

Industrial practice assessment 2014

Each year students who have completed their third years from the Department of Food Science, Nutrition and Technology participate in industrial practice depending on the degree course being undertaken. The industrial practice forms an important part of the degree program providing the students with the opportunity to be acquainted with various processing and management activities that take place in the Industry/field. It also affords them a hands-on experience of the operations as well as put to practice things learnt in college. This activity is therefore of utmost important training that the department takes seriously and hence the vigorous assessment it undertakes. The current groups of students are in the final phase of their practice and are being assessed by academic staff members. Most of our BSc. Food Science and Technology students are usually attached in food processing and quality management industries while BSc. Food Nutrition and Dietetics find useful practice in hospitals, NGOs and other organizations.
