served by the adoption of a constitutional system of representation. Under the decision provision was made for five elected Indian members on the Council, as against eleven elected Europeans, and the number of official members was fixed so as to maintain an official majority. This decision, though not precise acceptable to the Indian community, and only one candidate came forward for election. The remaining four vacancies were until recently filled by nomination.

The controversy has aroused deep feeling in India. Stirred by new political aspirations, India is keenly sensitive to the position of Indians overseas. The new race consciousness which is making itself felt throughout Asia confronts British statesmanship with the difficult problem of finding room for the operation of this new spirit without endangering the structure of the British Empire. A happy solution of the controversy in Kenya is thus an matter not only of Eastern Africa, but of the Empire as a whole.

We have had the advantage of an examination of the issues involved with representatives of the European and the Indian communities, and by letter were assisted by two officials deputized by the Government of India for this purpose: K. N. Maharao, I.C.S., and Mr. R. A. Elwood, C.I.F. It is a pleasure to express our acknowledgments to these gentlemen for their able and helpful cooperation in elucidating the Indian point of view.

The Attitudes of Europeans and Indians

The Indians seek not claim representation in proportion to their numbers, but a means to effective representation of their interests and quality of political status. We understand that their main objection to a present system of communal representation is that their views are not the subject of a common platform, and that the representation of the Indian community is not in order to that of the other communities. It is prepared to accept a system of representation in the local territories and to admit to the franchise of their communities, but they do not seek in political domination, but the recognition of their right to British subjects to equal representation with other British subjects within the Empire. They consider that their position to be in line with the resolution passed in 1910 which was adopted by the Imperial Conference of 1917 by the Government of all the Dominion Governments except South Africa.

The Commission is convinced that there is a fundamental contrast between the position of India...

the accepted framework of a separate Imperial control to operate in the promotion of the common interests of the colony. It may be expected that the question of communal representation of a common roll will then come to be regarded more as one of practical convenience and advantage than as one in which racial safety or racial honour is involved.

Secondly, experience has shown that groups representing different communities in the Legislative Council may be expected to consider only on the grounds. It may be found that the important questions in the life of the colony are to be settled in relations between the interests of the settled areas and those of the reserves, and that the interests of communities have certain interests in common, and they may give a common basis to the whole system.

Thirdly, the common roll presents itself quite from the fact that it is to be a common roll, and that the franchise question should be decided by a common roll, and it is practically impossible to have a common roll, and it has been shown because the communal system of election is almost a necessary corollary to adult suffrage.

A Common Roll Proposed

If, for example, the Kenya franchise were revised on the lines of the Northern Rhodesia, the electoral roll would present a very different picture, and it is not improbable that the number of Indian and Indian votes would be found to be far less formidable than the European community appreciate. Moreover, it is only in a few constituencies that the Indian vote is important. The reservation of seats for European farmers ensures the election of Europeans to represent the agricultural community in those areas. We have been furnished with figures showing the weight to which the Indian vote would be reduced in the various constituencies if not more than ten per cent. of the population were admitted to the franchise as suggested in the Wood Committee report. These figures are in themselves inconceivable, but so far as they indicate that if there was a reservation of seats, an election on a common roll on this basis would probably produce more than four Indian members, viz. one each for Mashim, Mombasa, and the Coast district, and possibly one for Nairobi. If a similar point were to be produced by revision of the franchise on the lines that we have mentioned, it might well be found that, under a system of free election, the result would be satisfactory to both sides.

Our view is that, inasmuch as the progress of the territory must depend on co-operation between the races, the ideal to be aimed at is a common roll on an equal franchise with no discrimination between the races. It is at the same time clear that this ideal can be reached only by consent, and that the consent of the European community can only be obtained if they are given a feeling of security that their interests and institutions are not in danger of being overwhelmed by the mere numbers of the other community. Such security can only be provided on the basis of adult suffrage.

Investigations by the High Commissioner

It is, therefore, would seem to be the first step to have a series of investigations are fixed. The High Commissioner should constitute a select committee of inquiry to ascertain for each constituency the approximate number of persons of each race of community possible, the proposed qualification. It will, in any case, be necessary to obtain this information in the course of the revision of the communal system. The question is taken up. It is only fair that both Europeans and Indians should be given an opportunity of seeing how any scheme of revision would work out in practice before they are asked to accept it. The figures should therefore be laid before the leaders of both communities, and fresh attempts made to see whether agreement can be reached in regard to a question which has hitherto kept the races apart. It may be that the revision of the franchise will not in itself effect a reconciliation of the differences of view.

Our hope is, however, that our Report may suggest some lines of approach to the political problem of Eastern Africa, and that its recommendations, if carried out in effect, may contribute to the growth of a spirit of co-operation, which will make it possible for these three questions to be considered in a more favourable atmosphere and will increase the chances of some plan being devised which will do justice to the legitimate interests of both communities and meet with general consent.

NATIVE POLICY IN SOUTHERN RHODESIA

Land Held by Settled and Native Councils Established

The Bill now before the Legislative Council will be the first legislation since the general business in the last session of the second Southern Rhodesian Parliament, which is the result of the General Election of last year. It consists of twenty-nine Rhodesian Party members and an Opposition of four Progressives and three Labourites. One Bill is to give effect to the recommendations of the Wood Committee Report, already agreed to in principle by the Council of Ministers, and is to be divided into two Bills.

Native areas—to 500 acres, in addition to 100,000 acres already assigned, and in which Natives to be allowed to reside or occupy it. A Board consisting of three Natives, two Europeans, and one member nominated by the High Commissioner, to control area. Europeans owning land in area may dispose of it to a Native or hold it subject to expropriation in exchange for other land or compensation.

Unassigned area—Land held or subsequently acquired by Natives to be automatically part of Native area.

Forest land—Reserve for afforestation, both Europeans and Natives may hold land here on prescribed terms.

Unassigned area—to be alienated to the alien who is present, but, later portions may be assigned either to Natives or to Europeans.

Unassigned area—to be alienated to the alien who is present, but, later portions may be assigned either to Natives or to Europeans.

Mission and is provided, as are Natives, rights in locations, and municipal and municipal are local authorities are to be given power to act as to an area defined for Native occupation.

The other Bill provides for the establishment in the area of Native Councils, consisting of the Native Commissioner and three Natives appointed by the Governor, four Europeans to be nominated by the taxpayers. The Councils will have certain taxing powers and a defined sphere of work. The details of the Bill are not yet in final form, but it is considered that they form the basis of a sound and liberal Native policy, which will satisfy the Natives, and will encourage them to take a share in their own government. RECAPITULATION OF EAST AFRICA

PETERSON'S CLOSE CALL

At the Mercy of a Rattlesnake

Spanish Expedition to East Africa

By Craven Hill

WHEN Peterson strove to rise he realized that he would not get back to camp without assistance, though an injured ankle was the sum total of his misfortunes. Cursing his luck, he sank down again on to the warm sand, and wished he had enough with him to eat and ration. The hurried snatches at dawn were not to keep him going. All a search party could do was to keep him from burning to death.

