

School of Business alumnus develops social learning and sharing portal

Date and time:

Thu, 2013-05-23 08:22

School of Business recent graduate and serial entrepreneur has come up with a platform that allows students and tutors learn and exchange information in an easy and fast way. “Shakili.com is a hybrid learning platform that connects educators to students and by enabling users to set up e-schools and create courses to share knowledge and content,” says Muthuri Kinyamu a recent graduate B.Com graduate, blogger and CEO of SocialProClubs, who co-founded the platform.

According to Muthuri, the website will create a participatory culture in the learning process by enabling both students and their lecturers to share learning content. The word ‘Shakili’ is a morph of two words; ‘Share’ and ‘Akili’ (knowledge). “Through Shakili lecturers and teachers can create, upload and share digital educational content in various formats with students thus making learning more fun and enjoyable,” says Muthuri.

The aim is to ease content sharing and networking amongst varsity students and faculty, while also making learning faster through digitized content. Shakili also assists experts in various fields to publish educational materials on one platform of creative multimedia formats in a variety of screens for the local and global audience. You can join the waiting list by clicking here shakili.com and be the first to know when the team is ready for you in coming days.

Muthuri Kinyamu at School of Business Computer Lab

