

DoGES student completes postgraduate programme in South Korea

Mr. Anthony Kitema, who won a competitive and prestigious scholarship to South Korea, has successfully graduated with a Master of Science Degree in Forest Resources and Ecological Restoration at the Yeungnam University, South Korea. According to Anthony, “It has been a great experience and exposure to study here. Now I am confident and ready to use the knowledge I have gained. I am indebted to the Department of Geography and Environmental Studies for offering me this opportunity to further my study and I can boldly say that I made University of Nairobi proud. I was not only the student representative for my major in graduate school but was also awarded the 'self-help' excellence award for being self-motivated academically and in extra-curricular activities. I am currently applying for PhD and work positions so as to launch my career”.