How long would the day last? The burning African sun above the search party turned up the sides of the hills, and the search party, shooting snipe along the Zambezi at a pace some eight miles from camp, but in the open among the various dumps of wreckage and dead thorn, he would not be conspicuous, and might easily be overlooked, even through the strongest field glasses.

He rose to his knees and looked about him. On the left side the faded yellow sun met his gaze. The sandy hills were bare, over which he had fallen. A search party in front of him stood a short distance away, a cluster of weary Europeans.

He drew his left foot and gingerly unrolled his puttees. He was not to doubt about it, the rattlesnake had bitten Peterson, slender of build, thin as a reed, and small, slipping out of his slacks and tried to pull the ends of the fracture into place, putting forth his ounce of strength. At the agony of it and as he came by the broken span, he slipped into unconsciousness.

Time passed, and the naked sun slept under the growing heat of the sun. The only sign of life was a host of flies which he saw swarming and buzzing round the senseless man, settling from time to time on his moist face and hands.

When all had been quiet for some time, a movement very slight occurred in the sand to the left side of a clump of cactus not six yards from the man, and a broad flat head, bigger than a man's fist, moved slightly. On the top of the head two dead eyes gazed, glancing side on from the nose, and behind the flat, unless stated, a snake form, six feet in length and as thick as a man's arm, writhed slowly. Soon the whole sinuous shape emerged into the sunlight, and the snake advanced with raised head, its swelling belly a bright shining black, surrounded by a sooty throat and head, marked it as a rattlesnake.

Within a few feet of the unconscious man the snake's head turned and stared directly at him. The man did not move. The snake did not move. It waited, without moving, the flat, open, eyes fixed rigidly upon him. The rattlesnake was ready, a ready vial to eject its venom at Peterson's upturned face. The man was dead; the venom was in his veins. The snake lifted its head, and its mouth opened, and it was seen that the man was alive, and the snake not dead. The man started to wriggle away, but he was not able to do so. The head of Peterson's snake was now on his face, and the Peterson's snake was now on his face.

When the Peterson's snake was now on his face, the Peterson's snake was now on his face. The Peterson's snake was now on his face, and the Peterson's snake was now on his face. The Peterson's snake was now on his face, and the Peterson's snake was now on his face.

through lower lids. There in the face of him was the snake with head gently swaying, within range and ready to strike.

Peterson knew that his life was in the balance, but that the snake would not strike so long as he was perfectly still. At the same time he realized that the rattlesnake knew he was not dead, and the snake might wait some time. How long could he maintain his present cramped position with his legs, straining him so, save only where the fracture had occurred? Suppose he should not be able to stick this thing on, suppose his steps were slipping away again! The grim thought, despite the heat, he felt cold, and break out all over his body. In his anxiety he thought of his gun, only to remember in dismay that he had already used his last cartridge.

At that moment Peterson's eyes caught up the rattlesnake and the still air. He was only a duiker, that little antelope which weighs less than thirty pounds, bounding like a runner through the scrub, but the sound seemed to vibrate through the antelope, and he uncoiled and writhed away.

Wondering how much longer it would take the search party to find him, Peterson placed his ears to the ground to listen for the hooves of any distant hooves. But no noise came, his listening ears were already filled with the sound of the rattlesnake, and once the far distant rattlesnake was heard of a prowling antelope. Clearing his glance skywards, Peterson noted a single vulture directly above him, hung as if suspended by an invisible string from the brazen copper dome of the heavens. He smiled grimly. He knew what that meant. But he was not done for yet. A long way he did not intend to furnish a meal for that soured vulture.

Just as his roving eye caught sight of half a dozen dusky figures, very small and far away, but quite definitely humans. It was the search party at last. Peterson, cupping his hands, shouted at the top of his voice, and waved his arms in a frantic endeavor to attract attention. But, though he repeated his signals time and again, the search party was too far away to see or hear him. They moved slowly on through the short scrub and soon passed out of view behind a clump of mimosa.

With a curse Peterson sat down exhausted. If they did not reach him soon, he might be compelled to pass up and out our here in the open, and he did not wish his prospect. Moreover, his thirst was growing intense.

A sudden furious hiss behind him brought him round in a flash, and a cry of alarm escaped him. There was the rattlesnake, rearing its ugly head ready to strike. The rattlesnake was not dead, and had not gone far when Peterson's shout had drawn its attention back to the man, and, knowing full well that the man was alive, now it had his teeth in the man's arm. Peterson grabbed his gun, and fired a shot, which he thought of as a warning shot, but which he thought of as a warning shot. Peterson's gun was now on his face, and the Peterson's snake was now on his face.

As Peterson's snake was now on his face, the Peterson's snake was now on his face. The Peterson's snake was now on his face, and the Peterson's snake was now on his face. The Peterson's snake was now on his face, and the Peterson's snake was now on his face.

At that tense juncture something happened to divert the attention of the combatants. A loud, raucous cry sounded from the ridge behind the cobra and it fell about like a crane, but with the head of a cobra, bent down upon the snake. With a thrill of surprise the man turned to look at the man who was glancing the identity of this strange bird was a preliminary rushing in to his rescue. It was the secretary bird, so called because the crest of its plumes came from the back of its head like a shield resembling to a bird of prey, perched behind the ear. This was the one creature which could help him now.

He saw the snake whip round to give another look at the new foe, saw its flat, malignant eyes flash with fury. But the snake did not strike, for the secretary did not come near enough. When but a few feet away the secretary bird began to approach the snake by means of an ever-contracting series of circles, which he did with a dignified, high-stepping action, keeping a wary eye on the reptile's movements.

The snake kept shifting its position so as to keep the bird directly in front of its swaying body, opening its gape-mouth slightly, four short, grooved fangs showed, two on either side of its upper jaw. Then, arching its neck, the great snake suddenly struck to pierce the bird, expelling simultaneously the air from its single lungs, and contracting the muscles which sheathed the poison glands at the back of its flat head. Instantly there shot through the air, straight at the eye of the snake, two thin streams, the very essence of death.

Do you need not have worried for the bird, perfectly familiar with the reptile's tactics, since his head just before the deadly drops reached him. Again the snake threw up its hood and again the bird's head dropped in the nick of time. Then the secretary bird took the offensive.

As the raging serpent started to draw back, the bird stepped upon it and dealt the reptile a lightning blow with one of his hammer-like feet, which caught the snake's head and smote it heavily to the ground. Instantly the snake was up again, and with a third spear the great black body shot up, and so swiftly that the victor showed only his tail in the air.

But each time the evil head struck the fangs themselves hardly lay in a mass of soft, quite formless, frothy particles. Then, suddenly, the snake's head was disengaged from the reptile's position, long, bill-like, contoured feet came into view, the snake's body swung up, rolled and darted toward the victor for shelter.

But the secretary bird was too quick for him. As the massive blow slicing upwards with terrific force struck down on the back of the snake's head the reptile's head and short neck were driven clean through it. The fangs were dropped inward, but the body, as the victor drew away, which itself no invidious. Then the man, who was about to step up to take the man's measure, stepped up the snake's head, strong arm of his body, and the man's hand was snatched up over the ridge to demand the victor's name.

