

Venous blood samples collected from 8 patients with visceral leishmaniasis had a 15-fold reduction in the urokinase sensitivity test when compared with normal controls.