As part of the University of Nairobi and PRIME-K activities, undergraduate students have been going for rotations at 18 decentralized training sites as a pilot to develop substantive clinical rotations for undergraduate and postgraduate students at the sites.

To prepare the healthcare workers directly responsible for the students, PRIME-K undertook to train medical staff at the decentralized training sites on innovative medical education, mentorship, leadership and other topics. PRIME-K invited consultants, senior nursing officers, dentists and pharmacists from these sites to participate in a training that was conducted at the College of Health Sciences from the 4th to 6th November 2015.