For some minutes the man, standing the evidence of the bird's victory, gazed at the spot where the snake had been. Then, a faint light of hope came into his mind. He stepped a few yards away from a white man, who had stepped yards away. It was the victor's name, according to the secretary bird.

CH'DZULU COMES TO EUROPE

Adventures of a Native Servant

Special Attention, East Africa

By Vignar Madik

With the passage of time Ch'dzulu had passed through the various phases of service from that of junior extra kitchen boy to his responsibility of being his master's right-hand man. And for fifteen years, from Lake Tanganyika to Beira and from Quinhana to Elisabethville, he had followed his master's varying fortunes.

Everyone knew him as "Hollander John" and Ch'dzulu. The one without the other was unthinkable. We had our own talk about Ch'dzulu, but there was no doubt about the efficiency of the service he rendered. He was well, Hollander John, but he talked about his other name.

To the surprise of everybody, Hollander John announced that he was going home for a holiday. Then, having gathered together all his trophies, by means of a final sweep of all consultations of policy and things, he added Ch'dzulu to his train. Also a half grown half tame leopard cub on a chain.

There was a convenient tramp steamer, the Beira, the idea of dressing for dinner at home did not appeal to John, so that was not in comparative privacy. The first fortnight of the voyage Ch'dzulu spent below, miserably ill, which explains why he does not own things Cape Town.

Ch'dzulu's ideas on civilisation and towns were based on short arc experience of places like Beira and the Elisabethville of years ago, so for a couple of weeks after arriving in Rotterdam he was shocked. Nothing would induce him to wander about the town when he accompanied John, it was only after about fifteen years of it. John had prevented his holding his master's hand.

But once this stupefaction had worn off Ch'dzulu proved the old adaptability, assisted perhaps by a talk with his master. The bevana, it appeared, had spoken in terms of great pride to the people of the town about Ch'dzulu, and Ch'dzulu had been letting him down. Now the bevana had taken a house. What was Ch'dzulu going to do about it?

Thereupon Ch'dzulu began to show them a thing or two. The house was ready to receive visitors. Light and leopard skins in disordered array hid most of a very beautiful carpet, the junks stood on and in each corner, and heads and horns disputed pride of place with Delft porcelain and dainty brass. If somewhat startling, at least Ch'dzulu had distinct ideas about the decoration of the home.

Till quarters were ready, the leopard had been chained in the cloak room, in the main hall, but as Ch'dzulu told of the guests of wraps and coats on arrival, this was matter of no moment. Ch'dzulu looked most picturesque in a snow white bevana robe with a brilliant purple Zouave pocket piece and gold head. John's reputation rapidly became established.

The evening was just becoming an extraordinary success. Indeed John had interested a well-known Hague financier, most to the extent of his putting down the capital to build a soap factory on the lower Zambesi. The man with the money was most interested in John, showing accounts of the business, and his rufous face was beaming. It was John's old friend, but he was changing. He was in the house, with a hat of a certain kind, the man in John's name.

Opening the door, John ushered in the manager, who, to John's surprise, had Chibuzulu arranged in his hands. The manager had been silent through the whole of the very sultry, stink-room where the manager was less likely than at his new quarters and a few generous at all the habits of the manager, who was pompous and very orderly. The manager had been frightened as a child with tales of lightning, to be sure, but when his leopard and saw a man sitting on a stool, he did not see his master in the doorway, but only one stool not on the order of his master, in fact, John could not see the manager, as the fellow was called the manager, with a single quality and singular stream, was in the street.

Chibuzulu thought for a moment to enter through the small front door. Thinking the manager's cream, he went some fully gained out as he had impressed on him with a certain decision to put the corner stone of the evening's entertainment by showing up. A minute after the chief man's exit, he found a new what was all about Chibuzulu, made a mistake. The leopard, growing at his chest, was growing nervous and repeating his tricks at last.

The guests, a number of people of all ages and sizes, had tried to be invited at the manager's feast, but this crowling leopard, who was a corner piece of the feast, was too much for their comfort, especially as they had been in the night, when the adventures of John's cell had been in the manager's hands, only three or four of the original number of the leopard's chain by the manager of a second.

It is said that in moments of great emotional intensity, the faculties are concentrated on things of trifling importance. John says he noticed the manager's wife, who had been in the manager's back against the corner, dislodged two large tusks, one of which fell over a playing young, who had great presence of mind, had crawled behind the corner of a chair. He had averted his head as if to escape the words of John's wife, who had been struck by the thought it was the leopard. The manager's scream was a whisper to that emitted by the wife, as he jumped down for the floor in which the majority of the crowd had already become seated. They had their backs to the room, though it was the leopard, who had been the task of the sight, but it was two almost featureless specimens of the species.

That John noticed the head, smile of the eyes of Chibuzulu, who was glowing with pride at having been able to amuse his master, was a source of ill-humour.

At last, after a moment's order was given by the John, it came round to the manager's destruction of the desperate, unheeding leopard. The manager's means of escape, however, was to be a leopard, and two officials accompanied him, as they stepped down from the platform.

The manager, standing at the door, was a man of the small, fat, heavy, John, who had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world. Between a full, white beard and a full, white beard, John was a man of the world, and he had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world. Between a full, white beard and a full, white beard, John was a man of the world, and he had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world.

Chibuzulu awoke when it was high and full of his eyes, he looked out with a determination that he was not yet accustomed to the long days of the northern summer. He automatically, as he had said, had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world. Between a full, white beard and a full, white beard, John was a man of the world, and he had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world.

Remembering in his dream, while he was looking earnestly and rather wearily at a window in the distance, a sound downstairs caught his attention. A lion of a man, whose eyes came confusedly before his eyes. He roused downstairs. The noise was at the side of the house by the light door where he knew that men came with the meat and provisions. He had seen them, but they came in the day, and though this appeared to be the day, only a little while of the night had said it was, and a man of the manager's night. So it must be the night; there were those, this time, the house would not be a mistake. Chibuzulu had let him down.

He arrived just in time to see a very young man walking away with two empty milk bottles from behind a door. Chibuzulu had seen the cook, who had been in the kitchen, and yet here was a man walking away with them in the middle of the night and a man of the manager's night. He was whispering on his way to a cart which had many empty bottles already. What a big thief, for a man so young! Ah! This time he would show Bwana John that Chibuzulu was not a fool.

He wiped his horny finger between his lips and the challenge war cry of the leopard soared to meet the northern dawn. But how, before it got there, almost, into the milk boy's head with its shrill screech. The boy looked round just as Chibuzulu, a man of the manager's night, had his hand on the front of John's shoulder, and he had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world.

The boy had never seen a leopard, and the face was certainly far from his thoughts. At 3 am, he was fast asleep, but the leopard had decided that there were times and places better suited to the inclination of his species than his own. He had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world. Between a full, white beard and a full, white beard, John was a man of the world, and he had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world.

Chibuzulu had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world. Between a full, white beard and a full, white beard, John was a man of the world, and he had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world. Between a full, white beard and a full, white beard, John was a man of the world, and he had been to him, as he had said, and Holland, John knew how to be a man of the world.

IS IT ZANBESI OR ZAMBEZI?

Mistake of Sir Harry Johnston.

