PRESENTS

One of the well-known announcers, Miss Amina Faki, is busy in one of Voice of Kenya studios as she presents listeners' requests.

The University of Nairobi

By VOK Talks Section

University College, Nairobi, is no more. From midnight on 30th June, the federal-system University of East Africa ceased to exist by mutual consent and the three University Colleges converted to national university status in their—three respective countries.

The University College, Nairobi, started life as the Royal Technical College, which opened its doors to the first intake of students in April, 1956. From technical college status, it was recognized as the second university college in East Africa in January, 1961—the first one being Makerere College, Uganda —and was renamed "Royal College, Nairobi". In February, the same year, it was granted special relations with the University of London thus enabling students to obtain London degrees in Arts, Science and Engineering.

Expansion and growth continued at rapid pace and in June, 1963, Royal College, Nairobi, became one of the constituent colleges of the University of East Africa and on the 20th May, 1964, was renamed "University College, Nairobi". The special relationship with London University ended and students enrolling after that studied for University of East Africa degrees and diplomas. Undergoing its third name change—henceforth by being named the University of Nairobi, it can now be regarded as truly a Kenyan national seat of learning.

With the change in status and a new national identity, there is better opportunity for closer collaboration between the Kenya Government and those who both teach and study in the nation's main seat of learning. Development progress is also more likely to speed up. In this context, what is a national university's major role in a developing country? While it should enjoy academic freedom in order to encourage the creation of new concepts and progressive enterprise, it must nevertheless discipline such freedom to fit national obligations realistically. Since the majority of top-level manpower for future service to the nation will be drawn from the university's ranks, it is only right that the manner in which it operates be of national concern, as well as the concern of the academic staff and students.

In the past, there has been a tendency for the University to regard itself and be regarded as an irreproachable ivory tower that didn't quite belong here. This has resulted in a kind of isolation; with wananchi becoming either disinterested or somewhat suspicious that it was full of young, rebellious handsome people who consider themselves vastly superior to wananchi.

It may well have been true of the past, but today the University of Nairobi is largely manned by Kenyan men of letters. They are all good sons of Kenya on whom the nation can rely to steer their university not only to international levels of performance, distinction and standing but also to greater involvement in nation-building.

The nation was set in a "motion of growth" by its motto of Harambee. In the comprehension of this motto lies the inspiration of national achievement which applies as much to each individual student passing through university as it does to Kenya's nationalists.

In the days ahead, teamwork, a common sense of collective responsibility and the ability to honour the points of view of others, including those in authority, should become part of each student's code of moral ethics. On the other hand, the general public must encourage, support and show a greater interest in our national university and regard it as the nation's most important source of tomorrow's top-level manpower.
