The African Women's Studies Centre conducted training for the National Food Security baseline survey in conjunction with Kenya National Bureau of Statistics on the 24th and 25th June 2013, at Kenya Science Campus. The researchers were thereafter flagged off by Prof. Ochanda Horace, the Principal, Kenya Science Campus. The survey is to be done in 20 counties among them Turkana, Isiolo and Kajiado which are some of the counties whose inhabitants experience food insecurity year in, year out. This is in accordance to the vision of the Centre which is to be a Centre of excellence, committed to promoting African women's experiences and worldview in scholarship, policy and institutional development.

The targets this time include both men and women, key informants such as community leaders as well as institutional personnel in the government.