To the Editor of "East Africa."

SIR, May I take up the question at the point at which you leave it in your issue of January 24, replying to "Subscriber" by quoting for him the words of Sir H. H. Johnston, transmitted by him to East Africa some years ago.

From a very early moment in his African career Sir Harry Johnston was impressed, as witnessed in his writings, by the vagaries of spelling, and he made constant efforts to improve the situation. For these efforts were almost always handicapped by his own misfortune in never being long enough in one territory to permit of a real study of local dialects. The immense range of his research and the industry involved are attested by all that was not so, but very close with the conclusions which he draws and the theories which he propounds.

This "Zambezi" conundrum provides an excellent example of the famous administrator's method and its limitations. In the three paragraphs which you quote, the third (the important one) is inaccurate from start to finish.

He says: "The original Portuguese rendering was Zambeze. Livingstone kept the name, and took it which is correct. The root of the word is mbezi, which a further investigation traces back to a widespread Bantu root. The root appears in the word for 'moon' throughout a vast extent of Bantu Africa, and is also applied to sheets of shallow waters, lakes, and broad rivers which appear to the Native gaze as a shining white. These are the essential sentences, and every single one of them is wrong."

The original Portuguese rendering of the name was Zambeze, and it is very hard to see how any such word as mbeze could come into use. Though Livingstone took the spelling Zambezi, it is not correct. The root of the word is not mbezi, and in consequence, the sentences following this statement have to be altered.

I believe that I am right in saying that the meaning of the name is "The water coming from the country where people chop the acacia, and the root of the wood is emb, the actual verb occurring in various early shikha to shchemba, kuzemba. Therefore it can hardly be to have been found on the lower reaches of the river, and not to be passage through the country of the tree-felling people. It is also very probable that the name Chambezi in Northern Rhodesia represents a slightly altered form of the same idea, taking its origin in one of the many names for the upper reaches, where both are the rule.

Therefore the first part of the word is not em at all. It is emba, the middle syllable of shchemba, and the suffix is entirely impossible in itself, and quite apart from the central ambe is zi.

The exact meaning of zi is a most puzzling question. There is, however, little doubt that Sir H. H. Johnston's reference of it to some meaning akin to "startling whiteness" is about as far from the mark as it is possible to be. Its most widespread meaning is that of "coldness," but almost always in coldness applied to water. And indeed it is hard to think of anything in primitive Africa to which the idea of coldness was applicable apart from water in some form or other—mist, hail, as well as river and lake water.

Among river-names in the part of Central Africa where the name emba forms a suffix are: Arund in the Congo-Lyette, the emba water, wawaki, Lynde, Shambani, Tawere, Kasanga, Lulu suze, Tabu, Iwatu, Mbari, and the question of the origin of this widespread suffix is not a matter of any importance at all. The word Zem both with, without the slightest doubt, be pronounced both "Sembest" and "Sembeshi" in certain areas of the inner plateau lands.

The most instructive example as to the use of the syllable em existing in our local languages, Chi-Timbuka, not only in the moon but also the sun and the stars terminate with em, emba, amara, amara, amara, so does the word for "years." And the way that the word for "years" is combined is simply this: "the world of eyes" is maro; the word for "years" is mara; it flows thus: "my eye-water" or does it mean "eye-older"? That is the question which seems at the moment impossible to answer. And either means one of those two or a combination of them.

The maps of our African territories are studied with names which do not accurately represent the meanings which, to the African responsible for them, they are intended to stand for. The situation could be improved, but hard to attain, since the people who are most likely to know are either in African villages or scattered about the territories as planters, missionaries, or traders—rarely, if ever, in centres of civilisation or at the great markets of the continent. But one thing can be said: there is a greater likelihood of correct pronunciation among the Natives. Hence those home speeches use the broad variety of the vowels that are not used, whereas in the case of the English, have departed far from their own, and are all like the English, are not willing to admit that any other values can be correct. Having said this, I may as well admit before signing my name what you may have suspected—that I am a broad-vowelled Scot.

Yours faithfully,
London, Scotland

SNAKES WHICH NATIVES FEAR

Boards of the East African

The East African, East Africa

SIR, May I ask the following two Native letters in correspondence you have published? Some months ago a native traveller brought the information that an Angura snake had taken possession of an ant heap along side the high road near Kanena village, beyond Malope, and by doing so had closed the road to Native travellers. He made a diversion to avoid it, but the snake was said to hide in the large, hollow Gavira stems in the bush trees.

There is no doubt that the Angura and Subbe snakes are also found in most parts of this country. A Native who was present has told me that about 20 years ago he killed on the Zomba-Mlanje plain, near a serene Polombe stream. It was at the time of a fair when many Natives congregated for trading, when the flooded streams flow into Lake Shira. This snake, in a tree, closed the path and these Natives made a diversion. One day two Angura came along and said that they had killed it, showing the blood on their axes. This robe were formerly accustomed to eat snakes.

Yours faithfully,

LORD OLIVER AND "EAST AFRICA."

My understanding of the position.

I have received from your office two copies of East Africa, folded so as to display letterpress alluding to myself. They contain (1) offensively worded and frivolous observations purporting to be a review of my book "White Capital and Coloured Labour," conveying gross and bald misrepresentations as to the character and contents of its argument; and (2) an invitation to explain in your paper my views on the British Empire.

I have not received any such invitation from you. I seldom see your journal. When, on one or two previous occasions my attention has been called to references in it to myself, they have usually been as discourteous and inappropriate as is this review of my book from which you, and from that of your quoting the observations of similar character which you reprint from the Journal of the Royal Empire Society, I should infer that neither you nor the reviewer whom you desire to cater are at all interested in correctly appreciating my opinions. If any are so, they can obtain an accurate impression of them by themselves reading any book, as other journals devoted for the Empire's health and credit, such as The Times and The Spectator, have unlike your reviewer appreciatively encouraged their readers to do so.

I write professionally for income, and I cannot supply gratuitous copy even if East Africa were a journal in which I might think it worth while to do so. Nor do I understand why you should regard it as strange that no notice should be taken by a man of fifty years' contact with public affairs of a paragraph consisting of a single newspaper paragraph couched presumably in the style employed in those now sent me, even had I seen them.

If an editor desires an article from me upon any subject, his usual and appropriate courteous procedure is to write and to sign for it, tendering the suitable fee.

Yours faithfully,

Old Man, Robinson
Charlton

reply.

When East Africa editors take public actions or statements of any man, a copy of the issues containing the criticism is sent, as a matter of course, to the man in question in a question of that account. On the 12th of March, 1914, I sent it and it is lacking. I have not been asked to send a copy to Lord Oliver, but he has been intrusted by us for review to a man of probably not long experience in foreign countries, that is, Lordship, and who, receiving a proof of the above letter, replied:

"While I do not Lord Oliver is entitled to applying to my notice of his book, the review, in the interim of a letter, may safely be left to the judgment of any licensed reader. That the review was written in a light vein may be admitted, that some of the best material in it is only as a contrast to it, and some of the observations, selected with care and with a fair regard, are a fair sample of the author's style and manner, and they present his argument with fairness and balance. Lord Oliver's point, on the other hand, is merely a case of an important reference, and a habit of unqualified denunciation by the Lordship of public men who assume to be the last man of the most ruthlessness in action, and who embody the most evil of the age."

