Abstract:

The objective of this study is to investigate the real inequality perspective of land ownership and use in Kenya. The study demonstrated that there are varying degrees of inequality in land ownership, access and use in Kenya in terms of land tenure, land size and land potential. The study recommends a review of the constitution, legal and administrative frameworks so as to provide for equitable, transparent and accountable land management and administration.