Donald Molosi presents “Blue, Black and White” at the University of Nairobi.

The University of Nairobi (UoN) hosted renowned Botswana artist, Donald Molosi, who delivered a moving presentation entitled “Blue, Black and White.”

The performance highlighted the difficulties the founding fathers of Botswana had in bringing the black community and the white community to live together in harmony. During the event, UoN students from Botswana also made a presentation.

Speaking at the event, the Botswana Ambassador to Kenya, H. E. John Muriti, noted that Kenya and Botswana have been in collaboration since 1968, when Botswana got independence from the British. The collaboration has been majorly in the area of education. He revealed that the University has trained students from Botswana in the areas of medicine, dentistry, geology, meteorology, among others.

The play, “Blue, Black and White” a solo performance narrated in both English and Tsana, the local dialect, Setswana, reminded the audience not to forget their past. The show was a preliminary celebration as Botswana will be marking 49 Years in independence on September 30, 2015.

The Principal, College of Biological and Physical Sciences, Prof. Bernard Aduda, noted that the two governments have collaborated together in regional and international forums. The two nations have been engaged in capacity building and human development. Prof. Aduda was speaking on behalf of the Vice-Chancellor.

Also present were Prof. Peter K'Obonyo, Deputy Principal, College of Humanities and Social Science, Zimbabwe Ambassador to Kenya, Mozambique Ambassador to Kenya, Botswana community, staff and students.