Lord Oliver says that he has not received any of the letters sent to explain the views on a public matter, which will turn to him. He will find that a copy of the book was sent to Lord Oliver, but he has not received it.

Notably, I have in Manchester during the first week of January. As Lord Cranworth pointed out in the House of Lords last week, Lord Oliver was reported by The Manchester Guardian, The Morning Post, and other newspapers to have said: "I am glad that the British Empire is being broken up and internationalised, because I am not an Imperialist." Lord Oliver promptly interposed that he had not used the words "broken up," but he did not attempt to clarify himself more clearly. As Lord Oliver was Secretary of State for India in the Socialist Government, and a former British Colonial Governor, it is important that the Empire should know exactly where he does stand in this matter.

When that issue escaped His Lordship's notice, the paragraph which we reviewed his book on a page contained immediately beneath the review the following paragraph:

Three weeks ago East Africa invited Lord Oliver to say exactly what he claims to have stated at the Socialist Conference at Manchester, at which he was reported to have declared: "I am glad that the British Empire is being broken up and internationalised, because I am not an Imperialist." He has since denied using the words "broken up," but has not yet accepted our invitation.

Yet, in the face of these quotations, our correspondent suggests that East Africa does not desire a correct appreciation of his opinions. It is because East Africans should know exactly what Lord Oliver's attitude to the Empire is that we invited him editorially—not anonymously, as he suggests—to state exactly what he did say at Manchester, and we still hope that, in justice to the public, he will explain.

Lord Oliver writes professionally for a living, and the best thing which we should contemplate would be to make any freelance journalist to provide us with gratuitous "copy." As it happens, His Lordship's Manchester speech seemed to us to yield so little "copy" that we quoted only the few words which Lord Oliver declared some weeks later to have been erroneously reported by The Manchester Guardian, The Morning Post, and other newspapers. It is therefore evident that we had no thought of obtaining gratuitous copy from Lord Oliver, whether, however, as a matter of justice, we could and still offer the opportunity of setting our readers exactly what he claims to have said. Lord Oliver, who has been a British Colonial Governor, a Cabinet Minister, a Labour Administration, and may hold high public office in the future Socialist Government, ought, we submit, to be in a position to clear.

East Africa appears to find no favour in his eyes, but his suggestion that we have published discourteous and inappropriate references to himself is entirely unfounded. His Lordship, who loses no opportunity of expressing his views on East African questions, would we suggest with all deference, be better equipped to enter the lists if he followed the example of the vast majority of public men interested in East African affairs, and subscribed to and sent to us through the journal, which, after all, is the only newspaper devoted exclusively to East and Central African affairs, and is one to which many of the keenest East African minds contribute frequently. If Lord Oliver deliberately refuses to read what such officials and missionaries among them have to say on the problems which he aspires to judge, how can he claim to put a reasoned verdict? (E.A.)

THE PROGRESS OF "EAST AFRICA."

A Northern Rhodesian Appreciation.

To the Editors of East Africa.

I would like to congratulate you on the rapid advance of East Africa. At the start it was not a good idea, and then— even after a few months' struggle— it struck me as promising. But now it can be said to have arrived, for it is both interesting and valuable to all interested in Eastern Africa.

Yours faithfully,

London, 11/1/14.

NORTHERN RHODESIAN.

The criticisms and suggestions of our readers are always as welcome as their kind letters of appreciation. East Africa was founded and exists to serve the British, and any idea likely to increase its usefulness is a careful and favourable consideration.

ROMANZI MANEJJI: A LINK WITH SULTAN SAYYID BARGASH

Zanzibar Engineer, Minister of Public Works. An Appreciation Society for East Africa.

By W. H. MOORE

ROMANZI MANEJJI, who passed away in Zanzibar on April 17 at a very advanced age, was probably the first of those who assisted and aided the development of Zanzibar when it was the centre of its popularity, was political and commercially the metropolis and emporium of East Africa, and was the market and distributing centre of the slave trade.

It is necessary to recall the difficulties existing half a century ago in order to realise the work expected of, and performed by, the very few officials employed, still less that of one marvellous, unassuming, lovable Parsee.

Zanzibar made its reputation under the iron rule, energy, and resources of Sultan Sayyid Bargash. His two steamers, "Victoria" and "Nyanza," trading to India, brought thousands of Indians to East Africa, while the smaller "Sultans," such as the "Kiwa" and "Sura," commanded the trade of the Benue coast, the Comoros, and Madagascar, while Indian-owned steamers engaged in business between the Persian Gulf and East Africa. Sultan Bargash had decided views as a shipowner. To the suggestion that his steamers were not earning money, according to American and English ideas, he replied that they brought Indians, and that Indians brought wealth. Hence Mr. Bomanji found himself in Zanzibar.

Zanzibar's Fresh Water

One of the most remarkable features of Zanzibar is the presence of an abundant supply of excellent fresh water, no other supply being known on the western shores of the Indian Ocean between the Persian Gulf and Madagascar. To Sultan Bargash must be given the credit of having established the best East African watering place for ships. But who was behind the scenes? When Sultan Bargash ordered a thing to be done, it was done, and promptly. There would be no argument over details, no quibbling about cost, and no excuses for any failure. It is a pity that the water works and main lines and subsequently the pumps of Bomanji may have over-ordered, and that large pipes, for example, and a huge water tank was imported and never put into use, though it found a ready sale for the mainland. Nevertheless, some credit is due to Bomanji for the development of Zanzibar as a valuable asset.

The construction of the Zanzibar railway, with its one passenger train, known as the Rufiji express, though it was at times an hour or two out of its scheduled time, no one wrote letters of complaint to him.

The loads were Bomanji's work and care, and herein is another story. For years some fine English made (sic) clothes ordered by the Sultan lay derelict in different parts of the island, the brass buttons disintegrated, piece-meal, and eventually so did the clothes. The electric light plant at the palace was acknowledged him as their father.

Always willing to help others.

Young men, if any, were better known in Zanzibar, and no one could have been more frequently appealed to for advice even from the island and seafarers, than Bomanji. The Sultan's workshops there being nowhere nearer than Bomanji's, the mills at Pangani on the mainland utilised his professional competence. When the ship, loaded with machinery was ordered to India, she was salvaged, brought into Zanzibar, and patched up, though probably not so effectively as it could be done today, there being neither dry dock nor gadiron large enough for such a sea-worthy condition. Certificate was not granted to enable her to sail under her British flag, but that did not prove an insuperable obstacle, for when another engine she made a second passage to the Persian Gulf.

The sugar mills in Zanzibar (an industry now defunct) claimed attention. No kind of work in which Bomanji could assist others was turned down. Among other things, he made experiments with machinery imported to treat the coconut oil, but this was found unusable, the water not being suitable. One of his later engineering efforts was an attempt to get the first motor car (1 h.p.) to arrive in East Africa to function. After others had failed he succeeded in getting it to run on the level for a short distance, but it met a rubbish heap and its fate.

