2015 Officials

Technology is not an optional luxury but rather central to 21st century education, development, economic growth, it is shaping our lives, the way we do business, travel, learn and communicate. It has etched itself in every sphere and industry. It cannot be ignored. Business Information Systems is here to help business students understand and combine what is needed from a business point of view, with what is possible from a technology point of view.

It is critical for companies to keep abreast with the disruptive technologies lest they be swept out of business. If there is such a thing as an African version of California's Silicon Valley, the country that is arguably leading the race to the future is Kenya
