

Being a student of political science and public administration requires one to be alert on the trending concepts and issues of discussion in both local and the global arena. Being informed by this, political science students through their giant association, NUPOSA, for the very first time, organized a whole day tour coupled with training at the UN headquarters Nairobi on 11th September, 2013.

The centre is an excellent view of what it means to be international, they were exposed to a range of programmes carried out by the organization, the requirements they seek during employment, their volunteer programmes together with how they handle the international affairs and mandate which is to maintain peace and security in the world.

The students had a successful day at the offices where they also interacted with the UN staff and made contacts which would be suitable for their career development.