A Remarkable Man

As an engineer from the Bombay workshops, he was a remarkable man, as an official, exceptional. Under Arab rule with Arab surroundings—usually synonymous with bribery and corruption—Bomanji stood out as one apart. He assisted others without thought of personal reward, and did not shun the best then opportunities offered themselves. In fact, on his retirement, to be succeeded by British officials galore, he found his small pension barely adequate.

His last days were spent in Bombay, where among his neighbours were some old East African Indians, of whom may be noted Mr. J. P. Bhargava, another Indian African who has left his mark in some notable specimens of architecture, the best known of which is the Zanzibar residence.

Camp Fire Comments.

African Native Generosity.

Two stories have come our way illustrating in very pleasant fashion the innate generosity of the African Native. One relates the sending of no less a sum than £16 to the Miners' Relief Fund in Scotland by the Native Church at Livingston, and the other tells of an old African who never failed to subscribe monthly to what he calls his "peejee," a benevolent deity living far away but for whose services he was duly grateful. It was the S.P.C!

Prince and African Game Preservation.

All true sportsmen will rejoice that the Prince of Wales has become Patron of the Society for the Preservation of the Fauna of the Empire. His Royal Highness has had personal experience of the African wild game, and has expressed his admiration for the superb assortments of wild creatures which Africa still possesses. It is fitting, therefore, that she should have become patron of a society which has done so much good work during the past twenty-five years.

Africans and Egyptian Civilization.

Your correspondent may be right, suggests a regular contributor, "in saying that Africans came into contact with Egyptian civilisation in very early days; but Professor Schwarz is to be believed that contact had its ups and downs which would encourage them to keep up the combination. Even from the first Dynasties (as the Professor says) these different people (Africans?) were in great demand. On the other hand, a king they worshipped, as their custom raised the powers of the underworld, who then let through the Pharaoh's light."

The Scotsman's Home from Home.

A true home is to be found in the Tweed, writes to London a correspondent of his journey through the sunny area of the Nile. "We might have been in Scotland. There were Scotch hills and Scottish lakes and sunsets which threw purple shadows such as I had never seen before. And of course the only accent we heard in our own language was Scottish. If the world over, the first to greet a traveller in a British back of beyond will be a Scotman. And, says the critic, the first person you meet in the Colonies will be an Irishman and the predominant accent in the backblocks of Glasgow is the Hibernian brogue!"

The Man With a Good in East Africa.

Detractors of our East African Dependencies and they are many and numerous—will be annoyed by a paragraph which appeared last week in The Morning Mail. "Three weeks ago," says that paper, "an unemployed workman of Hales Owen, Worcestershire, went away leaving his wife and family destitute. As a result they were given poor law relief. Last week the man returned from East Africa, where he had made good, and he paid to the relieving officer the whole sum expended by the guardians in the maintenance of his wife and family. If the successful settlers in East Africa made as big a noise as the few grouching, failing people at home would get a fairer picture of conditions out there."

Bush Fires in Britain.

"It is not often," writes a retired East African official, "that East African conditions are reproduced in England, but last week I had an experience which was to me unique. I read in the papers that only 128 inches of rain had fallen in the last three months—which must be a record for the time year, and as a result bush fires have been frequent and destructive all over the country. I was in a train crossing a wide heath, and was passed right through the midst of these fires, which were in full blast at right angles to the railway line. The brilliant sunshine for it was a remarkable fine day—the blazing bush, the crackling curl of smoke and fire (as Bobe Colonel Stevenson-Hamilton puts it) and the sudden overpowering heat, gave me the impression for the moment that I was once more back in Africa in the hot season at the time of Shamba burning. It was a curious and wonderful feeling."

African Rain in the Motherland.

A country correspondent is responsible for the following suggestion:

"In view of the prolonged and most unseasonable drought which has prevailed in England for the last two months and the urgent need for rain, I propose that the advertisement appended should be inserted in your widely-read paper, which circulates just where it will do most good:

WANTED for England, especially London, Districts of the South and East, Counties AFRICAN RAIN-MAKERS or Wind-doctors qualified as such: able to produce warm showers with south-east winds; no thunderstorm experts need apply. First-class references required, with details of previous experience. Payment on Scale A, with bonus if sunny days can be guaranteed. Travelling and incidental expenses will be paid to accepted candidates. Apply, with copies of testimonials in triplicate (which will be returned to the Meteorological Office, Kingway, London, W.C.2).

We can only undertake to forward to the appropriate authorities applications which appear to be worthy of investigation.

A YOUNG MAN'S ODYSSEY

Sir Michael Bruce in Africa.

SIR MICHAEL WILLIAM SLAY BRUCE, eleven-year-old baronet of a creation which dates back to 1629, was born on March 27, 1894, and as he lately wrote in "Sails and Saddles" from the Cape, "I only came to hand precisely on my thirty-first anniversary of his birth, compliments and best wishes are clearly due to the author."

Like Odysseus himself, Sir William has seen many men and cities. He started young, with a severe "go-fever," and the urge has never left him. A trooper of the British South African Police at the age of fifteen, he shared the duties, perils and pleasures of that fine force in Rhodesia.

"They patrol the borders, report on the movements of the Natives and their cattle, repair telegraph wires, dispense justice, act as referees of the peace, position and value of land, and attend to the sick. They are mostly public school boys and are hard boiled, but firm in their traditions and ideals about their job. They are as fine as any fellows in the world."

As soon as the War broke out, Sir Michael volunteered, but on his first expedition he was shot by one of our own Nerve troops and lamed. He was wounded again in Gallipoli and on the French front, and when he was not being wounded he was breaking his limbs. His right arm was broken six times, but he is not the sort which is easily killed. After the War he returned to Africa, went on to the Argentine, rounded the Horn as a sailor, crossed the Andes in a storm, had yellow fever at Ceara, explored the Amazon to the upper reaches where Indians are really wild, and came home safely. And throughout all he is a boy, telling his tale simply with the freshness and charm of a boy. This is a book with a thrill.

LONDON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Meeting of East African Section

Report of the meeting of the East African Section of the London Chamber of Commerce took place yesterday afternoon at the Fishmongers' Hall, and is expected to appear next week.

The afternoon of the first Wednesday of the month would have been chosen for the meeting is distinctly unfortunate, for, since the Executive Council of the Joint East African Board meets on the morning of the first Wednesday, it means that several of the most occupied East African business men in London are forced to miss one of these important meetings, or to be absent from their office practically the whole day. They willingly give their time to public affairs, but that they should be penalised in this way appears an unnecessary increase of their burdens.

Moreover, the fixing of Wednesday afternoons of this week for the Chamber meeting precluded any of those who wished to attend it from congregating with other members of the East African Dinner Club at the informal monthly reunion.

The East African Section of the Chamber has more than once recently arranged a meeting for the afternoon of mail day, another obviously unsatisfactory occasion, and it seems time for some protest to be made.

A school of cannibals has been seen by the British Press to the north-west of the passenger liner of the Canadian Pacific, liner "Eschschsch," which died on the homeward voyage. The ship visited East African ports some few weeks ago, and the four deaths are attributed to malignant malaria contracted not in East Africa, but by a number of passengers who visited the Kruger National Park, South Africa.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF AFRICA

ANOTHER interesting article on the matter of African development has been contributed to The Economist, whose correspondent says the Left to himself, the African is, to European habits of thought, not a consistent worker, and his sense of living, bearing in mind his undoubted intellectual and physical capacity, has been deplorable. The satisfaction of his material needs is easily achieved, and his energy, which has never even reached such early stages of exhaustion as is implied in the case of many of the negroes, is expended in primitive activities which are the earliest attempts in the arts of civilisation. To the same extent the African is an impatient observer with surprising powers of adaptability, and his awakening to a genuine initiative, and at this they may mean to Africa, comes at a time when Europe itself has hardly got over the reverberations of its own scientific development and new mechanisms, and even within the narrow compass has not yet had time to exploit them to the full.

Other great continents, America and Australia, bear witness to the slowest and most unproductive development until modern perfection of communications has made all things possible and brought within its grasp in material development what was done in a few years ago in the United States. Middle West farmers and their wives were still content to visit their nearest town, when roads permitted, in waggons drawn by a team of farm horses. That newer production, the Gold Coast Native cocoa plant, began to visit his town in a motor car.

African development has long delayed, but with increased advantages as the result, may therefore be expected to go forward with unprecedented rapidity on the wings of modern means of communication. In the past, so, it is likely to present many anomalies, and progress may well be patchy in range and accomplishment. But the outstanding fact is that the isolation of the past has gone for ever. The impact has begun to have telling effects, and the younger generation of Africans, aided by the enlightened attitude of Europe towards their needs and aspirations, is driving itself not slow in appreciating what the future may hold.

SELLING TO EAST AFRICA

In the course of an article on "Salesmanship in Africa" in The Empire, written by Mr. C. J. Maughan writes:

Over and over again during half a lifetime spent in the service of the Indian Government in Africa has the writer witnessed the coups successfully brought off by salesmen, representatives, but never of British nationality. They are to commercial undertakings largely what travelling inspectors of goods are to the trade, with the difference that their field is a wider one and the results to their principals or directors are of a much greater value. Mr. Maughan, speaking from the experience of overhauling and remodeling of British methods, says:

There exists among the British a very strong preference amputing to a positive list of mechanical goods made in his own country. For that reason, and also in consideration of its isolation, the trade should receive greater attention than a customer being at home. This attention should take the form of individual treatment. Letters should not be of a stereotyped nature, they should be personal, and convey an impression that the goods are understood and have been studied. In this particular American firms take surprising pains.

Catalogues must be priced. More business is probably lost by the omission to price a firm's catalogue than by any other. If prices are liable to fluctuation, the fact may be stated, but some idea, no matter how approximate, should in all cases be afforded. Catalogues, moreover, should always be followed up if necessary by more than one letter of inquiry, and the utmost care should be observed to address the applicant correctly both as regards his name and address. In the case of machinery the most meticulous attention should be paid to the importance of furnishing the fullest possible directions for its assembly and erection, as well in the interests of the supplier, as the purchaser. No one should be lost sight of the difficulties experienced in the wilds by the non-mechanical mind in grasping the meaning of too technical discussions. Illustrations should never be omitted from the instructions sent.

We must advertise more, selecting for the purpose publications which circulate in the countries in the business we are interested. It should be borne in mind that in England newspaper advertisements, unless they are extremely prominent and correspondingly costly, seldom exercise a compelling influence on the public eye. In Africa it is otherwise. There, newspapers and periodicals come but seldom—it may be at long intervals. Before the arrival of the next mail they have been read and read again, and cover not only the letter-press, but the advertisements also. Advertisements, therefore, well displayed and conveying where possible some approximate idea of price, would go far to stimulate inquiry and finally result in important business transactions. The illustrations are, of course, very elementary, and their very simple application may be the only of their almost invariable assistance.

When the expected contributor is finally, will British manufacturers possess sufficient vision and enterprise to enable them to claim their fair share of the markets of the world's East and Central Africa offer opportunities which a few of our very few British manufacturers are adequately exploiting. One of East Africa's aims is to co-operate in the development of British trade with the territories, such it is our privilege to have had any assistance which we can give is that which

LABOUR FROM THE NATIVE RESERVES.

...we quoted Lord Olivier's attack on Kenya for being drawn from the Native Reserves by what he calls pressure on undue percentage of the adult male population. Sir George Laidlaw has replied in The Times—

I differ entirely from the writers and politicians who think it is a simple matter to fix the percentage of men who can be withdrawn from Native territories for labour. I have seen a large portion of my life in the administration of Native affairs, and my experience, which I know to be that of most other administrators, is that it is impracticable to determine in any arbitrary manner what that percentage should be. In attempting to do so there are several factors to be considered of which I will name a few.

Much depends upon the extent of land available for cultivation within the territory. If the men have large holdings on which they can grow crops for their own food, and additional crops for marketing from which they derive the money they require for taxes and household wants, they must remain on the land most of their time and cannot conveniently be withdrawn for labour. And if, in addition to the land cultivated by the present occupiers, there is plenty to spare for allotment to the young men when they get married, those young men will be in the same category. If, on the other hand, the cultivatable land is mostly taken up by the young men, they get adequate allotments they must go away and earn money for their subsistence; in which case they would swell considerably the proportion of men who could be positively spared for foreign labour.

Other important factors which govern the question of withdrawal of Natives from their homes for labour are their conditions of life and outlook. If, for instance, they are backward and are satisfied to live from hand to mouth on the product of their land through their seasons and good, they are hard to get away and cannot be spared in large numbers from that kind of existence. But if again, on the other hand, they have once felt the attractions of European clothing and furniture and comforts, they must earn a lot of money to gratify those tastes, and for that purpose must, and do, go out in large numbers to labour, which they seek in the best market for wages.

I have said enough to show that no general rule of percentages can be made. The question is one which adjusts itself to the conditions under which the Natives are living and their standards of life. As soon as the standard is raised to a certain level the men, women and children all acquire new habits, which call for money, and they thereby all the able-bodied men go in search of it with a pressure.

Mr. J. de G. Denteghe writes:—
No, doubt Sir Dudley Edwards is right in stating that the percentage of men who can be withdrawn for labour from Native territories cannot be arbitrarily determined. But even the vital stipulation that the integrity of the tribal society must be maintained, there can be little hesitation as to which estimate is the more nearly correct, the 5% calculation of the Belgian authorities or the figure of from 32% to 63% regarded as "not unsatisfactory" by a recent Kenya Labour Commission.

The conditions to which he refers—namely, where in such a Native territory the cultivatable land is mostly taken up and the young men cannot get adequate allotments, and so must go away and earn money for their subsistence; and again where the Natives are backward and are satisfied to live from hand to mouth on the product of their land—are precisely those which every administrator is striving to eliminate in the all-galling circumstance of East Africa. The Hilton Young Report proposes to effect this by accumulating a permanent reserve as a fund sufficient for the existing population plus a reasonable margin for future expansion, and so to enable the Natives to develop on their own lines in a process of continuous evolution; secondly, by raising the standard of tribal cultivation to develop to the utmost the economic opportunities of the inhabitants. Whatever the method, the aim—to write with some twenty years' experience of local administration—is that no Native should be obliged to leave his home in order to secure the wherewithal to satisfy his obligations and reasonable desires. If he does go to do so, it will be because, as a free agent, external conditions are such as to appeal to him. There should be no compulsion, economic or political.

AN INDISPENSABLE WORK OF REFERENCE.

The Empire and Evening Review says of "Eastern Africa"—
This book is of a kind which has long been wanted. It gives a description of every district in East Africa (Colony by Colony), written (usually) by someone long resident there. The descriptions include location, elevation, climate, cultivation, European element in the population, hotels, garages, etc. The whole book thus becomes an indispensable work of reference for anyone who has anything to do with East Africa, whether for trade, sport, settlement, or other purpose.

EAST AFRICA IN THE HOUSE

Kenya Franchise.

Colonel Wedgwood asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether Sir Samuel Wilson had instructions to consult with Mr. Kenyasa Sastri in Kenya, and whether Sir Samuel is instructed that the question of communal representation is fixed and immovable so long as the franchise instrument remains in force in this country.

Mr. Asquith: "Sir Samuel Wilson has received no instructions other than those which I have communicated to the House on March 27. They cover the first part of his question. As regards the second part, it is obvious that any change in the basis of the franchise in Kenya could only come about by agreement."

Colonel Wedgwood: "Do I understand that Mr. Sastri will be in the Colony at the same time as Sir Samuel Wilson, and do I understand the right hon. gentleman to bind all Governments of this country never to alter the franchise in Kenya except with the consent of the three elements in the population?"

Mr. Asquith: "Mr. Sastri is going in order to lay the case of the Indian community before Sir Samuel Wilson and will certainly have occasion for meeting him and consulting him. I am not bidding the Government, but I think the obvious facts of the case bind them all."

Colonel Wedgwood: "Are we to understand that the Government rule out of practical politics any possibility of modifying the franchise without the consent of the white settlers, the Indians and the Natives, and if so, does that apply to modifications required by the Government for the benefit of the whites?"

Mr. Asquith: "No, not on that basis. I am not discussing details, but I lay down in the White Paper issued in the time of the Duke of Devonshire in view of all the circumstances of this case, my own candid suggestion that the basis should be altered except by consent."

Colonel Wedgwood: "The right hon. gentleman says that, in the future, that no modification of the franchise in any direction which the Natives or Indians will be brought about without the consent of the white settlers, and I think that the same view of the intention of the Government is brought out clearly with the consent of the Indian community."

Mr. Asquith: "Yes, the white, Indian, and African general opinion of the matter is my answer. I am glad to find that the Government have no objection and do not suggest any change in the basis of the franchise except by consent."

Mr. Seligman: "Is not the Government aware that the franchise is a subject which has been introduced into the House of Commons on many occasions and only used as a means of attacking the scope minority of the majority? Is it not a subject which is a constant subject of discussion in the House of Commons?"

Mr. Asquith: "I am not sure that it is a subject which is a constant subject of discussion in the House of Commons."

BETTER RAINFALL NEWS RECEIVED.

Satisfactory rains in Kenya and Tanganyika.

Many people in this country with financial interests in the East Africa trade have been very concerned during the past fortnight on account of telegraphic reports that the rains seemed likely to fail. We have had now, however, to state that earlier news received in this column during the past few days is more than reliable.

Messrs. J. K. Gillman and Company announce that satisfactory rains, varying from two to five inches, are general, but that distribution is irregular, there being least favoured. Good rains continue in Tanganyika.

The M. Eastern African Dependencies Trade and Information Office has received cable news giving the following rainfall in Kenya for the past week: Mt. Longonot, Nakuru, Kericho and Nyeri, two half inches; the Coast area, 1.5 inches; Kericho, 1.5 inches; Sonchor and Kitale, 1 inch. No rain was reported in the Kyambaa and Thika districts. Anxiety is felt about dry planting at Nakuru. A later message says that useful partial rains have fallen and that there is every indication of rain becoming general.

OCEAN FREIGHTS TO BEIRA

Rhodesian Complaint.
Rhodesian Correspondent.

Protests are being made in Southern Rhodesia against the ocean freight rates to the port of Beira, which it is contended, are out of proportion to those charged to South African ports. As an example, it is stated that the rate on certain classes of goods from London to Port Elizabeth is 30s. for a distance of 6,000 miles, whereas an additional 2s. 6d. is charged for the further 2,000 miles from Port Elizabeth to Beira, both of which are lighterage ports, and it is well known that the facilities at Beira have been augmented and delays to shipping reduced, the former excuse for the high rates in Southern Rhodesia is no longer applicable.

Southern Rhodesian merchants are anxious to obtain some benefit from the shorter rail haul to Beira. But in present circumstances this is restricted to a considerable extent, so far as Matabelleland is concerned, by the high ocean rates to Beira as compared with the Cape route. It is stated that when there is an agitation for reductions in rates to South African ports, the shipping companies claim that Beira is not a South African port, and if the agitation originates in East Africa Beira is excluded from the list of East African ports. The economic importance of the greater proximity of Beira should be considerable, but it is materially lessened by the present scale of ocean rates. The Rhodesian Railway would also benefit from a reduction of the disparity, which puts a premium on the longer haul to Matabelleland from the south and gives the South African Railway the advantage of the greater part of the trade.

The matter is being taken up by the Associated Chambers of Commerce Congress and a resolution has been drafted asking the assistance of the Colonial Government for an attempt to secure lower ocean freight rates on the coastwise section of the route from Durban to Beira.

The R.M.S. Edinburgh, which leaves Southampton on May 31, is carrying summer tourists to South Africa, and the rate of the return fares to Capetown by the Foot of the Mountain is £2 second and third class, respectively. Further particulars can be obtained from the British Cable Company.

ROSEHAUGH'S TANGANYIKA INTERESTS.

It was reported at last week's annual meeting of the Rosehaugh Company Ltd. that during the year 1919 their share in the Tanganyika Tea and Sisal Co. had been sold. As the subsidiary company directors were now in course of disposing of the assets of their assets, the Chairman, Mr. C. H. A. Rosehaugh, said, however, that the two companies in question had suffered a dilution from the issue of new capital, and that when a suitable offer of purchase had been reached the directors had decided to sell the good land in deliberation to the fact that not having there was anything wrong with the prospectus, but because their attention in the past had been further capital was going to be a waste of property which would probably involve the further withdrawal of returns from the shareholders.

NEWS OF OUR ADVERTISERS.

The manufacturers of the Ariel motor cycle advise us that their machine won every class of award for which it was eligible, and gained the premier award for the best performance of the day during the recent contest for the Alan Trophy over a course of 180 miles of rough mountain roads in the Lake District. Practically the entire distance is on over-roads, sometimes steep in loose shale, sometimes covered with large boulders, always winding and with continuous sharp ascents, followed by dangerous descents, conditions which naturally test the machine's brake, gear box, and clutch to the utmost.

At last week's public auctions demand for East African coffees was irregular, prices were, however, steady.
